Clearing Up the Caucus

What south-central Idaho GOP voters need to know about their party's new way of selecting a presidential candidate.

TIMES-NEWS

TWIN FALLS • With the Idaho Republican Party's first presidential caucus only a week away, excitement — and a little confusion — is in the air.

The excitement comes from the state's dominant political party partaking in the Super Tuesday scramble to pick its preferred challenger to President Barack Obama. With 32 delegates on the line, state GOP officials say the move from the traditional May primary election system increases Idaho's standing in the national political scene.

The confusion comes because, well, it's different than what we're used to.

The ambitious project progressed for about a year, but, like many ideas hatched just before the Great Recession, lost much of its steam as America's economy soured.

Now, at tonight's Twin Falls Planning and Zoning Commission meeting, representatives from the company will propose the development once again.

The project, dubbed Canyon Park North, would include a 10story hotel with a convention center, several large national chain stores and many smaller boutiquestyle stores. The development has been in the works in some form since 1997.

The company is responsible for nearby Canyon Park East and Canyon Park West, developments that house retailers such as Old Navy and Best Buy, and restaurants including Carino's Italian Restaurant and Outback Steakhouse.

During today's P&Z meeting, Gerald Martens of EHM Engineers will ask the commission for a zoning district change that would allow for a commercial mixed-use development.

The zone change, if approved, would affect 25 acres of Snake River Canyon rim property between Blue Lakes Boulevard and Canyon Springs Road.

The presentation will last about 15 minutes, and is expected to be followed by time for questions from P&Z commissioners.

BOISE • Life, death and religion – what a way to start the week.

On Monday morning, the Senate State Affairs committee voted to print legislation on pre-abortion ultrasounds, birth control mandates and life-saving procedures.

Sen. Sheryl L. Nuxoll, R-Cottonwood, introduced legislation that would prevent doctors from withholding life-saving treatment against the will of patients or their families. The issue may come up when a patient has only days to live, but wants to continue intensive treatment.

Under current laws, a doctor can refuse, Nuxoll said.

Levi Hays Sentenced in Walmart Bomb Threat Case

TIMES-NEWS

TWIN FALLS • One of four people accused of calling in a bomb threat as a diversion for a burglary was sentenced to probation Monday in Twin Falls County 5th District Court

Levi C. Hays, 19, was sentenced to three to six years in prison, suspended for three years' probation. Hays must also serve 30 days in jail along with 150 hours of community service, half of which will be on the Twin Falls County Jail work detail.

Hays pleaded guilty to a charge of conspiracy to commit burglary in Decem-

Hays, along with Terry

Plew, 21, Cassius Reynolds, 23, and Angel Estabrook, 19, were all charged with conspiracy to commit burglary, as police say they called in a bogus bomb threat on the Twin Falls Walmart on Oct. 10. Their real target was a Subway restaurant on Kimberly Road, which they allegedly intended to burglarize. According to statements made to the investigating officers, the suspects' plan was to take money from the restaurant to gamble at Fort Hall casinos.

Reynolds is scheduled to be sentenced today, Estabrook is scheduled to be sentenced March 5 and Plew is scheduled for a March 26 sentencing.

"If someone wants to live, that should be their decision," Nuxoll said.

Nuxoll also introduced a bill encouraging Congress to reject federal rules that would require small businesses to offer contraceptives coverage for their employees. Nuxoll said the rules, part of the federal Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act, violate the rights of conscience of religious Americans who are against contraceptives, sterilization and abortion-inducing medications. The resolution is similar to one sponsored by Rep. Carlos Bilbao, R-Emmett, that passed the House last week.

Sen. Chuck Winder, R-Boise, introduced legislation with Right to Life Idaho that would require ultrasounds before abortions.

Currently in Idaho, doctors must offer an ultrasound to women before an abortion, give out informational pamphlets and provide information on adoption services. But an ultrasound isn't required.

The legislation allows women to choose between vaginal and abdominal ultrasounds, said Kerrey Uhlenkott of Right to Life Idaho. Vaginal ultrasounds are typically used for very early pregnancies.

Sen. Michelle Stennett, D-Ketchum, askedifit was hypocritical for the Idaho Senate to blast the federal government for mandating individuals to buy insurance that violates their beliefs, while then requiring women to get potentially invasive ultrasounds that they don't want.

Uhlenkott disagreed.

"(The ultrasound) would protect her informed consent, it would protect her to make sure that the appropriate ultrasound would be used to determine and date the pregnancy," Uhlenkott said.

The committee will take testimony on the bills in coming days.

Federal Judge: Occupy Boise's Tents Can Stay

BY ALEX MORRELL

Associated Press

BOISE • A federal judge ruled Occupy Boise can keep its tents up for now, but barred protesters from sleeping, cooking and other camping related activities on land across from the Idaho Capitol.

In a decision released Monday, U.S. District Judge B. Lynn Winmill decided the group's protest against income inequality at the old Ada County Courthouse qualifies as protected free speech.

He granted a temporary restraining order against a new law, signed by Gov. C.L. "Butch" Otter last week, meant to boot them from the property surrounding the vacant, Depression-era courthouse where they've been a constant presence since early November.

Protesters who gathered on the courthouse steps at noon Monday gave a resounding cheer as leaders of the group told them the tents could stay.

"I wouldn't call this a full victory. It's only a step of progress with many steps to come," Albert Garcia, a protester from Jerome, said. "I don't need to sleep here. I don't need to eat here to continue making my point?

While the recently minted law prohibits camping-related activities like sleeping or fire building, Occupy Boise can still maintain an aroundthe-clock vigil at the encampment, Winmill wrote in his 16-page decision.

Given the potential infringement on First Amendment free-speech rights, Winmill says Idaho has an "extraordinarily heavy burden" of demonstrating the law is the least restrictive way of achieving a compelling state interest. He ruled the state's plan to dismantle the tent city - a symbolic political expression - by 5 p.m. Monday exceeds the scope of the law.

"Such action is simply not authorized by the statute," Winmill continued. "This creates the appearance that the state is stretching to suppress the core political message of Occupy Boise - its encampment across the street from the Idaho Capitol on Monday in Boise. A federal judge ruled that the tents, erected since November, can stay, but that sleeping and cooking at the site will no longer be allowed.

tents — as presented in a public forum?"

Rep. Scott Bedke, R-Oakley, was the author of the original legislation to ban camping on state property.

"This was always just about camping," said Bedke, the assistant majority leader. "It was never about curtailing First Amendment rights."

Bedke said he recognized that it was a fine line between regulating and stifling expression.

"There should be a reasonable way for all citizens to come express their concerns and to assemble," Bedke said. "We're trying to ... find a reasonable way to strike a balance on proper time, place and manner of expression."

Another issue: The Occupy tent city is more than a protest for some, Bedke said. Some homeless Occupiers have turned the property into their current home, and a couple of sex offenders have used the Capitol's address to register with the state.

"I think that we've kind of crossed the line here, because we have citizens that are using the address of the Capitol lawn as a domicile for the purposes of registering as a sex offender," he said.

The issue is out of the hands of the Legislature, Bedke said, adding he and his colleagues "will be responsive to how this plays out."

Winmill's injunction lasts at least until an evidentiary hearing can be scheduled for the case. No date has been set.

Otter's administration declined to comment specifics of the ruling, saving they're still looking it over.

"We have to go back in front of" Winmill, Jon Hanian, Otter's press secretary, said Monday. "We're not going to be able to say much more beyond that?"

Winmill gave protesters until the end of the day Friday to remove camping gear from the courthouse grounds before Idaho officials can move in and seize property.

The state would still have to store it for up to 90 days, before throwing it away, to allow Occupy campers to reclaim their items, according to the law.

Occupy Boise lawyer Bryan Walker said the group plans to press ahead with challenging the issue of camping rights as the litigation proceeds.

"I know there is some disappointment about not being permitted to camp," Walker said. "We're going to take another bite at that apple at the evidentiary hearing?"

The office hadn't asked for the funding, nor did the governor recommend it. But Sen. Lee Heider, R-Twin Falls, pointed out that the office's federal funding had been cut, and this was an attempt to make up for it.

Why is it important? Idaho has until 2015 to restore sage grouse habitat and replenish their numbers to avoid the species' listing as endangered. Meetings held across the state are part of the planning efforts for that weighty task.

If sage grouse are classified as endangered, the federal government would drastically restrict how their habitat is used.

That would affect most major Magic Valley industry, Heider said, including farming, ranching and energy projects.

While other legislators agreed that sage grouse efforts are important, they didn't see the need to toss

"We felt that their budget was sufficient, even to handle any sage grouse," said Rep. John Vander Woude, R-Nampa. Vander Woude and Rep. George Eskridge, R-Dover, prepared an alternative appropriation that didn't include the transportation funding, but was otherwise identical to the Magic Valley legislators' proposal. In the end, the committee

Drug Charges Against Nev. Woman Dismissed

TIMES-NEWS

TWIN FALLS • A judge in Twin Falls dismissed a heroin trafficking charge against a Nevada woman Friday.

Idaho State Police announced in late January they had seized more than two pounds of black tar heroin with a street value of $72,000 during a traffic stop in Twin Falls County.

Yulenny Rojo-Lugo, 34, the driver of the vehicle, was arrested for trafficking heroin and conspiracy to traffic heroin, and was booked into the Twin Falls County Jail. A female passenger, Adilene Torres, was released without charges.

A trooper stopped the white 2002 Nissan XTerra with Nevada license plates at 2:20 p.m. on U.S. Highway 93, near milepost 31, for speeding. According to ISP, troopers discovered a modified compartment within the vehicle that contained two sealed packages of the heroin, an unusual find in the Magic Valley.

ISP District 4 Patrol Commander Lt. Kevin Haight said the pair started out in Las Vegas and were asked to deliver the vehicle to Washington.

Judge Thomas Kershaw found prosecutors did not have enough evidence that Rojo-Lugo knew the heroin was hidden in the car to take the case to a tri-for and provide a list of five supporting signatures.

Twin Falls County Commissioners Terry Kramer and George Urie both got their paperwork in on Monday. Kramer has served on the commission since 2006 and represents western Twin Falls County in District 1.

Urie is also looking to maintain his two-year District 3 seat. Urie currently serves as commission chairman.

The third candidate is Twin Falls County sheriff hopeful Kelly Hassani.

Hassani currently works at the sheriff's office as a senior investigator and is filing as an independent.

WOMAN IN CUSTODY SQUABBLE CROSSES BORDER WITH KIDS

BOISE (AP) • Authorities say an Idaho woman accused of taking her three children in a cussquabble has crossed the border and all four are in Mexico.

