Supreme Court Tosses GOP Lawsuit

An unusually public Republican Party dispute over firing two redistricting commissioners ended Wednesday, clearing the committee to resume work today.

BY JOHN MILLER
Associated Press

BOISE • The Idaho Supreme Court on Wednesday dismissed a lawsuit filed by state Republican leaders seeking to boot two redistricting commissioners, freeing the panel to reconvene without threat of interruption by a bitter internal GOP dispute.

State Republican Chairman

Norm Semanko and House Speaker Lawrence Denney had sought to fire Randy Hansen and Dolores Crow, levying accusations including that they'd insufficiently represented GOP interests by voting with Democrats in a unanimous 6-0 decision in October to approve new legislative maps.

The justices' decision is a victory for Secretary of State Ben Ysursa and Idaho Attorney General

Lawrence Wasden, also Republicans, who fought Semanko's and Denney's redistricting move on grounds they had no legal right to remove the commissioners.

"Counsel for (Semanko and Denney) failed to file a brief showing a clear right to relief sought under statute or Constitution of the state of Idaho," the justices wrote in a terse, one-page ruling.

Denney said Wednesday he was unlikely to file a renewed complaint.

"If that's their decision, we'll just move ahead," the Midvale Republican said. Attempts to reach Semanko for comment were not immediately successful.

The redistricting commission, including Hansen, a former Twin Falls Republican House member, and Crow, a former Republican representative from Nampa, is due to reconvene today in another bid to craft a plan that meets Supreme Court muster.

When reached Wednesday afternoon, Hansen said he was already in Boise and didn't factor the lawsuit into his decision to attend today's redistricting meeting.

"We thought that they would" dismiss the case, Hansen said. "But I didn't follow that because I just knew we were going to do our work regardless."

Justices last week ruled the plan the commission supported in October split too many counties to be constitutional.

Hansen said he had met with Twin Falls County Prosecutor Grant Loeb to go over a map that Loeb had submitted to the committee. The map, which is the fifth submitted by Loeb, contains only five county splits.

Idaho's Courts Feeling the Squeeze

Issues of a growing caseload and lagging pay for judges highlighted Chief Justice Roger Burdick's Wednesday presentation to lawmakers.

BY MELISSA DAVLIN
mdavlin@magicvalley.com

BOISE • Idaho's courts are feeling the strain from budget cuts, too.

On Wednesday, Idaho Supreme Court Chief Justice Roger Burdick presented his State of the Judiciary report to the Idaho House and Senate. He described a judicial system struggling to keep up with an increased caseload while dealing with limited resources.

Burdick said the state has seen a 151 percent increase in mental health commitment proceedings since 2006, a jump he attributed to decreased availability of mental health treatment. Divorce and child custody cases have risen by 10 percent, and district court civil cases — including civil, medical and business disputes — have jumped by 30 percent.

"The challenge, then, is how to meet this upward trend with static resources," Burdick said.

It's not all bad news for Idaho's judiciary. In the last year, Idaho's drug

ANOTHER WATER MAIN BREAK BLOCKS T.F. TRAFFIC

BY KIMBERLEE KRUESI

TWIN FALLS • City work crews worked Wednesday to patch the source of a leak in a main Twin Falls water line.

City workers detected a leak near the intersection of Washington Street and Falls Avenue early in the morning. They soon began digging up pavement to where they thought the leak might have been coming from.

Public Works Manager Jon Caton said the leak came from an older 8-inch water pipe that cracked.

Workers backfilled around the pipe with concrete to stop the leak.

It wasn't immediately clear why the pipe had cracked.

"There wasn't anything obvious or apparent," Caton said.

If the leak had been found under the intersection of Washington and Falls itself, the city would have had to close the intersection until it was fixed. But Caton said that won't be needed. Southbound drivers on Washington today approaching Falls should expect the intersection's left turn lane and the right-most lane traveling through the intersection to be open. The center lane will be closed, though Caton hopes to reopen it by the end of today.

This is the third recent break of a main Twin Falls water line. A relatively new pipe failed in late December near the Glanbia Foods facility in southern Twin Falls, while a decades-old pipe in Rock Creek Canyon also failed earlier this month, causing the loss of about a day's worth of city potable water.

Feds Seek Alternatives to Restricting Popular Rock Climbing Areas

BY KIMBERLEE KRUESI

JEROME • Depending on who you talk to, the discussion of recreational access within Cassia and Power counties can easily get personal.

And as a federal advisory group seeks alternatives to barring rock climbing and other recreational uses of public land in the counties' southern reaches, special interest groups are speaking up.

On Wednesday, the U.S. Bureau of Land Management's Resource Advisory Council met in Jerome to discuss access to federal land at Cedar Fields and the Castle Rocks Inter-agency Recreation Area.

Due to increased foot traffic, the sites are showing signs of erosion, said Suzann Henrikson, a BLM archaeologist in Burley.

Because of their archaeological significance, the sites are given historical preservation status. But once damage from recreational use — fire pits, graffiti,

Blaine Co. Schools Eye Future of $29.5M Levy

BY JULIE WOOTTON
jwootton@magicvalley.com

HAILEY • Now that the state's legislative session is up and running, the Blaine County School District is keeping an eye on the future of a source of funding that accounts for more than half its budget.

The 3,400-student school district relies on a $29.5 million annual levy on local property taxes to fund its operations.

The levy's history dates back more than five years.

And now, some area legislators expect the topic of its future to return during this year's session.

Idaho school districts used to receive part of their funding from local property tax revenue. But in 2006, state legislators changed the system through the Property Tax Relief Act to base funding on state income and sales taxes instead.

"They removed property tax as a funding mechanism for public education in Idaho," said Heather Crocker, director of communications for the Blaine County School District.

However, four resort-area school districts — Blaine County, Avery, Swan Valley and McCall/Donnelly — collected more in property tax revenue than what they'd receive under the revised state system.

As a result, they were exempted from the act and a budget stabilization levy was created for each district without voter approval.

That situation, though, nearly changed last year. Rep. Dennis Lake, R-Blackfoot, sponsored a bill that would have required the four school districts to get voter approval starting in 2013 in order to renew the levy issue.

Although the bill passed the state's House last year, it didn't make it out of a Senate committee.

Lake said Wednesday that he expects a similar bill about the levy system to come up again during this year's legislative session.

"The point is still the same," he said. "People need the chance to vote on the tax."

But Sen. Michelle Stennett, D-Ketchum, said she'd like to see the system remain the same for the Blaine County School District and the other districts affected.

If a bill is introduced and passed, it could mean Blaine County voters would decide whether to continue supporting the school district financially through the levy.

"We believe that they would support it," Crocker said.

and mental health courts helped 20 babies be born to newly clean and sober mothers.

"There can be no greater legacy than having these kids start out in a sober, safe home with parents who will teach them the rewards of sobriety and accountability," Burdick said.

Burdick also mentioned the Snake River Basin Adjudication, formed in 1987 in Twin Falls to handle legal issues regarding water disputes throughout much of the state. In that time, the court has completed more than 150,000 claims, Burdick said, and has fewer than 1,900 left to adjudicate. That's unprecedented, Burdick said.

"Under the leadership of District Judge Eric Wildman, we are now starting to draft the final decree for the Snake River Basin's water resources," he said.

Burdick ended his speech stressing the need to have a more attractive compensation plan for judges, saying Idaho ranks 47th in the nation for trial judges' pay. He also emphasized his desire to keep an attractive retirement plan for judges.

"We must begin a conversation with the Legislature, the governor, and county clerks and commissioners about how best to address the pent-up demand for judges, court facilities, and new resources needed to conduct safe, timely hearings on the vital issues facing everyday Idaho citizens," Burdick said.

Man Charged with Multiple Child Sex Crimes

BY ALISON GENE SMITH
alismith@magicvalley.com

TWIN FALLS • A 24-year-old Twin Falls man was arraigned Tuesday in Twin Falls County 5th District Court on five counts of lewd conduct with a minor under 16.

Jason Reed Allen is accused of raping three girls, now aged 11, 14 and 16, last summer while they stayed over at his home.

On Oct. 17, Twin Falls police were alerted that the three girls had disclosed sexual abuse that occurred starting in the summer and into October.

An officer met with the 11-year-old girl who through interviews, written reports and drawings told police Allen had tried to kiss her and raped her on two occasions.

In a third incident, police say the girl had trouble remembering details and said Allen had given her and the two other girls alcoholic lemonade.

Police say the 14-year-old girl reported Allen made sexual contact with her so many times she was not sure of a total number of incidents. The girl reported the last time was Oct. 1.

In a written statement to police, the 16-year-old girl described two occasions when she was raped by Allen.

According to police, the mother of two of the girls confronted Allen and his wife in their home the evening of Oct. 16. In an interview with Allen's wife, police say she told them the girls' mother began punching Allen, calling him a pervert and told him to call police and report her if he was innocent. According to the report he did not call police.

Police say Allen's wife told them he would often go outside alone with the girls and she believed he had abused them.

Allen denied all allegations during interviews with police and said the only contact he had with the girls was a hug, or putting an arm around them.

Allen was held on at $25,000 bond and a preliminary hearing is scheduled for Feb. 3.

Parents Seek Solution to Classroom Crowding

BY LAURIE WELCH
lwelch@magicvalley.com

BURLEY • Concerned parents of Raft River Elementary School students asked the Cassia County School Board on Tuesday for answers to relieve overcrowding in the Malta school's classrooms.

"What is the possibility of getting a couple more teachers so we can split some of those big classes?" asked parent Gary Bake. Bake said

"We're well aware of your crowded conditions. We've been in the classrooms and know there are some challenges there," said district Superintendent Gaylen Smyer.

Smyer said the district must provide a safe environment for students, but safety concerns don't direct funding to help pay for more teachers. State funding for teaching positions is based on each school's average daily student attendance level. More students mean more money for teachers.

"It restricts our ability to be able to meet all of the needs in the community," Smyer said. "We recognize your needs and it's a high priority for us."

BUHL MAN TRIES TO ELUDE POLICE ON SCOOTER

BY ALISON GENE SMITH
alismsmith@magicvalley.com

BUHL • A Buhl man was arrested Tuesday on charges of possession of a controlled substance, possession of drug paraphernalia and resisting arrest after attempting to flee Buhl police officers on a gas-powered scooter.

At about 11:12 a.m., a Buhl police officer reported seeing Mark Allen Kelly, 33, run a stop sign at Poplar Street and Broadway Avenue North while driving the scooter. The officer said he recognized Kelly and knew he had a suspended driver's license.

The officer tried to initiate a traffic stop but was delayed because of traffic. Meanwhile, Kelly drove out of sight down an alley. Several deputies from the Twin Falls County Sheriff's Office also responded and searched for Kelly.

While searching, the officers were told a hang-up 911 call had been made from a house in the area. When they arrived, the officers found fresh footprints in the snow and the house's front door unlocked. They searched the house for an injured person but found the house was empty.

A deputy spotted a suspicious man matching Kelly's description near Buhl High School and detained him.

When the officers tried to handcuff Kelly, he began fighting with them. Eventually, they were able to get him under control and found he had a glass pipe with crystal residue and a baggie with a crystal substance in it. The substance in the pipe later tested positive in a field test kit for methamphetamine and the substance in the bag was sent to the State Lab for testing.

At about 5:30 p.m. a man came to the Buhl Police Department and filed a report of a missing scooter matching the description of the one Kelly was driving. The scooter has not yet been recovered.

