Teachers vs. Tax Cuts Debate Looms over Capitol

BY JOHN MILLER
Associated Press

BOISE • Idaho's dueling legislative chambers remain at odds over competing priorities that include tax cuts, teacher salaries and rainy-day savings, with key bills bottled up in committees while behind-the-scenes talks linger on.

The House wants to cut state income taxes by $35 million. The Senate favors restoring teachers' salaries.

Add to this mix Gov. C.L. "Butch" Otter's to-do list from his Jan. 9 State of the State address, which included adding $60 million to Idaho's recession-drained rainy day accounts.

What's more, there are competing revenue forecasts: Otter's economists say there'll be more money in 2013 than forecast; some lawmakers say his projections rely on short-term reserves to justify tax cuts now, putting future budgets in jeopardy.

"All of those are priorities for both bodies," said Senate President Pro Tem Brent Hill, R-Rexburg. "The differences are (in) what weight do we put on those priorities? That's what we need to work out."

Add to this a fresh ethics investigation into Sen. Monty Pearce's alleged conflict of interest over oil and natural gas bills, and odds are the 2012 session won't conclude until at least March 30, not Friday, as some had hoped.

And this doesn't even take into account still-uncertain negotiations over whether Idaho will begin setting up an insurance exchange, as insurers such as Blue Cross of Idaho are frantically lobbying for in these waning days.

Weeks ago, senators voted 32-0 to reverse teacher salary funding cuts envisioned under public schools chief Tom Luna's "Students Come First" reforms last year. The estimated cost over five years is nearly $35 million.

But that legislation is languishing in the desk of House Education Committee Chairman Bob Nonini.

"I'm just nervous about committing future legislators to the additional money,"

JEROME • Twin Falls resident Ben Oliver loves history.

Whether it's The History Channel or classic cars, it sparks his interest.

So it's a natural fit that Oliver – a member of the Magic Valley Early Iron Car Club – is heading up a project to restore a 1940s-era Twin Falls fire truck.

"I know I can make it come to life," he said Thursday. Employees at Freightliner in Jerome were donating their services to work on the truck's breaks.

Tires were propped up against the side of the dust-covered, classic red engine with about 6,500 miles on its odometer.

Oliver said about 10 local businesses have donated time working on the truck so far. The

City Survey, Sewer Treatment Costs on T.F. Council Agenda

TIMES-NEWS

TWIN FALLS • Twin Falls is home to clean air and ample religious and volunteer opportunities. But getting around town – be it behind the wheel or on a bike – isn't as easy as many residents would like.

That's part of the picture painted by responses to the community survey the city of Twin Falls sent to 1,200 residents in February. At today's meeting, city staff and the City Council will discuss the survey's findings.

Twin Falls residents scored low marks on civic engagement, according to their responses, as only 23 percent said they'd attended a public meeting in the last year. That was mirrored in the response rate to the survey, as 401 of the surveys – about 33 percent of those sent out – were returned to the city.

But about half of respondents said they'd volunteered in the past year, and responses to the overall quality and direction of city governance and staff were positive.

Employment opportunities and the availability of affordable child care joined traffic concerns among respondents' biggest gripes with life in the city.

The city paid $11,000 to the National Research Center to conduct the survey.

Also today, the council will act on a trio of items for its planned $10.5 million pretreatment and wastewater treatment plant upgrades.

goal is to have it ready to show during the annual Western Days Parade in June.

The project is an effort of the Twin Falls County Historical Society, which hopes to use the fire engine at future community events.

In 2002, the city of Twin Falls gave the vehicle to the Historical Society.

Ron Yates, president of the society's board, said the truck was used in various events until 2007, when it was retired to a storage building.

The organization wants to feature more local, classic vehicles in community events. But Yates said the society can't afford the repairs, so it relies on sponsors.

During the Western Days Parade, the retired firefighter who used to drive the truck will be introduced.

"Perhaps he can help us with how to operate it," Yates said. The Historical Society is also planning to put together a video with the history of the classic fire truck.

Yates said he hopes the project will draw interest to the Historical Society and attract new members.

In the meantime, there's plenty of work left to do on the fire truck. And it could be a few more months before the finished product is unveiled. "It's going to be a long project and a lot of patience," Yates said.

Volunteers are putting in time on tasks such as touching up the vehicle's paint, doing brake work and straightening out the front bumper.

Oliver has also worked to get other members from the Magic Valley Early Iron Car Club involved. He and his wife, Alice, have been members for about seven years.

Oliver said working on the project is a way to remember Twin Falls' past by getting the fire truck out of storage for others to enjoy.

"It's history, you know," he said. "They need to keep it."

said Nonini, R-Coeur d'Alene, last week.

But the House isn't the only chamber holding hostages.

An individual income tax cut amounting to $35 million annually for top earners has Otter's stamp of approval and has cleared the House, but it's getting the silent treatment in the Senate Local Government and Taxation Committee, led by Sen. Tim Corder.

House Majority Leader Mike Moyle, R-Star, who has been helping lead negotiations for state representatives, said Otter has made his feelings clear behind closed doors: He's willing to fight for the $35 million income tax cut.

"The governor was pretty adamant he'd like to have that tax break," Moyle said. "The House has been pretty firm about that, also."

Corder, R-Mountain Home, says he's reluctant to give $35 million tax relief a hearing, on several counts.

For one, the bill provides only $71 in tax relief to a family of four earning $100,000, according to Otter's finance department. It simply doesn't provide much bang for the buck, Corder said.

And he fears that using $35 million for income tax relief might detract from momentum behind repealing personal property taxes on business equipment — and the Senate's effort to restore teacher pay.

"Certainly, teacher salaries are a big deal to the Senate," Corder said.

Complicating matters, there are competing revenue estimates for fiscal year 2013, starting July 1.

Otter's more-optimistic projections leave the state with $128 million to spare after 2013, according to a document released by the Division of Financial Management this week.

Alex LaBeau, head of the Idaho Association of Commerce and Industry business lobby, told The Associated Press that's more than enough money to pay for the $35 million in income tax cuts, restore teacher salaries and put $60 million into rainy day funds.

LaBeau suggests there could be enough left over to eliminate the first $20 million of the personal property tax on business equipment, too.

Some legislators, however, are sticking by more-modest revenue forecasts.

Trying to do everything now, they contend, would exacerbate Idaho's structurally unbalanced budget they say is being propped up by $100 million taken from budget reserves and Idaho's share of the big nationwide tobacco settlement.

"That's one-time money that we're doing ongoing tax relief with," said Rep. Dennis Lake, R-Blackfoot and chair of the House Revenue and Taxation Committee. "I don't think it works."

Lake was one of just a handful of House Republicans who opposed the income tax cuts, a dicey move in an election year. But he's retiring.

Sen. Dean Cameron, co-chairman of the Joint Finance-Appropriations budget committee who is seeking re-election, also favors a more cautious approach that would pay for teachers and fill rainy day funds but dedicate less attention to tax cuts.

"There are several moving parts," Cameron, R-Rupert said. "Our members would like to see (the education funding) bill come forward, as well as substantial revenue being put into guarding against another downturn."

David Hensley, Otter's chief of staff, declined to comment on this end-of-session calculus, given the sensitive nature of discussions.

N. Idaho County Teaming with Legal Firm to Delist Caribou

SANDPOINT (AP) • Bonner County commissioners in northern Idaho have approved spending up to $10,000 as part of a plan to have Selkirk Mountain woodland caribou taken off the federal endangered species list.

Commissioners on Tuesday unanimously approved a plan that involves a contract with the Pacific Legal Foundation, a public interest law firm that focuses on property rights. Commissioners also approved a memorandum of understanding that allows the public to contribute money to the effort.

"We're going to seek out donors," Commissioner Mike Nielsen told the Bonner County Daily Bee.

The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service in 1984 listed the caribou as a protected species. Woodland caribou, rarely-seen creatures with antlers standing as tall as a man, are struggling to survive in the United States, precariously occupying one remote area of the Northwest as a final toehold in the Lower 48.

Commissioners are concerned a federal plan announced in November to designate as critical habitat for caribou nearly 600 square miles of land in northern Idaho and north-eastern Washington will harm local economies by restricting logging, snowmobiling and forest access.

Fish and Wildlife announced the plan after lawsuits by environmental groups. The agency estimates the woodland caribou herd in the region has dwindled to less than 50, with occasional sightings.

Commissioners contend the caribou population is too small to justify the designation compared to the effect it would have on the local economy.

Under the proposal, 600 square miles of high-elevation forest land in the Selkirk Mountains, including portions of Bonner and Boundary counties in Idaho and Pend Oreille County in Washington, would be designated as critical habitat. Nearly all of the land is already owned by the federal and state governments, with about 15,000 acres in private hands in Idaho.

Senate Ethics Panel to Meet Today

BOISE (AP) • A six-person Idaho Senate ethics panel is meeting Monday to investigate whether Republican Sen. Monty Pearce of New Plymouth broke Senate rules.

The committee will look into a complaint contending Pearce violated the rules by not adequately disclosing during more than a dozen hearings and floor sessions on energy exploration that oil and gas exploration companies have leased his property in Payette County. Pearce denies any wrongdoing.

If the committee determines no violation has occurred, the complaint will be dismissed.

If the committee determines probable cause of a violation exists, Pearce could ask for a formal hearing.

In that event, the committee could eventually recommend dismissal of the charges, reprimand, censure, or expulsion.

Wildlife Managers Work to Avoid Grizzly Encounters

BY RICH LANDERS
The Spokesman-Review

SPOKANE • Rules for staying safe in bear country are easily posted on signs, websites and pamphlets.

The hard part: getting folks to absorb information.

When grizzly bears in the northern Rocky Mountains snuggled into winter dens a few months ago, they put to rest one of the most disturbing seasons for human-bear encounters in decades. The numbers included three human deaths and a record number of bears that had to be trapped and euthanized or moved.

The bears already have begun emerging from their dens this month, and wildlife managers are redoubling their efforts to give the public the tips they need to work educate the public.

From Yellowstone across four states to the North Cascades, wildlife professionals are trying to figure out how to get the word to more people.

Bear experts from across North America will be in Missoula Thursday and Friday for the International human-bear conflicts workshop sponsored by the University of Montana College of Forestry and Conservation.

"After last year, we're all reevaluating how to get the information out about bear safety," said Chris Servheen, grizzly bear recovery coordinator for the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service.