The FBI says that 35year-old Bertha Sabala Guerrero, her 9-year-old son and two daughters, ages 7 and five, crossed the border as early as Sunday evening.

Authorities say the children appear to be unharmed.

Guerrero lost custody in December after authorities say she left them with a woman she had just met. The children were placed in foster care.

Authorities say Guerrero picked them up for a 24-hour visitation Friday and failed to return them the following day. Guerrero has family living in Phoenix and Mexico. The FBI said Monday that the investigation will continue, but Amber Alerts for the children will be canceled.

Council Rejects Bids, Approves Agreement with Country Club

BY KIMBERLEE KRUESI kkruesi@magicvalley.com

TWIN FALLS • The Twin Falls City Council has told contractors seeking a share of the city's wastewater projects to try again.

Council members voted unanimously Monday to decline four bid proposals submitted to the city for the wastewater work.

The collected bids failed to come in within budget or meet the guidelines as outlined in city code. The city will begin accepting new proposals after staff posts notice of the submission period in the next few days, said Troy Vitek, assistant city engineer.

After rejecting the bids, the meeting sped along with minimal discussion.

Council members voted to reappoint and appoint members to the city's Golf Advisory Commission. And council members all voted "yes" to approve an encroachment permit for the city to trench across U.S. Highway 30 at the Hankins Road intersection instead of boring under it for a sewer pipe expansion.

Trenching across the road will save the city $150,000 over the boring, said Lee Glaesemann, a city staff engineer.

Finally, council members all approved an agreement between the city and Blue Lakes Country Club. The council agreed to pay for 6 percent of maintenance and improvements on the windy Blue Lakes Grade. The city will then receive access to the well located north of upper Blue Lakes.

Caucus

What Is It?

At the caucus, Idaho's GOP voters will choose which candidate they'd like to give the state's delegates to at the Republican National Convention. There are five candidates to choose from: Mitt Romney, Newt Gingrich, Rick Santorum, Ron Paul and Buddy Roemer.

When Is It?

March 6. Voting starts at 7 p.m. at all locations.

Who Can Participate?

Participants must be registered Republican voters, though 17-year-olds may participate if they will turn 18 by Nov. 6 and have filled out a voter card. Voters can register at the caucus.

What Happens?

At each county's caucus, voters are given ballots or tokens, which they use to indicate which candidate they want to vote for. At the end of each round, officials count the votes.

The candidate who receives the least amount of votes is removed from the ballot, as is any candidate who receives less than 15 percent of the vote. Those who initially voted for eliminated candidates then choose from the ones who remain.

Voting continues until one candidate has at least 50 percent of the vote, or for the last two candidates.

Government Charges Bank of America with Discrimination

WASHINGTON (AP) • The U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development charged Bank of America Corp. on Monday with discriminating against three disabled borrowers in Michigan and Wisconsin.

The nation's biggest bank is accused of violating the federal Fair Housing Act in 2009 and 2010. The act prohibits lenders from discriminating against disabled borrowers, among other provisions.

Bank of America imposed "unnecessary and burdensome requirements" on borrowers who relied on disability income to qualify for their home loans, the government said. The bank also required some disabled borrowers to provide statements from their doctors to get loans, according to the government.

Sales Contracts for Homes Rose 2 Percent in January

The number of Americans who signed contracts to buy homes rose in January to the highest level in nearly two years, supporting the view that the housing market is gradually coming back.

BY DEREK KRAVITZ Associated Press

WASHINGTON • The number of Americans who signed contracts to buy homes rose in January to the highest level in nearly two years, supporting the view that the housing market is gradually coming

The National Association of Realtors said Monday that its index of sales agreements rose 2 percent last month to a reading of 97. That's the highest reading since April 2010, the last month that buyers could qualify for a federal home-buying tax credit and the last time the reading was above 100.

A reading of 100 is considered healthy.

The Realtors' group also released revised data for 2011. That lowered November's initial 19-month high of 100.1 to 96.9. But contracts have been markedly up since the summer when some feared a second recession loomed.

Contract signings typically indicate where the housing market is headed. There's a one- to two-month lag between a signed contract and a completed deal.

A sale isn't final until a mortgage is closed. One-third of Realtors complain that they've had at least one contract scuttled in January, December, November and October, according to the Realtors' group. That's up from 18 per-

In a Nutshell

CONTRACTS UP: The number of Americans who signed contracts to buy homes rose in January to a reading of 97, the National Association of Realtors said.

GOOD READING: January's reading was the highest since April 2010, the last month that buyers could qualify for a federal home-buying tax credit. A reading of 100 is considered healthy.

MARKET IMPROVING: The gain suggests sales could pick up this year, supporting other evidence of improvement in the housing market. There's a one- to two-month lag between a signed contract and a completed deal.

cent of Realtors in September.

Nonetheless, the gain in signed contracts supports other evidence of improvement in the housing market.

Pierre Ellis, an economist at Decision Economics, said home sales and building is in the midst of "ongoing general, but gentle, progress?"

Builders are growing more optimistic after seeing more people express interest in buying this year. Sales of previously occupied homes are at their highest level since May 2010. More first-time buyers are making purchases.

And the supply of homes fell last month to its lowest point in nearly seven years, which could push home prices higher.

Homes are the most affordable they've been in decades. And mortgage rates have never been cheaper.

Much of the optimism has come because hiring has picked up. More jobs are critical to a housing rebound.

"Easier mortgage lending criteria, very low rates and the improving labor market are all contributing to the beginnings of a real upturn in home sales, if not yet prices," said Ian Shepherdson, chief U.S. economist at High Frequency Economics.

Sales may also be rising because of an April deadline for higher mortgage application fees for Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac-backed home loans. The government-controlled mortgage buyers own or guarantee about half of all U.S. mortgages and 90 percent of new loans, and have been telling customers to submit their applications now.

Analysts caution that the damage from the housing bust is deep and the industry is years away from fully recovering.

Potential buyers are holding off for a number of reasons. High unemployment and weak job growth have deterred many potential buyers. Loans are harder to come by. Lenders are requiring bigger down payments and strong credit scores to qualify.

Even those with good credit and stable finances are hesitant to buy out of concern home prices will keep falling.

Billy Crystal Helps Improve Oscar Viewership

BY DAVID BAUDER Associated Press

NEW YORK • The return of Billy Crystal helped boost viewership for the Academy Awards but not enough to prevent a cultural oddity: The Oscars weren't even the most-watched awards show on television this month.

The Nielsen Co. estimated Monday that 39.3 million people watched the Oscars on ABC Sunday night, up from the 37.9 million viewers during the much-panned 2011 show where James Franco and Anne Hathaway shared hosting duties.

Crystal was called in after original host Eddie Murphy pulled out. It was the ninth time Crystal has done that job and he delivered, despite worries that best picture winner "The Artist" would not be much of an audience

Nielsen said 39.9 million people watched the Grammy Awards on CBS on Feb. 12. That huge audience was likely due to the popularity of big winner Adele and curiosity about how Grammy producers would address the death the day before the show. It was only the second time Bowl, the Oscars are frequently the second mostwatched TV event of the year. In 1984, when Michael Jackson was the big winner at the Grammys, the show had 51.7 million viewers. The Os-

That more than doubled the 2.02 million estimate from last year's Oscars, Trendrr said. It illustrates the growth in social media as well as the tendency of people to comment online with their friends as they share the experience of watching on TV, said Chris Thonis, spokesman for Tren-

The legislation was advanced Monday by the Senate Education Committee. It doesn't backfill the $14.7 million taken from employee pay and benefits this year to help fund the reforms, but

Ada Sheriff Says He May Stop Posting Mug Shots

Sheriff Gary Raney worries booking photos he provides on his website are preyed upon by private sites trying to make a quick buck.

BY PATRICK ORR Idaho Statesman

BOISE (AP) • When Ada County Sheriff Gary Raney decided to post a daily arrest list and booking photos on the Internet in 2003, it was to provide a public service – and a deterrent for people about to do something really stupid, like drive drunk.

The site has become popular, averaging about 200,000 unique visitors a month, and Raney considers it a complete success.

"I don't know how many times I have heard from people that they got a designated driver so they don't end up on our website," he said. "The public deterrence factor is pretty high, especially for DUI driving."

But Raney is now considering removing the site (www.adasheriff.org/ArrestsReport) because of what he sees as an abuse of the public information and service it provides.

Businesses such as Boise-Mugshots.com, Mugshots .com and arrestcentral.com "scrape" - or automatically grab information from websites like Ada County's arrest log, post the photos on their sites and then link to other Web businesses that charge $99 and more for removal.

"I really have heartburn over this," Raney said. "What we do serves a purpose. What they do is selfserving profiteering. ... It's distasteful, extortion-like activity. That is not our intent at all?

"Sadly, this is an industry that deals in pain, embarrassment and humiliation," said Boise attorney Michael Bartlett, who has represented clients who discovered their faces posted on these sites. "This is a business built on what are likely the worst day of these people's lives."

It's also a business that appears to be legal, since what the websites are doing is posting public records. Bartlett said he suspects that as long as the information the sites publish is accurate, they likely are breaking no law. Accusing someone arrested of DUI with, say, burglary or grand theft could be challenged in court, he said.

A Statesman IT staffer was unable to find out where the companies are from or who owns them, concluding that such company information was blocked.

The Idaho attorney general office's Consumer Protection Division has not received any written complaints about Boise-Mugshots.com or any similar services, spokesman Bob Cooper said.

Anyone who has been arrested in Ada County in the past year or so has likely ended up on Boise-Mugshots.com. It's easy to find someone who has been arrested: Just type in that person's name. Or click on the face of any one of the 75 mug shots on the first page to see a sample page.

A link at the top offers "instant mug shot removal." Click on that, and you go to another site, removemymug.com, which says it will take the picture off the site within 24 hours for $99.

An official at Boise-Mugshots.com, who goes by the name Mugshot Barry and answers media questions only by email, said he doesn't understand the negative reaction.

"The intent of the website is not to sell removals, the intent of the website is to sell advertising," Mugshot Barry said. "People love looking at mugshots, they like to see who got arrested. This very data is no different than any news publication that publishes police blotters. ... The difference is, we admit that it is not a journalistic pursuit.

"When someone says our site is unethical, I ask them how? We don't even hide behind the 'It's a public service' excuse," he wrote. "We delete anyone who mugs remain on the county website for five days. In addition to the deterrent effect, a complete daily log makes it easier to handle media requests about arrests, charges and booking photos, Sheriff Raney said.

