New Sex-education Standards Seek to Make 'The Talk' Easier

Guidelines for Idaho's public school health classes set an aggressive timeline for giving kids frank information about human sexuality.

BY JULIE WOOTTON
jwootton@magicvalley.com

TWIN FALLS • You might not like it, but a group of national health experts say it's high time your 10-year-old had a talk about sex.

It's a difficult topic made more difficult to teach at schools, says Twin Falls High School Health Teacher Allyn Reynolds, because people often don't know how to talk about human sexuality without being embarrassed.

"It all of a sudden becomes silly or vulgar or offends someone," he said.

New sex education standards released this month by a group of national health organizations seek to change that mentality. The goal of the non-binding recommendations for kindergarten through 12th grades, according to the report, is to encourage age-appropriate discussions on sexuality as a "normal, natural, healthy part of human development."

"We're still in the dark age when it comes to human sexuality," Reynolds said, and the new report is a way of removing some of the topic's controversy.

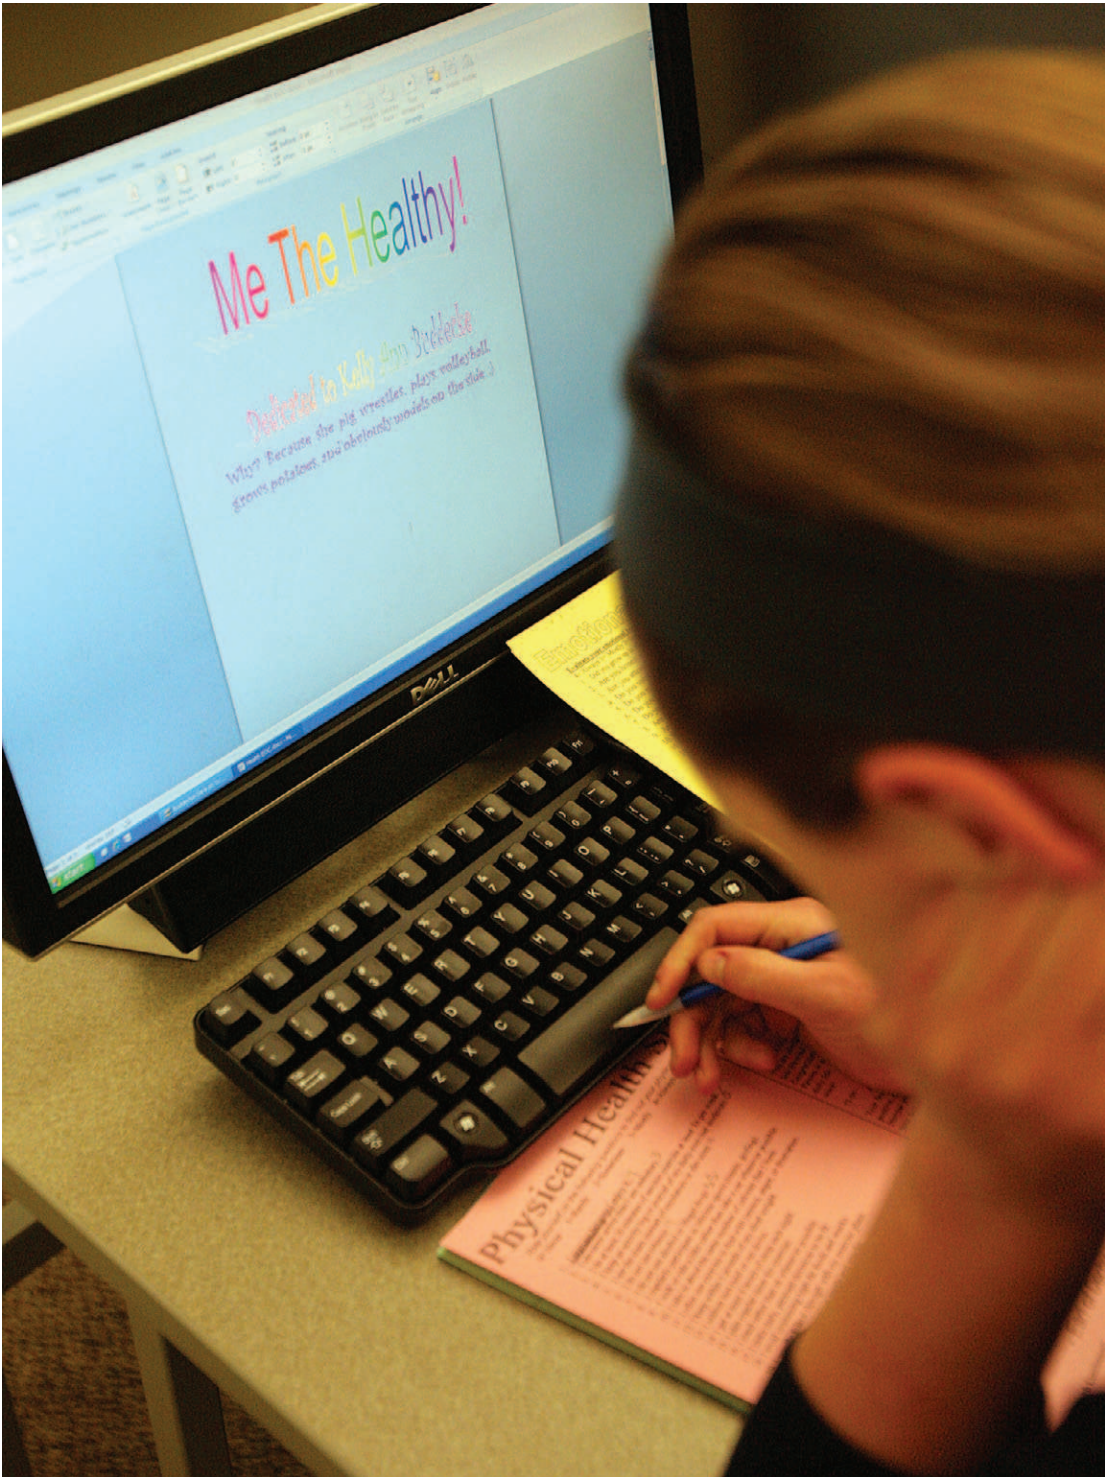

"I think it's a move at the national level to relax the stigma," he said.

Dozens of specific guidelines are outlined for children as young as elementary school. By the end

Business Asks Again: End Our Belongings Tax

A Senate committee this week will take up an old issue, considering the costs and benefits of the personal property tax.

BY BILL ROBERTS
Idaho Statesman

BOISE • It's not the several thousand dollars in taxes that Kevin Settles pays on the so-called personal property in his restaurants that rankles him. It's having to keep records on that property — every chair, stapler, computer and television — so they can be assessed and taxed.

The amount the state collects is "a negligible amount for the amount of work that has to be done," said Settles, who owns the Bardenay restaurants in Boise, Eagle and Coeur d'Alene.

Proposals to end Idaho's personal property tax, which requires businesses to self-assess and report the value of nearly every item they own, are likely to resurface this year. The Idaho Association of Commerce and Industry, one of Idaho's most powerful lobbying groups, is pushing to eliminate it with the backing of the Boise Metro Chamber of Commerce and other business groups.

The association says the administrative burden and cost of

Across State, Schools Plan for Tech Upgrades

Idaho lawmakers set aside $13 million this year to help schools pay for Internet access, technology hardware and teacher training in preparation for the changes.

BY JESSIE L. BONNER

BOISE • Students may not have to wait for Idaho to roll out a statewide laptop program before they get their hands on a new computer.

Districts across the state are taking advantage of the $13 million lawmakers set aside in 2011 for technology upgrades in the classroom to purchase devices for students that include iPads, laptops, and desktop computers.

Idaho will eventually phase in laptops for every high school teacher and student while making online courses a requirement to graduate, under a plan that was crafted by public schools chief Tom Luna and signed into law last year.

But the $13 million included in this year's public schools budget is not part of the statewide laptop program. The funding is being sent to schools this year to help pay for things like Internet access, technology hardware and teacher training in preparation for the changes.

Many districts are, however, opting to spend the money on various types of computers for students in kindergarten through eighth grades, with hopes of better preparing them for the classrooms that await them once they enter high school.

A portion of the $13 million, about $4 million, has already been distributed to public schools this year. Districts submitted plans earlier this month to the state Department of Education detailing how they would spend the remaining $9 million.

In Craigmont, a former railroad town of about 500 in northern Idaho, the Highland School District plans to spend $5,500 to equip classrooms in kindergarten through fifth grade with iPads. The district plans to eventually transition students into using laptops once they advance onto middle school so they'll be comfortable with the devices later on in high school, where they'll need to complete at least two courses online to graduate.

The district has about 180 students in kindergarten through 12th grades in one school building, said Superintendent Cindy Orr.

"It's easier for us to do it this way, where everyone in the building gets one versus having to wait until they're in the ninth grade," Orr said.

Farther to the north in Priest River, district administrators plan to give students in all grades access to digital cameras so they can incorporate photos into their school work.

Technology

The district also wants to use iPods in elementary school classrooms to help improve student language, art and math skills while also experimenting with the use of computer tablets in teaching children who struggle with learning disabilities.

At the Vallivue School District in southwestern Idaho, administrators plan to finish phasing in interactive smart boards in kindergarten through eighth grades, with projectors to display the materials. The district also hopes to eventually buy iPads for every elementary and middle school.

In southwestern Idaho, the Nampa School District plans to equip every elementary school classroom with new desktop computers and projectors in kindergarten through fifth grades while spending its $450,000 share of the remaining technology funding from the state.

Nampa schools have been forced to restrict spending on technology in recent years because of budget cuts, said spokeswoman Allison Westfall.

“This won’t meet all of our needs, but it will help,” Westfall said.

Idaho will start to introduce the statewide laptop program this fall, with computers for every high school teacher.

The state was expected to start phasing in the computers for students in fall 2013, starting with every 9th grade classroom, but a statewide task force created to help implement Luna’s changes has recommended a different route.

The group was concerned that if the laptops were first given to students in the 9th grade, teachers in classrooms with more than one grade would be unwilling to allow one student to work with a laptop alongside another student who was not issued one of the new computers.

The task force recommended the computers be deployed in 9th through 12th grades, starting with one-third of all high schools.

