Don't Shrug (Off) the Bug

A dry spring means fewer pests, but disease risks are still high.

BY KIMBERLEE KRUESI
kkruesi@magicvalley.com

TWIN FALLS • Thanks to dry spring conditions, mosquito populations aren't expected to thrive this summer. But don't let the warm weather fool you into thinking it's safe to go out without bug spray.

Higher temperatures increase the chances of Twin Falls County seeing more mosquitoes carrying West Nile virus, said Kirk Tubbs, manager of the Twin Falls County Pest Abatement District.

With less water, birds and pests tend to flock to the few water sources they know are available. This creates a higher chance of an infected bird with West Nile virus to infect a larger pool of potential carriers.

"The threat has gone up," Tubbs said. "So there may be less habitat for mosquitoes this year but that doesn't mean people shouldn't be worried."

To help stay on top of tracking where and when TFCPAD sprays for pests, the county purchased new GPS tracking equipment to monitor where it applies pesticides.

The purchase was needed with the enforcement of a new permit requirement from the Environmental Protection Agency. The

Beat the Mosquitoes

To help prevent a mosquito problem, the TFCPAD offers these tips:

- Drain any containers with standing water. This includes draining small swimming pools, buckets or tires.
- Place goldfish in livestock watering troughs to eat mosquito larva.
- Don't overwater. Wait for the ground to dry between watering cycles for fields or grass areas.

Jerome Man Prepares to Deliver Supplies to Mexico

BY JULIE WOOTTON
jwootton@magicvalley.com

JEROME • When Jerome resident Todd Jaynes started collecting emergency response and medical equipment to distribute in Mexico, he didn't anticipate just how much the project would grow.

Jaynes started making donations to communities in Mexico about five years ago through his Care Convoy project. He goes across the border a few times a year to work as a paramedic at the Baja 500 and 1,000 motor races.

Sometimes, fire departments and emergency medical service agencies receive grants to update equipment or there's just a change in regulations.

Rather than throw away equipment that's still usable, Jaynes said, why not give it to agencies and organizations in Mexico that need it?

"It's kind of like the ultimate recycling," he said.

Now, the organization's scope has expanded to include other donations such as clothing, as well as old computers to give to boarding schools.

"We don't care about politics or religion," Jaynes said about the donations. "It's just whoever needs them."

ners, formed about two-and-a-half-years ago.

Jaynes and his wife Merry are preparing for a weeklong trip to Mexico later this month to donate more supplies. They'll kick off the trip with a send-off breakfast at 9 a.m. May 28 at The Depot Grill in Twin Falls.

There's still time to help. Jaynes said he'd welcome any volunteers who want to come, especially those with a pickup truck who can deliver donations.

In addition to delivering donations during the trip, Jaynes will work as a paramedic at the SCORE Baja 500 races in Ensenada. It's something he's done for 14 years.

Elko Pilot Uninjured in Twin Falls Helicopter Crash

BY STEVE KADEL
skadel@magicvalley.com

TWIN FALLS • Michael Lattin of Elko, Nev., walked away uninjured after the helicopter he was piloting crashed just south of Twin Falls Regional Airport about 9 a.m. Sunday.

Lattin was inbound alone when he alerted the control tower that he had mechanical problems. Ed Morris of Twin Falls Fire Department, who was first on the scene, said Lattin told him he thought a rotor bearing went out.

"He was not able to control the main rotor," Morris said, adding there was no fuel leak or fire.

Morris said the small-piston 'Endstrom' model was operated by Canyon Construction of Elko, but he did not know whether Lattin was an employee or owner of the company.

Lattin, described by other responders as an experienced pilot, performed calmly under pressure, Morris said. He was able to lower the helicopter enough before losing control that the cockpit stayed intact upon impact.

"He did a really good job," Morris said.

The helicopter crashed in an agricultural field near 2800 East Road and 3300 North Road.

Twin Falls City Council Plans to Discuss Budget, Contracts

BY MELISSA DAVLIN
mdavlin@magicvalley.com

TWIN FALLS • As the city gears up to set its budget for fiscal year 2013, the Twin Falls City Council will discuss its fiscal priorities tonight at their weekly meeting.

The discussion is one of a few issues on the agenda for tonight, including awarding a contract to a Twin Falls contractor.

Starting Tuesday, the council will meet with city officials to discuss the city's budget needs and potential long-term strategies for accomplishing goals. At last week's meeting, council members heard a presentation on possible approaches they could take for budget-setting. This week, they'll talk about their priorities.

The council will also discuss a potential $75,478 contract between the city and Stutzman Inc. for work relating to Northwest Sewer Project. The project will expand sewer capacity to accommodate the new Chobani factory.

Also tonight, the council will consider:

- Deferring parking lot paving and the storm water retention system at the Eastside Baptist Church.

- A special events application for Wednesday Night Market and Downtown Alive.

- Swearing in four new police officers.

Kill Order Issued for Two Wolves after Attack

KETCHUM (AP) • A kill order has been issued for two adult wolves after a sheep rancher reported ewes were killed, a central Idaho wildlife official said.

Jerome Hansen of the Idaho Department of Fish and Game said the wolves reported to have killed the ewes are from the Little Wood Pack near Carey.

Carey-area ranch owner John Peavey told the Idaho Mountain Express that he now has a dozen orphan lambs after the wolf attack last week.

"You try to find another home for them, but it's a lot of work and effort and a lot of times it doesn't work and you lose the lambs," Peavey said.

Wildlife officials killed three wolves at the Flat Top Ranch property last year after they killed a calf.

Suzanne Stone of Defenders of Wildlife said that Peavey has pregnant ewes and recently lambbed sheep that are split into small groups over large areas, many unguarded. She said coyotes, bears and mountain lions also have been killed around the ranch.

"It's almost like setting the picnic table, ringing the dinner bell and shooting the guests," she said. "It's not a question of will they have (predation), it's a question of how much they will lose."

She said the group and Peavey are looking at methods for nonlethal control. Peavey said he's moved the sheep and is willing to try anything to stop the attacks.

"If what they've got is going to work, that's fine," he said. "It's better than losing momma sheep and having orphaned lambs around?"

Patrick Graham is a field technician with the Wood River Wolf Project, started by Defenders of Wildlife. He's tracking wolf packs in preparation for the project's start in June.

It meshes well with his 15-year background as a paramedic. During his career in south-central Idaho, he set up Lincoln County's ambulance system and worked as a paramedic for the Jerome Fire Department.

A couple of years ago, Jaynes left his job in Jerome to focus on Care Convoy. He also works as a substitute teacher.

Even though his work is focused on communities in Mexico, Jaynes has his sights on helping those in other countries too.

Jaynes said he'd like to send equipment to other countries with a need. He'll fill a container to ship anywhere if the country can pay the shipping cost.

What's Care Convoy?

After becoming affiliated with Global Peace Partners in 2010, Care Convoy continues to increase the amount of items distributed in Mexico.

In 2010, Jaynes distributed about $70,000 in fire and ambulance equipment. Then, in 2011, the amount jumped to about $2 million in donations.

So far this year, Jaynes has taken about $1.2 million in supplies to Mexico.

Jaynes said his experience as a paramedic allows him to have good contacts with area fire departments to seek donations. There's also a long list of local business sponsors, he said.

Jaynes said some emergency responders in Mexico lack basic equipment, such as an ambulance or fire protective gear.

Over the years, he has distributed donated items such as turnouts, hospital beds, dental X-ray equipment, walkers and oxygen

How to Help

Monetary donations:

Todd Jaynes, Care Convoy organizer, said it's not usually a problem to get equipment donations. However, it's harder to seek cash donations to cover the cost of getting to Mexico to distribute items.

Donations can be made to Care Convoy at any Wells Fargo location. There's also a link to donate on parent organization Global Peace Partners' website: www.glob-alpeacepartners.org.

Checks can be mailed to 1433 Winter Lane, Jerome, ID 83338.

Equipment donations: To find out how to donate supplies, call Jaynes at 490-0011.

Volunteering: Jaynes welcomes volunteers to come on a weeklong trip to Mexico at the end of the month to deliver donations. He's also seeking someone with a pickup truck who can help transport items.

tanks. One of the largest donations was an old ambulance from Lincoln County.

To store the items before they're delivered to Mexico, Twin Falls Storage has donated use of a unit.

Care Convoy picks up items in Idaho, Nevada, Utah and Arizona. Todd and Merry Jaynes do most of the pick-up work — oftentimes, en route to or from Mexico.

The equipment is put to use quickly — sometimes, even the day after it was donated.

Merry Jaynes took her first trip to Mexico last year. She said it was neat to see an emergency responder so excited to receive a Jaws of Life rescue tool.

"They were just so excited and so thrilled," she said.

Idaho, 21 Other States Join Campaign Finance Fight

BY MATT GOURAS

Associated Press

HELENA, Mont. • Twenty-two states and the District of Columbia are backing Montana in its fight to prevent the U.S. Supreme Court's 2010 Citizens United decision from being used to strike down state laws restricting corporate campaign spending.

The states led by New York are asking the high court to preserve Montana's state-level regulations on corporate political expenditures, according to a copy of a brief written by New York's attorney general's office and obtained by The Associated Press. The brief will be publicly released Monday.

The Supreme Court is being asked to reverse a state court's decision to uphold the Montana law. Virginia-based American Tradition Partnership is asking the nation's high court to rule without a hearing because the group says the state law conflicts directly with the Citizens United decision that removed the federal ban on corporate campaign spending.

The Supreme Court has blocked the Montana law until it can look at the case.

The Montana case has prompted critics to hope the court will reverse itself on the controversial Citizens United ruling. The 22 states and D.C. say the Montana law is sharply different from the federal issues in the Citizens United case, so the ruling shouldn't apply to Montana's or other state laws regulating corporate campaign spending.

But the states also said they would support a Supreme Court decision to reconsider portions of the Citizens United ruling either in a future case or in the Montana case, if the justices decide to take it on.

Legal observers say don't count on the Supreme Court reconsidering its decision.

"It is highly unlikely that the court would reverse its decision in Citizens United," said law professor Richard L. Hasen of the University of California-Irvine.

At best, the court would listen to arguments and might agree a clarification is needed to allow the Montana law to stand. But even that is a long shot, Hasen said.

Montana Attorney General Steve Bullock argues that political corruption in the Copper King era led to the state ban on corporate campaign spending. A clarification of Citizens United is needed to make clear that states can block certain political spending in the interest of limiting corruption, he said.

American Tradition Partnership argues that the state bans unfairly restrict the ability of corporations to engage in the political process that also affects them.

Bullock wrote in a brief to be released Monday that the state does not "ban" corporate political speech, rather, it regulates that speech by requiring the formation of political action committees.

The Democrat, who is running for governor, said the upstart political corporations hoping to take advantage of unfettered spending are merely "an anonymous conduit of unaccountable campaign spending."

Montana and the other states are asking the court to either let the Montana Supreme Court decision stand or to hold a full hearing. They argue laws like the one in Montana that bans political spending straight from corporate treasuries are needed to prevent corruption.

The other states, many with their own type of restrictions hanging in the balance, argue local restrictions are far different than the federal ban the court decided unconstitutional restricted free speech. Further, state elections are at much greater risk than federal elections of being dominated by corporate money, requiring tailored regulation, the states' court filing says.

