ENGINE PIECE IGNITES BLISS FIRE

TIMES-NEWS

BLISS • Fire crews worked Wednesday to contain a brush fire near Bliss that burned close to 250 acres.

The fire began at about 2:30 p.m. close to the Bliss rest stop after an eastbound vehicle's engine blew, according to Kyli Gough with the U.S. Bureau of Land Management. Pieces of the blown engine ignited after landing on brush off the side of the road.

The driver was not injured, said Kyli Gough, spokeswoman for the BLM.

The fire moved east on public land towards Bliss, Gough said. The Bliss Rural Fire District was the first to respond, with four BLM fire engines then arriving to help.

Idaho State Police responded to the fire to help control traffic on I-84.

Fire crews expected to have the fire contained Wednesday evening and controlled by this morning, Gough said. No structures were threatened by the flames.

T.F. Fireworks Show in Jeopardy

BY MELISSA DAVLIN
mdavlin@magicvalley.com

TWIN FALLS • The skies over Twin Falls might be dark this Fourth of July.

For the second year in a row, the citizens group organizing the Twin Falls fireworks show is behind on fundraising, putting the show in danger of being canceled.

Peggy Kidd, who is helping raise money for the show, said the group needs to raise at least $30,000 — but $40,000 would give them a cushion. She needs half of the final total for a down payment by June 22.

Each minute of a fireworks show costs $1,000.

Currently, the group has about $14,600 in donations, pledges and reserve funds, Kidd said. This is the second year in a row the group has struggled to raise enough money. Last year, organizers nearly fell short of the $35,000 they needed to pull off a combined Jerome-Twin Falls show, but hit the mark a week before the Fourth.

The citizens group organizes and raises the money for the show. But Kidd said many people still believe the city of Twin Falls pays for the whole thing.

City spokesman Josh Palmer said the city contributes $8,000, some of which comes from citizen donations and permit fees from fireworks stands.

Kidd is frustrated at the group's lack of progress, but already has a game plan for next year: Start early, be more proactive and perhaps move the show to the Magic Valley Speedway.

In the meantime, she's combating apathy,

Dave Dana, Twin Falls maintenance foreman for the Idaho Transportation Department, talks about his job duties including disposing of roadkill during an interview Wednesday afternoon along U.S. Highway 93 west of Twin Falls.

SOMEONE'S GOT TO PICK THEM UP

Highway workers say VapoRub, staying upwind are key to successfully removing roadkill.

BY STEVE KADEL

TWIN FALLS • It's not that Dave Dana minds getting his hands dirty, but one part of his job is a bit distasteful.

It's roadkill, and the Idaho Transportation Department's Twin Falls maintenance foreman occasionally has to wade right in.

"It's an unsavory part of the job," he said. "Just because I'm foreman doesn't mean I don't do my share."

Animals accidentally killed by motorists on state highways range from raccoons, porcupines and coyotes to deer and elk. It's never pleasant to remove them, although summer heat adds another element to the task.

"This time of year they swell up and they smell," Dana said. "We try to get them as soon as possible before they go bad."

One of his workers regularly throws up while taking a carcass off the highway. It's not so much the smell as the sight that bothers him, according to Dana.

The foreman has his own remedy for odors — a liberal dose of Vicks VapoRub in both nostrils. And when it comes to skunks, the trick is to move quickly and accurately.

"You want to make sure you're upwind and that your first pass is a good one that gets him off the road," Dana said.

Dana's a dog lover who finds it particularly difficult to retrieve canines and cats. He knows they're probably someone's pet.

"It's sad," he said, "but we have to get them off the road."

He recalled the time he buried a dog, only to learn the pet's owners wanted the body for

T.F. Drug Rule Will Fill Gap in State Law

BY KIMBERLEE KRUESI
kkruesi@magicvalley.com

TWIN FALLS • A new rule on how the city of Twin Falls can prosecute the use of synthetic marijuana stemmed from a lack of a stricter state law, said Fritz Wonderlich, the city's attorney.

On Tuesday, Twin Falls City Council members agreed to amend part of a city code that broadened the definition of inhalants and prohibits the possession of inhalants with the intent to inhale. It also prohibits being at a place where inhalants are used.

Wonderlich said he pushed for the ordinance change because the city is seeing more cases of synthetic marijuana use. However, since there is no state law that outlines what to do when someone intends to use a synthetic drug, he felt that the city should take action.

Synthetic marijuana is commonly sold as Hayze, spice or K2 and is available for

Lost Wolf Pup Gets Temporary Home

TIMES-NEWS

BOISE • Zoo Boise has agreed to temporarily house a lost wolf pup found outside of Ketchum, wildlife officials announced Wednesday in a news release.

Out-of-town campers found the pup on Friday but thought it was a lost domestic puppy. After taking it to a vet clinic, a vet technician contacted Defenders of Wildlife, who agreed with the tech that pup was a wolf.

Officials are still waiting for test results to see if the pup is a wolf, a wolf-hybrid or something else.

Idaho Department of Fish and Game officials spent parts of Sunday, Monday and Tuesday looking for the pup's wolf pack but couldn't find signs of a pack in the area.

Fish and Game officials believe that this pup's pack might have been moving — possibly from a den to a rendezvous site — and road traffic could have split up the pack.

The pup is still in veterinary care, according to the agency, since it's not yet in good physical health.

Commission Reviews Idaho Power's Energy Efficiency Programs

TIMES-NEWS

TWIN FALLS • Seeking to continue funding its current Energy Efficiency Rider, Idaho Power Co. is asking the Idaho Power Utilities Commission to declare its conservation expenditures as "prudent."

A PUC order won't immediately impact rates but would allow the utility company to continue funding 20 conservation programs with the help of the 4 percent rider currently on customer bills.

Before Idaho Power can receive the order, the commission must find that the programs save more money than what the programs actually cost.

The majority of the conservation programs offer incentives to customers to use their energy efficiently. Only three of the programs reduce demand by shifting energy-use to off-peak times of the day.

In 2011, Idaho Power's energy efficiency expenditures totaled $42.6 million. In that year, the company saved almost 179,500 megawatts of energy or enough power to service 12,900 homes in one year.

Idaho Power's conservation program annual report is available online on the PUC website at www.puc.idaho.gov. Viewers should click on the electric icon, then on the "Open Electric Cases" link and scroll to case IPC-E-12-15. The report is labeled "DSM 2011 Annual Report." The PUC will receive comments on Idaho Power's application through June 10. Comment on the PUC's website, mail them to P.O. Box 83720, Boise, ID 83720-0074 or fax (208) 334-3762.

Two Xavier Board Members Receive New Terms

TIMES-NEWS

TWIN FALLS • Two board members at Xavier Charter School have been re-elected for another term.

James Wallace and Mark Lambert were elected by parents last week to three-year terms beginning in June. They both ran unopposed.

"We are very grateful for their willingness to continue to serve on the Xavier board," board chairwoman Debbi Burr said. "We have all very much enjoyed working together this year and both Mark and James bring great knowledge and passion for our school to the board."

Election results will be approved at Xavier's June 14 school board meeting.

Wallace and Lambert were first elected to the board in June 2011, each for a one-year term.

Xavier Charter School's board has five members. They oversee the Twin Falls public charter school, which has more than 630 students in kindergarten through 12th grades.

The downside — it didn't leave much time to be a teenager and spend time with friends he made at school, he said.

As a Canyon Ridge student, Darjee said one of the largest obstacles is the language barrier. Although he learned some British English growing up, he said some people at school can't understand what he's saying.

The school experience in Twin Falls is "totally different" than what he experienced before, he said, adding that he sees it as a higher quality education.

One of his favorite mem-

Students had a chance to share food, music and customs from their home country. Darjee was the emcee for a school-wide assembly with musical performances.

He also enjoys videography and while he was in Nepal, he worked on a documentary about life in refugee camps. Darjee said he produced a video last week about school bullying.

19-year-old Pleads Guilty to Arson at Fairgrounds

TIMES-NEWS

TWIN FALLS • A Filer man accused of setting fire to trailers being stored at the Twin Falls County Fairgrounds pleaded guilty to second-degree arson Tuesday in Twin Falls County 5th District Court.

Roman Scott Barbier, 19, was originally charged with third-degree arson before his charge was amended.

According to Twin Falls County sheriff's deputies, Barbier and a group of juveniles entered a beef barn being used to store camp trailers at the Filer fairgrounds on the afternoon of March 24 with the intent to set fire to the trailers.

Deputies came to the assistance of Filer police after hearing about a large fire at the fairgrounds over the radio. By the time they arrived, Filer Fire Department personnel had extinguished the flames. But deputies noted lighter fluid and fire damage on a tire cover two trailers away from a camper that was completely destroyed by fire.

Barbier is scheduled to be sentenced July 18.

purchase at several smoke shops in Twin Falls.

"We're getting inundated by these new cases from the police department," Wonderlich said. "And some of them are falling through the cracks."

This year's Idaho Legislature did pass a bill that banned certain variations of synthetic marijuana but Wonderlich said that's not enough.

The amendment falls under the city's intoxicant rule. Originally, the intoxicant ordinance was used to address people huffing gasoline. But over time, the ordinance has been tweaked to address various huffing trends like inhaling spray paint or paint thinners.

The ordinance still addresses huffing gasoline but that's no longer the major problem plaguing law officers and prosecutors, said Twin Falls Police Capt. Anthony Barnhart.

"Synthetic marijuana is a hot topic," Barnhart said. "It's definitely something going on in this area."

While the new amendment won't solve all the issues surrounding the use of synthetic marijuana, it's a step in the right direction, he said.

"We're (police department) still going to take the same steps when going into an investigation," he said. "But this brings clarity to the ordinance for these types of cases."

Four People Charged with Prostitution-Related Crimes

BY ALISON GENE SMITH
alismith@magicvalley.com

Editor's note: The following story contains graphic details that might be offensive to some readers.

Todd Teague

TWIN FALLS • Four people were arrested last week on prostitution-related charges in a town that has only seen one conviction for prostitution in a decade.

Last Thursday, investigators from the Twin Falls County Sheriff's Office conducted an undercover operation near Rock Creek Park in the 2000 block of Addison Ave. West.

According to the police report, Zachary Williamson, 25, spoke with a female undercover officer on May 23. They agreed to meet the following day. Williamson arrived at the meeting location at 12:53 p.m. and allegedly spoke to the officer about paying her for sex.

Williamson was arrested for violating his probation terms and charged with misdemeanor soliciting a prostitute. A pretrial hearing is scheduled for July 3.

Earlier that same day, according to court documents,

Billy Eugene Turpin, 78, was also cited for misdemeanor solicitation of a prostitute at 11:42 a.m. but was not arrested. Turpin pleaded guilty and is scheduled to be sentenced July 10.

On the same day, an anonymous tip led Twin Falls police to the Apollo Motor Inn, 296 Addison Ave. W. Twin Falls police officers went to the hotel at about 9:40 p.m. and found Christopher Teague in a room with two women, a police report said.

The report said the two women, ages 19 and 20, were featured on a website allegedly operated by Teague advertising them as "adult entertainment escorts."

According to the police report, the 19-year-old told police she was desperate for money when she was recruited to work as a prostitute for Teague by the other woman in the hotel room, Stormie Todd.

"Ms. Todd advised her that it was easy to make large sums of money and gave her advice on how to perform sexual techniques," according to the report.

The 19-year-old told police, "If the client refuses to take off his own pants, he is a cop, and only give him a massage. Otherwise, the rate for sex is $150 for 30 minutes, $250 for an hour and $500 for two women."

The police report details training the women were given, such as instructions for "dos and don'ts" and how to dress.

Teague allegedly took a portion of the money the women made and paid for their motel room, food, lingerie and drugs, according to the report.

Customers who visited Teague's website were given a phone number to call that rang to a prepaid cellphone, according to the police report. Police took the cellphone as evidence and while they were reviewing text messages on it, a "customer" called. A female officer answered and the man on the other line offered to "donate" $120 for 30 minutes of her time.

Prostitution Charges Rare

In the past decade, only eight charges have been made in Twin Falls County related to prostitution. Three of them were dismissed and four were from last week.

Sun Do Chong is the only person found guilty of prostitution. She was arrested for allegedly engaging in prostitution while she worked at Osaka Massage and Spa in Twin Falls.

Officers arrested Teague for an outstanding warrant; He denied accepting money from the women.

Todd was arrested but the 19-year-old woman was only "being groomed," Twin Falls Police Lt. Craig Stotts said. She was not arrested or charged.

Teague and Todd are scheduled for preliminary hearings on June 1. The punishment for procuring a person for prostitution (known in some circles as "pimping") is two to 20 years in prison and a $1,000 to $50,000 fine.

City of Jerome Offers Public Safety Alerts

The service, which began this month, is avail-

Jerome County Commissioner Cathy Roemer said she's interested in a possible county version.

County Budgets Given Full Consideration in HB519 Passage

House Bill 519, 2012 Session of the Idaho Legislature: An act, relating to taxation; amending section 63-602W, Idaho code, to provide that certain site improvements shall be exempt from property taxation and amending section 63-301A, Idaho code, to provide for a reduction in value to be added to the new construction roll for the exemption for site improvements.

County budgets are set using last year's assessment values.

This exemption is for valuating Assessment Values for Property Tax

Year 2012 so there isn't any "blindsiding counties with a retroactive loss of revenue" as was stated in Wednesday's editorial, but don't let facts get in the way of an opinion. A county can't lose revenue it never had. The budget for Tax Year 2013 will be based on 2012 values. After the article on Sunday and this Times-News editorial, I think it is time for me to write and clear up the misunderstanding about House Bill 519 that the legislators saw fit to pass because it was a good bill.

While the Times-News complimented my effort and success, I didn't ignore every county resident who relies on services. We understood the possible effect this could have on all taxing districts, not just the counties. There are 1,245 different taxing districts that are funded by property taxes. The state organization of Counties and County Assessors were appreciative that I involved them from the start of my efforts. I worked hard to avoid a tax shift and fortunately found a way to implement this exemption avoiding that shift.