“If we do one-third of the schools, which I’m confident we will, then you are going to have some teachers who are going to have the device for two years or so before the students get it,” Luna said. “But still, it’s an opportunity for (teachers) to receive the training.”

Public schools were hooked up to the Idaho Education Network, a broadband system, in a similar fashion, one-third at a time, he said.

“To think that we are going to roll out 80,000 to 100,000 devices, in one year, to every high school is just not manageable,” Luna said.

Some school administrators remain skeptical about how districts will handle the flood of new technology.

In southeastern Idaho, school superintendents have said they’re concerned they don’t have enough staffing or funding to carry out the changes, which include training for teachers on how to integrate the technology into the classroom. The state Department of Education counters that a portion of the $13 million in technology funding set aside for the current school year — about $3 million — was dedicated to professional development.

The new education changes have been a lightning rod over the past year.

The laws are being carried out in public schools even as critics work to overturn the sweeping measures with a referendum in November.

Along with the technology upgrades, the new education mandates backed by Luna and the governor include provisions to limit teacher collective bargaining to salaries and benefits; dump seniority as a factor in layoffs; and require union negotiations to be held in public.

of second grade, for instance, the group says students should use the correct names for body parts.

By the end of the fifth grade, guidelines include students being able to describe what happens during puberty and define sexual orientation as attraction between people — either of the opposite or same gender.

Guidelines also say students should be able to understand concepts such as abstinence and how emergency contraception works by the time they leave eighth grade.

The report covers a variety of other health-related standards from healthy relationships to identifying bullying. But they’re just suggestions, not requirements. Magic Valley public schools follow state standards for health education adopted by the legislature in 2010.

Anne Jensen, counselor at Harrison Elementary School in Twin Falls, said the main health topics covered at an elementary school level are drug and alcohol prevention and safety.

One new recommendation from national groups is that students should be able to identify different family structures by the end of second grade.

Jensen said she doesn’t think it’s a topic that’s taught directly now. However, at a diverse school like Harrison Elementary “children are aware of it” through interaction with their classmates.

Reynolds — the only health teacher at Twin Falls High — says curriculum takes a holistic approach to health. The main focus, though, is on emotional health, since many teens are concerned about their image.

“We try to wake them up to where they’ll be 10 or 20 years down the road,” he said.

The new national health education recommendations direct high school health teachers to focus more on human sexuality.

The topic is addressed now as part of Idaho health education standards. Curriculum for high school students includes topics such as “healthy relationships and sexuality, encouragement of abstinence from sexual activity, sexually transmitted diseases including HIV and their prevention, as well as methods of preventing pregnancy.”

The standards emphasize that information should be presented objectively. Reynolds says he respects the rights of parents to determine what they’re comfortable letting their children learn about at school.

He says health topics should be discussed as a family, but the reality is that a lot of students are getting information from their best friends — not their parents.

If his one of his upcoming classes will include a class presentation on something controversial, Reynolds lets parents know first, allowing them to ask for their children to be excused.

“We don’t want to force information upon anyone,” he said.

Man Killed in Interstate Accident

TIMES-NEWS

MOUNTAIN HOME • A Caldwell man was killed Saturday after he rear-ended a semitrailer driven by a Heyburn man on Interstate 84 near Mountain Home.

Taylor Sauer, 18, of Caldwell, was pronounced dead at the scene, according to Idaho State Police. The accident occurred at 9 p.m., on an interstate grade 13 miles east of Mountain Home.

According to ISP, 49-year-old Heyburn resident David Seefried was driving a 2011 International semi pulling a tanker trailer westbound, at about 15 mph up the grade. Sauer's 2004 Saturn Vue struck the back of Seefried's trailer, and was struck by a 2003 Volvo semi pulling a trailer, driven by Slawomir Porada, 42, of St. Louis.

Porada's semi left the roadway after colliding with Sauer's vehicle, and Porada was later transported by ambulance to Elmore Medical Center in Mountain Home.

Seat belts were worn by all involved parties, and alcohol was not a factor in the crash, according to ISP.

I-84's westbound lanes were blocked for about an hour and traffic was reduced to a single westbound lane for three hours while crews cleared the scene. The crash remains under investigation.

Owners’ health issues slow N. Idaho bar

The Snakepit, a north Idaho institution since 1880, faces an uncertain future now that illness has slowed the Silver Valley family running it.

BY SHAWN VESTAL
The Spokesman-Review

KINGSTON • Joe Peak remembers the first time he walked into the Snakepit. “The bar was three deep with loggers and miners,” Peak said. A jewel- bedecked, elaborately dressed woman tended the bar. Paintings and stuffed animals and Western memorabilia covered the walls and hung from the ceiling. Smoke thickened the air. It was January 1978. “It was surreal, it really was,” he said. “A pretty rowdy bunch.” Within weeks, he owned the place with a partner. Since then, Peak and his wife, Rose Mary, have kept the Snakepit, aka the Enaville Resort, open virtually every day but Thanksgiving and Christmas — a place for a meal, a drink (legal or otherwise), some gossip, a dish of complimentary huckleberry ice cream and a blast of wood-hewn “atmosphere.” “It’s a Silver Valley institution — I know that sounds hackneyed,” said Dave Bond, a longtime journalist who met Peak in 1978 and who sometimes filed stories for The Spokesman-Review from the Snakepit. “It’s always been kind of a sacred place.” But for the first time in forever, the future of the Snakepit, established 1880, is in doubt. Buffeted by health problems and the lousy economy, the Peaks have closed the doors, with the exception of the bar on Thursdays, to maintain the “continuous operation” the resort needs to qualify for its liquor license. Both are suffering from cancer; Rose Mary is now in hospice care in her daughter’s Coeur d’Alene home. He’s 65; her 65th birthday is Friday. Joe describes the decision as taking a step back, and he hopes someone might buy the place. Tuesday morning, over breakfast by the fire at the Snakepit, he talked about the burdens of running the place constantly, about the family’s commitment to the Silver Valley community, about the dream they kept deferring — the dream of selling the place, spending time with their grandchildren, living a “normal life.” “Coulda, woulda, shoulda,” Joe said. The Peaks themselves have been stalwarts in the community, from promoting the region to grand-marching parades to agitating for legislation in Boise. Joe writes a regular column in the Shoshone News-Press. Rose Mary played piano in the Sixth Street Melodrama in Wallace, in fact, she delayed her last round of chemotherapy to perform in the final show of the season, Joe said.

SPokesman-Review • Associated Press
Joe Peak talks about the Enaville Resort, aka The Snake Pit, in Kingston on Tuesday.

Joe and Rose Mary raised three kids: “Father Jimmy,” an Army chaplain; Jacque, an insurance agent; and Andy, a truck driver. They have four grandkids, ages 10 months to 6. Though Joe was subdued and saddened Tuesday over the course of a long conversation, it was while talking about the grandchildren and his wife that his emotions overtook him. “I think that’s the saddest part,” Joe said, pressing a hand over his eyes. “She won’t get to see the kids grow up.” The Snakepit has been home to a lot of the Silver Valley’s fabled rough history, from prostitution to murder to fires of unknown origin. Perhaps the most frequent under-the-table activity was what Joe calls “bootlegging” — the selling of unlicensed hard liquor. The woman who sold the bar to the Peaks, the colorful Josie Bates, had an annual tradition more or less worked out with the liquor agent, Joe said: She’d get caught selling liquor, take a month’s closure as punishment, and head off to Mexico for weeks of February sun, returning with velvet paintings of Elvis. When Peak moved from Alaska and bought the place with a partner in 1978, Bates insisted that they keep the spirit of the Snakepit intact, requiring contractually that they not sell off the decor or change the menu. “We’d keep Rocky Mountain oysters on the menu,” he said. “That was part of it.” Those were the glory days of the old Silver Valley. Silver prices were high. Work in the mines and the woods was plentiful. They were boom times for a bar owner, but not for long. Metals prices dropped; mines closed. In 1981, Bunker Hill — “Uncle Bunker” — shut down, and not long afterward a big chunk of the valley was declared a Superfund site. The Silver Valley went through a crushing depression, and painful, slow evolution toward a tourist-based recreation economy. Though the Snakepit remained essentially unchanged, the Peaks were ambassadors and missionaries for a new Silver Valley.

Despite the gaudy outlaw history of the place, Joe always saw it as a family resort; with the arrival of new biking trails and a surge of fishermen, hikers and other outdoor recreationists, the crowds in the Snakepit changed. As for the off-the-books liquor, that was a tradition the Peaks carried over, as well — at least until Joe helped push through a change that allowed the Snakepit to finally get a liquor license in 1990. Five years ago, Joe was diagnosed with multiple myeloma, a blood disease similar to leukemia. He’s outlived the average, but the illness takes its toll in fatigue and other ways. In February, he had a stem-cell transplant — at the same time, Rose Mary was hospitalized for treatment of endometrial cancer. A PET scan this winter showed that Rose Mary’s cancer had spread. “It was all over,” he said. The Peaks’ plans for the Snakepit are written in erasable ink on a whiteboard in front of the lodge. Closed for now. Little is known, nothing is certain. Except this: The history of this region lives in places like the Snakepit, in the spots where people have gathered for a hundred years, for whiskey or ice cream, a burger or a joke, a red light or a warm fire. “You’re not a member of the Inland Northwest,” Joe Peak said, justifiably, “unless you’ve been to the Snakepit.”