The site is popular with Ada County residents. So Raney's staff is researching to see if it can encrypt the pictures to keep them available for public view while stopping mug shot websites from automatically downloading them.

Almost every major metropolitan area has similar sites. People who get arrested in Portland have pdxmugshots.com. In Salt Lake City, it's slc.mugshots.com.

Access to the people behind the sites is available only through email. Boise-Mugshots.com says "threatening to sue or alluding to any kind of legal action when contacting us will not yield favorable results."

It says if someone is found not guilty or a charge is dropped, the site will remove the picture for no fee, when it gets time and if you email the "scanned paperwork" or a case ID number. The site says it also will remove the photo of someone who has died.

Mugshot Barry said he gets as many as 50 to 100 emails a day from people who want their mug shots removed and he can't keep up. He said removemymug.com approached him in September offering to provide an instant-removal service for people willing to pay.

"We certainly do give enough hints to anyone reading," he said, "that a simple email is all it takes."

Mugshots.com runs in a similar fashion, except it has five "authorized vendors" who will remove a mug shot from the site for a fee that can cost as much as $399. That service does not appear to offer a free removal. There is a sentence explaining that a "licensed U.S. attorney" can ask for a "courtesy removal" for any arrest records "expunged or sealed by the court," but an administrative fee may be required. All other requests for removal must go through one of their venIDAHO BRIEFS

Treasure Hunters Opens Today in Twin Falls!

By Jason Delong THR's Treasure Hunters Roadshow STAFF WRITER

Roll up your sleeves and get ready to start your spring cleaning early this year. The event starts today in Twin Falls and is looking for anything old. Remember those matchbox cars you played with as a kid? You know the ones that have been stored away in the attic for the past 30 years. Well it's time to dig 'em out along with any other forgotten treasures. You might be sitting on a small fortune and not even know it.

THR's representative Archie Davis explains what the event is all about. "It's a chance to sell just about anything that's old and get a fair price. We host over 1,000 shows every year throughout the U.S. and Canada. Toys, dolls, trains, pocket watches, old advertising signs, gold jewelry, coins just about anything can be sold at the event. This event is popular because it puts money in people's pockets. At a typical show, we will see hundreds of people during the five day event. We will see a few unusual items but mostly we will see a lot of old coins, gold jewelry, and a wide variety of antiques and collectibles. Last week at a show in Missouri, a retired dentist walked in with over 5 lbs. of dental gold fillings. "I would say that is pretty unusual, wouldn't you?" says Davis. The gentlemen received over $31,243 for his gold fillings. The dentist told Davis that over the years he would keep the extracted

Now not everybody has a jar of gold teeth lying around but according to Davis, more than you might think have some sort of gold they can cash in. Davis says, "The event receives a fair amount of gold each day of the 5 day event."

Broken jewelry, gold coins, dental gold are all valuable items with today's high gold prices. Archie Davis commented, "Other top categories at the event would have to be silver dollars and other coins, pocket watches, and my personal favorite, old toys." Davis told me a story about a visitor at a recent Roadshow in Iowa, "This elderly gentlemen walked into the show and asked if we were interested in old toys. The fellow must have been in his late seventies or early eighties. He said he kept all of the toys from his childhood and they were outside in his pickup. I walked outside and to my surprise his pickup was full of the coolest old toys I had ever seen. Big old metal trucks, pedal cars, train sets, cast iron toys he had it all. We spent the next 3 hours going through his childhood. It was fun to listen to the stories he told about growing up and playing with the toys. He said one time he decided to play farmer in the garden and ended

Whether you have 5 lbs. of gold or a single gold tooth, a pick up full of old toys or a single Barbie doll you should visit the event this week. It's free, it's fun and it could put some money in your pocket, maybe a lot of money!

An Ohio Highway Patrol helicopter takes off from the rear of Chardon High School in Chardon, Ohio Monday. A gunman opened fire inside the high school's cafeteria at the start of the school day Monday officials said.

CHARDON, Ohio • A teenager opened fire in the cafeteria at his suburban Cleveland high school Monday, killing one student and wounding four others before he was chased from the building by a teacher and captured a short distance away, author-

A student who saw the attack up close said it appeared that the gunman targeted a group of students sitting together and that the one who was killed was gunned down while trying to duck under the cafeteria table.

FBI officials would not comment on a motive. And Police Chief Tim McKenna said authorities "have a lot of homework to do yet" in their investigation of the shooting, which sent students screaming through the halls at the start of the school day at 1,100-student Chardon High.

Teachers locked down their classrooms as they had been trained to do during drills, and students took cover as they waited for the all-clear in this town of 5,100 people 30 miles from Cleveland. One teacher was said to have dragged a wounded student into his classroom for protection. Another chased the gunman out of the building, police said.

The suspect, whose name was not released because he is a juvenile, was arrested near his car a half-mile away, the FBI said. He was not immediately charged.

Fifteen-year-old Danny Komertz, who witnessed the shooting, said the gunman was known as an outcast who had apparently been bullied. But other students disputed

"Even though he was quiet, he still had friends," said Tyler Lillash, 16. "He was not bullied." Long before official word came of the attack, parents learned of the bloodshed from students via text message and cellphone and thronged the streets around the school, anxiously awaiting word on their children.

Two of the wounded were listed in critical condition, and another was in serious condi-

He said the gunman fired two shots quickly, and students scrambled for safety. One of them was "trying to get underneath the table, trying to hide, protecting his face?

The slain student, Daniel Parmertor, was an aspiring computer repairman who was waiting in the cafeteria for the bus for his daily 15-minute ride to a vocational school. His teacher at the Auburn Career School had no idea why

U.S.: Turmoil in Afghanistan Won't Change U.S. War Plan

BY ANNE GEARAN and ROBERT BURNS Associated Press

WASHINGTON • The Obama administration is sticking determinedly to its stay-the-course message in Afghanistan despite a week of anti-American riots, the point-blank killing of U.S. military advisers and growing election-year demands to bring the troops home.

In an echo of the Bush administration on continuing the unpopular war in Iraq, the White House and Pentagon insisted Monday that the wave of violence against Americans will not derail the war strategy in Afghanistan or speed up the calendar for bringing American forces home.

'We work alongside thousands of Afghans every single day to ensure a better future for the Afghan people. And nothing that has happened over the past week is going to deter us from that goal," Pentagon spokesman George Little said. "We're making progress. We have put the enemy on its heels in many parts of the country?'

Administration spokesmen were at pains to answer the larger question of whether to keep fighting a war that has lost support not only in the United States but also among the people the U.S. has pledged to protect. The perception that Afghans are ungrateful for U.S. sacrifice and are turning on their American advisers complicates President Barack Obama's plan to ease out of combat against Taliban extremists over the next two years.

Under current strategy, tens of thousands of U.S. forces will remain in Afghanistan at least through the end of this year and Afghan forces would have full control of the country's security by the end of 2014. Both Democrats and Republicans have said the timetable should move up.

White House spokesman Jay Carney said the violence will not mean Please see AFGHANISTAN, A9

Students and parents arrive past a memorial, left, outside Willard Elementary School for student Joanna Ramos, 10, in Long Beach, Calif. on Monday. Death of Calif. Schoolgirl after Fight Ruled Homicide

BY GILLIAN FLACCUS Associated Press

LONG BEACH, Calif. • What began as an afterschool fight between two young girls over a boy exploded into a homicide investigation Monday, when authorities said a 10-year-old died of a head injury after the confrontation with an 11 year-old classmate.

The finding rattled the already shaken school community at Willard Elementary, where student Joanna Ramos attended the fifth grade. She died Friday, about six hours after a brief fight with another girl in an alley near the school in a workingclass neighborhood in the port city of Long Beach.

Joanna, who would have turned 11 on March 12, underwent emergency surgery for a blood clot on her brain late Friday after she began vomiting and complained of a headache, her older sister, 17year-old Vanessa Urbina, told The Associated Joanna was unconscious by the time she arrived at the emergency room, but hospital staff revived her three times before she went into surgery for the clot, Urbina said.

"After surgery the doctor said she was still alive, and then a few minutes later he comes back and

"Most people are fairly convinced we had already discovered flu in all the possible" animals, said Ruben Donis, a Centers for Disease Control and Prevention scientist who co-authored the new study.

Scientists suspect that some bats caught flu centuries ago and that the virus mutated within the bat population into this new variety. Scientists haven't even been able to grow the new virus in chicken eggs or in human cell culture, as they do with more conventional flu strains.

But it still could pose a threat to humans. For example, if it mingled with more common forms of influenza, it could swap genes and mutate into something more dangerous, a scenario at the heart of the global flu epidemic movie "Contagion."

The research was posted online Monday in the journal Proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences.

The CDC has an international outpost in Guatemala, and that's where researchers collected more than 300 bats in 2009 and 2010. The research was mainly focused on rabies, but scientists also checked specimens for other germs and stumbled upon the new virus. It was in the intestines of little yellow-shouldered bats, said Donis, a veterinarian by training.

These bats eat fruit and insects but don't bite people. Yet it's possible they could leave the virus on produce and a human could get infected by taking a bite.

It's conceivable some people were infected with the virus in the past. Now that scientists know what it looks like, they are looking for it in other bats as well as humans and other animals, said Donis, who heads the Molecular Virology and Vaccines Branch in the CDC's flu division.

At least one expert said CDC researchers need to do more to establish they've actually found a flu virus.

faster troop withdrawal. He pointed to Obama's rationale for expanding the war early in his presidency.

"The No. 1 priority, the reason why U.S. troops are in Afghanistan in the first place, is to disrupt, dismantle and ultimately, ultimately defeat al-Qaida;" Carney Administration officials said they believe Afghan President Hamid Karzai's fragile government could collapse and the Taliban would regain power if the U.S. were to walk away. Their argument recalls the Bush administration insistence at the height of violence in Iraq that the war was in U.S. national security interests and that abandoning a commitment to stabilize the country would squander painful U.S. sacrifices.

But even in Iraq, cases of supposedly friendly forces turning their guns on American troops were very rare.

As with Iraq, voters in the U.S. are questioning the wisdom of a long-running conflict they once largely supported. This time, with the U.S. election campaign well under way, discontent with the war in Afghanistan is compounded by its high monetary cost at a time of tightening budgets.

from Afghanistan as soon as possible, while just 38 percent believe the U.S. should stay until Afghanistan is stabilized. The poll was taken just before Obama's State of the Union address in late January.

Democratic Senate Whip Dick Durbin, D-Ill., said Monday the United States should move faster to bring forces home now.