People don't realize that the property tax burden shifts every year between Agriculture, Industrial, Residential and Commercial. With the reduction in residential values in recent years, there has been a 20 percent shift of value from residential to commercial in the past four years. Commercial is paying a larger share. A new exemption can create a shift, but the second half of my legislation that people ignore provides that any reduction of value to the county this year will be off-set by the value of the new development and construction during 2012 and so the counties will not need to reduce their current budgets or shift the tax burden to other taxpayers.

And don't forget this is a temporary reduction; these parcel will be assessed at full value in the future, closer to when services need to be provided. Right now, they are vacant parcels without requiring public services, schools and other services property taxes typically are funding. There are no surprises, no shortfall of "up to $1 million." The county should have more revenue available this year than last. They do every year due to the new building and development that occurs each year. That value is added to last years and provides more revenue.

Eighty percent of the legislators in Idaho looked at the big picture and voted for this Bill. Four days of hearings between the House and the Senate helped educate our legislators to make informed decisions using the facts. The Governor wrote, "I am supportive of the intent of this legislation. I believe this is sound policy and will be good for economic development in Idaho" when he allowed it to become law.

Without land developers investing in our communities, your property taxes would continue to increase each year. Cities, counties and land developers are partners in the strength of Idaho and all share the benefits our state provides. This is a good bill regardless of what you read.

Montana Bucks the Court

Montana uses an interesting argument to justify defiance of a Supreme Court decision: Because the state is particularly prone to political corruption, it should be trusted to constrict First Amendment protections of political speech.

At issue is the court's 2010 Citizens United decision, which held, unremarkably, that Americans do not forfeit their First Amendment rights when they come together in corporate entities or labor unions to speak collectively. What do liberals consider the constitutional basis for saying otherwise?

Three Montana corporations sued to bring the state into conformity with Citizens United by overturning a 100-year-old state law, passed when copper and other corporations supposedly held sway, banning all corporate political spending. The state's Supreme Court refused to do this, citing Montana's supposedly unique susceptibility to corporate domination — an idea amusingly discordant with the three corporations' failure even to persuade the state court to acknowledge the supremacy of the U.S.

George F. Will
The Washington Post

Supreme Court.

Reasons for the Supreme Court to reconsider Citizens United are nonexistent. The ruling's primary effect has been to give unions and incorporated nonprofit advocacy groups freedom to spend what they choose on political advocacy as long as they do not coordinate with candidates or campaigns. Campaign "reformers," who advocate speech rationing, apparently regard evidence irrelevant to argument, probably because there is no evidence for their assertion that 2012 has been dominated by corporate money unleashed by Citizens United. An amicus brief submitted to the Supreme Court by Sen. Mitch McConnell, Congress' staunchest defender of the First Amendment, notes:

Through March 31, the eight leading super PACs supporting Republican presidential candidates received contributions totaling $96,410,614. Of this, $83,220,167 (86.32 percent) came from individuals, only $13,190,447 (13.68 percent) from corporations, and only 0.81 percent from public companies. McConnell says "not a single one of the Fortune 100 companies has contributed a cent" to any of the eight super PACs. These facts refute such prophesied nightmares as The Washington Post's fear that corporate money "may now overwhelm" individuals' contributions.

Even an article in the ABA Journal falsely says: "These multimillion-dollar PACs were made possible by" Citizens United. And Justices Stephen Breyer and Ruth Bader Ginsburg, who dissented in that decision, say the Montana case gives the court an occasion to reconsider it "in light of the huge sums currently deployed to buy candidates' allegiance." Disregard the unsupported smear that candidates are bought, but note this: If these justices believe candidates are corrupted by independent expenditures, presumably they believe that regulating or outlawing them can be justified as combating corruption or the "appearance" thereof. Hence their objection is not to Citizens United but to constitutional protection of advocacy-funding practices that are as old as the Republic.

Before Citizens United removed restrictions on independent expenditures by for-profit corporations, a majority of states already had no such restrictions. Neither did they have records of distinctively bad behavior.

Indisputably, this year's super PACs have, as McConnell's brief says, "led to more political debate over a lengthier period of time during which more voters had the opportunity to participate in the choice of a presidential candidate." As McConnell notes, the Montana court's ruling is "disdainful" and disobedient regarding the Citizens United decision, but this lawlessness is not what bothers many people who think of themselves as defenders of good government. Instead, much of the media and most liberals urge Americans to be scandalized about "too much money" in politics. That three-word trope means (because most political money is spent on the dissemination of political advocacy) that there is more political speech by others than is considered proper by much of the media, which are unrestricted advocates.

Fine, but downtown still has a very long way to go. I still do not have many reasons to go to downtown. Many stores are stuck in the Carter administration. ..."

STATE: EXECUTIONERS' PRIVACY TRUMPS ACCESS BY MEDIA

BY TODD DVORAK
Associated Press

BOISE • Idaho prison officials said their efforts to protect the identity of execution team members and the privacy of the condemned inmate outweigh any reason to allow witnesses to view lethal injections from start to finish.

Officials defended the policy in a court filing late Tuesday, responding to a federal lawsuit filed this month by more than a dozen Idaho news groups, including the Times-News, challenging the limitations on viewing executions.

Like most states with lethal injection, Idaho pulls the curtain back during the first few steps of an execution, including the insertion of IV needles into the condemned inmate.

The Associated Press, Times-News and 15 other news organizations say reporters — and by extension the public — should view all phases of the execution to accurately report the events or any complications that emerge.

Prison officials say expanding access simply invites too many risks.

Even if executioners are covered in surgical gear and masks, a chance remains they could be identified, making it even more difficult to recruit and retain team members, according to the brief.

The state Department of Correction also has an interest in “shielding the medical team from possible anxiety and stress of performing an ordinary medical procedure before an audience knowing that a delay or mishap will be reported,” Deputy Attorney General Michael Gilmore wrote.

The chance of complications arising is a primary reason the news groups are pressing for expanded access, arguing the First Amendment gives media and the public the right to view executions in their entirety.

In recent years, several high-profile cases have raised questions about how states conduct lethal injections, including two cases in Ohio — a state that allows full access — when execution staff couldn't immediately find the inmate's vein. In one of those cases, officials halted the execution and the inmate remains on death row.

The lawsuit filed by the news groups relies heavily on a 9th U.S. Court of Appeals ruling on a 2002 California case. The court rejected the state's argument that allowing witnesses throughout the execution would compromise efforts to keep secret the identity of the execution team.

“Independent public scrutiny — made possible by the public and media witnesses to an execution — plays a significant role in the proper functioning of capital punishment,” the judges ruled.

Idaho officials spelled out their legal defense in advance of court-ordered mediation, which begins Thursday under the supervision of Magistrate Judge Candy Dale.

The legal challenge also comes weeks before the June 12 execution of Richard Leavitt, who was convicted of the 1984 stabbing murder of Blackfoot resident Danette Elg.

The state also argues there are other reasons for limiting access, including shielding family and friends of the condemned inmate from any public suffering that might occur during a delay and preserving the dignity and privacy of the inmate.

Other organizations joining the suit include The Idaho Statesman, Boise Weekly, Lewiston Tribune, Moscow-Pullman Daily News, The Idaho Press Club, Idahoans for Openness in Government, Spokesman-Review and the Pioneer Newspaper group, including The Idaho Press-Tribune and Idaho State Journal.

The Idaho Mountain Express reports 37-year-old William Arthur Owens was arrested on May 23 at a bar in Bellevue.

Hart's decision to seek Chapter 13 protection comes two weeks after he lost his bid for a fifth term in the Idaho House of Representatives. It's also the latest development in the northern Idaho lawmaker's battle with state and federal government over unpaid taxes and interest.

The Spokesman-Review reports Hart listed only three creditors in his filing — The Internal Revenue Service, State Tax Commission and

The Idaho Statesman reported Wednesday that Nampa, Idaho-based Transform Solar is calling it quits.

The partnership between Micron Technology Inc. and Origin, an Australian energy company, plans to end its Idaho operations and lay off more than 250 workers over the next three months.

The news comes after Hawaiian company Hoku Materials dramatically reduced its staff at a new $400 million plant near Pocatello.

Canyon County officials say Steven Lesman had been at a feed lot and was traveling toward the highway at 4 p.m. Tuesday when the train struck the passenger side of his SUV at a crossing east of Parma. Officials don't know if he was on the tracks before he realized the train was coming or if he was trying to speed through.

Lesman was taken to the hospital with minor injuries.

N. Idaho Woman Wins Appeal in Case of Excessive Force

ASSOCIATED PRESS

COEUR D'ALENE • A federal appeals court has sided with a northern Idaho woman who claims Coeur d'Alene police officers used excessive force during an encounter three years ago.

The 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals issued a ruling late last week ordering further proceedings in a federal lawsuit filed by Shannon Kanda, of Coeur d'Alene. The appellate court overturned a July 2010 ruling by a federal judge who had dismissed Kanda's claims.

Kanda sued two police officers, the Coeur d'Alene Police Department and the city in August 2009.

In her lawsuit, she alleges that she had been assaulted May 7, 2009, outside her apartment and went to a neighbor's house to call police. Kanda was intoxicated at the time and claims that shortly after police officers arrived, they misjudged her unsteadiness as movements that were a threat to their security.

Kanda claims the officers reacted by throwing her down to the ground of a stairwell landing, breaking bones around her left eye. She was bleeding from the face when the officers handcuffed her and held her while waiting for an ambulance to arrive, her lawsuit alleges.

The paramedics who responded declined to treat Kanda based on the circumstances, and police officers placed her in their car and took her to Kootenai Medical Center, where she was admitted for treatment, according to the lawsuit.

Records show Kanda was charged in state court with battery upon certain personnel in December 2009, five months after she filed her lawsuit in federal court.

Kimberly Project Will Improve Main Street

BY DAVE WILKINS
For the Times-News

KIMBERLY • A revitalization project in downtown Kimberly will have practical benefits far beyond beautification, city officials told about 60 people who turned out for a town hall meeting on Tuesday.

The project, which is expected to cost nearly $900,000, will bring the downtown core into compliance with the Americans with Disabilities Act, officials said.

Handicapped parking spaces and wheelchair-accessible ramps are a major part of the project. Other features include the replacement of aging sidewalks and streets, upgraded storm drainage, improved pedestrian safety, new street lights and landscaping.

The targeted area is a three-block stretch along Main Street, from the railroad tracks to Center Street.

Residents were invited to express their opinions and ask questions.

While some voiced support for the project, others questioned whether it should be a top priority in light of other needs, including a major sewer system upgrade, sidewalk construction along school routes and a traffic signal at Red Cap Corner.

Others expressed concerns about the proposed sidewalk “bulb-outs” — the rounded extensions at the end of each block — and potential negative impacts to downtown merchants.

“During construction, there is unfortunately always some impact,” said Ivan McCracken, project manager with J-U-B Engineers, the firm that provides engineering services to the city.

The city will try to meet with representatives of all affected businesses to see what concerns they might have, he said.

“We also plan on telling the contractor that they can only do one block at a time,” McCracken said. “We're not going to let them go in and take the whole road down.”

The city will be forced to make many of the proposed improvements whether it's part of a grant-funded revitalization package or not, he said.

ADA requirements must still be met, downtown streets must be repaired and storm drainage improvements will be needed.

“If the grant doesn't go through, the city is going to need to step in and do the improvements anyway,” McCracken told residents.

It would take 13 separate projects to accomplish everything the revitalization project encompasses, he said.

Kimberly is in the running to receive a $500,000 community development block grant that would pay for most of the work. The city also set aside $300,000 from its streets budget and expects to receive a $100,000 grant from the Local Highway Technical Advisory Council.

The city's block grant application was put on standby status following the resignation of city administrator Polly Hulsey in April. Hulsey was the city's contact person with the Idaho Department of Commerce, the agency administering the grant.

Kimberly officials are still actively pursuing the grant and have until June 8 to file a response with the department.

“If the city is successful, we will be invited to make a presentation to the department of commerce and the governor's economic advisory council in July,” said Jeff McCurdy of Region 4 Development Association.

If the city does get the grant, design work could begin as early as September. Construction would take three to six months, but wouldn't begin until sometime next year.

Administrator Update

The city began interviewing candidates for the administrator's position. Part of the job includes being the city's point person for grant funding.

“We've narrowed the field, and we hope to have an offer for hire by the first of June,” Mayor Tracy Armstrong said.

City officials pledged to work closely with downtown businesses to minimize disruptions during construction.

“We're going to have a liaison who is going to be very active with all the businesses,” Councilman Jim Eisenhower said.

Yellowstone Officials Want to Change Park's Concession Contract

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MAMMOTH, Wyo. • The National Park Service is seeking $134 million in improvements to visitor and employee lodging and a greater share of the revenue generated by tourists visiting and staying in Yellowstone National Park, according to a proposed 20-year concessionaire contract.

"We're looking to replace or update our existing visitor facilities," park spokesman Al Nash told The Billings Gazette. "We've looked at where we wanted some of these facilities to be in the future, and we worked to devise a contract that we thought would offer a competitive business opportunity while achieving our goals for serving the American public."

Xanterra Parks and Resorts has the current contract to run the park's hotels, cabins and campgrounds along with 27 food and beverage outlets and nine retail locations. It expires in November 2013.

Xanterra spokesman Tom Mesereau said Wednesday the company is still reviewing the prospectus, which was issued in mid-May.

Xanterra's gross revenues in the park increased from about $79 million in 2008 to more than $86 million in 2010. Yellowstone's share, with a franchise fee of 2.5 percent, was $2.1 million in 2010. The park wants to raise the franchise fee to 6.8 percent.

The proposed improvements include upgrades to lodging and RV parks throughout Yellowstone along with existing food and beverage services.

Whoever wins the contract would be required to add rooms at Mammoth Hot Springs Hotel by converting space now used for administrative functions and by renovating 14 cabins used by employees for visitor use. The hotel also would have to be open year-round instead of just summer and winter.

At the Old Faithful Snow Lodge, the new concessionaire would be required to build a 77-room employee dormitory and convert 67 cabins now used by workers to be rented out to visitors. Improvements also would be required at Lake Yellowstone Hotel, Canyon Lodge and Lake Lodge including the rehabilitation of 19 cabins, the relocation of 15 more and demolishing an employee dorm and replacing it with a 60-room dorm.