"People throw away our pamphlets and walk right by signs that say carry bear spray and don't hike alone. They do it anyway.

"We know the ways you can be safe in bear country. The question is how to get people to do those things. It's truly frustrating to see people ignoring the advice and then seeing people getting seriously injured or killed.

"We'll be asking ourselves, 'How can we market this information better?'"

Adding to the equation: More people are going into grizzly country, and recovery efforts have resulted in more bears.

The message must be delivered not only to hikers and hunters, but also to people who live and work in bear country and those who go there for fishing, hunting, camping and other recreation.

"We thought we were doing pretty good," Yellowstone National Park biologist Kerry Gunther said last fall, pointing to a 30-year average of one bear-caused human injury annually in Yellowstone. "Maybe we were getting lucky."

The first hiker in 25 years was killed by a grizzly in Yellowstone last summer. A few weeks later, a second hiker was killed by a bear.

Many bear education campaigns focus on saving the animals as they continue to recover after being removed from the list of endangered species.

Slogans such as "a fed bear is a dead bear" highlight the increased likelihood of bears becoming nuisances – and getting euthanized – if they get used to eating human food or garbage.

Backcountry campers in Yellowstone Park must watch a video on bear awareness before they can be issued a backcountry permit.

"We're very successful in getting our message across on the cardinal rules of food storage and bear awareness and avoidance, and the need to carry bear spray as a preferred deterrent," said Tim Reid, the park's chief ranger.

"Then there's the rest of the world," Reid added – the day hikers. How to reach that much larger group as well as campers in bear areas outside the park is the focus of the drive to sharpen the region's bear safety message.

The effort is against high odds.

The University of Wyoming surveyed more than 600 Grand Teton National Park visitors last year to gauge public awareness of bear safety protocols. Most of those polled showed a basic knowledge of food storage guidelines meant to keep hungry bears away. Almost all correctly answered that running from a bear can trigger aggression in the animal.

While 3 percent of those surveyed fell into the "clueless" category with no knowledge about food storage rules, another number was more disheartening to bear managers:

More than 12 percent – about one in eight people – said they knew so much about bears that they could predict when a bruin would turn aggressive.

Bear experts are startled by that sort of self-confidence, noting that biologists with years of experience say bears aren't that predictable.

"The problem with communication is the illusion it's actually happening," said Servheen, looking back to last year's incidents.

"My candid opinion is we have not been very successful at this. Perhaps we need a marketing firm on Madison Avenue – they're really good at getting us to buy things we don't want."

Yellowstone to Increase Fishing Permit Fees

YELLOWSTONE NATIONAL PARK, Wyo. (AP) • Yellowstone National Park is increasing its fishing permit fees slightly this season.

The new fee structure will include a three-day permit for $18, a seven-day permit for $25 and an annual permit for $40. Current permit fees are $15 for three days, $20 for seven and $35 for the annual permit. Permits for anglers 15 years of age and younger will remain free.

Money from the fees is used to help enhance the park's fisheries management program and to begin implementing native fish conservation.

Fishing permit fees have been charged in Yellowstone since 1993. They were last changed in 2004.

Yellowstone's 2012 fishing season begins May 26 and extends through and includes the first Sunday in November.

Figures Show Good Signs in S.W. Idaho Housing Market

BOISE (AP) • A new batch of statistics show the housing market in Idaho's most populated county is on the upswing.

The Idaho Statesman reports sales of homes in Ada County last month increased by 13.4 percent compared to sales in February 2011.

Figures compiled by the Intermountain Multiple Listing Service show 439 homes traded hands last month, up from 387 last February.

In another bit of good news, the listing service shows there are 2,901 homes on the selling block in the Treasure Valley. Real estate agents say that supply is a five-year low and is helping drive up prices across Ada and Canyon counties.

The economic recession that hit the region and Idaho in 2007 put the brakes on housing markets and new construction and caused property values to plummet.

Nampa Man Charged with Felony DUI after Crash

IDAHO STATESMAN

NAMPA • A Nampa man was being held Sunday in the Canyon County jail on a felony drunken driving charge.

Wayne D. Nihart, 40, was also charged with obstructing officers, driving without privileges and leaving the scene of a crash.

Nampa police said Nihart fled in his vehicle after re-arranging another in the drive through of a fast food restaurant on 12th Avenue Road. The crash was reported very early Sunday morning.

A short time later, an officer found the vehicle driving erratically near Lone Star Road and Canyon Street.

Nihart did not cooperate with the officer and failed field sobriety tests, said Sgt. Curtis Shankel.

Nihart was charged with a felony because he has two DUI convictions since 2004 and because he fled the scene, Shankel said.

POST FALLS • Spring arrived early for bears.

Due to the unusually warm winter, grizzly and black bears are foraging about a month earlier than usual, Fish and Game spokesman Gregg Losinski said.

Grizzly bears will emerge from dens around Island Park, and black bears will start popping up across eastern Idaho, he said.

Losinski already has received reports of bear sightings.

Bears lose up to half of their body weight during the winter, Losinski said. While bears aren't necessarily more aggressive after the winter, they are actively looking for food.

Homeowners should exercise caution not to attract bears.

"It's important to keep a clean area around your cabin or home," Losinski said. "It's not just garbage. Bird feeders and barbecue grills need to be locked away or put up high where bears

No bear fatalities have ever been recorded in Idaho, Losinski said. Last year, a hunter in Island Park received nonlife-threatening injuries after a brief grizzly attack.

Yellowstone National Park recorded two fatalities last year, the park's first in 24 years, Losinski said.

Outdoors enthusiasts should make noise and always travel with others in the backcountry or parks, Losinski said. He recommended carrying bear spray instead of a firearm.

"With a firearm, if you don't kill the bear, you just have a bigger problem," Losinski said. "With bear spray, if you hit it, it's not going to want to be around you."

The spring hunting season for black bears opens April 15. Losinski said hunters need to be sure the bear they're targeting isn't a grizzly before firing.

Ex-teacher Accused of Showing up Drunk in Class

HIGHLAND, Utah (AP) • An arraignment is scheduled today for a former Utah County high school teacher accused of returning from lunch drunk early this month.

Police say Robert Telford was escorted off the Lone Peak High School campus in Highland after he returned late from lunch and appeared intoxicated to a school administrator.

He was charged a week later with a class C misdemeanor count of intoxication.

Alpine School District spokeswoman Rhonda Bromley told Provo's Daily Herald that the 49-year-old Telford was immediately suspended and resigned March 5.

She says his blood alcohol level tested over the legal limit, and he had worked in the school's career and technical education department.

Police say Telford was cooperative and that students were never in any danger.

Study: Statehouses at High Risk for Corruption

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP) • State governments lack transparency and accountability to citizens, and remain at high risk for corruption, according to a new study of all 50 statehouses.

Not a single state received an A in the State Integrity Investigation ranking, a product of the Center for Public Integrity, Public Radio International and Global Integrity.

"It's telling that no state received an overall grade of A," said Caitlin Ginley, a staff writer for the Center for Public Integrity and a project manager on the study. "In every state, there's a room to improve the ethics laws, the level of transparency on government proceedings, the disclosure of information, and — most importantly — the oversight of these laws."

"One of the major findings was that even when ethics laws are passed, they are difficult to enforce and lack meaningful consequences for violators."

Only five states got rankings of B, led by a surprising recipient: New Jersey. It got a B-plus, with an overall score of 87 out of a possible 100.

Despite — or perhaps because of — recent corruption scandals, New Jersey got the top ranking because of steps it took to combat corruption, including tough ethics and anti-corruption laws it adopted in response.

New Jersey has a colorful tradition of corruption in government, including a U.S. congressman taking a bribe from an FBI agent posing as a wealthy Arab sheik, a Jersey shore councilman caught on tape bragging to an undercover officer that he would never get caught because "I could smell a cop a mile away;" and a decade-long string of 150 state and local officials who were either convicted or pleaded guilty to federal corruption charges. The cases ranged from Motor Vehicle Commission employees selling fraudulent licenses to politicians peddling their influence for kickbacks.

Cases stemming from the 2009 roundup of 44 people in what was dubbed by the feds as "Operation Bid-Rig" are still working their way through the courts.

But that history of corruption also led to strong reforms designed to prevent it in the future. Among them was a law prohibiting campaign contributions by most firms doing business with the state.

"It's nice to be recognized for being ahead of the curve," said Michael Drewniak, a spokesman for Gov. Chris Christie, a former U.S. attorney who prosecuted many of the recent cases. "The governor is proud of the changes he's made and the resources he's made available to the public in terms of government transparency. Government operates and behaves better when it's open and transparent, and taxpayers feel informed and a part of the process when they can see how their money is spent, who is getting contracts and who's on the payroll and such."

The report found that states with well-known scandals or histories of corruption often have the toughest laws and enforcement that bring them to light. Conversely, the report found, so-called "quiet" states may be at higher risk for corruption, with fewer means to bring corrupt practices to light.

Reporters in each state researched 330 corruption risk indicators across 14 government categories, including access to information, campaign finance, executive accountability, legislative accountability, judicial accountability, budgeting, civil service management, procurement, internal auditing, lobbying disclosure, pension fund management, ethics enforcement, insurance commissions, and redistricting.

Rounding out the top five states were: Connecticut (B, 86), Washington state (B-minus, 83), California (B-minus, 81) and Nebraska (B-minus, 80).

Nineteen states got grades of C, and 18 got a D. Eight states got an F, with grades of 59 or lower: North Dakota, Michigan, South Carolina, Maine, Virginia, Wyoming, South Dakota and Georgia.

Individual reports for all 50 states can be found at <http://www.stateintegrity.org>. The site, along with a companion page on Facebook, allows readers to send copies of their state report cards to elected officials, to report potential problems, and suggest solutions.

SENIOR

Q. I recently heard some use the term "aids for daily living." What are they talking about?

A. This is a great question! Our population is aging and manufacturers are offering products that can help people remain comfortable and safe in their homes. While some aids can be costly most are generally inexpensive items. Consider which of these might be useful for you or a loved one: kitchen implements that make opening cans and bottles, peeling potatoes, and cutting and dicing vegetables easier; elevated toilet seats; "reachers," pincer-like devices for people who have a weak grasp or limited mobility; talking clocks, wristwatches, and calculators for people with poor vision; button loopers and zipper pulls for easier dressing; touch-tone telephones with larger numbers, speaker or hands-free telephones; and pill crushers, for people who have difficulty swallowing. You can find most of these items at pharmacies or superstores, medical equipment dealers, or in home health catalogs.