"The sooner the better," Durbin said on MSNBC. "The president is right to start bringing the troops home. I would say to him: Do it more quickly?

Although a military spokesman said protests over the mistaken U.S. burning of Muslim religious material are ebbing, the depth of anger at U.S. forces was evident in a suicide bombing at one base and the possible attempted poisoning of American soldiers by a kitchen worker at another.

More than 30 people have died in clashes since it became known last week that copies of the Quran, the Muslim holy book, and other religious materials were thrown into a fire pit used to burn garbage at a U.S. base near Kabul.

Obama has apologized for what he said was a mistake.

Republican presidential front-runner Mitt Romney told "Fox News Sunday" that for many in the U.S., the apology "sticks in their throat" after so much American sacrifice in Afghanistan.

GOP candidate Newt Gingrich said Monday the U.S. presence in Afghanistan has become a liability.

"There's some problems where what you have to do is say, 'You know, you're going to have to figure out how to live your own miserable life," Gingrich said. "You clearly don't want to learn from me how to be un-miserable. The Karzai government is playing us for fools."

Shooting

Parmertor, "a very good young man, very quiet," had been targeted, said Auburn superintendent Maggie Lynch.

Officers investigating the shooting blocked off a road in a heavily wooded area several miles from the school. Federal agents patrolled the muddy driveway leading to several spacious homes and ponds, while other officers walked a snowy hillside. A police dog was brought in. It wasn't clear what they were looking for.

Teacher Joe Ricci had just begun class when he heard shots and slammed the door to his classroom, yelling, "Lockdown!" to students, according to Karli Sensibello, a student whose sister was in Ricci's classroom.

A few minutes later, Ricci heard a student moaning outside, opened the door and pulled in student Nick Walczak who had been shot several times, Sensibello said in an email. Ricci comforted Walczak and let him use his cellphone to call his girlfriend and parents, Sensibello said. She said her sister was too upset to talk.

Heather Ziska, 17, said she was in the cafeteria when she saw a boy she recognized as a fellow student come into the cafeteria and start shooting. She said she and several others immediately ran outside, while other friends ran into a middle school and others locked themselves in a teachers' lounge.

"Everybody just started running," said 17-year-old Megan Hennessy, who was in class when she heard loud noises. "Everyone was running and screaming down the hallway?

Rebecca Moser, 17, had just settled into her chemistry class when the school went into lockdown. The class of about 25 students ducked behind the lab tables at the back of the classroom, uncertain whether it was a drill.

Text messages started flying inside and outside the school, spreading information about what was happening and what friends and family were hearing outside the building.

"We all have cellphones, so people were constantly giving people updates - about what was going on, who the victims were, how they were doing;" Moser said. The school had no metal detectors, but current and past students said it had frequent security drills in case of a shooting. Anxious parents of high school students were told to go to an elementary school to pick up their children.

Joe Bergant, Chardon school superintendent, said school was canceled Tuesday and grief counselors would be available to students and families.

"If you haven't hugged or kissed your kid in the last couple of days, take that time;" he said.

tells us that her heart stopped and they couldn't bring her back," Urbina said, crying as she sat on the steps of the school near a memorial of flowers and balloons.

Police said they have made no arrests and were conducting an investigation that will be presented to prosecutors when it's completed. Coroner's Lt. Fred Corral said Ramos died of blunt force trauma to the head, but he didn't immediately have further details about her injuries.

Doctors say head injuries suffered in fistfights can often lead to delayed bleeding when a punch results in a torn vein. That can then lead to a clot when blood collects on the surface of the brain.

Dr. Keith Black, a neurosurgeon at Cedars-Sinai Medical Center, said he sees such injuries all the time, but it's uncommon to see it in a child, especially a young girl.

"This is rare, in that I've never seen it in a female, certainly not in a female adolescent," said Black, who was not involved in Joanna's medical care.

Still, he said, a blow to the head from one young girl to another could "absolutely" be sufficient to cause enough trauma to lead to death.

Worried parents lingered as they dropped off their children Monday in a light rain and wondered aloud how the school, tucked a few blocks off a major city street, could have become the scene of such unexpected violence.

new movie about Navy SEALs opened Friday, and it has Doug Sterner concerned. The film, "Act of Valor," revolves around a team of SEALs trying to rescue a captured CIA agent. What's unusual about it is that it features several actual, active-duty SEALs as actors. Sterner, who hunts military fakers the way Simon Wiesenthal did Nazis, worries that the movie will give rise to a new legion of frauds.

"Most people have never met a real Navy SEAL, but after that movie comes out this weekend, everybody is going to have a former Navy SEAL on their block," he told me this week. "Well, Navy SEALs get a badge that identifies them as a member of the SEALs, and somebody falsely claiming to be a SEAL by extension is claiming that badge, and hopefully, the law will cut down on the people making fraudulent claims."

The law he was referring to is the one he and his wife helped get through Congress. The Stolen Valor Act makes it a federal crime to claim falsely to have received a military medal or other decoration. This week, it was the focus of arguments before the U.S. Supreme Court, where a man named Xavier Alvarez is challenging its constitutionality.

At a public meeting in 2007, Alvarez, a member of a public water board in Southern California, introduced himself by saying, "I'm a retired Marine of 25 years. I retired in the year 2001. Back in 1987, I was awarded the Congressional Medal of Honor."

Alvarez is neither a Marine nor a Medal of Honor recipient. Those claims were part of a pattern of fabrication: Alvarez has also falsely claimed to have played professional hockey, married a Mexican starlet, and performed heroics during the Iran hostage crisis.

Alvarez's conviction under the Stolen Valor Act was thrown out by the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 9th Circuit, which ruled that his lies were constitutionally protected speech. Concurring with a decision to deny a rehearing of the case, the court's chief judge, Alex Kozinski, wrote, "Saints may always tell the truth, but for mortals, living means lying."

Kozinski then offered a litany of everyday lies: "We lie to protect our privacy ('No, I don't live around here'); to avoid hurt feelings ('Friday is my study night'); to make others feel better ('Gee, you've gotten skinny'); to avoid recriminations ('I only lost $10 at poker'); to prevent grief ('The doc says you're getting better'); to maintain domestic tranquility ('She's just a friend'); to avoid social stigma ('I just haven't met the right woman')," etc.

Sterner is understandably upset about the ruling, which, if left intact by the Supreme Court, could erase his legislative achievement. Nevertheless, he agrees with one statement in the appeals court's opinion: "Preserving the value of military decorations is unquestionably an appropriate and worthy governmental objective that Congress may achieve through, for example, publicizing the names of legitimate recipients."

Amazingly, even though we live in the age of the Internet, there is no central database of military commendations. This not only makes it difficult to expose the frauds, but it can also frustrate real heroes and their families.

That's why Sterner plans to testify next week before a congressional subcommittee looking to establish such a database. He intends to point out that in the General Orders establishing the U.S. military awards system in 1782, Gen. George Washington called for those falsely claiming military awards to be "severely punished," and he said of legitimate honorees: "The name and regiment of the person so certified are to be enrolled in the Book of Merit, which will be kept at the orderly office."

This, says Sterner, was the first call for a database of American military-award recipients. "Presently, there exists no such Book of Merit for any award other than the 3,474 men and one woman who have received our highest decoration, the Medal of Honor," he told me.

Catholic Women Must Speak Out

y mother, a devout Catholic, had heart trouble before having six children in seven years during the 1950s. Exhaustion, combined with her weak heart, contributed to bouts of pneumonia and the removal of a lung.

Afterward, she tried to talk to my equally devout father about using birth control. It upset him.

"We'll go to hell," he said.

"I'm in hell now," she replied, and took a bus 75 miles to Rochester, N.Y., to obtain contraceptives. My parents had no more children. My mother made certain her four daughters had no qualms about using birth control. Still, I wonder whether having such a large family so quickly contributed to her death in her 50s.

Now I am in my 50s with two children of my own. Recently, American Catholic bishops ordered priests to read a letter at Mass denouncing as a violation of religious liberty a proposed federal birth control mandate. Although Maura Casey parish churches are exempt, religious institutions that accept federal funds (and employ many non-Catholics) would have had to make available free contraceptives through health coverage. The controversy forced compromise; the Obama administration passed the mandate onto insurance companies.

Yet the bishops remain unsatisfied. The use of birth control is against Catholic teaching, a sin and part of "a culture of death," as New York's Archbishop Timothy M. Dolan has said.

But the majority of Roman Catholic women — 98 percent according to one poll — have used birth control. Like me, many such women have received periodic fundraising letters from the church usually addressed to the woman of the house. They've enrolled their children in Catholic schools and watched their children participate in the sacraments.

Like me, many would consider themselves irresponsible mothers if they did not tell their children to ignore the church's teaching on birth control — particularly when using birth control makes abortions far less likely.

Of 100 Catholic women friends and acquaintances I could name, 99 use artificial birth control. But have we spoken out? No. Instead, we have spoken to each other.

The church has made us Galileo, who, legend says, whispered, "But still it moves!" when theologians forced him to recant his discovery that the Earth revolves around the sun.

Ladies, whispering is no longer good enough. We Catholic women need to raise our voices, acknowledge the vast disconnect between Catholic teaching and the reality of our lives, and we need to do it now.

We need to support the availability of birth control in letters to the editor. We need to write to the White House and Congress. And, we need to say, with respect, "I disagree, Father. I use birth control, and I've told my children to use it, too." Otherwise, the priests, bishops, Republican presidential candidates and scores of male commentators will get away with the pretense that they are speaking for us.

They aren't.

Speaking out is uncomfortable. We don't want the hierarchy to accuse us of being "cafeteria Catholics" or denounce us in other ways. We don't want to debate canon law. We don't feel like experts.

Yet we are: On being women.

Men who denounce birth control in the name of religious liberty will never feel labor pains. They will never understand what we know about being a woman, a wife or a mother.

We are the authorities on the importance of birth control to our health and freedom. We understand pregnancy as far more than a nine-month inconvenience.

Pump Price Pain

Gas prices at more than $4 a gallon in some parts of the country. Unless they don't drive, folks can't escape the pump price pain. Businesses large and small that are dependent upon petroleum feel great pain.

There's no doubt that tensions in the Middle East, particularly in Iran, are a primary reason for rising oil prices. But so are better growth expectations and expected increased demand from countries like India, China and Brazil.

Those expectations make Wall Street speculators salivate. And, why wouldn't they? If it appears they have a good bet that oil futures bought today may be worth more tomorrow and even more in a month, why wouldn't they take that bet? Well, they are — Wall Street oil speculation is on the rise ... again.