Kelly is scheduled for a preliminary hearing for the possession charge on Feb. 3 and a pretrial hearing for the other charges on Feb. 14. He is being held in the Twin Falls County Jail on $10,000 bond.

APPEALS COURT UPHOLDS T.F. MAN'S SEX ABUSE CONVICTION

TIMES-NEWS

BOISE • The Idaho Court of Appeals has affirmed the conviction of a Twin Falls man despite errors made during the trial in district court.

In August 2010, Dwain K. Whitaker, then 48, was sentenced to 20 years to life in prison after being found guilty of 11 counts of lewd conduct with a minor child and three counts of sexual abuse of a child younger than 16.

Whitaker appealed the conviction, saying testimony by his wife that he had viewed pornography should not have been entered into evidence since it had nothing to do with the charges in the trial.

According to Idaho Rule of Evidence 404, "other crimes, wrongs, or acts" are not admissible to prove the character of a person in court.

According to the Court of Appeals decision, the district court made an error when it allowed the testimony under the reasoning that viewing adult pornography is legal. The decision said even though viewing adult pornography is legal it was still an "act" that could be considered wrong by some, and could be considered a negative characteristic about Whitaker.

The court concluded that even though the error was made, it was harmless since the evidence of Whitaker's guilt came from the testimony of the two victims and a medical expert.

Redistricting

"We'll have to see how that fits and complies with what the Supreme Court and the state have said," Hansen said. "We certainly will take any plan, including Grant's, very seriously."

Redistricting in Idaho — required every 10 years, to preserve one-person, one-vote principles after population changes — has been fraught with difficulty.

A first six-member commission made up of three Democrats and three Republicans last summer foundered on partisan bickering and adjourned without agreeing on a plan. The replacement panel, which included Crow and Hansen, unanimously agreed on new maps after less than a month, but that immediately prompted two lawsuits.

The conflict intensified late last week, when Denney announced that House members were unhappy with Crow, his appointee, because she "gave too much away" to minority Democrats by joining the unanimous vote approving the redistricting maps that were later ruled unconstitutional.

Semanko contended Hansen, his appointee, deserved to be ousted because he was behind the previous plan that was challenged in the Supreme Court by Twin Falls County.

This very public dispute, pitting GOP leader against GOP leader, has touched off a nerve within the dominant Idaho political party's inner circles.

In a guest editorial to Idaho newspapers, former Republican Gov. Phil Batt decried what he called Semanko's and Denney's efforts to replace Hansen and Crow "with hard-line party loyalists."

Denney had named former state Rep. Bob Forrey of Nampa, while Semanko picked GOP activist Angela Cross of Post Falls as replacements.

"Our party leaders want to sully the reapportionment process for more political gain," Batt wrote. "I guess they want 100 percent Republicans of their own variety."

And House Assistant Majority Leader Scott Bedke, R-Oakley, told reporters that some House members were doing their best to distance themselves from the fiasco.

If anyone had asked him if the party should go after Crow and Hansen, Bedke said he would have advised restraint.

"No, I was not consulted," Bedke said, before the ruling. "If I had been, I would have expressed some reluctance about going down this road."

The six-person, bipartisan commission also includes Republican Sheila Olsen, and Democrats Ron Beitelspacher, Shauneen Grange and Elmer Martinez.

Senate President Pro Tem Brent Hill, R-Rexburg, never sought to replace Olsen, his appointee. Democratic leaders also stuck by their appointees.

Times-News writer Melissa Davlin contributed to this report.

foot traffic and such — causes site erosion, that status can be stripped. The BLM's typical response to such signs of damage is to close off a site in order to protect its ecological and historical integrity, Henrikson said.

The debate is controversial among rock climbers and local members of American Indian tribes who have vested interests in the area.

Shoshone-Bannock Tribe member Merceline Boyer said the area is still visited by tribal members. Over the years, she said, she's seen sites get trashed or disrespected by recreational land users.

"These places are sacred," Boyer said. "It's where our ancestors went and it's where we still go today. We want this land protected."

However, rock climbers and other recreationists oppose the closures just as strongly.

Since the 1990s, Cedar Fields has been a popular destination for climbers, said Jack Brennan, a member of the Eastern Idaho Climbers Association.

"We think there should be a common ground between the BLM and rock climbers," he said. "Climbing has been taking place in these areas for years. We should not have our freedoms taken away now."

Rock climbing in the Castle Rocks area has already been banned for the past two years. BLM officials are looking to see if the ban should be extended in conjunction with a ban on rock climbing in Cedar Fields.

Brennan agreed that BLM should protect culturally sensitive lands but argued that the historical sites are usually not at the base of a cliff where climbers gather.

For now, the RAC decided a subcommittee should be appointed to find an alternative to closing the sites. The group will seek an option that won't polarize the two groups but still follows federal guidelines that regulate a historical site.

A Presidential Rerun

Summertime is usually when TV networks air repeats of shows we've already seen.

In his State of the Union Address Tuesday night, the president got a five-month jump on the summer season by re-running a class-envy video he has broadcast more times than local stations have shown episodes of "The Andy Griffith Show."

Instead of a credible assessment of the state of the union, which is not good, the president delivered a slightly toned down campaign speech. We heard more of the same about how "the rich" aren't paying their "fair share" in taxes.

There was an unserious nod to government overspending to which he has massively contributed. Why should those of us who work for a living give more money to a government that under Democrats and Republicans has been such a poor steward of what we have already provided? Confiscating all of the wealth of Mitt Romney, Warren Buffett and every other billionaire and millionaire in the country would have a negligible effect on the national debt, unless government decided to live within taxpayers' means.

Having Warren Buffett's secretary, Debbie Bosanek, in the gallery with first lady Michelle Obama was cheap theatrics. If the president doesn't think it "fair" that she pays a higher tax percentage than her boss, let him ask Congress to lower her percentage with a flat tax. Bosanek may pay a higher tax rate, but Buffett pays a lot more money to the federal government.

President Obama wants four more years to continue the policies he's inflicted on us the last three years. Why would anyone believe that his policies, which are not succeeding and can't succeed, will miraculously work given more time?

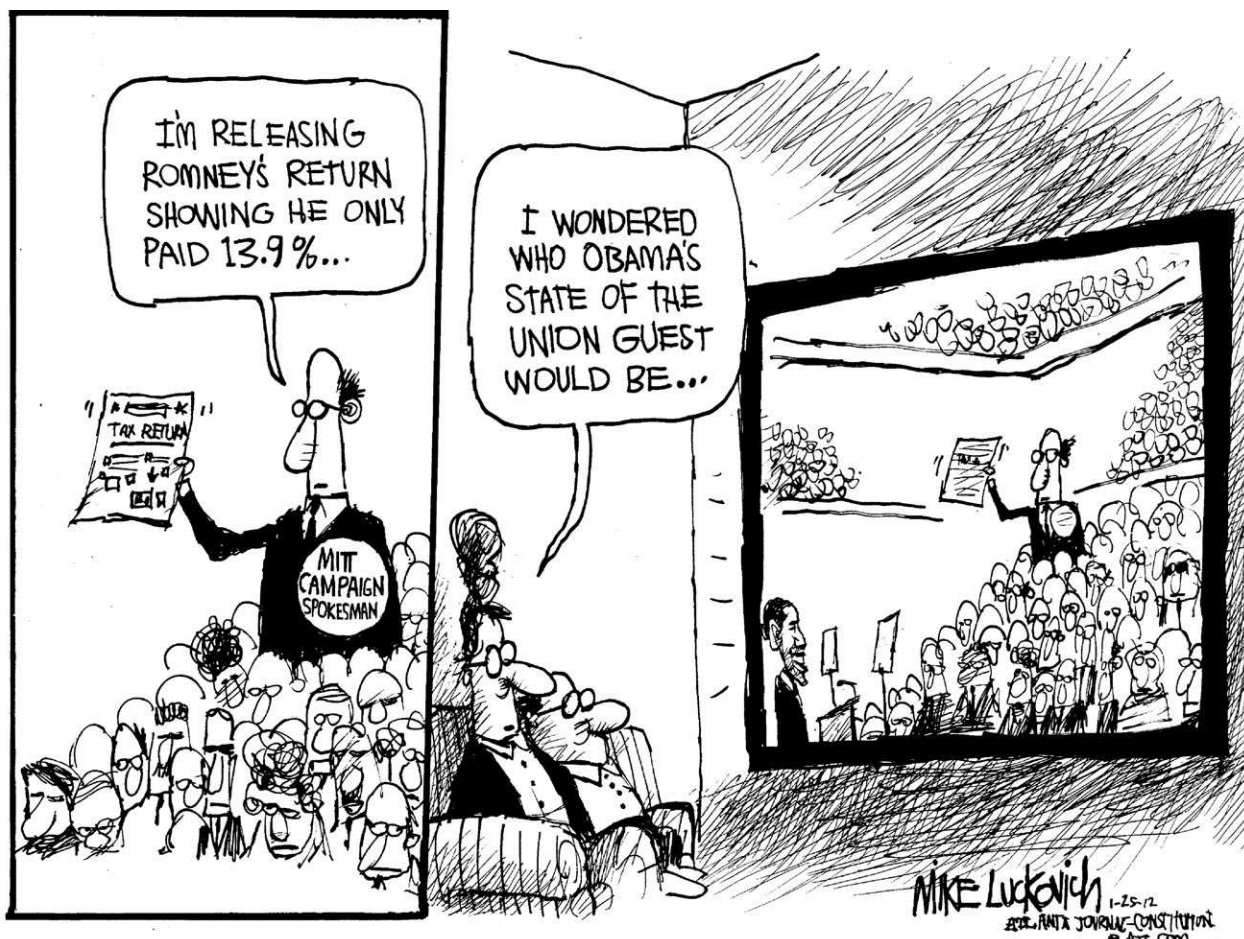

In his 2009 State of the Union Address, the president promised to "cut the deficit in half" by January 2013. He is headed in the opposite direction to the tune of $4 trillion in additional spending and a debt that exceeds $15 trillion. If he breaks that promise, should he be held accountable?

In his address to Congress, the president spoke of the need to create jobs, but he has rejected one of the easiest methods of creating jobs by opposing the Keystone XL pipeline project in order to curry favor with environmentalists. Some estimates put the jobs potential at 20,000. Canada, meanwhile, is threatening to sell the oil that could have been ours to China. The president will create jobs in China, not America.

This president has squandered a great opportunity. As the country's first African-American president, Barack Obama had the chance to lead poor African-Americans out of poverty by encouraging them to embrace the principles that would allow them to become self-reliant instead of stoking envy of the successful. He had that responsibility. He has failed to live up to it. That is a tragedy, not only for him, but for those he left behind.

Envy has never created a single job, put a family back together, encouraged a man to provide for his children or endowed young women with the kind of self-regard that would encourage them not to create children they too often neglect. The state of many poor African-Americans remains how it has been for years — too many fatherless children, too many uneducated, hopeless women and too many men in prison. President Obama might have done something about that beyond more government programs and handouts. Tuesday night, he spoke of no more government handouts. Which ones will he cut?

Optimism, self-regard and the economic, social and spiritual principles that built and sustained America, offering opportunity, not guaranteed outcome, are what the president should be stressing. Government is not our keeper. We are our own and our neighbor's keepers. Adicting more and more people to government and the view that others owe them a living is the worst form of covetousness. In case the president missed it in Jeremiah Wright's church, there's a commandment against coveting your neighbor's property.

A Brighter Energy Future?