The projects, estimated to cost $134 million, would have to be completed between 2015 and 2018, Nash said.

"We're going to require the successful bidder to put in a substantial amount of money in the early years of the contract to address the real needs," Nash said. "It's money we'd be less likely to find through federal appropriations. We felt ... this long-term contract was a mechanism to encourage prospective bidders that there are good business opportunities here."

Money Becomes Challenge to Tribal Sentencing Authority

BY FELICIA FONSECA
Associated Press

FLAGSTAFF, Ariz. • American Indian tribes authorized to triple the amount of time tribal members can spend in jail say they're challenged by a lack of funding.

The increase in tribal courts' sentencing authority from one year to three years for a single crime came two years ago under the federal Tribal Law and Order Act. But a U.S. Government Accountability Office report released Wednesday showed that none of the 109 tribes who responded to a survey about the sentencing increase were taking advantage of it.

Nearly all of those tribes said they need more money and technical help from the federal government to provide public defenders, establish or update criminal codes, and have sufficiently trained judges as the law requires.

The report shows 36 of the tribes surveyed are working toward the new authority. Another 34 tribes were unsure whether they would go in that direction, while 31 said they had no plans to do so, the report said. The enhanced sentencing isn't mandatory for tribes.

Troy Eid, chairman of the Indian Law and Order

Commission born out of the Tribal Law and Order Act, said tribes across the country are exploring the authority but it will take time to get all the elements in place if that's the path they choose.

"My impression is that within the next year, you'll start to see some tribes actually implementing the system," he said. "Tribes are being super careful. No tribe wants to get this issue wrong; it has to be legally correct."

The GAO cautioned the report isn't representative of all tribes. Congressional investigators identified 171 of the 566 federally recognized tribes that received federal funding for tribal courts to include in the survey, but not all of them responded.

Tribal leaders have said a year in jail for any crime under tribal law, including homicide, hasn't served as much of a deterrent on reservations. Members of the Navajo Nation Council have been debating whether the enhanced sentencing provision would help send a message that tribal officials are serious about combatting crime.

"The bad guys are saying they could get away with anything on the rez, which now pretty much is true," said Edmund Yazzie, chairman of the Navajo Nation Council's Law and Order Committee, and a former sheriff's deputy. "But now the committee is trying to take another look at it."

Tough Talk on EPA Not Bourne Out By Data

BY DINA CAPPIELLO AND RAMIT PLUSHNICK-MASTI
Associated Press

WASHINGTON • In the three years since President Barack Obama took office, Republicans have made the Environmental Protection Agency a lightning rod for complaints that his administration has been too tough on oil and gas producers.

But an Associated Press analysis of enforcement data over the past decade finds that's not the case. In fact, the EPA went after producers more often in the years of Republican President George W. Bush, a former Texas oilman, than under Obama.

Also, the agency's enforcement actions have declined overall since 2002 and reached their lowest point last year, the review found.

Accusations of EPA overzealousness peaked in April. That's when a regional administrator resigned after a two-year-old video surfaced in which he compared enforcement of oil and gas regulations with how the Romans used to conquer villages, by finding "the first five guys they saw and they'd crucify them?" GOP critics publicized the video of Al Armendariz, who headed the region that includes Texas and other major oil- and gas-producing states, as an example of what was wrong with an agency that Republican presidential contender Mitt Romney calls "completely out of control."

"We have a genuine concern that his comments reflect the agency's overall enforcement philosophy," six Republican congressmen from Texas, Oklahoma, and Louisiana said in a joint statement the day Armendariz stepped down.

Romney has expressed distaste for the EPA's tactics. The agency, he said late last year, "is a tool in the hands of the president to crush the private enterprise system, to crush our ability to — to have energy, whether it's oil, gas, coal, nuclear."

Iran: 'Flame' Virus Fight Began with Oil Attack

VAHID SALEMI • ASSOCIATED PRESS

BY ALI AKBAR DAREINI AND BRIAN MURPHY
Associated Press

TEHRAN, Iran • Computer technicians battling to contain a complex virus last month resorted to the ultimate firewall measures — cutting off Internet links to Iran's Oil Ministry, rigs and the hub for nearly all the country's crude exports.

At the time, Iranian officials described it as a data-siphoning blitz on key oil networks.

On Wednesday, they gave it a name: A strike by the powerful "Flame" malware that experts this week have called a new and highly sophisticated program capable of hauling away computer files and even listening in on computer users. Its origins remain a mystery, but international suspicion quickly fell on Israel opening another front in its suspected covert wars with archenemy Tehran. "This virus penetrated some fields. One of them was the oil sector," said Gholam Reza Jalali, who heads an Iranian military unit in charge of fighting sabotage. "Fortunately, we detected and controlled this single incident."

The Flame virus — a mix of cyberspy and hard-drive burglar — has been detected across the Middle East recently. But Iran's linkage to the oil network attack in April could mark its first major infiltration and suggests a significant escalation in attempts to disrupt Iran's key commercial and nuclear sites. Iran is one of the world's leading oil producers.

Two years ago, a virus called Stuxnet tailored to disrupt Iran's nuclear centrifuges caused some setbacks within its uranium enrichment labs and infected an estimated 16,000 computers, Iranian officials say. At least two other smaller viruses have been detected in nuclear and industrial centers. The Flame program, however, is widely considered as a technological leap in break-in programming. Some experts also see the same high level of engineering shared by Stuxnet, which many suspect was the work of Israeli intelligence.

"It is very complex and very sophisticated," said Marco Obiso, cybersecurity coordinator at the U.N.'s International Telecommunication Union in Geneva. "It's one of the most serious yet."

Israel, a world leader in computer security, has never confirmed or denied any involvement in Stuxnet or other viruses that have hit Iranian networks nationwide.

Israel fears that Iran's nuclear program is geared toward developing a weapon that might be turned against it and Israel itself is believed to have nuclear weapons.

JERUSALEM • There are signs the Israeli government is considering taking unilateral action if peace talks with the Palestinians remain stalled, a move which could involve a withdrawal from parts of the West Bank along the lines of a 2005 pullout from the Gaza Strip.

Barak

Defense Minister Ehud Barak told a high-profile security conference on Wednesday that inaction is not an option and Israel cannot wait forever to reach an accord.

"Israel cannot afford to tread water," Barak said. If a deal "proves to be impossible, we have to consider a provisional arrangement or even unilateral action."

The statement reflected a growing sense of urgency in Israel about ending its 45-year entanglement with the Palestinians, even if no peace deal is possible.

Two decades of on-again, off-again peace talks have failed to yield an agreement, and negotiations have been frozen for more than three years. And as time passed, a shift of thinking has quietly occurred in Israel: The occupation of Palestinian lands may ultimately be bad for Israel simply because ruling millions of Arabs will demographically sink the Jewish state.

The new twist: Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu, who has grown increasingly vocal about the need to separate from the Palestinians, now has a broad coalition freeing him of nationalists who claim biblical rights to the West Bank.

Netanyahu, who for years rejected most concessions to the Palestinians, has also raised concerns in recent months that continued control of the more than 2 million Palestinians in the West Bank would threaten Israel's character as a democracy with a Jewish majority.

11-year-old Played Dead to Survive Syria Massacre

BY BASSEM MROUE AND ELIZABETH A. KENNEDY
Associated Press

BEIRUT • When the gunmen began to slaughter his family, 11-year-old Ali el-Sayed says he fell to the floor of his home, soaking his clothes with his brother's blood to fool the killers into thinking he was already dead.

The Syrian boy tried to stop himself from trembling, even as the gunmen, with long beards and shaved heads, killed his parents and all four of his siblings, one by one.

The youngest to die was Ali's brother, 6-year-old Nader. His small body bore two bullet holes — one in his head, another in his back.

"I put my brother's blood all over me and acted like I was dead," Ali told The Associated Press over Skype on Wednesday, his raspy voice steady and matter-of-fact, five days after the killing spree that left him both an orphan and an only child.

Ali is one of the few survivors of a weekend massacre in Houla, a collection of poor farming villages and olive groves in Syria's central Homs province.

This image, made from amateur video released by Ugarit News and accessed Monday, purports to show a Syrian child who survived the Houla massacre speaking about it, in Homs, Syria.

More than 100 people were killed, many of them women and children who were shot or stabbed in their houses.

The killings brought immediate, worldwide condemnation of President Bashar Assad, who has unleashed a violent crackdown on an uprising that began in March 2011. Activists say as many as 13,000 people have been killed since the revolt began.

U.N. investigators and witnesses blame at least some of the Houla killings on shadowy gunmen known as shabiha who operate on behalf of Assad's government.

EDWARDS JURORS RELEASED W/O VERDICT

GREENSBORO, N.C. •

The judge overseeing the John Edwards campaign corruption trial sent the jury home Wednesday after eight days of talks without a verdict and released the four alternate jurors.

U.S. District Court Judge Catherine C. Eagles gave no indication whether she believed the 12 jurors are any closer to deciding the fate of the two-time Democratic presidential candidate.

9/11 RESPONDERS HONORED

NEW YORK • The National September 11 Memorial and Museum on Wednesday marked the 10th anniversary of the end of cleanup operations at the site with a tribute to recovery workers and first responders. “It looks peaceful, the extreme opposite of what I saw when I first came down,” said Jaye Markwell, who helped deliver food during the effort.

RUTGERS JUDGE: JAIL HARSH ENOUGH

NEW BRUNSWICK, N.J. •

After fielding criticism in emails, blogs and newspaper columns, a judge on Wednesday defended his decision to give a 30-day jail sentence to the former Rutgers student who used a webcam to spy on his gay roommate. Superior Court Judge Glenn Berman said the punishment is harsh enough to deter others, but not so severe that it will dump Dharun Ravi into prison with hardened criminals.

Wildfire Largest in N.M. History

BY RUSSELL CONTRERAS
Associated Press

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. • A massive wildfire that has burned more than 265 square miles in the Gila National Forest has become the largest fire in New Mexico history, fire officials confirmed Wednesday.

The erratic blaze grew overnight to more than 170,000 acres, surpassing a blaze last year that burned 156,593 acres in Los Conchas and threatened the Los Alamos National Laboratory, the nation's premier nuclear facility.

And experts says the mammoth fire may be just a preview of what's to come in part of the western United States after months of drought and dry conditions.

The Gila forest fire also is the largest burning in the country. It formed last week when two lightning-sparked blazes merged in an isolated mountainous area in southwestern New Mexico, where it has destroyed about a dozen homes and prompted evacuations of nearby towns and health alerts for some of the state's largest cities.

Fire information officer Jerry Perry said about 1,200 firefighters from around the state were battling the growing blaze, but that they continue to face low humidity and shifting winds in their efforts.

“We still facing adverse weather conditions that are posing a challenge,” Perry said. “We’re doing a lot of burnout operations and yesterday we had to deal with a lot of spot fires.”

The fire has not been contained, and officials worry that shifting winds and dryness related to the state's record drought may cause the blaze to grow even more.

The blaze so far has threatened few communities and was burning away from many of New Mexico's largest towns and cities. But state officials issued air quality alerts for cities as far as Albuquerque, nearly 170 miles away, and Santa Fe last weekend, and Perry said parts of southern New Mexico could expect to see smoke from the fire.

Jeremy Sullens, a wildland fire analyst at the National Interagency Fire Center, said La Nina is main reason the U.S. Southwest has experienced months of drought and saw a relatively mild winter. The grass that would have fallen because of snow remains high sparking more dangerous fire conditions, he said.

“It's highly likely that the western United States will see more fires this season that will that will require (out-of-state) resources to fight them,” Sullens said.

He added July's monsoon season will probably help in alleviating some fires but it's unclear how much.

The National Weather Service said winds will likely blow smoke into Las Cruces on Wednesday and Thursday.

Pentagon Looks to Strengthen Cyberspace Might

BY ELLEN NAKASHIMA
The Washington Post

The Pentagon is turning to the private sector, universities and even computer gamers as part of an ambitious effort to develop technologies to improve its cyberwarfare capabilities, launch effective attacks and withstand the likely retaliation.

The previously unreported effort, which its authors have dubbed Plan X, marks a new phase in the nation's fledgling military operations in cyberspace, which have focused more on protecting the Defense Department's own computer systems than on disrupting or destroying those of enemies.

Plan X is a project of the Defense Advanced Research Projects Agency, a Pentagon agency that focuses on experimental efforts and has a key role in harnessing computing power to help the military wage war more effectively.

“If they can do it, it's really big deal,” said Herbert S. Lin, a cyber expert with the National Research Council of the National Academy of Sciences. “If they achieve it, they're talking about being able to dominate the digital battlefield just like they do the traditional battlefield.”

Cyberwarfare conjures images of smoking servers, downed electrical systems and exploding industrial plants, but military officials say that cyberweapons are unlikely to be used on their own. Instead, they would support conventional attacks, by blinding an enemy to an impending airstrike, for example, or disabling a foe's communications system during battle.

The five-year, $110 million research program will begin seeking proposals this summer. Among the goals will be the creation of an advanced map that details the entirety of cyberspace — a global domain that includes tens of billions of computers and other devices — and updates itself continuously. Such a map would help commanders identify targets and disable them using computer code delivered through the Internet or other means.

Another goal is the creation of a new, robust operating system capable of both launching attacks and surviving counter-attacks. Officials say this would be the cyberspace equivalent of an armored tank; they compare existing computer operating systems to SUVs — well-suited to peaceful highways but too vulnerable to work on battlefields.

The architects of Plan X also hope to develop systems that could give commanders the ability to carry out speed-of-light attacks and counterattacks using pre-planned scenarios that do not involve human operators manually typing in code — a process considered much too slow.

New Lab Turns SD Gold Town into Scientific Hub

BY AMBER HUNT
Associated Press

LEAD, S.D. • Nestled nearly 5,000 feet beneath the earth in the gold boom town of Lead, S.D., is a laboratory that could help scientists answer some pretty heavy questions about life, its origins and the universe.

It's hard to spot from the surface. Looking around the rustic town, there are far more nods to its mining past than to its scientific future, but on Wednesday, when part of the closed Homestake Gold Mine officially becomes an underground campus, Lead's name will be known in scientific circles as the place where the elusive stuff called dark matter might finally be detected.

