Cattle Group Talks Marketing, Herd Health

BY STEVE KADEL
skadel@magicvalley.com

TWIN FALLS • Cowboy hats were plentiful in the College of Southern Idaho Fine Arts Center Tuesday as the Idaho Cattle Association kicked off its two-day Summer Round-Up with a series of speakers.

A record attendance of almost 500 members is expected for the annual event that concludes today, according to ICA Executive Vice President Wyatt Prescott.

Tuesday's lineup included discussions of domestic and global marketing, along with opportunities and challenges in the cattle and beef industries. Today's symposium, to be held at the Red Lion Hotel Canyon Springs, will reveal what's being done to educate beef consumers when an industry crisis strikes. It will also address how ranchers can protect their herd's health.

One of this afternoon's highlights is a report from members of the Idaho Sage Grouse Task Force about efforts to develop a state sage grouse strategy.

Prescott said it's an upbeat time for beef producers.

"We're seeing record prices across the industry," he said, although he acknowledged that higher feed and transportation costs are cutting into profits. "We have all this demand and low supply, so things are good for producers today."

One attendee, Blair Kauer of Lemhi, was less optimistic.

SHOSHONE FALLS

Rick Simmons, 12, of Oregon takes in the view at Shoshone Falls on Tuesday. The falls are flowing at 4,500 cubic feet per second, which is about 6,000 cfs less than June of last year.

High Water Mark

Tourists come to see gushing Shoshone Falls, expected to reach 4,400 cfs.

TWIN FALLS • There may be less water going over the Shoshone Falls this summer, but that isn't keeping visitors away.

The high tourist interest is a carryover from last year when water was crashing over the falls at 20,000 cubic feet per second, said Dennis Bowyer, city of Twin Falls Park and Recreation director.

As of Monday, Shoshone Falls was measured at 3,400 cfs. In 2011, the falls peaked at 20,000 cfs in April and slowed down to 10,000 cfs by mid-June, Bowyer said.

"I have noticed when we have good flows from last year, we still have a good crowd the following year because people who may have missed it are making up for it this time around," he said.

Each year around this time, people notice a significant increase in the amount of water pouring over Shoshone Falls and tourists come from across the state and region to see it. The increase is the result of the U.S. Bureau of Reclamation releasing water from the Snake River's upstream dams in order to help flush salmon into the Pacific Ocean. The annual fish augmentation flows started this past week.

The flow above Shoshone Falls was

Donabedian Sentenced to 10-14 Years

BY ALISON GENE SMITH

SHOSHONE • Aaron Donabedian will spend at least the next 10 years of his life in prison for his part in terrorizing a Dietrich couple and robbing their home in March 2011.

Donabedian

Donabedian admitted he drove the other suspects to and from the scene of the crime and pleaded guilty on May 1 to charges of aiding and abetting a burglary and aiding and abetting in grand theft.

"I didn't know the exact circumstances, but I drove us there and safely away from there. I do feel I took part in that part of the crime," he said at the May 1 hearing.

In the early hours of March 9, 2011, Donabedian along with Gabriel Baker, Jeremiah Bennett and Jamie Taylor was accused of holding David and Colleen Conner at gunpoint in their home while taking items from the house.

David Conner told police that one suspect took his shotgun, bound him with rope and placed him on the kitchen floor. Meanwhile, the suspects forced Colleen Conner to find money and other valuables.

Weeks later, authorities gained a valuable tip to the identity of the alleged invaders through a family member. The tipster, who is related to Donabedian, told police of details

T.F. POLICE TAKE OVER CITY ANIMAL CONTROL

BY ALISON GENE SMITH
alismsmith@magicvalley.com

TWIN FALLS • For the first time in 11 years, Twin Falls police officers are now responding to animal calls within their city limits.

The city paid the Twin Falls County Sheriff's Office to handle that duty during the past decade.

Now, the city has decided to transition services back to the Twin Falls Police Department so it can more closely monitor animal control enforcement within its jurisdiction.

Police officially took over duties on Friday. New full-time control officers Ed Gudgell and Steve Nutting took 20 calls on their first day.

Gudgell and Nutting trained with the sheriff's animal control officers for several weeks before taking over

Idaho Dems OK New Platform at Convention

BOISE (AP) • Idaho Democrats are touting their new party platform, offering it up to voters as a stark contrast to the Republican alternative and the GOP's tilt in the last four years to more Libertarian and tea party political ideas and values.

The platform approved last weekend during the 2012 state convention emphasizes respect for individuals, building a strong state economy and communities, and it takes aim at a handful of Republican initiatives that have emerged in the last two years in the Idaho Legislature.

"I urge everyone to take a careful look at the positions of the Idaho Democrats," said Eldon Wallace, chairman of the platform committee. "Compare that to the rightward drift of the more radical elements of the GOP that would dramatically change our society and reduce our quality of life."

Later this week, Idaho Republicans will hold their state convention in Twin Falls and craft a new platform that will be used to guide the party's political goals for the next two years.

The new Democratic platform and its preamble clearly take aim at some of the more conservative and Libertarian-leaning Republicans who have gained strength in the statehouse during the last two election cycles.

For example, the Democratic platform rejects closed elections, a response to the GOP decision to make voters in last month's GOP primary register as Republicans.

The Democratic platform also rejects government intrusion into personal medical decisions, unproven education experiments in Idaho's public schools and the notion that state government has a legal right to nullify federal laws. Two years ago, a group of tea party advocates proposed legislation that would allow the state to nullify the federal health care overhaul.

Other platform planks include:

- Support for keeping legislative redistricting in the hands of a citizen committee.
- Support for direct, voter election of U.S. Senators.
- Rejection of any proposal to return the nation to the gold standard.
- Demands for rational, animal control duties.

Twin Falls Police Chief Brian Pike said the change will allow the department to monitor cases from beginning to end.

In the 2012 fiscal year, Twin Falls had agreed to pay $108,000 to the sheriff's office for the service, including two full-time deputies who were responsible for enforcing animal issues in the city and Twin Falls County. The city had paid the same amount to the county since at least 2010.

"Our approach is that we can pay for these services, or we can have more control over these services by handling them ourselves," Pike said.

Gudgell and Nutting were reassigned from roles at Joslin Field, Magic Valley Regional Airport. The two left the airport after the Transportation Safety Administration cut funding there.

The Twin Falls Police Department bought a used truck from the U.S. Bureau of Land Management and outfitted it with the proper equipment.

Most of the calls the officers took on their first day were related to barking or stray dogs. They also responded to two reports of vicious dogs, according to a statement from the city.

"When we are not responding to calls, we want to increase our visibility in the community," Nutting said. "We want to be in every area, with a focus on areas where we see continuing problems."

Those outside Twin Falls city limits will continue to be served by the sheriff's office, Twin Falls Police Lt. Craig Stotts said.

TWIN FALLS • Part of Minidoka Avenue in Twin Falls will be temporarily closed starting today while road crews replace deteriorating pavement.

The Twin Falls Street Department will close a three-

City street workers will remove the entire depth of pavement and lay gravel. They'll also remove an unused railroad spur that cuts through Minidoka Avenue.

The city expects the section of Minidoka Avenue to reopen Friday. However, the road will be packed gravel until street workers can lay pavement.

Businesses adjacent to road work can be accessed from Second Avenue South to Jerome Street, Ketchum Street or Liberty Street.

U.S. House Passes Grazing Improvement Act

TIMES-NEWS

TWIN FALLS • A bill that would change grazing permits is headed to the U.S. Senate after passing through the House of Representative on Thursday.

The bill is sponsored by Rep. Raul Labrador, R-Idaho. U.S. Rep. Mike Simpson also voted "yes."

If approved, the Grazing Improvement Act would extend grazing permits from 10 to 20 years. The bill would also codify appropriation language to require renewing grazing permits under existing terms and conditions until federal officials complete the renewal process.

Representatives passed the bill with a vote of 232-188. The bill is included in the Conservation and Economic Growth Act, which includes 14 different bills.

"The Bureau of Land Management itself estimates that more than 4,200 grazing permits are backlogged waiting for renewal," said Labrador in a news statement. "This is an unacceptable number of backlogged permits, all of which negatively affect America's livestock producers."

The bill was included in a jobs and public lands package, H.R. 2578, the Conservation and Economic Growth Act, designed to create new jobs, grow the economy and protect the environment.

water needed to help flush salmon to the Pacific Ocean.

Twin Falls resident Carla Wilson stopped by the falls on Tuesday afternoon with her son and daughter-in-law.

"I figured the falls would probably be high about this time of year," she said. "I'm glad we were able to stop by."

This year's drop in flows was caused by a dry spring and smaller snowpack, said

Mike Beus, a hydrologist with the U.S. Bureau of Reclamation. When irrigation demands started earlier than normal, the agency overestimated how much space it would need in the reservoirs for flood control, thinking there would be more water than there turned out to be.

According to the agency's website, American Falls Reservoir is close to 70 percent full. Reservoirs in the upper Snake River basin are 85 percent full.

"We didn't get that much runoff like we thought we would," Beus said. "So that's why you see American Falls down this year?"

Bowyer said he isn't sure how long the increased flows will last. Just to be safe, the public should come out sooner than later, he said.

"I would encourage people to go out now and see them while they can," Bowyer said.

Kauer also said government regulations such as the Endangered Species Act and Clean Water Act are strangling small ranchers.

While the event's agenda includes several serious issues, there's fun involved, too. There was live music after Tuesday's dinner and a hospitality room.

"It will be a chance to see wranglers in cowboy hats out there hacking it up," Prescott said with a grin. "This is about the only time many of them play golf."

CSI Sees Drop in Summer Enrollment

BY JULIE WOOTTON
jwootton@magicvalley.com

TWIN FALLS • College of Southern Idaho campuses aren't quite as busy this summer.

That's because the college has seen a 13 percent drop in the number of students taking summer classes compared to last year.

At the end of last week, 1,925 students were enrolled. But Instructional Dean John Miller said that doesn't include later-starting summer sessions.

"We'll see some change in that to the positive," he said.

Numbers are strong this summer at CSI's North Side Center in Gooding, with a 32 percent increase. That equates to just two more full-time students.

Statewide, Miller said other colleges are seeing a similar trend with flat or decreasing summer enrollment.

Rance Wolfe, an elementary education major from Gooding, said commuting to Twin Falls every day played a role in his decision not to take summer classes.

"Gas prices had a big part in that decision," he wrote in an email to the Times-News. Also, Wolfe is working full-time this summer, which doesn't leave enough time to go to school.

And that's a trend among other students. Miller said he's starting to see students opting to work this summer instead of taking classes.

It's a change over the past two years when summer semester enrollment was increasing at CSI.

A few years ago, the college moved to a new system of offering multiple sessions throughout the summer to accommodate students' schedules.

Miller said the condensed class format can be challenging. Students often spend three or four hours each day in class.

When it comes to paying for summer classes, Financial Aid Director Jennifer Zimmers said she couldn't say if financial aid plays a role in summer enrollment numbers. She said there are about the same number of students receiving federal financial aid as last year, but she's not sure if dollar amounts have changed.

For students receiving Federal Pell Grants, changes made last year might have an impact on being able to pay for summer classes.

In 2011, President Barack Obama signed the Consolidated Appropriations Act of 2012, which has changed some of the provisions in Pell Grant funding.

During the 2010-11 school year, students could potentially receive two Pell Grants in one year.

"That ended through the act," Zimmers said, and now students are limited to one grant per year.

But she said some students did receive supplemental grant funding this summer.

CSI Board Actions

During a Monday night meeting, CSI's board of trustees:

- Approved selling the college's 1450 KEZJ radio frequency to Salt & Light Radio, Inc. for $26,000.

- Approved fiscal year 2014 legislative budget requests. CSI will ask for about $2.21 million in additional state funding for four items: occupancy costs for the upcoming Applied Technology and Innovation Center; un-

Why Some Students Don't Take Summer Classes

Here's a sampling of responses from the Times-News Facebook page about why CSI students aren't taking summer classes.

- Sara Bateman: "Most of the time, financial aid will not cover summer school."
- Jael Johnston Corr: "Working on strengthening my relationship with God and spending this time with my kids."

- Melissa Farran: "I wanted to take classes but they only offered two in my department and I did not need either of them."

- Christy Kay Goodman: "No money and need for a job led to no time for classes."

 • Sherry Hill: "As a non traditional student (grandmother) I need to balance my wanting to take classes with camping and vacation with husband and spending time outside with the grandkids."

funded adjustments based on enrollment increases; a science, technology, engineering and math coordinator; and a full-time retention and graduation specialist, as well as a full-time student service specialist.

- Heard an update on summer construction and renovation projects.

The largest projects this summer are constructing a new Head Start/Early Head Start Center in Jerome, Applied Technology and Innovation Center, and new student apartment complex.

- Recognized recent graduate David Teuscher as the New Century Scholar for Idaho.

COLLEGE HOSTS TEACHER WORKSHOPS

TIMES-NEWS

TWIN FALLS • South-central Idaho teachers are heading back to school next month.

More than 400 teachers and administrators statewide are expected to attend one of four science, technology, engineering and math workshops.

Twin Falls workshops will be June 25-28 at the College of Southern Idaho. Other workshops are scheduled this month in Coeur d'Alene, Pocatello and Meridian.

The workshops are all-expenses paid for teachers. They're organized by the Idaho STEM initiative — a partnership of educators, government agencies, organizations and private companies working to improve STEM education.

In its third year, i-STEM workshops have doubled in size and attendance since 2009.

During the workshops, teachers choose a topic to study such as water systems, gold mining or health care. They attend sessions taught by experts and learn how to incorporate hands-on activities in their classrooms.

General sessions will also be offered and teachers can receive continuing education credits for attending workshops.

TIMES-NEWS

HOLLISTER • Firefighters responded Tuesday to a small wildfire just south of Hollister.

The 40-acre wildfire is spread across both federal and private land and already damaged one tool shed, said Kyli Gough, spokeswoman for the U.S. Bureau of Land Management.

The BLM sent four fire engines, a helicopter and an air attack plane to control the flames. The Salmon Tract Rural Fire District also responded to the fire.

The fire was contained

BUHL SCHOOLS TO SEEK 2-YEAR, $400K LEVY

TIMES-NEWS

BUHL • Buhl voters will decide on a new supplemental levy for the school district later this summer.

The Buhl School District will pursue a two-year, $400,000 annual levy during the Aug. 28 election.

School trustees voted Monday night to set the amount the district will take to voters.

The district doesn't currently have a levy. Supplemental levies have been on ballots three times in the past, but each measure was rejected by voters.

IDAHO

Education Activist, Businessman Vie for GOP Chair as Convention in Twin Falls Nears

BY JOHN MILLER
Associated Press

BOISE • The two aspirants for the Idaho Republican Party chairman post at Saturday's convention in Twin Falls didn't know each other until last week.

That's when Barry Peterson, a 64-year-old former Elmore County commissioner and Mountain Home hardware store owner, invited Gayann DeMordaunt, a 46-year-old charter school proponent from Eagle, Idaho, out to his place.

As DeMordaunt's children rode Peterson's horses, the two chatted about the post now held by Norm Semanko, who is stepping down after four years. Peterson described their meeting as friendly, but told her he's taking the race seriously.

"She's a nice kid," Peterson, currently Elmore County's GOP chairman, told The Associated Press, with a chuckle. "I told her, 'I want to wish you well, but I'm going to kick your tail.'"

DeMordaunt, vice chairwoman of the Idaho State Charter School Commission responsible for overseeing alternative public schools that have been on the advance in Idaho, confirmed the story in an emailed response to questions on Tuesday.

She said she was too busy making phone calls to GOP delegates ahead of Saturday's vote to do a telephone interview.

"In addition to 'kicking my tail,' he also said he was 'no spring chicken,' and suggested that I wait a couple of years to run as chair until after he serves," DeMordaunt wrote, of her meeting with Peterson. "I said I think he is younger than he looks, and, as a gentleman, ought to let the 'young' lady go first."

Both candidates belong to The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, but their contest for party chairman pits Peterson's rural Idaho roots — his grandfather settled in Mountain Home in 1885 — against DeMordaunt's more suburban base in Eagle, located just west of Boise.

If she beats Peterson, DeMordaunt, wife of freshman state Rep. Reed DeMordaunt, R-Eagle, would be the first woman to hold the Idaho GOP chair post since Marjorie Miner of Silvertown in the early 1970s.

A founder of the North Star Charter School, she's been a supporter of lifting the cap on the number of charter schools that can be created annually, a push that finally won the 2012 Legislature's blessing.

The Idaho GOP chairman is an unpaid position responsible for helping raise thousands of dollars for political activities from businesses and individuals, then directing the money to help elect candidates to office.

Ahead of the November elections, the eventual GOP winner between DeMordaunt and Peterson will also help coordinate efforts to defeat referendums backed by the Idaho Education Association teachers union, to overturn Superintendent of Public Instruction Tom Luna's 2011 public school reforms.

The chairman post can be the subject of contention even within GOP ranks, something Semanko experienced this past January when he unsuccessfully sought to remove Republican Randy Hansen from the bipartisan redistricting commission drawing up Idaho's new legislative district maps.

Secretary of State Ben Yursa, also a Republican, balked at the ouster, and Hansen remained on the panel.

Semanko didn't return a phone call Tuesday seeking comment about his eventual replacement.

Historically, Idaho's Republican governor has given his blessing to the GOP's choice of a chairman.

But the party turned a cold shoulder on this tradition in 2008 at a raucous convention in Sandpoint, when Semanko beat out Kirk Sullivan, Gov. C.L. "Butch" Otter's choice.

Sullivan lost largely because he fought party members who were seeking to close their primary election to all but registered Republican voters.

When it comes to this Saturday's vote, Otter has indicated he'd accept either Peterson or DeMordaunt. It's hardly a glowing endorsement, but it's probably sufficient to avoid another embarrassing loss.

Even so, neither Peterson nor DeMordaunt are in agreement with Otter on key issues. For instance, Otter contends the party should return to the open primary, to bolster turnout after dismal 24 percent turnout on May 15, while Peterson supports sticking with the closed elections.

"If you're on the Republican team, you should be the ones choosing your candidate," Peterson said.

DeMordaunt said she's open to new ideas, but agrees the closed primary was a good idea.

"I was definitely an early advocate of closed primaries, and I believe we can massage it to make it work for all Idaho Republicans," she said.

Lewiston Man Sentenced for Defacing Tribal Shelter

BY JOHN MILLER
Associated Press

BOISE • For as many as 2,500 years, red-pigmented pictographs of animals and geometric shapes at a rock shelter along the Snake River bore silent testimony to the presence of the Nez Perce tribe and its ancestors.

On Feb. 7, 2010, it took just a few minutes for three vandals armed with cans of spray paint to cause roughly $100,000 worth of damage that have required the services of a rock art conservator to remedy.

Two of the vandals, Freddie Michael Bernal, 21, and Tyler James Carlson, 23, were sentenced in March, with Bernal to spend three years behind bars and Carlson headed to prison for four months.

This week, the third member of the vandalism party, 25-year-old Jarad Bovencamp, was sentenced to five months in prison, five months home detention and 200 hours of community service.