A week after President Obama denied the application for the Keystone XL pipeline — which would carry oil from Canada's tar sands deposits in Alberta to U.S. refineries along the Gulf of Mexico — it's time for an energy reality check. What's the future hold? It may be better than you think. That's one message from the U.S. Energy Information Administration's latest "Annual Energy Outlook," which projects the supply and demand for fuels through 2035.

Even Obama struck an optimistic tone in his State of the Union. The EIA report suggests three important conclusions.

First, despite big gains in energy efficiency and increases in "renewables" (wind, solar, biofuels), fossil fuels will remain the mainstay of America's energy system for years. In 2010, fossil fuel represented 83 percent of U.S. energy consumption, with oil at 37 percent, natural gas at 25 percent and coal at 21 percent. Although total energy use grows only 10 percent between 2010 and 2035, the fossil-fuel share stays high at 77 percent in 2035. Oil is 32 percent, natural gas 25 percent and coal 20 percent.

Second, it would take herculean efforts to cut greenhouse gas emissions sharply. The gains in efficiency and the expansion of renewables are offset by increased energy demand from a larger population (390 million in 2035, up from 310 million in 2010) and more homes, office buildings, shopping malls and cars. In 2035, emissions of carbon dioxide — the largest greenhouse gas — are reckoned to be 3 percent higher than in 2010. This contrasts with the declines of 50 percent to 80 percent by midcentury that some scientists say are needed to stabilize global temperatures.

Finally, U.S. oil and natural gas production are growth industries. For years, they seemed in irreversible decline. Oil imports were rising, and higher natural gas demand would be met by foreign liquefied natural gas (LNG). Now, advances in "fracking" (using pressurized water to "fracture" tight oil and gas formations) have opened new fields. From 2007 to 2010, U.S. oil production rose from 5.1 million barrels a day (mbd) to 5.5 mbd. By 2020, it will hit 6.7 mbd, projects the EIA. Oil imports are declining, and higher natural gas output will turn the United States into an exporter by 2016, says EIA.

Viewed this way, our energy future seems reassuring. We've become vastly more efficient. In 2010, it took about half the energy to produce a dollar's worth of output (gross domestic product) as in 1980. This reflected more fuel-efficient vehicles — a response to higher gasoline prices and government fuel economy standards — and a shift from an energy-intensive industrial economy to a service economy. An office complex with 5,000 workers uses less energy than a steel mill with 5,000 workers. The EIA expects these trends to continue; energy use per dollar of GDP is projected to drop 42 percent from 2010 to 2035.

Meanwhile, domestic energy production is rising and — astonishingly — import dependence is rapidly falling. In 2010, oil imports accounted for 49 percent of U.S. consumption, down from 60 percent in 2005. By 2035, imports could decline to 36 percent, projects the EIA. All this seems good news.

But we don't view energy this way. We clamor for grander goals: becoming energy "independent" or stopping global warming. And these — as the EIA report also shows — are unreachable anytime soon, if ever. Barring vast new discoveries, we won't produce enough oil to meet our needs. Indeed, the EIA's assumption about biofuels, which roughly triple by 2035, could be too optimistic. If so, oil imports would exceed EIA projections. (In 2035, the EIA expects biofuels to account for 12 percent of liquid fuel use, up from 4 percent in 2010.)

The same is true of global warming. It's hard to see how, under plausible assumptions, greenhouse gas emissions could be reduced substantially in the foreseeable future. The pressures of population and economic growth overwhelm improved energy efficiency or shifts to "green" energy. For example, renewable fuels (wind, solar, geothermal, biomass) are projected to more than double by 2035. Still, including hydropower, they account for only 16 percent of electricity generation in 2035. Coal and natural gas dominate.

We need to view matters as they are, not as we wish them. Take the Keystone XL pipeline. We may depend indefinitely on oil imports, but not all imports are equal. Canadian oil, transported south by pipeline, is almost as secure as American crude. Canadian oil sands now produce about 1.9 million barrels a day; by 2035, the EIA expects that to reach 5 mbd. Rejection of Keystone did nothing to cut greenhouse emissions. It simply spurred Canada to explore ways to sell to China and other Asian customers.

The energy outlook isn't half bad. With common sense, it could be even better.

Looking Back at Center's Directors

Four senior center directors ago, we had a kind, caring director. She listened to us and knew our names. She and a longtime home delivery director loved the center members and people getting delivered meals. They honored all volunteers with a banquet and plaques for those who had volunteered for years. These were displayed on a wall along with a memorial for the center's veterans for all to see. Made us proud to be a part of the center.

A new manager came in and spent money on herself — a new glass desk, computer, round tables for four that only two people could get their knees under. She took all the volunteer plaques down and tried to get the veterans memorials removed to make a tea room social center for the public.

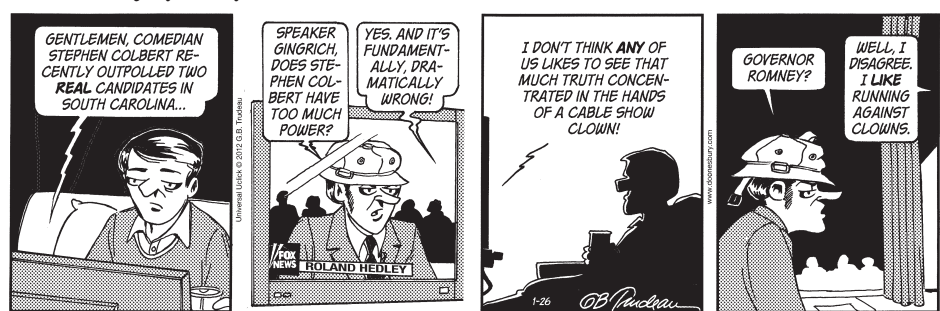

She spent all the donated funds from service groups and individuals. She brought outsiders in and made one head of the board. They never came (and still don't) except for a board meeting, getting information only from her. The head cook quit. The director paid a new dishwasher more than the cook and she was denied a raise, leaving the two cook's helpers to take over. They have done their best.

Another director came in and fired everybody — the bookkeeper, home delivery director and helper and even longtime volunteers; brought in her own bookkeeper. When caught in a lie at the board meeting, she quit (not fired as reported).

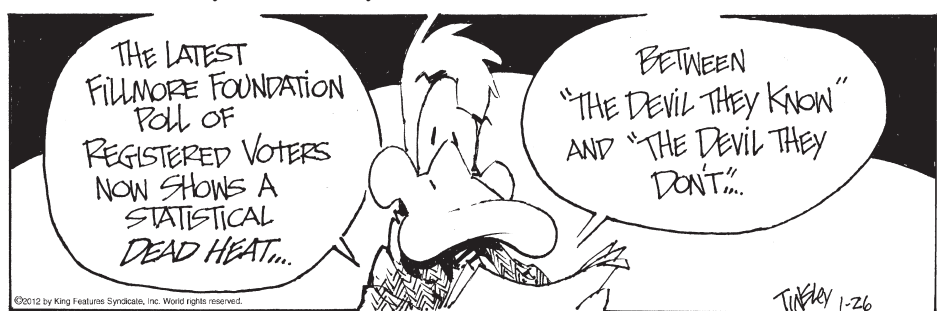

New ovens (via a grant) and a new chef! All is not doom and gloom at the center.

UI President Nellis Calls Faculty Pay Top Priority

BY JESSIE L. BONNER
Associated Press

BOISE • University of Idaho President Duane Nellis bemoaned the loss of key faculty members due to the budget crunch Wednesday, saying most employees on the Moscow campus have not had a salary increase in four years and boosting compensation is his highest priority.

"I worry about morale on campus. I worry about losing some of our best people. We've already lost some really outstanding people," Nellis told AP after he reported to the Idaho Legislature's budget writing committee. "I just can't emphasize enough how we need some indication of support there."

Nellis told the panel he was encouraged by the governor's budget recommendation for the next fiscal year, which includes a $16.9 million boost in state support for Idaho's public universities. The governor's budget also includes a 3 percent pay bonus for state workers, including university professors and faculty, but that's only if state tax revenues stay on track.

A legislative committee, however, opted Tuesday for a tax revenue forecast that's about $33 million less than the one favored by Gov. C.L. "Butch" Otter, a Republican.

Nellis, when reporting to the Idaho Legislature's budget writing committee, was asked to list his priorities given the lower revenue target.

"I think the lowest priority from my perspective is the dollars the governor has recommended for the rainy day fund," Nellis said. "I just don't know if this is the year to do that."

Otter has proposed replenishing a reserve account for public schools and kicking in the first state payment to a similar account for higher education. Under the governor's budget, the state would shift $4.9 million into a reserve account for Idaho's universities and colleges.

The lower revenue target will make it difficult for lawmakers to carry out the governor's plan to replenish Idaho's rainy day accounts, said Sen. Dean Cameron, R-Rupert, who co-chairs the budget writing committee.

State reserves have been drained to nearly nothing from $384 million four years ago.

"We'll have to put some toward the reserve funds because of a statutory requirement," Cameron said. "But we may end up looking at triggers, should our revenue exceed expectations, for additional money into reserve funds."

Nellis listed wheat breeder Robert Zemetra, a professor of plant breeding and genetics, among the faculty members who have left the university amid the budget shortfalls, which have forced employees in recent years to take on more responsibilities while their wages remain, for the most part, unchanged. Zemetra went to Oregon State University, where he will earn a significantly higher salary, Nellis said.

"He's just one example of the types of faculty that we've lost due to our budget situation," Nellis said.

If state revenues turn out to be less than what the governor projected and lawmakers do away with Otter's proposed $41 million in pay bonuses for state workers, Nellis said it would be very difficult for the university to find the money elsewhere to provide faculty a wage increase.

Council Says States Weakening Teacher Tenure

BY KIMBERLY HEFLING
Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP) • America's public school teachers are seeing their generations-old tenure protections weakened as states seek flexibility to fire teachers who aren't performing. A few states have essentially nullified tenure protections altogether, according to an analysis released Wednesday by the National Council on Teacher Quality.

The changes are occurring as states replace virtually automatic "satisfactory" teacher evaluations with those linked to teacher performance and base teacher layoffs on performance instead of seniority. Politically powerful teachers' unions are fighting back, arguing the changes lower morale, deny teachers due process, and unfairly target older teachers.

The debate is so intense that in Idaho, for example, state superintendent Tom Luna's truck was spray painted and its tires slashed. An opponent appeared at his mother's house and he was interrupted during a live TV interview by an agitated man. Why? The Idaho legislature last year ended "continuing contracts" — essentially equivalent to tenure — for new teachers and said performance, not seniority, would determine layoffs. Other changes include up to $8,000 in annual bonuses given to teachers for good performance, and parent input on evaluations. Opponents gathered enough signatures to put a referendum that would overturn the changes on the November ballot.

Luna says good teachers shouldn't be worried.

"We had a system where it was almost impossible to financially reward great teachers and very difficult to deal with ineffective teachers. If you want an education system that truly puts students first, you have to have both," Luna said.

On Tuesday night, President Barack Obama weighed in on the issue during his State of the Union address. He said schools should be given the resources to keep and reward good teachers along with the flexibility to teach with creativity and to "replace teachers who just aren't helping kids learn."

Tenure protections were created in the early 20th century to protect teachers from arbitrary or discriminatory firings based on factors such as gender, nationality or political beliefs by spelling out rules under which they could be dismissed after a probationary period.

Frank Church High School biology teacher Lane Q. Brown is seen in a classroom Tuesday in Boise. Brown has been vocal in her opposition to the elimination of teacher tenure in Idaho. Brown, 56, a biology and horticulture teacher who moved from a private school a few years ago to a public alternative high school to seek new challenges after three decades of teaching, said her school's climate has dramatically changed.