Bart Chilton

As President Obama said just recently, "When uncertainty increases, speculative trading on Wall Street can drive up prices even more."

One of the big Wall Street banks has said that each million barrels of net speculative length adds as much as 10 cents to the price of a barrel of crude oil. But, what does that mean to us when we our tanks? With a little math, you can determine that the "speculative premium" on oil these days is around $23 a barrel — and that translates into about an extra 56 cents for a gallon of gas.

I won't bore you with the arithmetic, but that means if you fill up a Honda Civic, the speculative premium costs $7.39 every time you fill-er-up. If you drive a Ford Explorer or F150, the total is $10.41 and $14.56, respectively.

If folks fill up once a week, the Civic owner is putting out $384.28 more per year, the SUV owner $541.32 more, and the pick-up owner $757.12 more. So yes, we're talking real money and a real drain on families, businesses and our economic recovery.

There's nothing wrong with speculation. We need speculators to have fully functional financial markets. It's excessive speculation that becomes a problem. When one or two speculators (often big Wall Street banks) take huge positions, there's bound to be a price impact. That's why speculative position limits are necessary and must be implemented soon.

Over the long term, a national energy policy that includes things like fuel efficiency standards, bio-energy and efforts to produce more domestic energy is also needed. For today though, limiting excessive Wall Street speculation won't take us back to the days of $1.00 gas, but it will help limit the pump price pain.

Colorado Voters to Decide on Recreational Pot Plan

BY KRISTEN WYATT Associated Press

DENVER • Colorado voters will decide this fall whether to legalize marijuana for recreational use when the state becomes the second in the nation to put such a proposal on ballots this year.

The Secretary of State's Office said Monday that supporters of the legalization initiative collected enough signatures to get their measure before voters, meaning Colorado will join Washington state in putting a recreational pot question on November

Voters will be asked whether adults older than 21 should be allowed to use marijuana even without a doctor's recommendation. The measure would allow adults to have up to 1 ounce of marijuana or six marijuana plants. The proposal also allows for commercial pot sales, though cities and counties would have permission to ban marijuana sales if they choose.

The plan would also direct state lawmakers to put an undetermined excise tax on pot, with the proceeds going to edu-

Compared to Washington state, Colorado officeholders have been slow to embrace recreational legalization.

Seattle Mayor Mike McGinn has backed recreational legalization in Washington state. But no current Colorado elected official was scheduled to join legalization activists at a news conference Tuesday.

"I don't know whether I'll support it yet," said Republican Sen. Tim Neville. "I'm not a huge fan of the results of our war on drugs, how it's going currently, but the devil is always in the details. I'll need to look at it?"

The measure would set up a direct federal showdown over drug laws, but Colorado and 16 other state already buck the federal government by allowing marijuana for medical use.

Leap Day Babies Relish Their Unique Birthdays

BY BETH J. HARPAZ Associated Press

NEW YORK • Peter Brouw-

er turns 56 on Wednesday. But if you count the times he's celebrated his true birth date, he's only turning 14.

Brouwer is a leap day baby. And like a lot of people born Feb. 29, he relishes the uniqueness of his birthday. He even thinks there's an advantage to marking your real birthday just once every four years.

"We don't have that psychological drama of being a vear older every year," said Brouwer, who lives in Vancouver, British Columbia, and is the co-founder of the Honor Society of Leap Year Day Babies.

In off years, Brouwer says, most leap day babies perhaps 80 percent celebrate their birthdays in February "because they're born in February. We call them strict Februarians."

But Jennifer Whisnant of Greensboro, N.C., whose daughter Ava was born in 2008, says they "celebrate on the closest Saturday for a party, or on March 1st, which is technically when she would have been born had it not been leap year."

Birth certificates and most government agencies like Social Security use Feb. 29 for those born on leap day, but leaplings occasionally encounter bureaucratic difficulties using their true birth dates. Some computerized dropdown menus don't include Feb. 29.

"My life insurance policy is for March 1 because their computer doesn't support leap day," Brouwer said.

On Facebook, Anne Mc-Carthy's friends get a note Feb. 28 that her birthday is the next day. Then on March 1, "there would be nothing. So, unless it was a leap year, friends would not see birthday reminders for the actual day," said Mc-Carthy, of Boston, turning 24 on Wednesday (in leap time, 6).

There are no reliable numbers on exactly how many babies are born on leap day, but statistically, the odds of being born then are the same as any other day.

"The law of averages means your chance of being born on Feb. 29 are one out of 1,461," Brouwer said, explaining that 1,461 equals 365, or the number of days in the year, times four, plus one for the extra day in the four-year cycle. "We figure in the U.S., there's about 200,000 of us, and in the world, about 5 million."

There's also no good way of definitively determining whether mothers with scheduled C-sections or induced births avoid or embrace leap day.

Fewer babies are born on weekends in the U.S. than on other days, according to research by the National Center for Health Statistics, and since leap day fell on a Sunday in 2004 and a Friday in 2008, birth numbers from those years don't tell the whole story.

What will happen this year is anybody's guess. At Inova Health System in Virginia, where more than 20,000 babies were born last year in four hospitals, "women are running from the date. That's what we've found," said spokesman Tony Raker.

But at Florida Hospital in Orlando, "people would rather have the baby on leap day. We have a slight increase in the number of scheduled C-sections on that day since it is a special day," said hospital spokeswoman Sara Channing.

One of those scheduled to give birth Wednesday at Florida Hospital is Tammy Gerencser, who didn't hesitate when her doctor proposed scheduling her Csection Feb. 29.

"I got this sheet of paper that said, 'You're going in Feb. 29," Gerencser said. She said while a few people told her, "Oh no, you need to change that date, other people are so excited."

This will be her and her husband's second child. "I was told I couldn't have any more children, so he's special anyway," she said.

Andrea McGowan, a labor and delivery nurse at Montefiore Medical Center in the Bronx, predicts that leap day "will be like any other Wednesday" in the maternity ward. But she can give firsthand advice to anyone who becomes a mom that day: Her own daughter was born Feb. 29, 1996. "Having that birthday adds a little flair," she said. "It's a conversation piece."

The towns of Anthony, N.M., and Anthony, Texas, both on the line between the states, host a Worldwide Leap Year Festival every four years the week of Feb. 29, with a carnival, car show and other events. Past guests range from a 16year-old leapling (4) who came from California, to a local man who's the oldest at 92 (23), according to Hector Giron, one of the organ-

Some leaplings come up with their own rituals to mark non-leap years.

Rachel Laber, who lives in New York City and will be on Wednesday (6), prefers to celebrate her birthday Feb. 28 in off years. But to placate those who argue for March 1, "I have taken on a two-day celebration the last 10 years or so?"

Jan Harrell of Ashland, Ore., handles off years by staying up until midnight with friends who shout "Happy birthday!" in "that magical nanosecond" between Feb. 28 and March 1.

"My birthday feels like a cosmic joke," said Harrell, who turns 64 (16) this week. "But not a bad one, just a very, very funny one."

Texas Boy, 12, Accused of Brandishing Loaded Gun

WARREN, Texas (AP) • Sheriff's deputies have taken a 12-year-old boy into custody after witnesses reported he pointed a loaded gun at a classmate standing in the lunch line at a rural junior high school in East Texas.

Tyler County Sheriff David Hennigan says the seventhgrader apparently objected to comments the student made about a female classmate. Hennigan says the .25-caliber pistol was loaded, but there was no bullet chambered.

Two coaches escorted the boy to the school office and held him for deputies. Hennigan says he has been placed in the juvenile detention center in adjacent Hardin County and will be charged with aggravated assault.

The incident happened in Warren, a community of about 750 residents in the Piney Woods.

Military Trial in Peace Corps Rape Case Begins

BY BROCK VERGAKIS Associated Press

NORFOLK, Va. • A former Peace Corps worker who taught at a girl's school in rural Uganda told a military jury in Virginia on Monday that a special warfare sailor who does construction work for Navy SEALs raped her multiple times in his hotel room in the East African country's capital.

The trial comes months after Congress responded to complaints that the Peace Corps hasn't done enough to protect its volunteers from sexual assaults with legislation requiring the agency to better train participants in how to avoid such attacks.

27-year-old woman, who was born in Anchorage, Alaska, and now lives in Washington, testified in a courtroom at Naval Station Norfolk that her sexual encounter with Petty Officer 2nd Class Camaren Walker in November 2010 started out as consensual.

But after his condom came off twice, she said she wanted him to stop.

She said she tried to push Walker off her, but that he grabbed her throat and held her against the bed. She said he later raped her in the shower when he put her in a choke hold and that she feared she might drown. She said he didn't have to force himself on her the next two times - including once when his roommate was in the next bed because she was afraid for her life.

Walker's military attorney said the case was simply about a woman who regretted her decision to have sex because she was embarrassed by her behavior. As part of her job, the woman, who graduated from Indiana University, taught girls to avoid peer pressure and to use condoms.

"This is not a case about rape. This is a case about regret," said Lt. Lauren Mayo.

The accuser said that she and Walker had met an Irish pub in Kampala while she was out with three other Peace Corps volunteers who were in town for a conference. She said she voluntarily went back to his hotel room with him and that she had no idea he was in the Navy at the time. She said he didn't learn more about him until after she had been assaulted and she had mentioned that she wasn't on birth control. That's when he told her his full name so she could find him on Facebook because he wanted to keep the child if she was pregnant, according to her courtroom testimony.

Mayo said she didn't mention to any of her friends the next day that she had been assaulted. One of her friends said she thought it was "kinky" that the sex was rough and that he had choked her.

"That was my night of hell," the woman later recalled thinking during the exchange.

The Associated Press does not generally identify alleged victims of sexual assault.

It wasn't until days later when she saw a medical worker about emergency contraception that the word rape came up, and only when the medical worker mentioned it, according to courtroom testimony.

Mayo also said that the woman didn't do anything to stop Walker, such as scream, slap him or try to leave the hotel room.

"You didn't do anything to stop him, did you?" Mayo said to the woman, who simply responded "No."

Medical Tattoos Offer Important Health Information

BY MARIA SUDEKUM Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. • Tattoos have long served as fashion statements, but a small number of Americans are now relying on them for a more practical, potentially lifesaving purpose: to warn first responders about important medical conditions.

Some medical tattoos are being used to take the place of bracelets that commonly list a person's allergies, chronic diseases or even end-of-life wishes.

"Bracelets are nice, but something as strong as a tattoo ... that is a strong statement," said Dr. Ed Friedlander, a Kansas City pathologist who has "No CPR" tattooed in the center of his chest, where a paramedic would see it.