Taxes

The tax raises $130 million a year for counties and other taxing districts, and is rolled into their budgets for everything from salaries to road work. Attempts to reduce the tax in the past were fought by local governments who feared the consequences of the lost revenue. Even before a bill appears, Sen. Tim Corder, R-Mountain Home, the new chairman of the state Senate’s powerful Taxation and Local Government Committee, has lined up a couple of economists to critique the association’s evidence that eliminating the tax would lift the Idaho economy. They will testify Tuesday. A 2007 study commissioned by the association estimated that every $1 reduction in the personal property tax would “boost the after-tax income of Idaho residents by more than $6.” One of the economists dismisses that. “This is beyond incredible,” said Stephen C. Cooke, a recently retired University of Idaho agricultural economist. “It is extremely optimistic about what the benefits to the economy would be.” Economic multiplier effects, which tend to show how money is spent and re-spent through the economy, almost never reach a factor of six, Cooke said. Alex LaBeau, association president, defends the study. “We’ve got a lot of economists with a lot of opinions,” LaBeau said. He won’t get a chance to defend the study at Tuesday’s hearing. He’s not on the agenda to speak. “I wasn’t invited,” he said. Corder said he wants to kick the tires on the association study to help the committee understand it, so he invited Cooke and Mike Ferguson, former state economist and director of the non-profit Idaho Center for Fiscal Policy. As for the association, “I will do that at another time,” Corder said, noting that it has not yet proposed a bill. The association and the committee have had tender negotiations in the past. LaBeau didn’t propose a bill last year because he was told he couldn’t get a committee hearing in the Senate under then-chairman Joe Stegner, a Lewiston Republican who left the Senate last month to become lobbyist for the University of Idaho. Stegner acknowledges he wouldn’t give the bill a hearing, but declines to say why. LaBeau said the personal property tax gives businesses one more reason not to locate or expand in Idaho. Settles, the Bardenay owner, said he considered the tax’s burden when he considered whether to open a restaurant in Washington or Oregon several years ago. He settled on Coeur d’Alene instead and opened in 2003. He decided to stay in Idaho, he said, because it offered more business-friendly rules for the distillery side of his restaurant operations. Bardenay makes gin, vodka and rum. Corder questions the IACI study, too. There is no guarantee that a business freed from paying the tax would necessarily plow its savings into more jobs or a bigger plant, particularly if they’re corporations that have a duty to stockholders to maximize returns, he said. But he’s more open to the argument that the tax is onerous. Perhaps businesses should be willing to look at reducing other tax exemptions they receive so local governments don’t lose revenue, Corder said. LaBeau disagrees. “We didn’t do that for agriculture” when its equipment came off the personal property tax rolls in 2001, he said. “We didn’t do it when we expanded the homeowners’ exemption.”

JOE JASZEWSKI • IDAHO STATESMAN
Bardenay bartender Craig West mixes lemon drops at the restaurant’s downtown Boise location. The mahogany bar at Bardenay is one of the items owner Kevin Settles must pay personal property tax on.

Idaho already has a personal property tax relief law on the books, but it has yet to be used. The law exempts the first $100,000 of equipment from taxation once the state’s revenue grows 5 percent over its 2008 level. The revenue lost would be made up from the state’s general fund, which draws is revenue from all taxpayers, not just business.

The recession has kept that threshold out of reach. Once reached, the law would eliminate the personal property tax on 60,000 businesses, based on a 2009 estimate, and reduce the tax for others. But companies with a large amount of equipment wouldn’t save much. And the exemption applies to a company’s total equipment in a single county. So a business with two operations in a county could get only $100,000 off, while a business with two locations in two counties could take off $200,000. “It’s a big negative,” said Settles, who has two restaurants in Ada County and one in Kootenai County. The commerce and industry association proposes wiping out the tax in one step when the state’s revenue reaches $3.08 billion, up 8 percent from 2008. Such a shift will result in “lower investment in something,” Cooke said. “If you (cut) revenue, you are creating a deficit in services.” Bill Roberts: 377-6408

Silent Film ‘Artist’ Makes Loud Noise at Golden Globes

BY DAVID GERMAIN
 Associated Press

The black-and-white silent film “The Artist” came away with the most prizes with three wins at the Golden Globes, but the show spread the love around among a broad range of films and TV shows.

Wins for “The Artist” included best musical or comedy and best actor in a musical or comedy for Jean Dujardin, while the family drama “The Descendants” claimed two awards, as best drama and dramatic actor for George Clooney.

Other acting winners were Meryl Streep, Michelle Williams, Christopher Plummer, and Octavia Spencer, while Martin Scorsese earned the directing honor.

Streep won for dramatic actress as Margaret Thatcher in “The Iron Lady,” her eight win at the Globes.

Williams won for actress in a musical or comedy as Marilyn Monroe in “My Week with Marilyn,” 52 years after Monroe’s win for the same prize at the Globes. Dujardin won for musical or comedy actor for the silent film “The Artist.”

The supporting-acting Globes went to Plummer as an elderly widower who comes out as gay in the father-son drama “Beginners” and Spencer as a brassy housekeeper joining other black maids to share stories about life with their white employers in the 1960s Deep South tale “The Help.”

“With regard to domestics in this country, now and then, I think Dr. King said it best: ‘All labor that uplifts humanity has dignity and importance! And I thank you for recognizing that with our film,’ Spencer said.

Scorsese won for the Paris adventure “Hugo.” It was the third directing Globe in the last 10 years for Scorsese, who previously won for “Gangs of New York” and “The Departed” and received the show’s Cecil B. DeMille Award for lifetime achievement two years ago.

He won over a field of contenders that included Michel Hazanavicius, who had been considered by many in Hollywood as a favorite for his black-and-white silent film “The Artist.”

Williams offered thanks for giving her the same award Monroe once won and joked that her young daughter put up with bedtime stories for six months spoken in Monroe’s voice.

“I consider myself a mother first and an actress second, so the person I most want to thank is my daughter, my little girl, whose bravery and exuberance is the example I take with me in my work and my life,” Williams said.

Dujardin became the first star in a silent film to earn a major Hollywood prize since the early days of film. He won as a silent-era star whose career unravels amid the rise of talking pictures in the late 1920s.

It’s a breakout role in Hollywood for Dujardin, a star back home in France but little known to U.S. audiences previously. His French credits include “The Artist” creator Michel Hazanavicius’ spy spoofs “OSS 117: Cairo, Nest of Spies” and “OSS 117: Lost in Rio.”

FBI Seeks Help Finding Montana Teacher’s Body. New details about the mysterious disappearance and reported death of a small-town Montana math teacher began to trickle out Sunday, as authorities asked property owners in parts of North Dakota and Montana to look for signs of her buried body, and released the names of two men being held in the case. The FBI issued a statement late Sunday saying the body of 43-year-old Sherry Arnold of Sidney, Mont., might be buried in a “shelter belt,” or a line of trees that protects soil from the wind.

Perry Says Marines Who Urinated on Bodies Are ‘Kids.’ Texas Gov. Rick Perry, who has been campaigning furiously in South Carolina in an effort to revive his sputtering presidential campaign, said Sunday that the Obama administration has gone “over the top” in criticizing Marines who were video-taped urinating on Afghan corpses. “Obviously, 18-, 19-year-olds make stupid mistakes all too often, and that’s what’s occurred here,” Perry said in an appearance on CNN’s “State of the Union.” He likened the incident to Gen. George S. Patton Jr. urinating in the Rhine River and Winston Churchill supposedly doing the same thing on the Stegfried Line. — Associated Press

Campaign Officials: Huntsman to Quit Race

WASHINGTON • Jon Huntsman will withdraw today from the race for the Republican presidential nomination, campaign officials told AP on Sunday. Huntsman will endorse Mitt Romney at an event in South Carolina, the officials said. Huntsman believes Romney is the best candidate to beat President Barack Obama in November, they said. The campaign officials spoke on condition of anonymity because Huntsman plans to make the official announcement today. The former Utah governor placed third in last week’s New Hampshire primary despite devoting most of his campaign resources to the state.

Captain’s Conduct Blasted as Divers Find More Dead

Three survivors are rescued — a young South Korean couple on their honeymoon and a crew member brought to shore in a dramatic airlift — some 36 hours after the grounding Friday.

GIGLIO, Italy • Maritime authorities, passengers and mounting evidence pointed Sunday toward the captain of a cruise liner that ran aground and capsized off the Tuscan coast, amid accusations that he abandoned ship before everyone was safely evacuated and was showing off when he steered the vessel far too close to shore.

Divers searching the murky depths of the partially submerged Costa Concordia found the bodies of two elderly men still in their life jackets, bringing the confirmed death toll to five. At least 15 people were still missing, including two Americans.

The recovered bodies were discovered at an emergency gathering point near the restaurant where many of the 4,200 on board were dining when the luxury liner struck rocks or a reef off the tiny island of Giglio. The Italian news agency ANSA reported the dead were an Italian and a Spaniard.

Still, there were glimmers of hope: The rescue of three survivors — a young South Korean couple on their honeymoon and a crew member brought to shore in a dramatic airlift some 36 hours after the grounding late Friday.

Meanwhile, attention focused on the captain, who was spotted by Coast Guard officials and passengers fleeing the scene even as the chaotic and terrifying evacuation was under way.

The ship’s Italian owner, a subsidiary of Carnival Cruise lines, issued a statement late Sunday saying there appeared to be “significant human error” on the part of the captain, Francesco Schettino, “which resulted in these grave consequences.”

Authorities were holding Schettino for suspected manslaughter and a prosecutor confirmed Sunday they were also investigating allegations the captain abandoned the stricken liner before all the passengers had escaped. According to the Italian navigation code, a captain who abandons a ship in danger can face up to 12 years in prison.

A French couple who boarded the Concordia in Marseille, Ophelie Gondelle and David Du Pays, told the Associated Press they saw the captain in a lifeboat, covered by a blanket, well before all the passengers were off the ship.

“The commander left before and was on the dock before everyone was off,” said Gondelle, 28, a French military officer.

Rivals Say Split Conservative Vote Aids Romney in South Carolina

BY BETH FOUHY
 Associated Press

COLUMBIA, S.C. • A splintered conservative vote in South Carolina could pave the way for Mitt Romney to win this week’s pivotal primary, some rivals said Sunday, acknowledging an outcome that prominent state lawmakers suggested could end the nomination fight.

“I think the only way that a Massachusetts moderate can get through South Carolina is if the vote is split,” said Newt Gingrich, portraying himself as the lone conservative with a “realistic chance” of beating Romney in the first-in-the-South contest.

Polls show Romney, the former Massachusetts governor who struggled to a fourth-place finish in South Carolina during his 2008 White House run, with a lead heading into Saturday’s vote. The state has a large population of evangelicals and other conservative Christians, and concerns arose four years ago about his Mormon faith.

Worries About Romney’s LDS Faith Quieter But Not Gone

BY RACHEL ZOLL
 Associated Press

GREER, S.C. • The prospect of a Mormon president appears to be less alien to South Carolina Republicans who are giving Mitt Romney a second look after his failed 2008 run.

Still, worries about his faith persist in a state where one pastor jokes there are “more Baptists than people.”

Voters preparing for the Jan. 21 primary are weighing whether Romney’s religion should matter so much when they can’t pay their bills and a Democrat many distrust occupies the White House.