"The federal law struck down in Citizens United applied only to elections for President and U.S. Congress,"

New York Attorney General Eric Schneiderman wrote on behalf of the states. "By contrast, Montana's law applies to a wide range of state and local offices, including judgeships and law enforcement positions such as sheriff and county prosecutor."

The joining states, unlike Montana, ask the court to go further and reconsider core findings in Citizens United. They argue, for instance, it was wrong for the court to say unlimited independent expenditures rarely cause corruption or the appearance of corruption.

And other critics of the Citizens United decision who believe the court was wrong to grant corporations constitutional rights, have intervened and asked the court to reverse itself.

"There is a growing bipartisan consensus that Citizens United needs to be overturned, and Montana is leading the way," said Peter Schurman, spokesman for a group called Free Speech For People. "The Supreme Court has an opportunity to revisit Citizens United here. That is important because there is evidence everywhere that unlimited spending in our elections creates both corruption and the appearance for corruption."

On Friday, Montana's case was given a boost when U.S. Sens. John McCain, R-Ariz., and Sheldon Whitehouse, D-D-R.I., signed on in support. The senators argue evidence following the Citizens United decision, where millions in unregulated money has poured into presidential elections, shows that large independent expenditures can lead to corruption.

The states who filed the brief in support of Montana are New York, Arkansas, California, Connecticut, Delaware, Hawaii, Idaho, Illinois, Iowa, Kentucky, Maryland, Massachusetts, Minnesota, Mississippi, Nevada, New Mexico, North Carolina, Rhode Island, Utah, Vermont, Washington, West Virginia and the District of Columbia.

Fort Hall Crash Injures Four Children, Two Adults

POCATELLO (AP) • Idaho State Police says four children and two adults were hospitalized following a two-car crash on US 91 near Fort Hall.

The crash occurred about 6 p.m. Saturday at the junction of Ellsworth Road.

Police say an 84-year-old man from Pocatello failed to yield as he turned off the highway and his vehicle collided with an oncoming vehicle driven by 34-year-old Joaquin Flores of Blackfoot. The Flores vehicle overturned.

Police says Flores, his wife, and four children were taken by ambulance to Portneuf Medical Center.

There was no immediate word on their conditions. The driver of the other vehicle wasn't injured.

Magic Valley's Students of the Week

Athlete • Dietrich Moriah Dill

Moriah participates in three sports and is a factor to be reckoned with in each. She was a member of the Idaho IA Division II state runner-up volleyball team. She was a First Team All Conference selection for the Northside Conference and named to the State Tournament All-Tournament First Team as a middle hitter. Moriah was also a member of the girls basketball team that capped off an undefeated season with a state championship in the IA Division II State Tournament. She was an integral part of helping her team to achieve back-to-back titles. She was a First Team All Northside Conference selection and named IA Division II Player of the Year for the second time. She participated on the Dietrich High School track team where she competed in the hurdles and relays.

Moriah has received an athletic scholarship from the College of Southern Idaho, where she will be a strong contributor and competitor on the womens basketball team for the 2012-2013 season.

Artist • Canyon Ridge Riane Richards

Riane is a very talented, hard-working student. She was nominated for her dedication and passion for painting. She currently has two paintings on display at the Magic Valley Art Center. She plans to major in art next year at Portland State University and minor in business. Riane has earned a scholarship for her excellent grades and exceptional citizenship through her high school years. She plans to graduate with a bachelor's degree in art.

Art is a very important aspect of Riane's life; it has always been there, and has slowly grown into one of her most-valued passions. She has been interested in art ever since elementary school in South Lake Tahoe, Calif. Riane remembers being immersed in art classes since she was in first grade. Her love for art continued to grow when she was at Robert Stuart working with Mr. Bryan.

An academic of the week was not available in time for publication.

How are the AAA students chosen? We asked guidance counselors from schools all over the Magic Valley to work with the teachers at their schools to come up with some of the best and brightest students they could find.

mandate requires pesticide operators to apply for a National Pollutant Discharge Elimination System permit before they can begin applying pesticides.

The EPA began enforcing the permit requirement last fall, but now pest control districts are scrambling to be in compliance before they begin applying pesticides to open water sources.

"We have 3,000 storm drains and each one required three pages of paperwork," Tubbs said. "It was time consuming but I think it's a good thing. People are going to have to be more accountable with this new permit."

TFCAPD has also been testing for West Nile virus for the past few weeks. Workers haven't found any cases yet, but they will continue to test throughout the summer.

On top of applying pesticides to kill mosquitoes, the district also sprays pesticides to reduce black fly populations.

Tubbs said not many pest control districts usually spray for black flies. However, he's made it a priority since the flies can carry diseases that hinder livestock health.

"It's going to be an interesting year," Tubbs said.

Twin Falls Fire Department Battalion Chief Jack Barnes, another responder, said Lattin was "an older gentleman" possibly in his late 50s, although his exact age was not available Sunday evening.

"He was up and around before any of us got there," Barnes said. "There were no big problems of any kind."

Federal Aviation Administration officials interviewed Lattin Sunday morning, and Twin Falls County Sheriff's Office representatives took photos of the wreckage. The FAA then released the helicopter to Lattin, and it was expected to be housed in an airport hangar temporarily.

Lattin had a predictable reaction to the close call, Barnes said.

"He was thankful."

Young Idaho Patient Fulfills Wish, Rides with Biker Gang

REXBURG (AP) • A wish by a 7-year-old eastern Idaho cancer patient to be in a motorcycle gang and that started with one man contacting a few friends expanded into nearly 400 leather-clad bikers from various clubs and surrounding states showing up to take part.

The Standard Journal reports that Wesley Johnson donned black clothing and green sunglasses on Saturday to ride along with the revving bikers on their route through Rexburg that included Main Street.

Johnson says seeing all the bikers waiting to ride with him made him feel he has a lot of friends.

Organizer Doug Byrd says Johnson was diagnosed with brain cancer in December and expressed a wish to ride with a motorcycle gang.

Byrd says the event raised about $6,000 to help with Johnson's medical bills.

Lonesome Larry's Legacy Lives On in Sockeye Runs

BY ROCKY BARKER
Idaho Statesman

BOISE (AP) • Sockeye entered the Columbia River this week, beginning a 900-mile migration that very nearly ended 20 years ago.

Only four Snake River sockeye made their way through eight dams and past nets and predators in 1992, a year after the fish that makes its home in Idaho's Sawtooth Valley was listed as endangered. Only one male completed the final climb up the Snake and Salmon rivers to a weir on Redfish Lake Creek Aug. 4.

Allyson Coonts, the 7-year-old daughter of Sawtooth Hatchery technician Phil Coonts, named the sockeye Lonesome Larry. When then-Idaho Gov. Cecil Andrus put the stuffed fish on his office wall, Lonesome Larry became the symbol of the entire Snake and Columbia salmon restoration program.

"What took it national was an Andrus interview with New York Times reporter Tim Egan," said Andy Brunelle, who was Andrus' natural resources policy staffer.

In the early 1990s, it looked grim for all of the salmon and steelhead species left after 150 years of overfishing, dam-building, habitat destruction and even poisoning. The Snake River sockeye effort appeared especially quixotic.

Today, threats such as warming waters and ocean acidification still threaten the future of the Columbia's salmon. But improved ocean conditions, court-ordered upgrading of migration conditions through the dams and other changes have dramatically increased the returns of all salmon.

No turnaround is more amazing than that of Idaho's Snake River sockeye. Since 2008, more than 650 sockeye have returned annually to the Sawtooth Valley, peaking in 2010 with 1,355, the most since the 1950s, before four dams were built in Washington.

This year biologists predict 1,000 could return, and productivity of the natural fish that spawn in Redfish has increased to a point that they are replacing themselves, said Mike Peterson, an Idaho Department of Fish and Game research biologist.

This reversal could not have happened without the work of a coalition of federal, state and tribal teams throughout the Northwest. But it also needed the broad bipartisan support that came in part because of the story of Lonesome Larry.

He, along with 15 other sockeye that returned the year before and in the next two years, held the valuable genetic code of the southern-most sockeye population, which is able to travel more than 800 miles and climb to 6,500 feet above sea level.

Federal, state and tribal biologists had decided to collect the remaining Redfish Lake sockeye and begin a last-ditch captive breeding program to preserve the stock and prevent extinction.

Sockeye returns had dropped to double and single digits in the 1980s. Idaho Fish and Game had purposely poisoned sockeye and its cousin the kokanee out of Alturas, Pettit and Yellow Belly lakes in the Sawtooths in the 1960s to replace them with trout. Yellow Belly was poisoned again in 1990 to allow a trophy cut-throat fishery.

Attempts in the 1970s to re-plant sockeye in the lakes failed miserably. When Keith Johnson arrived at Idaho's Department of Fish and Game in 1988 from Alaska, hatchery programs were viewed largely as raising fish for anglers to catch. He was swimming against the current of thinking at the time.

"There was a different philosophy about hatcheries then," said Johnson, a fish pathologist and researcher.

Idaho Rivers United, a salmon advocacy group, was pushing biologists to leave the fish alone. Bumper stickers simplified it to "wild sex for wild fish."

Today, Idaho Rivers is kicking off a season-long campaign to celebrate the story of Lonesome Larry and the success of the captive breeding program.

"This is one of the epic nature stories of our time," said Greg Stahl, an Idaho Rivers spokesman. "At the same time natural returns of sockeye are still only in the hundreds instead of the thousands we need."

Allyson Coonts was one of a generation of Idahoans who grew up with salmon as part of their life. After the last dam was built in 1975, salmon numbers tumbled in Idaho, fishing seasons closed, and the ocean-going fish were almost forgotten by all but the state's Indian tribes.

But after the Shoshone-Bannock Tribe petitioned the federal government to list Snake River sockeye under the Endangered Species Act, the fish returned to the consciousness of Idahoans. As a first-grader, Coonts wrote about two sockeye coming back from the ocean to spawn at home.

Now 28 and a medical school student in Portland, Coonts remembers going to sockeye vigils at Redfish Lake and writing a letter to President Bill Clinton asking him to do something about the dams.

"He wrote me a nice letter back," she said.

She remembers releasing some of the first adult sockeye raised in the captive breeding program into Redfish Lake with Andrus and actress Jamie Lee Curtis. "She told me I reminded her of her daughter," Coonts said.

She was picked to release the fish, her father said, because she named Larry. Today she doesn't remember that. But both her father and Johnson remember it as if it were yesterday.

Lonesome Larry's contribution to sockeye recovery lives on in more than just his story. Had he been a female, biologists might have simply released her into Redfish because they had little sperm available.

But since he was a male, they were able to inject a hormone pellet into him after the first milking process so that he produced sperm for nearly a month. They then split the supply and sent some to the University of Idaho and Washington State University in straws that were frozen with liquid nitrogen and cryogenically stored.

"We always maintained the philosophy of spreading the risk," Johnson said.

That allowed biologists to use Larry's sperm on thousands of eggs in 1996 and 1997, spreading his genes throughout a population that is becoming more genetically diverse with every generation. Today about 6 percent of the Redfish sockeye population has Lonesome Larry genes.

In addition, the teams of scientists and technicians who worked on the project made sure they had disease-free water sources, used iodine liberally during the spawning process of milking and mixing the sperm and eggs to prevent passing disease to the progeny, and raised small groups of sockeye instead of entire raceways full.

That required several state and federal hatcheries and also an expansion of the Eagle Hatchery, which is the center of the program today. But when it was up for funding in 2006, an independent science group recommended to the Northwest Power Planning Council that it turn down the request because of the low productivity of the population, which it attributed to the lack of genetic diversity.