Friedlander, 60, got the tattoo to emphasize his decision to forgo CPR if his heart

Medical tattoos don't appear to carry much legal weight. It's unclear whether an ambulance crew racing to treat a gravely ill patient could honor a request such as Friedlander's based on the tattoo alone.

But the markings do offer a simple and permanent way to give rescuers important health details.

Melissa Boyer, Nashville, Mich., wore bracelets for years to identify her as a diabetic, but she kept losing or breaking them. The 31-year-old decided months ago to get a 3½-inch tattoo on her left forearm that includes the medical symbol and identifies her as a Type 1 diabetic. It also declares her allergies to penicillin and aspirin.

"It's been 29 years that I've had (diabetes), and I went through I-don't-knowhow-many bracelets," she said. "I went and got the tattoo, and it made life easier." The American Medical Association does not specifically address medical tattoos in its guidelines. But Dr. Saleh Aldasouqi, an endocrinologist at Michigan State University, hopes that might change.

Aldasouqi, who has written about the tattoos, has seen them among his diabetic patients and feels they are becoming so popular that the medical profession needs to help guide their development.

Kansas City, Mo. pathologist Dr. Ed Friedlander displays his tattoo with a medical directive to not use CPR in September 2011. Friedlander is among a growing number of people who are getting tattoos that tell doctors and first responders about their medical concerns, from chronic conditions like diabetes and asthma to allergies and instructions in a tattoo, unless they could be sure the patient also had signed legally binding papers.

Laws on do-not-resuscitate orders can vary widely from state to state. Missouri law does not address medical tattoos at all.

"What we can tell you is what the law says. What we can't tell you is what assumptions people are going to make," said Gena Terlizzi, spokeswoman for the state Department of Health and Senior Services.

However, emergency professionals are always on the lookout for information about a patient's condition and treatment preferences, and that includes looking for medical tags, bracelets and possibly tattoos, said Dr. David Tan, medical director of Washington University Emergency Medical Services in St. Louis.

"It's something I have not seen a whole lot of, but it's out there," Tan said. "I think tattoos just aren't that conventional. But I don't think it makes it any less useful."

I was accepted to a college in San Francisco, but I realized I was too far away from home and wanted to be close to my family. I looked into CSI and realized it fit everything I wanted.

Everyone at CSI was so friendly. My professors were amazing. No matter how many students were in a class, each professor took the time to help everyone on a oneto-one basis.

If I could start over, I would pick CSI without even looking at other schools. It has definitely been one of the best experiences of my life.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

Building a new arena for the Sacramento Kings has never been closer to reality.

The city, the Sacramento Kings and the NBA announced a tentative deal Monday to finance a new arena that would keep the team in California's capital for the long haul. The City Council will vote on the plan March 6.

Sacramento Mayor Kevin Johnson, NBA Commissioner David Stern and the Maloof family, which owns the Kings, emerged from three days of talks in Orlando, Fla., where they had been negotiating during All-Star weekend - to announce that the framework of a deal had been reached, giving fans some 3,000 miles away in the Central Valley reason to cheer for a comeback story that fittingly came straight out of Fantasyland.

"I think when we left Sacramento and came to Orlando, you guys asked me how close were we. I thought it was a free throw - and you need to make two free throws," Johnson told reporters at a news conference at the Waldorf Astoria at Walt Disney World. "I think the city made the first free throw, and the Maloof family made the second free throw.

"It's game over." Well, almost.

Under the proposed terms of the deal, the city will contribute $200-$250 million to the estimated $387 million arena, mostly by leasing out parking garages around the facility, a person with knowledge of the negotiations said. The person, speaking on condition of anonymity because the full financing plan will not be made public until at least Thursday, said Sacramento also will create revenue through a ticket surcharge.

Baseball

The Boston Red Sox are saying goodbye to their captain.

Catcher Jason Varitek has decided to retire after 15 seasons with the Red Sox, a person familiar with the decision told The Associated Press on Monday night. The person requested anonymity because Varitek had not made an announcement.

Varitek is expected to make it official Thursday at Boston's spring training camp in Fort Myers, Fla.

Athletics third baseman Scott Sizemore will miss the entire 2012 season after tearing a ligament in his left knee last weekend during Oakland's first full-squad workout.

Sizemore was injured Saturday at Oakland's spring training camp in Phoenix. He had an MRI exam and the A's announced Monday that he had torn his anterior cruciate ligament.

"Broken heart right here. Safe to say I've cried more over baseball than anything in my life," tweeted Sizemore's wife, Brooke.

The 27-year-old Sizemore was acquired by Oakland last May in a trade with Detroit. He hit .249 with 11 home runs and 52 RBIs in 93 games with the A's.

Hockey

The Nashville Predators and Vancouver Canucks added some reinforcements for a playoff run, while Rick Nash's wish for a deal didn't come to fruition Monday as the NHL trade deadline passed without any blockbuster moves.

Having won a playoff series for the first time in franchise history a year ago, the Predators are looking to take the next step — and beyond − by beefing up the offense with left wing Andrei Kostitsyn and two-way forward Paul Gaustad. Nashville also acquired defenseman Hal Gill earlier this month and sits in fifth place in the Western Conference.

The Canucks, sitting atop the NHL standings with 19 games left in the regular season, fine-tuned their roster with three deals that added four players: checking-line center Samuel Pahlsson, rookie forward Zack Kassian, defenseman Marc-Andre Gragnani and forward Andrew Gordon. But the player expected to be the big catch of the day went nowhere. Nash, captain of the league-worst Columbus Blue Jackets, requested a trade last month, according to general manager Scott Howson. Howson said there were "significant discussions," but no deal was struck.

Jurisprudence

Jerry Sandusky's lawyer on Monday asked the judge in his child sex-abuse case to delay the start of his criminal trial until mid-July, saying he needed more time to prepare.

Defense lawyer Joe Amendola said the additional two months would help him contact and interview witnesses, subpoena records and hire experts. Earlier this month, Judge John Cleland tentatively scheduled jury selection in the former Penn State assistant football coach's trial to begin May 14.

Sandusky, 68, faces 52 criminal charges he sexually abused 10 boys over a 15year period, allegations he denies.

Skiing

Bode Miller is setting aside his skis for the rest of the World Cup season because of a balky left knee.

The five-time Olympic medalist had a minor arthroscopic procedure performed on the knee earlier this month with the hope of quickly returning to the circuit. But when Miller recently arrived back in Europe, he experienced more discomfort in the knee and opted for another seasonending surgery.

would get the No. 2 seed ahead of North Idaho.

If Salt Lake beats Snow and North Idaho loses one of its games, the Bruins would clinch the No. 2 seed and play Snow again in the 2-3 matchup. North Idaho would be fourth and play Colorado Northwestern. Because USU-Eastern is banned from postseason play due to NJCAA sanctions, both the second and third seeds receive a firstround bye and will play each other on the second day of the Region 18 Tournament.

On the women's side, CSI

(15-13, 7-6) can't catch Snow (16-12, 9-5) to grab the No. 2 seed because Snow owns the tiebreaker, but a win over either USU-Eastern or Colorado Northwestern gives the Golden Eagles the three seed.

CSI owns the tiebreaker over Salt Lake (16-11, 7-7) and has split with Friday's opponent, USU-Eastern (14-14, 6-7), which has to beat both CSI and North Idaho and have Salt Lake lose to Snow to jump to the third seed. If it clinches the third seed, CSI would open the Region 18 Tournament against No. 6 Colorado Northwestern and Salt Lake-USU-Eastern would play in the 4-5 matchup.

playing basketball how I play, and that's back to having fun at a high level," James said. "The best thing about this season so far, we're playing some good basketball. Our team feels that we are one right now, especially with last year under our belt, so we're just going to try to get better every day."

Miami and Oklahoma City rolled into the break with a share of the NBA's best record at 27-7. The Heat have won eight in a row in overwhelming fashion; the Thunder have won five straight and are 15-1 at home.

The NBA's best headed out of Orlando on Monday, and soon Dwight Howard will learn if he's joining them. The Magic have until the March 15 trade deadline to decide whether they will honor his trade request or keep him until the end of the season and risk him leaving as a free agent in July.

The Magic have the East's fourth-best record and look good enough at times to be viewed as a contender. Still, they and everyone else in the East seem clearly behind Miami and Chicago, whether they keep their franchise center or not.

Howard said the Magic haven't hit their peak yet and have an opportunity to compete for the title.

"That says a lot about our team and about the growth of the team despite everything that's been going around," he said. "We've been able to stay focused on what we need to do, and we're only going to get better."

Still, the East appears to be shaping up as a twoteam race between the Heat and Bulls, who are a half-game back despite battling injuries to All-Stars Derrick Rose and Luol Deng and especially to Richard Hamilton. Hamilton, signed to upgrade the shooting guard position, was limited to only 11 games because of a groin injury. Indiana and Philadelphia have been surprisingly strong, New York has recovered from a poor start behind Jeremy Lin and Boston hopes to bounce back from a disappointing first half, but a rematch of last year's Eastern Conference finals appears likely. The playoff picture is less clear in the West. San Antonio surged into the break despite playing for much of the first half without Manu Ginobili; the Los Angeles Clippers have become quick contenders since acquiring Chris Paul; and Dallas may still be good enough for a long playoff run. Then there's the Lakers, whose rocky road will have taken another bad turn if the broken nose Kobe Bryant sustained after a hard foul by Wade in the All-Star game forces him to miss time.

He recently expressed his frustration with team management for the way it has gone about deciding if it will or won't trade Pau Gasol. He'll be even grumpier if he has to watch the Clippers end their reign as Pacific Division champions.

Boston's Rajon Rondo has also been linked to trade rumors, potentially making another All-Star available. Howard's status also affects potential destinations such as the Nets and Mavericks, so business will get just as much attention as basketball next month.

"No question," the Nets' Deron Williams said. "The deadline's on the 15th and every year they move the deadline up." With the lockout delaying the season and reducing it to 66 games, the All-Star break actually comes right at the midpoint of the season. Many teams were happy to have the break and eager for practice time after so little was available because of the frequency of games.

UConn Says Calhoun's Surgery a Success around the nerve. medical director of the Spine

ASSOCIATED PRESS

STORRS, Conn. • University of Connecticut men's basketball coach Jim Calhoun has undergone what the school says was successful surgery to address the spinal condition that has forced him to miss the Huskies' past seven games.