Many Willing to Cut Afghan Shooting Suspect Slack

BY ALLEN G. BREED
Associated Press

He is accused of the kind of crime that makes people shiver, the killing of families in their own homes under cover of night, the butchery of defenseless children. Under normal circumstances, Americans would dismiss such an act as worthy of only one response: swift and merciless punishment.

Not so in the case of Robert Bales — at least, not for some Americans.

So far, many seem willing to believe that a 10-year U.S. military veteran, worn down by four tours of combat and perhaps suffering from post-traumatic stress disorder, simply snapped. That somehow there must be, if not an excuse, at least an explanation.

Exactly what set off the Army sergeant accused of massacring 16 civilians in Afghanistan's Kandahar Province is far from clear. But already, organizations and individuals with differing agendas have portrayed Bales as the personification of something that is profoundly broken, and have seized on his case to question the war itself or to argue that the American government is asking too much of its warriors.

On the website of Iraq Veterans Against the War, organizer Aaron Hughes declared that Afghan war veterans "believe that this incident is not a case of one 'bad apple' but the effect of a continued U.S. military policy of drone strikes, night raids, and helicopter attacks where Afghan civilians pay the price." Those veterans, he wrote, "hope that the Kandahar massacre will be a turning point" in the war.

"I kind of sympathize for him, being gone, being sent over there four times. I can understand he's probably quite wracked mentally, so I just hope that things are justified in court. I hope it goes OK."

Beau Britt, who lives across the street from Robert Bales' home

"Send a letter to the editor of your local paper condemning the massacre and calling for an end to our occupation in Afghanistan," Hughes wrote.

Report: U.S. Makes Modest Gains in Grad Rate

BY KIMBERLY HEFLING
Associated Press

HAGERSTOWN, Md. • The last straw for 17-year-old Alton Burke was a note left on his door. The high school dropout picked up the phone and re-enrolled at South Hagerstown High.

Burke missed roughly 200 days of class, but Heather Dixon, the student intervention specialist who left the note, never gave up on him.

Aggressive efforts to prevent students such as Burke from dropping out contributed to a modest 3.5 percentage point increase nationally in the high school graduation rate from 2001 to 2009, according to research to be presented Monday at the Grad Nation summit in Washington. The event was organized by the children's advocacy group America's Promise Alliance founded by former Secretary of State Colin Powell.

The graduation rate was 75 percent in 2009, meaning one in four students fails to get a diploma in four years, researchers found. That's well below the organization's goal of 90 percent by 2020.

Researchers found that the number of "dropout factories," schools that fail to graduate more than 60 percent of students on time, had dropped by more than 450 between 2002 and 2010, but that 1,550 remain.

"Big gains are possible if you work hard at it, and if you don't focus on it, you're going to go backward," said Robert Balfanz, a report author and director of the Everyone Graduates Center at the School of Education at Johns Hopkins University.

The increase in graduation rates was primarily because of growth in 12 states, with New York and Tennessee showing double digit gains since 2002, according to the research. At the other end, 10 states had declines: Arizona, Arkansas, California, Connecticut, New Jersey, Nebraska, New Mexico, Nevada, Rhode Island and Utah.

So far, only Wisconsin has met the 90 percent benchmark, although Vermont is close.

"This year's report proves struggling schools are not destined to fail," said Education Secretary Arne Duncan. "The reality is that even one dropout factory is too many."

The authors said there are proven strategies to tackle the problem, such as getting all students to read at grade level, raising the compulsory school attendance age to 18 and developing "early warning" systems to help identify students that might be at risk of later dropping out.

In his State of the Union address, President Barack Obama encouraged states to pass laws to require students to stay in school until they graduate or they turn 18.

Census Documenting Great Depression to Be Released

In this photo provided by the Library of Congress, Prints & Photographs Division, a poster for the 1940 Census is shown.

Veiled in secrecy for 72 years because of privacy protections, the 1940 U.S. Census is the first historical federal decennial survey to be made available on the Internet initially rather than on microfilm.

BY CRISTIAN SALAZAR and RANDY HERSCHAFT
Associated Press

NEW YORK • It was a decade when tens of millions of people in the U.S. experienced mass unemployment and social upheaval as the nation clawed its way out of the Great Depression and rumblings of global war were heard from abroad.

Now, intimate details of 132 million people who lived through the 1930s will be disclosed as the U.S. government releases the 1940 census on April 2 to the public for the first time after 72 years of privacy protection lapses.

Access to the records will be free and open to anyone on the Internet — but they will not be immediately name searchable.

For genealogists and family historians, the 1940 census release is the most important disclosure of ancestral secrets in a decade and could shake the branches of many family trees. Scholars expect the records to help draw a more pointillistic portrait of a transformative decade in American life.

Researchers might be able to follow the movement of refugees from war-torn Europe in the latter half of the 1930s; sketch out in more detail where 100,000 Japanese Americans interned during World War II were living before they were removed; and more fully trace the decades-long migration of blacks from the rural South to cities.

Henry Louis Gates Jr., a Harvard University professor and scholar of black history who has promoted the tracing of family ancestry through popular television shows, said the release of the records will be a "great contribution to American society."

Romney Wins Puerto Rico; GOP Campaign Continues

ASSOCIATED PRESS
Republican presidential candidate and former Massachusetts Gov. Mitt Romney campaigns Sunday in Moline, Ill.

BY PHILIP ELLIOTT and BEN FOX
Associated Press

SAN JUAN, Puerto Rico • Mitt Romney scored an overwhelming win Sunday in Puerto Rico's Republican presidential primary, trouncing chief rival Rick Santorum on the Caribbean island even as the two rivals looked ahead to more competitive contests this week in Illinois and Louisiana.

The victory in the U.S. territory was so convincing that Romney, the GOP front-runner, won all 20 delegates to the national convention at stake because he prevailed with more than 50 percent of the vote. That padded his comfortable lead over Santorum in the race to amass the 1,144 delegates needed to clinch the nomination.

Nevertheless, the GOP nomination fight is unlikely to end anytime soon, with Santorum refusing to step aside even though Romney is pulling further ahead in the delegate hunt.

As the day began, Santorum claimed he was in contest for the long haul because Romney is a weak front-runner.

"This is a primary process where somebody had a huge advantage, huge money advantage, huge advantage of establishment support and he hasn't been able to close the deal and even come close to closing the deal," Santorum said. "That tells you that there's a real flaw there."

Yet, Santorum sidestepped when asked if he would fight Romney on the convention floor if

On March 11, authorities say, Bales, a 38-year-old married father of two from Washington state, stalked through two villages, gunned down civilians and attempted to burn some of the bodies. The dead included nine children.

In Lake Tapps, Wash., neighbors knew Bales as a patriot, a friendly guy who loved his wife and kids, and a man who never complained about the sacrifices his country repeatedly asked of him. They find it hard to believe he could be capable of such depravity.

"I kind of sympathize for him, being gone, being sent over there four times," said Beau Britt, who lives across the street. "I can understand he's probably quite wracked mentally, so I just hope that things are justified in court. I hope it goes OK."

Paul Wohlberg, who lives next door to the Baleses, said: "I just can't believe Bob's the guy who did this. A good guy got put in the wrong place at the wrong time."

Talk like that infuriates Fred Wellman, a retired Army lieutenant colonel from Fredericksburg, Va., who did three tours in Iraq. He said comments like those of Bales' neighbors and his attorney simply feed into the notion of "the broken veteran."

Wellman does not deny that 10 years of war have severely strained the service. But while others might see Bales as a wounded soul, Wellman sees a man who sneaked off base to commit his alleged crimes, then had the presence of mind to "lawyer up" as soon as he was caught.

"That may play well with certain circles of the civilian community, which doesn't understand our lives," Wellman said. "But he's going to be tried by a military court ... and chances are three or four of those guys had things happen to them, may have had three or four tours, may have lost people, may have been blown up. And NONE of them snapped and killed 16 people." He added: "It's just too easy, and a lot of us, we're not buying it."

Benjamin Busch, a Marine veteran of two tours of Iraq, wrote last week on the website The Daily Beast that he and his comrades are afraid to admit that Bales "lost his mind in war," because that "allows for the possibility that any one of us could go insane at any time, and that every veteran poisoned by their combat experience could be on edge for life."

James Alan Fox, an expert on murder, said Americans can more easily make excuses for Bales because the shootings did not occur here at home. "Although the victims weren't soldiers or the enemy, they were civilians, many Americans ... literally distance themselves from this case, because it's so far away in a foreign land," said Fox, a professor at Boston's Northeastern University. "It's still mass murder, yet many Americans sort of perceive it differently because it is related to a military situation, as opposed to a private citizen who's murdering other private citizens."

said the "goldmine" of 1940 records would add important layers of detail to an existing collection of opened census records dating to 1790.

"It's such a rare gift," he said of the public's access to census records, "especially for people who believe that establishing their family trees is important for understanding their relationship to American democracy, the history of our country, and to a larger sense of themselves."

Margo Anderson, a census historian, said the release of the records could help answer questions about Japanese-Americans interned in camps after the outbreak of WWII.

"What we'll be able to do now, which we really couldn't do, is to take a look at what the Japanese-American community looked like on the eve of evacuation," said Anderson, a professor of history and urban studies at the University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee.

More than 120,000 enumerators surveyed 132 million people for the Sixteenth Decennial Census — 21 million of whom are alive today in the U.S. and Puerto Rico, according to the U.S. Census Bureau.

The survey contained 34 questions directed at all households, plus 16 supplemental questions asked of 5 percent of the population. New questions reflected the government's intent on documenting the turbulent decade, by generating data on homelessness, migration, widespread unemployment, irregular salaries and fertility decline.

Some of the most contentious questions focused on personal income and were deemed so sensitive they were placed at the end of the survey. Less than 300,000 people opted to have their income responses sealed. In part because of the need to overcome a growing reluctance by the American public to answer questionnaires and fears about some new questions, the bureau launched its biggest outreach and promotional campaign up to that time, according to records obtained at the Franklin D. Roosevelt Presidential Library and Museum in Hyde Park, N.Y.

It opened its first Division of Public Affairs to blanket the country with its message, reaching out to over 10,000 publications and recruiting public officials, clergy and business owners to promote it.

Movie studios were enlisted to encourage their film stars to participate, including Cesar Romero, who later played the Joker in the Batman television series. A photograph of President Franklin D. Roosevelt taking the census also was used for the campaign.