Four years ago, the Romney campaign directly took on suspicion about The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Conservative Christians, including Protestants and Roman Catholics, do not consider Mormons to be Christian, although Mormons strongly do.

This time, Romney has no formal religion committee and rarely mentions his faith unless asked.

Cruise Ship

“Normally the commander should only leave at the end,” said Du Pays, a police officer who said he helped an injured passenger to a rescue boat. “I did what I could.”

Coast Guard officers later spotted Schettino on land as the evacuation unfolded. The officers urged him to return to his ship and honor his duty to stay aboard until everyone was safely off the vessel, but he ignored them, Coast Guard Cmdr. Francesco Paolillo said.

Schettino insisted he didn’t leave the liner early, telling Mediaset television that he had done everything he could to save lives. “We were the last ones to leave the ship,” he said.

Questions also swirled about why the ship had navigated so close to the dangerous reefs and rocks that jut off Giglio’s eastern coast, amid suspicions the captain may have ventured too close while carrying out a maneuver to entertain tourists on the island.

The ship’s owner, Costa Crociere SpA, issued a statement late Sunday saying it was working with investigators to determine “precisely what went wrong aboard the Costa Concordia.”

“While the investigation is ongoing, preliminary indications are that there may have been significant human error on the part of the ship’s master, Captain Francesco Schettino, which resulted in these grave consequences,” the statement said. “The route of the vessel appears to have been too close to the shore, and the captain’s judgment in handling the emergency appears to have not followed standard Costa procedures.”

Residents of Giglio said they had never seen the Costa come so close to the dangerous “Le Scole” reef area.

“This was too close, too close,” said Italo Arienti, a 54-year-old sailor who has worked on the Maregiglio ferry between Giglio and the mainland for more than a decade. Pointing to a nautical map, he drew his finger along the path the ship usually takes and the jarring one close to shore that it followed Friday.

The ship was a mere 150 yards from shore at the time of the grounding, ANSA quoted Grosseto prosecutor Francesco Verusio as saying. Schettino insisted he was twice as far out and said the ship ran aground because the rocks weren’t marked on his nautical charts.

However, he did concede he was maneuvering the ship in “touristic navigation” — implying a route that was a deviation from the norm and designed to entertain the tourists.

“We were navigating approximately 300 meters from the rocks,” he told Mediaset television. “There shouldn’t have been such a rock. On the nautical chart it indicated that there was water deep below.”

Costa captains have occasionally steered the ship near port and sounded the siren in a special salute, Arienti said. Such a nautical “fly-by” was staged last August, prompting the town’s mayor to send a note of thanks to the commander for the treat it provided tourists who flock to the island, local news portal GiglioNews.it reported.

But Arienti and other residents said even on those occasions, the cruise ship always stayed far offshore, well beyond the reach of the “Le Scole” reefs.

“Every so often they would do a greeting, but not so close — far away, safely,” said resident Giacomo Dannipale.

Douglas Ward, a cruise expert and author of the 2012 Berlitz guide to cruises, said the waters around Giglio are too shallow for such maneuvers.

Coast Guard Cmdr. Filippo Marini said divers had recovered the so-called “black box,” with the recording of the navigational details, from a compartment now under water, though no details were released.

Jorgen Loren, chairman of the Swedish Maritime Officer’s Association, said the captain clearly deviated from the ship’s intended route.

“It is remarkable because weather conditions were good and these cruise ships have the best and most modern technical equipment. All conditions were ideal,” he said.

“These are well-known waters, ferries pass here every day going back and forward to the mainland,” he said.

Meanwhile, rescue work continued into the night on the unsubmerged half of the Concordia, said firefighters spokesman Luca Cari. Sniffer dogs were being brought in, although it was unclear if they could adapt to working in an environment where the horizontal became the vertical, due to the 90-degree list of the ship.

Silenced Musical Treasures Languish in Michigan Vault

Museum association official says many campuses have collections that aren’t part of their schools’ museums and risk being discarded.

BY JEFF KAROUB

Associated Press

ANN ARBOR, Mich. • A massive cache of musical treasures that’s grown to include a fragile harp-piano, the pioneering Moog synthesizer and the theremin used for “The Green Hornet” radio show has been shuffled over the years from a theater to an unheated barn and now languish, rarely seen or heard, in a Michigan storage vault.

Spanning centuries and continents, the instruments worth at least $25 million by their chief caretaker’s estimate are packed and stacked in an out-of-the-way storage room with water-stained ceilings. It’s hardly the environment envisioned for them when Detroit businessman Frederick Stearns gave the University of Michigan the base of the collection a century ago with instructions that the instruments be exhibited — not invisible.

“The only way I can characterize it is Tut’s Tomb, because it’s been so forgotten about for so many years,” said Steven Ball, director of the Stearns Collection of Musical Instruments. “The collection has been in a holding pattern for 112 years. This is a national treasure — it deserves the dignity of either being properly housed ... or to be dispersed in such a way that it could be.”

Such “orphan” collections pose problems for many academic institutions, despite the prestige that comes with owning them. Kris Anderson, director of the University of Washington’s Jacob Lawrence Gallery, said he discovered a repository of nearly 1,000 forgotten paintings and other artwork spanning more than a century. He found out about the collection because its main basement storage space was being reused.

Anderson, a vice president with the Association of Academic Museums and Galleries, said numerous campuses have collections, such as costumes at his school and slide rules within the University of Colorado’s math department, that aren’t part of universities’ museums and risk being discarded. Doing so would be an “irreversible decision to devalue ... the history of the institution itself,” he said in a recent paper.

“Resources are tighter for everybody,” he said. “When the pie shrinks, administrators need to balance the needs of a lot of different constituencies. ... You have to be willing to look for advocates in places you’d never before.”

That was the case with “The Gross Clinic,” a Thomas Eakins painting that Philadelphia’s Thomas Jefferson University agreed to sell in 2006 after 129 years of ownership to a museum being built in Arkansas by Wal-Mart Stores Inc. heiress Alice Walton.

“We are not a museum,” university President Robert Barchi had said about the decision to sell the masterwork, which depicts an operation in progress by a famous surgeon, Dr. Samuel Gross. Protests erupted over the loss of what some argued was part of Philadelphia’s heritage and supporters raised $68 million to keep the painting in the city. It’s now owned jointly by the Philadelphia Museum of Art and the Pennsylvania Academy of the Fine Arts.

For many reasons, the Stearns Collection has never had a permanent home. Less than 1 percent of the 2,500 items in the collection is displayed in exhibit cases at the university’s music school and nearby Hill Auditorium, but most of the keyboards, horns, drums, stringed instruments and other rare musical miscellany have had a nomadic journey.

At present, they’re in a vast room accessible by freight elevator in a building where workers manufactured classified optical and camera equipment during World War II. Cabinets are bursting with items, leaving many instruments stored on the floor. Along one narrow passageway is the 19th-century harp-piano, one of only a half-dozen known to exist, as well as a large Swiss-made music box from the same era and a group of African and Asian instruments. Another section houses several saxophones by inventor Adolphe Sax. Newer additions include the first commercially produced Moog synthesizer and the theremin, the electronic instrument that provided the insect-like buzzing on the “The Green Hornet” show produced in Detroit in the 1940s.

Their out-of-sight circumstances pain Ball, who has a copy of a letter Stearns wrote before donating about 940 instruments in the late 1890s.

“Under no consideration whatever however would I turn the collection over the university except with the understanding that it should be immediately housed and installed,” Stearns wrote. “I would not consent to it being packed away for some future regent to mount to suit themselves or to neglect entirely.”

His original donations were displayed in the outer lobbies of Hill Auditorium for decades, though Ball said the instruments were getting “baked to death” from sunlight through the windows. In the 1970s, the collection — much at that point relegated to cabinets — was cleared out of the auditorium and shipped to an unheated barn far from the central campus. There, hundreds of instruments were lost, stolen or destroyed, according to records Ball has reviewed.

There was a later attempt to install the collection in a former fraternity house, but that building was lost in a swap between the music and engineering schools, Ball said. It’s been in its current off-campus room since the mid-1980s.

University officials recently committed up to $400,000 to create a climate-controlled storage space for the collection. Ball is grateful for that but said it underscores the bigger challenge: finding millions more and figuring out how the collection can be seen, heard and experienced.

Campaign

But Gingrich, Rick Santorum and Rick Perry all said Romney, after victories in Iowa and New Hampshire, continued to benefit from the fractured GOP field and the failure of social conservatives to fully coalesce around a single alternative.

Santorum said South Carolina is “not going to be the final issue” and spoke of the “need to get this eventually down to a conservative alternative” to Romney. “When we get it down to a two-person race, we have an excellent opportunity to win this race,” said the former Pennsylvania senator, who won the endorsement of an influential group of social conservatives and evangelical leaders Saturday in Texas.

Perry, the Texas governor, said it was “our intention” to compete in the next contest, Florida’s Jan. 31 primary, even if he finished last in South Carolina.

Gingrich said he would “reassess” his candidacy if he lost in South Carolina and acknowledged that a Romney victory would mean “an enormous advantage going forward.”

The former House speaker appealed for the support of “every conservative who wants to have a conservative nominee.”

“I hope every conservative will reach the conclusion that to vote for anybody but Gingrich is, in fact, to help Romney win the nomination,” he said.

The state’s senior senator, Republican Lindsey Graham, started looking beyond Saturday’s primary, saying, “If for some reason he’s not derailed here and Mitt Romney wins South Carolina ... I think it should be over.” He added, “I’d hope the party would rally around him if he did in fact win South Carolina.”

To Rep. Tim Scott, R-S.C., the equation is simple:

“If Romney wins South Carolina, I think the game’s over. This is the last stand for many candidates.”

He noted that three candidates are pursuing the evangelical vote “very strongly, and without any question that works to the Romney campaign’s benefit. It’s hard to find a single candidate that rallies all of the Christian voters in South Carolina, and therefore that splintered approach will probably have a major impact” in the primary.

Romney took a rare day off from campaigning while his opponents focused on the South Carolina coast.

Ron Paul returned to the state Sunday after spending three days at home and off the trail. The Texas congressman, whose libertarian message propelled him into second place behind Romney in New Hampshire, attended a rally in Myrtle Beach where he picked up the endorsement of a state senator popular with tea party members.

At the Cathedral of Praise in North Charleston, Gingrich was cheered by church members as he criticized activist judges who he said had made “anti-American” rulings to keep God out of schools. Santorum spoke at the same church Saturday.