Jim Risch, now a U.S. senator, had just been appointed governor and he had the power to sway the council.

"I said don't pull the plug," Risch said. "Sometimes you have to temper (the science)."

Later that spring, as Boise River floodwaters threatened to inundate the hatchery and kill thousands of sockeye, Risch rebuilt a structure to hold back the water over the objections of federal regulators.

"I told them if you want to arrest anyone you know where you can find me," Risch said.

The scientific consensus has shifted, in part because many more sockeye have been brought into the genetic mix. A residual population of sockeye, distinct from the kokanee, was discovered not only in Redfish but also possibly in Alturas.

Fly-in Housing Developers Sue Bonner County

SANDPOINT (AP) • Developers of an upscale, fly-in housing development at the Sandpoint Airport in northern Idaho have filed a lawsuit against Bonner County contending they have not been treated fairly.

Silverwing at Sandpoint developers say county officials are backtracking on a through-the-fence access agreement and were not upfront about plans to relocate a runway.

greater than $10,000 and a jury trial. County officials declined to comment.

Silverwing developers say they spent $6.6 million preparing to build the development.

But the Federal Aviation Administration told the county the airport wasn't in compliance with federal grant assurances having to do with the through-the-fence access. The lawsuit says the county then adopted a revised airport plan moving a runway and making other upgrades.

Road Project in Utah Yields Archaeological Finds

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) • A road reconstruction project in an eastern Utah canyon has yielded new archaeological finds, including a Fremont Indian pit house.

The pit house is one of at least a dozen cultural sites that have been unearthed in the past year by construction crews and archaeologists working on the road in Nine Mile Canyon, the Deseret News reported.

art sites, which contain more than 10,000 individual images that date back to the Fremont Indians. Drawing tourists from around the world, the canyon also features Native American granaries and dwellings.

Pit houses were dug into the ground and featured a roof structure on top.

The pit house Patterson's crew is excavating is the first of its kind found so far up Nine Mile Canyon, he said. It's also the first one found with a burnt roof. Ceramic pieces and bone needles are among artifacts that have been found in it.

"It's extremely exciting," Patterson said, adding that the site could provide "a snapshot of daily life" once it's completely unearthed.

Work on the section of road where the pit house was found was halted after the discovery, and won't resume until the find can be documented and processed.

Patterson said while road work should be completed in December, the archaeological discoveries will continue to shed new light on the canyon's past for years to come.

"Being able to look at some of these sites — being able to excavate — we're finding out stuff we had no idea existed out here, in places where we didn't know they would be," Jody Patterson, principal investigator for Montgomery Archaeology Consultants Inc., said.

The $22.5 million road project, which will improve access to natural gas wells near the canyon, is a cooperative effort between Denver-based Bill Barrett Corp., and Carbon and Duchesne counties. They're required to protect the canyon's cultural sites and post archaeological monitors.

Strong Quake Kills Four in Italy

BY LUCA BRUNO AND FRANCES D'EMILIO
Associated Press

SANT'AGOSTINO DI FERRARA, Italy • A magnitude-6.0 earthquake shook several small towns in northeast Italy, killing four people, knocking down a clock tower and other centuries-old buildings and causing millions in losses to the region known for making Parmesan cheese.

The quake struck at 4:04 a.m. Sunday, with its epicenter about 22 miles north of Bologna at a relatively shallow depth of 3.2 miles, the U.S. Geological Survey said. Civil protection agency official Adriano Gumina described it as the worst quake to hit the region since the 1300s.

The four people killed were factory workers on the overnight shift when their buildings, in three separate locations, collapsed, agency chief Franco Gabrielli said. In addition, he said, two women died — apparently of heart attacks that may have been sparked by fear. Sky TG24 TV reported one of them was about 100 years old.

Gabrielli said dozens of people were injured.

Two of the dead were workers at a ceramics factory in the town of Sant'Agostino di Ferrara. Their cavernous building turned into a pile of rubble, leaving twisted metal supports jutting out at odd angles and the roof mangled.

"This is immense damage, but the worst part is we lost two people," fellow worker Stefano Zeni said. News reports said one of the dead had worked the shift of an ill colleague. Elsewhere in the town, another worker was found dead under factory rubble.

Gunbattle in Beirut amid Fears of Syria Spillover

BEIRUT (AP) • Gunmen fired rocket-propelled grenades and machine guns early Monday in intense street battles in the Lebanese capital, wounding six people as fears mounted that the conflict in neighboring Syria was bleeding across the border.

The fighting appeared to be among the worst clashes in Beirut since 2008. The clashes erupted hours after an anti-Syrian cleric and his bodyguard were shot dead in northern Lebanon.

Lebanon and Syria share a complex web of political and sectarian ties and rivalries, which are easily enflamed. Last week, clashes sparked by the Syrian crisis killed at least eight people and wounded dozens in the northern city of Tripoli.

The revolt in Syria began 15 months ago, and there are fears the unrest will lead to a regional conflagration that could draw in neighboring countries. The U.N. estimates the conflict has killed more than 9,000 people since March 2011.

NATO Shifts to Help an Elusive Afghanistan Peace

BY BEN FELLER AND ANNE GEARAN
Associated Press

CHICAGO • President Barack Obama and NATO allies declared Sunday that the end of the long and unpopular Afghanistan war is in sight even as they struggled to hold their fighting force together in the face of dwindling patience and shaky unity.

From his hometown and the city where his re-election operation hums, Obama spoke of a post-2014 world when "the Afghan war as we understand it is over." Until then, though, remaining U.S. and allied troops face the continued likelihood of fierce combat.

Gen. John Allen, the top commander of U.S. and NATO forces in Afghanistan, offered a stern warning Sunday that the plan to give Afghan forces the lead in fighting next summer won't take coalition troops out of harm's way. "It doesn't mean that we won't be fighting," Allen said. "It doesn't mean that there won't be combat."

The fate of the war is both the center of this summit and a topic no one is celebrating as a mission accomplished. The alliance already has one foot out the Afghanistan door, Obama has his ear attuned to the politics of an economy-driven presidential election year and other allies are pinching pennies in a European debt crisis.

As NATO powers and other nations contributing to the war effort gathered, the alliance's top officer, Anders Fogh Rasmussen, asserted that "there will be no rush for the exits" in Afghanistan. "Our goal, our strategy, our timetable remain unchanged," he said.

In fact, the strategy has shifted many times over the course of more than 10 years of war, and the goal narrowed to objectives focused on the long-term security of the mostly Western nations fighting there. The timetable has also moved, despite the overall commitment to 2014.

Tension over newly elected French President Francois Hollande's pledge to end his country's combat mission two years early infused the meeting. German Chancellor Angela Merkel pointedly cited the credo of the allies in the Afghanistan war, "in together, out together," and her foreign minister cautioned against a "withdrawal competition" by coalition countries.

Hollande said he was merely being pragmatic in keeping a campaign pledge to pull combat troops this year but this still would "let the alliance continue to work."

While France's new posture obviously rattled the leaders, Allen betrayed no concern about the coalition's common purpose coming unglued. "The mantra of this particular mission has been in together, out together," he told reporters. "And I'm not seeing, frankly, many voices being raised that would oppose that."

Obama warned of hard days ahead. Still, he said NATO envisions a decade of transformation after 2014, with the United States still contributing money and some residual forces but out of the war itself. The alliance was sealing plans on Sunday and today to shift foreign forces off the front lines next year to put Afghan troops up front.

"What this NATO summit reflects is that the world is behind the strategy that we've laid out," Obama said after lengthy talks with Afghan President Hamid Karzai. "Now it's our task to implement it effectively."

The shift to Afghan forces, despite their uneven performance under U.S. and other outside tutelage so far, is in large part a response to plummeting public support for the war in Europe and the United States, contributors of most of international troops now fighting the Taliban-led insurgency.

No other nations have announced plans to follow suit behind France and remove troops early. More such shifts appear likely, however, as each country eyes the clock and its own tight pocket-book. Although the 130,000-member fighting force — dominated by 98,000 U.S. troops — could absorb combat withdrawals by other partners in the Afghan coalition, alliance leaders are struggling to maintain the status quo.

A deal is expected during the summit that would see France bring combat forces out of the sometimes restive province where they are based, but leave training forces or other support in place. That is the model followed by the Netherlands, Canada and probably Australia, which intends to bring most of its 1,550 combat personnel home next year.

In all cases, politicians were heeding political imperatives about a war that has gone on much longer than ever envisioned.

Demonstrators flow out of Grant Park in Chicago during this weekend's NATO summit Sunday in Chicago.

Protesters March through Chicago to NATO Summit

CHICAGO (AP) • Thousands of protesters marched through downtown Chicago on Sunday in one of the city's largest demonstrations in years, airing grievances about war, climate change and a wide range of other complaints as world leaders assembled for a NATO summit.

The protest, which for months had stirred worries about violence in the streets, drew together a broad assortment of participants, including peace activists joining with war veterans and people more focused on economic inequality. But the diversity of opinions also sowed doubts about whether there were too many messages to be effective.

And some of the most enduring images of the event were likely to be from the end — when a small group of demonstrators clashed with a line of police who tried to keep them from the lakeside convention center where President Barack Obama was hosting the gathering.

The protesters tried to move east toward McCormick Place, with some hurling sticks and bottles at police. Officers responded by swinging their batons. The two sides were locked in a standoff for nearly two hours, with police blocking the protesters' path and the crowd refusing to leave. Some protesters had blood streaming down their faces.

Authorities were seen making arrests one by one and leading individual demonstrators away in handcuffs.

BABE RUTH JERSEY SELLS FOR RECORD $4.4 MILLION

BY MIKE FITZPATRICK
Associated Press

Babe Ruth equals big bucks.

A baseball jersey worn by The Bambino sold for more than $4.4 million Sunday, a record for any item of sports memorabilia, according to the buyer and seller.

SCP Auctions, based in California, said the circa 1920 New York Yankees uniform top is the earliest known jersey worn by Ruth and it fetched $4,415,658 at the company's April auction, which ended Sunday. That price broke the previous record of $4,338,500 set in 2010 for James Naismith's founding rules of basketball.

Lelands.com said it submitted the winning bid for the jersey, which had been displayed for years at The Babe Ruth Birthplace Museum in Baltimore. The road top has "New York" written across the front and the Hall of Fame slugger wore it shortly after he was sold to the Yankees by the Boston Red Sox for $100,000 following the 1919 season.

Suzan French, a spokeswoman for Lelands.com, said the company plans to sell the jersey privately rather than re-auction it.

Robin Gibb of the Bee Gees Dies at 62

BY GREGORY KATZ

Associated Press

LONDON • With his carefully tended hair, tight trousers and perfect harmonies, Robin Gibb, along with his brothers Maurice and Barry, defined the disco era. As part of the Bee Gees — short for the Brothers Gibb — they created dance floor classics like “Stayin’ Alive,” “Jive Talkin’” and “Night Fever” that can still get crowds onto a dance floor.

The catchy songs, with their falsetto vocals and relentless beat, are familiar pop culture mainstays. There are more than 6,000 cover versions of the Bee Gees hits, and they are still heard on dance floors and at wedding receptions, birthday parties, and other festive occasions.