Unimpressed? Consider this: It's sure to earn itself a reference on TV's “The Big Bang Theory.”

“This year, 2012, is going to be a very significant year because we get to turn the ... detector on and know very soon whether we have actually found dark matter or not,” said Rick Gaitskell, a scientist with Brown University who has worked alongside dozens of scientists over the past few years to move forward with the Large Underground Xenon experiment — or LUX — the world's most sensitive dark-matter detector.

For most people, dark matter is a term that made their eyes glaze over in science class. But for Gaitskell and scientists like him, it's the mystery meat of existence.

“It makes up a huge amount of the universe,” said Kevin Lesko, of Lawrence Berkley National Lab, who is the principal investigator for the Sanford Underground Research Facility.

They know it's there by its gravitational pull but, unlike regular matter and antimatter, it's so far undetectable. Scientific papers and books have been dedicated to what it could be, but so far, Gaitskell — who's said he's been “hunting dark matter” for 23 years — and his colleagues know only that it could explain why the universe isn't made up equally of matter and antimatter. That, in turn, could explain how the world as we know it came to be.

“It has to be there because of its effects through gravity, but it also has to have properties that make it very unusual — otherwise, we would have detected it already,” Lesko said.

Surgery, Long Recovery for Face-chewing Victim

MIAMI (AP) • A homeless man whose face was mostly chewed off in a bizarre, vicious attack faces a bigger threat from infection than from the injuries themselves, according to experts on facial reconstruction. He will require months of treatment to rebuild his features and be permanently disfigured.

Though gruesome, such severe facial injuries are generally not life threatening. The most serious risk to Ronald Poppo as he remained hospitalized Wednesday were germs that may have been introduced by the bites of the naked man who attacked him. One of the 65-year-old's eyes was also gouged out.

“The human mouth is basically filthy,” said Dr. Seth Thaller, the chief of plastic and reconstructive surgery at the University of Miami's Miller School of Medicine.

It's not clear why Poppo was attacked Saturday afternoon by 31-year-old Rudy Eugene alongside a busy highway. Police have released few details about the attack, but surveillance video from a nearby building shows Eugene pulling Poppo from the shade, stripping and pummeling him before appearing to hunch over and then lie on top of him.

“I wish they didn't kill him so he could tell us exactly what happened. This is very uncharacteristic of him.”

Brother of attacker Rudy Eugene, 31

A witness described Eugene ripping at Poppo's face with his mouth and growling at a Miami police officer who ordered him to get off the homeless man. The officer shot and killed Eugene.

Eugene's younger brother said that he was a sweet person who didn't drink much or use hard drugs.

“I wish they didn't kill him so he could tell us exactly what happened. This is very uncharacteristic of him,” said the brother, who asked for anonymity to protect his family from harassment.

Police union officials representing the officer said the scene on the MacArthur Causeway was one of the goriest they had ever seen.

“He had his face eaten down to his goatee. The forehead was just bone. No nose, no mouth,” said Sgt. Armando Aguilar.

Judges Sentence Charles Taylor to 50 Years

BY MIKE CORDER
Associated Press

LEIDSCHEMENDAM, Netherlands • Former Liberian President Charles Taylor was sentenced to 50 years imprisonment Wednesday for arming and supporting murderous rebels in Sierra Leone in return for “blood diamonds,” a landmark sentence activists hope will send a clear message to despots around the world that they will be held to account for sponsoring atrocities.

Taylor, wearing a blue suit and gold tie, stood grimaced and silent as Presiding Judge Richard Lussick of Samoa imposed what will likely amount to a life sentence for the 64 year old.

Lussick said Taylor’s position as head of state at the time of his crimes put him in a “class of his own” when judges came to setting the sentence — one of the longest ever handed down by the Special Court for Sierra Leone or any other international tribunal.

Taylor shipped arms, ammunition and other supplies to rebels in Sierra Leone in return for personal wealth in the form of diamonds mined by slave labor and to gain increasing political clout in the volatile West Africa region.

Taylor’s reaction in court Wednesday was in stark contrast to the delight of survivors who gathered in the Sierra Leone capital, Freetown, to watch a live feed of the sentencing.

“That makes me the happiest person on earth,” said Alimami Kanu, who was 11 when rebels backed by Taylor hacked off his right hand. He was one of thousands of civilians mutilated during Sierra Leone’s decade-long civil war that ended in 2002 with some 50,000 dead.

Human rights activists and international law experts also hailed the tough sentence as a warning shot for war criminals.

“Today’s sentence not only reflects the severity of Taylor’s crimes but sends a clear message that individuals who aid and abet war crimes can no longer act with impunity,” said Patrick Alley, director of Global Witness, a nongovernment group that campaigns to prevent conflicts erupting around exploitation of natural resources such as diamonds and timber.

The sentence came a month after Taylor became the first former head of state since World War II to be convicted by an international court. Judges found him guilty of 11 counts of war crimes and crimes against humanity, including murder, rape, torture and the use of child soldiers.

“The lives of many more innocent civilians in Sierra Leone were lost or destroyed as a direct result of his actions,” Lussick said.

Prosecutors had sought an 80-year sentence and said they are considering appealing.

“It is important in our view that those responsible for criminal misconduct on a massive scale are not given a volume discount,” said the U.N.-backed court’s chief prosecutor, Brenda Hollis.

Hollis said Taylor’s prison term would only provide a measure of closure for victims of one of Africa’s most savage conflicts.

“The sentence that was imposed today does not replace amputated limbs. It does not bring back those who were murdered,” she said. “It does not heal the wounds of those who were victims of sexual violence and does not remove the permanent emotional and psychological and physical scars of those enslaved or recruited as child soldiers.”

Taylor will serve his sentence in a British jail. His lawyers, however, said they will appeal his convictions and that will likely keep him in a jail in The Hague, Netherlands, for months.

Taylor’s lead attorney, Courtenay Griffiths, criticized the court for refusing while setting Taylor’s sentence to take into account his decision to step down from power following his indictment in 2003. Griffiths said that sends a worrying message against the backdrop of ongoing atrocities allegedly being committed by Syrian President Bashar Assad’s forces.

“What lesson does that send to President Assad?” Griffiths said. “Maybe the lesson is: If you are a sitting leader and the international community wants to get rid of you, either you get murdered like Col. Gadhafi, or you hang on until the bitter end. I’m not so sure that’s the signal this court ought to be transmitting at this particular historical juncture.”

Griffiths said Africans should use Taylor’s conviction as a starting point to campaign for justice for themselves.

“Justice isn’t something which Africans should obtain, exported to them from abroad by the white man, the civilizing force,” he said.

EU Weighs Direct Aid to Banks, Euro Bonds as Crisis Antidote

BY JAMES G. NEUGER
Bloomberg News

BRUSSELS • The European Commission called for direct euro-area aid for troubled banks, and touted a Europe-wide deposit-guarantee system and common bond issuance as antidotes to the debt crisis now threatening to overwhelm Spain.

The commission, the European Union’s central regulator, sided with Spain in proposing that the euro’s permanent bailout fund inject cash to banks instead of channeling the money via national governments. It also offered Spain extra time to squeeze the budget deficit.

The use of the rescue fund to recapitalize banks “might be envisaged” and would “sever the link between banks and the sovereigns,” the commission said Wednesday in Brussels. Jose Barroso, the commission’s president, said “it is important to use all possibilities offered in terms of flexibility.”

Proposals for more liberal use of European bailout money are likely to face resistance in creditor countries such as Germany, Finland and the Netherlands, the scenes of growing taxpayer opposition to more aid.

Signs of stress multiplied in financial markets Wednesday. Italy missed its target in a bond auction, driving its 10-year yields as high as 6.01 percent, the highest since Jan. 31. The yield was at 5.95 percent at 2:10 p.m. in Brussels. Doubts over the health of Spain’s banks pushed up Spanish 10-year yields as high as 6.70 percent, the highest since Nov. 28. That yield was last at 6.62 percent.

After more than two crisis-filled years and 386 billion euros ($480 billion) in loan pledges to Greece, Ireland and Portugal, “markets remain exceptionally tense and vigilant and confidence is still weak,” the commission said.

The euro has tumbled 6 percent in May, hit first by concern that Greek voters will reject bailout conditions, then by worries that Spain will be forced to fall back on a European lifeline. The currency pared Wednesday’s decline after the commission floated the bank-recapitalization ideas. It last bought $1.2441.

ODD POLITICS, PRESIDENTIAL TRADITION: BUSH IS BACK

BY BEN FELLER
Associated Press

WASHINGTON • This is a little awkward.

President Barack Obama can’t seem to stop bad-mouthing the record of former President George W. Bush. But on Thursday, Obama is going to welcome his predecessor and proudly preside as Bush’s image and legacy are enshrined at the White House forever.

Obama and first lady Michelle Obama will join Bush and his wife, Laura, as their official portraits are unveiled. The incumbent is keeping up a presidential tradition typically defined by cheer and graciousness, but not without some uneasiness.

Hardly a day goes by without Obama or his aides talking about the mess they inherited — meaning, from Bush.

It was just one week ago that Obama, revving up campaign donors, turned Bush into a punch line. Obama depicted Republican rival Mitt Romney as a peddler of bad economic ideas, helping the rich at the expense of the middle class, and then added to laughs: “That was tried, remember? The last guy did all this.”

Now the last guy is coming back.

So, too, will his father, former President George H.W. Bush and the former first lady Barbara Bush. The Obamas will hold forth in the ornate East Room as George and Laura Bush are honored for their service before an invited audience of Bush friends and former staff members.

What Next for Romney? Undercut Obama, Raise Money

BY THOMAS BEAUMONT
Associated Press

DES MOINES, Iowa • What’s next for Mitt Romney? The Republican presidential nomination finally in hand, he will spend the next three months trying to undercut President Barack Obama on the economy while portraying himself as Mr. Fix It for a nation with stubbornly and painfully high unemployment.

Romney also faces key decisions between now and his acceptance of the party’s nomination in late August in Florida: Where should he compete most aggressively? Who should be his running mate?

At the same time, he must dive anew into fundraising and work to win over voters who are distracted by their own summer plans and day-to-day pocketbook worries — while withstanding Obama’s attacks on his own claims as a jobs creator.

Not that Romney is publicly sweating the hurdles that come with being the little-known challenger to a personally popular president.

“People will get to know me better,” Romney told Fox News in an interview that aired Wednesday, the day after he sealed the GOP nomination with his primary election victory in Texas. He says the general election campaign is only beginning even though his chief challenger dropped out more than six weeks ago.

With a smile, he said of the voters, “My guess is they’re going to get to know more about me than they’d like to by the time we’re finished.”

As if on cue, Obama’s campaign opened a fresh critique of the GOP nominee-in-waiting, assailing his economic record as governor of Massachusetts. It’s the second phase of an effort by Obama to define Romney negatively in voters’ eyes. The Democrat already has spent weeks hammering the Republican on his record at the private equity company he founded.

WikiLeaks’s Assange Loses British Extradition Appeal

BY ERIK LARSON
Bloomberg News

LONDON • Julian Assange, founder of the anti-secrecy website WikiLeaks, lost a British Supreme Court appeal to block his extradition to Sweden to face rape claims after questioning a technicality of his detainment 18 months ago. His lawyer said she may challenge the decision.

The court on Wednesday rejected Assange’s argument that the Swedish prosecutor who investigated the sexual assault claims and issued a European arrest warrant for him in 2010 wasn’t a “judicial authority” under European Union law.

Assange’s lawyer Dinah Rose said she may seek to reopen the matter by challenging the court’s handling of the case. She claimed the 5-2 decision in London was unfairly based on the court’s interpretation of a “precise point” of law that wasn’t argued during a hearing in February. If she pursues that route, it would be the first such challenge of a British top court ruling.

While Assange, 40, wasn’t in court, dozens of his supporters attended the hearing and protesters holding signs surrounded the court’s entrance. Britain’s Crown Prosecution Service agreed not to return him to Sweden until June 13, and his legal team was given 14 days to file a challenge, the court’s spokesman Ben Wilson said after the hearing.

The claims by two women that Assange sexually assaulted them became public around the same time he posted classified U.S. military and diplomatic cables on the WikiLeaks website, creating controversy for U.S. President Obama’s administration. Assange, an Australian, claimed Sweden fabricated the arrest warrant to assist the United States in punishing him for the breach.

“Now for Mr. Assange, I think the best is really to cooperate, to come to Sweden to settle the matter and await the decision if the prosecutor wants to go to trial,” said Christoffer Wong, a lecturer in international law at Sweden’s Lund University. “Of course there may be a way he can delay or obstruct the transfer if he chooses out of principle to do so.”

Assange may also appeal to the European Court of Human Rights, which would have two weeks to respond, according to the CPS, which represents Sweden in the case.

Assange, arrested in London in December 2010, is accused of failing to use a condom with one of the women and having sex with the other while she was asleep. The women, both supporters of WikiLeaks, let Assange stay at their homes during a speaking tour in Sweden in 2010. The British Court of Appeal ruled in November that he should return to Sweden to face the claims. He hasn’t been charged with a crime.

Can You Really Teach a Kid to Become Bullyproof?

BY BETH J. HARPAZ
Associated Press

NEW YORK • Teaching kids to become "bullyproof" is all the rage. Books, videos and websites promise to show parents how to protect their kids from being bullied; school districts are buying curricula with names like "Bully-Proofing Your School," a well-regarded program used in thousands of classrooms. Even martial arts programs are getting in to the act: "Bullyproofing the world, one child at a time," is the motto for a jujitsu program called Gracie Bullyproof.

But can you really make a child invulnerable to getting picked on? And even if you could, should the burden really be on potential victims to learn these skills, rather than on punishing or reforming the bullies?

Parents and educators say when bullyproofing programs are done right, kids can be taught the social and emotional skills they need to avoid becoming victims. But bullyproofing is not just about getting bullies to move on to a different target. It's also about creating a culture of kindness, beginning in preschool, and encouraging kids to develop strong friendships that can prevent the social isolation sometimes caused by extreme bullying.