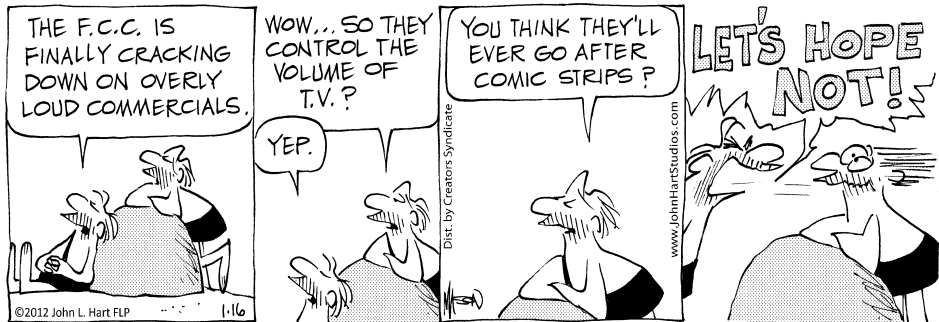

At a prayer breakfast in Myrtle Beach, Perry appealed to religious conservatives to back his candidacy.

“Who will see the job of president as that of faithful servant to the American people, and the God who created us?” Perry said. “I hope each of you will peer into your heart and look for that individual with the record and the values that represent your heart.”

The candidates faced a packed week of campaign events and nationally televised debates today and Thursday. No Republican has won the party’s presidential nomination without carrying South Carolina.

Romney and Private Equity

For Mitt Romney, it's the best of times and the worst of times. While his New Hampshire win brings him closer to the Republican nomination, his campaign narrative against President Obama may be unraveling. The plotline is simple: With a comatose economy and stubbornly high unemployment, Romney's private-sector experience makes him a better job creator than Obama. There are problems. Not only does the economy seem to be strengthening, but Romney's business background is being turned against him. By Republicans, no less.

We understand the achievements of Bill Gates and Steve Jobs. They created enterprises that employ thousands and sell to millions. But "private equity," Romney's specialty? That's more complex and confusing. Texas Gov. Rick Perry calls Romney a "vulture capitalist." Former Utah Gov. Jon Huntsman says "Romney enjoys firing people." Is Romney's business experience a virtue or a vice?

Private equity refers to groups of investors buying the stock of an existing company, thereby "taking it private." Because most purchases use borrowed money ("leverage"), these transactions are known as "leveraged buyouts." Once the investor group has control, it tries to improve profitability by lowering costs and increasing sales. The hope is to resell the business at a huge gain; this usually takes three to 10 years. In 2010, private-equity firms invested $148 billion in 1,234 U.S. companies, says the Private Equity Growth Capital Council.

Private equity has spawned fabulous fortunes. Steve Schwarzman, a founder of the private-equity firm Blackstone, is listed at 66 on the Forbes list of the 400 wealthiest Americans, with a net worth of $4.7 billion. Henry Kravis and George Roberts, founders of KKR, are at 86 and 96 with $3.7 billion and $3.4 billion.

To supporters, private equity revitalizes companies by changing entrenched management, streamlining operations and jettisoning poorly performing products and plants. Detractors contend that gains arise from firing workers and overloading companies with debt. There have been some spectacular successes. An example is Dunkin' Brands (Dunkin' Donuts and Baskin-Robbins). Three private-equity firms bought it in 2006. Since then, it's opened 1,600 U.S. outlets with an estimated 44,000 jobs.

Robert J. Samuelson

Washington Post

But success is hardly guaranteed, as Romney's experience shows. He headed Bain Capital from 1984 to 1999. A Wall Street Journal examination of 77 Bain investments under his leadership concluded that, although they were collectively highly profitable, 22 percent ultimately closed or filed for bankruptcy. Romney has said that Bain helped start or expand Staples, Sports Authority, Domino's and others, creating 100,000 jobs in the process. The Washington Post's Fact Checker column disputes that figure, which is hard to verify or debunk.

The larger truth is that private equity doesn't consciously strive to create jobs. The main aim is to improve a company's profits and resale value. But it's also true that employment practices at companies backed by private equity don't differ dramatically from other similar non-private-equity-owned companies. A study by five economists compared job changes at 3,200 private-equity-controlled companies from 1980 to 2003 with similar non-buyout companies. For the buyout firms, jobs fell about 1.8 percent over their first two years; for the non-buyout firms, there was a slight increase of 0.4 percent during the same period.

What's instructive is that, in both cases, total job gains and losses dwarfed the net change. In the two years, private-equity-owned firms created new jobs equal to about a fifth of their workforces — and destroyed old jobs, often at closed locations, in similar numbers. For the non-private-equity controlled firms, the comparable proportion was about one-sixth. Job turnover is routinely high, but private-equity-controlled firms are quicker at "shrinking underperforming facilities and expanding productive and profitable facilities," says University of Chicago economist Steven Davis, one of the study's authors.

These firms also had greater gains in efficiency, he says.

Joseph Margulies

Los Angeles Times

When Sen. Joseph McCarthy told the Ohio County Women's Republican Club of Wheeling, W.Va., on Feb. 9, 1950, that he held a list of 205 communists employed by the State Department, he ignited a firestorm and launched a career.

We now know there was no list. Even then, it was obvious McCarthy was not particularly punctilious about the numbers. In Wheeling it was 205; in Salt Lake City it was 57; on the Senate floor it was 81. Nor was he especially careful about the allegation. Maybe they weren't all "card-carrying" communists. Maybe some were just "loyalty risks" or "people with communist connections."

None of that mattered. The number, so peculiar and precise, seemed like the product of careful calculation by government insiders. And it fit with what many people wanted to believe, which also encouraged a suspension of disbelief.

I thought of all this recently because the "list" is back.

Wednesday marked 10 years since the first prisoners arrived at the U.S. military prison at Guantanamo Bay, Cuba. About 170 remain, even though most have been cleared for transfer by both the George W. Bush and Obama administrations, meaning they have been cleared for release from U.S. custody and transfer to the custody of another country. (In the past, the receiving country has typically released the prisoner in a matter of hours or days because they haven't done anything wrong.) Yet none of these cleared prisoners is likely to leave any time soon, thanks to Congress' annual pot-clanging fest, also known as the National Defense Authorization Act.

Every year, Congress conditions money for the Defense Department on all manner of draconian amendments. This year, like last year, Congress added restrictions that make it all but impossible for the president to transfer prisoners from the base. Congress passed the amendments in the name of national security and dared the president to veto the bill as we head into a presidential election.

Obama blinked. And you wonder why Americans hate politics.

The restrictions on transfer are motivated by the myth of the superhuman terrorist, a demon so dangerous that every precaution seems essential. And the favorite argument to keep them forever is the so-called list of recidivists. Sen.

John McCain, R-Ariz., for instance, warned during the Senate debate over the defense spending bill that "27 percent of detainees who were released got back in the fight."

Claims like this surface periodically. Leave aside the obvious incongruity of describing someone as having "returned" to behavior without having shown they did anything wrong in the first place. All we know is that once they were at Guantanamo, now they aren't, and someone thinks they may be dangerous.

The last time this issue came up, a colleague and I tried to get to the bottom of it. We filed a request under the Freedom of Information Act. Turns out this "list" is like Gertrude Stein's Oakland: There's no there there.

Former Guantanamo prisoners are tracked by the Defense Intelligence Agency. But in response to our request, we learned that the DIA has no fixed criteria to determine whether a person has "returned" to anything: "DIA does not endeavor to create any sort of firm guidelines for identifying a detainee as having returned to the fight. The data collected to support this determination simply varies too greatly to allow for categorical simplification."

For that reason, the DIA letter said, "the number of persons suspected of having returned to the fight is subject to constant change. ... That number will rise and fall as DIA analysts gather new data and information and as those analysts revise their assessments of previously gathered evidence and intelligence." A person today might be suspected of having returned to the fight because he has no known source of income. But if he gets a job the next day, he could be taken off the list.

Recently, the director of national intelligence told Congress that "81 (former detainees) are confirmed and 69 are suspected of re-engaging in terrorist or insurgent activities after transfer." He said a person can be "confirmed" based on a preponderance of the evidence but "suspected" based on nothing more than "plausible but unverified" information.

But this does not add much because we still do not know what it takes to make the list, or what these people have supposedly done.

But in a time of superhuman demons and cowed leaders, anyone who claims to hold in their hands a list of names will get what they want, and even cleared prisoners will stay locked up.

Joseph Margulies is an attorney with the MacArthur Justice Center and a law professor at Northwestern University. He is the author of "Guantanamo and the Abuse of Presidential Power." He is counsel for Abu Zubaydah, a prisoner at the base. He wrote this for the Los Angeles Times.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

Residents Should Get Involved in Senior Center

I was always taught instead of complaining, stand up and make a difference. I have been volunteering at the Senior Center for about two months. I am not going to say there aren't problems. All organizations have opportunities to improve. I will say that the Senior Center recognizes its need to improve and is taking steps to do so. For example, the smells and food coming from the new cook in the kitchen are heaven, paperwork and offices are getting straightened out and new activities are being discussed. The Senior Center runs on a very low budget. Paid employees are few and the need for honest, dedicated volunteers is great.

In order for the Senior Center to be there for our seniors, we need your ideas, time and labor. For example, give us your thoughts about what new activities, food and events would bring you and your friends to the center. How about considering volunteering your time by welcoming people at the door, answering the phone, serving during lunch or being a driver for Meals on Wheels?

Most of all, we need community members who will volunteer to help. A few examples include an electrician to install a new oven, a heating technician to fix the ductwork so all rooms have heat, and a computer whiz to clean and update our network.

With the whole community's help, not only can we make the Senior Center a place where seniors enjoy gathering but also a place the community of Twin Falls can be proud of. If you have a desire and time to make a difference or you're a senior who wants to socialize with a group of really nice people, come and join us. We'd be grateful to make your acquaintance.

Dad of Southern California Killings Suspect is Homeless

Itzcoatl Ocampo was arrested Friday in connection with the serial killings of four homeless men since late December.

BY CHRISTOPHER WEBER
Associated Press

YORBA LINDA, Calif. • The father of the man suspected of killing homeless men in Southern California is himself homeless and says his son last week showed him a picture of one victim as a warning of the danger of being on the streets.