All three pleaded guilty to willful injury or depredation of property of the United States, by spray painting words including "Freddie B" and the initials "TC" on the basalt at the riverside cliffs.

"The vandalism of these priceless artifacts caused thousands of dollars of damage," said U.S. Attorney Wendy Olson, following Bovencamp's court appearance on Monday in Coeur d'Alene. "While attempts will be made to restore the pictographs, they will never be the pristine emblem of tribal history that they were before these senseless acts."

Following their prison terms, Bovencamp, Bernal and Carlson must serve three years of supervised release and each must pay restitution of more $33,000, to cover the cost of restoration work.

The Red Elk Rock Shelter is a National Register of Historic Places-eligible historic property located on land managed by the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers at Lower Granite Lake, a reservoir that backs up behind Lower Granite Dam.

Following the vandalism, the Corps sought outside help in 2011 to remove the damage.

The federal dam-management agency has issued a contract, with restoration work due to be completed by December.

"It's not an easy thing to do, to remove the spray paint, without causing additional damage to the petroglyphs underneath," said spokeswoman Tina Baltrusch, from Walla Walla, Wash. "Extreme care is being taken, and we're ensuring we have professionals who have the technical expertise to restore this kind of damage."

Before this latest conviction, Bovencamp had been arrested on numerous occasions, for drug violations and a 2002 arson charge for which he was sentenced to jail time and a year's probation, according to court records.

Nez Perce officials have said they're pleased the U.S. government has taken the vandalism seriously.

"The pictographs and the location itself has immeasurable cultural and historical value," the Lapwai, Idaho-based tribe said in a statement. "The importance of protecting and preserving such sites cannot be overstated, and such vandalism should not be tolerated."

Man Arrested after Stolen Car Found in Garden City

GARDEN CITY (AP) • A tip about a stolen Camaro being offered for sale in Garden City led to the arrest of a northern Idaho man on burglary and theft charges.

The Camaro, one of two stolen from David King's condominium in Post Falls last month, was recovered with little damage, King told the Coeur d'Alene Press.

A car collector in Garden City called King on Friday after he was offered a fully restored 1967 Chevy Camaro Rally Sport for $27,500, but "the potential buyer knew something was up because the car is worth at least twice that much," King said.

The collector did some research and found photos online indicating the car was stolen.

Police in Garden City asked the collector to meet with the seller again Saturday. Officers arrested Anthony Bauer, 48, of Post Falls and recovered the black car from an enclosed car trailer in the storage unit.

King said Bauer worked on both of his Camaros about five years ago.

King also is missing a yellow Camaro with black stripes on its hood. Neighbors told him both cars were removed from his garage about 20 minutes apart one night. King estimated the black Camaro was worth $65,000 and the yellow one $45,000.

Bauer's arrest and the subsequent investigation led to the arrests Saturday in Boise of Travis L. Quiring, 37, of Hayden and Sarah M. Cornett, 19, of Post Falls.

In addition to the Camaro, officers recovered a travel trailer that was stolen in Idaho City and a 1997 Ford F-250 stolen from Nampa. Quiring was driving the pickup at the time of his arrest.

Bauer and Quiring each face two counts of burglary and two counts of grand theft by possession. Quiring also faces a felony drug possession charge, and three misdemeanor charges of marijuana possession.

Ranchers Urged to Boost Beef's Image Via Facebook

BY STEVE KADEL
skadel@magicvalley.com

TWIN FALLS • A beef industry executive called Tuesday on ranchers to use social media to boost beef's image.

Speaking during Tuesday's opening session of the Idaho Cattle Association Summer Round-Up in Twin Falls, Rick Stott encouraged those who raise beef for a living to tout the product's benefits on Facebook.

"We need to be engaged with social media," said Stott, the executive vice president of business development for Agri Beef Co. in Boise.

Industry representatives must educate the public about beef's nutritional benefits "and how much we care for our animals," he said.

In an interview, Stott said such actions are critical for the industry's continued success, especially now that beef consumption in the U.S. is declining.

"Today, the world isn't friendly to our product like it was in the 1950s," Stott said. "Not every dinner today is steak and potatoes."

During Tuesday's talk, he offered the example of the Humane Society of the United States, which he recalled calling "a scumbag organization" in testimony before Congress.

Stott said during the interview that he should not have described HSUS the way he did when appearing before Congress. However, he insists the group is out to bring down the beef industry.

"Their goal is to end animal agriculture in the U.S.," Stott said.

Fortunately, he said, the international market for beef is lucrative. That results in part from a declining supply of beef worldwide as more agricultural land is used for other purposes that feed more people, he said.

Stott suggested that ranchers work to give their beef a special brand, one that will resonate with consumers. He described U.S. beef with its USDA certification as a brand that is unmatched throughout the world.

Safeway has found marketing success for its "Rancher's Reserve" brand by promising a refund for any cut of beef a customer didn't like, he said.

"A brand is a contract with the customer," Stott said.

He's not worried about a long-term increase in the retail price of beef, saying people will pay for "a memorable eating experience."

"Gas has gone above $3 a gallon, but people are still driving," Stott said.

Area Schools Receive College Readiness Grants

BY JULIE WOOTTON
jwootton@magicvalley.com

KIMBERLY • When the new school year rolls around, more Kimberly students will be out in the community doing internships.

Kimberly High School Principal Luke Schroeder said an internship coordinator will be hired within the next few weeks.

The employee will create partnerships with businesses in order to place students at work sites that mesh with their interests. A handful of students participated in a pilot program this year.

Allowing more students to participate is possible through a $30,000 Go On grant Kimberly High School received from the J.A. and Kathryn Albertson Foundation.

Two other south-central Idaho schools also received one-year grants: $40,000 for Gooding High School and $39,000 for Buhl Middle School.

"The whole purpose of Go On is for kids to complete college or some type of post-secondary certification," Schroeder said. But that doesn't necessarily have to be a four-year degree.

Idaho ranks among the 10 lowest states when it comes to the number of residents who continue their education after high school.

Internships are a chance for students to learn whether they want to pursue a specific career — or if it's not a good match.

Schools that received Go On grants this year will help students make a plan for their post-high school education and update it each year. Another component is encouraging students to take Advanced Placement and dual-credit classes.

Kimberly High was one of eight Idaho schools to receive a $100,000 grant in December through the Go On Challenge. The school was selected for increasing the number of students taking high-level math and science classes.

Now, part of Kimberly's new $30,000 grant will be used to provide scholarships for students taking dual-credit classes — where they earn high school and college credit simultaneously.

"Some kids can't afford to take those classes," Schroeder said.

At Gooding High School, part of the grant will be used to buy iPads that students can use in class to research college scholarships and financial aid information.

"They will be able to check one out and take it home to share information with their parents," Principal Chris Comstock said.

Money will also be used for career information software that students and parents will be able to access, college campus visits for 11th-grade students and scholarships for students taking Idaho Digital Learning Academy or dual-credit classes.

OUR VIEW

Want a Parking Meter?

For years parking meters were among the most-hated symbolic items in downtown Twin Falls. Few shoppers were happy about the need to plug the meter with a quarter when they could park and shop for hours at the fee-free mall. Few merchants were happy because — well, precisely because few shoppers were happy. It’s funny the way those two things coincide.

This past week, the City Council voted to permanently remove the downtown parking meters, and remove them they have. In response to immediate inquiries, the city posted “Folks, the city is discussing the possible sale of the meters to raise money for a worthwhile cause. Stay tuned for more information. Thanks!” on its Facebook page.

So why is it that these hated symbols are suddenly in such high demand now that they’re gone? Nostalgia? Spite? Something with which to accessorize one’s front yard? Novelty?

Who knows? Finding a logical explanation to a totally illogical and strangely emotional reaction is a fool’s errand at best.

Perhaps the bigger questions are, “How should the city dispose of them?” and “Can the city turn a profit by selling them?” and “Should the city donate them to a variety of local nonprofits to use as fundraisers?” The city has already hinted that this last possibility is already being considered.

We like that idea, almost as much as we like the one we suggested to City Manager Travis Rothweiler of having a “Why I Deserve a Downtown Marking Meter” essay contest. Hard to believe he didn’t turn cartwheels over that suggestion.

After decades of being the de facto parking toll system for the city, it’s easy to suggest what the city should NOT do. It should not try to sell them in order to benefit the city. First, because it would be — or certainly would appear to be — just plain greedy. Second, since there are currently four to five pages of parking meters for sale on eBay with opening bids as low as $19.99, there’s simply not enough money in it to make their sale worthwhile.

The donation to community not-for-profit agencies for them to auction off makes the most sense. At such events, the combination of a noble cause mixed with the right quantity of alcohol consumption would push the modest fee the city could charge into numbers many times that amount. It would put a happy ending to a saga that has been contentious and anything but happy for years. Giving the 240 meters away to benefit local charities just feels right.

It took the city years to make the right decision to take down the meters.

Here’s hoping a decision to donate the meters happens a lot more quickly.

If Our Legacy Doesn’t Inspire Our Children, We Have Failed

The young eagle learns to fly with the supporting wings of its parent beneath it. Here the eaglet gains the strength and courage to try its own wings. This is one of the most important lessons it will ever learn and it will not come without practice.

Life is all about flying and where it will take us. Some people never get off the ground because they never learn to believe in themselves. It has to start with a willingness to learn and a supporting community of example, instruction and encouragement. The teacher and student commit to practice together until the knowledge and ability are gained. It opens up a whole new vision of possibilities.

We soar with our own wings to the highest peak of our dreams from the influence of those who lifted us. We fly — using what we’ve been given — to reach our purpose and destination. The love of the journey keeps us invested to the finish line.

The lesson of the eagle can be taught to our children to teach them how to reach their own flying-level of maturity and responsibility. It is one of the most rewarding things we do. If our legacy doesn’t inspire our children, we have failed. The teacher experiences success when the student understands the lesson. This takes patience, understanding, and genuine love for the student. If want our children to succeed, we must show them how.

Kids are going to make mistakes when they first unfurl their wings, and we may have to catch them a few times to keep them from crashing. Our belief and affirmation are the wings that hold them up until they become confident in their own ability to fly.

Our greatest reward of life is to see our children fly.

Romney’s American Safari

As we saw during his quest to secure the Republican nomination, Mitt Romney does two things that he apparently hopes will ingratiate himself to voters. One is flat-out pandering. The other is waxing amazed at whatever he just saw or whomever he has just met, as if he were a traveler in a strange and distant land.

I first commented on this after Romney’s failed attempt to curry favor with Mississippi voters in March, when he said — with a little Dixie inflection in his voice — “Mornin’ y’all. I got started right this morning with a biscuit and some cheesy grits.”

My take? “It’s almost as if we’re watching Mitt Romney on safari in his own country!”

That came less than a month after his spectacular pander in his home state of Michigan. You’d think the son of a thrice-elected governor wouldn’t have to resort to this sort of thing. “I love this state. It seems right here. Trees are the right height. ... I like seeing the lakes. I love the lakes. ... I love cars.”

At an event in Fort Worth two weeks ago, Romney went on and on about a tall man he met.

“I met a guy yesterday, seven feet tall. Yeah, handsome, great big guy. Seven feet tall! ... He started a business. ... I mean I figured he had to be in sport. But he wasn’t in sport.” This weekend, Romney added to his parade of wonder with this beauty after visiting a well-known convenience-store chain in Pennsylvania:

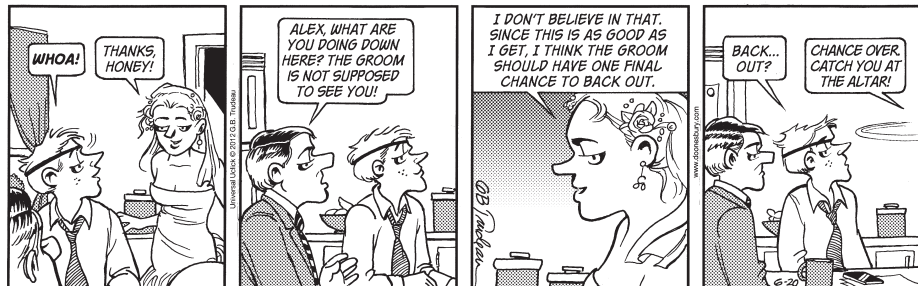

“Where do you get your hoagies here? Do you get them at Wawa’s? Is that where you get them? ...

“Well, I went to a place today called Wawa’s. You ever been to Wawa’s? Anybody been there? Some people don’t like ... I know, I’m sorry. It’s a big state divide. But we went to Wawa’s...”

“I was at a Wawa’s. I went to order a sandwich. You press a little touch-tone key pad. ... You touch this, touch this, touch this, go pay the cashier and there’s your sandwich. It’s amazing!”

What’s amazing is that Romney is seeking to lead a nation he appears to be visiting for the very first time. Pity he won’t settle for a T-shirt instead of the presidency as his souvenir.

What Do Simplot's Two-headed Fish Really Mean?

BY ROCKY BARKER
Idaho Statesman

A two-headed mutant baby brown trout has become the symbol of a 15-year effort to clean up phosphate mine waste in southeast Idaho that has cost millions of dollars but is years from completion.

The tiny fry was the progeny of trout taken from two streams below the JR Simplot Co.'s Smoky Canyon Mine and raised in a hatchery in Wyoming. Its photo was one of several dozen in an appendix to a 2,070-page study Simplot did in an attempt to show that allowing higher levels of selenium could be allowed in creeks below the mine.

Mutated Yellowstone cutthroat fry, raised from hatchery fish that never swam in Idaho, also were pictured. One of those fry also grew two heads. But that fish had not been subjected to higher selenium.

The photos' publication in the New York Times and elsewhere around the country brought attention to the study and the overall cleanup. On Thursday, The Daily Show ran a segment on the fish and Simplot's mine on Comedy Central.

The publicity has, in the public mind, linked Simplot's phosphate mining with mutant fish. The irony is that the photo was included in the Simplot report to bolster the company's point that all fish populations have some mutations, and that levels of selenium in two specific creeks can be set higher without harming the fish populations that have become good at surviving in those conditions.

The two-headed fish in the "control group" underscored that deformities happen in all populations. It's the rate of deformity that matters, and Simplot argued that the rates of deformity in the fish in its creeks is not dramatically different.

There's broad consensus that high levels of selenium are bad, especially for aquatic life. But the exact level remains debated among scientists and even federal agencies.

A U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service researcher earlier this year found the Simplot study wanting, saying it minimized the rate of deformities in baby fish.

While the debate continues over the science and the conclusions of the Simplot-financed report, even the company's critics say the photos, while provocative, add little to their case against the company's effort to change selenium limits.

(ABOVE) Pictured is a Yellowstone cutthroat trout fry that came from hatchery fish that never lived in Idaho. Researchers were comparing fish from the Idaho streams to these 'control' populations to determine whether the rates of usually less-extreme deformities were different.

ter Act allows companies to petition for a site-specific rule, if they can show the rule doesn't reduce environmental protection.

Earlier this year, Simplot asked the Idaho Department of Water Quality to approve higher limits on selenium in Sage and Crow creeks below the mine. Simplot said its study showed that selenium levels can exceed the current federal standard of 5 parts per billion and still protect fish populations that have been stable in the creeks for decades.

DEQ water quality chief Barry Burnell said the agency still has a long way to go before determining whether to approve the change. DEQ has more questions for Simplot and the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency before it makes any recommendation. Then the Idaho Board of Environmental Quality must approve the change; the Idaho Legislature must also sign off.

"Our objective continues to be using the best science to help determine whether a site-specific criterion for selenium is appropriate," said Alan Prouty, Simplot vice president for environmental and regulatory affairs. "Any proposed change in the criterion has to be protective of the environment."

The Greater Yellowstone Coalition Idaho, an environmental group that opposes Simplot's proposed change, said setting higher levels of acceptable selenium would let Simplot and other companies clean up less of the waste from a century of phosphate mining.

Marv Hoyt, the group's Idaho director, said such a change also could influence

The mutant trout was one of dozens included in a report intended to demonstrate pollution limits could be eased. But that's not how it was received.

arm of Congress, released a report evaluating the overall cleanup and the work of the federal agencies.

The GAO said the Bureau of Land Management, the U.S. Forest Service and the EPA have improved cleanup efforts — hiring more staff, requiring mining companies to do better environmental assessments and getting companies to provide better financial assurances they will clean up past contamination.

Despite those improvements, the GAO said, "the fact remains that after years of study and millions of dollars spent, the agencies and mine operators are still years away from fully understanding the extent of contamination in the area and many more years away from completing actual mine cleanup."

What Will Simplot Get?

Hoyt, of the Yellowstone Coalition, said he doubts that a scientifically defensible process will lead to a dramatically higher selenium limit in the creeks. Even if DEQ does raise the selenium limits, Hoyt said, he's not sure it will help Simplot much. The group's own sampling has found trout in the creek with selenium levels in their flesh that well exceed Simplot's proposed higher limits.

If the limit is raised, Simplot would have an easier target that could save it millions of dollars in cleanup costs. But Simplot would be better served, Hoyt said, by helping speed the clean-up and getting the federal government to pay its share.

"From my perspective, the federal government is in part responsible because they allowed this to happen," Hoyt said.

A federal judge agreed in 2011, ruling in a preliminary decision in a lawsuit brought by Agrium that the federal government was "an owner, arranger and operator" of phosphate mines, which are on federal land. For decades, the federal government mandated land-reclamation techniques at the mines that accelerated selenium runoff.

Eventually, total clean-up costs could reach $500 million to $750 million, Hoyt said. And an ambitious cleanup could mean Idaho jobs, like those dedicated to cleaning up decades of nuclear waste at nearby Idaho National Laboratory.

"Hopefully this will jump-start some clean-up," Hoyt said.

national selenium standards now under review by the EPA.

"What this is really about is getting Simplot off the hook for cleaning up its Smoky Canyon Superfund site," Hoyt said.

Prouty said Simplot is sticking to the science.

"We are focusing on a rigorous technical evaluation of the comments received on our work and reviewing other related studies," he said in a statement.

Qualifies as Superfund Site

Simplot is one of several companies cleaning up phosphate waste after federal agencies discovered selenium contamination in the 1990s. Then, horses and sheep were found dead after drinking water polluted with mine waste; in 2009, 18 cattle were found dead near a closed mine.

Selenium contamination has been measured at three of the region's five active mines, and at all 13 inactive mines. In 2003, Simplot agreed to clean the area up under the federal Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation and Liability Act, better known as Superfund.

In 2006, Simplot estimated its clean-up would cost more than $112 million. At the time, the company said it needed to do more review and began the study that included the fish pictures. Nearly all of the millions spent so far on selenium cleanup has been on studies or process.

Earlier this month, the Government Accountability Office, the investigating

ANSWER: Although a decent case could be made for redoubling, you will find it almost impossible to catch the opponents for penalty in both hearts and clubs unless your partner has length in both suits (in which case spades may play well enough for your opponents). Simply ignore the opponents and bid one spade, which in no way limits your high cards.

Wildfire Near Mountain Home Destroys Six Homes

The fire, which started Monday evening, has burned 150 acres, destroyed six residences and several outbuildings.

MOUNTAIN HOME (AP) • Authorities say a fast-moving wildfire near Mountain Home burned down six homes and destroyed several outbuildings.