Critics say teachers too often get tenure by just showing up for work — typically for three years, but sometimes less, and that once they earned it, bad teachers are almost impossible or too expensive to fire. The latest statistics from the National Center for Education Statistics, dating to the 2007-2008 school year, show about 2 percent of teachers dismissed for poor performance, although the numbers vary widely by school district.

The analysis by the National Council on Teacher Quality, a research and policy group that seeks to improve the quality of teaching, documents the shift in laws. In 2009, no state required student performance to be central to whether a teacher is awarded tenure; today, eight states do. The analysis also says four states now want evidence that students are learning before awarding tenure.

Other changes:

- In Florida, tenure protections were essentially made null and void with policy changes such as eliminating tenure-like benefits altogether for new teachers, but also spelling out requirements under which all teachers with multiple poor evaluations face dismissal.

- Rhode Island policies say teachers with two years of ineffective evaluations will be dismissed.

- Colorado and Nevada passed laws saying tenure can be taken away after multiple "ineffective" ratings.

- Eleven states now require districts to consider teacher performance when deciding who to let go.

- About half of all states have policies that require classroom effectiveness be considered in teacher evaluations.

- Florida, Indiana and Michigan adopted policies that require performance to be factored in teacher salaries.

A growing body of research demonstrates the dramatic difference effective teachers can play in student lives, from reducing teenage pregnancies to increasing a student's lifetime earnings. Meanwhile, while controversial, teacher evaluations have evolved in a way that proponents say allows better accounting of students' growth and of factors out of a teacher's control, like attendance.

The Obama administration has helped nudge the changes with its Race to the Top competition, which allowed states to compete for billions of education dollars, and offering states waivers around unpopular proficiency requirements in the No Child Left Behind education law. To participate in either, states have to promise changes such as tying teacher evaluations to performance.

"There's a real shift to saying all kids, especially our most disadvantaged kids, have access to really high quality and effective teachers. And, that's it's not OK for kids to have ... an ineffective teacher year after year," said Sandi Jacobs, vice president of the National Council on Teacher Quality.

Jacobs said tenure should be meaningful, but that in 39 states it's automatic.

"That's the problem with tenure, everybody gets it," she said. "If you're held to a high bar where you've really demonstrated that you are effective in the classroom, then there's nothing wrong with that as long as the due process rights that you do get are reasonable."

But many teachers feel under siege. They argue the evaluation systems are too dependent on standardized tests. While teachers' unions have gotten more on board with strengthening teacher evaluations, they often question the systems' fairness and want them designed with local teachers' input.

Randi Weingarten, president of the American Federation of Teachers, said unions understand the tenure process needs change, but that too often, school administrators have used it as an excuse to mismanage. "They want teachers to basically do exactly what they say, give them no resources and then blame them if they don't in a time of tremendous fiscal instability and fiscal pressures," Weingarten said.

In Boise, Lane Brown, 56, a biology and horticulture teacher who moved from a private school a few years ago to a public alternative high school to seek new challenges after three decades of teaching, said her school's climate has dramatically changed.

"There's nobody in this building that doesn't understand it could be one of us, not just the newest teacher or the teacher with the fewest number of students. It could be anybody, ... which is scary. Every teacher here is saying, 'I don't know if I'm going to have a job next year,'" Brown said.

In Florida, teachers fear expressing what they feel is best for students, said Andy Ford, president of the Florida Education Association.

"Teachers see positions not being filled, class sizes increasing, more demands, more testing, and you add all that together with their economic uncertainty about continued employment and it certainly doesn't allow you to go out and plan for long term investments like a home," Ford said.

Kathy Hebda, the deputy chancellor for education quality in Florida, said the contract-related changes were not done in "isolation," but as part of broader changes that improve accountability and provide teachers feedback.

Michelle Rhee, the former schools chancellor in Washington, D.C., acknowledged widespread mistrust among teachers about evaluations, but she said once teachers are brought into discussions, many are won over.

"If we know who the effective teachers are, if we know what kind of an impact effective teachers can have on individual kids and on our society overall, then why wouldn't we take the obvious step of utilizing the information on who are the most effective teachers to make our staffing decisions?" said Rhee, whose education advocacy group StudentsFirst is pushing for changes to layoff policies based on seniority.

Coming up, Missouri legislators appear poised to take up the contentious topic of teacher tenure. In Connecticut, the Connecticut Education Association launched a TV advertising campaign after Democratic Gov. Dannel P. Malloy and legislative leaders said education reform — and possibly tenure — will be the major focus of this legislative session. Louisiana Gov. Bobby Jindal and New Jersey, Gov. Chris Christie, both Republicans, are eyeing tenure law changes.

"Tenure laws will be under assault for many years to come," said Marjorie Murphy, a professor of history at Swarthmore College who wrote a book about the teacher labor movement. Murphy said ending tenure protections will "take over any sense of fair play between employer and employee. All of that will be gone!"

Ada Deputy No Longer with Sheriff's Office after Battery Citation

IDAHO STATESMAN

BOISE • Ron D. Love, 49, is no longer employed by the Ada County Sheriff's Office, according to a news release.

Love, an Ada County Sheriff's Office patrol deputy, had been on administrative leave after a citation for misdemeanor battery. Love was cited after a Friday night incident at a Downtown Boise bar, according to Boise police.

It is unclear if Love resigned or was fired.

Officers were called to assist what was initially reported as a medical call. A woman told officers she'd been hit with a closed fist to the face after a dispute with a man inside the nightclub. She did not know the man. The dispute involved the suspect inappropriately touching the victim's female acquaintance, police said.

The suspect had just been escorted out of the nightclub bar staff and officers found him walking a short distance away. Love was identified by witnesses, police said.

Love was off duty at the time, according to a release from the Ada County Sheriff's Office. He was placed on leave pending an internal investigation.

Love was sentenced to anger management classes after pleading guilty to a misdemeanor charge of carrying a concealed weapon while under the influence of alcohol at a Downtown Boise bar in July 2010.

IDAHO BRIEFS

Otter Says He's Against Moving Primary to August

BOISE • Gov. C.L. "Butch" Otter opposes moving Idaho's primary election to August, largely due to concerns it would result in an even lower turnout than the current primary in May.

Otter made the comments Wednesday to reporters from the Idaho Press Club.

Rep. Tom Loertscher, an eastern Idaho Republican, has introduced a measure that would shift the primary election to August.

With Idaho still without redistricting maps governing legislative boundaries, moving the primary from May would allow for more time to sort out complications.

It would also give incumbent lawmakers more time to campaign after legislative sessions.

But Otter said a primary in August — when people are still on summer vacations — would damage voter participation.

He says he'll let House leaders know his feeling in a meeting today.

Bill to Revise Education Law Heads to Idaho Senate

BOISE • A bill headed to the Idaho Senate would delete a portion of the state's new education laws that defines an online course and says the instructor cannot physically be in the same school in which the student is receiving the virtual instruction.

Idaho is requiring high school students to take at least two credits online.

Republican Sen. John Goedde told the Spokesman-Review the changes stipulated that teachers and students be separate during the online course instruction to ensure the state was providing distance education, as the law intended.

But the state Board of Education says the clause could cause problems, such as prohibiting a teacher from loading online course material in a school where students are taking the class. Also, the board rule requiring online learning defines such courses.

Idaho Senate Passes Bill on Teacher Evaluations

BOISE • Lawmakers in the Idaho Senate have approved legislation to clarify when parents can start weighing in on teaching evaluations.

The bill cleared the chamber Wednesday on a unanimous vote. It is among a series of tweaks being considered by lawmakers working to refine a massive education overhaul that was signed in law last year, with backing from public schools chief Tom Luna.

The plan says at least 50 percent of a teacher's job evaluation will be based on student achievement starting July 1, and parental input will also be a factor. Republican Sen. John Goedde of Coeur d'Alene says to some school districts, the law was unclear as to when parents become involved.

Legislation now headed to the Idaho House clarifies that parental input also comes into play July 1.

Panel Approves Higher Fees for Oversized Loads

BOISE • The Idaho Transportation Department is seeking permission to charge a little more for truckers hauling huge loads across state highways.

Agency officials say they hope a proposed fee increase for oversized load permits will help offset a $645,000 annual cost to administer the program.

IDT official Regina Phipps told state lawmakers this week the agency is required to recoup costs for overseeing the program.

The Senate Transportation Committee approved a rule change raising fees for permits by $18 to $70 depending on the permit.

The Lewiston Tribune reports that most of the increases target loads that can't be reduced in size because those shipments require more staff time to review.

Parents Arrested in 2-year-old's Overdose

POCATELLO • A southeastern Idaho couple faces felony charges related to their 2-year-old son's prescription drug overdose.

The Power County sheriff's office says Jim Norton and Liz Martinez were arrested on suspicion of child endangerment and possession of a controlled substance.

The sheriff's office says the boy was taken by ambulance to a Pocatello hospital on Dec. 29 and then airlifted to Primary Children's Medical Center in Salt Lake City.

The boy spent about a week in the intensive care unit suffering from an apparent overdose of a prescription drug. The boy also tested positive for methamphetamine.

The charges were filed Monday. Power County court records show both were arraigned and pleaded not guilty on Tuesday. Both were appointed public defenders.

2 Killed in Crash on Highway 55

BOISE • Authorities say a man and woman are dead after a traffic crash that left their vehicle partly submerged in a river near Highway 55 in western Idaho.

The Idaho State Police responded to the crash between Horseshoe Bend and Banks at about 7 p.m. Tuesday.

Authorities say they believe 86-year-old Howard Koskella of Donnelly was driving southbound on the highway when his vehicle left the road for unknown reasons. The vehicle then went down an embankment, rolled several times and came to rest partially submerged in the Payette River.

Both Howard and his passenger, 83-year-old Ethel Koskella, died at the scene.

ISP says the crash occurred early in the day, but the exact time is unknown. The roadway was blocked for about half an hour while crews removed the vehicle.

Both occupants were wearing seatbelts, and investigators say alcohol is not believed to be a factor.

An investigation is under way.

Survey: ID Medicaid Processor Doing Better

BOISE (AP) • Many Idaho health care providers are happier with the service they're receiving from a California company that processes the state's Medicaid claims, but one-third of the providers still aren't satisfied, a new survey found.

Molina Medicaid Solutions began handling claims and issuing payments on behalf of the state in 2010. Dozens of health care companies complained that delayed payments caused financial difficulties and some went out of business.

The state responded by decreasing and withholding some payments to Molina for failing to meet the standards of the contract and put in place a pay-for-performance contract that levies monetary penalties when the company fails to meet standards.

A 2011 audit by the state's Office of Performance Evaluations found 72 percent of the state's Medicaid providers were either "unsatisfied" or "very unsatisfied" with the claims process.

The same auditing group surveyed just more than half of the state's 10,000 Medicaid providers, with 59 percent saying Molina is either doing "better" or "much better" than when the system was introduced, The Post Register reported Wednesday.

"We appreciate the recognition from providers who say they have seen improvements, but we're not going to sit back" said Del Bell, Molina's executive account manager in Idaho. He said the company improved its performance by increasing the number of Idaho employees and launching new training programs.

The most recent report found that two of the health care providers' most common complaints — the number of claims that were delayed and the inability to reach Molina customer service representatives — were addressed. Wait times to reach customer service agents decreased from an average of more than 35 minutes in August 2010 to just over a minute last week, said Idaho Department of Health and Welfare spokesman Tom Shanahan.