Who's Got Your Back

Bullies "sniff out kids who lack connections or who are isolated because of depression, mental health issues, disabilities or differences in size and shape," said Malcolm Smith, a family education and policy specialist at the University of New Hampshire who has been researching peer victimization for more than 30 years. "So if you're worried about your child being a victim, the best thing a parent can do from a very young age, starting in preschool, is ask, 'Who's got your back? When you're on the bus, when you're in the hall, who's got your back?'" If they can't name someone, you should help them establish connections to their peers.

Smith, who is working on a program called "Courage to Care" that's being tested in three rural New Hampshire schools, cited an example of a new boy who was being pushed and shoved by other boys in the hallway. "We didn't know how to empower him," Smith said, until the staff noticed that he'd become friends with a girl. "This girl is sweet but really assertive. What are seventh grade boys more afraid of than anything? Girls! So having her walk down the hall with this boy was the immediate solution to ending the bullying."

Psychologist Joel Haber, a consultant on the recent documentary "Bully," says kids should also have "back-up friends" outside school through sports, hobbies, summer camp or religious groups. "That's hugely important, especially as kids move from elementary to middle school."

Emotional Skills

Haber says "most kids can learn skills to make themselves less likely to have the big reactions" that feed bullies.

"Let's say you're one of those kids who, when I make fun of your clothes, you get really angry and dramatic. If I taught you in a role-play situation as a parent or a therapist to react differently, even if you felt upset inside, you would get a totally different reaction from the bully. And if you saw that kids wouldn't tease you, your confidence would go up," said Haber.

One way parents can help is to normalize conversations about school social life so that kids are comfortable talking about it. Don't just ask "How was school today?" Ask, "Who'd you have lunch with, who'd you sit with, who'd you play with, what happens on the bus, do you ever notice kids getting teased or picked on or excluded?" advises Haber, who offers other bullyproofing tips and resources at RespectU.com and is co-authored of a new book called "The Resilience Formula."

Body Language

Bullies "feed on the body language of fear. It's a physical reaction — how the victim responds, how they hold their head and shoulders, the tone of voice," said Jim Bisenius, a therapist who has taught his "Bully-Proofing Youth" program in more than 400 schools in Ohio and elsewhere.

Teaching a kid to appear confident physically can sometimes be easier to teach than verbal skills, Bisenius said. "If a kid who's never been mean in his life tries to fake it, or tries to outdo a bully with a verbal comeback, the bully sees right through that."

Lisa Suhay, a mom in Norfolk, Va., said her 8-year-old son Quin was helped by Gracie Bullyproof, a martial arts program taught in 55 locations that combines verbal strategies with defensive jujitsu moves. Quin had been bullied so much on the playground that Suhay stopped taking him there. But she decided to give the park one last try after he completed the Gracie training.

No sooner did Quin begin playing on a pirate ship than a bigger boy knocked him down and ordered him to leave. But this time, as his mom watched in amazement, Quin grabbed the other kid around the waist "and landed on him like a big matress, all while saying, 'That was an incredibly bad idea you just had. But I'm not afraid of you.'" The other boy swung again, and Quin took him down again, then asked,

"Now do you want to play nice?" They played pirates for the rest of the afternoon.

Watch Wildflowers Bloom

BY KAREN BOSSICK
For the Times-News

SUN VALLEY • The Sawtooth Botanical Garden will mark its first Wildflower Walk of the season today with a trip to the Wood River Land Trust's Sheep Bridge Preserve, which abuts the Big wood River and Camas Creek near the junction of Highway 75 and Highway 20. The SBG will lead a walk in a new location for the nine Thursdays that follow, following the flowers as they bloom north. Wildflower Walks take place from 9:30 a.m. to 2 p.m. and will be led by Allison Kennedy Marks, Jeanne Cassell and other wildflower experts. Walks are $10 for SBG members and $15 for nonmembers. All depart from the SBG Garden four miles south of Ketchum at Highway 75 and Gimlet Road. Participants should bring lunch, water and sunscreen. To register, call 726-9358.

BLM OPENS ROADS IN BLAIR FIRE BURN AREA

TIMES-NEWS

GLENN'S FERRY • Several roads in the Blair Fire burn area will reopen to motorized vehicle access in anticipation of seasonal recreational use. The Bureau of Land Management closed motorized access last summer after almost 40,000 acres were lost in a wildfire just north of Kings Hill. The fire destroyed habitat for both mule deer and sage grouse. In order to protect the area from further damage, the BLM put the ban in place for two years. However, starting June 1, the BLM will open the BLM Road, Walker Reservoir Road and Lower Hog Creek Road. The roads will close Dec. 31 and reopen again next year starting June 1 to Sept. 5, 2013. After then, the BLM will lift the motorized closure. Closing the area to motorized traffic helps establish newly seeded shrubs while also reduce the spread of noxious weeds. The closure will also improve habitat for slickspot peppergrass, a species listed as threatened under the Endangered Species Act. "The closure will allow burned areas to re-establish a vegetative cover which protects the soil from erosion and provides for moisture retention and helps to ensure the long-term viability of potential slickspot peppergrass plants and their associated habitat in this area," said Joe Russell, a BLM fire ecologist, in a news release. Maps of the burn area's closure are available at the BLM Shoshone and Four Rivers Field Offices, the Idaho Department of Fish Game Office in Jerome and online at blm.gov. For questions and more information, contact Joe Russell, 732-7200.

YOUNG SPELUNKERS

Students experience the fun and excitement of caving through BLM program.

BY JULIE WOOTTON

SHOSHONE • As Gooding sixth-graders emerged from a cave north of Shoshone, they squinted as their eyes adjusted to the sunlight. The hourlong experience navigating unstable lava rocks inside the cave didn't seem to tire the middle school students. They were chatting and laughing as they waited to get back on the school bus. "They were really, really fun to go into," 12-year-old Callie Graves said about going into two caves. It was easy to see inside, she said, because she was wearing a headlamp over her bike helmet. Riken Schulthies, 12, held up the bike helmet he was wearing, which had many small scrapes on it from the cave ceiling. He said caving was fun and he wants to go again. The highlight of the trip: "We got to learn about fungus," he said. Rangers and interns from the U.S. Bureau of Land Management's Shoshone field office led a few school field trips last week at the Maze and Tee caves. It was part of the agency's Take it Outside program. Shelley Davis-Brunner, Idaho's youth program lead for the BLM, said the national program began in 2010 to provide outdoor education experiences for children. Each Idaho field office comes up with its own program and finds participants. Davis-Brunner said the goal is to promote outdoor physical activity and help children become more aware of what public lands are nearby.

Caving tips

- Don't go alone. Local spelunker Chris Anderson recommends going caving with at least two other people. If anyone gets injured, there should be enough people in the group to stay with the person and send someone to get help.
- Always wear head protection. Anderson sees people going into caves frequently without head protection. It's easy to accidentally bang your head on a rock, he said. Head protection doesn't have to be anything fancy — a construction hard hat or bike helmet will work.
- Bring three sources of light per person. Light sources can include a headlamp or flashlight. One flashlight per group of people isn't enough, Anderson said.
- Be prepared with the right clothing. Sturdy shoes — such as boots — with a good grip are recommended. Anderson said some cavers also find knee or elbow pads helpful if the cave involves crawling, as well as gloves. Don't wear clothes you like, he said, because they could get stained. Anderson also recommends dressing in layers since temperatures can change.
- Be a respectful visitor. Anderson said cavers should pick up trash and leave the cave cleaner than they found it. They should remember they're the visitor in that environment and strive to "leave no trace behind," he said.

How to get there

The Maze and Tee caves are about eight miles north of Shoshone off Idaho Highway 75. Turn onto Thorn Creek Desert Road and you'll see a sign at the start of the road leading to the caves.

Sun Valley Resort unveils proposal for new mountain bike trails at Bald Mountain.

BY KAREN BOSSICK
Times-News correspondent

SUN VALLEY • Sun Valley, which has been a destination ski resort since 1936, now wants to turn Bald Mountain into a destination mountain bike resort. The resort unveiled proposals last week for seven new mountain bike trails and two remodeled trails before a hundred bike enthusiasts crowded into River Run Lodge. Sun Valley trail crew member Julian Tyo, who helped create the course for the 2011 and 2012 USSA National Mountain Bike Championships on Bald Mountain, said the resort wants to create a ski season for summer with a "robust" offering of trails of all abilities. String a few of the proposed trails together and you'll have a 9.6-mile downhill flow trail, which would be the longest in the United States, he added. The new trails would also give the Sun Valley area what it needs to achieve a gold ranking by national bicycling associations, he said. Right now the area would likely merit a silver. The new bicycle trails would be located primarily on the River Run side of Bald Mountain and would be accessible via Sun Valley's gondola and Christmas chairlift. Seven percent would be geared toward advanced riders; 58 percent for intermediate and 35 percent for novice. Even the novice trails would be suitable for intermediate and advanced riders, Tyo said: "We might have three rollers and the beginner would roll over all three, while the intermediate rider would roll over two and jump the third. The advanced rider could jump all three."

Cast Away at Fly-Tying Festival

Sponsored by angling groups and outfitters, the fun begins June 8 in Ketchum.

BY KAREN BOSSICK
For the Times-News

KETCHUM • It'll be all about the fish when the first Ketchum Cast Away and Fly-Tying Festival is held June 8 through 11 in Ketchum. The weekend of fly-tying and fly-casting is organized by Idaho Steelhead and Salmon Unlimited, which has teamed with Lost River Outfitters, Ketchum On the Fly, Silver Creek Outfitters and Sturtevant's Mountain Outfitters. Proceeds from the event will benefit wild steelhead and salmon recovery in Idaho. The weekend will kick off with a Meet and Greet for British Columbia steelhead guide April Vokey and Dr. Rick Williams, who studies the conservation of steelhead, redband and cutthroat trout subspecies in western North America, from 6 to 8:30 p.m. June 8 at Silver Creek Outfitters at Fifth and Main Street, Ketchum. "April Vokey is world famous in her field and Dr. Williams is equally renowned," said Woody Friedlander, a member of Idaho Trout Unlimited. Vokey will present a short talk and PowerPoint presentation outlining British Columbia's efforts to protect wild fish. And she will demonstrate what fishing with a fly rod in British Columbia is all about. There'll be a raffle to win a spey rod and reel combo and a steelhead fishing trip for two on the Clearwater River, plus lots of other goodies. And Sweetwater Village in Hailey will be serving

Most of the trails would be 72 inches wide offering riders a variety of line choices. There also would be rest areas, observation points and interpretive stations.

The easier trails would be on top of the mountain allowing novice riders to take the gondola down if they don't have the skills to ride the more advanced trails on the lower half of the mountain.

The current 2.1-mile Lower River Run Trail would be remodeled to make it a bicycle-only trail, and a new 1.2-mile trail for hikers and climbing bicyclists would be built for hikers and uphill bicyclists heading to the Roundhouse.

The Broadway Trail along the bowls would also be remodeled to make it more suitable for hikers and uphill bicyclists.

A flying bridge would be built over the popular 5.1 Bald Mountain Trail to avoid conflicts between bicyclists and hikers.

Analysts for Gravity Logic, whose clients include Whistler, Winter Park, Jackson, Aspen, Steamboat and Stevens Pass ski areas, confirmed that Sun Valley has the lift, terrain and other facilities necessary to attract the masses, Tyo said.

"We have amazing dirt, which is key for construction and will require minimal maintenance versus what you find elsewhere," he added.

Gravity Logic also praised Bald Mountain's Cold Springs and Warm Springs trails, which would continue to be open, Tyo said.

"Seventeen miles of lift-assisted engineered flow trail from top to bottom of Bald Mountain — I think the proposal is fantastic," said Tony Parkhill, Ketchum. "It will augment the miles of world-class single track already here."

Sun Valley hopes to begin work on the trails with the help of IMBA (International Mountain Bicycling Association) trail specialists Randy Spangler and Chris Leman in the summer of 2013.

Sun Valley's Mountain Manager Peter Stearns said the resort is asking the public to comment on the proposals within the next 30 days. The resort will tweak the plan, if necessary, before submitting it to the Ketchum Ranger District and Bureau of Land Management.

The Forest Service will then conduct an environmental study with the goal of making a decision next spring, said Recreation Forester Joe Miczulski.

This summer Sun Valley Resort and the Ketchum Ranger District plan to remove some timber on Upper Warm Springs and near Upper College to reduce fire hazards, improve forest health and offer more glade skiing, said Kurt Nelson, district ranger for the Ketchum Ranger District.

Additional work would likely be done to stands near the new trails, if they're approved, said Miczulski.

Caves

"A lot of us take for granted the things right around us," she said.

With a number of caves in south-central Idaho, caving is one of the Shoshone field office's outreach activities.

David Freiberg, outdoor recreation planner for the Shoshone office, said the programs are available to any schools that are interested.

The office works most closely with the Shoshone and Gooding school districts. There's an annual agreement in place between the BLM and those districts to provide field trips.

But the BLM has also provided trips for other districts in the past. School employees, Freiberg said, are welcome to call the Shoshone field office for more information.

He said he'll try to accommodate requests from school groups as best as possible. The office, though, doesn't have enough funding or employees to do trips every week, he said.

Last week, BLM intern Justin Peinado, 20, a college student from Northern Arizona University, led groups of students on cave tours.

The El Paso, Texas, native who is pursuing a geology degree goes to caves a few times a week to collect data and monitor wildlife inside. And that includes the Maze and Tee caves.

The caves are about eight miles north of Shoshone. A winding, rocky road off Highway 75 leading to the caves makes for a bumpy ride for a few minutes.

Besides a sign near the highway on Thorn Creek Desert Road, there aren't any markers to show where the caves are located.

When Gooding Middle School students arrived for their field trip May 24, they split up into two groups. One went into the Tee Cave, while the other went into the Maze Cave — just a short walk away.

From a distance, it's hard to spot the underground caves. After getting closer, the small openings to the caves are barely visible and surrounded by piles of lava rocks.

Wind blew across the sagebrush-covered landscape outside as dark clouds formed overhead. But it was quiet inside the pitch-black caves.