The school says the twohour surgery was performed Monday morning at Beth Israel Medical Center in New York and involved removing a disc fragment that had been pressing on a spinal nerve. The surgeons then decompressed the area

Calhoun issued a statement thanking his doctors and those who reached out to him to offer support.

The school says Calhoun's coaching status will be monitored on a day-to-day basis, and there is no timetable set for his return.

UConn, which has gone 3-4 during Calhoun's medical leave for spinal stenosis, plays at Providence on Tuesday.

Calhoun told The Associated Press Saturday that he hopes to be back in time to coach the March 3 season finale against Pittsburgh. Dr. John Knightly, who is the Center at Overlook Medical Center in Summit, N.J., but is not treating Calhoun, said that is certainly a possibility. "I have patients driving after a couple of days, and if you can drive, you can coach, assuming he's not having other problems that would require a much more aggressive surgery," he said. "This is so he can walk more independently without pain."

Under associate head coach George Blaney, the Huskies lost to Syracuse on Saturday, 71-69.

"I hope more than anything that he takes care of the pain," Blaney said. "The pain has been really, really tough for him — for anybody but for him because he doesn't acknowledge pain. So, I can imagine what the pain really is for it to keep him out, and I'm hoping the operation or procedure is successful and that he'll be back as soon as possible." Calhoun turns 70 in May and is a three-time cancer survivor. There has been talk after the past several seasons of his possible retirement, but center Alex Oriakhi said he doesn't believe this latest health setback will mean the end of the coach's career.

Lenis Mary (Drewes) Sinsel

Jan. 28, 1934-Feb. 26, 2012

BURLEY • Lenis Mary (Drewes) Sinsel, 78, of Burley, went to be with our Lord on Sunday, Feb. 26, 2012, joining her husband, Clark, who passed six days ear-

Lenis was born Jan. 28, 1934, the fifth of five children to Frances and Herman Drewes in Idaho Falls, Idaho. From the beginning, she was gentleness and radiance, signature traits that stayed with her for the rest of her life. To know Lenis was to know your best friend. Responsibility came early when Lenis' father died shortly after her ninth birthday; she was tasked with meal preparation for a family of six. Lenis became an excellent cook. Also musically gifted, Lenis played the piano so well that requests for her talents came from both church and communi-

Church activities were a dominant part of Lenis' life; music, choir, teaching Sunday school. She met the love of her life and husband of 56 years, Clark Eugene, while actively involved in St. John's Lutheran Church; she, the church organist, Clark, the president of the Walther League youth group. They were married Oct. 22, 1955. Cynthia Marie was born five years later and Tara Lee two years after. While Clark served our country in the military, Lenis served her community as a telephone operator. Mastering the technology of the 1950s post-war era telephone switchboards once patching through an overseas call between highranking dignitaries. No easy

Lenis was the perfect example of what it is to be the loyal and loving energy that makes for a successful family. Her ever supportive nature and love allowed our Dad to flourish in his business and to be his best self. Lenis enjoyed her role as business helpmate in Clark's Refrigeration and Appliance Service, being a part of the community and providing needed services. Lenis was most proud of the longevity of her marriage, her tremendous love of family, making a mean pot of ham and bean soup just the perfect way Dad liked, being asked to fill in as church organist at Zion Lutheran if need arose, and helping out at Weight Watchers. Never one to need the spotlight, Lenis chose to selflessly stand behind others, encouraging their lights to shine and illuminating them with her love if their light ever dimmed. A gift few possess and an inspiration to all who loved her.

Lenis is survived by daughters Cynthia and Tara; Tara's husband, James; grandsons, Tyson and Tyler; Tyler's wife, Karen; older sisters, Edna Lucille and Hazel Ruby; and older brother, Richard Herman. She is preceded in death by husband, Clark Eugene; mother, Frances Patience; father, Herman Henry William; infant brother, Martin Alfred; and stepfather, Albert Alfred Miller.

Lenis' family would like to take this opportunity to thank Dr. Glen Page, Janet and the entire staff for their many years of patient-centered care, to the exceptional Horizon Home Health and Hospice for their sensitivity and humanity helping both Lenis and her husband pass with dignity, the compassionate staff in the memory care wing of Highland Estates, and to the community that she loved for being a great place to live and to raise her family. A special thanks to the employers and business colleagues of Lenis' children and grandchildren for allowing us the time required to give care and focus to our dearest LuLu/Grand-

The family will hold a private graveside ceremony at Pleasant View Cemetery for both Lenis and Clark. They were born five days apart and died six days apart; now Clark can once again be with his "Jellybean."

What our Lord binds no one can tear. The legacy that Lenis leaves will live in us and ripple to others as long as we aspire to her tenets of always doing what is right and honorable, spicing your cooking with love, taking in a stray, being the strength behind the throne and only seeing the beauty in life. We are blessed to have known and loved this wonderful wife, mother/grandmother, sister and friend.

Transformative Artist Ken Price Dies in N.M. at 77

BY SUSAN MONTOYA BRYAN

Associated Press

TAOS, N.M. • Ken Price, an internationally known artist whose glazed and painted clay blurred the lines between ceramics and sculpture, is being remembered for his humor, his love of natural shapes and for the long hours he spent in the studio perfecting what became a style all his own.

Family and friends gathered at his studio in Taos to share their stories Sunday following his death Friday morning at his home in Taos. By Monday, the makeshift memorial of flowers and notes at The Harwood Museum of Art, where one of his installations is on exhibit, continued to grow.

A hand-written note tucked under one of the bouquets summed it up: "A life well lived..."

Price's death at age 77 was first reported by The Los An-(http:/ geles Times/lat.ms/xDQfow). His family, friends and fellow artist Larry Bell confirmed Price's death with The Associated Press on Monday.

Price had struggled with tongue and throat cancer for several years, but friends said he continued working despite being ill.

Inside his studio, there were works in progress and current notes and drawings lying on his desk. His son Jackson said work still continues on fabricating some of the colors and forms proofed by Price over the last five years into largescale outdoor sculptures.

"He was just one of those artists who just worked. That's what he did, that's what he lived and breathed," said Jina Brenneman, a ceramist herself and the curator at The Harwood. It was Price who inspired her to come to His son agreed, calling him the master of clay.

"You would be hard pressed to find anybody who manipulates clay better than him anywhere in the world," Jackson Price said. "For aspiring artists, he's inspiring based on how prolific he is. He's worked every day for 50 years. That's what he did. He was into family and work?"

The debate among art critics and historians about whether Price's colorful, organic pieces were more sculpture than ceramic art was not something that concerned him as he worked in his studios in Taos and Venice, Calif.

One of the reasons he was able to elevate ceramics to such a high level is because the medium eventually became an irrelevant part of his creative process, Brenneman said.

Bits of his personality, particularly his humor, also carried through to his work, said friend and fellow artist Larry Bell.

"The thing that was amazing about Kenny is how inventive he was with form and surface and color. He just invented these totally goofy shapes and then caressed them until they became just magnificent little objects," Bell said.

"He just kept working on extending that kind of direction — that very personal, intimate relationship with his material - until it took on an incredible life of its own," Bell said.

Price didn't see himself as a ceramist, but rather a sculptor, Bell said.

Before of his death, Price completed preparations for a 50-year retrospective scheduled to open at the Los Angeles County Museum of Art this fall.

In a post on its website, the museum said its entire community was saddened to learn of his death. It described his work as remarkable and innovative and said his pieces helped redefine the practice of contemporary sculpture.

From the spherical 1963 piece dubbed "L. Red" to "Zizi," which he completed in 2011, the classic elements of color and fluidity are always present in Price's work.

The range of color is what evolved over his career along with the endless shapes he had stored in his mind, his son said.

Born in Los Angeles in 1935, Price was known for his bright colors. Early on he used traditional means, such as glazing. He moved on to acrylic paint, which was enough to cause a stir among ceramic purists.

Nepalese Man, 72, Declared Shortest Person Ever

BY BINAJ GURUBACHARYA

KATMANDU, Nepal • A 72-year-old Nepalese man who is about the size of a toddler on Sunday became the world's shortest person ever recorded.

A doctor and Guinness World Records official measured Chandra Bahadur Dangi to confirm his height of 21.5 inches.

Guinness official Craig Glenday presented Dangi with two certificates for being the world's shortest living man and the world's shortest person recorded in Guinness' 57-year his-

"I am very happy. Now I want to travel across Nepal and to foreign countries," Dangi told reporters afterward.

He said he has no desire to get married or have a family of his own, but would like to meet the prime minister of Nepal

Dangi lives in a remote mountain village, Rhimkholi, about 250 miles west of Katmandu, with his youngest brother and his family. His five brothers are all average

Before being measured in the capital, Katmandu, on Saturday, he had never seen a doctor and his relatives say he has never been seriously ill or had any injuries. The doctors who saw him at the clinic also found no immediate health problems. His family is not sure when he stopped growing.

Because of his height, he has never worked outside the house, doing only household chores.

He has a normal sized head and regularly shaves, but his body is small. He is able to walk and climb small stairs. He eats mainly rice and vegetables, and occasionally meat, but in small portions.

Dangi takes the shortest man record from Junrey Balawing of the Philippines, who is 23.5 inches tall. He also beat the record of Gul Mohammed of India as the shortest adult human to have their height verified by Guinness. Mohammed, who died in 1997, was 22.5 inches tall.

Since Dangi's village is so remote, it was only recently that Dangi gained notice. A forest contractor cutting timber in the village met him and told local Another Nepalese man, Khagendra Thapa Magar, was declared the world's shortest man at 26.4 inches before Balawing took over the title in June on his 18th birthday.

In December, Guinness recognized an Indian teenager as the world's shortest woman. Jyoti Amge is 24.7 inches tall and wants to attend university and become a Bollywood star.

Aside from a Guinness certificate, the titles don't come with any cash award.

Activist Group: 144 Dead Across Syria

BY BEN HUBBARD Associated Press

BEIRUT • A Syrian activist group reported Monday that 144 people have been killed across the country, scores of them in the embattled opposition stronghold of Homs by security forces as they tried to flee. A team from the Syrian arm of the Red Cross delivered aid to one of the city's most dangerous neighborhoods after days of trying to reach the area.

The activist group did not say whether all 144 died on Monday or were killed over the past few days. Many of the casualties were believed to be from the rebel-controlled Baba Amr neighborhood of Homs, which the Syrian Arab Red Crescent entered late Monday. Also in the neighborhood are two wounded foreign journalists along with the bodies of two of their colleagues who were killed last week. European and American diplomats and aid workers have been trying desperately to find a way to evacuate them, but Red Cross spokeswoman Carla Haddad said late Monday that the Red Crescent had not managed to get them out. She did not know whether the group had stopped trying for the evening. Homs has emerged as the center of the 11-month-old uprising seeking to oust authoritarian President Bashar Assad and has borne the brunt of his regime's bloody crackdown on dissent. Parts of the city have been surrounded for weeks, making it impossible for rescue workers to reach the wounded and for families to bring their dead and injured to the hospital.