Bulls, Buddies and a Banquet

BY ANDREW WEEKS
aweeks@magicvalley.com

TWIN FALLS • When Steve Aslett was a little boy, he used to go hunting with his dad. He learned how to track an animal, hold a rifle and field dress a deer. It all paid off last fall for the 43-year-old hunter, when he harvested a huge 6-by-6 bull elk in Unit 47 near the Idaho/Nevada border. Aslett, of Three Creek, will find out on Friday how his animal measures up at the sixth annual Bucks and Bulls Awards Banquet, hosted by the National Wild Turkey Federation at the 360 Main Event Center. "I haven't scored it yet, but opted to wait until the banquet," Aslett said. The awards banquet honors archery, muzzleloader and rifle hunters who participate in the Bucks and Bulls contest that Sportsman's Warehouse and Intermountain Taxidermy and World-wide Adventures put on every fall. Antlers from harvested animals are hung at Sportsman's with hunter names. The contest this year had 180 entries, said store manager Reese Widmier. Please see AWARDS, O2

Beauty in Basalt

ASHLEY SMITH • TIMES-NEWS

Concealed inside the Big Wood River channel is an internationally unique sculpture garden — fanciful loveliness in the unforgiving environment of a lava field.

David Freiberg, a Bureau of Land Management outdoor recreation planner, center, and Mark Hutchins of Twin Falls walk along the native channel of the Big Wood River near Kinsie Butte north of Shoshone on Jan. 13. Water-borne stones from mountains to the north sculpted the softer lava rock over thousands of years.

BY VIRGINIA HUTCHINS

SHOSHONE • An extraordinary world lies hidden inside the narrow, deep incision snaking across a basalt field north of Shoshone.

Thousands of years of erosion have sculpted wildly fantastic shapes in the walls of the Big Wood River's native channel, as water-borne stones scoured and ground and polished the softer basalt. Those who've peered over the edge — or hiked into the depths — speak of the spectacle in awe.

"It's just amazing the power the water has when it gets flowing like that, when it picks up the grits and fines, and what it can do to rock," said Lynn Harmon, general manager of the Big Wood Canal Co.

Informally dubbed Black Magic Canyon, the sculpted riverbed downstream of Magic Dam is an internationally unique resource that the Bureau of Land Management fought a long court battle to protect from mining claims in the 1990s.

"These outstanding specimens may well be the best examples of their kind in the nation, if not in the world," wrote BLM geologists Terry S. Maley and Peter Oberlindacher in a 1994 publication for the Idaho Geological Survey.

The Big Wood's waters are all captured in Magic Reservoir at certain times of year, leaving the riverbed dry for hikers. And a roadside kiosk just off Idaho Highway 75 provides easy access to one stretch of the channel. But the most astonishing formations lie east and southeast of Kinzie Butte — in a remote section of sagebrush-and-lava desert that's sometimes too muddy to access and always dangerous.

"It's seldom visited, actually," said David Freiberg, outdoor recreation planner for the BLM's Shoshone Field Office, who gets only four or five inquiries a year about that stretch of riverbed. "It's not for the weak, really. You want to be pretty sure-footed before you embark through here."

Seeing the sculpted rocks of the Big Wood River channel requires care and preparation. But the payoff is well worth it.

Call first: When water is released from Magic Reservoir, anyone hiking in the steep-sided Big Wood River bed could be caught and drowned. Before planning a hike anywhere along the channel, you absolutely must call ahead to the Big Wood Canal Co. in Shoshone: 886-2331. The office is open only on weekdays, so you'll have to think ahead for any weekend exploring.

If there's water in the canyon, stay away.

Keep both hands free: This is a wonderland for photography, but bring a backpack to carry your gear. "You can't just walk through it. You have to be able to kind of climb through it," Bureau of Land Management geologist Johnny Garth said. "You need to have your hands free. That's very important."

Dangers: Much of the channel's length is remote — and difficult for rescue workers to access if you slip on ice or fall off a rock. Wear sturdy shoes and beware of unstable footing at every step. Tell someone where you're going and when you'll return, and carry a cell phone (though you won't have a signal inside the canyon).

"You can get killed anywhere out here. And it's cold, of course," said David Freiberg, a BLM outdoor recreation planner. Freiberg carries a first aid kit when in the canyon, and basic survival supplies aren't a bad idea, either.

One more note about danger: Rattlesnakes are extremely numerous here, and as the weather warms they'll resume activity.

Information: For more pointers about Black Magic Canyon, call the BLM's Shoshone Field Office at 732-7200.

Difficult Timing

And you absolutely must call ahead to the Big Wood Canal Co. in Shoshone, to ask about water releases from Magic Reservoir. Those incredible channel walls could become a death trap for any hiker caught in the riverbed when the dam opens.

When the water level in Magic Reservoir is high, the canal company might release water into the Big Wood River channel anytime from mid-February to early May for flood prevention, Harmon said. The normal start of those water releases is early March, he said, but doublecheck before hiking at any time. The company has done some unusually timed releases during some winters.

"We probably get, oh, half a dozen calls a year. It's not as extensive as you would think," Harmon said. "There may be a lot of people that really aren't aware of that feature."

portunity within the next couple of months.

The reservoir's normal releases for irrigation usually run from the first week of May through the first of October, Harmon said. At some points in the summer — when the Big Wood's waters are diverted into irrigation canals — certain stretches of the river channel can again be hiked.

"Part of it dries out in the July and August timeframe," Harmon said. At that time of year, however, the channel's population of rattlesnakes will be awake and active.

The Big Wood River and its sediment carved a channel through 800,000-year-old basalt, in places eroding a gash 50 feet deep. Here, David Freiberg of the Bureau of Land Management's Shoshone Field Office pauses inside it.

Justified Pride

I'd rather brave the cold and the ice patches than worry about rattlesnakes.
Garth On Jan. 13, Johnny Garth, geologist for BLM's Shoshone Field Office, led a hiking group of four — Freiberg, me, husband Mark Hutchins and Times-News photographer Ashley Smith — to a shallow point of the Big Wood River channel near Kinzie Butte.

Basalt polished like dunes lined the dry riverbed, silent but dynamic.

"You can practically see the water flowing that direction over the top of it," Garth said.

Garth didn't intend to make the one-mile hike with us, but he waited for us to descend into the first deep bathtub. He wanted to hear the exclamations of surprised delight that he's come to expect.

He has good reason for that pride. In the 1990s, Garth was involved in the BLM's effort to preserve these rocks from mining claims. Boise-based United Mining Corp. filed 14 separate 20-acre claims, intending to haul away the sculpted lava near Kinzie Butte and sell it in Japan and elsewhere, Garth said. After a lengthy court process, then-Secretary of the Interior Bruce Babbitt in 1997 withdrew the Big Wood River rocks from mineral entry under mining laws for 50 years — that is, until 2047.

"We fought a long battle ... and we were able to save that for the public to be able to enjoy," Garth said.

Surprising Beauty

Inside this eerie work of art, a volcanologist might wax enthusiastic about lava blisters, columnar joints and flow foliation. A photographer might exclaim over striking lines and textures.

"It's so unique," said landscape photographer Rick Otto of Twin Falls, who offers his artistic lava shots for sale. Last year he came upon a stretch of the channel — almost hidden by sagebrush — while wandering in the desert near Magic Dam looking for subjects to photograph.

"I almost fell in because I didn't know it was there," Otto said last week, still excited by the discovery. "It was just an awesome place."

Judy Brossy of Lincoln County, who has hiked and photographed near the kiosk off Highway 75, says a light snow on the dark lava makes for beautiful pictures. "In the early spring, when the desert is starting to come back alive, that would be a good time too," Brossy said, because colors on the bank above contrast nicely with the basalt.

But in any season, sunlight inside this narrow, deep gash can challenge even skillful photographers. "The lighting is really tricky, and you have to be there at just the right time," Brossy said.

with strobes until extreme cold drained his batteries. All that bold and elegant beauty had only 10,000 years to form.

The Big Wood River channel cuts through 800,000-year-old basalt, in places eroding through to a depth of more than 50 feet and exposing at least three lava flows. But that's not the river's ancient route.

Lava that flowed from Black Butte Crater 10,000 years ago — now dubbed the Shoshone lava field — displaced the river, forcing it to carve a new channel south-east of Black Butte. So today's sculpted features in the rerouted channel are younger than the 10,000-year-old lava flow whose perimeter it follows.

Mountain Rocks

While Smith photographed those carvings, my husband scanned the canyon-bottom beds of polished pebbles, dropping a few gorgeously colored stones into his pockets. Their variety was stunning, and many had fine fractures filled with veins of white quartz.

So why, in the middle of a huge lava field, could he engage in a southern-Idaho version of beachcombing?

The Big Wood River is fed by streams draining the Boulder, Pioneer and Smoky mountains to the north. So those mountains — before the 1907-10 building of Magic Dam — were the source of the pebbles and cobbles that sculpted the Big Wood channel. During an ice age some 7,000 to 10,000 years ago, fast-flowing water from melting glaciers moved large loads of that sediment, a powerful sculpting force.

Masses of those small, polished rocks are collected along the channel bottom or trapped in the very potholes they helped to grind out. Quartzite and granitic rocks account for the biggest percentages, but geologists list at least seven other rock types among them.

You don't have to remember your high school geology lessons, though, to appreciate their diversity — or their honeycomb artwork on the lava walls.

As waters drove and swirled those pebbles century after century, new potholes in the basalt overlapped older ones. Undercut by erosion, boulders fell from the rim to be resculpted on the channel bottom. Cut through by bigger holes, pothole relics were left hanging or suspended on the channel walls.

The result is a complex wonderland of whimsical shapes — and an intriguing cutaway view of lava flows.

Each footstep reveals another breathtaking swirl of rock, another moment in the story of the Snake River Plain's violent creation.

A source for much of this story's geological information is "Rock & Potholes of the Big Wood River," by Terry S. Maley and Peter Oberlindacher, Idaho Geological Survey, 1994.

Two Options for Enjoying Black Magic Canyon

It's possible to access the Big Wood River channel in many places along its length. But here are two options that will keep you away from private property:

For Easiest Access

Get there: About 18 miles north of Shoshone on Idaho Highway 75, turn west on West Magic Road. You'll immediately find a parking pullout on the north side of the road, with an informational kiosk explaining the geology of Black Magic Canyon. A paved trail leads to a picnic table, then to the edge of the Big Wood River channel.

Hiking tips: From that entry point, the downstream direction (to your right) initially looks more promising. In some places you'll walk on a wide path of stones, between sculpted basalt walls that average about 8 to 10 feet high. In other spots you'll do a little scrambling over rocks, but nothing too serious.

If you choose the upstream hike (to your left) instead, it will quickly bring you to walls more like 20 to 25 feet tall, with more spectacular shaping. You'll find a couple of huge carved bathtubs before the channel is blocked by fallen rocks.

Timing: You can do this hike now (call 886-2331 first to check for water releases), even if recent storms' snow and mud haven't dried up.

If you time your visit later in the year, between water releases, you might encounter a gross and slippery covering on the channel bottom at this particular point: aquatic plants, rotting stuff and snails.

For the Most Spectacular Sight

Bureau of Land Management geologist Johnny Garth says the most remarkable stretch of the channel is east and southeast of Kinzie Butte. But this remote and difficult hike is only for the careful and well prepared. For a one-way, one-mile hike, take at least one companion and two vehicles.