Refugio Ocampo, 49, also told The Associated Press on Sunday that his son came back a changed man after serving with the Marines in Iraq, expressing disillusionment and becoming ever darker as he struggled to find his way as a civilian.

The father said he lost his job and home, and ended up living under a bridge before finding shelter in the cab of a broken-down big-rig he is helping repair.

His 23-year-old son, Itzcoatl Ocampo, was arrested Friday in connection with the serial killings of four homeless men since late December.

Refugio Ocampo said that on Jan. 11 his son came to him with a picture of the first victim, who was killed on Dec. 20.

“This is what’s happening,” the father quoted his son as saying.

“He was very worried about me. I told him, ‘Don’t worry. I’m a survivor. Nothing will happen to me. I will find something. Count on it,’” the father said.

While Refugio Ocampo

lives away from his family, they remain close. He saw his children every day, and his wife brings food to the parking lot where the truck is located in the city of Fullerton.

Itzcoatl Ocampo has been living with his mother, uncle, and little brother and sister in a humble rented house on a horse ranch surrounded by the sprawling suburbs of Yorba Linda.

Refugio Ocampo, who said he was educated as a lawyer in Mexico, immigrated with his wife and Itzcoatl in 1988 and became a U.S. citizen. He described building a successful life in which he became a warehouse manager and bought a home in Yorba Linda. In the past few years he lost his job, ran out of savings and lost his house.

His son entered the Marine Corps right out of high school in 2006 instead of going to college as his father had hoped. Itzcoatl Ocampo was discharged in 2010 and returned home to find his family in disarray, the father said.

Refugio Ocampo and his youngest son, Mixcoatl, 17, both described a physical condition Itzcoatl suffered in which his hands shook and he suffered headaches. Medical treatments helped until he started drinking heavily, both said.

“He started drinking like crazy, too much, way too much,” the father said.

A neighbor who is a Vietnam veteran and the father both tried to push Itzcoatl to get treatment at a Veterans hospital, but he refused. Refugio Ocampo said he wanted his son to get psychological treatment as well.

“He started talking about stuff that didn’t make any sense, that the end of the world was going to happen,” he said.

“Before, he had the initiative to do things, the desire. But after the military, he didn’t have any of that,” he said.

That was far from the son who in high school was a polite and motivated student, he said.

Refugio Ocampo said investigators came to him on Friday night and showed him surveillance photos from a crime scene, but he did not recognize his son as the person in the images.

N. Idaho Officials to Meet with Feds About Caribou

SANDPOINT (AP) • Bonner County commissioners in northern Idaho plan to meet with U.S. Fish & Wildlife Service officials later this month with the goal of altering the federal agency's plan to protect habitat for woodland caribou.

Commissioners are concerned the plan to designate as critical habitat nearly 600 square miles of land in northern Idaho and northeastern Washington will harm the local economy by restricting logging, snowmobiling and forest access.

Fish and Wildlife announced the plan in November after lawsuits by environmental groups. The agency estimates the woodland caribou herd in the region has dwindled to less than 50, with occasional sightings.

"For three caribou, we're going to tie up over 375,000 acres?" Commissioner Mike Nielsen told the Bonner County Daily Bee.

The meeting is set for Jan. 24 at the Inn at Priest Lake in Coolin. Commissioners have been working to form a coalition with other counties impacted by the federal plan made in November, while also insisting the Fish and Wildlife Service coordinate with them on the habitat designation.

"We've got about 10 or 12 counties all asking to be involved," said Commission Chairman Cornel Rasor.

The deadline to comment on the critical habitat plan, Jan. 30, could be extended.

"We've received some requests for an extension and we're working on that right now to meet that 60-day extension request," said Susan Burch, chief for listing and recovery at Fish & Wildlife's Boise office.

"There's no intent to close anything or do anything different," Burch said about the critical habitat designation. "It just adds another conversation between the federal agencies."

Environmental groups, including the Center for Biological Diversity and Defenders of Wildlife, first sued in 2002, contending the 1984 listing of the woodland caribou under the Endangered Species Act must also be accompanied by habitat protections. But it took a subsequent lawsuit in 2009 to force the agency into the action announced Nov. 29.

Idaho's Mentally Ill Getting Help From Courts, Police

As the number of Idaho inmates with mental illness continues to rise, Gem State police and courts are working on new ways to help before situations turn violent.

BY KATHLEEN KRELLER
Idaho Statesman

BOISE • Ernesto Bustamante. John Delling. Michael James Lee. George Nickel. Dorian Willes. Matthew Jones.

Reports of murder and violence by people who suffer from mental problems, or those shot by police during episodes fueled by alcohol, drugs or mental illness, often capture sensational headlines.

That's no surprise. The numbers of "mental holds" — when police place someone in mandatory custody for mental health issues — increased by nearly 600 since 2009, from 3,746 to 4,338 in 2011.

About one-fifth of Idaho's prison inmates have a diagnosable mental illness. And with the economy ailing, more Idahoans are feeling the strain of an empty pocketbook, fewer people have work-related health insurance, and fewer community resources are available from the Idaho Department of Health and Welfare.

But Idaho police and courts are working on ways to help before situations turn violent.

Training to Defuse a Crisis

Police agencies have implemented a program called Critical Incident Training, which teaches officers to recognize the signs of mental illness, post-traumatic stress and drug or alcohol problems. Officers also get training in how to de-escalate a tense or even life-or-death situation — using special techniques to calm down people who are upset or unstable.

Sgt. David Cavanaugh has overseen the Boise Police Department's CIT program since 2007.

Boise launched the program after the 2004 shooting of 16-year-old Matthew Jones, who charged at a police officer with a bayoneted rifle.

"We wanted to look at how we were dealing with people in crisis before that point," Cavanaugh said.

Boise's police ombudsman had long recommended officers get the training.

Most Boise officers have had a minimum of four hours of CIT overview training; a cadre of CIT-certified officers have had as much as 40 hours.

Like Boise, all Meridian officers have at least basic training in defusing potentially violent situations with mentally ill people, said Tracy Basterrechea, deputy chief of the Meridian Police Department.

Meridian's officers take a six- to eight-hour CIT, with an annual four-hour refresher; some officers have taken a 40-hour course. Officers know that with cuts to state mental health programs, they will have to handle more calls. In Meridian, police put 88 people on mental holds in 2010; as of late November, Meridian police had taken 98 residents to area hospitals for mental holds in 2011.

"We don't get to turn away or say we don't have the funding," Basterrechea said. "We have to deal with it. People expect you to have those answers."

Treating Veterans

Officers decided to incorporate veterans' issues like traumatic brain injury and post-traumatic stress disorder after a 2009 incident with decorated veteran George Nickel.

Nickel was shooting up his apartment complex in a PTSD and alcohol-fueled episode. Officers shot at Nickel but didn't hit him; ultimately, he surrendered and no one was injured.

Fourth District Judge Deborah Bail handled Nickel's case through a modified version of her drug court, which tries to get people holistic help and treatment to interrupt the cycle of crime, court, prison and the social welfare system caused by their addictions.

Since then, Nickel has worked with police, courts and veterans to help others in situations like his.

"Several of the officers in the George Nickel shooting didn't really want to testify against him," Cavanaugh said. "After they learned his story, they thought he didn't need incarceration. (With) that kind of attitude, we might be able to have an impact."

That emphasis revealed its value late last year, Cavanaugh said, when officers encountered a drunken veteran. He couldn't comply with officers' commands because he was having flashbacks.

"One of the officers had been a Marine and was able to help him through," Cavanaugh said.

In early November, Ada County opened the first veterans court; more are planned in Canyon County and Pocatello, state officials say. The courts will help veterans struggling with addiction, mental illness and veteran-specific problems like traumatic brain injury and PTSD.

Idaho has 10 mental health courts to serve people with serious and persistent mental illness in trouble with the law, said Norma Jaeger, statewide drug coordinator.

Needs vs. Dwindling Budgets

The help is important because as of November, the Idaho Department of Correction had 1,642 inmates with diagnosable mental illness in a prison population of 7,738 (as of Dec. 31). That includes a broad range of conditions, including schizophrenia or bipolar disorder. About 500 have mental health issues serious enough that they require special housing or ongoing clinical support to function at least marginally in the general population, said spokesman Jeff Ray.

While the need is great, the Idaho Department of Health and Welfare's Adult Mental Health program has lost more than $3.8 million — or 17 percent — for personnel and programs between fiscal 2009 and 2012, said spokesman Tom Shanahan.

Health and Welfare reduced its Adult Mental Health staff by 35 jobs — including 28 clinical positions that provided direct care to participants, Shanahan said.

Some 450 people were transferred to private providers. Still, the actual number of people Health and Welfare serves is going up.

Packers Victim of Giant Upset

ASSOCIATED PRESS

GREEN BAY, Wis. • For Eli Manning and the New York Giants, Lambeau Field has become a familiar launching pad. After beating the Green Bay Packers at home for the second time in four years, they only hope this trip ends the same way — at the Super Bowl.

Manning threw three touchdown passes and the Giants shocked the Packers 37-20 in an NFC divisional playoff game Sunday. Manning threw for 330 yards, sending the Giants to San Francisco for the NFC championship game next Sunday night.

The Packers might have been the reigning Super Bowl champs, but the Giants might be the hottest team in the NFL.

“I think we’re a dangerous team,” Giants coach Tom Coughlin said. “I like where we are and how we’re playing.”

The Giants stunned the Packers with a touchdown off a long heave from Manning to Hakeem Nicks just before halftime, then knocked them out with a late touchdown off a turnover. Lambeau Field fell silent as the Giants swarmed the field in celebration, with a handful of New York fans chanting, “Let’s go, Giants!”

SUBSTANCE, NOT STYLE FOR RAVENS

ASSOCIATED PRESS

BALTIMORE • If style points and offensive fireworks meant anything, the Baltimore Ravens wouldn’t stand a chance of making it to the AFC championship.

Playing defense and protecting the football are what they do best, and that led to a 20-13 victory over the Houston Texans on Sunday, putting Baltimore in the AFC title game against the New England Patriots.

“I always say there is a right way to do things, there is a wrong way to do things and there is just the Ravens’ way of doing things,” linebacker Terrell Suggs said. “It wasn’t pretty but we’re not really a pretty team. We got the W and now it’s on to the AFC championship.”