Elmore County Sheriff Rick Layher says the fire was reported at 7:30 p.m. Monday and was fueled by wind gusts of up to 48 mph.

Bureau of Land Management spokeswoman Malory Eils says 25 to 30 homes in the area were evacuated. No injuries were reported.

Layher says he was worried that strong winds would carry the fire toward more homes, but he says firefighters and the BLM quickly got the blaze under control. It burned about 150 acres.

The cause of the fire is unknown.

Southwest Idaho was under a red flag warning Sunday and Monday because of high temperatures, low humidity and high winds — conditions conducive to explosive and destructive fires.

KEEPING FAMILY ON THE FARM ISN'T EASY

BY ZACH KYLE
Post Register

MONTEVIEW (AP) • The Ward family farm is rural, even for Idaho.

Dave Ward farms more than 4,000 acres of wheat and lush alfalfa popping vibrantly from the drab and dry high desert.

Most of the farm is 12 miles west of Dubois, a metropolis of less than 700 residents. Many of its Main Street storefronts are boarded up.

Ward runs the farm with sons MaCoy Ward, 26, and Colby Ward, 22.

The trio stood knee-deep in alfalfa Wednesday and talked farming. MaCoy Ward picked a handful and explained how they must pick the alfalfa before purple flowers bud from the green shoots.

Dave Ward said he's proud his sons will take over the operation, but he understands why fewer country boys are sticking around these days to work the family farm.

"Some of (the local young people) leave, and some of them come back," Dave Ward said. "It's harder for the younger guys to keep it going. It costs so much to do anything anymore."

Idaho agriculture was built on family farms, but they are becoming increasingly rare, said Will Jenson, regional labor economist for the Idaho Department of Labor.

The 18-to-24 age group is growing more slowly than the general population in eight of the 10 eastern Idaho counties in the Post Register's readership area.

Butte, Bingham, Fremont and Lemhi counties have a smaller percentage of young adults today than in 2000. Many are leaving for bigger cities, Jenson said.

Agriculture industry changes prompted that trend, Jenson said. Technology has allowed farms to take on more acreage with less manpower, leaving less room for small family operations.

"In many cases, farms have been in families for generations, but it's becoming increasingly difficult for families to stay in the farming business without (their farming operations) becoming extremely large," Jenson said.

Mud Lake farmer Gary Skidmore said fewer West Jefferson High School graduates are buying farmland or taking over family operations. Skidmore's only son, Blake Skidmore, is playing college basketball at the University of Westminster after a successful stint at Big Bend Community College.

Skidmore said he'd like to see his son return to Jefferson County after college and take over the 3,000-acre potato, wheat and alfalfa farm. But Skidmore won't blame Blake if he doesn't. Although the past few years have been profitable, farming remains a year-to-year gamble.

"It's such a roller-coaster," Skidmore said. "What do I want for my son? I sort of want him to farm. But on the same token, I don't know."

In 2011, Idaho farmers and ranchers saw their net income rise 88 percent to $2.6 billion, according to a Jan. 5 Idaho Statesman article. Cash receipts shot up 29 percent to $7.4 billion in 2011.

The gains were made possible because strong prices and increased production overshadowed rising fuel and fertilizer prices, the newspaper reported.

Farms growing with technology do a different kind of business now, Dave Ward said.

Farmers require more technical and business knowledge to handle the bigger operations. All three Wards attended Idaho State University agribusiness classes to help keep their operation up-to-date. That means more computer work, GPS training and understanding of the commodities game.

"It used to be, you just worried about feeding the cows, making sure stuff was done," Dave Ward said. "Now, it's an everyday deal. It's more global."

Seth Pratt grew up on a cattle farm north of Blackfoot.

Pratt, 21, studies agribusiness at the University of Idaho and serves as national western region vice president for Future Farmers of America.

Pratt said he wants to work in the corporate beef world for several years. But he also wants to raise his children on a ranch in Bingham County.

The young-adult population shift to cities is simple math, Pratt said. According to the FFA, one farmer produced enough food to feed 14 people at the turn of the 20th century. Today, one farmer feeds 155 people.

Today's agriculture requires specialists, Pratt said. Idaho has fewer farmers but more animal nutritionists, plant geneticists, food scientists and many other agriculture jobs peripheral to farming.

"A lot of those jobs happen in towns because they have a base office," Pratt said. "They are still helping farmers. But it's not a field job, it's an office job."

The allure of big city life isn't compelling farmers' sons to move to Idaho Falls, Boise or other cities, Pratt said. Instead, it's the lack of agricultural opportunity in their hometowns.

"Overwhelmingly, they'd like to stay there," Pratt said. "There is just not enough there for them. I've hardly talked to a farm kid who didn't say he wanted to go back. But many aren't (going back)."

MaCoy Ward lived in Idaho Falls for a year while taking electrician classes. That was enough of the city for Ward, who moved back to the family farm.

"In town, it seemed like I was bored worse than I was here," he said. "In town, there are so many rules."

"You can only go bowling so many times. You have a little more freedom out here, I guess."

Otter: Jones Transferred to Injury Rehab Center

BOISE (AP) • Gov. C.L. "Butch" Otter says state Controller Donna Jones has been moved to a hospital rehabilitation facility as part of her recovery from injuries suffered in a traffic crash last month.

Otter opened Tuesday's Board of Examiners meeting with an update on the condition of Idaho's chief financial officer, saying Jones appears headed for a full recovery.

Jones suffered a broken neck and other injuries in a single-vehicle rollover on I-84 near Heyburn on May 25. She has been in a Boise hospital ever since.

The Spokesman-Review reports that Jones is crediting a seatbelt for saving her life.

Otter says the 73-year-old former lawmaker's recovery will take a long time. He says Jones is receiving intensive daily therapy, but is not yet ready to receive visitors.

Recall Effort Targeting CdA Leaders Falls Short

COUER D'ALENE (AP) • A recall campaign targeting the mayor and three city council members in Coeur d'Alene has failed.

Kootenai County election officials ruled Monday that recall organizers failed to collect enough signatures to trigger a recall election.

The Coeur d'Alene Press reports the two petitions fell between 185 to 251 certified signatures short of the mark, with a 24 percent rejection rate of signatures.

Mayor Sandi Bloem, one of four city leaders targeted in the recall, said the lesson is the need for city leaders to be more engaged across the political spectrum.

In April, a group of frustrated citizens launched RecallCdA, in part due to the city council's support for a $14.2 million park project.

Recall leaders say they are content to wait until November 2013 to reshape city politics.

Idaho Man Gets 22 Years for Police Shootout

IDAHO FALLS (AP) • An eastern Idaho man has been sentenced to 22 years in prison for shooting at police officers last fall.

Seventh District Judge Dane Watkins sentenced Scott Parker on Monday, saying Parker would be eligible for parole after serving 13 years.

Parker was charged with fleeing police on Oct. 14 in Idaho Falls, and shooting at officers with an assault rifle from his car. None of the officers were hit, but they returned fire and hit Parker three times.

Parker's defense attorney, Drew Pendlebury, said that at the time of the shooting Parker had stopped using medications that were prescribed to maintain his emotional stability. Pendlebury said Parker hoped officers would shoot him to death during the incident. Parker recovered from his injuries.

Calif. Teen Pleads Guilty to Assaulting Idaho Woman

SANDPOINT (AP) • A California man has pleaded guilty to his role in an attack on a northern Idaho woman who picked up the defendant and another teen while they were hitchhiking last July.

The Bonner County Daily Bee reports 18-year-old Marshall Owens Dittrich of Danville, Calif., pleaded guilty Monday to battery with the intent to commit robbery. The plea agreement recommends a sentence of three to 10 years in prison when he is sentenced on Sept. 7.

Prosecutors allege Dittrich and Joseph John Martin of Denver ran away from a therapeutic boarding school in Montana and were hitchhiking when 66-year-old Vera Gadman offered them a ride.

Gadman was choked and hit in the head with a glass bottle before she was able to escape.

Martin was sentenced last month to three to 15 years in prison.

Sandusky's Wife Takes Witness Stand at Trial

BY MARK SCOLFORO AND GENARO C. ARMAS
Associated Press

BELLEFONTE, Pa. • Jerry Sandusky's wife testified Tuesday that she remembers most of the men who told a jury that her husband sexually abused them, but she said he never had inappropriate contact with them as boys.

Dorothy Sandusky

She also said that the basement where the boys would stay wasn't soundproof, a statement that contradicted one man's testimony that he screamed during an assault but couldn't be heard.

Defense lawyers called the former Penn State assistant football coach's wife to the witness stand Tuesday after they went after two investigators, suggesting that police shared details among accusers and planted the seeds of the alleged victims' evolving accounts of abuse.

The jury also heard from a psychologist who testified that Sandusky has a personality disorder that might explain the "creepy" letters he sent to one of his accusers. The defense also offered more testimony touting Jerry Sandusky's reputation as a family man and community stalwart.

Sandusky is charged with 51 criminal counts related to 10 alleged victims over a 15-year span. He's accused of engaging in illegal sexual contact ranging from fondling to forced oral and anal sex.

Dottie Sandusky has stood by her husband, posting his bail, accompanying him to court proceedings and issuing a statement in December that proclaimed his innocence and said that accusers were making up their stories. She is not charged in the case.

One witness testified last week that he was attacked by Jerry Sandusky in the basement of the ex-coach's home and cried out for help when Dottie Sandusky was upstairs. She, however, said the basement was not soundproof and she would have been able to hear shouting if she was upstairs.

The psychologist, Elliot Atkins, told jurors that he diagnosed Sandusky with histrionic personality disorder after talking with the ex-coach for six hours.

People with the disorder often interact with others in inappropriately seductive ways and don't feel comfortable unless they're the center of attention, Atkins explained.

"Often these are people who did not have as much success in relationships — emotional or romantic — (and) relationships in life," he said, responding to questions from Sandusky lawyer Joe Amendola.

Ex-Rutgers Student in Webcam Case Leaves Jail. A former Rutgers University student who was convicted of bias for using a webcam to see his roommate and another man kissing was released from jail Tuesday after serving 20 days of a 30-day sentence. Drones at Home Raise Fear of Surveillance Society

The prospect that thousands of drones could be patrolling U.S. skies by the end of this decade is raising the specter of a Big Brother government that peers into backyards and bedrooms.

BY JOAN LOWY
Associated Press

WASHINGTON • Thousands of drones patrolling U.S. skies?

Predictions that multitudes of unmanned aircraft could be flying here within a decade are raising the specter of a "surveillance society" in which no home or backyard would be off limits to prying eyes overhead. Law enforcement, oil companies, farmers, real estate agents and many others have seen the technology that was pioneered on battlefields, and they are eager to put it to use.

It's not just talk: The government is in the early stages of devising rules for the unmanned aircraft.

So far, civilian use of drones is fairly limited. The Federal Aviation Administration had issued fewer than 300 permits for drones by the end of last year.

Public worries about drones began mostly on the political margins, but there are signs that they're

"There is a distrust amongst the people who have come and discussed this issue with me about our government. It's raising an alarm with the American public."

Jeff Landry, a freshman Republican congressman from Louisiana's coastal bayou country going mainstream. Jeff Landry, a freshman Republican congressman from Louisiana's coastal bayou country, says constituents have stopped him while shopping at Walmart to talk about their concerns.

"There is a distrust amongst the people who have come and discussed this issue with me about our government," Landry said. "It's raising an alarm with the American public."

Fear that some drones may be armed, for example, has been fueled in part by a county sheriff's office in Texas that used a homeland security grant to buy a $300,000, 50-pound ShadowHawk helicopter drone for its SWAT team. The drone can be equipped with a 40mm grenade launcher and a 12-gauge shotgun.

Randy McDaniel, chief deputy with the Montgomery County Sheriff's Office, told The Associated Press earlier this year his office had no plans to arm the drone, but he left open the possibility the agency might decide to adapt the drone to fire tear gas canisters and rubber bullets.

Earlier this year Congress, under pressure from the Defense Department and drone manufacturers, ordered the FAA to give drones greater access to civilian airspace by 2015. Besides the military, the mandate applies to drones operated by private companies or individuals and civilian government agencies, including federal, state and local law enforcement.

The Search Is on for a Mutt Who Will Become Benji

BY SUE MANNING
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES • Have you seen this dog?

It's a mutt — mischievous, medium-sized, scruffy and street-smart with soulful eyes. Comfortable as hero or underdog, yet likely to be a stray. Must be a fast learner, able to charm millions and willing to work for food.

Brandon Camp, whose father created "Benji" nearly 40 years ago, and veteran movie trainer Mark Forbes have set out to find a new Benji in a nationwide search that includes online tools and sites that weren't around when the first four Benjis were discovered.

A Facebook page (<http://www.facebook.com/benjithemovie>) has been set up so pet owners and shelter staffs can post pictures and videos of dogs they think could be the next Benji.

Camp and Forbes will scour photos of pets from shelters and rescues across the country, along with sites like petfinder.com and adoptapet.com. Forbes said he was personally visiting every shelter within 75 miles of Los Angeles, where he is general manager and head trainer at Birds and Animals Unlimited.

The original 1974 movie "Benji" is about a stray who helps save two kidnapped children. It was written, produced, directed and financed by Camp's father, Joe Camp. When he couldn't find a distributor, he and his wife, the late Carolyn Camp, decided to do it themselves.

There would be four sequels, several TV specials, a Saturday morning TV series, a syndicated comic strip and all kinds of merchandizing deals. More than 73 million people would see "Benji" at theaters and more than a billion people around the world watch it on television. Millions of DVDs would be sold.

The original Benji was Higgins, adopted in the early 1960s from the Burbank Animal Shelter by late animal trainer Frank Inn. Higgins played Dog in the television series "Petticoat Junction" for several years. At the age of 14, he became Benji.

Egypt's Mubarak on Life Support after Heart Stops

CAIRO (AP) • Egypt's Hosni Mubarak was being kept alive by life support after he was rushed from prison to a military hospital in a rapidly worsening condition, officials said. The 84-year-old ousted leader's health crisis added a new element of uncertainty just as a potentially explosive fight opened over who will succeed him.

The state news agency MENA said Mubarak was "clinically dead" when he arrived at the hospital and that doctors used a defibrillator on him several times. It initially said the efforts were not successful.

But the official said Mubarak was put on life support. He had no further details on his condition. The official spoke on condition of anonymity because he was not authorized to talk to the press.

The developments add further layers to what is threatening to become a new chapter of unrest and political power struggles in Egypt, 16 months after Mubarak was ousted by a popular uprising demanding democracy. Egyptians were uncertain about Mubarak's fate, about who will succeed him and about whether his successor will have any power.

The campaign of Mubarak's former prime minister, Ahmed Shafiq, said Tuesday he has won Egypt's presidential election, countering the Muslim Brotherhood's claim of victory for its candidate, Mohammed Morsi.

The election commission is to announce the official final results on Thursday and no matter who it names as victor, his rival is likely to reject the result as a fraud. If Shafiq is declared winner in particular, it could spark an explosive backlash from the Brotherhood.

Texas Dad Won't Face Charges in Alleged Attacker's Death

BY PAUL J. WEBER AND RAMIT PLUSHNICK-MASTI
Associated Press

SHINER, Texas • A young Texas father who beat to death with his fists a man molesting his 5-year-old daughter will not be charged, authorities said Tuesday as they released a dramatic 911 tape of the dad frantically pleading for help before the hired ranch helper died.