Get there: On Idaho Highway 75 north of Shoshone, drive a mile north of Johnny's Country Store and turn east onto 520 N. Follow 520 N. as it curves to the north. At the point where the paved road curves back to the west, leave the pavement and continue north on a gravel-and-dirt road.

- Take note of your odometer as you leave the pavement. Where the gravel road splits the first time, take the left fork. Where it splits the second time, go right.

- Soon, you'll be driving roughly parallel to the river channel. About 1.7 miles after leaving the pavement, you'll cross a wooden bridge over a canal. You'll cross a second wooden bridge at a diversion dam which allows the canal company to shift flows from the riverbed into the canal. Immediately after the dam is the spot to leave one of your vehicles; that will be the end-point of your one-mile hike. (This is 2.1 miles after leaving the pavement.)

- In the second vehicle, get back onto the same gravel road and check your odometer again. About 0.6 miles from your first parked vehicle, you'll find yourself driving onto the canal bank. At 0.9 miles from your first parking spot, drive down off the canal bank onto a faint track that heads east through the sagebrush, directly toward the riverbed. Park beside the river channel, which is shallow at that point — an excellent place for hikers to enter.

Hiking tips: Start out early in the day, so that you'll have hours of daylight remaining if anything goes wrong. And allow yourself plenty of time to hike slowly and appreciate the magnificent shaping of walls that are more than 40 feet high in places. If you stop for a lot of photography, this one-way hike could easily take two hours.

"This is so remote, if you got hurt you'd be really sorry," said David Freiberg, a BLM outdoor recreation planner.

Timing: The past week's storms made these dirt roads impassable because of snow and mud. How quickly they dry out depends on weather conditions.

"Any significant snow, and you can forget about it," Freiberg said.

Freiberg said the perfect time to hike this stretch is early spring — but before the Big Wood Canal Co. begins releasing water from Magic Reservoir. And that timing is unpredictable; you must call ahead to the canal company (886-2331) before planning a hike.

Awards

Last year there were more than 200.

"Elk were a little down this year," he said.

But there've been some big animals, such as Aslett's elk.

"I personally lived with this elk for two weeks prior to the season," Aslett said. "We'd go up every morning and as soon as the sun would come up we'd locate the bull. We'd stay with him at a distance until he bedded down for the day?"

On the day prior to the hunt, Aslett and four friends, including Jeff Frost of Intermountain Taxidermy, went afield to await morning and the chance to harvest the elk.

The Banquet

The sixth annual Bucks and Bulls Awards Banquet will be Friday at the 360 Main Event Center in Twin Falls. Doors open at 5 p.m.; dinner begins at 7 p.m.

The elk wasn't in the spot he thought it would be by morning, but it didn't take long before Aslett and his friends found it.

Aslett took the shot and the rest is history. Well, almost. There's still the

And that, Aslett said, is what the banquet is about: fellow hunters getting together to celebrate their sport and the animals. All five friends will be there Friday.

This Astronomer Quietly Achieved Great Things

One of the nice things about astronomy is that it's a small science, in the sense that the number of professional astronomers is pretty few.

That means, if you travel in astronomy circles, you've got a pretty good chance of meeting someone who has made a significant contribution to our understanding of the universe.

I have been so fortunate. From 1988 to 1994, I worked on the scheduling team for the Hubble Space Telescope. And working in the room adjacent to my work space was the greatest astronomer I've had the pleasure to call my friend.

Unlike the vast majority of his peers, Charlie Kowal never got a PhD.

While this would limit most astronomers' ability to secure a good position and make their mark in the field, it didn't hold Charlie back.

Before coming to Hubble, Charlie discovered 81 supernovae, five comets, two moons of Jupiter, and 19 asteroids — including a whole new class of asteroids orbiting between Jupiter and Neptune (the Centaurs).

If that weren't enough, he also unearthed evidence that Galileo had unknowingly observed and recorded Neptune while observing Jupiter, predating its discovery by 233 years. Later, he authored a book on asteroids, and worked on the first spacecraft mission to land on an asteroid.

Charlie lost a long battle with cancer in November. Just in case you'd never heard of him, I offer this glimpse of who he was, and his legacy to astronomy.

Tip of the Week: Downsize the Tackle

BY ERIC SHARP
Detroit Free Press

DETROIT • When I first encountered European ice fishermen in Finland a few years ago, I was amazed by the delicacy of their tackle. They fished mostly for small species, the size of perch and bluegills, and thought 4-pound line was heavy.

I watched one man sitting on a bucket use a thin wooden rod about 9 inches long with a couple of bent pegs to wrap the 1-pound line around.

His tiny marmoska jigs, about the size of a No. 12 trout fly, were tipped with tinier maggots he stuck on the back of the hook with a dab of honey. He hooked perch after perch on the lake as I watched, the European Perca fluviatilis that looks like our yellow perch (Perca flavescens) but commonly grows twice as big.

He landed the fish hand-over-hand, explaining through an interpreter that he could get a better feel of how much pressure the fish was putting on the thread-thin line.

Later we went to a lake filled with Arctic char, and the Finnish anglers used 3-pound line and 12-inch rods to land hard-fighting char that averaged about 2 pounds.

As we fished, I thought of my American friends who routinely use heavier rods rigged with spinning reels and 10-pound line and then complain because they don't get many bites.

This is a lesson in the advantages of downsizing your tackle during the ice fishing season when the water is often at its clearest, the fish are less active, and you need every edge you can get.

The little jigs we used for perch fishing in Finland had an added advantage — they stayed horizontal in the water rather than having the tail sections hang below the jig head.

I wasn't surprised to see the same extremely light line and small jigs being used over the past few seasons by the top anglers in major ice fishing tournaments in the U.S.

Some of those competitors had fished tournaments in Finland, Russia and other European venues and came home with their luggage full of tackle and their heads filled with ideas.

Why not take a cue from those hardy Finlanders and rig your ice rods with 2-pound line? And rather than big snap swivels, tie the line directly to the eye of the jig or use the tiniest snap connection you can find, the ones about the diameter of a BB.

If you use a bobber, try one about twice the size of an unshelled peanut, and add split shots to the line until only the top half-inch or so of the bobber is above water.

It requires a bit more fiddling than many fishermen are willing to do, but the result might be a successful day when everyone else is getting skunked.

Cost for the first entry is $6. Additional entries for the same species are $4 each when purchased at the same time. Super Hunt Combo entries cost $20 for one, with additional entries at $16 when purchased at the same time.

Entries are available at license vendors, all Fish and Game offices, by calling 800-554-8685 or online at fishandgame.idaho.gov/cms/hunt/superhunt/. Fill out the entry order forms and mail them to: Idaho Fish and Game License Section, P.O. Box 25, Boise, ID 83707. There is no limit to the number of entries.

Farewell to an F&G Officer

Question: "I heard this year the Fish and Game enforcement program will be changing quite a bit due to changes in personnel. What's up with that?"

Answer: Indeed, this year could be considered the dawn of a new era! Several Fish and Game officers in the Baby Boomer Generation will be retiring and moving on to new adventures.

Senior Conservation Officer Rich Holman will be retiring this month after 30 years as the conservation officer in Wendell. His replacement will be announced next month.

For those that know Rich, he is leaving some pretty big shoes to fill. During his tenure in Wendell, Rich received several commendations and special recognitions. In 1999 he was selected as the Idaho conservation enforcement officer of the year.

In 2008 he received the Governor's Life Saving Award for saving the lives of three juvenile duck hunters after they capsized their boat in the Snake River near the Upper Salmon diversion.

Rich's quick action to launch a Fish and Game boat and risk his own safety to pluck the hunters from the swift and frigid water saved the juveniles from certain hypothermia and potential drowning.

Gary Hompland
Ask the Officer

He has spent more than 20 years as law enforcement firearms instructor for the department as well as several local law enforcement agencies. He has worked for a number of years as a field training officer helping train new conservation officers.

Rich has long been known to be a relentless investigator striving for the truth. Many a poacher has learned about Rich's tenacity. He also has a soft spot for young hunters and anglers. In his 30 years he has taught the children of many of his first hunter education students.

Sportsmen owe Rich a debt of gratitude for his efforts to protect Idaho's most valuable resources. We must remind ourselves that conservation officers like Rich help us maintain a conservation ethic. Don't be surprised to see him around the camp fire in a hunting camp or wetting a line on the bank enjoying his time off.

Ind. House Deals Blow to Labor in Rust Belt

BY TOM LOBIANCO
Associated Press

INDIANAPOLIS • In another blow to organized labor in the traditionally union heavy Midwest, Indiana is poised to become the first right-to-work state in more than a decade after Republican lawmakers cleared the way on Wednesday to ban unions from collecting mandatory fees from workers.

Over the past year, Republicans have pushed for other anti-union laws in battleground Rust Belt states where many of the country's manufacturing jobs reside, including Wisconsin and Ohio, but they also have faced backlash from Democrats and union supporters. Wisconsin last year stripped public sector unions of collective bargaining rights.

Despite massive protests outside the Capitol, Wisconsin's GOP-dominated Assembly passed a law backed by Gov. Scott Walker in March that strips nearly all collective bargaining rights from organized labor. Walker is now preparing for a recall election after opponents turned in a million signatures aimed at forcing a vote and ousting him from office.

In November, Ohio voters repealed a law limiting collective bargaining rights that was championed by Gov. John Kasich and fellow Republican lawmakers.

Indiana would mark the first win in 10 years for national right-to-work advocates who have pushed unsuccessfully for the measure in other states following a Republican sweep of statehouses in 2010. But few right-to-work states boast Indiana's union clout, borne of a long manufacturing legacy.

Oklahoma, with its rural-based economy that produces comparatively fewer union jobs than Indiana, passed right-to-work legislation in 2001.

Indiana's vote came after weeks of protest by minority Democrats who tried various tactics to stop the bill. They refused to show up to debate despite the threat of fines that totaled $1,000 per day and introduced dozens of amendments aimed at delaying a vote. But conceding their tactics could not last forever because they were outnumbered, they finally agreed to allow the vote to take place.

The House voted 54-44 Wednesday to make Indiana the nation's 23rd right-to-work state. The measure is expected to face little opposition in Indiana's Republican-controlled Senate and could reach Republican Gov. Mitch Daniels' desk shortly before the Feb. 5 Super Bowl in Indianapolis.

"This announces, especially in the Rust Belt, that we are open for business here," Republican House Speaker Brian Bosma said of the right-to-work proposal that would ban unions from collecting mandatory representation fees from workers.

Giffords Bids Emotional Farewell to Congress

WASHINGTON • Steady in her sneakers and grasping the helpful hand of a colleague, Rep. Gabrielle Giffords walked onto the House floor as colleagues approved her border security bill on the day she retired from elected office. Giffords made her way down the center aisle that divides Democrats from Republicans, a distinction the Arizona congresswoman had tried to blur with her moderate politics and good nature. Colleagues quickly enveloped her slight frame, offering an outstretched hand — or, more often, a kiss on the cheek. In ovation, lawmakers stood. Friends have said the three-term Democrat has never been one to tackle goals halfway. It was fitting, then, that she closed out her career on Wednesday with a legislative victory. The House unanimously passed the border security bill she had authored.

MOGADISHU, Somalia • Held captive since last fall, an ailing American woman and a Danish man will soon be safely on their way home after a bold, dark-of-night rescue by U.S. Navy SEALs. The commandos slipped into a Somali encampment, shot and killed nine captors and whisked the hostages to freedom.