The bureau also hired the managing editor of "Opportunity: A Journal of Negro Life" to galvanize support in the black community. However, studies in the 1940s revealed undercounts, including 13 percent of draft-age black men.

In a first for the National Archives and Records Administration, the nation's recordkeeper plans to post the entire census on the Internet — its biggest digitization effort to date.

That might be unsurprising given that increasingly popular online ancestry services make vast amounts of genealogical data available. But for previous decennial census releases, researchers had to trek to NARA branches to crank through microfilm machines.

Still, finding a name in the 3.8 million digitized images won't be as easy as a Google search: It could be at least six months after the release before a nationwide name index is created.

In the meantime, researchers will need an address to determine a census enumeration district — a way to carve up the map for surveying — to identify where someone lived and then browse the records.

Some experts said enthusiasm for the release could be dampened by the lack of a name index, especially for novices.

"It may very well frustrate the newcomers," said Thomas Macentee, an industry analyst helping recruit volunteers for a name indexing effort sponsored in part by the Mormon-run FamilySearch.com. "It's like showing up on Black Friday. If you really want that TV set, if you really want that census record, you are going to be ready to go and you are going to keep at it no matter what."

Publicly-traded Ancestry.com, which has over 1.7 million customers, is also working to make the census records searchable by indexing almost all fields and providing proprietary tools to mine the data.

Josh Hanna, a senior adviser for the company, said the 1940 census will be the biggest database of its kind.

"It'll be the deepest level of indexing we've ever done," he said. Access to the index and tools will be available for free through the end of 2013.

Other individuals and organizations across the country are also working to ease the use of the records, including the New York Public Library, which is digitizing the full set of New York City's 1940 telephone books to help people locate addresses.

Genealogy societies and libraries also have been holding packed workshops to educate their members.

In January, about three dozen people gathered in Manhattan for a meeting of the MetroNY Genealogy & Computers Special Interest Group to discuss the census. They included Michelle Novak, who has spent six years searching for information about her paternal grandfather, but has no street address to help locate him.

Novak, 43, said family members recalled him as a heavy drinker who worked long hours for the Pennsylvania Railroad and abandoned his family in the early 1930s.

But the few records she has been able to find include a signature in a railroad pension book. She believes the 1940 census might hold additional answers.

"If I can find one record, anything, it may help," she said in an email after the meeting. "Even if I find him in jail or deceased, at least I will have an answer."

Comedian Gallagher Out of Coma, Telling Jokes

LEWISVILLE, Texas (AP) • The comedian Gallagher is telling jokes after being taken out of a medically induced coma that doctors put him in following his heart attack last week in Texas.

Doctors slowly woke up Gallagher on Sunday morning. His promotional manager, Christine Scherrer, says Gallagher immediately recognized his family and started talking to them. She says he's breathing on his own, moving and joking around.

The comedian, whose full name is Leo Anthony Gallagher, is known for smashing watermelons with a sledgehammer.

Scherrer says Gallagher had two stents replaced after collapsing Wednesday before a performance at a Lewisville bar, near Dallas. Gallagher had a minor heart attack last March after collapsing while performing in Minnesota.

Scherrer isn't sure how long Gallagher will remain hospitalized. She says he appreciates his fans' thoughts and prayers.

he failed before August to stop the former Massachusetts governor from getting the required number of delegates.

Romney, in turn, expressed confidence that he'd prevail. "I can't tell you exactly how the process is going to work," Romney said. "But I bet I'm going to become the nominee."

Both campaigned in Puerto Rico last week — in a campaign focused on statehood for the U.S. territory — but Romney cut short his trip so he could head to Illinois and Santorum spent Sunday in Louisiana. Illinois, a more moderate Midwestern state, votes Tuesday and is seen as more friendly territory for Romney, while Santorum is the favorite in the more conservative Southern state of Louisiana, which votes Saturday.

After the Puerto Rico victory, Romney had 521 delegates in his camp and Santorum had 253, according to The Associated Press' tally. Former House Speaker Newt Gingrich trailed with 136 delegates and Texas Rep. Ron Paul had 50.

Enrique Melendez, the Republican representative on the Puerto Rican State Electoral Commission, told the AP that Romney "won the Puerto Rican primary by a huge margin and we are granting him the 20 delegates."

Sheriff’s Candidate Promises to Live up to His Pledges

Hi, my name is Ken Rushing, and I am vying for your vote in November as Jerome County sheriff.

I, too, have been approached by citizens who voiced concerns about the current practices of the sheriff’s department — promises that were made in 2008 and never fulfilled, and they wanted to see changes for the better. I am the right person to make those changes and see them through.

I was raised in Jerome County, spent most of my life here and have been in law enforcement for 18 years. I started my career working as a Jerome County Resident East End Deputy living in Hazelton; then with the Idaho County sheriff as a Riggins Resident Deputy; and I am currently with the city of Jerome as a patrol officer. Previous to that, I spent eight years in the military.

My intentions are to develop a sheriff’s department that is reputable, both with the citizens and the court system. They will be honest, hardworking, well-trained and professional. I will promote the necessary interdepartmental communication, which isn’t happening now. I will find that “happy medium” between both ends of the county that keeps all Jerome County citizens safe and secure as possible. All members of the department are going to be productive and approachable, including myself.

The war on drugs must continue, but at a county level, we cannot waste resources. I will continue the war on drugs aggressively while utilizing resources smartly. I will maintain the current jail, attempting to minimize any potential legal liability, until the citizens finally approve a new jail; then I will run the new jail in an efficient and profitable manner. I believe the new jail needs to be the right size to be cost-efficient for the citizens, and I provided a detailed example about my view of the jail on my website. I do not see the need for a new jail that will be outgrown long before it is paid off. I would much rather have a jail with the potential to bring revenue in and provide tax relief much sooner than expected. The jail issue will be voted on at the primary election in May.

I have much more information about my views on my website, especially the jail issue, but the entire website will not be installed for viewing until after the primary election in May. I can be contacted through the website and by email for any concerns or questions. Donations can also be accepted over the website: www.jerome-countysheriff.com.

Ken Rushing is an independent candidate for Jerome County sheriff.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

It’s Time for a Third Political Party in America

I participated in the Republican caucus at Canyon Ridge High School in Twin Falls only to find no parking and long lines to register. I got the back of my hand stamped/marked and shuffled into an overcrowded gymnasium. I wasn’t sure if I was being forced to participate in a cyclan-B shower or, worse yet, that I would be forced to listen to politicians all night long.

I have to admire the organizational skills of the LDS Church! You would have to have been parachuted onto the school campus in a military-like operation unless you got there early. It is too bad the rest of the Republican Party members didn’t make it because lack of parking availability.

This was reminiscent of the last Twin Falls Republican Central meeting with the establishment surreptitious godfather figure Grant Loeb, the Twin Falls district attorney and Jennifer, the assistant district attorney, giving sanction to Gretchen the committee chairwoman as they appointed empty seats. This gave the establishment members and/or themselves a majority by convincing new committeemen who had a majority vote that it was all legal by using an anonymous phone call from an attorney in order to pretend that it was OK and legal. When a committeeman disagreed with the process, appointed thugs would yell and intimidate like drill sergeants “you’re out of line”; they state, “we are in charge of this meeting” and shutting down elected committeemen who dare ask questions or wished to vote or make a point of order. At least most people didn’t have to go through the humiliation; only elected committeemen who dared to object.

Mark Twain said, “History doesn’t repeat itself, but it sure does rhyme.” We are all tired of the corruption and cronyism; think America is overdue for a third party!

Republicans Show Lack of Respect for President

To hard core conservatives, March 15, 2012:

For my liberal friends, apparently I caused a fire storm by expressing an opposing opinion to hardcore conservative ideals. It seems that only right-wing propaganda is acceptable to hardcore conservatives on Facebook.

So to those who have blocked my freedom of opinion, I will just say I owe you no apology nor will you ever receive one from me. I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it.

Apparently, conservatives do not agree. So instead I will reach out to independents. I will ask you to look at undeniable facts.

Since President Obama took office, the Republicans have initiated the most vicious propaganda and character assassination campaigns ever launched against a sitting president. They show a complete disrespect for the office of the president and it continually gets worse. They continually sweep under the rug the undeniable facts that George W. started both wars and gave away America’s surplus finances to his rich friends. After creating the worst decline in American history he dumped the whole mess in President Obama’s lap. Now the Republicans blame the president for their mess.

I don’t know what the Republicans stand for, only what they stand against. They oppose women’s rights, the Girl Scouts, gay people, worker’s rights, the middle class and anyone who is not rich, white and Republican. Do you really want these people running our country or even our state?

Proud liberal.

America Is Still a Place to ‘Live the Dream’

This is in response to “Socialist One and All” published in the March 5 Times-News.

I was not raised to think the government was responsible to ensure that every aspect of my life was planned out cradle to grave. I still believe that hard work and individualism are, and will continue to be, what makes the USA great.

Somehow I find it unlikely that there are masses of people dreaming of the day they will immigrate to France to “live the dream.” America is still the destination for those dreamers.

Newsday is determined to convince you that socialism is a well-meaning philosophy that only wants to make everyone’s life a fulfilling and meaningful event. The only problem is that this rarely translates well into a governmental system. The belief that Karl Marx is somehow responsible for the way our schools are funded or to claim that a capitalist wants to eliminate Medicare, Medicaid, Social Security and public roads is a tactic long used by the extreme left to shame conservatives into keeping their mouths shut.

Fortunately, this tactic has not worked on me. I cannot be convinced that my contribution in life is paying taxes so that some bureaucracy can relieve me of my personal responsibility to my family and community.

It is almost certain that all western Europeans embrace a socialist lifestyle; fortunately, this is Idaho and regardless of what Newsday may believe, “I am not a socialist!”

Republicans Seem to Be Trying to Expand Government

Sonogram legislation, March 15:

As a woman, I have questions for Republicans and American voters.

Are you hell bent on overpopulation or is it that you just feel the need to prosecute women on the abortion issue?

How about giving men ages 13 to 80 a vasectomy? They are reversible nowadays. Are they not part of this issue? Women do not get pregnant by themselves.

If you pass the sonogram legislation, what are you going to do for funding and improving the WIC, Medicaid, Child Care, Adoption and Foster Care programs? How are you going to pay for parenting classes and who is going to pay the grandparents for their assistance in bring up their grandchildren?