Jazz Continue Hot Streak By Beating Denver

DENVER • Paul Millsap had 26 points and 12 rebounds, Al Jefferson added 18 points and 12 rebounds and the Utah Jazz beat the Denver Nuggets 106-96 on Sunday night.

Gordon Hayward scored 19 points and Devin Harris and Alec Burks added 10 each for the Jazz, winners of seven of their last eight.

Danilo Gallinari scored 18 points, Nene had 17 and Aron Afflalo 16 for the Nuggets.

The game was close throughout until Millsap got going early in the fourth quarter. He scored 16 points in the period and gave the Jazz control of a close game.

After a 3-pointer by Gallinari cut the lead to 81-79, the Jazz went to Millsap down low. The forward responded by scoring Utah’s next 14 to give the Jazz a 95-83 lead midway through the period.

Harris hit a 3-pointer with 3:52 left to make it 98-85, Utah’s biggest lead of the game. Denver cut the lead to seven but couldn’t get any closer.

The Jazz started fast in the third quarter, scoring the first seven points to take a 55-48 lead. Denver responded with a 10-2 run to go back in front, but Utah countered with six straight points to take the lead for good. The Jazz led 77-73 heading into the fourth.

Neither team could take control in the first half. Jefferson had 12 points to help the Jazz take a four-point lead in the first quarter, while Nene had 11 for Denver, which led by as many as five.

The Nuggets used a big advantage in free-throw attempts to keep pace with Utah in the first half. Denver was 12 for 18 from the line while the Jazz were just 5 for 7.

Wood River point guard Martinez completes grueling recovery process to shine for Wolverines.

BY DAVID BASHORE

HAILEY • Wood River High School senior Kaitana Martinez stepped onto her home court Friday just planning to have fun.

It was the first time in more than six months that Martinez had played a competitive game. The 2011 Times-News player of the year and first-team all-state selection had missed Wood River’s first 13 contests after undergoing knee surgery.

More Online

Visit www.magicvalley.com/sports for more on Martinez’s recovery, including a video interview with Kaitana as well as action from her first game this season.

She was only about 80 percent in her first appearance, in her estimation. If not for the two scope marks and a 1-1/2-inch scar just below her brace-free right knee, it would have been hard to tell anything had happened.

While there are still hurdles left to clear — namely two weeks during which Wood River will play four games, while Martinez gets her knee to 100-percent — there’s no mistaking that a 191-day odyssey concluded in that gym on Friday night, and a new journey began.

With her return to the hardwood last week, Wood River point guard Kaitana Martinez is no longer just another name in a game program.

Accuser: I Made Up Claims of Fine Abuse

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SYRACUSE, N.Y. • A prison inmate who was one of four men to accuse a former Syracuse University assistant basketball coach of sexual abuse when they were children has admitted that he made up his claim.

The accuser, Floyd VanHooser, wrote in a letter that he lied to police and in December interviews with The Associated Press and The Post-Standard newspaper of Syracuse. He said he wanted to get back at the coach, Bernie Fine, because Fine did not hire a lawyer to help VanHooser fight a criminal conviction.

Fine

Fine had helped raise the 56-year-old VanHooser after his parents died.

Two other men, former Syracuse ball boys in the 1980s, accused Fine late last year of abusing them as children, but the statute of limitations has expired. Fine was fired Nov. 27 after they came forward, ending his 35-plus years as an assistant at Syracuse.

Fine, 66, has denied wrongdoing and has not been charged. Fine’s attorney, Karl Sleight, declined to comment on Sunday. A federal investigation is ongoing.

Another man has also accused Fine, though a prosecutor has said that there is evidence that undercuts that claim.

VanHooser told The Associated Press last month that Fine began sexually abusing him when VanHooser was 14 years old. He said the abuse continued as an adult, when the contact included sex acts for money.

VanHooser said both his parents died by the time he was 13 and he moved in with Fine at 14. Though he began running away after six months, VanHooser said he saw Fine on and off for nearly 40 years.

VanHooser said Friday in a prison interview with the newspaper that it’s true that he and Fine had a sexual relationship as adults for many years, and it continued until last summer. He said Fine first approached him for sex when he was in his 30s. VanHooser said he was usually high on heroin when they had sex.

On Thursday, The Post-Standard received copies of two letters dated Nov. 29 that VanHooser wrote and mailed to Fine. One letter is addressed to Fine and the other “to whom it may concern.”

“In a statement I gave, I told a lot of lies about Bernie Fine. None of what I said was true,” VanHooser wrote. “Bernie has been nothing but good to me over the years. He was the only thing I had close to a father. He never did anything wrong. He is a good man.”

VanHooser confirmed Friday that he wrote the letters and did so without being asked. When asked if his statements to police were true, VanHooser said only parts were.

Martinez

It isn't harsh contact, but enough to put the airborne guard off-balance. She lands awkwardly and immediately feels a sharp pain in her right knee. Looking at her dad, who comes down immediately from the stands, she utters six of the most harrowing words for any athlete: "I think I tore my ACL."

The MRI doesn't come for a week or so, but it confirms what Martinez already knew. It's a clean tear, meaning there's no other structural damage, but she'll still be out for around six months if everything goes well. Suddenly, Wood River's chances of making a return to the Class 4A state championship game, where it lost last season, are on life support.

Worse for Martinez, the phone calls from Division I schools — about 8 to 10 had varying levels of firm interest, with calls rolling in about every other day — stop coming. Her dream of playing major college basketball had ostensibly suffered a mortal blow.

"There were some schools coming to see me in these showcase tournaments, and I had to email and call them all and let them know," says Martinez, adding that she hasn't received a single Division I call since then. "That's what hurt emotionally the most. I'd been training every day for three months between the end of basketball season and summer showcases, working every day on strength and basketball skills. I was at the top of my game, even strides above the end of last (high school) season ... it was devastating."

July 21, 2011, Ketchum: Martinez undergoes arthroscopic surgery 15 days after the injury. During the roughly two-hour procedure, a part of her hamstring will be used as the new ACL to hold her kneecap in place. She notes her doctor's opinion that she had "the best hamstring he's seen on a female." Martinez is still expected to be out a minimum of six months, and she faces an arduous road to recovery that began with simply learning how to walk straight again.

While she's gone, the keys to the Wood River offense are handed to incoming freshman Cicely Peavey.

"At first it was really nerve-racking, but the coaches made sure that I knew I just had to run the offense how I could and not how (Martinez) could, because she's such an amazing athlete," Peavey said. "It really helped when I was told the other players were going to help out and get the ball a little bit. ... I know my role's going to be different when she's back but it's given me a lot of experience."

Though Martinez is ahead of schedule on an already accelerated recovery timetable, she trusts the combination of therapist John Koth and her own body to dictate when to slow down. A two-week blank spot on one of her recovery steps shows the stretch during which she has to step back, because her kneecap isn't settling quite where it's supposed to — a problem she still encounters from time to time.

Every step of her recovery winds up charted in a binder she shares with the Times-News. It's not just a reminder of where she's been and how she got back though — Martinez has doubled her recovery as a senior project. The log contains her timetable for recovery, the 29-step physical recovery process she needs to nail down, pictures of the surgery, everything in great detail.

Even before her injury, Martinez was heavily invested in knowledge of sports injuries, an interest that only ramps up with more time on her hands as she rehabbed. It'll pay off down the road as well, when she goes to medical school. She jokes that she might go with sports medicine with all she's learned, but she still doesn't know what field she wants to practice.

Dec. 7, 2011, Twin Falls: Martinez takes a full non-contact pregame warm-up against Canyon Ridge. It's something that she's done in every game so far, but grabs more attention because it's the team's first conference road game, thus more eyes are watching.

"You can tell from warm-ups that she's the best player on the floor," a bystander observes.

Fifteen days later, Martinez passes her final fitness test and is cleared for full contact in practice. It's the last major hurdle before she can play again. Wood River has struggled in her absence, but the minute she sets foot on the floor, it'll be like it's a new season.

Jan. 10, Twin Falls: The Wolverines drop another close game, this one 33-30 at the hands of Twin Falls to fall to 5-8 on the season and 2-4 in the Great Basin Conference. Of their eight losses, six of them were by single digits. The other two were by 21 and 18 to state-ranked Rigby.

After the game, an interview with senior Haylee Thompson shifts to the topic of Martinez, and the Utah State-bound forward lights up in anticipation of her point guard's imminent return.

"It's really going to be relaxing to have her back on the floor, at least for me," Thompson says. "I'll be able to stay down low and not have to come out and help the guards as much, and she will give us some leadership and composure that I think we were lacking with inexperience."

In other words, Thompson is Linus, Martinez the blue blanket.

Jan. 13, Hailey: Martinez leads the team onto the floor for warm-ups. Her number is marked as a starter in the official scorebook for the first time this season. She's saved for last in pregame introductions and, predictably, the fans blow the lid off the gym when her name is called.

Seconds after collecting the opening tip, Martinez fires a bullet pass into the post. Her first shot is short, but she soon drains a 3-pointer. She's fouled twice, and on one play she takes a semi-awkward tumble going for a steal. She scores 15 points, sharing the game high, and adds four rebounds and four assists to one turnover in 12 minutes, 31 seconds of action. She could have had more helpers, but it's going to take recipients a little time to re-acclimate to Martinez's passing style.

Most importantly, she gets through the game unscathed.

"It's a little sore and stiff, but I feel good," she says. "Since last season I've just wanted to get back playing in front of this community, which gives us so much support."

Emerging from the hallway nearest the locker room to awaiting family and friends, Martinez takes every hug, high-five and compliment in stride. There's scarcely a moment she can take to herself, but a question allows her to reflect on a post-op journey that lasted five months, three weeks and a day, and how getting through her first game is just the next step.

"My faith and my family were two things that really got me through the toughest times. That's always been a value and there's a little place I can disappear with the Lord. The spiritual growth has been amazing," says Martinez, a devout Catholic. "But that dream that I've always had, that's what drives me now. I want to leave this school knowing I did everything I could to give my teammates and my community everything I could to win them a state championship."

Giants

The win came four years after the Giants beat a Brett Favre-led Packers team in the NFC title game. It wasn't nearly as frigid this time around, and the Packers' vulnerable defense seemed to be waiting to get sliced up.

Manning found six different receivers against a porous Packers defense. But Manning did the most damage with his throws to Nicks, who caught seven passes for 165 yards and two touchdowns.