Reports by numerous activists that more than 60 bodies were brought to the hospital, all of whom appeared to have died in one incident, reflect the spreading carnage.

The high death toll reported by the Local Coordination Committees activist group is sure to add to the growing international pressure on Assad to give up power. But so far, his regime has shown no signs that it is ready to leave peacefully. Syrian officials nounced the results of a referendum on a new constitution held Sunday that Syrian authorities lauded as a step toward political reform. The referendum allows at least in theory for opening the

A Free Syrian Army fighter walks to meet his comrades as the Syrian Army advances towards the town of Sarmin, north Syria, Monday. European Union foreign ministers said Monday they were increasingly appalled by the Syrian government's ruthless campaign of repression against civilians, and imposed new sanctions in hopes of pressuring the regime to change course.

country's political system. It approves a new constitution, which allows for a multiparty system in Syria, which has been ruled by the Baath party since it took power in a coup in 1963. Assad's father, Hafez, took power in another coup in

It also imposes a limit of two seven-year terms on the president, meaning Assad could remain legally in power through 2028. The U.S. and its allies dismissed the vote as a "farce" meant to justify the regime's bloody crackdown on dissent. Syria's main opposition groups boycotted the vote, and violence elsewhere prevented polling. Syrian state TV said 89 percent of eligible voters approved the new document, while nine percent rejected it. It put turnout at 57 percent of Syria's 14.9 million eligible voters.

Representatives of more than 60 countries met in Tunisia last week to forge a unified strategy to push Assad from power and began planning a civilian peacekeeping mission to deploy after the regime falls. On Monday, the European Union imposed new sanctions.

Syria has been able to count on allies China and Russia to protect it from condemnation by the U.N. Security Council. Both staunchly opposed any interference in

Syria's affairs. Russian Prime Minister

Vladimir Putin warned Monday against military intervention in Syria and blasted the West, saying it had backed the Arab Spring to advance its interests in the region.

In Damascus, a Syrian official accused the West of trying to destabilize the country for its own gain and warned that militarizing the opposition is a big mistake that will backfire.

Foreign Ministry spokesman Jihad Makdissi told The Associated Press in a rare interview that dialogue among all parties is the only way to end the conflict.

"The West took advantage of the awakening of the Syrian street. Instead of helping Syria to overcome this painful crisis, they are using this to hit the stability of Syria for other geopolitical reasons," he said.

Activists groups said Monday that the death toll for 11 months of unrest has now surpassed 8,000 people.

The diplomatic pressure on Syria comes as the humanitarian and security situation on the ground is collapsing. The Local Coordination Committees said 64 of those reported dead on Monday were fleeing shelling in the Baba Amr neighborhood of Homs when security forces stopped them at a checkpoint in the city's Abil area and killed them.

Another activist in Baba Amr, reached via Skype, said a security officer who had seen a report on the incident leaked its contents to activists, with whom he sympathizes. The activist, Abu Mohammed Ibrahim, said the group left the neighborhood Sunday evening and were stopped at a checkpoint, where security forces loaded them onto four busses. A while later, the buses stopped and the soldiers started killing passengers. Locals found the bodies dumped in two places outside of town on Monday, the activist said.

A second activist group, the Britain-based Syrian Observatory for Human Rights, said 68 bodies were brought to the hospital in Homs and that they were found between the villages of Ram al-Anz and al-Ajriyeh.

But the group's head, Rami Abdul-Rahman, said no one had identified the dead or knew where they were from.

"We know they are from Homs, but we don't know anything for sure about who they are or how they died," he said.

None of the death tolls could be independently

Some of the worst fighting in Syria's nearly one-yearlong conflict has come in Homs, where residents have been bombarded by Syrian government forces for nearly four weeks.

Two western journalists were killed in government shelling in Homs last week, and two other journalists injured.

SKILLED

DEAR ABBY: My boyfriend has proposed. I love him very much, but I'm worried about my kids. I look at his children - his son is 23 and barely made it out of high school. He got a girl pregnant at 17, has been in jail a few times and is an alcoholic. His 15-year-old daughter is immature for her age and constantly getting into trouble at school. Their mother is an alcoholic and a drug user. Are my concerns for my children valid?

- WORRIED IN WEST VIRGINIA

DEAR ABBY Jeanne Phillips

DEAR WORRIED: Yes, they are, because your children will be exposed to all of the negative influences that his children will bring with them into your blended family. Be smart and hold off marrying your boyfriend until your children are old enough not to be influenced by his children. Your first concern must be for your children's well-being.

DEAR ABBY: I read your answer to "Thrilled in San Jose" (Dec. 28), the couple who want to celebrate paying off their mortgage, on the same day I read an article about how middle-class Americans have sabotaged themselves by abandoning thrifty habits like saving and ... paying off their mortgages!

I disagree with your answer that the couple should celebrate privately. A generation of Americans now has no idea that paying off a mortgage is even possible. So I say to that couple: Celebrate tastefully and publicly in the same thrifty way that enabled you to pay off that mortgage. And while you're at it, be prepared to share the tips and habits that enabled you to achieve this wonderful success. Who knows? Your party might educate and inspire.

- I'D LIKE AN INVITA -TION

DEAR I'D LIKE: I was surprised at the number of readers who were fired up over my answer to "Thrilled" about burning the mortgage. Most said that this is a milestone that should be celebrated. My readers comment:

DEAR ABBY: I think it's great to throw a mortgageburning party to celebrate paying off a home mortgage. Today we go overboard not to offend. True friends would be happy when something good happens and not jealous. How self-centered is that attitude? People need to start feeling happy for the success of others.

- LORI IN

GIG HARBOR, WASH. DEAR ABBY: I believe "Thrilled" and her husband should have their mortgageburning party. Achievements like this should be celebrated. Too often in our country people have piled on debt they couldn't afford and made decisions purely to keep up with "the Joneses." By sharing their success story, including any struggles they may have overcome, they can be an inspiration for the loved ones in their lives to follow.

DEBBIE IN

THE SOUTHWEST DEAR ABBY: Please advise "Thrilled" not to AC-TUALLY burn the mortgage. In California the lender has to provide a release document in the form of a Deed of Reconveyance or Satisfaction of Mortgage that must be recorded with the county recorder's office in order to remove the lien of the loan from the chain of title for the house. If the lender doesn't record it, then the borrower must do so — copies don't count; originals do. If "Thrilled" decided to sell the house and the release has not been recorded, or if she doesn't have the original, it could delay the sale by months.

IF FEBRUARY 28 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY: Those who help themselves receive the most help. Your fervent prayers for a romantic partner, a commitment or a new job will probably be answered in May, June or July - but in the meantime, do everything you can to propel yourself towards success without cosmic assistance. You have a head for business and a flair for negotiation that will help you climb the ladder of success in May. At the same time, your ability to charm others rises to the occasion and everyone will think highly of you between May and July, so that is the best time to put the pedal to the metal and make lasting progress. If you are in the entertainment business, you could win awards.

HOROSCOPE Jeraldine Saunders

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Questions do not always have answers. You and a special someone could be out of sync because of unfounded suspicions. Right now, your eyes are bigger than your wallet, so don't make major purchases.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Your efforts to win someone's confidence or support could fall flat. Don't make a commitment or hold intense personal discussions. Intense probing into private or confidential areas could stir up trouble.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Steer clear of unnecessary complications. Cupid might be a fickle marksman today and hit the heart of a friend, changing a relationship forever. This isn't the time to invest your heart, time or finances.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Passions can place you in a pickle. Your efforts to make someone pay attention to you can cause a rift or emphasize the difference between desire and love. Possessiveness can become a thorny issue

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Maintain the upper hand. Inquisitive people may want to access privileged or private information, but you don't need to provide access. Hold off on signing agreements that involve joint financial ventures.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): You may be slowed by communication difficulties. It may be necessary to be especially diplomatic so that you don't arouse someone's suspicion. Beat around the bush to be made aware of concerns.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You must remember this: a kiss is just a kiss. Don't read too much into someone's flirtatious activities. Your money is at risk if you make investments today. Jealous reactions can disrupt business or pleasure.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): It isn't practical to preach to the choir. You may meet people who can handle business matters astutely, or those who possess admirable street smarts. People close to you may not share all their

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You can get lazy when looking for luck. If things don't go your way, especially in regard to relationships and finance, it might mean that your luck needs a little push from common CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Your burning desire to succeed might draw others closer, as they want to warm their hands. Be sincere and aboveboard when dealing with friends, partners, and loved ones. Keep a lid on expenses.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): It is fine to look, but not to touch. Someone who is striking a spark of interest in your heart might have hidden motives. You might be the object of attention in order to make someone else iealous.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Sealed lips can't slip. Be careful not to divulge confidential information, no matter how tempting it is to show that you are "in the know." Concentrate on creative endeavors or spend time with a hobby.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE®

"A throw of the dice will never abolish chance."

- Stephane Mallarme

Declarer's approach to his contract can vary widely, depending on whether he is playing matchpoints or teams. At matchpoints, declarer may risk his contract to hunt for overtricks, while at teams or at rubber, the main objective is to make the contract.

To focus on the different techniques, consider four spades here on repeated club leads. South ruffs, and at matchpoints 99 percent of players would cash the two top spades, then start on the hearts. They would generally bring home 10 or 11 tricks, unaware that they had jeopardized their contract.

However, the danger here is that trumps break 4-1, with a probability of one in four. If so, then when declarer drives out the trump queen, a club return exhausts declarer of trump unless the heart queen falls doubleton.

But even protecting vourself against the bad trump break is not enough. South must also avoid a heart ruff when the player with four trumps has a small doubleton heart. The winning line is most unusual: Declarer must attack the major suits by leading the spade jack at trick three! West will win and force declarer to ruff another club. Now declarer must leave trumps alone (dummy's trump can take care of the next club) and make his second imaginative play — he leads the heart jack, to leave the defenders without recourse. By contrast, if he plays hearts from the top, East can win the heart queen and give his partner a ruff.

ANSWER: Your absence of a legitimate diamond stopper should not prevent you from bidding one no-trump, which is the value call for your hand, suggesting 8-11 HCP. If your partner produces a second suit. you may be in business; until then, stay low.