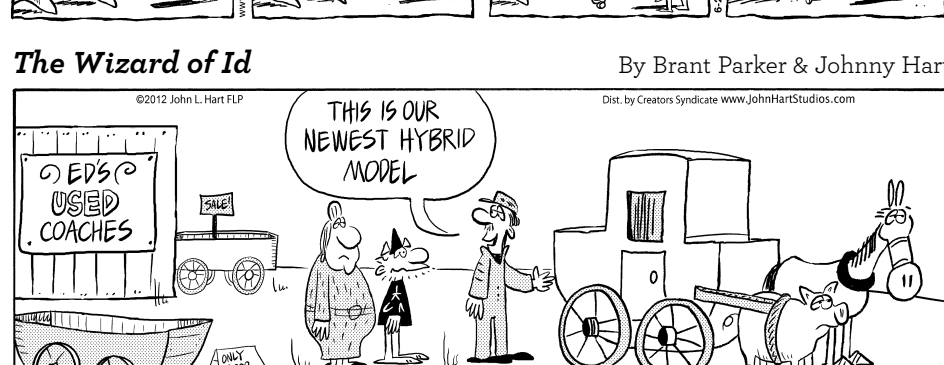

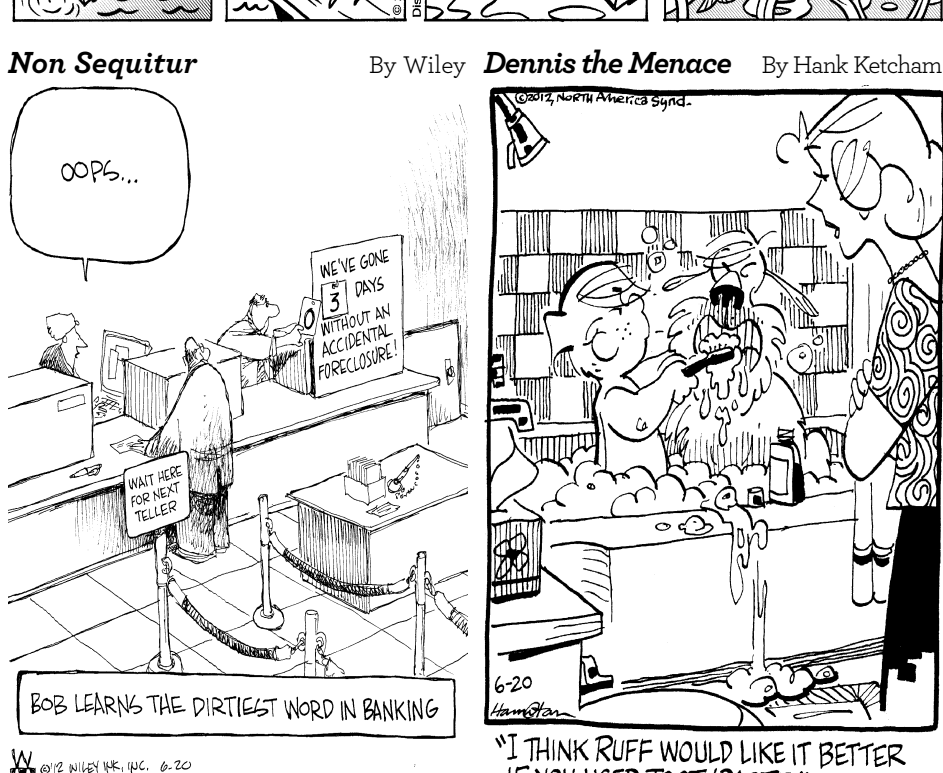

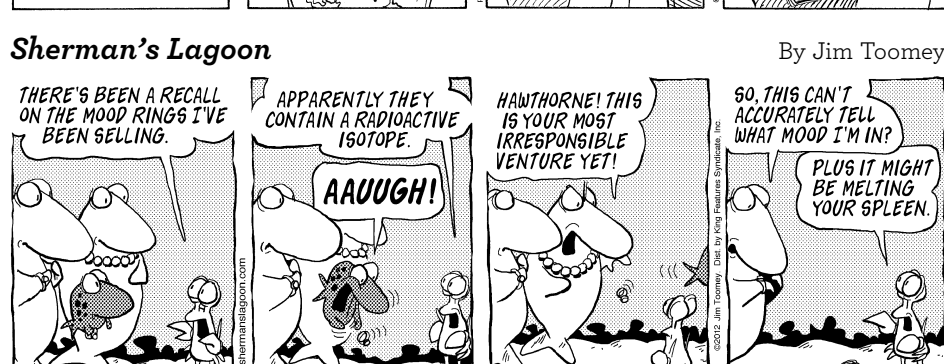

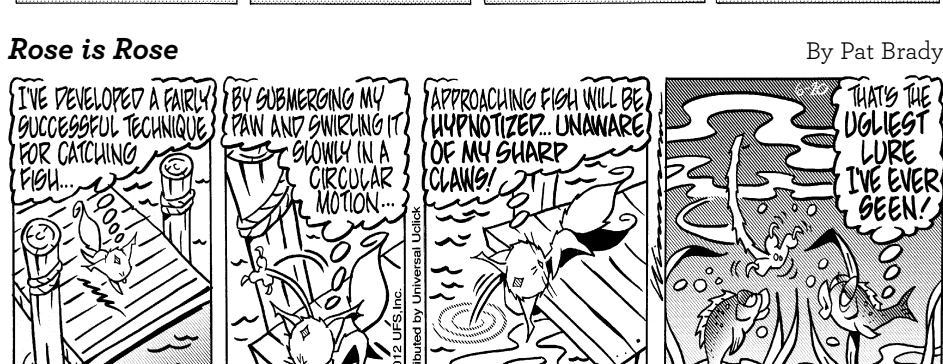

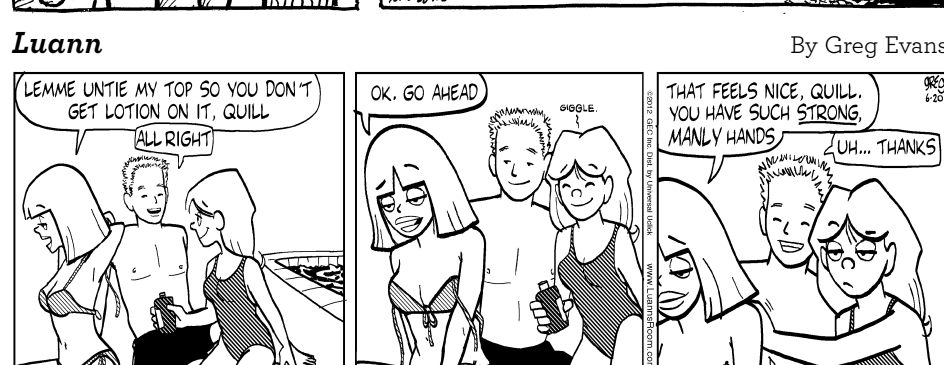

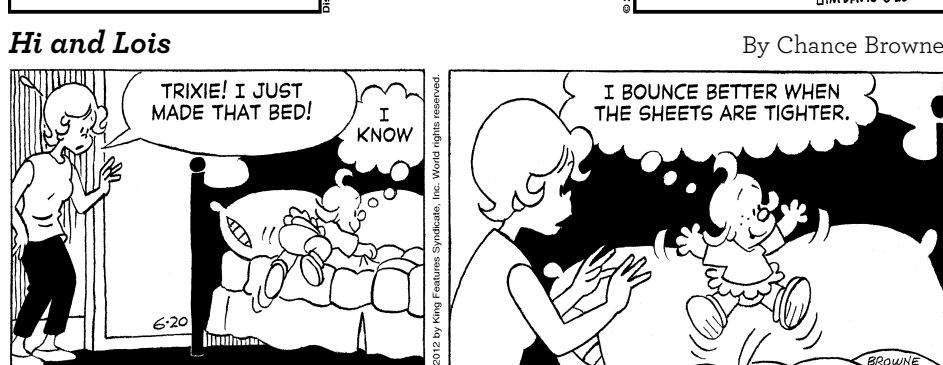

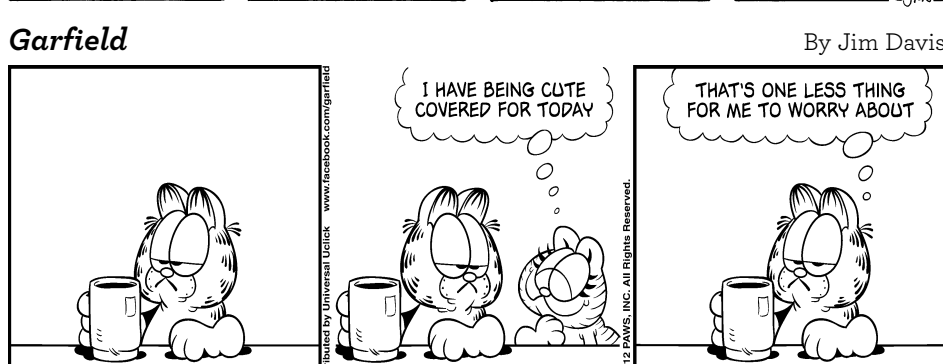

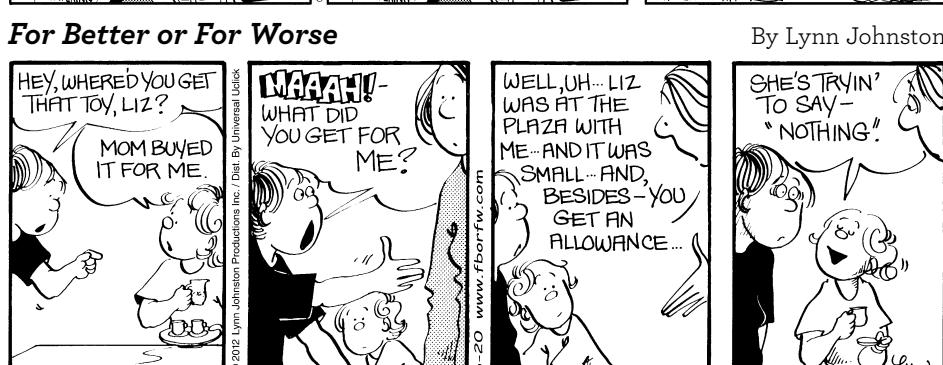

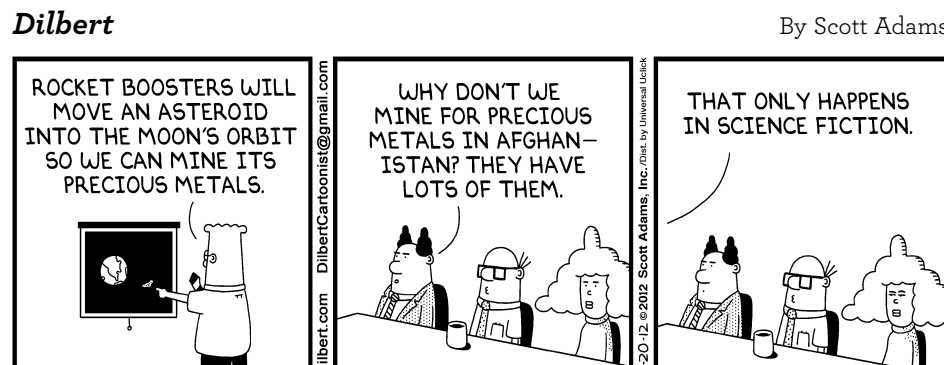

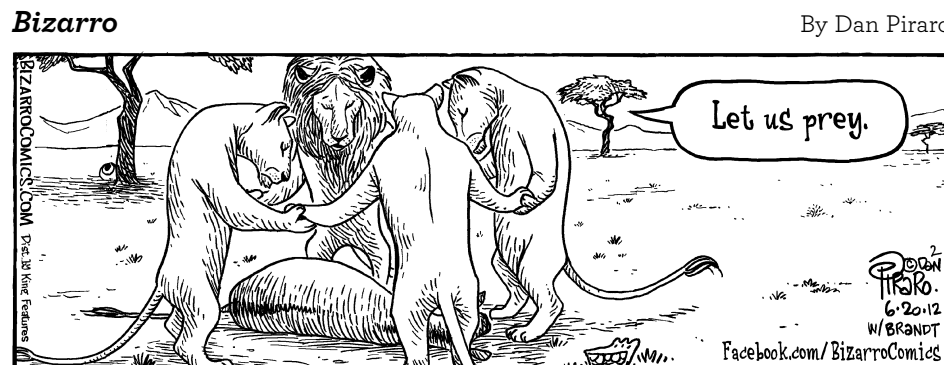

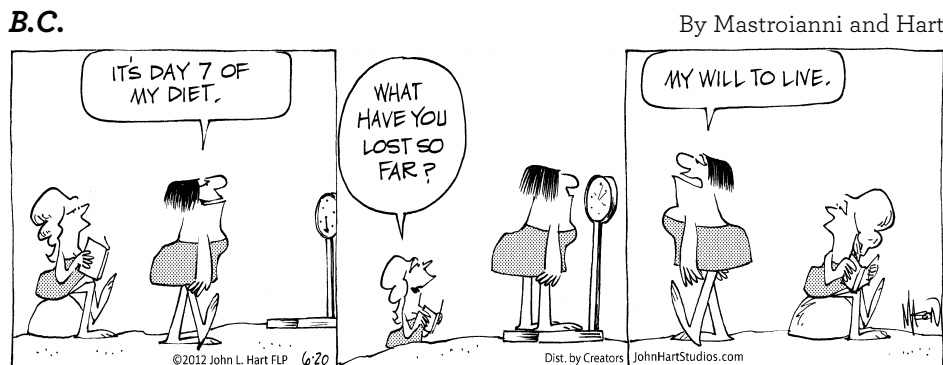

A Lavaca County grand jury Tuesday declined to indict the 23-year-old father in the death of Jesus

Mora Flores, 47. Prosecutors said the grand jury reached same conclusion as police after reviewing the evidence: The father was authorized to use deadly force to protect his daughter.

Flores was killed June 9 on a family ranch so remote that the father is heard profanely screaming at a dispatcher who couldn't locate the property.

"Come on! This guy is going to die on me!" the father yells. "I don't know what to do!"

Mindless Internet Chatter Predicts Blockbusters and Bombs

The number of times a film is mentioned in blog posts and social media strongly reflects how much money it is pulling in at the box office, according to a new model developed by Japanese physicists.

The researchers plotted the number of times a movie was mentioned in blogs and on Facebook pages from several weeks before the movie's release until the end of the first run weeks or months later. They found that the number of mentions on social network sites peaked on opening day and then gradually trailed off, with spikes on weekends. A plot of daily revenue followed a very similar pattern.

Trout Producers Struggle to Meet Growing Demand

BY CINDY SNYDER

For the Times News

TWIN FALLS • For Idaho's trout producers, it's not finding new customers for their product that's the greatest challenge: it's producing enough fish to meet demand.

An informal clicker survey conducted during an Idaho Aquaculture Association workshop showed production to be the most limiting factor. That's different than what catfish producers in Florida had indicated during a similar marketing workshop held the previous week.

Linda Odierno, outreach specialist with the National Aquaculture Association, wasn't surprised by the answer. She recognizes that although Idaho is by far the nation's largest trout producer, water shortages have led to empty raceways.

"Producers would like to produce more fish," she said. In 2011, Idaho accounted for half of the $76.6 million worth of trout sold in the United States. That represents about 33 million pounds of trout valued at $1.14 per pound for a total of $34.9 million.

That's only about $1 million more than what Idaho trout producers received in 1991 when they produced 45 million pounds of fish. The difference was that trout only sold for 75 cents a pound that year.

Trout production now fluctuates based on both water supply and markets. Good water years in the mid-2000s pushed production to nearly 50 million pounds in 2007, but the global economic woes beginning in 2008 sharply curtailed production.

"We should have trout — not tilapia — on East Coast restaurant menus," she said. "Trout has more panache, but we just don't have the production."

That's why she believes so strongly that producers should aim for high-end markets first, but also look for different techniques or practices that will allow them to raise different products with the water they have available. That approach should also help them survive adverse macroeconomic climates.

"I'd like to see aquaculture producers become price setters rather than price takers," she said.

Idaho's relative distance from major markets has turned trout into a commodity rather than a specialty product. Nearly two-thirds of the participants in the NAA's Aquaculture Business Management and Marketing Workshop sell directly to processors.

There are opportunities for reaching consumers who want Idaho trout. Food deserts, urban centers that lack grocery stores, have received a lot of press lately, but Odierno points out that seafood deserts exist all over the United States.

If a producer can identify places where no one is selling quality seafood and figure out how to sell directly to those consumers, it should mean more profit for the producer.

Bringing products to local farmers markets or joining forces with an established, community-supported agriculture program may also be ways to make direct sales work, Odierno said.

Or, create a brand and an Internet presence. According to research Odierno cited, the average online food purchase is $80, compared to the average off-line purchase of just $30.

Just 8 percent of the respondents to the clicker survey during the Idaho workshop are selling product at farmers markets or online. No one was using community-supported agriculture programs.

Mark Daily, president of the Idaho Aquaculture Association, was intrigued by many of Odierno's suggestions of how to diversify markets, but said most producers can't produce enough fish to diversify.

"Water limitations have taken out a lot of production," he said.

Senate Defeats Proposal to Trim Food Stamp Program

BY JIM ABRAMS

Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP) • The Senate on Tuesday began plowing through 73 amendments to a $500-billion bill that will set farm policy and fund the food stamp program over the next five years. One of its first votes was to reject a proposal to trim food stamp spending.

The farm bill, one of the last major pieces of legislation that could clear Congress before the election, carries out major changes to the federal safety net for farmers, replacing their direct payments, even when they don't plant crops, with greater emphasis on crop insurance and a new program to protect farmers from revenue losses.

The Senate is expected to vote on all the amendments and pass the bill by the end of the week. It then goes to the House, where it could run into resistance from fiscal conservatives.

An early amendment in the Senate dealt with the price of the food stamp program, the Supplemental Nutrition Assistance Program, which now totals $80 billion a year, about 80 percent of the bill's spending. Food stamp rolls have doubled over the last eight years to 46 million people, driven by the recession.

The Democratic-led Senate defeated 56-43 a proposal by Sen. Jeff Sessions, R-Ala., that would have restored strict asset tests for food stamp eligibility. Households with gross incomes less than 130 percent of the poverty level and liquid assets below $2,000, or $3,250 for households with elderly or disabled people, qualify for food stamps. But Sessions says the asset test is widely ignored by states that allow the asset limit to be exceeded if a person receives other welfare benefits. He said his amendment would have saved taxpayers $11 billion over 10 years.

The base bill does save $4.5 billion over 10 years by ending another practice by some 15 states of giving low-income people as little as $1 a year in home heating assistance in order to make them eligible for increased food stamp benefits.

Sessions had proposed another amendment that would have gone further in cracking down on the heating assistance practice, but it was among more than 200 that were not allowed in a deal on proceeding with the legislation reached by the two parties Monday.

U.S. BUILDERS START MORE SINGLE-FAMILY HOMES

WASHINGTON (AP) • U.S. builders started work on more single-family homes in May and requested the most permits to build homes and apartments in three and a half years. The increase suggests the housing market is slowly recovering even as other areas of the economy have weakened.

The Commerce Department said Tuesday that builders broke ground on 3.2 percent more single-family homes in May, the third straight monthly increase.

Overall housing starts fell 4.8 percent last month to a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 708,000. But that was entirely because of a 21.3 percent plunge in apartment construction, which can be volatile from month to month.

The government also said April was much better for housing starts than first thought. The government revised the April starts to 744,000 — up from an initially reported 717,000 and the fastest building pace since October 2008.

Baby Fatally Shot, Toddler Wounded at Texas Hotel

McALLEN, Texas • A man shot and killed an infant and critically wounded a toddler inside a South Texas hotel room before being arrested by officers who had been called to check on the boys and their mother, police said.

Officers still were looking for the boys' 28-year-old mother, Brandy Cerny, and "fearing the worst," Laredo Police spokesman Joe Baeza said several hours after the shooting at the Holiday Inn-Civic Center.

Police went to the hotel about midday after receiving a call from police in El Campo, a city more than 200 miles northeast of Laredo, saying that Cerny may have checked in there and that the family might be in some kind of trouble, Baeza said.

The desk clerk directed officers to a room on the 14th floor, where they knocked, identified themselves as police and immediately heard several shots, Baeza said. Some of the shots came through the room's door, he said.

Police cleared the building, which was packed with a convention, then entered the room and arrested the man. Baeza said the man's relationship to the family wasn't immediately clear and that he didn't speak to officers before his arrest.

The infant was declared dead at the scene, while the toddler was taken to a hospital and remained on life support Tuesday evening, Baeza said.

Interstate Adoptions: Harder Than They Should Be?

NEW YORK • A coalition of child-welfare experts says fewer children would be stuck in foster care if state authorities reduced red tape and standardized procedures nationwide to encourage more adoptions by out-of-state families.

The coalition is issuing a report proposing steps to reduce some of the barriers.

One proposal would be to standardize the home study courses required of parents seeking to adopt. At present, home studies vary widely and some states don't accept the preparations made by families in others.

Another proposal is to adjust the federal incentive policy so both the sending and receiving states are rewarded for interstate adoptions. The report says the current system rewards the sending state for finalizing an adoption, while the receiving state may not get compensated for costs of recruitment and post-adoption support.

Photographer Says Alec Baldwin Hit Him in NYC

NEW YORK • A New York City newspaper photographer has accused groom-to-be Alec Baldwin of assaulting him outside a marriage license bureau.

But the "30 Rock" star says he was only protecting himself.

The NYPD confirmed that Daily News photographer Marcus Santos had filed a complaint against Baldwin. The department says Santos claims he was punched while snapping photos of Baldwin and his fiancée, Hilaria Thomas.

The Associated Press is not identifying the father in order to protect the daughter's identity. The AP does not identify victims of sexual assault.

The tense, nearly five-minute 911 call begins with the father saying that he "beat up" a man found raping his daughter. The father grows increasingly frazzled, cursing and crying into the phone so loudly at times that the call often becomes inaudible.

At one point tells the dispatcher he's going to put the man in his truck and drive him to a hospital before sheriff's deputies finally arrive.

"He's going to die!" the father screams. "He's going to (expletive) die!"

V'Anne Huser, the father's attorney, sternly told reporters several times during a news conference at the Lavaca County courthouse that neither the father nor the family will ever give interviews.

"He's a peaceable soul," Huser said. "He had no intention to kill anybody that day."

The attack happened on the family's ranch off a quiet, two-lane county road between the farming towns of Shiner and Yoakum. Authorities say a witness saw Flores "forcibly carrying" the girl into a secluded area and then scrambled to find the father. Running toward his daughter's screams, investigators said, the father pulled Flores off his child and "inflicted several blows to the man's head and neck area."