Robin Gibb, 62, died Sunday “following his long battle with cancer and intestinal surgery,” his family announced in a statement released by Gibb’s representative Doug Wright. “The family have asked that their privacy is respected at this very difficult time,” it said.

The Bee Gees, born in England but raised in Australia, began their career in the musically rich 1960s but it was their soundtrack for the 1977 movie “Saturday Night Fever” that sealed their success. The album’s signature sound — some called it “blue-eyed soul” — remains instantly recognizable more than 40 years after its release.

The album remains a turning point in popular music history, ending the hard rock era and ushering in a time when dance music ruled supreme. It became one of the fastest-selling albums of all time with its innovative fusion of harmony and pulsing beats. The movie launched the career of a young John Travolta whose snake-hipped moves to the sounds of “You Should Be Dancing” established his reputation as a dancer and forever linked his image to that of the Bee Gees.

Despite financial success, Robin Gibb and his brothers endured repeated tragedies. Maurice died suddenly of intestinal and cardiac problems in 2003. Their younger brother Andy Gibb, who also enjoyed considerable chart success as a solo artist, had died in 1988 just after turning 30. He suffered from an inflamed heart muscle attributed to a severe viral infection.

Robin Gibb himself took care of his health and, at the time of his death, was a vegan who did not drink alcohol.

Convicted Lockerbie Bomber Dies of Cancer in Libya

BY ADEL OMRAN AND HAMZA HENDAWI

Associated Press

TRIPOLI, Libya • He was the embodiment of one of modern Libya’s darkest chapters — a man synonymous with horrifying scenes of wreckage, broken families and a plane that fell out of the sky a generation ago. His name, Abdel Baset al-Megrahi, was little known compared to the single word that his deeds represented: Lockerbie.

Seven months after his patron dictator Moammar Gadhafi was slain in a revolution that began a new chapter for his homeland, al-Megrahi died Sunday of cancer, leaving behind countless unanswered questions about the midair attack in 1988 that blew up Pan Am flight 103 over Scotland. All 259 people on board — mostly Americans — and 11 on the ground were killed.

“I am an innocent man,” al-Megrahi insisted, most recently in his final interview in December, in the final stages of prostate cancer. “I am about to die and I ask now to be left in peace with my family.”

But his death at age 60 leaves no peace for families who still question his guilt and whether others in one of history’s deadliest terror attacks went unpunished. Scotland’s government said it would continue to investigate the bombing even after al-Megrahi’s death.

“He holds the key to what actually took place in Pan Am 103,” said Bert Ammerman, whose brother was killed in the bombing. “He knows what other individuals were involved and, more importantly, what other countries were involved.”

His attorneys had argued that the Libyan intelligence officer was scapegoated to protect the real culprits: Palestinians acting on the behest of Iran.

Al-Megrahi’s death comes about three years after Scottish authorities released him on humanitarian grounds, to the outrage of victims’ relatives. At the time, doctors predicted he had only three months to live after he was diagnosed with prostate cancer.

Anger over his release was further stoked by the hero’s welcome he received on his arrival in Libya — and by subsequent accusations that London had sought his release to protect business interests in oil-rich Libya. Britain and Scotland denied the allegations.

In the months ahead of his release, Tripoli put pressure on Britain, warning that if the ailing al-Megrahi died in a Scottish prison, all British commercial activity in Libya would be cut off and a wave of demonstrations would erupt outside British embassies, according to leaked U.S. diplomatic memos. The Libyans even implied “that the welfare of U.K. diplomats and citizens in Libya would be at risk,” the memos say.

New Database Analyzes Health Care Trends

BY N.C. AIZENMAN

The Washington Post.

WASHINGTON • How much do hospitals and doctors actually charge insurers for their services? How much and which of those services are privately insured patients using? And, most significantly, what drives changes in health care use, costs and total spending?

They are among the most vexing questions in American health care. And a recently amassed trove of data from insurance companies could soon shed new light on them.

Compiled by the nonprofit, nonpartisan Health Care Cost Institute, the database will allow researchers to analyze more than 3 billion medical claims for more than 33 million individuals in search of answers.

The previously confidential information, scrubbed of identifying details, is being provided by three of the nation’s largest insurance companies: Aetna, Humana and UnitedHealthcare, whose combined customers account for about 20 percent of Americans under age 65 who are insured through an employer.

Until now, researchers have had to extrapolate from far smaller surveys of employers, or rely on government claims statistics from Medicare, which are almost exclusively limited to Americans over 65.

The institute offered a first look at its findings, in a report that largely confirmed previously identified trends, but added intriguing details.

For instance, analysts have been puzzling over why, after more than a decade of alarming growth, health care spending is now rising more slowly.

Institute researchers were able to put numbers to one of the most popular theories: that people are seeking less health care.

According to the report, from 2009 to 2010 people with employer-sponsored insurance had 3.3 percent fewer admissions to hospitals and other medical facilities, 3.1 percent fewer “outpatient” visits to such facilities, and virtually no change in the number of procedures performed at doctor’s offices. (There was a slight increase in two categories: procedures performed at medical facilities, which went up by 2 percent, and use of prescription drugs, which increased by just under 1 percent.)

“People had speculated that there was a decline in utilization, but by analyzing over 3 billion claims we now know not only the trend but the magnitude of the trend,” said David Newman, the institute’s executive director. “It’s one thing to believe something, it’s a completely different thing to actually know it.”

It is likely that much of the dip in utilization is connected to the recent recession and sluggish recovery. Faced with a loss of income, wealth, or job security, patients could be putting off non-urgent care.

But many analysts say that the drop-off is too significant to be accounted for by economic factors alone. And Monday’s report also fleshed out details of another possible explanation: the rising price of care.

In 2010, the average out-of-pocket payment for an admission to a hospital or other facility went up by more than 10 percent, to $700. The total charge for an outpatient visit — including an emergency room visit or surgery that does not require an overnight stay — also rose 10 percent, reaching $162.

To some extent, the increases reflected the decision by many employers to push more of the cost of care onto workers in the form of higher deductibles, co-pays and co-insurance.

But that shift was relatively modest: In 2009, patients paid for 15.6 percent of their care. In 2010, it went up to 16.2 percent.

Instead, the increased spending by not just patients but employers was primarily caused by increases in the prices that hospitals, doctors and other providers charged for every category of service in 2010. The total price per outpatient visit, including the insurer and the out-of-pocket share, rose 10 percent, to $2,224. The increase was also significant for inpatient admissions, which went up 5.1 percent, to $14,662.

Indeed, the researchers found that the price increases were large enough to offset the impact of not just the dip in utilization but a 0.8 percent decline in the number of people who have employer-sponsored plans. As a result, total spending on this population rose by 2.5 percent in 2010.

Shrill Not a Winning Tone This Election Season

As you consider the Idaho primary election, put aside any thoughts of who was more or less "conservative," whatever that might mean. Tone is more significant.

Randy Stapilus
Ridenbaugh.com

Many of the races had individual characteristics. The most striking races were challenger-against-incumbent, where the challenger rhetoric was common to many of the races (at least on the Republican side, where most of them were), and the background structure of the races mainly split into two types.

The rhetoric of the challengers tended to be overheated, even apocalyptic – so-and-so must be defeated or our freedom and liberty are at risk. "The downward spiral of our nation," warned one House candidate. Or some such: Shrill rhetoric, shrill candidates.

Not all but many challenges fell into two overlapping structural categories: Coming from the inside, from established political people and forces, or outside, from people evidently angry about conditions in general. On Election Day in Idaho, both kinds of challenges failed.

(The one major case of two incumbents facing each other – the Senate primary in District 23, in which Bert Brackett defeated Tim Corder, falls in a different category.)

Regional Tea Party activists went after three Republican incumbents in District 1, in the far north Panhandle; one of them, Pam Stout, had a national Tea Party profile. None of the three challengers got even a third of the vote. A bit to the south, in District 7, the maverick one-time candidate for governor and senator Rex Rammell, took on incumbent Shannon McMillan, and got 30 percent for his trouble.

Less shrill candidates running as outsiders didn't fare well either. In the Senate District 10 seat, Kent Marmon got 31 percent against appointed Republican Jim Rice. In the eastern Magic Valley, Douglas Pickett did a little better (43.5 percent) against veteran Senator Dean Cameron, but still lost. And so on around the state.

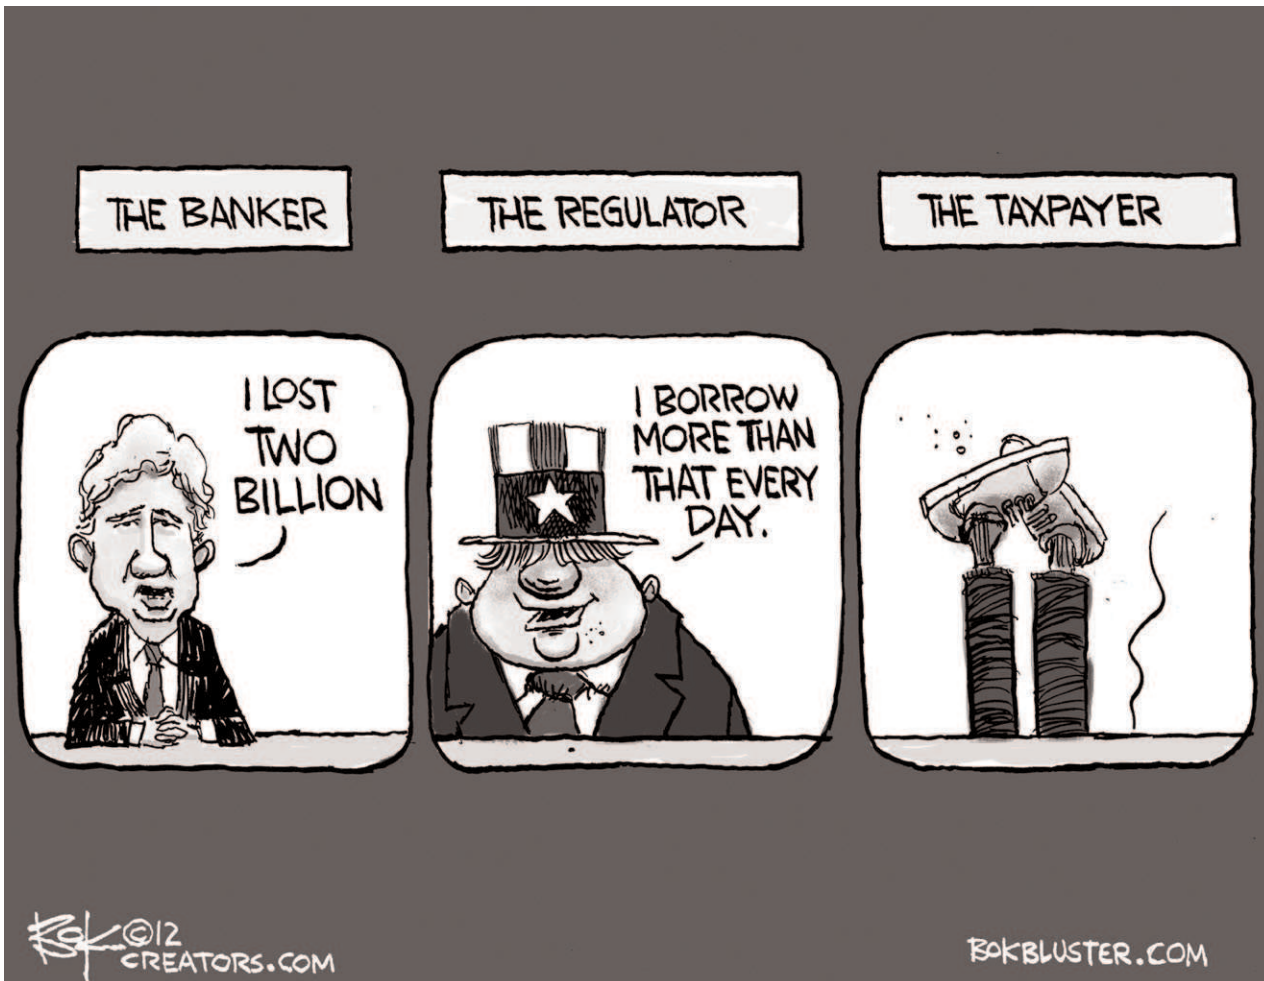

Plus, there was internal warfare. Political Action Committees (PACs) led by veteran Boise-based activists and legislators including House Speaker Lawrence Denney and House Majority Leader Mike Moyle poured money into races against fellow leadership member Ken Roberts of Donnelly (that was a personal grudge with Moyle), Representative Christy Perry of Nampa and a string of others, including several targeted by Tea Party or other outsider candidates. Those efforts all failed. This is going to a happy group when they're sworn in come December.