Now if a doctor and his patient decide to have the abortion after the sonogram, how soon are you going to pass legislation for charging them with murder?

I, as many Americans, say Republicans want less government but they seem to be trying to expand it. Get out of our private lives or make it equal for men and women and get rid of Viagra; that’s quite a drug for males to keep it in their pants.

New Wrinkle in Pot Debate: Stoned Driving

BY KRISTEN WYATT
Associated Press

DENVER • Angeline Chilton says she can't drive unless she smokes pot.

The suburban Denver woman says she'd never get behind the wheel right after smoking, but she does use medical marijuana twice a day to ease tremors caused by multiple sclerosis that previously left her homebound.

"I don't drink and drive, and I don't smoke and drive," she said. "But my body is completely saturated with THC."

Her case underscores a problem that no one's sure how to solve: How do you tell if someone is too stoned to drive?

States that allow medical marijuana have grappled with determining impairment levels for years. And voters in Colorado and Washington state will decide this fall whether to legalize the drug for recreational use, bringing a new urgency to the issue.

A Denver marijuana advocate says officials are scrambling for limits in part because more drivers acknowledge using the drug.

"The explosion of medical marijuana patients has led to a lot of drivers sticking the (marijuana) card in law enforcement's face, saying, 'You can't do anything to me, I'm legal,'" said Sean McAllister, a lawyer who defends people charged with driving under the influence of marijuana.

It's not that simple. Driving while impaired by any drug is illegal in all states.

But it highlights the challenges law enforcement officers face using old tools to try to fix a new problem. Most convictions for drugged driving now are based on police observations, followed later by a blood test.

Authorities envision a legal threshold for pot that would be comparable to the blood-alcohol standard used to determine drunken driving.

But unlike alcohol, marijuana stays in the blood long after the high wears off a few hours after use, and there is no quick test to determine someone's level of impairment — not that scientists haven't been working on it.

Dr. Marilyn Huestis of the National Institute on Drug Abuse, a government research lab, says that soon there will be a saliva test to detect recent marijuana use.

But government officials say that doesn't address the question of impairment.

"I'll be dead — and so will lots of other people — from old age, before we know the impairment levels" for marijuana and other drugs, said White House drug czar Gil Kerlikowske.

Authorities recognize the need for a solution. Marijuana causes dizziness, slowed reaction time and drivers are more likely to drift and swerve while they're high.

Dr. Bob DuPont, president of the Institute for Behavior and Health, a non-government institute that works to reduce drug abuse, says research proves "the terrible carnage out there on the roads caused by marijuana."

ASSOCIATED PRESS

Angeline Chilton, a suburban Denver woman with multiple sclerosis who smokes pot twice a day to ease tremors, holds her pipe on March 6 as she sits on the front porch of her home in Lakewood, Colo. Chilton insists that she never drives high, but she fears that officials will rush to set an unproven blood-level standard that would put her at risk of breaking the law. In Colorado and Washington, the debate over how to tell whether a driver is high is more than academic. The states are struggling to come up with a blood-level standard for marijuana that would be analogous to the blood-alcohol standard used to decide who's driving drunk.

One recent review of several studies of pot smoking and car accidents suggested that driving after smoking marijuana might almost double the risk of being in a serious or fatal crash.

And a recent nationwide census of fatal traffic accidents showed that while deadly crashes have declined in recent years, the percentage of mortally wounded drivers who later tested positive for drugs rose 18 percent between 2005 and 2011.

DuPont, drug czar for Presidents Richard Nixon and Gerald Ford, wrote a paper last year on drugged driving for the Obama administration, which has made the issue a priority.

Physicians say that while many tests can show whether someone has recently used pot, it's more difficult to pinpoint impairment at any certain time.

Urine and blood tests are better at showing whether someone used the drug in the past — which is why employers and probation officers use them. But determining current impairment is far trickier.

"There's no sure answer to that question," said Dr. Guohua Li, a Columbia University researcher who reviewed marijuana use and motor vehicle crashes last year.

His survey linked pot use to crash risk, but pointed out wide research gaps. Scientists do not have conclusive data to link marijuana dosing to accident likelihood; whether it matters if the drug is smoked or eaten; or how pot interacts with other drugs.

The limited data has prompted a furious debate.

Proposed solutions include setting limits on the amount of the main psychoactive chemical in marijuana, THC, that drivers can have in their blood. But THC limits to determine impairment are not widely agreed upon.

Two states place the standard at 2 nanograms per milliliter of blood. Others have zero tolerance policies. And Colorado and Washington state are debating a threshold of 5 nanograms.

Such an attempt failed the Colorado Legislature last year, amid opposition from Republicans and Democrats. State officials then set up a task force to settle the question — and the panel couldn't agree.

This year, Colorado lawmakers are debating a similar measure, but its sponsors concede they don't know whether the "driving while high" bill will pass.

In Washington state, the ballot measure on marijuana legalization includes a 5 nanogram THC limit.

The measure's backers say polling indicates such a driving limit could be crucial to winning public support for legalization.

"Voters were very concerned about impaired driving," said Alison Holcomb, campaign director for Washington's legalization measure.

Holcomb also pointed to a failed marijuana legalization proposal in California two years ago that did not include a driving THC limit.

The White House, which has a goal of reducing drugged driving by 10 percent in the next three years, wants states to set a blood-level standard upon which to base convictions, but has not said what that limit should be.

Administration officials insist marijuana should remain illegal, and Kerlikowske called it a "bogus argument" to say any legal level of THC in a driver is safe.

But several factors can skew THC blood tests, including age, gender, weight and frequency of marijuana use. Also, THC can remain in the system weeks after a user sobers up, leading to the anxiety shared by many in the 16 medical marijuana states: They could be at risk for a positive test at any time, whether they had recently used the drug or not.

A Colorado state forensic toxicologist testified recently that "5 nanograms is more than fair" to determine intoxication. But, for now the blood test proposals remain politically fraught, with supporters and opponents of marijuana legalization hinging support on the issue.

Huestis, of the government-funded drug abuse institute, says an easy-to-use roadside saliva test that can determine recent marijuana use — as opposed to long-ago pot use — is in final testing stages and will be ready for police use soon.

Researchers envision a day when marijuana tests are as common in police cars as Breathalyzers.

Until then, lawmakers will consider measures such as Colorado's marijuana DUI proposal, which marijuana activists say imperils drivers who frequently use the drug such as Chilton, the multiple sclerosis patient.

She says that since she began using pot she has started driving again and for the first time in five years has landed a job.

Chilton worries Colorado's proposal jeopardizes her newfound freedom.

Grad Rates

It's estimated that high school graduates will earn $130,000 more over their lifetimes than dropouts, and that high school graduates will generate more than $200,000 in tax revenues and savings in government expenditures over their lifetime, the report said.

How to track high school graduation rates has been a contentious issue for years, with states using different methods to come up with a number. Balfanz cited this as a reason why the report does not include the names of the dropout factories. He said they will be included in a future report once all states are consistently reporting data.

States are now required to use the same method to compute graduation rates based on a Bush administration rule issued in 2008.

Nevada stood out for its low graduation rate of 56 percent, a decline of more than 15 percent from 2002 to 2009, the report said. During Nevada's boom years, students dropped out to earn hefty paychecks parking cars, pouring concrete or serving drinks along the Las Vegas Strip.

"Today, many of Las Vegas' dropouts are out of work and unable to jumpstart the economy because they lack the required credentials," the report said.

But Balfanz said there are some signs that the state is "organizing itself against its big challenge."

The Clark County School District of Las Vegas, for example, has developed a partnership with Vegas PBS for an online program designed to help students earn missing credits needed to graduate. It also started the "Reclaim Your Future" program, which sent school employees and community volunteers door to door to persuade dropouts to return to school.

State education officials in New Mexico and Arizona point to their own graduation statistics, which show rates increasing gradually for three consecutive years.

"When we talk about the economy, there's a three-prong stool — what are your taxes like, are you business friendly and the third piece is whether you have an education system that is creating a workforce prepared and ready," New Mexico's Education Secretary Hanna Skandera said. "And the answer for New Mexico has been 'No,' but it's an absolute commitment of ours to make that answer 'Yes.' We're on our way."

Many of the strategies encouraged by the authors have been adopted in Washington County, Md. The district has a 92 percent graduation rate, up 15 percent from 2000. It's made progress in recent years even as the county's unemployment rate lingered above the national average and more students needed homelessness services.

The district offers e-learning classes for credit recovery, evening classes, and a family center where pregnant teens and student parents can attend class. Student attendance and performance data are carefully tracked to identify early any students at risk. Intervention specialists develop relationships with these students, doing everything from visiting their homes to helping them connect with community mental health services.

Clayton Wilcox, the district superintendent, said that even as they work to keep students, those who drop out are warmly welcomed back.

"It's not easy to drop out. We're going to hound you. Classroom teachers are going to talk to you. Principals are going to talk to you. The guidance counselor is going to talk to you. We don't make it easy," Wilcox said.

Dixon, the intervention specialist who works with Burke, and Amy Warrenfeltz, another intervention specialist at South Hagerstown High, said some of the kids they deal with have mental health issues or drug and alcohol problems. Others struggle because they switched schools because of financial issues in their family or had a bad experience in school with a teacher or peer, they said.

Burke said it was hard to get motivated to attend class once he "got into the routine of not getting up and it became a habit."

"I was nervous coming back because of what people would say or how people would look at me," Burke said. "It's awkward when you haven't been to school in a couple weeks or whatever and then you come back!"

NYC Activists Differ on Occupy's Direction

BY KAREN MATTHEWS
Associated Press

NEW YORK • A day after police broke up a rally at Manhattan's Zuccotti Park and arrested dozens, Occupy Wall Street protesters said Sunday that their movement for economic justice would pick up momentum with the spring.

Activists listed issues including student debt, the environment and the November elections as priorities going forward. But some observers who watched workers hose down the now-barricaded park that was Occupy's home wondered whether a movement so diffuse could accomplish anything.

"I'm really grateful to be part of a generation that wants change, 'cause we should all want change," said Jennifer Campbell, a graduate student in documentary filmmaking at Hofstra University. "But I'm not sure what that change is, or if they know what that change is."

Meanwhile, police were seeking a subpoena to identify an apparent Occupy protester who they said tweeted a threat to kill police officers, police spokesman Paul Browne confirmed Sunday.

The New York Post and Daily News reported a message by an apparent Occupy protester saying they won't make a difference if they don't kill a cop or two was tweeted at about 11:40 p.m. Saturday.