Emergency crews found Flores' pants and underwear pulled down on his lifeless body by the time they responded to the 911 call. The girl was taken to a hospital and examined, and authorities say forensic evidence and witness accounts corroborated the father's story that his daughter was being sexually molested.

Although the father was never arrested, the killing was investigated as a homicide. Huser, the Lavaca County sheriff and the district attorney did not take questions during the news conference.

Philip Hilder, a Houston criminal defense attorney and former federal prosecutor, said he would have been surprised if the grand jury had decided to indict the father.

Hilder said Texas law provides several justifications for the use of deadly force, including if someone committing a sexual assault.

"The grand jury was not about to indict this father for protecting his daughter," he said.

Authorities said the family had hired Flores before to help with horses on the ranch. He was not born in the U.S. but was here legally with a green card.

The military, which is bringing home unmanned aircraft from Afghanistan, wants room to test and use them.

But the potential civilian market for drones may far eclipse military demand. Power companies want them to monitor transmission lines. Farmers want to fly them over fields to detect which crops need water. Ranchers want them to count cows. Journalists are exploring drones' newsgathering potential. Police departments want them to chase crooks, conduct search and rescue missions and catch speeders.

But concern is spreading. Another GOP freshman, Rep. Austin Scott, said he first learned of the issue when someone shouted out a question about drones at a Republican Party meeting in his Georgia district two months ago.

The level of apprehension is especially high in the conservative blogosphere, where headlines blare, "30,000 Armed Drones to be Used Against Americans" and "Government Drones Set to Spy on Farms in the United States."

When Virginia Gov. Bob McDonnell, a Republican, suggested during an interview on Washington radio station WTOP last month that drones be used by police since they've done such a good job on foreign battlefields, the political backlash was swift. NetRightDaily complained: "This seems like something a fascist would do. ... McDonnell isn't pro-Big Government, he is pro-HUGE Government."

John Whitehead, president of the Rutherford Institute of Charlottesville, Va., which provides legal assistance in support of civil liberties and conservative causes, warned the governor, "America is not a battlefield, and the citizens of this nation are not insurgents in need of vanquishing."

There's concern as well among liberal civil liberties advocates that government and private-sector drones will be used to gather information on Americans without their knowledge. Giving drones greater access to U.S. skies moves the nation closer to "a surveillance society in which our every move is monitored, tracked, recorded and scrutinized by the authorities," the American Civil Liberties Union declared in a report last December.

An ACLU lobbyist, Chris Calabrese, said that when he speaks to audiences about privacy issues, drones are what "everybody just perks up over."

"People are interested in the technology, they are interested in the implications and they worry about being under surveillance from the skies," he said.

The anxiety has spilled into Congress, where lawmakers from both parties have been meeting to discuss legislation that would broadly address the civil-liberty issues. A Landry provision in a defense spending bill would prohibit information gathered by military drones without a warrant from being used as evidence in court. A provision that Rep. Rush Holt, D-N.J., added to another bill would prohibit the Homeland Security Department from arming its drones, including ones used to patrol the border.

Scott and Sen. Rand Paul, R-Ky., have introduced identical bills to prohibit any government agency from using a drone to "gather evidence or other information pertaining to criminal conduct or conduct in violation of a regulation" without a warrant.

"I just don't like the concept of drones flying over barbecues in New York to see whether you have a Big Gulp in your backyard or whether you are separating out your recyclables according to the city mandates," Paul said in an interview, referring to a New York City ban on supersized soft drinks.

Kade Olsen holds a mallow plant, the source of 'cheesies' — little round, flat fruits.

BUHL • The next time you pull weeds from your garden, you might want to think twice about pulling that thistle. The young, tender plant stems can be peeled and eaten and taste almost like celery. Boiled, the roots are like mini parsnips.

Just ask Larry Olsen. Since he was 12, Olsen has been foraging the southern Idaho landscape. It all started with an arrowhead he found one day and showed to his teacher. She made him stand in front of his class and talk about his find, Olsen said. After class, she handed him a book called "Basin Plateau Aboriginal Sociopolitical Groups" by Julian Steward to teach more about the Paiute tribe who lived in this region. This book ignited a lifetime love of the outdoors and living off the land.

Southern Idaho's diverse terrain lends itself to a bevy of culinary delights, Olsen found — if you know what to look for and when to harvest. To help others discover the area's natural buffet, Olsen wrote a book called "Outdoor Survival Skills" in 1967.

Today, living off the land is still a topic that garners interest. On June 16, more than 30 people signed up to learn more about some of these delightfully delicious and nutritious but often overlooked gems.

The Buhl class covered the basics of foraging if you find yourself along a wooded creek. The harvesting season of the root — one of two major components of Mother Nature's food pyramid — ends in late May, Olsen said. In the heat of summer, roots are difficult to find and difficult to get to in the dry ground.

All the plants that Olsen and the group discovered last week are items that complement and make roots and meat — the other major part of nature's food source — more palatable. Olsen led the group along the property of Miracle Hot Springs, the family business, to illustrate the bounty that surrounded them.

Participant Roger Hinton of Twin Falls has been interested in edible plants and outdoor survival skills since he read Olsen's book as a

Defunct Restaurant's Owners Plan Suppers at Downtown Bakery

TWIN FALLS • The chefs of a recently closed Addison Avenue restaurant will collaborate with a Main Avenue eatery to bring a new supper option to downtown, beginning tonight.

Mike and Tay Dougherty of the former Saucy, which closed this month, will serve suppers at Bakehouse on Wednesday nights during downtown's Twin Falls Tonight season of free, outdoor concerts. The nine-concert series stretches to Aug. 22, with local bands playing near the Main Avenue fountain from 6 to 9 p.m. every Wednesday except July 4.

From 5:30 to 9 tonight, the Doughertys will serve $6-per-plate sandwiches of catfish grown in local springwater and served on Bakehouse's freshly baked focaccia, with sides of rainbow slaw and Saucy's tartar sauce, Bakehouse owner-baker Aaron Adams said.

Dougherty, M.

The Doughertys will prepare different supper menus for the other Wednesdays of the concert series but weren't ready on Monday afternoon to announce details, Adams said. The suppers will showcase fresh, local ingredients.

Bakehouse, at 144 Main Ave. S., already serves breakfast and lunch on weekdays; for information, call Adams at 329-0129.

Campbell has owned First Ascent since 1986. Over the years the farm's products have diversified to compete in the changing landscape of aquaculture. The farm started out raising trout and switched to catfish. Then when the company could no longer compete with catfish imported from Vietnam it switched to tilapia, a fish found in the warm waters of Africa and the Mediterranean.

But no matter the type of fish swimming in First Ascent's tanks, Campbell's wholesale and retail customers get what they want no matter where they are — even if that means transporting live tilapia 10 hours to Seattle by truck.

"We ship 52 weeks out of the year," Campbell said. Every Tuesday and Thursday, workers load up 2,000 pounds of tilapia that travel 2,700 miles to 14 family-owned stores and restaurants in Seattle. First Ascent does not deliver in Idaho because there are few restaurants and stores with tanks, but locals can buy the tilapia by visiting the farm.

Live tilapia is in demand, said Gary Fornshell, University of Idaho aquaculture extension educator. "Tilapia is the fifth most consumed seafood in the U.S."

Campbell's business is not the only fish farm in Idaho that live-hauls its product; Fornshell estimated there are about five fish farms that sell live fish to local customers in the Magic Valley. But First Ascent is one of the few family-owned farms in Magic Valley that deal strictly with live seafood and, Fornshell believes, the only one that owns trucks equipped with tanks and oxygen systems. "We do not process; everything is live," Campbell said.

Dungeness crab or lobster are available by special order.

Because most of the products are live they need to be cooked immediately, and First Ascent provides some instructions on how to prepare them.

The University of Idaho extension is also a good source of information for seafood recipes and preparation tips. A couple of years ago, Fornshell and Rhea Lanting, food and consumer science extension educator, co-authored "Seafood at Its Best" a curriculum for training nutrition educators, dietitians and food-service professionals.

"Eighty-six percent of the seafood we eat is imported," Fornshell said. "Domestic producers can't compete with the international market ... they found a market that prefers live."

Even in a seafood city like Seattle, where the Puget Sound is big competition, Campbell said he's still able to compete. People in Seattle are health-conscious, he said, and his company is able to ensure a top-quality product something he said imported seafood can't guarantee.

"Our competition is not another domestic producer or company, it's countries like China" Campbell said.

Production manager Eric Hernandez, 24, has worked at First Ascent since he was in high school. Now in his sixth year at the company, Hernandez is in charge of breeding and growing the type of fish customers prefer. He has found they like a tilapia with 30 to 40 percent red color.

Twice a week, First Ascent workers clean all the farm's pipes and scrub the concrete. In the morning and afternoon they pick up the "morts" or dead fish.

Each week 4,000 pounds of tilapia are carefully loaded by net to maintain their appearance.

"It's extremely important we take a lot of care," Hernandez said.

First Ascent's customers are picky when it comes to their tilapia. If even a scale is missing, they won't buy.

"I've brought fish into the store and they will ask, 'Are these fresh?'" Campbell said. Yes, they're alive, he'll reply.

"Yes, but are they fresh?" the store owner will say and start to open the gills, inspecting their brightness and the clarity of the eyes.

If First Ascent is a hands-on company, its customers are equally involved.

"They want a very fresh product with top-quality freshness, and it's not easy," Campbell said.

He estimates that 98 to 99 percent of his customers are Hispanic or Asian.

"The market that Don sells to is a prominently an ethnic market," Fornshell said. "That's the type of seafood they prefer where you pick out a fish that's swimming. In a lot of those cultures the fish is prepared whole with the heads still on."

Local Customers

If you want to go to First Ascent to pick up a fresh tilapia or two for dinner, be prepared for them to be really fresh" straight out of the water, into a plastic bag and into your car. You'll have to kill and clean the fish yourself.

"You like to have fresh fish and it's not too much; it's more expensive in the stores," said Peyman Ebaden Ahwazi, who is originally from Iran but lives in Twin Falls.

Ebaden Ahwazi was introduced to First Ascent by an American friend and is now a frequent customer. He also visits other fish farms in the area that sell directly to consumers.

"The taste is better and more delicious," Ebaden Ahwazi said. "We don't spend too much gas, and it's beautiful and natural here."

Rusen Katee of Twin Falls, originally from Iraq, agreed with Ebaden Ahwazi that fresh fish tastes better than frozen.

"It has a different taste," Katee said.

Tilapia and Vegetables in Foil

Cooking fish in foil is similar to the French method of cooking in parchment paper called "en papillote" or the Italian method called "cartoccio."

- 4 U.S. farm-raised tilapia fillets
- 4 sheets aluminum foil
- 1/2 teaspoon dried thyme
- 1/2 teaspoon dried marjoram
- 4 teaspoons lemon juice
- 1 16-ounce package frozen vegetables (broccoli, cauliflower and carrots medley)
- 1/2 cup green onions, chopped
- 2 tablespoons margarine or butter, cut in pieces
- Salt and pepper to taste

Preheat oven to 425 degrees (you can also do this on a grill). Place one fish fillet in the center of each piece of foil, sprinkle with thyme, marjoram and lemon juice.

Place frozen vegetables next to fish. Sprinkle with green onions, salt and pepper. Top with margarine or butter. Seal packets (leave some room for air circulation) and place on a baking sheet.

Bake for 20 minutes.

Oysters Florentine

This is a recipe that calls for creativity. You can vary the types of herbs (dill is usually a good choice with fish). You can substitute fresh vegetables. Sliced tomatoes and zucchini are good suggestions. Try a splash of white wine instead of butter. 2 10-ounce packages

ED GLAZAR • FOR THE TIMES-NEWS

First Ascent Fish Farm brings back several live products from Seattle for customers in Idaho. Here, Eric Hernandez holds a bag of oysters.

frozen chopped spinach
1/2 cup whipping cream or half and half

- 24 U.S. farm-raised oysters (liquor and bottom shells reserved)
- 1/2 lemon
- 1 jar Hollandaise sauce
- 1/2 cup cheddar cheese, shredded
- 1/2 cup mozzarella cheese, shredded
- 3/4 cup breadcrumbs
- Paprika, salt, and pepper to taste

Cook spinach in a little water, just a short time so that it stays green. Drain well. Add the cream. Thicken with flour.

Arrange oysters on the half shell on a jelly roll pan (you can use a layer of rock salt to keep the shells upright). Sprinkle the juice of 1/2 lemon over them. Top each oyster with the spinach mixture. Add Hollandaise sauce, two cheeses, breadcrumbs, paprika, salt and pepper. Bake at 375 degrees for 15 minutes.

Grilled Shrimp

- 25 U.S. farm-raised shrimp
- 1/2 cup lemon juice, freshly squeezed
- 1/2 cup olive oil
- 1 tablespoon parsley, chopped
- 2 cloves garlic, minced
- 2 teaspoons lemon zest
- 2 teaspoons dry mustard
- 1/4 teaspoon cayenne pepper
- 4 black peppercorns, crushed

Peel and devein your shrimp. Place shrimp in a gallon-size plastic bag and set bag in a bowl. In a medium bowl, mix the lemon juice, olive oil, garlic, parsley, lemon zest, mustard, cayenne pepper and black pepper. Reserve a small amount of marinade for basting. Pour the rest of the marinade into the bag of shrimp and zip the bag. Make sure that the shrimp are well coated. Allow the shrimp to marinate in the refrigerator for about 1 hour.

Large shrimp can be placed directly on the grill. Smaller shrimps should be threaded onto skewers. Grill over medium high heat, for about 2 to 3 minutes on each side. Brush reserved marinade over shrimp while cooking.

A Good Reason to Mess With Tuna Salad

BY STEPHANIE WITT SEDGWICK

Special to The Washington Post

I never understood why anyone would want to riff on the perfect, old-fashioned tuna fish salad — until I did it my way. I started by adding onions and celery to my mom's mayonnaise-and-lemon version; eventually I ended up with this recipe, which is about as far as you can get from a creamy tuna salad.

It mixes in beans, roasted red peppers, onion, celery and Mom's lemons along with a healthy kick of vinegar. Not meant to be a sandwich stuffer, it could be served as a topping for crostini, on a buffet or as an entree with mixed greens and toasted country bread.

You can make the salad a day in advance if necessary, but it's best the day it is made. After a while, the red bell pepper becomes overpowering.

Roasted Red Pepper, Tuna and Bean Salad

Makes 4 generous cups
4 to 6 servings.

- 7 ounces solid white tuna packed in water, drained
- 1 3/4 cups cooked, no-salt added Great Northern beans (one 15.5-ounce can, drained)
- 2 ounces sweet onion, such as Vidalia, cut into 1/4 inch dice (1/3 cup)
- 1 medium rib celery, cut into 1/4-inch dice (1/3 cup)
- 1/2 roasted red bell pepper, seeded and cut into 1/4 inch dice (1/3 cup)
- Juice of 2 lemons
- 2 tablespoons olive oil, or more to taste
- 3 tablespoons sherry vinegar, or more to taste
- Salt
- Freshly ground black pepper

Flake the tuna into medium-size pieces. Combine the tuna, beans, onion, celery, roasted bell pepper, lemon juice, oil, vinegar and salt and pepper to taste in a large bowl. Stir to combine.

Taste, and adjust the seasoning and/or oil as needed.

boy. Often when he hikes he snacks on the edibles around him. "There's just a wild abundance out there," Hinton said. "A lot of people think, 'Oh, it's green and pretty,' but have no idea how to use it."

However, foraging comes with a warning: Be wary and certain the leaves you ingest are not poisonous. "Every plant I studied has a close look-alike that's dangerous," Olsen said. "But also every plant I've found, even poisonous, is useful."

Jenny Everton of Twin Falls said she has a small library of books that help her identify edible plants in the wild. But she found the course useful and plans to add a tea recipe of mallow, yarrow, peppermint, cheesies and currants to her list.

"There are just a lot of these weeds you don't give notice to," Everton said.

The Wilds, on Your Plate

Here are highlights from Larry Olsen's lesson on edible Idaho plants:

Rose hips: The seed pods of roses contain a large dose of vitamin C and are good for making teas or juice. They are also tasty when cooked and can be ground for flour.

Lamb's quarter: A common weed along stream banks. The leaves are edible when young and can be eaten as salad or cooked like spinach. The seeds can be ground into flour and baked into bread when mixed with other grain.

Cattail: Found along streams and marshes, this plant has many uses. The roots, young shoots, seed heads and pollen are all edible. The roots, when peeled and dried, can be made into flour for bread. There is also a lot of starch in the roots that can be extracted by mashing and soaking them in water and stirring vigorously; remove the roots and then allow the water to sit overnight until the starch settles; pour off the water and use the starch to make dough. Before the pollen appears the green heads can be boiled and eaten. When dry, the heads can be burned to roast the seeds inside that can be eaten or ground for flour.

Canary reed grass: The seeds are edible. The roots may also be eaten when cooked, and the young shoots are edible raw or cooked. Aphids leave behind a sugar substance on the underside of the leaves that be scraped off to use as a sweetener.

Thistle: The young, tender plant stems can be peeled and eaten. The first-year roots are good when boiled with other food. Greasewood: The new spring tops are a good source of salt when dried and ground.

Sunflower: One of the main seed resources. It can be made into a baby food when seed and shell are ground and water is added to make a paste.

Currant: A shrub that produces berries that are gold, red or black. The berries ripen early and can be eaten fresh or dried.

Mallow, cheesewood, wild geranium: This is an annual plant with thick roots and stems that grow along the ground. The fruits — round and flattened into the shape of a cheesewheel — are known as "cheesies." The leaves and stems can be cooked in soups, and the cheesies can be eaten raw or cooked. The dried leaves are used to make warm drinks.

Prickly lettuce: A common weed. The young leaves are edible when cooked.

Stinging nettle: The roots and leaves can be used to make a tea. It can stop diarrhea, but overuse will cause constipation. You can also boil it like a green.

Yarrow: The leaves of yarrow are often used to stop bleeding in wounds or heal rashes. It is also good to make tea and relieves toothaches when chewed.

Ready to make a tea using some of the plants that Olsen and his group found on their venture last week? Boil mallow, yarrow, peppermint, cheesies and currants in water. Steep to your desired level of intensity and strain.

With White, IPAs Get a Little More Colorful

BY DANIEL FROMSON
Special to The Washington Post

Summer is usually a time for easy-drinking lagers and wheat ales: a realm whose kings and queens, the Coronas and Blue Moons of the world and their micro-brewed brethren, seduce us year after year.

But this season I've been won over by a nascent beer style that's often just as refreshing as old-guard warm-weather favorites — and much more creative and complex. Known as white India pale ale, it's the latest offshoot of a lineage that now includes Guinness-lookalike black IPAs and farmhouse IPAs fermented with wild yeast.

The handful of breweries that have dabbled in the style since it emerged as a trend in 2011, including well-regarded producers such as Oregon's Deschutes Brewery and Founders Brewing of Michigan, seem to agree that white IPAs combine the unmalted wheat and spices of a Belgian-style witbier such as Blue Moon with the bitterness and floral hop flavors of an India pale ale. (The style is too young for trade associations to have officially defined it.)

The result tends to be relatively low in alcohol, spicy and fragrant, with a slight tartness from the wheat and tropical fruit or citrus aromas from hop varieties that complement the underlying witbier fruitiness.