Not all primary challenges failed. One departing incumbent was Republican Representative Phil Hart of Athol, he of highly visible battles with tax collectors and other issues, but a Tea Party hero. He also had the advantage of three challengers, and multiple opponents are usually an incumbent's best friend. But Hart lost, to Ed Morse, who was backed by a group of Republicans who might describe themselves as mainstream conservatives – relatively low-key, businesslike, in attitude.

We shouldn't forget, though a lot of people seemed to, the rerun primary challenge in the 2nd U. S. House district, M.C. "Chuck" Heilesen's Tea-inspired hot-talk campaign against incumbent Republican Mike Simpson. In 2010, Simpson won his primary with 58.3 percent; this year, 69.6 percent.

Shrill may be not be working so well this year.

The Continent's Moral Hazard

Europe's economic struggles are a consistent drag on American growth. A eurozone breakup, in chaos and acrimony, could be a Lehman-like shock of incalculable damage.

For years, the stronger European economies have managed to bump along from challenge to challenge – providing bailouts to the improvident in exchange for fiscal restraint and reform, while reassuring credit markets in an elaborate confidence game. But the fundamental problem has never been resolved. Europe is a monetary union without being a fiscal union. Germany has become the continent's rich uncle, vouching for the credit and covering the debts of distant relations without authority over their spending habits.

German patience with this arrangement is now being tested on Greece. It would be possible for Europe to maintain Greece – just 2 percent of the continent's economy – as a permanent dependent. Greece could default within the eurozone and have much of its debt written off.

But Greece is a living, breathing moral hazard. What message would it send to Italy, Spain, Ireland and Portugal – all undertaking difficult austerity programs – if the European Union provided special treatment to its least trustworthy member? Many Germans believe that Greece entered the EU on the basis of false economic figures in the first place. Should German taxpayers now assume permanent responsibility for a political system apparently incapable of responsibility? The birthplace of democracy seems to lack a working one.

Michael Gerson

So Europe seems to be preparing for the departure of Greece from the euro – kicking the dependent out of the house to live on his own. For many months, German and French banks have been quietly offloading Greek liabilities. European finance ministries are beginning to plan for an event with no legal precedent or procedure.

The Greek return to a devalued drachma would probably not be disastrous (except for Greeks), so long as the damage is containable. Credit markets – having tested Greek political will and found it wanting – would press Portugal, Italy and Spain. Any sign of weakness would push their borrowing costs to astronomical, unsustainable levels. The trick will be for the EU to construct a firewall of long-term confidence – a reasonable conviction among investors that other economies are on a responsible, sustainable path.

This task is complicated. Portugal, Italy and Spain are making tough, painful fiscal reforms and reducing their structural deficits. They gain part of their national identity from responsible membership in the European project and don't want to be relegated to the category of Greece. But their governments may be facing a decade of depressing, unrewarded austerity. Eventually, markets don't judge intentions, but likely political outcomes. Will the political systems of vulnerable European nations be able to maintain responsible fiscal policies through a long slog without disruptive political backlash? Austerity may be necessary – but is it politically sustainable?

Probably not without help. As they engage in rigorous structural reforms, Italy, Spain and others are looking for greater transfers at Europe's federal level to cushion their austerity. They seek, in essence, a deal: In exchange for surrendering a portion of their fiscal sovereignty, they want Germany to put up more money for expansionary investment. Germany already does some transfers through the European Financial Stability Facility and other outlets.

But it has resisted the issuing of eurobonds by the European Central Bank. There are a variety of proposals on the table to help diminish that opposition.

So the survival of the euro is possible, but it requires the working of an immensely complicated machine. The jamming of any gear could immobilize it. Will German voters continue to accept the role of easing austerity in other countries? Recent electoral reverses must worry German Chancellor Angela Merkel. Will the new French president, Francois Hollande, mix his own country's message of responsibility? Will street unrest in vulnerable countries – or future electoral victories by anti-austerity parties – derail reform?

Europe's economic future does not only depend on objective economic conditions – the number of BMWs and Fiats produced and sold. It depends on the confidence of markets in the future political choices of politicians and voters. Europe has managed to muddle along from crisis to crisis. But the probability of managing all these sequential crises adequately is diminishing.

For those inclined to pity the Europeans, it is worth recalling that the American fiscal reckoning is delayed, but not dissimilar. Economics is eventually politics – and our politics is hardly a model.

For Gay Marriage Opponents, Moments Shape Minds

BY ADAM GELLER
Associated Press

When President Obama announced his support for gay marriage, supporters and pundits declared it symbolic of a historic shift in American attitudes. But as the attention fades, the fact remains that voters in 31 states have rejected gay marriage and more are lining up to do so.

That leaves opponents of gay marriage to wonder if they're lagging behind history-in-the-making or leading it. Some say that, despite their convictions, they believe marriage between two men or two women will inevitably become law across the U.S. Others say that Obama's announcement strengthens their resolve, and will not slow the drive to protect an institution they consider vital to the nation's survival.

Backers of same-sex marriage often argue that, as more people see friends, family members and neighbors in committed gay relationships, misgivings fade. But opponents cite their own specific, personal experiences — as a missionary working with teens from single-mother households or a nurse treating a suicidal gay man — to explain their belief that the only way forward is for marriage to be limited to one man and one woman.

Many say that while their opposition to gay marriage begins with a reading of the Bible, it is confirmed by the challenges and observations of everyday life in a country whose values they see as crumbling. The politics of recent days, they say, will not change that.

That view is echoed in interviews with opponents from around the country, with some of the strongest conviction in states where gay marriage has been a hot issue.

In Minnesota, where a vote is set for this fall on an amendment similar to North Carolina's, missionary John Tolo said he'd long admired Obama for rising to become the nation's first black president. But he lamented Obama's stand on gay marriage as an unprincipled pursuit of campaign cash.

The president's stand contradicts the lessons of his own experience, said Tolo, recalling his own drug use and multiple sexual relationships after his parents divorced and, more recently, his work in a poor part of St. Paul.

In the Frogtown neighborhood, where Tolo's group has bought and is renovating an abandoned house that he says is a gathering point for teens, too many children grow up in households where there's "this fundamental breakdown of having a healthy father role model and a healthy mother role model," he said. "There's this major identity issue where men are just missing."

Tolo said that, while he supports the idea of some kind of legal recognition for same-sex couples, marriage is a sacred template for raising and caring for children as God intended. For government to try to broaden marriage risks undermining that, while infringing on the rights of Christians to define their own institutions.

"It's like saying Muslim women should no longer be allowed to wear burkas. To me, that's deeply offensive," Tolo said. "It's almost like the government wants to come and rewrite the Bible and, to me, that's a position that I don't think the government Missionary John Tolo stands outside the Frogtown Community House on Friday in St. Paul, Minn., where he does teen outreach and works to restore and revive a neighborhood hit hard by foreclosures. should take." In North Carolina, Jennifer Cockerham's support for a gay marriage ban is rooted in a childhood spent in Bible Belt churches, warned against fornication and adultery. She said tornadoes and other cataclysmic events are a sign that God disapproves of the way Americans are living.

But with those beliefs as a foundation, Cockerham said certain experiences during her 23 years as a nurse cemented her opposition to gay marriage.

"My first encounter, personally, with a homosexual was when I had a patient who tried to commit suicide" after an argument with a lover, said Cockerham, who lives in Kernersville, N.C. "I felt really sorry for him because he had almost succeeded with the suicide attempt and I felt that he had so much more to live for than that particular of civil unions for gay couples. But she was troubled after reading about a lawsuit filed by a gay man against the eHarmony dating site, demanding it provide matchmaking for gays and lesbians. That struck a chord because Brown knew two straight couples who had met through eHarmony and gotten married. While same-sex couples might argue they had a right to be together, what gave gays or lesbians the right, she wondered, to demand a private business change its ways to suit them?

Brown, who describes herself as conservative, said she became more concerned as demands grew among gay-rights advocates for a right to marriage, which she regards as a religious institution.

"I just began kind of questioning, what do they really want?" she said.

Brown said she doesn't

"I just want you to know that we love everyone. But there's rightly ordered things in our lives, and if you look at a man's body and a woman's body, those two bodies fit together perfectly. And that's what God intended."

Mary Robertson, an opponent of same-sex marriage lifestyle that had brought him there?"

Visiting a daughter at college near San Francisco, she was dismayed by the openness of gay and lesbian couples.

"I know that made me feel uncomfortable and also made me feel concerned with the fact that they just needed the Lord. I felt they needed a heavenly father who could love them and teach them differently," she says.

On the night of the North Carolina vote, Cockerham stayed up until 1:30 a.m. watching reports of the results that were a fulfillment of her prayers.

Since Obama's announcement the next day, the president is in her prayers. "I can ask God for mercy for him," she says, "and I think the silent majority has finally spoken here in North Carolina."

Another opponent of gay marriage, April Brown of Lewisville, Texas, said the North Carolina vote and Obama's announcement are just the latest in a continuum of events, both public and personal, that have shaped her thinking on the issue over the past four or five years.

"I was evolving, definitely, just like the president," said Brown, the mother of four.

Until a few years ago, Brown said she was heading toward acceptance of the idea want to tell people they can't be together. But the word "marriage" means something more, the joining of a man and a woman that is critical for society to sustain itself. "That's when it goes from a right to a privilege," she said.

Still, Brown is uncertain what recent events may say about the direction of American society. In the short-run, she believes conservative voters who were skeptical of Mitt Romney could be galvanized to support his candidacy. She notes that polls show a majority of Americans now approve of same-sex relationships. But votes like the one in North Carolina show they will not embrace gay marriage, she said.

Others, though, are increasingly concerned that such votes will not be enough.

Tim Arensmeier, pastor at the Sonoma Valley Community Church in Sonoma, Calif., said that despite the 2008 approval of a proposition barring same-sex weddings in a state known for its liberal politics, he is certain the momentum is shifting toward widespread legalization of gay marriage. Obama's announcement is one more step in an exorable march toward that end, he said. When the California proposition was overturned by a U.S. district judge, it convinced him that even a majority opposed to gay marriage is destined to fail.