The crackdown at Zuccotti happened late Saturday after hundreds of activists had gathered to mark the six-month birthday of the movement.

"There was a lot of silliness and just kind of singing and dancing and really very jovial," said Chris Casuccio, who works for a nonprofit organization. "We had some banners up. There was one tarp that was up but it was tiny. It could fit like five people under it."

But Detective Brian Sessa of the NYPD said protesters had started breaking park rules against setting up tents and tarps.

Police said 73 people were detained. It was unclear how many were still in custody Sunday.

Occupy activists said the officers moved in with little warning and beat some protesters. Police said Sunday they had no information about any protesters being injured.

"They just came in swinging batons," said protester Sandra Nurse. She said a woman began having a seizure and another protester's head was "smashed into a building window."

Casuccio said protesters had little time to leave Zuccotti if they wanted to avoid arrest. "They gave us one quick warning and then just came in, hundreds of people," he said.

Israelis Agree Iran Hasn't Decided on Atom Bomb

BY AMY TEIBEL
Associated Press

JERUSALEM • Despite saber-rattling from Jerusalem, Israeli officials now agree with the U.S. assessment that Tehran has not yet decided on the actual construction of a nuclear bomb, according to senior Israeli government and defense figures.

Even so, there is great concern in Israel about leaving Iran "on the cusp" of a bomb — explaining why Israel continues to hint at a military attack on Iran's nuclear installations before it moves enough of them underground to protect them from Israel's bombs.

Israel's leaders have been charging in no uncertain terms for years that Iran is trying to build nuclear weapons. Though officials say they accept the more nuanced American view, they warn that it is just a matter of semantics, because an Iran on the verge of being able to build a bomb would still be a danger.

The United States is playing up its assessment that Iran has not made its final decision in a public campaign to persuade Israel to call off any attack plan and allow the increasingly harsh sanctions against Iran time to persuade Tehran to back down.

The concern — which is widely shared in Israel as part of a complex calculation — is of an Iranian retaliation that might spark regional conflict and send oil prices soaring, at a time when the world economy is already struggling and U.S. presidential elections loom.

Also in the equation are concerns about the ability of the Israeli home front to withstand a sustained barrage of Iranian missiles fired in retaliation. Iranian surrogates Hezbollah in Lebanon and Hamas in the Gaza Strip could also bombard Israel with thousands of rockets, and U.S. troops in the Gulf region could also become targets.

Several senior Israeli officials who spoke in recent days to The Associated Press said Israel has come around to the U.S. view that no final decision to build a bomb has been made by Iran. The officials, who are privy to intelligence and to the discussion about the Iranian program, said this is the prevailing view in the intelligence community, but there are also questions about whether Tehran might be hiding specific bomb making operations.

The concern, they said, is about allowing the Iranian program to reach the point where there is enough enriched weapons grade material that a bomb could quickly be assembled, within a year.

Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu said Sunday, "Iran, whose leader foments terrorism and violence around the globe and calls for our destruction ... this regime must never be allowed to have nuclear weapons."

Israel officials have said that with Iran moving its installations underground, Israel's level of bunker-busting capability leaves it with a window of no more than several months to act effectively. The United States, with more powerful bombs, would have a much longer period — but leaders here are loathe to be entirely dependent on U.S. determination on the issue.

The suspicion in Israel is that the Iranians have held off on a decision in order to deny Israel — and other countries — the pretext for an attack, officials said, noting that to a certain extent the matter is semantic and therefore secondary.

All the officials spoke on condition of anonymity because the subject is deemed too delicate to be discussed on the record, and the government has ordered silence.

Israel views Iran as a threat to its survival and, like the West, sees Tehran's ramped-up enrichment of uranium, a key element of bomb making, as undercutting its claims that its nuclear program is purely civilian. The U.N. nuclear agency cited its concerns about Iran's ultimate designs in reports, but notes its inspectors have found no direct evidence that Iran is moving toward an atomic weapon.

Netanyahu ratcheted up the tough talk this month, emphasizing during a White House visit and in a high-profile speech at home that Israel was prepared to act alone if necessary, even over U.S. objections.

In advance of Netanyahu's White House visit and during a speech to a powerful pro-Israel lobby, President Barack Obama took an increasingly assertive tone about U.S. refusal to tolerate a nuclear Iran and willingness to block that militarily.

Still, he tempered this tone by saying there was "too much loose talk of war" and emphasized his preference for diplomacy and sanctions. Secretary of State Hillary Rodham Clinton reiterated shortly before Netanyahu arrived in Washington the prevailing U.S. view that Tehran has not decided to produce weapons.

Santorum, Hoping to Become 2nd Catholic U.S. President, Struggles to Win over GOP Catholics

SAN JUAN, Puerto Rico • At El Sendero De La Cruz evangelical church, Rick Santorum sought prayers along with votes. He told the San Juan congregation that he felt "very blessed" to be with people of faith and said he can withstand the demands of campaigning because of the many people like them he meets while running for president.

"The first thing they almost always say to me, 'I'm praying for you,'" Santorum said. "It works."

It's the kind of spirit-infused language that is helping Santorum connect with evangelical Republicans, who have fueled his strong showing in state after state. Yet, in one of the more puzzling developments among many in the GOP contest, he's nowhere near as successful with his fellow Roman Catholics.

Across all states where Republican primary voters were asked their religion in exit polls, Mitt Romney, a Mormon, trounced Santorum among Catholics, with an average margin of victory above 20 percentage points. Even in Southern states, where Romney has struggled, Catholics broke his way.

Yemen: More Than 2,000 Killed in Yearlong Turmoil, Many Times Estimates of Rights Groups

SANAA, Yemen • More than 2,000 people have been killed in a year of political turmoil that led to the resignation of Yemen's longtime president, the government disclosed Sunday. The figure is much higher than human rights groups estimated.

The government released its first casualty figures on a day when crowds of protesters were marking one year since a particularly bloody day, when dozens were killed.

Yemen's Ministry of Human Rights said the figure of at least 2,000 includes both unarmed protesters and military defectors, as well as more than 120 children. It said 22,000 people were wounded over the past year.

The London-based human rights group Amnesty International estimated earlier this year that 200 protesters had been killed in the uprising.

The government of Ali Abdullah Saleh, who stepped down as president last month after more than three decades in power, never released casualty figures.

Alternate Juror in Rutgers Webcam Spying Case Disagrees with Verdict on Anti-gay Intimidation

NEW BRUNSWICK, N.J. • An alternate juror in the trial of a former Rutgers University student convicted in a webcam spying episode that ended in his gay roommate's suicide said he disagrees with the verdict.

James Downey told The Record newspaper on Saturday that he wouldn't have voted to convict Dharun Ravi on any charges related to allegations that his actions were motivated by anti-gay bias.

Prosecutors said Ravi set up his webcam in his dorm room and watched Tyler Clementi kissing another man on Sept. 19, 2010, then tweeted about it and excitedly tried to catch Clementi in the act again two days later. A half dozen students were believed to have seen the live video of the kissing; no video was taken the second time.

KESELOWSKI DOMINATES TO WIN AT BRISTOL

ASSOCIATED PRESS
BRISTOL, Tenn. • Brad Keselowski used Bristol Motor Speedway last fall to cement his spot in NASCAR's championship race. Back at the track Sunday, Keselowski again made his way to Victory Lane. And he again began to think about a Sprint Cup title. Keselowski led a career-best and race-high 231 laps, then held off Daytona 500 winner Matt Kenseth on a late restart to cruise to his first victory of the season. "What can I say? I love Bristol and Bristol loves me," said Keselowski, who immediately began taking pictures in Victory Lane to send to Twitter. "The goal at Penske Racing is to win a Sprint Cup championship, and one win certainly doesn't achieve that, but it's a great step." The Chase for the Sprint Cup championship has a wild-card provisional for the winningest driver not otherwise eligible. Keselowski's win at Bristol last August was his third of the season and gave him the provisional that allowed him to race for the title. Now, just a month into the season, he's focused on collecting victories. "One win is good; two

Yore Fights Through Injury to Compete

BY DIANE PHILBIN
Times-News writer
TWIN FALLS • Paige Yore of Weber State University was not about to let an injury stop her from competing in the Rocky Mountain Regional Rodeo on Thursday and the 36th Annual CSI Intercollegiate Rodeo on Friday and Saturday at the College of Southern Idaho. Despite suffering a broken hand on Tuesday when her trailer door was blown shut on her right hand, the competitive Yore didn't bow out from the draw in any of the three events — breakaway, goats or team roping — in which she was scheduled to compete. "No matter what, I've always been competitive," said Yore. "It started out with rock, paper and scissors. Growing up, I was around rodeo when my dad was rodeoing." After graduating from Declo High School, Yore spent time at CSI for a couple of years before moving on to Weber State University. "I really like it at Weber State," said Yore. "Dennis (Montgomery) treats me good and it's close to home. But it was good to be home this week."

Coming into the weekend at CSI, Yore sat second in the Rocky Mountain Regional standings in team roping (heeler), 12th in breakaway and 13th in goat tying. In the national standings, she was 21st in team roping (heeler). "I needed a good solid run (Saturday)," said Yore who qualified for the Saturday night short-round after a 7.3-second run in goat tying. "I figured in goat tying, that it was going to hurt for seven seconds no matter if you did good or bad." A 7.9-second run in the short-round on Saturday night gave her a combined time of 15.2 seconds that left her in seventh place, ending up only .1 seconds out of the top six, and took her out of the running for any further points. Yore feels that college has been a good experience in making her a better and a more cooperative person. She cherishes the many friends she has made in rodeo and keeping those friendships is important to her. She lives by the Golden Rule: Treat everyone how you want to be treated. She believes the success she has found in rodeo comes from staying

NJCAA Tourney May Get New Lease on Life

"Toto, I've got a feeling we're not in Kansas anymore." — Dorothy, from The Wizard of Oz

This is the one week out of the year where there's no place like Kansas — Hutchinson, Kan. This corner has covered NCAA tournaments and NBA playoff series. But there is nothing in post-season basketball like the 8 p.m. game on Tuesday night, when the Kansas representative takes the floor in its first-round game of the NJCAA Tournament. In 2009, from my seat on press row right next to the Highland (Ill.) CC bench, I watched quite an entertaining show from head coach Pete Norman, who was working the officials and letting them know his team was playing five-on-eight against another Kansas school, Garden City. "I'm tired of this typical Kansas bull*!" screamed Norman through gritted teeth as an official walked away from him late in the game. Meanwhile, Garden City — a clearly inferior team that had pulled off a series of upsets just to make it to Hutch — won by three. And then there are the games that are memorable for other reasons. Games that never should have happened if not for an antiquated tournament format that antiquated tournament organizers insisted on keeping decades after it was clear there was a better way to do it. Can you imagine two No. 1 seeds playing in the first round of the NCAA Tournament? You're probably thinking that's the most absurd idea on the planet. Yet you had exactly that in 2009 when Chipola, again ranked No. 1 with a 31-1 record, drew Southwest Tennessee in the opening round.