Where to Go

With a variety of caves in south-central Idaho formed by lava flows, there are easy options for beginning cavers and other options for experienced outdoor enthusiasts looking for a challenge.

But it isn't always easy finding the cave locations.

Anderson — an astronomer for The Herrett Center for Arts & Science — said spelunkers tend to be secretive about naming locations.

That's because some caves are "unbelievably trashed," he said, and there have been problems with vandalism.

Anderson is the chairman of the local "Silver Sage Grotto" caving group. They're affiliated with the National Speleological Society.

He describes caving as "exploring any naturally occurring underground void."

Caving — also known as spelunking — has been Anderson's hobby for several decades. He discovered the activity as a high school student in the 1970s.

As part of the caving group, he said a goal is to protect and preserve caves so others can enjoy them. The group — which has about a dozen members — occasionally goes on trips to clean up the caves and pick up trash.

Interested in learning more about caving? The group welcomes visitors to their meetings at 7 p.m. the second Thursday of each month on the second floor of the Taylor Building at the College of Southern Idaho.

"We won't tell you where the caves are," Anderson said.

First-time cavers can get help finding cave locations by calling or visiting BLM offices.

Bat Concerns

It's just the beginning of the caving season. Many area caves are closed from Oct. 15 to May 1 since it's bat hibernation season.

Although caves are open now, that might not be the case in the future. Around the country, some caves are closed due to White-nose syndrome — a disease that has killed millions of bats.

"It's really impacting a lot of populations of bats," Davis-Brunner said.

The disease hasn't reached Idaho, Anderson said. But members of the caving group are still taking precautions.

Members go through a "rigorous contamination of gear," he said, before moving from one cave to another.

Davis-Brunner said if a group of people goes into a cave with infected bats and then move to another cave, the disease might spread to other bats.

"The reason it is a concern is that it's easily spread through contact," she said.

What to Expect

When embarking on a caving trip, some people don't come prepared.

Anderson encourages visitors to dress in layers, wear sturdy boots and gloves, wear a helmet and bring multiple sources of light — such as a headlamp or flashlight.

The inside of a cave is a "very different kind of environment," he said. There isn't any natural light inside a cave and the temperature typically stays about the same year-round — in the 50s.

Outside landscapes are exposed to elements such as wind and rain. But inside the caves, structures look much the same as when they were first formed.

Lava caves in south-central Idaho, Anderson said, don't have spectacular structures and tend to not be as complex as limestone caves.

Limestone caves are still living and changing with water processes. That's not the case with lava caves.

Anderson said if damage occurs to fragile lava, it won't grow back.

Types of caves vary greatly, but some require skills similar to "rock climbing or scrambling," Anderson said, and it's important to move slowly in order to avoid tripping.

Some caves allow people to walk for hundreds of feet. Others involve crawling through tight spaces.

Anderson said there aren't any caves in south-central Idaho where visitors could get completely lost.

Besides looking at a unique landscape, caving is also a way to get a good workout. And it's common to walk away with bumps and bruises after a caving trip.

"If you want a challenge, it's there," Anderson said.

75-year-old Twins Celebrate Backcountry Birthday

BY SAM COOK

Duluth News Tribune

ON LAC LA CROIX, Minn. • There they go, paddling up Boulder Bay of Lac La Croix. Bob and Jerry Fryberger are headed back to camp for the mid-afternoon walleye fry on their annual May canoe trip.

If you saw them passing by on this Canadian border lake, you would say to yourself, "Those guys are paddlers." Their strokes are crisp and strong, their cadence steady. They paddle in perfect time with each other. The canoe holds straight to its intended course.

There's a reason for all of that.

"We've been at this a while," Bob says.

These twin brothers have been paddling together for nearly 65 years. They will celebrate their 75th birthday on this trip, at a familiar camp under old Norway pines, among good friends 10 to 15 years their juniors.

The Fryberger twins, as their friends call them, have celebrated their past 14 birthdays on Lac La Croix, the same lake where their mother and father, LaVerne and Robert Fryberger, began taking them at age 11. Here, they came to know the soft tap of a walleye bite, the rugged terrain of the Canadian Shield country and how to handle a canoe in rough weather.

"Dad loved the outdoors," Bob says. "He communicated that to us by all the hunting and fishing we did. It was an easy thing for kids to grab hold of because it was such a fantastic experience."

Since then, they have paddled all over the Canadian Shield, not only in the Boundary Waters Canoe Area Wilderness and Ontario's Quetico Provincial Park, but far beyond. They have traveled Manitoba's Gods River to Hudson Bay and paddled Ontario's Winisk River seeking big brook trout. They have paddled Ontario's Wabassi and the Opichiwan and parts of the Albany.

Each September, they make a 10- to 12-day trip to Quetico, just the two of them. At 70, they paddled the historic "Hunters Island" route in Quetico, covering its 145 miles and 38 portages in 10 days.

"They love the bush country," says Duluth's Mark Helmer, who organizes this annual Minnesota fishing opener week at Lac La Croix. "I mean, they love it. Bob, when he worked at Georgia Pacific, was once asked to transfer to Atlanta. He said, 'That's a long way from the Quetico.'" He chose not to move.

Don't get the idea that when the Frybergers make these group trips the younger guys do all the work. Bob and Jerry haul their own packs, carry their own canoe. To reach Lac La Croix from the Nina Moose River, they must portage seven times, including one half-mile carry.

They hit the landing and get out of the canoe on sturdy legs, wading in the shallows, balancing on rocks. One of them throws on a pack or two. The other throws the 42-pound Wenonah canoe up, and they're off down the trail. If you want a good workout someday, try catching up with them as you paddle across Agnes Lake.

"They really are amazing," says Ely's Roger Pekuri, 62, who always makes this trip. "They never fall behind. I'd turn back to look to see if they were doing OK, and they'd be right up with us."

"Those two guys are the toughest guys I've ever met in my life," says Bruce Hannula, 62, of Hancock, Mich., sitting by the fire one evening. "They're always laughing, always have a smile on their faces. I can't keep up with them."

The Frybergers would be embarrassed to hear such talk. They work to keep themselves in shape back home but think nothing of paddling and portaging at 75. "I don't know why they'd make a big deal out of 75," Jerry says. "It's no different than 74."

Secretly, everyone else in the group wants to grow up to be like Bob and Jerry. The other paddlers all know, as Bob and Jerry do, that fishing the canoe country at 75 is partly luck, partly a matter of taking care of yourself, and mostly having the fire of adventure still burning in your belly.

On May 14, the day the Frybergers turned 75, Helmer has a plan cooked up. At a prescribed time just before the big walleye meal, the six members of the group other than Bob and Jerry would don baseball caps with "TWINNS" and "75" embroidered on the front. Helmer had them made especially for the trip. Nobody would say anything, just wait for Bob and Jerry to notice.

The plan unfolds perfectly. The hats go on. And for 20 minutes, Jerry and Bob do not catch on. Finally, Jerry looks at Helmer's cap, then Rick Francisco's. Then, like a periscope scanning the horizon, his gaze rotates around the group from one fellow angler to another until he realizes all of them have identical caps.

"All right, Helmer," he says. "What's with the hats?"

Then it dawns on Bob and Jerry. They are the TWINNS. And they are 75.

What ensues next is possibly the worst rendition of the "Happy Birthday" song ever rendered.

The Twins are humbled and sheepish — and deeply touched.

"This is terrific," Jerry says.

Helmer starts serving up walleye filets. Pekuri and Hannula dish up mashed potatoes and Stovetop Stuffing. Someone distracts Bob and Jerry just long enough for someone else to place one lighted candle each in their stuffing. The Frybergers blow out the candles and dig into the walleyes.

The fishing is especially good for a couple of days on the trip. Francisco fillets 42 fish the first day for the eight anglers. The group hauls in coolers of ice to preserve some fish for eating, some for taking home. Limits are carefully watched, regulations respected.

But fishing is just part of the experience. It's spring in the border country, and the critters are cranked up. Eagles wheel overhead as the men jig for walleyes. One morning, a moose feeds along shore. Peepers call from boggy bays. White-throated sparrows sing from the brush. Loons go laughing across the night sky.

The Frybergers appreciate all of it.

"I love the nights, the mornings, the sunlight, the wind, the water, sitting around the campfire, seeing the eagles, the moose," Bob says. "It keeps drawing me back. I can't wait to go again."

"And the paddling," Jerry says. "The paddling is a big one. One day, with a strong southwest wind in our face, my daughter Lynn and I were paddling down a lake. I got to laughing, it was so magical, even though it was hard."

The Frybergers remember the late 1940s, when controversy raged over whether to preserve this country, when people such as Ernest Oberholtzer on Rainy Lake and Sigurd Olson in Ely fought to set aside as wilderness what is now the million-acre BWCAW.

"Thank god that thing was put into place," Bob says. "Otherwise, it would be loaded with cabins and high-powered boats and planes. It would have been destroyed. I appreciate all the work that Ober and Sig did, and (Frank) Hubachek out of Chicago. They had superior vision."

On the Canadian side, the 1.2-million-acre Quetico park was set aside in 1909.

"It's unbelievable, that whole Quetico," Jerry says.

Already, the two men have been looking at the maps, thinking about their September trip to Quetico, getting up there into all of that wild country one more time.

"There are lots of lakes we haven't been to yet," Jerry says.

It's Idaho Fish and Game's Obligation to Manage Wildlife

"I'm an avid hunter and angler and I favor my license dollars used to manage game species. What is the Fish and Game's obligation to manage non-hunted species? I also enjoy watching non-hunted species, but shouldn't there be other funding sources to help manage these in addition to sportsmen?"

Gary Hompland
Ask the Officer

the state of Idaho, is hereby declared to be the property of the state of Idaho. It shall be preserved, protected, perpetuated, and managed. It shall only be taken at such times or places, under such conditions, or by such means, or in such manner, as will preserve, protect, and perpetuate such wildlife, and provide for the citizens of this state and, as by law permitted to others, continued supplies of such wildlife for hunting, fishing, and trapping."

The second paragraph of this section goes on to give the Idaho Fish and Game Commission the authority, power, and duty to administer and carry out the policy of the state in accordance with state law.

I appreciate your continued interest in taking care of Idaho's wildlife resources. Your feelings are reflective of many sportsmen and women. For many years the work of the department taking care of hunted and fished species also benefited "non-game species."

As our human population has grown and encroachment has altered wildlife and fish habitats, many species both hunted and non-hunted have experienced significant losses. Demands on department efforts are being made by both hunters and non-hunters to improve or manage natural resources. Management of all wildlife, wild birds, and fish are the responsibility of the Idaho Department of Fish and Game.

Angler's Report Success at Magic Valley Waters

JEROME • Anglers have been reporting good fishing over the last few weeks in the Magic Valley region. Here's an update on what waters are open, what anglers have been catching and what bait they're using.

Magic Reservoir: Anglers have consistently been pulling in 3-plus pound trout for the last few weeks. Bait of choice has been worms and marshmallows.

Carey Lake: Fishing turned back on after slowing down during recent cool and wet weather. Folks are catching fish both from the shoreline as well as in small boats and float tubes. The lake typically is a great spring fishery but becomes harder to fish when vegetation grows in during the summer months.

Anderson Ranch Reservoir: Kokanee fishing has turned, and some anglers are reporting good catch rates of kokanee in the 10- to 12-inch range. The docks had not been installed as of last week but it's hoped they will be in soon.

Salmon Falls Creek Reservoir: Anglers on the upper end of the reservoir (China Creek and the Gravel Pits) have been catching walleye, smallmouth bass, trout, perch and some crappie. Most walleye are coming in at 6 to 7 pounds; one weighed in at 10 pounds. Anglers are reporting lots of limit and are using wedding rings, jigs and worms. A few anglers have been fly fishing from float tubes for walleye. Fishing for other species also has been good. For small-mouth bass anglers have been using jigs and worms. Perch have been biting at the upper end of the reservoir and trout have been pretty good all around the reservoir.

Big Wood River: Flows are still pretty hard. Those willing to fish higher flows are reporting good catch rates of small to medium sized rainbow trout.

Milner Reservoir: Bass club members have been reporting good bass fishing. The report is that more big fish are being caught this spring when compared to last year.

Roseworth Reservoir: Anglers are having good success catching trout.

Fish and Game: Leave Baby Animals Alone

JEROME • The end of May and the beginning of June is peak fawning and calving season for Idaho's deer, elk and antelope.

With campers and other outdoors enthusiasts heading out to the woods, well-meaning folks often find baby birds and other animals that seem to be abandoned. The Idaho Department of Fish and Game is asking people to leave them alone.

Despite the best of intentions of these individuals, handling the critters is not the best thing for the animals.

Mother animals often leave their young as they forage. If they return to their young to find people milling around, they often will leave the area and come back when the people are gone. If people have taken the baby animal, the mother will return to find its baby gone.

During early summer, many baby animals are simply too young to survive on their own. The best option is for the young animal to stay in the wild in the first place.

In addition, it is illegal for people to possess wild animals. People found with a wild animal without a permit can be issued a citation, and the animal will be removed from their control. Animals raised in confinement are often destroyed because of the possibility of disease and lack of ability to survive on their own.

Smaller animals, like rabbits and birds, should also be left alone. In nature, mother knows best.

BOISE • The Idaho Department of Fish and Game is participating in a survey about elk hunting in Idaho, and what elk hunters like and don't like.

The survey is being conducted by the University of Idaho.

Participants are being asked about their experiences hunting elk, and how they feel about Fish and Game restrictions on elk hunting.

The Idaho Fish and Game Commission is in the process of revising its five-year elk management plan, and would like public input on this topic.

The questionnaire has been mailed to a random sample of 6,200 people who purchased elk general hunting tags in Idaho in 2011. But any interested persons can

Pepsi to Launch Twitter Push with Video, Free Song

NEW YORK (AP) • PepsiCo Inc. is lifting the curtain on its music partnership with Twitter, saying it plans to offer its followers chances to win free downloadable songs through the social media site starting Wednesday and that it will stream video of live concerts this summer.

The No. 2 soda company says the first "pop-up" concert will be in late June. The company's Twitter followers will be able to influence aspects of the concerts, such as the set list, by tweeting the names of songs they want played.