Arensmeier, who is 71, said he would retire rather than agree to preside over such a marriage. But he remains troubled by what he sees around him. One of his daughters and her husband are in favor of gay marriage. So is one of his grandsons.

"We still get along and I feel like it's possible to disagree with someone robustly and still be courteous and polite and have fun with them. I mean, Jesus said love everybody, for crying out loud," Arensmeier said. "Is that the way the country is going to go? I think it probably is."

But others who oppose gay marriage say the battle must be won.

When Mary and Rob Robertson of Damascus, Md., went to a rally in January at the state capital to protest legalization of gay marriage, they did so thinking of their four young children.

"I can just tell you that the confusion that is happening in our world in terms of morality will just wreak havoc for years down the road," Mary Robertson said. "My children, we have to explain the whole situation about homosexuals and lesbians and my son just says to me, 'Do I have to decide who I like?'"

Robertson and others who oppose gay marriage say they're concerned they'll be labeled as extremists, when what they want is to protect their families and institutions.

"I just want you to know that we love everyone," she said. "But there's rightly ordered things in our lives, and if you look at a man's body and a woman's body, those two bodies fit together perfectly. And that's what God intended."

Santorum, Gingrich Campaigns Owe Millions

BY T.W. FARNAM
The Washington Post

Republican Rick Santorum ended his presidential campaign with $2.3 million in debt while Newt Gingrich owed $4.8 million, new federal filings show.

Santorum bowed out in early April, owing $763,000 to top adviser John Brabender's firm for television commercials and $640,000 to Arlington, Va., technology company Emotive LLC. His campaign had $1 million in the bank at the end of April, meaning he'll need to raise an additional $1.3 million to settle his accounts, according to a filing with the Federal Election Commission made Sunday night.

Former candidates often turn to the winner of the party's nomination for help with retiring debt, assistance that former Minnesota Gov. Tim Pawlenty has received from presumptive Republican nominee Mitt Romney. Romney and Santorum met in Pittsburgh in early May to discuss a possible endorsement.

In April, Romney raised $11.4 million for his campaign and a total of $40.1 million — including money brought in by the Republican National Committee. That's only slightly less than the $43.6 million raised by President Barack Obama and the Democratic National Committee, which is spending on behalf of the president.

Obama and the DNC had a big cash-on-hand advantage, however. Democrats had $147.2 million in the bank for the race, compared with $61.4 million for Republicans.

Several new donors made big contributions to a super PAC backing Romney, including $1 million each from John Kleinheinz, a Texas hedge-fund founder, and Harold Hamm, chairman and chief executive of the oil and gas exploration company Continental Resources.

Hallador Energy of Colorado, a Nasdaq-listed coal-mining and oil company, gave $100,000 to the Restore Our Future PAC, which raised $4.6 million in April and had $8.2 million in the bank. Hallador's chief executive, Victor Stabio, is a Romney donor.

Obama's campaign spent $14.3 million in April, including $2.4 million on Internet advertising and $1.8 million on media buys. Romney spent $12.5 million during the same month, with $2 million in media and $2.5 million on direct mail.

Obama's campaign payroll was $3.7 million, compared with $645,000 for Romney.

Ouch! Dog Bites Politician but She Gets a Vote

FRANKENMUTH TOWNSHIP, Mich. (AP)

• A woman running for the Michigan Legislature was bitten by a dog while going door to door. The dog's distressed owner has made amends: Ann Doyle can put a campaign sign on his property.

Doyle says she didn't see the dog until it was too late Wednesday. She was campaigning in Saginaw County's Frankenmuth Township when the dog bit her three times. The Saginaw News says the owner heard the commotion and called off the animal.

Doyle says she was bleeding and blacked out but is doing much better. She won't identify the dog's owner but says he agreed to take a campaign sign. Doyle calls it a "sympathy vote."

Today's Math Vocabulary Exposes Generational Divide

BY MICHAEL ALISON CHANDLER

The Washington Post

Interested in helping your child with math homework? You might need a math-English dictionary.

There's not a lot of "borrowing" in subtraction these days. Instead there's "regrouping" or "decomposing." "Reduced" fractions are now "simplified" or simply "equivalent" fractions. And let's call a "diamond" what it really is, please: a "rhombus."

As the nation strives to increase the rigor of math instruction, educators are cleaning up their math vocabulary. Gone are those friendly, metaphorical words — squares don't have "corners," they have "vertices." And we're not talking about "number sentences"; these are "equations."

The updated vocab is more technical and specific. The point is to use words that are closer to their mathematical meanings and better able to translate into higher math.

Terms long used at the secondary or graduate level have been trickling into lower grades over the years by way of updated learning standards.

"We are all now speaking the same language," said Spencer Jamieson, elementary mathematics specialist for Fairfax County, Va., public schools, which is implementing tougher Virginia math standards this year.

National math standards, which have been adopted by 45 states and Washington, D.C., advise educators to "attend to precision," which includes using more specific vocabulary and definitions.

Although a new coherence may be forming from grade to grade, the technically proper math being spoken in elementary schools today does not necessarily jibe with the more colloquial dialect taught a generation ago.

"It's very confusing to parents," said Linda Gojak, president of the National Council of Teachers of Mathematics. "We try to help them make sense of it."

Montgomery County, Md., elementary math teachers often send letters home to parents when starting a unit to introduce them to the vocabulary or strategies being taught, officials said. In Fairfax, some schools organize "family math night" to share new instructional approaches.

School systems, and individual teachers, are more or less strict about the extent to which they stick to the new terms.

In Montgomery, "Borrowing has become the 'B-word,'" explained David Szybalski, a second-grade teacher.

Mathematicians have been campaigning to abolish the term for decades.

"The problem I have with 'borrowing' — you know, we never give it back!" said Skip Fennell, a professor at McDaniel College in Maryland and one of the advisers who helped write the common core standards.

Don't get him started on "carrying," a term often used when adding numbers. "Where are you carrying it to? The corner? The principal's office?" he said.

Fennell prefers the term "trading" because it describes the actual mathematical process of trading a 10 for 10 ones or vice versa. Other popular terms in classrooms today are "ungrouping" and "regrouping," again referring to that transfer from 10s to ones (or 10s to 100s, etc.)

Increasingly, though, the preferred words that appear throughout the common core standards are "composing" and "decomposing."

While "decomposing" has its own confusing, non-mathematical connotations, educators say the term works better throughout mathematics. Fractions can be "decomposed" or broken down; so can algebraic expressions.

The terms underscore a broader philosophical shift toward a more thorough teaching of mathematical foundations, including place value and number sense — getting students more comfortable with all the ways that numbers are made up of other numbers.

The age-old trick of "borrowing a 1" while subtracting is still taught, but not until after students have had a lot of time to learn other, slower problem-solving methods that help them understand why the formula works.

At Galway Elementary, second-graders often used number charts or blocks of 10s or ones to physically "compose" and "decompose" the numbers they were given. And they often solved problems moving left to right, breaking them down into 100s, 10s and ones and solving for each.

Although they have gotten more comfortable with the numbers, the new terminology is still sometimes confusing to students, many of whom are learning English as a second language. Teacher Elise Carter came up with a hand gesture to help them understand "decompose": Put two fists together and then open them up to show 10 fingers.

Down the hall, second-grade math teacher Stephen Morina found that in addition to teaching the new words and strategies, there is still some currency to the old language, especially when translating the math into real life. While going over the answer to one problem — 248 minus 229 — he offered a snack analogy.

"If I have eight cupcakes, can I give you nine?" he asked his class.

"No!" the students said. "But I can go next door to Mrs. Miller's house, right?" he asked. "Because she always has extra snacks when I need to borrow some."

COCKER SPANIEL RESCUED FROM 30-FOOT FALL INTO WELL

ANDERSON, S.C. (AP) • Deputy sheriffs and rescue personnel in South Carolina have reunited a 4-year-old cocker spaniel with her family after she fell down a 30-foot well.

The Anderson Independent-Mail reports that the dog, Reese, wanted to see what her family members were doing as they worked to repair a home well. The dog jumped on top of the well Friday evening to see what was inside.

With the well cover removed, the dog fell down the well and began paddling to stay afloat. Reese's owner, Amanda Schronce, called 911, and Anderson County emergency personnel responded. They brought the dog out in less than an hour.

HORSE RACING

I'll Have Another Set to Go For Another at Belmont

ASSOCIATED PRESS

BALTIMORE • I'll Have Another poked his head out of his stall, started nibbling on his nameplate tacked to a wall and looked up at all the people watching his every move.

Yes, I'll Have Another came out of his thrilling Preakness win over Bodemeister in "super shape," trainer Doug O'Neill said Sunday, and now comes New York for a Triple Crown try in the Belmont Stakes on June 9.

"Bring it on! We're ready to go. Super pumped!" O'Neill said as he held court outside the stall of his Kentucky Derby and Preakness winner. "I can't put into words how incredible it is. We're just on Cloud 9. It's super exciting."

The colorful and controversial trainer was returning to his home base in California, and making plans for the trip to New York in the next week or so. I'll Have Another, meanwhile, was loaded onto a horse van at Pimlico and arrived at Belmont Park on a sunny Sunday afternoon.

O'Neill's assistant, Jack Siston, will oversee the chestnut colt until O'Neill and the rest of his team arrive.

The trainer took time to soak in the moment before leaving Baltimore, though, and to contemplate the pressure-packed days that await leading to the first Triple Crown attempt since 2008. It will be the 12th Triple try since 1978, when Affirmed won thoroughbred racing's most elusive prize.

"It's hasn't completely sunk in yet," he said. "The party out here at the barn after the race was like wow! I've never seen anything like that — everyone so excited about horse racing and I'll Have Another being 2-for-2. I definitely feel the energy and buzz in the air!"

He hasn't seen anything yet. The Triple Crown quest brought some tantalizingly close calls since Affirmed turned back Alydar in the Derby, Preakness and Belmont 34 years ago — the longest drought between Triple Crown champions.

There was Real Quiet in 1998, who looked like a lock to take the Belmont until he was nailed at the wire by Victory Gallop. And there was Smarty Jones, who also seemed golden in the Belmont stretch only to be reeled in by 36-1 shot Birdstone in the final 70 yards.

So can I'll Have Another win it? Steve Cauthen, who was a fresh-faced, 18-year-old jockey who rode Affirmed into history, believes the colt can deliver. Not only does he see similarities with Affirmed, but "The Kid" can relate to what "new-kid-on-the-block" rider Mario Gutierrez is experiencing.

"I guess I'm having a flashback," Cauthen said Sunday from his breeding farm in Verona, Ky. "He's a new kid on the block like I was. The kid's got a great attitude and a great smile. And, like me, he's been put in a position to ride in these kinds of races and a shot at maybe winning the Triple Crown. And the trainer and owner have confidence in him, and that's important, because Laz (Barrera, Affirmed's trainer) and Mr. Wolfson (owner Louis Wolfson) were 100 percent behind me."

As for I'll Have Another, Cauthen said the colt seems relaxed and takes things in stride, just like Affirmed.

"Horses that seem to come out of their races pretty well, it means they don't bother themselves,"

Myers Leaving Kimberly Baseball Program

Myers was the Kimberly baseball head coach for two years, leading the Bulldogs to the 3A state tournament both years.

BY STEPHEN MEYERS smeyers@magicvalley.com

KIMBERLY • After leading the Bulldogs to back-to-back state tournament appearances and two straight Sawtooth Central Idaho Conference titles, Tom Myers is stepping down as head coach of the Kimberly baseball program.