"The fruity and spicy notes that you can get in a witbier ... you can find those in hops," says Steven Pauwels, brew master at Boulevard Brewing in Kansas City, who brewed a white IPA last year with Deschutes. "A white IPA makes a lot more sense to me than a black IPA, just from a flavor standpoint."

Mark Burford, brew master and co-founder of Long Island's Blue Point Brewing, which recently showed off its white IPA, also praises the style's balance of fruit and spice. White IPAs go well with food, he adds, "whether it's seafood, because the beer is on the milder side, or more complex sauces and foods that play off all the flavors in the beer."

The creativity inherent in layering disparate flavors and traditions is part of what seems to have made the white IPA so popular so quickly.

"We told our distributors we were going to do a white IPA, and within three months there were half a dozen more that got announced," says Jim Koch, chairman of Boston Beer, which released its Samuel Adams Whitewater IPA in January. "Everybody has a different take on the style. One question is, do you use a Belgian yeast or an (American or German) ale yeast? Our decision was to use an ale yeast, because the fruitier Belgian yeast just overwhelms a lot of the hop aroma."

Koch calls white IPAs "the beer equivalent of fusion cuisine," a logical step for an industry that specializes in New World riffs on Old World styles and other cross-cultural mash-ups.

Recipes to Help You Try Cutting Edge Cuts of Meat

BY ALISON LADMAN
For The Associated Press

Ready to meet the new meat?

The economy has prompted cost-conscious restaurant chefs to spearhead creative — and often less costly — new cuts of beef. And when they do that, it usually doesn't take long for those cuts to move off the menu and into butcher and grocery shops.

To help get you grilling with some of the latest cuts of beef, we created recipes for three meats on the cutting edge.

Teres Major with Cilantro Cashew Pesto

Start to finish: 45 minutes.
Servings: 4.

- 1 bunch fresh cilantro, stems and leaves
- 2 tablespoons olive oil
- 2 tablespoons water
- 1/4 cup toasted cashews (pieces are fine)
- 1/4 cup grated Parmesan cheese
- Salt and ground black pepper
- 2 pounds teres major steaks
- Vegetable or canola oil

Heat a grill to high. In a blender, combine the cilantro, olive oil, water, cashews and Parmesan. Blend until smooth, or as smooth as you prefer. Season with salt and pepper, then blend again. Set aside. Season the steaks with salt and pepper. Soak a crumpled paper towel with oil. Clipping the paper towel with tongs, oil the grates of the grill. Add the steaks and cook over high heat for 5 to 8 minutes per side for medium-rare.

Remove the steaks from the grill and allow to rest for 8 to 10 minutes. Thinly slice the steaks across the grain and top with the pesto.

Fennel Rubbed Denver Steaks with Grilled Fennel and Blue Cheese

Start to finish: 30 minutes.
Servings: 4.

- 1 teaspoon fennel seeds
- 4 Denver cut steaks, 3/4-inch thick (2 pounds total)
- Salt and ground black pepper
- 2 fennel bulbs, white parts only, cut into quarters
- Vegetable or canola oil
- Wedges of lemon
- 1/4 cup crumbled blue cheese

MATTHEW MEAD • ASSOCIATED PRESS

Fennel Rubbed Denver Steaks with Grilled Fennel and Blue Cheese.

Heat the grill to medium-high.

In a spice grinder or using a mortar and pestle, grind the fennel seeds. Sprinkle the ground seeds over both sides of the steaks, then rub into the meat. Season the steaks with salt and pepper. Season the fennel bulb quarters with salt and black pepper.

Soak a crumpled paper towel with oil. Clipping the paper towel with tongs, oil the grates of the grill. Grill the fennel quarters for 10 minutes, turning once during cooking. Grill the steaks for 4 to 6 minutes per side for medium-rare. Remove the steaks from the heat and allow to rest for 8 to 10 minutes. To serve, arrange 2 fennel quarters on each plate. Squeeze some fresh lemon juice over them, then top with a sprinkle of blue cheese. Serve with the steak.

Chuck Roll Steaks with Barbecue Rub and Grilled Onions

Start to finish: 45 minutes.
Servings: 4.

- 2 tablespoons vegetable oil

MATTHEW MEAD • ASSOCIATED PRESS

Chuck Roll Steaks with Barbecue Rub and Grilled Onions.

- 1 tablespoon brown sugar
- Salt and ground black pepper
- 1/2 teaspoon garlic powder
- 1/2 teaspoon onion powder
- 1 teaspoon smoked paprika
- 1/2 teaspoon ground cumin
- 1/4 teaspoon cayenne
- Four 12-ounce chuck roll steaks
- 1 large sweet onion, cut into 4 thick slices

In a large bowl, stir together the oil, brown sugar, 1 teaspoon salt, 1 teaspoon pepper, garlic powder, onion powder, smoked paprika, cumin and cayenne. Place the steaks in the bowl and massage the mixture into the meat, making sure to coat all sides. Allow to sit at room temperature for 30 minutes.

Heat the grill to medium-high.

Season the onion slices with salt and pepper. Grill the onions without flipping them for 6 to 8 minutes, or until charred and tender. Grill the steaks for 4 to 5 minutes per side for medium-rare. Remove the steaks from the heat and allow to rest for 8 to 10 minutes before serving. Serve with the grilled onions.

Star Anise: What It Is and How to Use It

BY J.M. HIRSCH
Associated Press

Pretty to look at, but what do you do with it?

That about sums up how most of us feel about star anise. And that's why it's mostly been relegated to the backwaters of spice cabinets in the U.S. What most people don't realize is that star anise actually is a deliciously potent spice that can do amazing things for your cooking, especially for meat.

But first, the basics. Star anise is the fruit — yes, fruit — of an evergreen tree native to southern China (where most of it still is produced). When dried, that fruit resembles a 1-inch rust-colored star, usually with six to eight points. Each point contains a small, shiny seed.

The flavor — which is contained in both the seeds and the star itself — is sweet and licorice-like, similar to aniseed (though the plants are not related).

In China, which has used it for centuries, star anise is a key ingredient in five-spice powder (with cloves, cinnamon, fennel and Sichuan peppercorns).

Despite its sweetness, star anise traditionally is used in savory recipes, particularly with meats. It often is added whole to soups, stews and braising broths, to which it adds a sweet-licorice-peppery flavor.

Star anise can be used whole or ground. When whole, it usually is added to liquids destined for a slow simmer or braise. It usually is removed and discarded from the dish before serving. Ground star anise is more versatile. It also is more potent and should be added with care. And like all whole spices, it should be ground just before using.

The best way to try it is in a slow braise of beef. Start with a base of broth, then add onions, soy sauce and whole star anise. If you like, add some Sichuan peppercorns, too.

But it's the onions and soy sauce that are key. The combination of flavor compounds in onions and soy sauce works with the star anise to naturally intensify the flavor of the meat, much in the way MSG does. It's amazing.

What else can you do with it? Play around with its sweet side.

I've included a basic recipe for grinding star anise with sugar and cinnamon, along with suggestions for using it. It's an easy, child-friendly way to try star anise.

MATTHEW MEAD • ASSOCIATED PRESS

A blend of star anise, cinnamon and sugar, cooked with banana to create a syrup served over pancakes.

Cinnamon-Star Anise Sugar

Start to finish: 5 minutes.
Makes 1/4 cup.

- 3-inch cinnamon stick, broken into several pieces
- 1/2 star anise
- 2 tablespoons sugar
- Pinch salt

Combine all ingredients in an electric spice grinder or a blender. Grind until reduced to a fine powder, about 1 to 2 minutes. Use as directed below.

• Slather butter over slices of bread, then sprinkle with the cinnamon-star anise sugar. Toast under a broiler or in a toaster oven until bubbly and lightly browned.

• Mix the entire batch with 1 cup of quick oats and a stick of softened butter. Sprinkle this mixture over blueberry muffins before baking.

• Use 1 tablespoon of the mixture in place of 1 tablespoon of the sugar in your favorite pancake or waffle recipe.

• Use instead of plain sugar to sweeten applesauce. Or use in place of the sugar in apple crisp.

• Melt butter in a large non-stick skillet. Slice a banana lengthwise down the center. Add a teaspoon of the sugar to the skillet, then add the bananas and fry on both sides for several minutes, or until lightly browned. Eat the banana slices on their own, or use as topping for ice cream or pancakes. Be sure to use the liquid in the skillet as syrup on the pancakes or ice cream.

• Pan-fry your favorite meatball recipe (or use frozen) in a bit of melted butter. Transfer the meatballs to an oven-safe platter and keep warm in a 200 degree oven. Meanwhile, return the uncleaned skillet to the heat. Add more butter, a sliced onion and a splash of soy sauce. Cook until the onion is tender, then add 1 teaspoon of the sugar mixture and a splash of white wine to deglaze the pan. Serve the meatballs topped with the pan sauce.

ery salt and a tablespoon of mayonnaise.

That should get you close to the flavor of the original.

Question: I loved Sealtest's spring garden flavor of cottage cheese, which sold many years ago. Do you know how to make a substitute?

Answer: When products disappear, loyal fans do get frustrated. Usually, it's very difficult to come up with a substitute. But in the case of the garden-flavored cottage cheese, there are several recipes floating around for a version of it.

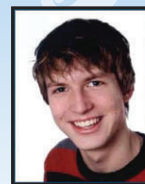

Here's the most common one: Mix a 16-ounce carton of cottage cheese with 3 or 4 sliced green onions, a stick of diced celery, half of a diced cucumber and a cored, diced tomato. Stir in a splash of Worcestershire sauce, about 1 teaspoon cel-

OBITUARIES

Lyle Pearson

Jan. 20, 1925-June 17, 2012

BOISE • Lyle Pearson, devoted husband and father, successful Treasure Valley businessman, and enthusiastic Bronco Booster, passed away Sunday, June 17, 2012, in Boise.

his tireless service to the automotive industry and to the community. He was named the 2011 TIME Dealer of the Year for Idaho, one of the most prestigious and highly coveted awards in the automotive industry.

A longtime Idahoan, Lyle and his family moved to Twin Falls when Lyle was just 4. Lyle, a talented student and athlete, lettered in football, basketball and track every year of high school and held the state long jump record. Lyle graduated from Twin Falls High School in 1944, then served in the Army Air Corps for 2½ years during World War II. After the war, Lyle attended the University of Notre Dame on a football scholarship, graduating in 1950. He also received a commission as second lieutenant in the United States Air Force Reserve that same year.

Lyle amassed a long and distinguished record of community service. Over the decades, he donated his time, talent, resources and vehicles to countless civic and charitable enterprises, ranging from the Boise Rescue Mission to BSU and U of I to the Idaho Make-a-Wish Foundation. Lyle had a passion for football, especially for Notre Dame football, his alma mater, and for Boise State football. Lyle began purchasing season tickets and attending Bronco games soon after moving to Boise. He was an avid Bronco Booster, becoming a Coaches' Club member for both the football and basketball teams and, in recent years, Lyle and Marty could be seen cheering at almost every home and away game, including the Bowl games.

After college, Lyle began a lifelong love affair with the car business. He worked for the Studebaker Corp. for 14 years, moving from South Bend, Ind., to Minneapolis; San Francisco; Portland, Ore.; Pittsburgh and Los Angeles. While working for Studebaker, which was the U.S. distributor for Mercedes-Benz at that time, Lyle signed up all of the original Mercedes-Benz dealers including the Portland, Ore., dealership — the oldest Mercedes-Benz dealership in the country. Lyle completed his tenure at Studebaker as regional manager of the Los Angeles Region in 1964.

Surpassing even his love of football was Lyle's love of golf. Lyle played as much golf as running a business would allow and pursued his passion on courses across the country and the world. Lyle worked and played hard his entire life and earned the love and respect of his family as well as countless friends, employees, customers, and industry and community members. Lyle never drank or smoked, but he always loved to gamble. He covered his bets for eternity when he accepted Jesus into his heart. Lyle was always a gentleman, was unfailingly kind and was generous to a fault. He will be truly missed.

Lyle then joined Torginol Industries, a seamless floor covering and real estate development company headquartered in Los Angeles and Las Vegas, where he served from 1964 through 1969 as general manager, then as president. Lyle married Agnes Shaw in San Francisco in 1951. The couple had two children, Cindy and Melissa, before divorcing in 1967. In 1969, Lyle married Marty King of Lakewood, Calif. The newlyweds and Marty's two children, Daniel and Pamela King, moved to Boise, fulfilling Lyle's dream of returning to Idaho. That December, another dream was realized when Lyle and Marty opened their first new car dealership, selling Mercedes-Benz and Volvo cars on Capital Boulevard in Boise.

Lyle was preceded in death by his parents, Jim and Mabel Busby; his sister, Esta Faye Miracle; and his brother, Milo Pearson. He is survived by his sister, Dorlene Packard; his first wife, Agnes Pearson; his daughter, Cindy Pearson and her husband, Jerry Wilkinson; his daughter, Melissa Pearson and her husband Thad Buchanan; his wife, Marty Pearson and her children, Daniel King and his wife Shelly, and Pamela Cross and her husband Jim Cross. Lyle is also survived by five grandchildren, two great-grandchildren and many nephews, nieces and cousins.

Over the years, Lyle grew the Lyle Pearson Company into the largest multi-line luxury car dealership in the region, selling the Acura, Jaguar, Land Rover, Mercedes-Benz, Porsche, Volvo and Sprinter lines from his automotive complex in the Boise Auto Mall and the Jaguar, Land Rover and Volvo brands from his dealership in Spokane, Wash. Along the way, Lyle received numerous honors for

A celebration of Lyle's life will be held at 3 p.m. Thursday, June 21, at the Hillcrest Country Club.

In lieu of flowers, contributions can be made to the Bronco Athletic Association Scholarship Endowment Fund, 1910 University Drive, Boise, ID 83725.

George Glarborg

Jan. 17, 1925-June 17, 2012

HAZELTON • George Glarborg, age 87, passed away from natural causes Sunday, June 17, 2012, at the Minidoka Memorial Hospital.

He was born in Cotesfield, Neb., on Jan. 17, 1925. His parents were Danish immigrants, George and Inger Glarborg. George graduated from Aberdeen High School in 1942. Following graduation, he enlisted in the Army. He served with 106th Infantry Division as a medic in the European Theater. He was captured in the Battle of the Bulge and spent more than four months as a prisoner of the Germans. He was liberated by the Russians and spent one month as a prisoner of the Russians. After George's service in World War II, he returned to attend the University of Idaho. He married Eleanor Steinmann on June 7, 1947. He received a degree in metallurgical engineering from the University of Idaho in 1950. In 1951, he and Eleanor started farming in Ashton, Idaho. During his time in Ashton, he became an active member of Zion Lutheran Church. He served in leadership roles and was part of the group that helped found Camp Perkins. In 1957, he and Eleanor moved to a homestead in the Kasota area and lived there the remainder of their lives. Not only were they blessed with a new farm, they also joined a new church family. He has been an active member of Trinity Lutheran Church in Rupert and served in many leadership roles over the past 55 years. He enjoyed working on the A&B Irrigation District as a board member. He made many friends golfing and bowling.

George is survived by his son, Carl (Marsha) Glarborg; daughter, Chris (Blake) Coats; daughter, Karen (John) Cummings; nine grandchildren; and three great-grandchildren. He is also survived by his sisters, Anna Adamek, Ellen Kranzler and Bernice Jensen; and his brother, Arnold Glarborg.

A memorial service will be held at 11 a.m. Friday, June 22, at the Trinity Lutheran Church in Rupert, Idaho, with Pastor Gerald Rabe officiating. Funeral arrangements are under the direction of Hansen Mortuary.

In lieu of flowers, donations may be made to the Trinity Lutheran Memorial Fund for Camp Perkins.

John Conrad White

April 12, 1939-June 18, 2012

TWIN FALLS • John Conrad White, 73, Twin Falls, departed this life Monday, June 18, 2012, from complications following heart surgery.

John was born April 12, 1939, in Twin Falls, Idaho, the fifth son of William Llewellyn White and Emma Egbert White. He grew up south of Twin Falls working on the family farm and graduated from Twin Falls High School in 1957. After high school, he joined the Idaho National Guard and later the U.S. Army Reserve. John then worked at Self's Manufacturing, later known as K and T Steel, for many years. In September of 1965, he was one of the original 540 students to attend the new College of Southern Idaho, where he studied auto body and repair. John continued his love and talent for repairing cars while working for Mill-rany Buick, Union Motors and Bill Workman Ford, and was body shop manager for Dick Dey Oldsmobile for many years. Eventually, he realized his dream of having his own business, John's Auto Body on Eastland Drive South in Twin Falls. Adding to his joy was the opportunity he had to work with his son, Stan, at both Dick Dey's and his own business. Following his retirement from auto body, John worked part time with First Federal Bank.

On April 3, 1959, John married his sweetheart, Ann Haslam, at her parent's home in Filer, Idaho. They have enjoyed the past 53 years together. To this union, three children were born. On April 30, 1966, their marriage was solemnized and an eternal family was formed in the Idaho Falls LDS Temple.

One of John's passions was horseback riding, and he spent several years riding and providing community service with the Twin Falls County Mounted Sherriff's Posse. He served as drill master for the Twin Falls Junior Riding Club for several years while his children participated in the youth group, always eager to support and encourage their endeavors. He most enjoyed trail riding in the beautiful mountains of Idaho with his family. John also enjoyed hunting, camping and Dutch oven cooking for his family and friends when he wasn't riding dirt bikes with his sons or an ATV with his wife. John will long be remembered for his honesty and generosity, his ability to fix, repair or build anything, his quiet, gentle demeanor, his hard work ethic, his kindness to animals, his tenderness and loving ways, and his beautiful blue eyes. Above all else, John loved his family.

John was preceded in death by his father; mother; and three brothers, David, Bill and George. He is survived by his wife; sons, Kelly (Debra) White of Kimberly and Stan (Shon) White of Filer; daughter, Wendy (Ron) Kerr of Twin Falls; eight grandchildren; five great-grandchildren; and a brother, Lew.

There will be a viewing from 6 to 8 p.m. Thursday, June 21, at Rosenau Funeral Home, 2826 Addison Ave. E. in Twin Falls. The funeral will be at noon Friday, June 22, with a viewing from 11 until 11:45 a.m. at the Twin Falls LDS South Stake Center on corner of Orchard Drive and Harrison Street South. Bishop Jason Jacobia will preside.

Family and friends may share their memories at www.rosenaufuneralhome.com.

An Easy Blend of Iced Tea and Lemonade for Summer

BY ALISON LADMAN
For The Associated Press

Lemonade and iced tea are two of the most refreshing summer beverages. Mixed together they offer the best of both beverages. This punch uses a base of black and mint teas combined with freshly squeezed citrus juices and a touch of sugar to create the perfect barbecue accompaniment.

Orange-Lemon-Lime Tea-ade

Start to finish: 20 minutes.
Servings: 16.