Pepsi was mum on which artists it has lined up for the concerts. But the Purchase, N.Y., company has recently partnered with pop stars Nicki Minaj and Katy Perry in its marketing.

RIM Sinks, but Patents, Network Have Value

BY PETER SVENSSON AND ROB GILLIES

WATERLOO, Ontario • Research In Motion Ltd., the maker of the BlackBerry, is in steep decline. The company, once the crown jewel of the Canadian technology industry, is now worth 1 percent of Apple's market capitalization. One way for RIM to stop the downward tailspin: It could sell itself to a competitor or financial firm. But who would step up to buy RIM — and why?

Late Tuesday, the company said it expects to post an operating loss for the current quarter, a sign that BlackBerry sales are falling even faster than analysts expected. On Wednesday, the company's stock hit its lowest level since 2003, the year RIM went from making two-way e-mail pagers to smartphones.

The stock has fallen 93 percent since their peak in 2008. Since then, the BlackBerry's dominance as the smartphone for on-the-go business people has been eviscerated by Apple Inc.'s iPhone, and more recently, by phones running Google Inc.'s Android software. Research firm IDC says BlackBerrys now account for 6.4 percent of the global smartphone market, a third of what they had two years ago.

In that time, the company's financial performance has suffered. RIM reported a 25 percent revenue decline in the latest fiscal quarter, to $4.2 billion from $5.6 billion. For the full fiscal year that ended on March 3, it earned $1.2 billion, or $2.22 per share, on revenue of $18.4 billion. That's down from net income of $3.4 billion, or $6.34 a share, on revenue of $19.9 billion in fiscal 2011.

RIM issued the dire warning about its business Tuesday, adding that it will lay off a "significant" number of employees.

Still, the company is defiant. Chief executive, Thorsten Heins, says he can turn things around with the help of fresh smartphone software. Heins joined RIM four years ago and was most recently its chief operating officer. He replaced co-CEOs Balsillie and Mike Lazaridis in January after the company lost tens of billions in market value.

"My charter from the board of directors is very clear: long-term value creation with RIM," Heins told The Associated Press in an interview at the company's headquarters in Waterloo, Ontario, earlier this month.

Analysts give RIM only a slight chance of coming out of the crisis. To hedge its bets, the company has hired bankers to look at its options. It's not actively looking to sell itself, Heins said, but it wants to be prepared.

"We are prudent because we know the situation is somewhat challenging," Heins said. "So we are just looking at everything that could be an option. That doesn't mean we are pulling on those options. But we need to understand ... what is our field of action that we could take in case we need to?"

MARKET FEARS SEND KEY INTEREST RATE TO 66-YEAR LOW

BY MATTHEW CRAFT

Associated Press

NEW YORK • The drop in a key interest rate to a 66-year low is a sign of one thing — fear.

Traders don't actually think a Treasury note paying 1.62 percent is a good investment. They just trust Uncle Sam to keep their money safe if Europe falls apart.

"When people just want to get their money back, there's not a lot of competition," said Bill O'Donnell, head of U.S. Treasury strategy at the Royal Bank of Scotland.

The benchmark 10-year Treasury note fell Wednesday to its lowest level since November 1945 as worries about the European debt crisis roiled markets worldwide. Investors sold off stocks and plowed money into government bonds that are considered safe.

The search for hiding places was spurred by news out of Spain, the latest trouble spot in the region's debt crisis. The European Central Bank said Spaniards pulled billions in deposits out of their banks last month, raising concerns of a larger bank run.

The yield on the 10-year Treasury dropped to 1.62 percent, a steep drop from 1.74 percent late Tuesday. Rising demand for bonds pushes their yields lower.

When banks or big investors get frightened, their concern is no longer about making more money, O'Donnell said. They just want to avoid losing it. That's why traders on Wednesday bought German government two-year notes paying 0 percent, he said. They're simply handing their money over for safekeeping.

"People still have faith that they'll get their money back from the U.S. government," said Ira Jersey, U.S. interest rate strategist at Credit Suisse.

For the federal government, that trust means it can borrow at rock-bottom rates even as debts pile higher. Total federal debt now sits at a record $15.7 trillion. But it cost the government more to borrow when debts were lower. The 10-year yield has averaged 4.7 percent over the past 20 years.

The trend of higher debts and lower rates runs counter to an argument often heard in Washington. Certain Republicans often argue that rising federal debts will turn the U.S. into another Greece. Greece's shrinking economy and deep debts have pushed the unemployment rate to 21.7 percent and 10-year interest rates to 26 percent.

Sales of Existing Homes Increase as Market Stabilizes

BLOOMBERG NEWS

WASHINGTON • Sales of existing homes rose in April for the first time in three months, indicating the industry is stabilizing.

Purchases of previously owned houses, tabulated when a contract closes, increased 3.4 percent to a 4.62 million annual rate, figures from the National Association of Realtors showed Tuesday in Washington. The median forecast of economists surveyed by Bloomberg News called for a rise to a 4.61 million rate.

Gains in employment, depressed prices and record-low mortgage rates may bring more properties within reach of buyers, eliminating a source weakness for the world's largest economy just as risks from Europe's debt crisis climb. At the same time, efforts to reduce foreclosures and free up financing are just beginning to take root, signaling a sustained housing recovery will take time to develop.

"We are making incremental progress," said Milan Mulraine, a senior U.S. strategist at TD Securities Inc. in New York, who correctly forecast the sales pace. "People are becoming more confident about job prospects and about taking on mortgages. This is all positive for the economy."

Estimates in the Bloomberg survey of 73 economists ranged from 4.47 million to 4.8 million. The prior month's pace was revised to 4.47 million, from a previously reported 4.48 million. April's total was just shy of the 4.63 million reached in January that was the highest in more than a year.

Existing-home sales climbed to 4.26 million last year from 4.19 million in 2010. Demand peaked at 7.1 million in 2005 during the housing boom. In 2008, sales totaled 4.11 million, the least since 1995. Resales may rise to a 4.6 million to 4.7 million range this year and reach as much as 4.8 million in 2013, the Realtors group projected this month.

The median price of an existing home climbed 10 percent to $177,400 from $161,100 in April 2011, Tuesday's report showed. It was the biggest year-to-year gain since January 2006 and reflected a seasonal mix in demand toward bigger houses and fewer distressed sales.

Families tend to buy in the spring, leading to an increase in sales of bigger properties, Lawrence Yun, NAR chief economist, said in a news conference Tuesday as the figures were released.

The number of previously owned homes on the market climbed 9.5 percent to 2.54 million. At the current sales pace, it would take 6.6 months to sell those houses compared with 6.2 months at the end of the prior month. April is usually the peak, or close to the peak, month for inventory for the year, Yun said.

Of all purchases, cash transactions, distressed properties and investors accounted for a smaller share last month, according to Yun.

Sales of existing single-family homes increased 3 percent to an annual rate of 4.09 million, while those of multifamily properties, including condominiums and townhouses, rose 6 percent to a 530,000 pace.

Purchases improved in all four regions.

A real estate agents group's affordability index, which is based on a combination of resale prices, household income and mortgage rates, reached a record high in the first quarter, a report this month showed.

Borrowing costs remain attractive. The average rate on a 30-year fixed mortgage fell to an all-time low of 3.79 percent in the week ended May 17, according to data from Freddie Mac going back to 1971. The average 15-year rate dropped to 3.04 percent, also a record low, the McLean, Va.-based mortgage-finance company said.

Rising employment and incomes may provide more support for housing. The unemployment rate fell in April to a three-year low of 8.1 percent as employers added 115,000 jobs, according to Labor Department figures.

The Commerce Department may report Wednesday that new-home sales, tabulated when contracts are signed, rose 2.6 percent in April to a 337,000 pace, according to the Bloomberg survey median.

The steady outlook for residential real estate may reinforce projections the industry that helped trigger the recession will contribute to economic growth this year. Housing starts climbed to a 717,000 annual rate in April, more than anticipated. The National Association of Home Builders/Wells Fargo confidence index jumped in May to a five-year high.

House OKs FDA Bill to Increase Inspections, Fees

WASHINGTON (AP) • The Food and Drug Administration would have more power to catch tainted pharmaceuticals manufactured overseas before they enter the U.S. market under legislation passed Wednesday by House lawmakers.

The House of Representatives approved the sweeping legislation, which also aims to accelerate approval of promising new drugs, in a 387-5 vote.

The bill extends a long-standing program under which drugmakers pay the FDA billions of dollars to hire extra scientists to speed up the review new medicines.

Lawmakers used the legislation to address concerns about the safety of prescription drugs, especially those made overseas.

Over time, most companies have moved their operations overseas to take advantage of cheaper labor and materials. Today roughly 80 percent of the ingredients used in U.S. medicines are made abroad, in countries including China and India.

The legislation does away with a requirement that the FDA inspect all U.S. factories every two years, and gives the agency more discretion to focus on foreign facilities.

Currently, the FDA inspects the average foreign manufacturing facility just once every nine years. FDA inspectors would now be instructed to target the most problematic manufacturing sites, regardless of location.

The bill would also increase the penalty for drug counterfeiting to up to 20 years in prison. The penalty now is a maximum of three years.

The legislation comes as incidents of drug counterfeiting reported by drugmakers have increased steadily over the decade to more than 1,700 worldwide last year.

Old CSI Foe Reaches New Heights

THE NEWS: Utah Valley University's baseball team, with its nation-leading 47 victories, is denied an at-large bid into the NCAA baseball tournament.

THE MUSE: Chew on this for a minute. A school that just a decade ago was a heated competitor of the College of Southern Idaho in the Scenic West Athletic Conference nearly made a postseason tournament at the NCAA Division I level. The Wolverines were a curiosity in collegiate baseball this season, winning 32 straight and 40 of 41 games to close the season.

Even the San Antonio Spurs would be impressed by such a run.

Alas, the roadblock to UVU's postseason hopes was painted Boise State football blue and orange. UVU plays in what is universally accepted as an inferior conference — the Great West Conference doesn't field enough teams to fulfill NCAA requirements for auto-bid status into the postseason — and it didn't do enough outside of its conference to supplement winning the Great West by seven games.

It beat a pair of highly ranked teams in Arizona and Arizona State of the Pac-12, but also lost to that league's worst team, Utah, which snapped the Wolverines' win streak earlier this month.

"It's a great story here," CSI athletic director Joel Bate said. "Dave Carter, one of our former guys, was a pitching coach at CSI and had a chance to go to the D-1 level. He's done a great job down there (as pitching coach) and it's a shame they

Wood River Duo was Doubles Trouble

HAILEY • For the last three school years, Raleigh Grossbaum and Charlie Grubow shared a classroom with three other classmates for six hours a day, five days a week at the Sage School in the Wood River Valley.

As kids, the pair played tennis together at Atkinson Park in Ketchum.

Grossbaum and Grubow, the 2012 Times-News male tennis players of the year, displayed that strong sense of chemistry and trust in one another en route to a state doubles championship for Wood River High School this season. The two are able to play for the Wolverines through a standard co-op arrangement approved by the IHSAA.

"Charlie and I are really close, especially because we go to a very small school together where we are two of the five seniors this year," Grossbaum said in an email to the Times-News from Ecuador, where he and Grubow are currently on a school trip. "This definitely helps on the court because we are very comfortable with each other, and when one of us isn't playing well, the other knows what he can say or do to get him to pick up his game. Also, it makes for matches that are more fun."

Fun, as in talking and laughing in between points — even in tight matches — or using special plays in certain situations like returning serves near the end of a close match.

"It helps to know each other well so that when we disagree on what to do, we can talk it out, and decide on the most effective play together as opposed to fighting about it," Grossbaum said.

The pair's greatest act of team chemistry and resiliency came in the semifinals of the Class 4A state tennis tournament in Boise earlier this month.

Matched up against brothers Caleb and Nick Hughes, of Nampa, Grossbaum and Grubow had their backs up against the wall after dropping the first game 6-2.

Grubow and Grossbaum, however, stormed back with newfound energy and enthusiasm to take the second game 6-3 and

Djokovic, Azarenka Reach 3rd Round at French Open

ASSOCIATED PRESS

PARIS • The top-seeded players had early starts at the French Open on Wednesday, and both Novak Djokovic and Victoria Azarenka made it to the third round without a problem.

A short time later, 2009 champion Roger Federer joined them, earning his record-breaking 234th victory at Grand Slam tournaments.

Former top-ranked player Venus Williams was eliminated, a day after little sister Serena lost in the first round. The seven-time Grand Slam champion, who was playing at a major tournament for the first time since revealing she had been diagnosed with an autoimmune disease, lost to third-seeded Agnieszka Radwanska of Poland 6-2, 6-3.

Djokovic was first up on Court Suzanne Lenglen, and he was barely troubled by Blaz Kavcic of Slovenia, winning 6-0, 6-4, 6-4 for his 23rd straight Grand Slam victory.

"I gave him the opportunity to come back to the match after a perfect first set, first seven games," Djokovic said. "But, look, this is tennis."

In the main stadium at Roland Garros, Azarenka defeated Dinah Pfizenmaier of Germany 6-1, 6-1 — two days after struggling to win her opening match.

"Being No. 1 is a difficult job, because everybody want to catch you, everybody want to move you from the spot," Azarenka said. "Nothing is going to come easy just because you're No. 1. You actually have more

Heat Need OT to Beat Celtics

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MIAMI • The biggest postseason comeback in Miami Heat franchise history wasn't enough.

The Heat needed more — and got it, digging deep to take a 2-0 lead in the Eastern Conference finals.

LeBron James scored 34 points and grabbed 10 rebounds, Dwyane Wade scored 23 and the Heat rallied from 15 down to beat the Boston Celtics 115-111 in overtime on Wednesday night.

Mario Chalmers scored 22 for the Heat, who won despite an unbelievable night by Rajon Rondo. The Celtics guard played all 53 minutes and scored 44 points, dished out 10 assists and grabbed eight rebounds.

Paul Pierce scored 21 points, Kevin Garnett added 18 and Ray Allen 13 for Boston.

Allen's 3-pointer with 34.3 seconds left tied the game at 99-all. James missed two shots, first a layup — he got the rebound of his own miss — and then a jumper on the final possession of regulation, and to overtime they went.