Myers, a Sterling, Colo., native is returning home for possible coaching opportunities at either Northeastern Junior College or Sterling High School.

"I've got a coaching job (opportunity) at the high school and possibly an option with the college there as well, so we're just trying to play things out," Myers said at the Class 3A state tournament in Ontario, Ore., this weekend. "It's where I'm from, so it'll be nice to get back with my family and friends and I kind of needed a little change. It was a good opportunity."

Myers informed the team of his decision to leave before this season started, he said.

"It kind of gave us a little extra motivation. If not 'Win it for us, it was like, 'Win it for him for everything he's done for this program,'" said Kimberly senior Seth Champlin. "I can't even put into words what he's done."

Myers joined the Kimberly coaching staff in 2008, serving as an assistant under Darin Gonzalez for three years, before taking over as head coach last season.

In two seasons, Myers led the Bulldogs to their first-ever SCIC championship — an accomplishment they repeated again this season — and a 42-10 overall record. Kimberly made the state

TWIN FALLS • For three races in a row now Kris McKean has found his way to the winners circle with the Commercial Tire Super Stocks Series.

Saturday night at Magic Valley Speedway McKean started near the rear of the 11-car field for the main event race. Casey Pehrson wrestled away the lead from Spencer Meyer at lap seven but the position was lost to Daniel Shirley three laps later. At lap 14, Hannah Newhouse and McKean battled with Shirley and Pehrson for the front position with Newhouse getting the spot at lap 17.

Daniel Shirley made a stop to the pits at lap 20 with mechanical issues leaving Newhouse, McKean and Pehrson as the top three contenders in the race. At lap 27 Newhouse spun between turns three and four, losing her lead while bringing out the first caution of the 40-lap event.

"It's that 'self to blame' kind of thing," Newhouse later admitted. "I was told there was transmission fluid out there but I couldn't tell. I went to go pass a lap car and I placed it just high enough where I flattened myself out. It's horrible to say but I just spun myself out."

After the restart McKean moved quickly out front of the pack. Surviving two more restarts he held on to the front-runner position as Pehrson didn't have quite enough to catch the No. 7 car.

"I was trying to get away

(from the field) as far as I could," McKean said. "We were struggling with the car all day, but we got it good enough. We just ran into enough luck to get the win."

Newhouse managed to work herself back through the field to finish a respectable third behind Pehrson.

Paul Browne worked his way through the field to get to the lead at lap nine of the Brennan's Carpet Street Stocks main. Ernie Hall, who was lined up right beside Browne for the start of the race, gave him a run for the glory for most of the 30-lap event but Browne was able to stay out front as the race ran caution-free. It was Browne's third win of the season.

In Quale's Electronics Jr. Stinger action, Hailey Douglas knocked leader Branden Radabaugh out of the way during the final lap for the main event win.

For the evening finale, the visiting Pro 4's started 20 cars for the main event but contact on the track and mechanical issues had shaved the field down to 12 by the halfway point.

William Rumsey, who began the race from the front row, ended the race out front as well. Ed Secord was Rumsey's closest rival toward the end of the 100-lap main but had to settle for the runner-up position as Rumsey could not be caught.

The race winner had to fight off his competitors through six cautions but never gave up the lead.

"I wanted to stay on the bottom for the restarts, that was the spot to be," Rumsey said.

NBA

James, Wade Save Miami

ASSOCIATED PRESS

INDIANAPOLIS • Miami's season, the one that's supposed to end in an NBA championship and vindication, was slipping away.

LeBron James brought it back. And this time, Dwyane Wade helped him.

James scored 40 points, Wade added 30 — 22 in the second half — and Miami's dynamic duo took over after half-time to get the Heat even in the series with a 101-93 win over the Indiana Pacers in Game 4 of the Eastern Conference semifinals Sunday.

With Chris Bosh injured and back in Florida, the James-Wade tandem saved the Heat, who will host Game 5 on Tuesday night at American Airlines Arena.

"Just survival," Heat coach Erik Spoelstra said. "This is what the playoffs are about." James was at his MVP best, adding 18 rebounds and nine assists and refusing to let Miami's season slip away.

"It's still going to be a dog-fight," James said. "It's a three-game series now."

Wade rebounded from the worst playoff game of his career, shaking off a 1 of 8 shooting start and adding nine rebounds and six assists.

Danny Granger scored 20 to lead the Pacers, who had the Heat down but couldn't put the defending conference champions away.

Down by 10 points in the third quarter, the Heat were in danger of having their championship dreams obliterated by an Indiana team outworking them at both ends and backed by a towel-waving fans.

James would have none of it. Wade either.

WASHINGTON • Stephen Strasburg hit his first major league home run and struck out eight in five innings to carry the Washington Nationals past the Baltimore Orioles 9-3 Sunday.

Strasburg sent an 0-2 pitch from Wei-Yin Chen into the fourth inning to put the Nationals ahead 5-3. After dusting off his home run trot and returning to the dugout, Strasburg responded to a curtain call by waving to the crowd of 41,918.

The hard-throwing Strasburg singled and scored in the third inning, then followed a shot by Jesus Flores with one of his own in the fourth.

MARINERS 6, ROCKIES 4
DENVER • Jesus Montero and Justin Smoak hit back-to-back home runs, Blake Beavan tied a season-high with seven strikeouts and Seattle beat Colorado to complete a three-game sweep.

Mike Carp also homered and Dustin Ackley had two hits for the Mariners.

TIGERS 4, PIRATES 3
DETROIT • Max Scherzer struck out 15 — the most by a Detroit pitcher in 40 years — and the Tigers rallied with three runs in the seventh inning to beat Pittsburgh. Scherzer (3-3) threw 115 pitches in seven innings and was done for the day when the Tigers came back from a 2-1 deficit while he was still the pitcher of record. Alex

PADRES 3, ANGELS 2, 13 INNINGS
SAN DIEGO • Pitcher Clayton Richard scored the winning run from first base on an error with two outs in the 13th inning to lift San Diego over Los Angeles.

By taking two of three from the Angels, the Padres had their first winning homestand of the season, going 3-2 against the Dodgers and Angels.

RANGERS 6, ASTROS 1
HOUSTON • Colby Lewis allowed four hits in eight-plus innings and drove in two runs, and Texas took a five-run lead in the first inning before coasting to the win over Houston.

METS 6, BLUE JAYS 5
TORONTO • Mike Baxter had three hits and came within a home run of the cycle, and Dillon Gee won for the first time in four starts as New York held on to beat Toronto.

REDS 5, YANKEES 2
NEW YORK • Johnny Cueto pitched effectively into the eighth inning, Ryan Ludwick delivered two big hits and Cincinnati closed its extended trip to New York with a win.

ATHLETICS 6, GIANTS 2
SAN FRANCISCO • Collin Cowgill drove in the go-ahead runs and scored in a home plate collision with pitcher Tim Lincecum as Oakland snapped an 11-game skid in San Francisco.

DIAMONDBACKS 2, ROYALS 0
KANSAS CITY, Mo. • Wade Miley pitched seven sharp innings and John McDonald drove in the first run with a bunt single to lead Arizona over Kansas City.

WHITE SOX 6, CUBS 0
CHICAGO • Jake Peavy pitched three-hit ball into the seventh inning and Adam Dunn hit his 14th homer to help the White Sox complete a three-game sweep of their crosstown rivals.

and that's a huge benefit when you've got three tough races," Caution added. "It's like three title fights in five weeks. You are taking on the best around. With Affirmed, he always did the right thing. He didn't waste any energy. And when it came down to a battle, he thrived on it."

"This horse looks like he's got that fighting spirit. He likes a game, and he wants to win and he can't wait to get another battle. He thrives on it and to me that's why more than anything he's got a good chance."

The race is one thing, the buildup another. Some cave to the pressure, others try to find ways to deal with it. It's impossible to dismiss. Since Affirmed, no one's come up with a winning formula.

J. Paul Reddam, who owns I'll Have Another, would like nothing better than to have his horse join the equine pantheon of Triple Crown heroes that includes Secretariat, Seattle Slew and Citation. He's just dreading all the time before the race.

"I'm actually not looking forward to the next three weeks at all," Reddam said. "I know there is going to be a certain amount of tension, and I'm not eager to do a bunch of TV interviews. That's not me."

"I am going to tell everyone to try and keep the tension down. Enjoy it. If you want to be in the spotlight, knock yourself out. If you started singing on David Letterman, you probably carried it too far. But this is supposed to be fun."

O'Neill already has embraced the hoopla, and can't wait to take Manhattan.

"Like we did in Louisville and Baltimore, when we come to New York we're going to see the town, enjoy it, soak it in," he said. "And the reason we're enjoying it so much is the horse has been thriving so much. If he continues to do good, we'll have a good time."

tournament for just its second and third times the last two seasons.

After falling in the third-place game last year, Kimberly advanced to this year's 3A championship game, losing to Fruitland last Saturday. The Bulldogs finished runner-up in their first state appearance in 2007.

"Getting to the state tournament is big for our program. These kids leave their mark with what they've done," said Myers, who also coached Kimberly's American Legion team. "I think we're seeing it more in the younger grades even, that our program is getting better. If we can keep this thing going, we can just keep building and building. When they start to see a baseball program that they respect, they'll come out and play."

Champlin and his teammates said Myers preached the fun of playing baseball.

"Coach told us that if you live for baseball, you're living for the wrong thing. He just wanted us to play to have fun," said senior Daniel Stray. "I think we kind of tried to do that."

Myers played at the College of Southern Idaho from 2001-02 and finished his playing career at Mesa State University (now named Colorado Mesa) in Grand Junction, Colo.

He earned Scenic West defensive player of the year honors as a sophomore at CSI.

A search has not yet begun for a new coach, said Kimberly athletic director Brian Wilford.

"We're going to miss him, but he has a great opportunity ahead of him and I'm happy for him," Wilford said.

timeout in Miami's 19-point loss, came alive in the third when he made all six shots and scored 14 points.

"I've been doubted before. I'll be doubted again," Wade said.

James added 14 as well in the period as the pair landed a 1-2 punch on the Pacers' chin.

"We had a terrible performance in Game 3," James said. "We wanted to redeem ourselves."

Granger's 3-pointer had given Indiana a 61-51 and the Pacers, outthrusting the Heat to loose balls, appeared poised to take a commanding lead in the series.

But that's when James and Wade put on a jaw-dropping spectacle, combining for all but two points in a 25-5 run that put Miami up 76-66.

During one sequence, Wade lost his balance and fell and was lucky to push the ball toward James near the top of the key. As Wade scrambled to his feet, James alertly passed him the ball and he calmly knocked down a 3-pointer to give the Heat a 64-63 lead. The pair made easy shots, tough ones and did everything in their power to steer Miami away from a 3-1 hole.

Only eight teams in league history have overcome a 3-1 deficit to win a best-of-seven series. That's what the Heat were staring at with a loss in Game 4.

The Heat took a 76-70 lead into the fourth, and every time Indiana got close, either Wade or James responded.

FULL FIELD SET FOR INDIANAPOLIS 500

ASSOCIATED PRESS
INDIANAPOLIS - The field is set for the Indianapolis 500. And, more importantly, it's full.

On another historic holiday day of qualifying, nine cars made the field on their first attempts, ending any potential last-minute drama and assuring the May 27 race would start with a full field of 33 cars for 64th consecutive year.