The raid's success was welcome news for the hostages and their families, for the military and for President Barack Obama, who was delivering his State of the Union speech and beginning a five-state tour as the mission wrapped up. He did not mention it in his address but dropped a hint upon arriving in the House chamber by telling Defense Secretary Leon Panetta, "Good job tonight."

It was the second splashy SEAL Team 6 success in less than a year, following last May's killing of Osama bin Laden in Pakistan.

The SEALs encountered some degree of resistance from the kidnappers at the encampment, two U.S. officials said, and there was a firefight during an approximately 1- to 1 1/2-hour operation.

One defense official said it was likely that the SEALs killed the kidnappers rather than capture them because they encountered armed resistance or the threat of resistance.

The Pentagon was mostly tight-lipped about details on Wednesday, citing a need to preserve the secrecy that can give SEALs and other special operations forces an edge against the terrorists, criminals and others they are ordered to kill or capture around the world under hazardous and often hostile conditions.

Special operations forces, trained for clandestine, small-team missions, have become a more prominent tool in the military's kit since the Sept. 11, 2001, attacks. The Obama administration is expected to announce on Thursday that it will invest even more heavily in that capability in coming years.

After planning and rehearsal, the Somalia rescue was carried out by SEAL Team 6, officially known as the Naval Special Warfare Development Group, according to two U.S. officials who spoke on condition of anonymity to discuss a secret mission. The same outfit did the bin Laden mission, the biggest counter-terror success of Obama's presidency. It was not clear whether any team members participated in both operations.

One official said the SEALs parachuted from U.S. Air Force aircraft before moving on foot, apparently undetected, to the outdoor encampment where they found American Jessica Buchanan, 32, and Poul Hagen Thisted, a 60-year-old Dane, who had been kidnapped in Somalia last fall. The raid happened near the town of Adado.

Pentagon press secretary George Little said the captors were heavily armed and had "explosives nearby" when the rescuers arrived on the scene, but he was not more specific. He declined to say whether there was an exchange of gunfire and would not provide any further details about how the rescue was completed beyond saying all of the captors were killed by the Americans.

The American raiders caught the kidnappers as they were sleeping after having chewed the narcotic leaf qat for much of the evening, a pirate who gave his name as Bile Hussein told AP by phone. Hussein said he was not present at the site but had spoken with other pirates who were, and that they told him nine pirates had been killed in the raid and three were "taken away."

A Pentagon spokesman, Navy Capt. John Kirby, said U.S. officials could not confirm that the kidnappers were engaged in piracy. He referred to them simply as "criminals."

Army to Cut Combat Brigades

BY LOLITA C. BALDOR
Associated Press

WASHINGTON • The U.S. Army plans to slash the number of combat brigades from 45 to as low as 32 in a broad restructuring of its fighting force aimed at cutting costs and reducing the service by about 80,000 soldiers, according to U.S. officials familiar with the plans.

Officials said the sweeping changes will likely increase the size of each combat brigade — generally by adding another battalion — in a long-term effort to ensure that those remaining brigades have the fighting capabilities they need when they go to war. A brigade is usually about 3,500 soldiers, but can be as large as 5,000 for the heavily armored units. A battalion is usually between 600-800 soldiers.

The brigade restructuring will unfold over several years and is intended to save money without eroding the military's ability to protect the country and wage war when needed. Army officials contend that while there would eventually be fewer brigades, building them bigger will give them more capabilities and depth, and will reduce stress on the units.

They said specialty units, such as Army special operations forces, would not be affected by the cuts.

Reducing the overall number of brigades will also eliminate the need for the headquarters units that command and oversee them.

Officials acknowledged that merging battalions together into larger brigades could shift some soldiers to different bases across the country, although that effort could be stymied by members of Congress who don't like to see the staffing decline at bases that feed the local economy. Officials said the Army will try to limit such shifts.

The cuts come as the Pentagon puts the finishing touches on its 2013 fiscal year budget, which must reflect about $260 billion in savings in its five-year plan. Congress has ordered the Defense Department to come up with a total of $487 billion over the next 10 years.

Islamists, Liberals Square off at Egypt Rally

BY SARAH EL DEEB and MAGGIE MICHAEL
Associated Press

CAIRO • Hundreds of thousands thronged major squares across Egypt on Wednesday, marking the first anniversary of the uprising that toppled Hosni Mubarak with rallies that laid bare the divisions that have replaced the unity of last year's revolt.

Cairo's Tahrir Square, the epicenter of the 18 days of protests against Mubarak, was transformed into the focal point of the rivalry between revolutionary activists intent on showing they can still mobilize the street, and the Muslim Brotherhood, who emerged as Egypt's dominant political force after a landslide victory in parliamentary elections.

The secular activists want continued protests to force the immediate ouster of the generals who took power after Mubarak's fall, saying they are just as dictatorial as the former president. The activists touted their powerful turnout as a sign they can pressure the Brotherhood, who they fear will accommodate the military in order to ensure their own political dominance.

"I have hope that these marches will be a message to the Brotherhood as much as the military council," said Sahar Abdel-Mohsen, who walked 3 1/2 miles in a giant march across Cairo to Tahrir.

"We all know even if the Brotherhood are strong, the military council is still stronger. ... What we all want is an end to military rule," she said.

Both sides were intent on bringing out as many supporters as possible to show their weight in a nation still reeling from the aftershocks of Mubarak's ouster.

The Islamists got off to a strong start, taking up positions in the morning and claiming the right to police the square, with Brotherhood volunteers checking the bags of those entering.

From a large stage with 10 loudspeakers, they blared religious songs and chants of "Allahu akbar," setting a tone of celebration for what they called the successes of the revolution, particularly the newly elected parliament.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE®

Bobby Wolff

"There is no calamity greater than lavish desires. There is no greater guilt than discontentment. And there is no greater disaster than greed."
— Lao-tzu

In today's deal, from the 2010 Gold Coast event in Australia, a straightforward auction would be the one shown here. With five hearts, North would have looked for a 4-4 spade fit by using check-back, so his actual bidding shows only four hearts.

In six no-trump on a passive diamond lead, declarer wins and must develop one extra trick from the majors. Best is to go after hearts first, to take advantage of the chances in both majors.

At one table Anton Blagov went after hearts by leading low from dummy. When East played low without discomfort, he judged that she could not have the king, so he inserted the nine successfully. However, the normal play is to lead a heart to the queen, losing to the king.

Best for West is to return a diamond now. Declarer cashes the heart ace himself (the Vienna Coup), then runs the clubs. In the four-card ending, declarer has the heart nine and three spades left, and dummy has its four spades. What can East keep? Answer: Nothing works. What declarer mustn't do is test spades early. If he runs the spades before the hearts, he will disrupt his own communications.

Bulletin editor David Stern noted that his mother, Gerda, brought home the slam, but 80 or so declarers went down in six no-trump by playing spades prematurely. An alternate and unsuccessful approach would have been to endplay East with a spade to lead hearts, but the recommended approach is a better percentage play.

ANSWER: Facing a balanced 22-24, you have just enough to explore for game. Best is to bid three clubs, using this call as Stayman, just as it would be if your partner had opened two no-trump. Equally, if you play transfers over an opening two-no-trump call, you would be able to show a five-card major if you had one.

Today is Thursday, Jan. 26, the 26th day of 2012. There are 340 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight:
On Jan. 26, 1942, the first American Expeditionary Force to go to Europe during World War II arrived in Belfast, Northern Ireland.

TODAY IN HISTORY

On this date:
In 1788, the first European settlers in Australia, led by Capt. Arthur Phillip, landed in present-day Sydney.
In 1837, Michigan became the 26th state.

In 1841, Britain formally occupied Hong Kong, which the Chinese had ceded to the British.

In 1861, Louisiana passed an Ordinance of Secession, becoming the sixth state to break free from the United States.

In 1870, Virginia rejoined the Union.

In 1911, the Richard Strauss opera "Der Rosenkavalier" (The Cavalier of the Rose) premiered in Dresden, Germany.

In 1939, during the Spanish Civil War, rebel forces led by Gen. Francisco Franco captured Barcelona.

In 1950, India officially proclaimed itself a republic as Rajendra Prasad took the oath of office as president.

In 1962, the United States launched Ranger 3 to land scientific instruments on the moon - but the probe ended up missing its target by more than 22,000 miles. Charles "Lucky" Luciano, a leading Mafia figure in the U.S., died in Naples, Italy, at age 64.

In 1979, former Vice President Nelson A. Rockefeller died in New York at age 70.

In 1992, Democratic presidential candidate Bill Clinton, appearing with his wife, Hillary, on CBS' "60 Minutes" acknowledged "causing pain in my marriage," but said past problems were not relevant to the campaign. The Washington Redskins won Super Bowl XXVI (26), defeating the Buffalo Bills 37-24. Actor Jose Ferrer, 80, died in Coral Gables, Fla.

In 1998, President Bill Clinton forcefully denied having an affair with a former White House intern, telling reporters, "I did not have sexual relations with that woman, Miss Lewinsky."

Ten years ago: In a preview of his State of the Union address, President George W. Bush pledged in his Saturday radio address to "work to create jobs and renew the strength of our economy." Jennifer Capriati made a stunning comeback as she overcame Martina Hingis to defend her Australian Open title, 4-6, 7-6 (7), 6-2.

Five years ago: The White House said President George W. Bush had authorized U.S. forces in Iraq to take whatever actions were necessary to counter Iranian agents deemed a threat to American troops or the public at large. Defense Secretary Robert Gates told a news conference that a congressional resolution opposing President Bush's troop buildup in Iraq undercut U.S. commanders and emboldened the enemy. Nine black youths were convicted in juvenile court in Long Beach, Calif., of beating three white women in a racially charged attack on Halloween night. (They were later sentenced to probation and house arrest after spending about three months in custody during their trials.)

One year ago: Speaking in Manitowoc, Wis., President Barack Obama campaigned vigorously for his revamped economic message, warning that other countries were grasping for first place in the global marketplace as the U.S. fell down on the job. Afghan President Hamid Karzai swore in the country's new parliament, marking the end of a drawn-out battle over whether the lawmakers would be able to start work despite ongoing investigations into electoral fraud.

DEAR ABBY: My 12-year-old daughter, "Mandy," was invited to a friend's birthday party along with 12 other girls. They were told to meet at the mall where they'd "go shopping" together, then go for a sleepover afterward.

The birthday girl told her friends to bring money as gifts. Well, she raked in more than $300 then proceeded to spend it all on herself while her friends stood and watched. Mandy returned home the next day and told me that although the girl spent the money on herself, her mom did buy them each a beverage.

DEAR ABBY Jeanne Phillips

Abby, I gave my daughter $20 to go to the party, thinking the money would be for all of their fun – not the birthday girl's financial gain. I thought your readers might want to learn from my mistake. These days, a birthday party may not be a party at all!

— HORRIFIED IN WICHITA

DEAR HORRIFIED: While this may have been shocking to you, the kind of party you have described may be acceptable to your daughter and her circle of friends. The birthday girl's intentions could have been made more clear – she requested money as gifts and instructed everyone to meet at the mall. However, they accepted the invitation on her terms. The sleepover may have been the party. I hope they were fed after the mall crawl because they must have been starving.

DEAR ABBY: My dad died unexpectedly last

IF JANUARY 26 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY: Enjoy playing with your holiday presents and take it easy for the next few weeks. Don't make changes to your bank accounts or business plan in April, when your judgment about business and relationships is off base. In early May, the worm turns and that is when you are at your most attractive. Seek new relationships, make commitments or interview for a new position. During early July, not only will you have the enthusiasm to make a success of anything you attempt, you will also have the incredible luck to be at the right place at the right time. Late June or early July is a great time to put major matters into motion such as a business or investment.