The Saluqis were 25-1 and ranked in the top five. Meanwhile, the winner of that game would face the winner of Cape Fear (N.C.) and Lamar (Colo.), who had combined to lose 23 games. While ... lamenting? ... his fate three years ago, Norman took aim at the wrong targets. Fortunately, it appears the NJCAA is taking control of its marquee tournament, away from American Legion Post 68. Yes, you read that right. For decades, the local American Legion post has dictated the terms of a national basketball tournament. In fairness, it's because

NORTH CAROLINA STATE'S ALEX JOHNSON IS EMBRACED BY A TEAMMATE AFTER THEIR TEAM'S 66-63 UPSET WIN OVER GEORGETOWN IN THE THIRD ROUND OF THE NCAA TOURNAMENT ON SUNDAY.

No. 11 seed North Carolina State gets to Sweet 16 for first time since 2005

COLUMBUS, Ohio • It's been a long time since North Carolina State was mentioned in the same breath with the elite programs in the nation — let alone its own state. Now, a new coach and a new attitude have the Wolfpack faithful harkening back to the glory days of David Thompson and Jim Valvano. Lorenzo Brown hit three free throws in the final 10.6 seconds and North Carolina State returned to the round of 16 with a 66-63 upset of third-seeded Georgetown in the NCAA tournament on Sunday. "When I went to Alabama as the head coach at the age of 33, John Wooden told me one time, he said, 'Coach, don't give them too much too fast. They might start expecting that every year,' first-year Wolfpack coach Mark Gottfried said with a grin. Then, with impeccable timing, he added: "Well, we

Baylor Women Display Balance

BOWLING GREEN, Ohio • Brittney Griner was imposing as usual, and top-seeded Baylor showed the kind of offensive balance the Lady Bears don't always get credit for. Griner scored 14 points in only 22 minutes, and Baylor rolled to an 81-40 win over 16th-seeded UC Santa Barbara in the Des Moines Regional on Sunday. Brooklyn Pope scored 13 points for the Lady Bears and Destiny Williams added 12. Odyssey Sims contributed 10. Baylor (35-0) has not lost since falling in the quarterfinals of last year's NCAA tournament. Emilie Johnson scored 10 points for UCSB (17-16), but the Gauchos were as overmatched as expected. They swarmed Griner early and prevented her from dominating, but Baylor has plenty of other options. The Lady Bears move on to the second round, where they'll face ninth-seeded Florida on Tuesday night. Griner, the towering center who wowed the crowd by dunking during warmups, went 7 for 11 during the game. UCSB's Kirsten Tillemann was physical with Griner and drew an early offensive foul on the 6-foot-8 star. The Gauchos at times had two players fronting Griner to prevent Baylor from passing her the ball, but other players took advantage for the Lady Bears. Baylor's defense was stifling throughout. COLUMBUS, Ohio • Draymond Green scored 16 points with 13 rebounds and set up Keith Appling's crucial 3-pointer with 1:34 left, giving top-seeded Michigan State a 65-61 win over Saint Louis on Sunday and sending the Spartans to the round of 16 in the NCAA tournament.

Michigan State will play No. 4 seed Louisville in the West Regional semifinals Thursday in Phoenix.

Appling added 19 points for the Spartans (29-7), who had to scrap their way past the ninth-seeded Billikens (26-8). Saint Louis controlled the tempo but never got a complete handle on Green, Michigan State's superb senior. He added six assists and even helped mop up sweat off the floor in the final minute.

No. 7 FLORIDA 84, No. 15 NORFOLK STATE 50 OMAHA, Neb. • Kenny Boynton scored 20 points and Florida routed Norfolk State to reach the regional semifinals of the NCAA tournament for the second straight year.

Norfolk State shook up the West Regional when it upset No. 2 seed Missouri 86-84 on Friday and was trying to become the first 15 seed to reach the round of 16.

No. 1 NORTH CAROLINA 87, No. 8 CREIGHTON 73 GREENSBORO, N.C.

• John Henson proved he's healthy enough to help North Carolina's latest push for the Final Four. It remains to be seen if Kendall Marshall will be able to help the Tar Heels.

Henson had 13 points, 10 rebounds and four blocks in his return from a wrist injury, but Marshall broke a bone in his right wrist during the second half of North Carolina's third-round victory over Creighton.

No. 13 OHIO 62, No. 12 SOUTH FLORIDA 56 NASHVILLE, Tenn. • Walter Offutt scored 21 points, D.J. Cooper had 19 and Ohio beat South Florida to advance to the regional semifinals.

The Bobcats (29-7) will play No. 1 seed North Carolina in their second trip to the round of 16.

No. 2 KANSAS 63, No. 10 PURDUE 60 OMAHA, Neb. • Elijah Johnson scored 18 points, includ-

Thomas Robinson had 11 points and 13 rebounds for the Jayhawks (29-6), who were down by 10 in the second half but still managed to advance to St. Louis. They'll play No. 11 seed North Carolina State on Friday in the Midwest Regional semifinals.

No. 11 NORTH CAROLINA STATE 66, No. 3 GEORGETOWN 63 COLUMBUS, Ohio • Lorenzo Brown hit three free throws in the final 10.6 seconds and North Carolina State conjured up its glorious tradition by upsetting Georgetown.

The Wolfpack (24-12) had to survive a furious comeback by the Hoyas (24-9) and only were assured of the win when Jason Clark's hurried 3-point attempt from the right wing was off the mark at the buzzer.

SOUTH REGIONAL

No. 10 XAVIER 70, No. 15 LEHIGH 58 GREENSBORO, N.C. • Senior center Kenny Frease scored a career-high 25 points to go with 12 rebounds and Xavier knocked off upset-minded Lehigh to reach the round of 16 for the fourth time in five years.

Lehigh, which stunned No. 2 seed Duke on Friday, was looking to become the first 15 seed to make it to the regional semifinals. But the 7-foot Frease stood in the way.

the American Legion has done so much right with the tournament that it has been allowed to run the show for so many years. The tournament hosts are great people and in my years of covering the tournament, no request has gone unfulfilled.

But the American Legion struck out in one key aspect: With the explosion in televised sports, combined with the Internet and what it has done to bring recruiting news to the masses, it failed miserably to increase the tournament's profile.

There's no reason for the NJCAA semifinals and finals not to be on a major cable network. If the NAIA national championship is shown on CBS College Sports, so should the NJCAA men's final. Shoot, make it a package deal and bring along the women's title game, held just 90 miles away in Salina.

Thankfully, change could be just around the corner. There is a proposal to expand the men's tournament to 24 teams and to seed the entries. That means no more matchups of top-five teams in the first round. Or having five of the nation's top eight teams in the top half of the bracket, while the bottom half has just one such team, as is the case this year.

In case you're wondering about the other two teams, they didn't qualify, but under the new format almost certainly would have been selected as at-large teams.

The proposal would eliminate the consolation games — and the prospect of having teams come from across the country for just one game is a very real concern for JUCO athletic directors — but would increase the odds of a star-studded title game, with perhaps more than a dozen Division I recruits on both rosters combined.

Think the NJCAA couldn't sell that for a pretty penny to a TV network? Think schools like College of Southern Idaho couldn't somehow benefit? You can't watch Baylor basketball on ESPN this year without a mention of the CSI program. What about giving the entire nation a chance to watch CSI?

It's time for the NJCAA Tournament to make a long overdue step toward being nationally relevant. Seeding the teams and expanding the bracket is a good first step.

Patrick Sheltra is the sports editor of the Times-News and never had the pleasure of seeing CSI play in Hutchinson. Reach him via email at psheltra@magicvalley.com, on Twitter @TimesNewsSE or on Facebook by searching for Times-News Patrick Sheltra.

failed in that category already?"

The Wolfpack (24-12) will play Purdue or Kansas on Friday in St. Louis.

A lowly 11th seed coming in, they had to survive a furious comeback by the Hoyas (24-9) that ended when Jason Clark's hurried 3-point attempt from the right wing was off the mark at the buzzer.

"We pushed the ball up the court, tried to get a last shot," Clark said, his eyes brimming with tears. "I felt like it had a chance, but it didn't."

It's a return to the big stage for a program that has been lost in the rather large shadows cast by neighboring powers Duke and North Carolina. The Wolfpack won national titles in 1974 with Thompson and in 1983 on Lorenzo Charles' dramatic last-second putback of Dereck Whittenburg's wild shot, leading to coach Valvano's memorable celebration.

But maybe the new Wolfpack have turned a corner.

"We always talk about how we have such a great history at NC State," Gottfried said. "But it's also time to build some new history."

C.J. Williams, Scott Wood and C.J. Leslie each had 14 points, and Brown added 12 for the Wolfpack, who earned their first trip to the round of 16 since 2005.

The Hoyas (24-9), riding the shooting of Hollis Thompson, who had 23 points, drew to 63-61 before freshman Otto Porter missed a 15-foot jumper under pressure with 14 seconds left.

Brown, a 74-percent shooter at the line, made two foul shots with 10.6 seconds left for a 65-61 lead. Clark, who finished with 10 points, then went the length of the court for a layup before Brown was fouled again with 4.6 seconds left. He hit the first but missed the second, and the Hoyas raced down court for a potential tying 3.

They got a great look, with Clark, defended by Williams, stopping and getting off a rushed shot that was wide of the mark.

"I was just praying it wasn't going in," Williams said. And it didn't.

It was another bitter disappointment for Georgetown, also a legendary program trying to reclaim a glowing legacy. The Hoyas were knocked out in their first game in each of the previous two NCAA tournaments, and the players said they had finally shed the stigma of those defeats with a 74-59 victory over Belmont on Friday.