Nicks' biggest play was a 66-yard touchdown catch in the first quarter. His score at the end of the half came on a 37-yard pass into the end zone with defenders all around.

"It was a big momentum play for them, but we were not deflated as a football team," Packers coach Mike McCarthy said.

The Giants' defense also was able to defuse the big-play abilities of Aaron Rodgers and the Packers' defense.

Rodgers was 26 of 46 for 264 yards, with two touchdowns and an interception. He also was the Packers' leading rusher with 66 yards on seven carries.

Meanwhile, the Packers' past problems with dropped balls by their talented group of wide receivers returned at the worst time imaginable.

And while the Packers' defense has been porous all season, giving up far too many yards and big plays, they've typically made up for it by forcing turnovers.

This time, the Packers were the ones giving the ball away.

Green Bay lost three fumbles, including one on a rare giveaway by Rodgers. The Giants also sacked Rodgers four times.

With the Packers trailing 20-10 at halftime but finally beginning to look like themselves on offense to start the second half, Osi Umenyiora swatted the ball away from Rodgers, and Deon Grant recovered the fumble at the Green Bay 37.

But the mistake didn't cost the Packers points, and Green Bay cut the lead to seven points on a 35-yard field goal by Mason Crosby late in the third quarter.

The Packers put together another drive early in the fourth quarter, but Michael Boley and Umenyiora combined to sack Rodgers on fourth-and-5 in Giants territory.

After carving up the Packers in the first half, the Giants' offense hit a lull in the second half. But they broke out of it to drive for a 35-yard field goal by Lawrence Tynes to take a 23-13 lead with 7:48 left to play.

Packers running back Ryan Grant then fumbled after catching a pass and the Giants recovered, taking the ball back deep into Green Bay territory.

Manning then threw a 4-yard touchdown pass to Mario Manningham and the Giants took a 30-13 lead. Rodgers rallied the Packers for a 16-yard touchdown pass to Donald Driver, cutting the lead to 30-20 with 4:46 left.

Ravens

The Ravens (13-4) had almost as many punts (nine) as first downs (11) and scored only three points over the final 46 minutes. But Baltimore wasn't penalized once, didn't commit a turnover, intercepted rookie quarterback T.J. Yates three times and totaled four takeaways — two in the first quarter and two over the final eight minutes.

"If we didn't get any of those turnovers it would probably be a different game," Ravens defensive tackle Haloti Ngata said.

Baltimore visits New England next Sunday, with the winner advancing to the Super Bowl in Indianapolis on Feb. 5.

The Patriots lead the series 6-1, but Baltimore's lone win came in the postseason.

"We don't play the game until next week," Suggs said. "I'm going to enjoy tonight."

Veteran defensive stars Ed Reed and Ray Lewis led a unit that yielded only one touchdown and came up with the big play when one was needed. Lewis had a team-high seven tackles and Reed sealed the victory with the Ravens' fourth takeaway, an interception near the goal line in the closing minutes.

"It's winning by any means necessary," Reed said. "That's what it's got to be."

The Ravens finished 9-0 at home, but this one was anything but easy. Baltimore led 17-3 after the first quarter, and interceptions by Lardarius Webb and Reed in the final 7½ minutes helped the advantage stand up.

Reed has eight interceptions in 10 playoff games, few bigger than the last one.

"You can't say enough about him," Ravens linebacker Jarret Johnson said. "His big plays always seem to happen when you need one."

One week earlier, in the first playoff game in Texans history, Houston didn't commit a turnover in a 31-10 home rout of Cincinnati. Against Baltimore, the Texans couldn't hold onto the ball and quickly fell behind by two touchdowns.

Arian Foster ran for 132 yards, the first player ever to rush for 100 yards against the Ravens in the postseason. But Yates' three interceptions matched the total he had in six regular season games.

"I can't have the turnovers," Yates said. "If we don't turn the ball over like that, we have a chance to win. And we still had a chance to win. If I'd done a better job of protecting the football, I really think we'd have come out with the win today. We did a good job of moving the ball and we had some big plays, but you can't have that many picks."

Down 17-13 at halftime, Houston twice held the Ravens without a first down in the third quarter before driving to the Baltimore 32. From there, Neil Rackers' 50-yard field goal try hit the crossbar and dropped into the end zone.

Baltimore then launched a drive in which seldom-used Lee Evans made a sensational one-handed catch for a 30-yard gain on third-and-5 from the Houston 39. On fourth-and-goal inside the 1, Ray Rice was stuffed by linebacker Tim Dobbins for no gain.

"That's a huge play," Houston defensive end J.J. Watt said. "Those are the type of plays that win play-offs games. Obviously, we wish it had gone the other way, but those are the type of plays that you remember."

Tony Parker had 17 points and nine assists for the Spurs, who have won three straight. DeJuan Blair added 14 points and rookie Kawhi Leonard had 12 for San Antonio.

Suns veterans Steve Nash and Grant Hill returned after missing Friday's loss to New Jersey. Nash was out with a right quadriceps contusion and Hill missed the WARRIORS 99, PISTONS 91 AUBURN HILLS, Mich. • David Lee scored 24 points and Monta Ellis added 22 to help the Golden State Warriors win on the road for the first time this season, 99-91 over the Detroit Pistons on Sunday night.

Golden State won at Detroit for the second time in its last 17 visits. Greg Monroe had 25 points and eight rebounds for the Pistons.

The Warriors trailed 48-44 at halftime but went on an 8-0 run early in the third quarter and never trailed after that. They led by five early in the fourth before scoring 10 points in a row to make it 88-73. Ellis scored 17 points in the second half.

Today is Monday, Jan. 16, the 16th day of 2012. There are 350 days left in the year. This is the Martin Luther King Jr. holiday.

Today's Highlight:
On Jan. 16, 1912, a day before reaching the South Pole, British explorer Robert Scott and his expedition were bitterly disappointed to find evidence in the form of a rock cairn and dog sled tracks showing that Roald Amundsen of Norway and his team had gotten there ahead of them. (Scott and his party perished during the return trip.)

TODAY IN HISTORY

On this date:
In 1547, Ivan IV of Russia (popularly known as “Ivan the Terrible”) was crowned czar.

In 1883, the U.S. Civil Service Commission was established.

In 1920, Prohibition began in the United States as the 18th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution took effect, one year to the day after its ratification. (It was later repealed by the 21st Amendment.)

In 1935, fugitive gangster Fred Barker and his mother, Kate “Ma” Barker, were killed in a shootout with the FBI at Lake Weir, Fla.

In 1944, Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower took command of the Allied Expeditionary Forces in London.

In 1969, two manned Soviet Soyuz spaceships became the first vehicles to dock in space and transfer personnel.

In 1978, NASA named 35 candidates to fly on the space shuttle, including Sally K. Ride, who became America's first woman in space, and Guion S. Bluford Jr., who became America's first black astronaut in space.

In 1987, Hu Yaobang resigned as head of China's Communist Party, declaring he'd made mistakes in dealing with student turmoil and intellectual challenges to the system.

In 1991, the White House announced the start of Operation Desert Storm to drive Iraqi forces out of Kuwait.

In 1992, officials of the government of El Salvador and rebel leaders signed a pact in Mexico City ending 12 years of civil war that had left at least 75,000 people dead.

Ten years ago: Richard Reid was indicted in Boston on federal charges alleging he'd tried to blow up a U.S.-bound jetliner with explosives hidden in his shoes. (Reid later pleaded guilty and was sentenced to life in prison.) A gunman went on a shooting rampage at the Appalachian School of Law in Grundy, Va., killing the dean, a professor and a student; former student Peter Odighizuwa later pleaded guilty to capital murder and was sentenced to life in prison.

Five years ago: Sen. Barack Obama, D-Ill., launched his successful bid for the White House. Jury selection began in the CIA leak trial of former White House aide I. Lewis “Scooter” Libby. (Libby was later convicted of perjury, obstruction and lying to the FBI; President George W. Bush ended up commuting Libby's 30-month prison term.) Two car bombs exploded outside Al-Mustansiriya University in Baghdad, killing at least 70 people. Pookie Hudson, lead singer for the Spaniels doo-wop group, died in Capitol Heights, Md., at age 72. Actor Ron Carey (“Barney Miller”) died in Los Angeles at age 71.

One year ago: Former Haitian strongman Jean-Claude “Baby Doc” Duvalier, who'd been living in exile in France, made a surprise return to Haiti as the country wrestled with a political crisis, cholera outbreak and stalled reconstruction from a devastating earthquake. “The Social Network” won top movie honors at the Golden Globes with four prizes, including best drama and director; “The Kids Are All Right” won for best musical or comedy. Top TV honors went to “Boardwalk Empire” and “Glee.”

DEAR ABBY: I'm a 40-year-old female in the military who has been married for a few years. When I got married, I was slim, had a full head of beautiful, long hair and hardly any medical problems. Over the last couple of years I have developed a host of medical issues, all related to the harsh conditions of my deployments.

ALFALFA HAY good,

THE ACES ON BRIDGE®

Bobby Wolff

"All men think all men mortal, but themselves."

— Edward Young

Today's deal comes from the finals of a national championship. How would you evaluate South's cards?

In one room, South opened three hearts. West doubled, North raised to four hearts, and South fell from grace by bidding on to five hearts over East's four-spade bid. It is better for South to double here to show extra shape, wanting to bid again, though North might well have got it wrong and bid five hearts himself, but then it would have been his fault! The defenders cashed out for 300.

In the other room, Ishmael Del'Monte opened four hearts, doubled by West to end the auction. (Most play this double nowadays to be closer to takeout than optional, but maybe the fact that West was a rubber-bridge expert made his double more inclined to penalties.)

West led the spade king to get a count card of the five, and continued with the ace — the queen might have been clearer. East followed with the three, leaving West to guess if this was suit-preference for clubs from an original holding of four spades, or an original doubleton spade.

Either way, though, how could cashing the diamond ace next have been wrong? If partner discourages, you revert to spades and wait for your club tricks if any. In fact, West played a third spade and declarer trumped, then ruffed out the clubs via the trump finesse. He ended up with three clubs and seven hearts, for 590.

ANSWER: The best way to set up extra tricks here might be to lead hearts — but only if partner is stacked in that suit. A more plausible route might be to lead clubs, hoping for an early ruff, and maybe a trump promotion in the suit later on.