HOROSCOPE Jeraldine Saunders

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Those with a lack of vision often get lost. You grope for financial security, but you are in the dark because you prefer to believe in what you hope is true. This isn't the time to take an investment or to make financial advice.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Passions put you in a pickle. Your opposite half is intent on getting his or her way. Your natural instinct is to go along and remain amenable, but you might not have your wildest dreams fulfilled.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Make wise decisions. You can blend inspiration with your ambitions and come up with a way to have your cake and eat it, too. You can easily cook up some highly useful and compelling ideas or plans.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Let your guard down. It can be a good time to share your deepest feelings. You and a special someone can giggle with pleasure under tonight's flirtatious heavenly arrangement. Don't fight the tides.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Work at what you love. These planetary alignments demand attention to detail and the stamina to focus on difficult tasks. Informal working conditions may cause you to rub shoulders with an amorous partner.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Insist on accountability. Being a perfectionist doesn't mean you are perfect, but you can insist that others follow through. If you must double-check details or if someone is a stickler, be diplomatic.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Balance the checkbook and keep a calculator close. Look at things that are clearly in black and white rather than musing about intangibles or thinking about the "what could have been."

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): All the tiny bubbles burst. A relationship could spontaneously combust if you rely on mere wishful thinking. Talk to the object of your amorous feelings and be sure the two of you are on the same page.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Have fun at work. Entertainment might be valued more than education, but that is because many entertainments teach valuable lessons. Work buddies might have something amorous in mind.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Being obsessed by an idea or ambition does not mean you own it. It is in your best interests to share thoughts with others. Frankness might even bring you the help you need just when you need it.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Make money stand up and do tricks. You know what you want and can go get it. Listen to advice from a friend or gather information from primary sources to put your resources to the best use.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Pretending to be courageous can be as good as the real thing. People admire your refusal to bail out when the going gets tough. Insist on upholding enduring values instead of giving in to instant gratification.

Raptors Get First Win at Utah Since 2004

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SALT LAKE CITY • Jose Calderon hit a 3-pointer to tie it at the end of regulation and the Toronto Raptors rallied from an 18-point first-quarter deficit to beat the Utah Jazz 111-106 in double-overtime Wednesday night.

Andrea Bargnani and reserve Linas Kleiza each scored 25 points for the Raptors, who won in Salt Lake City for the first time since 2004. Kleiza hit four of Toronto's 10 3-pointers.

The Raptors won 99-96 in Phoenix on Tuesday night to end an eight-game losing streak against Phoenix before halting their 11-game skid against the Jazz.

Paul Millsap led Utah with a season-high 31 points, including a 3-pointer to force the second overtime. Devin Harris added a season-best 24 points for Utah, but missed three late free throws.

ATTACK OF THE SOPHOMORES

Meyerhoeffer, Jardine key big Bruin run against Riverhawks.

TWIN FALLS • Throughout the season, different players have carried the Twin Falls boys basketball team at the pivotal moment.

Surprising as it was, that made it fitting that two sophomores — one making his first varsity appearance — were the catalysts for a run that blew open the Bruins' 58-23 win at Canyon Ridge on Wednesday, completing a season sweep of the Riverhawks for the third time.

Connor Meyerhoeffer and Casdon Jardine combined for 12 of the team's 14 second-quarter points to turn what was a tie game early into the period into a 10-point halftime lead.

Meyerhoeffer hit two 3-pointers and Jardine, a junior varsity call-up, stretched the lead with a mid-court steal, layup and foul.

"I was feeling the pressure, because it's Canyon Ridge and it's a big game, but I was able to get the steal and the and-one," said Jardine, who was brought up after a combination of suspensions, illness and injury left the Bruins with eight available players. "I didn't expect to get as many minutes as I did, but once I got the first basket it started flowing."

Thomas Corr and Curtis Hansen (disciplinary), Ryan Carlson (illness) and Damon Jones (injury, out for season) didn't play.

Meyerhoeffer scored 11 and Jardine added seven, bolstering standout seniors Eric Harr (15) and Robert Sanchez (12). They held down the second quarter and then Harr and Sanchez went off in the third, combining for 16 in the period.

Canyon Ridge (4-12, 2-4 Great Basin) had a far better start than in a 45-point drubbing when the two teams played earlier this month, moving the ball well and generating substantive offense. But the Riverhawks weren't able to

Burley Blasts Rival Minico in 56-25 Win

BY RYAN HOWE
rhowe@magicvalley.com

Unlike the last time these rivals met, the Burley boys basketball team didn't allow Minico to hang around in Wednesday's 56-25 mercy rule victory.

"We had a different mindset tonight," said Burley senior Taylor Carson, who scored seven points. "We knew they were having injury problems and had a rough couple games, so we decided to take it right at them."

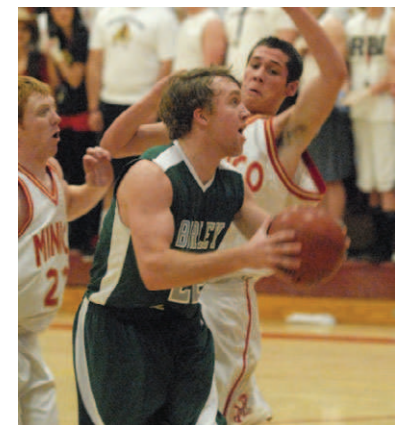

When Burley earned a 13-point home win against Minico on Jan. 6, the Bobcats waited until the second half to take control.

On Wednesday, Burley pulled away early, building a double-digit lead from early-second quarter on, and went up 40-21 at halftime.

"Burley got into more of a rhythm and our defense didn't get the job done," said Minico coach Adam Johnson.

Burley (9-4 overall, 4-2 Great Basin Conference) got balanced offensive output, with every player on the roster scoring. Brandon Hosteen and Jackson Knopp led with 10 points apiece. Burley had five different players hit a 3-pointer and got 25 points off its bench, matching Minico's team total.

DJOKOVIC ENSURES ORDER MAINTAINED

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MELBOURNE, Australia • With Novak Djokovic clutching his leg and struggling to breathe, it looked like the "Big 4" semifinal lineup at the Australian Open might not come together.

Then Djokovic's championship instincts kicked in. The top-ranked Serb held off No. 5 David Ferrer in a second-set tiebreaker Wednesday night and then raced through the third set for a 6-4, 7-6 (4), 6-1 win, setting up a rematch of last year's final against fourth-ranked Andy Murray.

Order was restored. For 10 days, nearly everyone at Melbourne Park has talked about the top four players and how they are on a higher level than the rest of the men's tennis. But with the other three looked to be in trouble in the second set.

"No, I don't have any physical issues," Djokovic said, playing down any health concerns. "I feel very fit and I feel mentally, as well, very fresh.

"It's just today I found it very difficult after a long time to breathe because I felt the whole day my nose was closed a little bit. I just wasn't able to get enough oxygen."

The win ensured that the top four men reached the semifinals for the third time in four Grand Slams. Murray beat Kei Nishikori 6-3, 6-3, 6-1 earlier Wednesday, while second-ranked Rafael Nadal and No. 3 Roger Federer were already preparing for their semifinal showdown, their 10th clash at a major but their first meeting at that stage of a Grand Slam since 2005.

Doubts about Djokovic's temperament surfaced after he won his first major at the 2008 Australian Open. He went another 11 majors before reaching another Grand Slam final, which he lost.

In his first title defense in 2009, he struggled with

LAS VEGAS • Ask Lem Banker about the New York Giants and he tells the story of how he won a bet against them in the 1958 NFL championship game, when Alan Ameche bowled into the end zone from a yard out in overtime to win it for the Baltimore Colts.

The game, at Yankee Stadium, was a television classic that captivated the country and sparked its love affair with the NFL. If it wasn't the greatest title game ever, it was surely the most significant.

For the gambler, though, it was just a win.

"I've had plenty of good losers, too," Banker said. "You're never going to get them all right."

Maybe not, though Banker once had a streak of 13 straight Super Bowl winners picking against the spread. Good thing, because he's never had a real job and winners pay the bills.

They have over the years, starting when he began booking bets in the family candy store in Union City, N.J., where his father would take the neighborhood action in between dispensing sweets. The son was a good enough basketball player to get scholarship offers, but he became even better at betting sports.

He'll be 85 this year, and he can still recall the big bets and bad beats of a career spent betting on the fortune of sports. The phone still rings in his sprawling home with people asking him "Lem, who do ya like?"

If he's not the greatest sports bettor — and many think he is — he's certainly the one of the few who have been around this long. He was especially good at picking winners of big fights, not surprising since he was Sonny Liston's best friend when the fearsome slugger ruled the heavyweight ranks.

Right now it's all about football. Always is at this time of year, something Banker was reminded of this week when his manicurist gave him her pick for the Super

SUPER BOWL XLVI

Bowl while filing his nails.

"Everybody has an opinion on the Super Bowl," Banker said.

That's good news for this city's bookmakers, who could do record business in the matchup between the Giants and the New England Patriots. The wise guys will push their usual six-figure bets across the counter, but it's the massive flood of money from the squares betting $20 bills that will determine who is favored and by how much next week in Indianapolis.

Some will risk their money because they believe the Giants have a stifling defense or are a team of destiny. Others will wager because they like the way Tom Brady does his hair.

The smart ones, though,

"It's probably the best matchup there could be. The general public rules these events and they like these teams."

Jimmy Vaccaro, a longtime bookmaker who helps run sports books in several casinos for Lucky's Race & Sports Book may look to a man who made his first Super Bowl bet on the first Super Bowl and ask: So, Lem, who do ya like?

"I'm laying the points and taking New England," Banker said. "It's really very simple. To me, Tom Brady is the best quarterback I've ever seen — and I've seen a lot of them back from when I was a kid and Sid Luckman was playing."

Some bookies in this gambling city are hoping Banker is right. They're the unlucky ones who were hit with sizeable wagers late in the regular season when the Giants were struggling and the odds were as high as 100-1 that they would win the Super Bowl.

They won't be run out of business, of course. Bookies

always recover, because there are always more squares with money in their pockets who think they know more than the guys across the counter who have the point spread thing down to a science. Casinos have lost money only once on the Super Bowl in the last 10 years, taking a beating in 2008 when the Giants — who were 13-point underdogs — beat New England, 17-14.

And this could be one of the highest bet Super Bowls ever, rivaling the $94.5 million wagered in Nevada — and untold millions elsewhere — on the Steelers-Seahawks game in 2006.

"It's probably the best matchup there could be," said Jimmy Vaccaro, a longtime bookmaker who helps run sports books in several casinos for Lucky's Race & Sports Book. "The general public rules these events and they like these teams."
Banker won't be wagering that much himself. He never did make huge bets, prefer-ing to make his money on volume instead.

And it's not like the old days when he had runners in different cities finding the best lines from bookmakers to lay his action on. Certainly not like the time he took a Minneapolis bookmaker for $30,000, only to be told he wasn't going to get paid. He got the money the next day, after asking a friend with, shall we say, connections, to look into the matter.

"There wasn't a bookmaker dead or alive that I didn't beat," Banker said. "I had runners everywhere, in New York, Miami, Chicago, all seeing different numbers. But now it's all the same numbers everywhere."
Computers and corporations have replaced pencils and candy store bookmakers. Online betting will dwarf anything even Las Vegas takes in on the game.