Hornets Win Draft Lottery

NEW YORK • New owner, and now a new star player coming to New Orleans.

And yet another loss — in a historic season full of them — for Michael Jordan and the Charlotte Bobcats.

The Hornets, recently sold by the NBA to Saints owner Tom Benson, won the NBA's draft lottery Wednesday and the No. 1 pick overall — which they almost certainly will use to pick Kentucky star Anthony Davis.

At least that's what the consensus college player of the year is expecting.

KOPITAR'S OT GOAL LIFTS KINGS PAST DEVILS

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEWARK, N.J. — Anze Kopitar scored a spectacular goal on a breakaway with 11:47 left in overtime Wednesday night and the Los Angeles Kings beat the New Jersey Devils 2-1 in Game 1 of the Stanley Cup Finals.

Kopitar faked a backhand shot, put the puck on his forehead and beat a prone Martin Brodeur.

Los Angeles has won all nine of its road games in the playoffs, an NHL record. The Kings are now one win shy of the NHL record for postseason road victories.

More importantly, they are three wins away from the franchise's first NHL title. They have won 11 consecutive road playoff games dating back to last season.

Colin Fraser scored in the first period for the Kings, the No. 8 seed in the Western Conference who beat the top three teams to get to their first Stanley Cup Finals since 1993.

Anton Volchenkov tied it late in the second period for New Jersey, the East's sixth seed.

Kopitar took a pass by Justin Williams from along the left wing boards and skated in alone on Brodeur. As soon as he rifled the puck into the net, he raised his hands and banged himself into the boards, facing the crowd off to Brodeur's right.

The veteran goaltender dejectedly skated off to the locker room as the rest of the Kings piled on Kopitar.

Kings goaltender Jonathan Quick finished with 17 saves in what was a relatively easy night. Brodeur had 23 saves as the Devils lost in overtime for just the second time this postseason; they have won four times. LA is 3-0 in overtime this spring.

The Devils had two great chances to take the lead early in the third period, and for a split second it appeared they went ahead with 16:02 to play in regulation when Zach Parise scored off a wild goal-mouth scramble.

While the horns went off and the fans celebrated, referee Dan O'Halloran quickly waved off the goal.

It was reviewed in Toronto and replay clearly showed Parise swept the puck into the net with his hand.

Defenseman Mark Fayne was probably kicking himself six minutes later when he missed a wide-open net from the edge of the crease in what was the Devils' best period of the night.

The Kings had their chances, too, with Brodeur making two outstanding saves about 10 seconds apart. He made a stacked-pad save on a one-timer by defenseman Drew Doughty from 30 feet after a drop pass from Mike Richards. A turnover seconds later set up Dustin Penner for a shot from the left circle.

The Kings came into the finals after steamrolling the top three seeds in the Western Conference in just 14 games, and they made the Devils look ordinary in the first 40 minutes, holding them to nine shots.

But a fluke goal by Volchenkov tied the game with 1:12 left in the second.

Volchenkov took a shot from the left point that Quick kicked away in front. The puck went airborne, avoided Devils forward Patrik Elias in front and hit off the shoulder of Kings defenseman Slava Voynov before going into the net.

people ... motivated trying to beat you."

Last year at the U.S. Open, Williams withdrew before her second-round match. It was then that she revealed she had been diagnosed with Sjogren's syndrome, a condition that can cause fatigue and joint pain.

On Tuesday, Serena Williams lost in the first round of a major tournament for the first time, falling to Virginie Razzano of France 4-6, 7-6 (5), 6-3.

Djokovic is looking to win his fourth straight Grand Slam title, and first at Roland Garros. Last year, the Serb lost to Federer in the semifinals, ending his 43-match winning streak.

On Wednesday, Djokovic was broken once by Kavcic, but otherwise had little trouble. He did, however, finish the match with 34 unforced errors, compared with 21 for Kavcic.

"He was defending really well in the second and third set, especially in the second," Djokovic said. "He wasn't missing as many balls as in the first set."

Federer had an easy run in the first two sets, but then wasted two match points in the third. He saved all six break points to beat Adrian Ungur of Romania 6-3, 6-2, 6-7 (6), 6-3 on Court Philippe Chatrier. "Instead of being aggressive, I let him show me what he could do," Federer said of the tiebreaker. "He played two beautiful shots, and then I started not playing very well."

The 16-time Grand Slam champion broke a tie with Jimmy Connors for most career wins at major tournaments in the Open era, which began in 1968. He is now 234-35 in tennis' top four tournaments, an .870 winning percentage.

No. 7 Tomas Berdych of the Czech Republic and No. 9 Juan Martin del Potro of Argentina also made it into the third round.

Azarenka, who took over the No. 1 ranking after winning the Australian Open, easily advanced against Pfizenmaier, a 20-year-old German who was making her Grand Slam debut.

In the first round, Azarenka struggled early before winning 12 of the final 14 games to advance. She committed 60 unforced errors in that opening match, but brought that number down to 11 on Wednesday.

"Definitely played much better today," said Azarenka, who reached the quarterfinals at Roland Garros last year, matching her best performance at the clay-court Grand Slam. U.S. Open champion Sam Stosur advanced, beating Irina Falconi of the United States 6-1, 6-4. No. 13 Ana Ivanovic, the 2008 French Open champion, also moved on.

Could Bate ever envision CSI taking the same road to four-year status that Utah Valley did?

"We do such a good job of doing what we do, preparing kids in two-year programs taught by exceptional teachers and getting ready to enter into a four-year school," Bate said. "I hope we don't go down that road."

It's a pretty good bet it won't happen in Bate's lifetime. UVU's enrollment has skyrocketed past 30,000 in recent years, with two factors that are unique to Utah behind it. UVU has benefitted from tight admission standards at nearby Brigham Young University and has proven to be a second option for Utah and out-of-state Mormons wanting to experience a culture similar to what can be found at BYU.

Second, Utah's population of 2.8 million is nearly double that of Idaho's 1.5 million. As Bate noted, "our four-year schools are far from being tapped out in terms of enrollment limits."

"The alternative to needing a (four-year state) college different to Idaho State, Idaho or Boise State really is not there yet."

Lottery

Moments after the Hornets won the lottery, Davis said he was looking forward to playing professionally in the place where he led the Wildcats to a national championship in April.

The good news for the Hornets comes after a difficult season in which they traded All-Star Chris Paul.

"Just a first step for us to winning it all," Benson said in a TV interview after the lottery.

The Hornets moved up from the fourth spot, where they had a 13.7 percent chance, to earn the pick.

"Everything was surreal once they announced the fourth pick," said Hornets coach Monty Williams, who represented the team on stage. "I said 'This is pretty cool! I knew my wife and kids were home praying that things would go well and they did!'"

The Bobcats, after going 7-59 for the worst winning percentage in NBA history, fell to the No. 2 pick. Washington will pick third and Cleveland fell one spot to fourth.

Charlotte had a 25 percent chance of grabbing the No. 1 pick, but instead will have to take the best player after Davis, possibly his teammate, Michael Kidd-Gilchrist.

The team with the worst record hasn't won since Orlando drafted Dwight Howard in 2004.

"We will still take the best player available and when you win seven games you have a lot of holes," Bobcats general manager Rich Cho said. "From a competitive standpoint and for anyone who has played sports or been competitive, you want to win and be No. 1. We know we're still going to get a good player."

Cho and team vice chairman Curtis Polk said they hadn't heard from Jordan, the Bobcats owner.

"Being No. 2 isn't terrible. We'll be fine," Polk said.

force a pressure cooker third game, which the Wolverines won 6-2.

"All around it was a great match. As we left to walk off the court, the older brother, Caleb, stopped me and said 'Kick their butts in the final,'" Grabow said.

The pair rolled in the 4A state championship match, beating the Hughes brothers' arch rivals Parker Albertson and Brandon Nguyen of Columbia 6-1, 6-2 for their second state title after winning it all as sophomores in 2010.

"I was definitely excited. I was so hyped up on adrenalin that I couldn't sit still and knowing that Karl (Wilander) was in the final also and I knew our team had won state which was a big goal of mine," said Grossbaum, who wanted the team to dedicate its season to longtime head coach Vicki Johnston, who retired after the season. NBA

Game 3 is Friday in Boston. The Heat had come back from 14 points down in playoff games twice before, first in Game 6 of the 2006 NBA finals — their title clincher — and again last season against Philadelphia.

And this one was slipping away, more than once. James also two free throws 21 seconds into overtime, and Miami looked in trouble.

The scoring dossier in overtime began like this: Rondo scored, Heat tied it, Rondo scored, Heat tied it, Rondo scored, Heat tied it.

When Rondo missed a layup with 1:33 left, Miami took advantage, with Udonis Haslem getting a dunk to put the Heat up 105-103. And after a turnover on the next Boston possession, Wade drove the lane, hit the deck and watched as his layup bounced on the rim and dropped through.

Garnett stood over Wade and glared, to no avail. Wade hit the free throw, and Miami was up 110-105 with 59.7 seconds left.

On a night where the Heat missed 16 free throws — including at least four by James in crucial situations — they would survive.

Miami was down by 15 in the first half and by as many as 11 in the third quarter, before a pair of 3-pointers by James started a comeback. Wade made consecutive jumpers midway through the third to shake off a slow start to his night and get the Heat within three both times, and the 2006 NBA finals MVP set up Haslem for a three-point play with 2:55 left that gave Miami its first lead since the opening minutes, 73-71.

As Haslem's shot dropped, Wade spun at midcourt and punched the air. More highlights followed.

Miami's lead got to as much as seven in the third after James blocked Pierce's shot near the rim, sending the ball high into the air and starting a sequence that was capped by a three-point play from Wade, pushing the margin to 78-71. It capped a 12-0 run for the Heat, who took an 81-75 lead into the fourth.

It was the fifth straight game where Miami outscored its opponent by double-digits in the third quarter. In each of the previous four of those outings, Miami never trailed in the final period.

TODAY'S NATIONAL MAP

Brazil Gets Past Sloppy U.S., 4-1

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LANDOVER, Md. • Neymar converted a penalty kick and assisted on goals by defenders Thiago Silva and Marcelo as Brazil took advantage of a sloppy American backline to beat the United States 4-1 in an exhibition game Wednesday. Neymar, the 20-year-old Santos sensation, put Brazil ahead in the 12th minute after a hand ball on Oguchi Onyewu, then took a corner kick that Thiago Silva headed in for his first international goal in the 26th. Herculez Gomez, making his first start for the U.S. since the 2010 World Cup, scored in the 45th following a fine run by Michael Bradley and cross by Fabian Johnson.

But before an enthusiastic crowd of 67,619 at FedEx Field, Marcelo restored the two-goal lead in the 52nd as Onyewu and American captain Carlos Bocanegra left him unmarked in front of the net. Second-half sub Alexandre Pato added a goal in the 87th. The 29th-ranked Americans, coming off a 5-1 win over Scotland last weekend, had difficulty coping with the pace of the five-time World Cup champions. Coach Jurgen Klinsmann continued to tinker with his front line because Jozy Altidore didn't arrive until Monday, and Clint Dempsey is recovering from a groin strain. Dempsey entered in the 57th minute, marking the first time he played with Landon Donovan since Klinsmann replaced Bob Bradley as coach last July. Following a 1-4-1 start under Klinsmann, the Americans had won five in a row, including an impressive 1-0 victory at Italy. But the time for experimenting under the former German national team star and coach is nearing an end. The U.S. plays at Canada on Sunday, then opens qualifying for the 2014 World Cup on June 8 against Antigua and Barbuda.

DEAR ABBY: I am a 70-year-old widower with three grown children. My girlfriend is 53. We dated for several months before she moved in with me. I thought maybe with her living here I might fall in love with her. It has not, and will not, happen.

DEAR ABBY
Jeanne Phillips

I hate to break her heart, but I know now that I will never ask her to marry me. I intend to remain single for the rest of my life.

How do I bring closure to this relationship? What are the words? I'm lost because this is a first for me. I was married for 40 years, and I just do not wish to be married again. How do I tell this nice lady?

—INABIND IN TEXAS

DEAR IN A BIND: Having the woman move in with you "hoping" you would fall in love with her was a huge mistake, and one you should not repeat. When you say what you need to say, have plenty of tissue handy and expect her to be tearful and angry.

Start by saying, "We need to talk." Tell her she has done nothing wrong, and it is not a failure on her part, but you realize that you do not wish to remarry. Explain that feeling as you do, it would be best if she moved. Offer to help her find a place if she has nowhere to go. You will be doing both of you a favor by being upfront NOW.

DEAR ABBY: I am a young, recently married woman. My husband and I are at the point where we're thinking about having kids. My brother married a close friend of mine not long after my wedding. My sister-in-law has a medical condition that may prevent her from having children.

I am very close to my brother and his wife, and I can see the writing on the wall. She brought up surrogacy once in passing, as a possible alternative if she can't have kids.

If I'm asked to be the surrogate, what advice do you have? I would be more than willing to consider it, but only after my husband and I have had our own children. Would it be selfish of me to also expect some compensation for my time and the toll it will take on my body? I want to be ready if and when I'm asked. What would be the best way to explain my reasoning to her?

—BACKUP MOM IN THE NORTHWEST

DEAR BACKUP MOM: You are an intelligent woman and you are asking good questions. You should explain your thinking to your sister-in-law as you have addressed them in your letter. It would be wise to consult an attorney who specializes in adoption/surrogacy to learn about the laws and procedures that apply in your state.

DEAR ABBY: I am an adult male with a longtime problem. Whether it's a sad or happy occasion, I start crying, sometimes sobbing. I try to avoid any situation that may cause this.

I am at a new point in my life where I can no longer avoid these situations. People think it's not normal. Please don't suggest I live with it. Is there a magic pill to control this?

—BIG CRYBABY IN BROOKLYN, N.Y.

DEAR CRYBABY: There is no pill that can help you control those emotions that I know of. And because it is causing you problems, I do not recommend you "live with it." I do think, however, that if you discuss with a therapist what it is about sad and happy occasions that causes such an extreme reaction that you could get quickly to the bottom of it and learn to better control those emotions.