NASCAR: Stenhouse Wins 3rd Straight at Iowa
NEWTON, Iowa - Ricky Stenhouse Jr. led for 209 of 250 laps and won the NASCAR Nationwide race at the Iowa Speedway on Sunday, his third straight win on Iowa's short oval.

Indianapolis Motor Speedway CEO Jeff Belkus said. "There was very little doubt in my mind that we wouldn't. To put it another way, I was confident we would end up with 33 cars."

NHRA: Jack Beckman Wins in Summernationals
TOPEKA, Kan. - Jack Beckman raced to his first Funny Car victory of the season Sunday, beating Don Schumacher Racing teammate Ron Capps in the NHRA Summernationals at Heartland Park Topeka.

David Grubnic won the Top Fuel division, and Allen Johnson topped the Pro Stock field.

FAIR HOUSING RESOLUTION #46
LET IT BE KNOWN TO ALL PERSONS OF the City of Hansen that discrimination on the basis of race, color, religion, gender or national origin in the sale, rental, leasing or financing of housing or land to be used for construction of housing or in the provision of brokerage services is prohibited by Title VIII of the 1968 Civil Rights Act (Federal Fair Housing Law).

It is the policy of the City of Hansen to encourage equal opportunity in housing for all persons regardless of race, color, religion, gender or national origin. The Fair Housing Amendments Act of 1988 expands coverage to include disabled persons and families with children. Therefore, the City does hereby pass the following Resolution.

BE IT RESOLVED that within available resources the City will assist all persons who feel they have been discriminated against because of race, color, religion, gender, national origin, disability or familial status to seek equity under federal and state laws by referring them to the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development, Office of Fair Housing and Equal Opportunity, Compliance Division.

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED that the City shall publicize this Resolution and through this publicity shall encourage owners of real estate, developers, and builders to become aware of their respective responsibilities and rights under the Federal Fair Housing Law and amendments and any applicable state or local laws or ordinances.

SAID PROGRAM will at a minimum include: 1) publicizing this resolution; 2) posting applicable fair housing information in prominent public areas; 3) providing fair housing information to the public; 4) preparing a fair housing impediments analysis; and 5) declaring April as Fair Housing Month.

EFFECTIVE DATE
This Resolution shall take effect April 12, 2010.

IF MAY 21 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY: Everything is coming up roses. You can expect to receive extra measures of good luck during the upcoming four to six weeks. You might have your head in the clouds or might not be realistic, but a guardian angel will either send you wise advice or steer a lucrative opportunity your direction. You are at your best in June and both your business and personal judgment is at its zenith. This is a great time to pursue the job of your dreams or commit to key decisions. Put your most important plans into motion at this time, as obstacles evaporate and your business savvy gets high marks. Plan ahead so that you won't need to make crucial changes in August or September when the cosmic conditions aren't as advantageous.

HOROSCOPE
Jeraldine Saunders

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Energy flows where intention goes. Rather than aimlessly hoping for the best, make a priority list and set some goals for the day. If you aim your energies in the right direction, you are sure to make your mark.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): For the best success, adopt the attitude of a student of life. Just remember that you are never too old to ask pertinent questions and you can never know so much that it is impossible to learn something new.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): With the sun, moon and Venus all in your sign, you might feel like concentrating on yourself. You can use the shifting of attention to your personal affairs to overcome deficits; take a chance on being better.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Trust your instincts - unless money is the subject. You are more sensitive and understanding than usual and people will respond to small kindnesses. It may be necessary to pass up an investment.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): You need a goal before you can score. Just kicking the ball around the field won't win any points; you must have a target in mind. A lack of purpose can be counterproductive and may cause misunderstandings.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Spend time on the right things and you will have more time. Money might be tight or a fear of poverty turns you into a skinflint. Industry will pay off by buying you more time to enjoy what you do have.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Your good manners and sense of correctness can enhance your reputation. By being polite to the nth degree, you will put others at ease. Your recognition of the need for the formalities honors privacy.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Wield words warily. This isn't the time to give credence to vague creative ideas or imaginary plots. Someone might be mixed up. Hold off on key financial decisions and don't ignore sound advice.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): No one is ever enthused by excuses. Powerful minds can find ways to turn a problem into an asset. Rather than blaming someone else for a mistake or error, find a way to turn it to your advantage.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Use the power of positive thinking as a power tool. But don't bring a chain saw to a situation that requires scissors. If a thought brings you stress or pain, make the effort to think other thoughts.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Shakespeare had it right, at least for this cosmic situation: Neither a borrower nor a lender be. That means toys, money or belongings. There is a tendency to misplace objects.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Turn wounds into wisdom. You may be overly sensitive to the atmosphere, so a fast-paced environment could get on your nerves. Seek solace or advice from a close friend or partner to clear your mind.

It's that time again!
GARAGE SALE SEASON IS ON!

Deadline is Wednesday at 1:00pm.

DEAR ABBY: I agreed to be maid of honor at my best friend's wedding. I am now planning her bridal shower and just received the guest list from her mother and the groom's mother, "Alicia."

DEAR ABBY
Jeanne Phillips

Alicia has given me the names of about 30 guests and says there are more people she wants to invite. Abby, the entire list will amount to nearly 70 guests!

I thought showers were supposed to be for close friends and family only. Would it be out of line to suggest to Alicia that if she wants to invite that many people, she should give a separate shower?

— OVERWHELMED
IN NEW YORK

DEAR OVERWHELMED: You and the groom's mother are not on the same wavelength. She may be trying to repay social obligations, while you are simply trying to perform your attendant's duties.

Because Alicia is so insensitive, you must tell her firmly the maximum number of guests you can accommodate at the shower. It would not be out of line to suggest that she ask one of her friends to also host one. If she insists on inviting everybody to your shower, ask her to share the expenses with you. (Remember, bridal showers are usually hosted by attendants, friends or relatives of the bride, but not members of her or her fiancé's IMMEDIATE families.)

DEAR ABBY: Please pass along this suggestion to your readers: If you're separated or getting a divorce, use discretion if you're tempted to talk about it.

The more you bad-mouth the person you are divorcing, the more people will reject you. It may not seem fair, but it's true. People will "forget" that you never complained before and say, "I didn't know she was so vindictive. No wonder he left!"

You will do yourself additional damage by ranting to co-workers. You're paid to work, not talk. Your co-workers are paid to work, not listen.

Do not confide your problems to your customers. They will stop doing business with you because they're afraid of being trapped by your pain.

If you must vent your anger and disappointment, do it in a support group. The members will empathize; others haven't a clue and don't care. A support group also can give you practical advice about lawyers, finances and emotional help.

Your pain will linger for months, but the patience of your friends and co-workers will fade. My co-worker managed to bore all of us. She quit therapy to spend the money redecorating her home to "erase him from her life." Not only did she lose all sympathy in that shortsighted, shallow act, she also lost precious time she should have spent healing and becoming strong and independent.

It's strange, Abby. People facing death don't disrupt other people's lives the way those with broken vows do.

— TIRED OF LISTENING
IN MARYLAND

DEAR TIRED: You make a strong case for keeping separate one's personal and professional lives. Friends and co-workers are important to anyone experiencing the trauma of divorce, but I agree that an outside source — such as a support group — can provide practical, impartial advice because the members can empathize without becoming emotionally involved.

Those who act this way may be looking for a sympathetic ear, but they usually wind up with a cold shoulder.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE®

Bobby Wolff

"No bugle breathes this day Disaster and retreat!"

— Thomas Aldrich

The line between triumph and abject failure at Board-a-Match scoring is often finer than at any other form of the game. The scoring works like that in pairs but with only two tables in play. You either win or lose the board no matter what the difference in score might be unless the result is an exact tie. In other words, if your opponents make six spades, you win the board for making six no-trump, but lose the board by just the same margin if you miss slam or go down in the grand slam or play six of a minor suit.

In this deal from the 1993 Reisinger Board-a-Match Teams, Al Rand found a way to set a slam contract two tricks when declarer failed to see what was going on.

The bidding had convinced Rand that one of his opponents had a void in clubs, so he led his singleton diamond instead of a top club. Of course, a club lead (or even a heart lead, which would have been my choice) makes declarer's task impossible, but one can understand Rand's thinking.

Declarer took the diamond lead in dummy and passed the spade nine, which Rand ducked smoothly. Declarer, suspecting nothing, took a second trump finesse, and the roof fell in. Rand took his king and quickly cashed two clubs.

If declarer had read Rand's mind and gone up with the ace on the second trump lead, he would have taken all 13 tricks. But he wound up with only 10.

ANSWER: Dummy rates to have length in both majors and a weak hand. A trump lead looks sensible as least likely to give away something. A deceptive heart jack might persuade declarer to misplay the suit — and can hardly fool partner dramatically.

JEFF'S PAINTING

Today is Monday, May 21, the 142nd day of 2012. There are 224 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight:
On May 21, 1932, Amelia Earhart became the first woman to fly solo across the Atlantic Ocean as she landed in Northern Ireland, about 15 hours after leaving Newfoundland; Earhart's achievement came on the fifth anniversary of Charles Lindbergh's solo flight to France.

TODAY IN HISTORY

On this date:
In 1471, King Henry VI of England died in the Tower of London at age 49.

In 1542, Spanish explorer Hernando de Soto died while searching for gold along the Mississippi River.

In 1881, Clara Barton founded the American Red Cross.

In 1892, the opera "Pagliacci," by Ruggero Leoncavallo, premiered in Milan, Italy.

In 1911, during the Mexican Revolution, the Treaty of Ciudad Juarez was signed by President Porfirio Diaz and revolutionary leader Francisco I. Madero; under the agreement, Diaz resigned his office and went into exile.

In 1927, Charles A. Lindbergh landed his Spirit of St. Louis near Paris, completing the first solo airplane flight across the Atlantic Ocean in 33½ hours.

In 1941, a German U-boat sank the American merchant steamship SS Robin Moor in the South Atlantic after allowing the ship's passengers and crew to board lifeboats.

In 1956, the United States exploded the first airborne hydrogen bomb over Bikini Atoll in the Pacific.

In 1959, the musical "Gypsy," inspired by the life of stripper Gypsy Rose Lee, opened on Broadway with Ethel Merman starring as Mama Rose.

In 1972, Michelangelo's Pieta, on display at the Vatican, was damaged by a hammer-wielding man who shouted he was Jesus Christ.

In 1982, during the Falklands War, British amphibious forces landed on the beach at San Carlos Bay.

In 1991, former Indian Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi was assassinated during national elections by a suicide bomber.

Ten years ago: The State Department named seven states as sponsors of terror, with Iran at the top of the list; the report said that Sudan and Libya had taken some steps — but not enough — to "get out of the business." (The other countries named were Iraq, North Korea, Cuba and Syria.)

Five years ago: The Supreme Court ruled that parents didn't need to hire a lawyer to sue public school districts over their children's special education needs. The Food and Drug Administration issued a safety alert for the diabetes drug Avandia, marketed by GlaxoSmithKline, which disputed a report saying it was linked to a greater risk of heart attack.

One year ago: The apocalypse did not arrive, despite the prophecy of 89-year-old Christian broadcast group operator Harold Camping, who had been predicting the rolling global destruction of Judgment Day for years. Shackleford won the Preakness, holding off a late charge from Kentucky Derby-winner Animal Kingdom to win as a 12-1 underdog.