- 8 bags black tea
- 4 bags mint tea
- 6 cups boiling water
- 3/4 cup sugar
- Ice
- Juice of 4 oranges
- Juice of 2 lemons
- Juice of 2 limes

In a 1-gallon pitcher, combine the black tea bags, mint tea bags and boiling water. Let steep for 5 minutes. Use a slotted spoon to remove the tea bags, squeezing them over the pitcher to extract as much liquid as possible. Add the sugar, stirring until it is dissolved. Stir in the orange, lemon and lime juices, then add enough ice to fill the pitcher.

A Bisque for a Hot or Cold Bowl

THE WASHINGTON POST

This soup is a looker: beautifully crimson and quite thick. It can be served hot or cold.

From Debbie Amster, a holistic health coach, cooking teacher and healthful-foods caterer based in Olney, Md.

Beet and Tomato Bisque

Makes 8 cups (8 servings)

- 3 tablespoons olive oil
- 1 medium onion, diced (1 cup)
- 1 medium clove garlic, minced (1 teaspoon)
- 1/2 teaspoon salt
- 1 pound (4 small) red beets, peeled
- 1 pound carrots, peeled and cut crosswise in half
- 28 ounces canned plum tomatoes, drained
- 4 1/2 cups no-salt-added vegetable or chicken broth
- 2 teaspoons sugar

- 1/2 teaspoon freshly ground black pepper
- 5 tablespoons freshly squeezed lemon juice (from 1 or 2 lemons)
- 2 tablespoons minced parsley
- Sour cream or yogurt, for garnish

Heat 2 tablespoons of the oil in a large saucepan over medium heat. Add the onion, garlic and salt, and cook for 5 minutes, stirring frequently, until the onion has softened. Add the beets, carrots, tomatoes, broth and sugar. Bring to a boil, then reduce the heat to medium-low, cover and cook for 1 hour, adjusting the heat so the liquid is just barely bubbling around the edges. Use an immersion (stick) blender, and blend briefly to a coarse puree. (Alternatively, if you use a blender, transfer in batches; remove the center knob from the lid and cover the opening with a towel to contain splash-ups.) Stir in the pepper, lemon juice, parsley and the remaining tablespoon of oil. Ask a Cook: Shelf Life of Balsamic Vinegar

BY KATHLEEN PURVIS
McClatchy Newspapers

Question: Can balsamic vinegar go bad? I reached for a bottle that had been in the pantry about a year and it had turned into globs of a jelly-like substance. Was it useable?

Answer: Vinegar in general has a very long shelf life. Older bottles of wine-based vinegars might get sediment at the bottom, and sometimes they develop a growth of what is called Mother of Vinegar, the natural mold that is used to make new batches of vinegar. Mother looks more like a thin sheet you'll see floating in a bottle. Mother wouldn't be as thick as the globs you're describing, though. Balsamic vinegars vary wildly in price, from the true aged balsamicos that can cost more than $100 a bottle to very cheap balsamic-flavored vinegars that cost less than $5.

In this case, it sounds like the vinegar thickened up from sugar. It could be that the cap wasn't tight and allowed the vinegar to evaporate.

More than 4,300 U.S. Army reservists and National Guard members are spending three weeks in the mountains and desert scrub of Fort Hunter Liggett, Calif., about 160 miles south of San Francisco. The troops, including some from Twin Falls and Boise, are fine-tuning their skills for possible deployment to war. In a three-part series, Times-News reporter Steve Kadel follows them through simulated battles, eats with them in camps replicating Afghanistan outposts, and reports on the increasing role reservists will play in U.S. military readiness.

Idaho Spikers Headed to National Tourney

BY PATRICK SHELTRA
psheltra@magicvalley.com

KIMBERLY • Where are you going on your summer vacation?

It is a common question high school athletes are asked as the summer months appear on the calendar, and the Club Canyon Black 16-and-under volleyball team already has a good answer.

Earlier this year and by virtue of winning tournaments in Idaho Falls and Boise, the team, coached by Guy Stubbs, qualified for the AAU national tournament in Orlando, Fla.

The team leaves Thursday and begins playing some 20 best-of-three on Saturday for purposes of seeding. The tournament then begins in earnest on June 27.

Stubbs is under no illusion that his group of Idaho girls can win, what with dozens of squads in the 192-team field coming from far more volleyball-competitive states like California and Florida. Last year, Stubbs' team took 54th.

"My goal this year is to be in the top 20," Stubbs said, "and I think we have the personnel to do that."

Just making it to Florida was the realization of a major goal for most of the girls. Qualifying on the court was one matter; raising the funds an entirely different challenge. Just the basics — airfare, living accommodations for a week and food — run each girl about $1,000.

Add in trips to two amusement parks and a beach on the Gulf Coast — "The water is so much prettier on the Gulf side," said Stubbs, who took last year's team to both coasts — and the costs only go up more.

"We are very frugal in finding places to stay, using timeshares and that kind of thing," Stubbs said.

And of course, there are the countless fundraisers, from car washes to selling Fat Boy ice cream bars and performing other odd jobs.

"These girls are very dedicated," Stubbs said. "Everyone else is on summer break and they're dedicating three to four hours per week to practice," Stubbs said.

Once there, Club Canyon will be greeted at the Orange County Convention Center and the ESPN Sports Complex at Disney World by volleyball courts "as far as the eye can see," said Stubbs, who added that there are more than 100 courts alone at the convention center.

It could be a daunting sight for his players, which is why Stubbs is keeping his message simple.

"Take care of business on the court. If we take care of our side of the net, we'll do well," Stubbs said. "We can't control everything around us."

Ensuring that this is not a volleyball-only trip should also help.

"I'm really excited to see Orlando Studios and to have fun in Florida," said Amanda Crist, whose previous eastern-most trip was to St. Louis. "It's going to be more than just volleyball and I'm glad we have a couple extra days scheduled to do fun things."

Wood River Rallies Past Tribe

psheltra@magicvalley.com

BUHL • What the Buhl Tribe took five innings to build on Tuesday, took just one bad half-inning to crumble.

The Tribe withstood several opportunities by the Wood River Wranglers to add to an early lead, then rallied with a three-run fifth to take a one-run lead. But the Wranglers responded with a five-run sixth and eventually pulled out a 10-5 victory in the first game of a doubleheader. The second game had not concluded as this edition of the Times-News went to press.

"The top of the order was coming up and they've been doing an outstanding job all season of having great at-bats, getting us on base and moving guys around," Wood River coach Trent Seamons said. "We were able to stick with that approach and got some guys on and got some big hits."

The Wranglers (3-4) got a little help from a Buhl defense that couldn't execute a simple run-down and had two runs score on a throwing error that could have been a double play.

DUI Charge Dropped Against Slotten

BY ALISON GENE SMITH
alismsmith@magicvalley.com

TWIN FALLS • Drunken driving charges against former Canyon Ridge High School football coach David Slotten have been dropped by prosecutors.

According to court records, the DUI charge was dropped on June 11.

On June 8 the Twin Falls County 5th District Magistrate Judge Thomas Kershaw granted a motion by the defense to suppress evidence.

Slotten's attorney R. Keith Roark argued police video from the stop should not be used because the stop was unreasonable.

Kimberly Police Patrol Officer Jason Vanleeuwen said he stopped Slotten because his front, passenger side headlight was out. When he got closer, Vanleeuwen testified at the hearing, he noticed the headlight worked, but was just a dim glow. Still, he said the light could not illuminate something 100 feet away as required by law.

Kershaw said it was unclear from the law whether the two lights together or each one separately needed to reach 100 feet.

Kershaw said he didn't blame the officer for the stop and said throwing out the evidence didn't mean a law was not broken.

Road to BCS Changes Filled with Bumps

ASSOCIATED PRESS

The guys in charge of changing the BCS are headed back to Chicago, hoping to make more progress at a meeting Wednesday than they did the last time they were there.

Last week's gathering of conference commissioners did little to advance the goal of reformatting the way college football crowns a champion.

It did produce reports of a standoff, with the Southeastern Conference and the Big 12 on one side and the Big Ten and Pac-12 on the other. Fans started to worry the four-team playoff which once seemed inevitable after April meetings in Florida had fallen into jeopardy.

Talk of a "plus-one" format, which would not create national semifinals but instead pick the championship game participants after the major bowls are played, had seemingly crept back into the conversation.

But football fans can relax. There is no reason to panic.

Chances are still very good. SCS Commissioner Mike Slive, Big Ten Commissioner Jim Delany, Pac-12 Commissioner Larry Scott and their fellow conference leaders get this thing worked out.

"There will be something for everybody," BCS Executive Director Bill Hancock said after the last get-together in Chicago, "but there won't be everything for anybody."

And deadlines might not be so firm.

In a perfect world, Wednesday's meeting would produce a fairly detailed plan to be presented to the BCS Presidential Oversight Committee when it meets on June 26 in Washington.

In that perfect world, the presidents would sign off on a plan that day and everyone could head for summer vacation knowing that at least the where and the when of the new format. That would set the table for television negotiations in the fall.

Nothing about the Bowl Championship Series has ever been perfect, of course, so don't be surprised if the

Heat One Win from Title

MIAMI • LeBron James better get well fast. He's about to play for a championship.

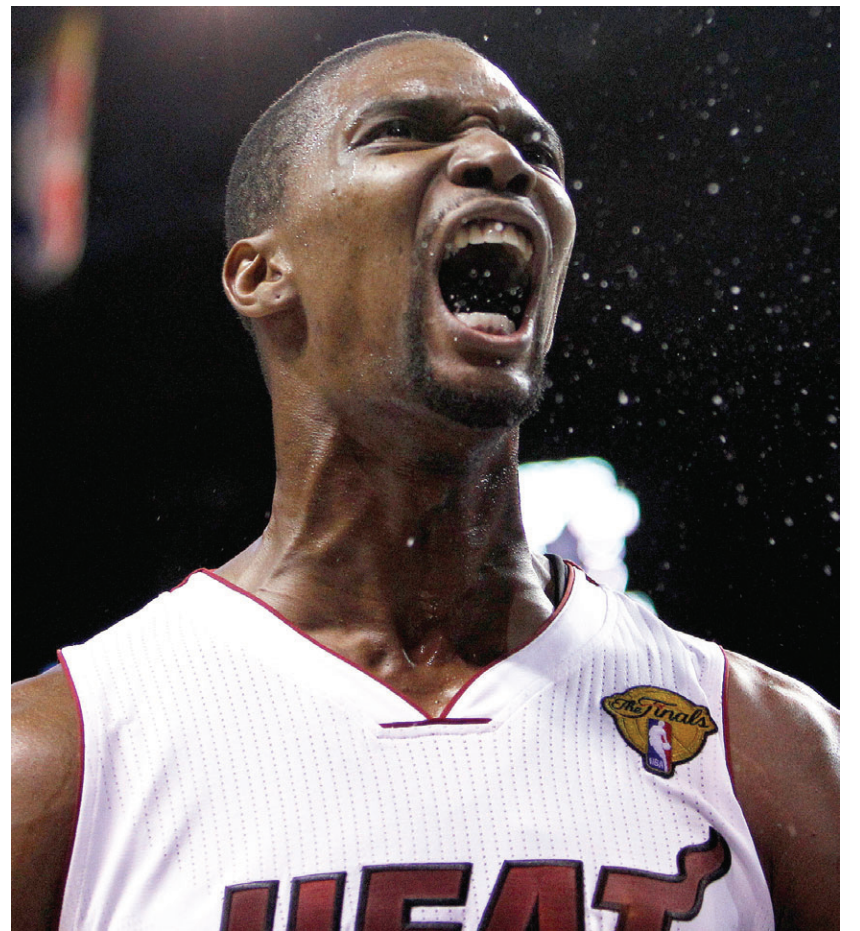

Hardly able to move, James returned from a left leg injury to make the tiebreaking 3-pointer with 2:54 remaining and the Miami Heat held off Russell Westbrook and the Oklahoma City Thunder for a 104-98 victory on Tuesday night and a 3-1 lead in the NBA Finals.

With James watching the final moments, Mario Chalmers finished off a stellar 25-point effort that matched Dwyane Wade. James had 26 points, 12 assists and nine rebounds, only missing a triple-double because he was on the bench at the end after hurting his leg with a fall to the court.

Game 5 is Thursday night and James will have a chance to finish a championship chase that started in Cleveland before he famously - or infamously - left for South Florida. No team has blown a 3-1 lead in the finals.

Westbrook scored 43 points for the Thunder, who wasted an early 17-point lead but were never out of the game because of their sensational point guard. Kevin Durant had 28 points but James Harden threw in another clunker, finishing with eight points on 2-of-10 shooting. Westbrook and Durant were the only Thunder players to score in the last 16:46.

James stumbled to the court on a drive midway through the fourth quarter, staying on the offensive end of the floor as the Heat regained possession on a blocked shot, and he made a short jumper that made it 92-90. After Westbrook missed a jumper, the Heat called timeout as James gingerly went to the court. Unable to walk off, he was carried to the sideline by a pair of teammates.

Miami Heat power forward Chris Bosh reacts after diving for a loose ball against the Oklahoma City Thunder during the first half at Game 4 of the NBA Finals basketball series on Tuesday in Miami.

He returned to a huge roar with a little over 4 minutes left, and after Chris Bosh tied it, James slowly walked into a pull-up 3-point attempt — perhaps doing so knowing he couldn't drive by anyone.

That made it 97-94, and when Wade followed with a layup with 2:19 left, the Heat finally enough room to withstand Westbrook, who kept coming all night.

"Whatever it takes. No excuses," Wade said. "You don't want to leave this arena saying you missed opportunities."

Intriguing Open, Major Mystery for Woods

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SAN FRANCISCO • He was sure Tiger Woods was going to win the U.S. Open.

All it took was one glimpse of The Olympic Club for this longtime observer of golf — especially when it comes to Woods — to reach this conclusion. The tight turns in the canted fairways, putting a premium on accuracy instead of sheer length. The thick, mangled rough around so many collars of the firm, small greens.

He figured if Woods played anywhere near the level when he won the Memorial two weeks earlier, the tournament was over.

And if Woods was anywhere near the lead after the first couple of rounds at Olympic, forget it.

This was two days before the tournament.

Considering the source and his keen insight over the years, it was enough to get one's attention. It also raised a question. What if Woods played well and didn't win?

This was met with a long stare, but no answer.

A week later, it remains a mystery.

Woods loves the toughest tests, and nothing stacks up to a U.S. Open unless nasty weather is involved. And yet he closed with rounds of 75-73 at Olympic, one shy of his worst weekend at a U.S. Open.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

It was all downhill for Tiger Woods at the U.S. Open as he went from contender to also-ran over the final two rounds.

Woods had a 73-76 at Shinnecock Hills in 2004, although there were some notable differences.

Only 12 of the 72 players who made the cut at Olympic had a higher score than Woods on the weekend.

Shinnecock was brutal enough to produce 31 rounds in the 80s on the weekend, including 28 on the final day. No one who made the cut at Olympic shot in the 80s, and more than one major champion suggested that Saturday was the easiest the course played all week.

And the biggest difference? Woods was not tied for the lead going into the weekend at Shinnecock.

So what happened?

How did he go from near the lead to a share of the lead to a tie for 21st?

Woods attributed his 75 in the third round to being fooled by the speed of the greens, to being "just a touch off" at a major that exaggerates mistakes and to being caught between clubs on so many of his shots into the greens.

Everyone faced the same greens. Everyone gets a yardage that makes him choose between taking something off and hitting it hard.

"I made a living hitting half clubs," two-time U.S. Open champion Curtis Strange said while analyzing the round on ESPN.

Five shots behind going into the final round, Woods said he simply didn't play well on the opening six holes. Hard to dispute that. He played them in 6-over par, and when he finally made his first birdie, he already was 11 shots out of the lead.

Halfway through the season, this is shaping up a lot like 2009. That was the year Woods won his tuneup event for every major — Bay Hill, Memorial, AT&T National and Bridgestone Invitational — without winning a major.

Slotten

"There is the DUI law that may have been broken," Kershaw said at the hearing. "The question is, does he get to skate out of it? That always goes against the grain of the court?"

In this case, Kershaw said, the law required that the evidence be suppressed. Without the evidence, Twin Falls City Prosecutor Fritz Wonderlich said he could not prove the case and made a motion to dismiss it.

Court records show Slotten, 46, was stopped in Filer along U.S. Highway 30 at 9:41 p.m. on March 20 for a malfunctioning headlight.

Slotten resigned as coach on March 22.

According to court records, Slotten now faces a driving without privileges charge stemming from an April 16 incident. For that case he faces an Aug. 15 jury trial.

A call to Slotten was not immediately returned Tuesday evening.

RBI double to tie the game at 5-5. Nick Bruner walked to load the bases before Fin Isaacson hit a grounder to Buhl shortstop Kaleb Whitlock. But his throw home sailed over the head of catcher Andrew Peterson, allowing two runs to score.

"Lot of walks and you put a defense on and can't play catch," Buhl coach Brady Swallow said. "Just the little things with this young group of kids."

Wood River left the bases loaded in the first and fourth innings, scoring just a single run in those two innings. It scored three in the second, helped by an RBI double by Hafer and an RBI single by Bruner. Buhl relief pitcher Joel Hamilton also balked home a run.

"The guys at the top of the lineup have the most experience so far," Hafer said. "We're a young team and with us at the top, it gets us runners on base and in scoring position. Once we get to the middle of the lineup, they start driving them in."

Buhl scratched together single runs in the second and third innings before busting through for three in the third. Andrew Peterson led off with a triple and scored on Hamilton's RBI single. Zach White singled and Hunter Crown cracked a two-run single to left to give the Tribe its short-lived lead.

COWBOYS SWEEP IN VEGAS

LAS VEGAS • The pitching was there for the Twin Falls Cowboys on Tuesday for the opening day of the American Legion baseball Stoker Tournament.

Unfortunately, their bats got lost somewhere on U.S. 93.

The Cowboys managed just two runs and nine hits in two games, both losses, 4-2 to Western Colorado in the first game and 2-0 to the Vermont Cannons in the second game.

It took just one batter to send CSI to a loss in the opener when pitcher Michael Garcia gave up a three-run home run to Western Colorado's lead-off hitter in the bottom of the third. That blast followed a single and a walk to the bottom of the order.

Otherwise, Garcia pitched well, striking out four and walking two while giving up four hits in six innings.

Zayne Slotten (third inning) and Marcus Donaldson (sixth) had run-scoring singles for the Cowboys' runs.

Slotten struck out nine, but walked five and gave up four hits against Vermont. Yet both runs he surrendered were unearned. Meanwhile, Twin mustered just two hits — both by Lee Johnson — and never advanced a runner to second base.

MLB ROUNDUP

Chicago Cubs' Tony Campana (1) reacts after shortstop Starlin Castro made an over-the-shoulder catch of a shallow fly ball by Chicago White Sox's Alejandro De Aza during the fifth inning of an interleague baseball game Tuesday in Chicago.

Jones Atones, Snaps Yankees' Win Streak

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK • Chipper Jones atoned for a costly error by cutting down the potential tying run at the plate and the Atlanta Braves held on to end the Yankees' 10-game winning streak, beating New York 4-3 Tuesday night.

The Yankees were trying to match their longest winning string in nearly a half-century. Instead, the Braves threw out two runners at home and won for only the second time in nine games.

Jason Heyward singled home the go-ahead run in the sixth inning off Hiroki Kuroda (6-7). Heyward also tripled and scored, and nailed Mark Teixeira at home with a strong throw from Teixeira.