NOTICE

The Department of Health and Welfare is seeking to identify community-based nonprofits and government agencies that show the interest, ability and financial stability to implement and operate an Individual Development Account (IDA) Program in Idaho. IDA projects help participants save earned income in special-purpose, matched savings accounts. Every dollar in savings deposited into an IDA by participants is matched by the project, promoting savings and enabling participants to acquire a lasting asset. Upon successful completion of the program, IDA project families use their savings, including the matching funds, to achieve any of three objectives: acquiring a first home; capitalizing a small business; or enrolling in postsecondary education or training.

All IDA projects must provide basic financial management training and supportive services, such as financial education on owning and managing a bank account or a credit card; credit counseling and repair; guidance in accessing refundable tax credits, including the Earned Income Tax Credit and the Child Tax Credit; and specialized training in owning particular assets for the long term. Subgrantees spending $500,000.00 or more in federal funds during the subgrantee's fiscal year shall have an audit performed in accordance with Circular A-133 and provide proof.

The Department will award up to $100,000 per year to the successful agency. Awards may be made to multiple agencies. Each subgrant will be awarded for a 2-year period. Continuation and/or expansion of IDAs subgrants will be dependent on the availability of federal funding. Funding for this program comes from the Temporary Assistance for Needy Families (TANF) Block Grant CFDA# 93.558.

Applications to apply for an IDA subgrant may be obtained at Health and Welfare website: <http://healthandwelfare.idaho.gov/FoodCashAssistance/CashAssistance/CashAssistanceforFamilies/tabid/172/Default.aspx>.

Proposals must be received by Program Manager: Rosie Andueza at the Department of Health and Welfare at anduezar@dhw.idaho.gov; or by mail at 450 W. State Street, Boise, ID 83720 by 5:00 pm Mountain Standard Time Friday April 20th, 2012.

Today is Monday, March 19, the 79th day of 2012. There are 287 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight:
On March 19, 1962, Bob Dylan's first album, eponymously titled "Bob Dylan," was released by Columbia Records. (Of the 13 songs recorded for the album, two were Dylan originals: "Talkin' New York" and "Song to Woody," a tribute to Woody Guthrie.)

TODAY IN HISTORY

On this date:
In 1687, French explorer Rene-Robert Cavelier, Sieur de La Salle — the first European to navigate the length of the Mississippi River — was murdered by mutineers in present-day Texas.

In 1859, the opera "Faust" by Charles Gounod premiered in Paris.

In 1911, the first International Women's Day was observed with rallies and parades in Germany, Austria, Denmark and Switzerland.

In 1918, Congress approved Daylight-Saving Time.

In 1920, the Senate rejected, for a second time, the Treaty of Versailles (veh-SY') by a vote of 49 in favor, 35 against, falling short of the two-thirds majority needed for approval.

In 1931, Nevada Governor Fred B. Balzar signed a measure legalizing casino gambling.

In 1942, during World War II, President Franklin D. Roosevelt ordered men between the ages of 45 and 64, inclusive, to register for non-military duty.

In 1945, 724 people were killed when a Japanese dive bomber attacked the carrier USS Franklin off Japan; the ship, however, was saved. Adolf Hitler issued his so-called "Nero Decree," ordering the destruction of German facilities that could fall into Allied hands.

In 1951, Herman Wouk's World War II novel "The Caine Mutiny" was first published.

In 1979, the U.S. House of Representatives began televising its day-to-day business.

In 1987, televangelist Jim Bakker resigned as chairman of his PTL ministry organization amid a sex and money scandal involving Jessica Hahn, a former church secretary.

In 2003, President George W. Bush ordered the start of war against Iraq. (Because of the time difference, it was early March 20 in Iraq.)

Ten years ago: U.S. intelligence analyst Ana Belen Montes pleaded guilty in federal court to spying for Cuba; she was later sentenced to 25 years in prison. Hewlett-Packard chief Carly Fiorina claimed victory in the nasty proxy fight over the $20 billion purchase of Compaq Computer Corp.

Five years ago: President George W. Bush marked the fourth anniversary of the start of the Iraq war with a plea for patience to let his revised battle plan work; Congress' new Democratic leaders retorted that no patience remained. A methane gas explosion in a Siberian coal mine killed 110 workers. Death claimed rhythm-and-blues singer-songwriter Luther Ingram at age 69 and TV performer Calvert DeForest, aka "Larry 'Bud' Melman," at age 85.

DEAR ABBY: I am an amateur playwright. Our local theater sponsors an annual playwriting contest. The prize isn't monetary, but something far more important to an author — a full-scale production of the play.

DEAR ABBY
Jeanne Phillips

I have won this prize four times — more than any other writer in the history of the contest. But is my family impressed? Not at all! My wife told me she thinks I write everything the same way and have simply repeated myself four times. Her put-downs are deeply hurtful.

I am up in years. It's unlikely I will ever again win this prize. So how do I respond to such indifference? What do you do when you feel you have accomplished something important and the response is, "So, what else is new?"

— LOOKING FOR VALIDATION IN FLORIDA

DEAR LOOKING FOR VALIDATION: My hat's off to you. That you have won this prize more than any other writer in the history of the contest is a notable achievement, and one that's not likely to be matched for a long time — if ever. Attend the production, take your well-earned bow in the spotlight, and accept that the less you look to your wife for validation, the happier your life will be.

DEAR ABBY: About a year ago, my fiancée, "Jayne," re-connected with her childhood friend through Facebook.

"Christine" is gay, unattached and very attractive. She has a great personality, and everyone who meets her seems to be attracted to her. Jayne and Christine have had overnights together. I have asked my fiancée if Christine has ever made advances toward her and she said no. I want to believe her, but part of me is wary.

They are now planning to go on a trip for a few days to an island. Jayne says she loves me and that I have nothing to be jealous about. Am I being naive? What should I do?

DEAR LEFT BEHIND: Believe it or not, gay people are capable of platonic friendships with members of the same sex, just as straight people can have platonic relationships with people of the opposite sex. The bottom line question is, do you trust your fiancée? If the answer is you're not sure, then you should rethink the engagement.

DEAR ABBY: My brother has systematically taken over my parents' lives for the past 20 years. He uses his depression and agoraphobia as an excuse not to lead his own life. He lives on government disability payments, and the majority of his support comes from my parents, whom he lives with and mooches off of. He doesn't help them around the house or contribute in any way. He refuses to get treatment for his disorders.

How can I help my parents finally be free of him? They are fast approaching 70 years old. Talking to my brother is useless, as he becomes extremely hostile and threatens to kill himself. My parents deserve some rest at their age.

— ANONYMOUS IN NEW YORK

DEAR ANONYMOUS: At the rate they're going, your parents may not get the rest they deserve until they're in the great beyond. Unless they are willing to take a stand and make living with them conditional upon your brother getting counseling and medication for his mental illness, nothing will change.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE® Bobby Wolff

"The best laid schemes o' mice an' men Gang aft a-gley."
— Robert Burns

The partnership between two of the world's greats, Zia Mahmood and Bob Hamman, will be coming to an end later this year, after a seven-year run in which they won a Bermuda Bowl and several national titles. Both players are capable of extremely inventive card-play, and though they may not have gelled perfectly as a pair in the bidding, they will leave behind a treasure trove of deals for the journalists.

Take the following deal from the 2011 Spingold, when they came from behind to defeat the O'Rourke team. Check out the full hand, and tell me which side you would fancy if you knew one table had played in five spades and the other in six spades.

Here's the full story: In the other room, where Hamman's teammates sat North-South, Eddie Wold (West) opened one heart and Roger Bates (East) raised to two hearts when North doubled. Now North-South reached five spades in competition, but were never close to the slam.

In the other room the auction was as shown. Hamman led the heart ace against six spades ... and Mahmood dropped the king! Now when Hamman continued with a second heart, can you blame declarer for ruffing high, expecting hearts to be 8-1 and hoping trumps were not 3-0? This was the only way to snatch defeat from the jaws of victory, but I might have done the same thing myself. And all credit to Mahmood for finding the false-card that tipped the scales in his favor.

ANSWER: The opponents have had a limited auction in which suits do not appear to be lying well for them, so my instincts are to try to produce a passive defense. With no particular confidence, I'd lead the heart nine, expecting that while it might give declarer a tempo, it is relatively unlikely to finesse partner out of an intermediate honor. My second choice would be a spade rather than a club.

IF MARCH 19 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY: Logic is your friend during the next four to six weeks. Keep a pencil by your side and write down your thoughts, because one of your ideas might be extremely useful in the future. If you have not been sure about making a commitment, mid-July is the best time to make a crucial decision because the most beneficial path will become clear to you. That is also a good time to take care of health matters or launch important projects. You have the help of business expertise on your side in August.

HOROSCOPE

Jeraldine Saunders

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Step up to the plate. While others quibble over the proper direction to take, you can assume control of the situation. Your instincts are in tune with the surroundings so your judgment will be right on the mark.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Bury the hatchet. There's no point in harboring ill will when there is much more to be gained through reconciliation. Take the first step toward achieving peace and the other party will fall into line.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Make sure that someone isn't just saying what you want to hear. Not everyone has your best interests at heart so proceed with care. When in doubt, seek advice from a trusted and experienced adviser.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): You don't have to do it the hard way. If current methods are making your work seem too arduous, it may be time to adopt a simpler routine. Improve your productivity by experimenting with a new approach.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Where there's a will, there's a way. Any obstacle can be overcome by careful planning and preparation so there's no reason you can't achieve your current goal no matter how difficult it may seem now.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Don't keep all your eggs in one basket. Devoting all your efforts in one direction could leave you empty handed if plans fall through. Have a back-up plan just in case things don't go your way today.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Stand apart from the crowd and attract attention. Go the extra yard to shine above the rest and you'll draw the recognition that you deserve. Just going through the motions won't get you anywhere.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Put the pedal to the metal and don't look back. Look for opportunities in the least likely facets of your life and you will find them. If you're not moving forward, you're just not trying hard enough.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Sometimes love does mean having to say you're sorry, especially when you are in the wrong. Prove to your loved one that you are still deserving of affection and all will be forgiven.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): It's time to upgrade old routines. Times have changed; what has worked for you in the past may not work so well now. Your instincts are honed to a sharp edge; use them to improve your situation.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Opportunity lurks at every corner. However, these opportunities will not benefit you unless you are perceptive enough to seek them out. Keep your eyes peeled and you will reap the rewards.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): If someone offers you their two cents, be wise and take it. Valuable knowledge can be gained if you simply listen. Conversation can yield insights and perspectives that set you on the road to success.