Rookie Andrelton Simmons drove in two runs and Jones delivered an RBI double for the slumping Braves.

Tim Hudson (5-3) labored through five innings and four relievers preserved the lead. Craig Kimbrel closed for his NL-leading 20th save.

TIGERS 6, CARDINALS 3 DETROIT • Justin Verlander allowed one earned run in seven innings, leading the Tigers to a victory over the Cardinals.

Verlander (7-4) retired 12 of the first 13 hitters he faced and worked out of a seventh-inning jam to help Detroit hold on. He struck out Allen Craig with the bases loaded with his final pitch. Verlander allowed five hits and walked four, striking out only three.

RED SOX 7, MARLINS 5 BOSTON • David Ortiz hit his 17th homer and Clay Buchholz won his fourth straight start as Boston won for the fifth time in six games.

METS 5, ORIOLES 0 Johan Santana pitched six sharp innings, Lucas Duda hit a two-run homer, and the New York Mets beat Baltimore for their second straight shutout of the Orioles.

Santana followed R.A. Dickey's second one-hitter in a row with his best outing since he tossed a no-hitter on June 1. Jordany Valdespin added a two-run single for New York, which won by the same score Monday night in the series opener.

PIRATES 7, TWINS 2 PITTSBURGH • Andrew McCutchen had three hits, including his 12th homer of the season, and Kevin Correia ended a lengthy winless streak commissioners leave Chicago with things unsettled. And remember, the commissioners have said that deciding how the teams are picked is not even a priority right now.

After bolting a bit early from last week's meeting, Scott told reporters the commissioners would present the presidents with "options - plural." That comment set off a small firestorm and concerns that Nebraska Chancellor Harvey Perlman, Florida President Bernie Machen and the 10 other university leaders on the oversight committee would be left to hammer out details.

That's not happening. More likely is the commissioners will hand over a recommended plan, plus the other option - or two - that was given serious consideration.

The presidents are the bosses, and the commissioners want to show proper deference.

"Ultimately, our presidents decide," Scott also said.

All signs point toward the major bowls being involved in some way as the setting for national semifinals and the championship game to be bid out like the Super Bowl.

One option is to use a rotation, which would set the semifinal sites in advance. Another would essentially tie conferences to their traditional bowls, so the top-seeded teams would "host" games at the bowl sites where their leagues usually send teams. For example, a Pac-12 or Big Ten could host a semifinal game in the Rose Bowl. SEC teams could host games in the Sugar Bowl.

The "anchor" bowl format has the benefit of providing some regionalism to the semifinal matchups. There is concern among the commissioners that a semifinal pitting, say, Oregon and Texas played in Miami, home of the Orange Bowl, could lead to a less-than-full stadium. Especially with fans of each team hoping it advances to another neutral site to play for the national title a week later.

France Advances, But with Help From Brits

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KIEV, Ukraine • France was given a rude wake-up call by Sweden on Tuesday as it was beaten 2-0 in their final group game and had to rely on England to reach the quarterfinals of the European Championship.

Zlatan Ibrahimovic scored one of the best goals of the tournament with an acrobatic volley in the 54th minute and Sebastian Larsson added an injury-time goal to give already eliminated Sweden its first points of the tournament.

"We really wanted to win this game for the fans, their support has been fantastic," Ibrahimovic said. "We wanted to finish this strongly for them."

France, meanwhile, limps into the knockout round with big problems to solve in both defense and attack. Sweden exposed the frailties of its back four and was able to neutralize the dual threat of Karim Benzema and Franck Ribery.

The margin of victory could have been bigger as France was outplayed for much of the game despite only needing a draw to guarantee a spot in the next round and facing a team with nothing to play for but pride.

The loss ended France's 23-game unbeaten streak but it still finished second in Group D after England beat Ukraine 1-0 in Donetsk. France will face Spain in the quarterfinals but will need a much better performance to give the defending champions much of a challenge.

ENGLAND 1, UKRAINE 0
DONETSK, Ukraine • Wayne Rooney returned from suspension and scored on a header in the 48th minute and give England a spot in the European Championship quarterfinals.

England won Group D and will next face Italy in Kiev on Sunday.

Ukraine appeared to have evened the score in the 62nd minute when Marko Devic's looping shot crossed the line before it was hooked clear by John Terry. But the goal was missed by the referee and his extra assistant behind the goal.

The disputed play will likely add to the pressure on UEFA President Michel Platini to reverse his opposition to goal-line technology. "I was sad because the ball was in the goal by one meter," Ukraine coach Oleg Blokhin said.

Gatlin Anxious for Return to Olympic Trials

ASSOCIATED PRESS

The last time Justin Gatlin took the stage at the Olympic trials, he was a kid on the brink of becoming the next big sprinter in track.

Those days seem long ago.

So much has transpired for Gatlin since the '04 trials, when he finished second to Maurice Greene and knocked off a college star named Tyson Gay to make the U.S. squad.

A month later, Gatlin captured the 100-meter crown in Athens. A year later, he was a world champion.

Then came his swift fall from grace.

Gatlin tested positive for excessive testosterone in 2006, leading to a four-year ban and preventing him from defending his title in Beijing.

Now 30 and late in his career, Gatlin returns to the trials this weekend with almost a detached demeanor.

There's simply no time for a stroll down memory lane, only time to speed down his lane.

His biggest threats will be Olympic bronze medalist Walter Dix along with a familiar face in Gay, now a seasoned veteran with a surgically repaired hip. Up for grabs will be three spots for London.

For Gatlin, there's more at stake. This is another chance to restore his tarnished career.

"I owe my friends and my family a great show. I owe them a great comeback," Gatlin said in a phone interview. "I owe it to show the world that I am a God-given talent, and I will compete until I can't compete no more."

"I owe them a heartfelt show. Not just some entertainment, where I'm dancing around, but something that people want to watch, that's almost Rocky-esque. Something you want to root for and watch and down the road you can say, 'I saw that.'"

Last season was a warm-up act for Gatlin, his first full year on the circuit since being reinstated from his ban on July 24, 2010. He kept a rather low profile, preferring to blend in rather than stand out. He didn't want to make any waves.

But this season is a different story, especially with London so close.

It's show time. This just might also be his last - or at least best - shot at making the Olympics.

Gatlin's confident he will, too, as long as he keeps his emotions in check.

"I'm trying not to make it bigger than what it needs to be," Gatlin said. "It's definitely the kind of sport where you have to stay on top of your game or the game leaves you behind."

"I just want to do it there and run as good as I can."

Today is Wednesday, June 20, the 172nd day of 2012. There are 194 days left in the year. Summer arrives at 7:09 p.m. Eastern time.
Today's Highlight:
 On June 20, 1782, Congress approved the Great Seal of the United States, featuring the emblem of the bald eagle.

TODAY IN HISTORY

On this date:

In 1791, King Louis XVI of France and his family attempted to flee the country in the so-called "Flight to Varennes," but were caught.

In 1837, Queen Victoria acceded to the British throne following the death of her uncle, King William IV.

In 1863, West Virginia became the 35th state.

In 1893, a jury in New Bedford, Mass., found Lizzie Borden not guilty of the ax murders of her father and stepmother.

In 1921, U.S. Rep. Alice Mary Robertson, R-Okla., became the first woman to preside over a session of the House of Representatives.

In 1947, Benjamin "Bugsy" Siegel was shot dead at the Beverly Hills, Calif., mansion of his girlfriend, Virginia Hill, apparently at the order of mob associates.

In 1948, the variety series "Toast of the Town," hosted by Ed Sullivan, debuted on CBS television.

In 1963, the United States and Soviet Union signed an agreement to set up a "hot-line" between the two superpowers.

In 1967, boxer Muhammad Ali was convicted in Houston of violating Selective Service laws by refusing to be drafted. (Ali's conviction was ultimately overturned by the Supreme Court).

In 1972, three days after the arrest of the Watergate burglars, President Richard Nixon met at the White House with his chief of staff, H.R. Haldeman; the secretly made tape recording of this meeting ended up with the notorious 18½-minute gap.

In 1979, ABC News correspondent Bill Stewart was shot to death in Managua, Nicaragua, by a member of President Anastasio Somoza's national guard.

In 1982, President Ronald Reagan proclaimed National Bald Eagle Day.

Ten years ago: The U.S. Supreme Court ruled, 6-3, in Atkins v. Virginia that executing mentally disabled murderers was unconstitutionally cruel.

Five years ago: For the second time, President George W. Bush vetoed an embryonic stem cell bill as he urged scientists toward what he termed "ethically responsible" research. Sammy Sosa, playing for the Texas Rangers after a year out of baseball, hit his 600th home run, making him the fifth player to reach the milestone. (The round-tripper came in the fifth inning of Texas' 7-3 victory over Sosa's former team, the Chicago Cubs.)

One year ago: Syrian President Bashar Assad promised a national dialogue to consider political reforms, but his vague overtures to a pro-democracy uprising fell flat as protesters took to the streets shouting "Liar!" and demanding his ouster. "Jackass" star Ryan Dunn was killed in a fiery car crash near Philadelphia; he was 34.

Notice of DecisionForest Plan Amendment for the Wildlife Conservation Strategy;*Phase 1: Forested Biological Community*U.S. Forest Service - Sawtooth National Forest*Cassia, Blaine, Boise, Camas, Custer, Elmore, Oneida and Power Counties, Idaho and Box Elder County, Utah

As the deciding officer, Forest Supervisor Rebecca S. Nourse, signed a Decision Notice and Finding of No Significant Impact (FONSI) on June 18, 2012, approving the Phase 1: Forested Biological Community, Sawtooth National Forest Land and Resource Management Plan (Forest Plan) Amendment for the Wildlife Conservation Strategy (WCS). The selected alternative amends the 2003 Forest Plan by modifying, deleting, and adding management direction in response to new information and/or changed conditions concerning wildlife habitat through development of aWCS for forested biological communities. These changes in direction constitute a non-significant amendment to the Forest Plan. Copies of the Environmental Assessment and Decision Notice/FONSI are available at Sawtooth National Forest Supervisor's Office, 2647 Kimberly Road East, Twin Falls, ID 83301.

Decision Subject to Appeal

As allowed by Forest Service planning regulations at 36 CFR 219.17(b)(3), this decision is subject to the optional appeal procedures described in Appendix A to 36 CFR 219.35 of the prior planning regulation (36 CFR part 219, published at 36 CFR parts 200 to 299, revised as of July 1, 2010). Other than Forest Service employees, any person or any non-Federal organization or entity may challenge this decision and request a review by the Forest Service line officer at the next administrative level. The Reviewing Officer for this decision is the Regional Forester, Intermountain Region.

A written notice of appeal, including attachments, must be filed with the Appeal Reviewing Officer within 45 days beginning the day after the publication date of this notice in the Times-News, the newspaper of record. The publication date in the Times-News is the exclusive means for calculating the time to file an appeal. Those wishing to appeal this decision should not rely upon dates or timeframe information provided by any other source.

Appeals must be sent to: Appeal Reviewing Officer; USDA - Forest Service; 324 25th Street; Ogden, UT 84401. The Notice of Appeal may alternatively be faxed to: USDA, Forest Service, (801) 625-5277, ATTN: Appeal Reviewing Officer; mailed electronically in a format of pdf, txt, rtf, or document compatible with Microsoft Office applications to: appeals-intermtn-regional-office@fs.fed.us; or hand delivered between the hours of between 8:00 am and 4:30pm, Monday through Friday except legal holidays at Federal Building, 324 25th Street, Ogden, UT 84401. The notice of appeal must have an identifiable name attached, or verification of identity will be required. A scanned signature is one way to provide verification.

A copy of the appeal must simultaneously be sent to the deciding officer: Forest Supervisor, Sawtooth National Forest; USDA - Forest Service; 2647 Kimberly Road East, Twin Falls, ID 83301. Any notice of appeal must be fully consistent with the optional appeal procedures. At a minimum, a written notice of appeal filed with the reviewing officer must:

1. State that the document is a notice of appeal filed pursuant to 36 CFR 219.17(b)(3);
2. List the name, address, and telephone number of the appellant;
3. Identify the decision about which the requestor objects;
4. Identify the document in which the decision is contained by title and subject, date of the decision, and name and title of the deciding officer;
5. Identify specifically that portion of the decision or decision document to which the requestor objects;
6. State the reasons for objecting, including issues of fact, law, regulation, or policy, and, if applicable, specifically how the decision violates law, regulation, or policy; and
7. Identify the specific change(s) in the decision that the appellant seeks.

Implementation of Decision

Implementation of this decision may occur on the 8th calendar day after publication of this Legal Notice of the Decision Notice and Finding of No-Significant of this notice in the Times-News newspaper.

NOTICESLEGAL NOTICE OF DECISION*USDA Forest Service - Sawtooth National Forest*Sawtooth National Recreation Area - Custer County*MTE Communications, Inc. Stanley Fiber Optic Project*Notice of Decision

As the Responsible Official, Sawtooth National Recreation Area Ranger, Joby Timm, signed a 'Decision Memo' on May 17, 2012 approving a MTE Communications proposal to install fiber optic telephone cable servicing customers near Stanley, Idaho. The Forest Service has considerable experience with these types of projects. Mr. Timm made this decision after reviewing environmental analysis of the proposed action and consulting with other oversight agencies. The proposed action is addressed by a categorical exclusion from further analysis in an Environmental Assessment. More detailed information about this project may be obtained from Dave Fluetsch at the Sawtooth NRA headquarters office: (208) 727-5000.

Decision Not Subject to Appeal

The 30-day comment period for this project ended on May 12, 2012. Since no comments were received, this decision is not subject to appeal (36 CFR 215.12(e)). Implementation may begin immediately.

DEAR ABBY: I married "Linda" 22 years ago. Three years later, the marriage was over. After our divorce, I came out as gay. I met a wonderful man in 1996, and we were married in Iowa in 2009.

DEAR ABBY Jeanne Phillips

Over the years, I have wondered how Linda was getting along. I'd like to get back in touch with her. At one time we lived only a few miles from her. I drove by her home, but lost my nerve when I saw her father standing outside. Family members discouraged me from attempting to contact her after our split. I heard a few weeks ago that Linda has remarried, although I'm not sure how long ago.

Obviously, I have no desire to rekindle a romance. I'm happily married and assume she is, too. I would like to talk with her, but I don't know if it would be a mistake. I have considered contacting her via a third party. What do you think?

— LINDA'S EX IN COUNCIL BLUFFS

DEAR EX: Before reaching out you need to ask yourself what you would gain by making contact, and equally important, what Linda would gain. If she blamed herself for the failure of the marriage, contact with you might be reassuring. If you realized your true sexual orientation only after the divorce, then telling her might relieve any guilt you have about it. But only you — not I — can make, this decision.

DEAR ABBY: I am writing to protest something that has made shopping increasingly frustrating. I'm referring to rude people who cut in ahead of customers who have been standing in line when the clerk calls out, "Next, please."

I place the responsibility solely on store management to ensure that lines move smoothly and fairly. Stores that have such arrangements are more likely to get my business. Management must empower clerks to insist on fairness in this regard. I have seen too many weak salespeople accept whoever rushes forward first.

I'm sure that many other readers have experienced the same frustration I have. If you print this, I promise I will copy it and send it to the store management where I've had these experiences. Abby, this would be a great service to shoppers and would make shopping much more pleasant for everyone.

— AVERAGE SHOPPER, OAKLAND, CALIF.

DEAR AVERAGE SHOPPER: Unfortunately, most cashiers are usually so preoccupied with ringing up or scanning and bagging the purchases that they can't concern themselves with the occasional line-jumper. Therefore, it's up to YOU to assert yourself by saying firmly, "Excuse me, but I was next in line" when someone steps in front of you.

DEAR ABBY: My husband is undergoing a yearlong cancer treatment. Recently, his brother told him he had two friends who have died of the same cancer that he has. My husband, who is already depressed from the medication he's on, became even more depressed.

One day, we ran into another friend of ours, who shared in great detail her nephew's long and traumatic battle with cancer. When she left we felt shattered.

Abby, please remind people to be sensitive to those who are dealing with an illness and to refrain from sharing horror stories. We need hope and encouragement.

— DISGUSTED IN PHOENIX

DEAR DISGUSTED: I'm glad to help you spread your commonsense message. All it takes is a moment to THINK before you speak.

IF JUNE 20 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY: Cast off worries and take dynamic action to launch key plans in the next four to five weeks. You may be blessed by a reprieve from the same old grind in the second half of July when you receive the opportunity for travel, to take up a new study or to meet benevolent and charitable partners. Set no major plans into motion in September when your appetite for social climbing and financial success meets a roadblock. You have the vision of your fantasies to support you in December, but perhaps lack the salient facts for positive, beneficial choices. Next March and April, you will be able to break away from outworn habits and make your ambitions come true.

HOROSCOPE

Jeraldine Saunders

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Come on baby, light my fire. Don't lose out on any opportunity to enjoy the summer solstice's long day with someone you find attractive. At the same time, don't turn your back on a devoted romantic partner.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): When you dip your toe into the pool of possibilities, don't be surprised if you get wet. The unexpected is not really as unexpected as it seems. Things have obviously been building up in the background.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): If you leave the closet open, someone might get a glimpse of your skeletons. In an effort to be congenial, you might reveal too much. You strive to leave a favorable impression on someone, but it boomerangs.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): This year's summer solstice is a time to celebrate long days and short nights. Get out in the sunshine with people who have your best interests at heart. This may be a good day to explore a long bike path.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Confidence counts. You can improve your mood by remaining positive in the face of the unpredictable. If you have been going full throttle, it will be difficult to unwind and relax. Meditation offers solace.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Tricky thinking can be troublesome. If you plot and plan too much, you might end up in a tizzy when things turn on you. It might do more good to speak only the truth; avoid misdirection.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Old habits die hard. You might see folks return to their same old ways against your better judgment. Groups that gather for a common purpose might provide the best place to exercise your social finesse.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Rock, paper, scissors is a good way to decide small matters, but not the way to deal with the major ones. By making crucial changes on the spur of the moment, you could end up losing more than a game.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You can be a prisoner of the past or a pioneer of the future. As you enjoy the summer's longest day, consider ways to snuff out the fear of failure or the unknown. Rely on your friends for support.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): If you can manage others, you should be able to manage your love life. The best managers have a fundamental understanding of workplace, company and team dynamics. Apply this to all relationships.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): It's not the problems you face that define you, but how you handle them. As today's summer solstice wraps up, set your confidence level on high. You can easily handle any sudden about face.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Enjoy similarities, but respect differences. Romantic ardor could be an unpredictable animal under these stars. Some people seem like long-lost buddies, even though you just met them yesterday.

Sudoku is a number-placing puzzle based on a 9x9 grid with several given numbers. The object is to place the numbers 1 to 9 in the empty squares so that each row, each column and each 3x3 box contains the same number only once. The difficulty level of the Conceptis Sudoku increases from Monday to Sunday.

To whom it may concern...
Called Jason and ask about the Nissan Murano convertible, came down to look at it and ended up buying. Both Jason and JJ worked very hard to get the best deal. We will recommend anyone to come here and visit Jason and JJ, thanks for the great service...
