Up, Up and Away

Radio-control airplanes allow everyone to become a stunt pilot.

HAZELTON • Berry Spaulding piloted his AeroWorks Extra 300 airplane straight up into the blue sky with white smoke billowing behind.

Suddenly it stopped, hovered in place for several seconds, and then climbed even higher before leveling out.

Spaulding wasn't in the cockpit. The Burley resident maneuvered the red and white craft via radio controls, coaxing every spin and turn from it that a regular plane can perform — and more.

With a wingspan of 106 inches, the AeroWorks 300 is 35 percent as big as a full-sized plane. It was among several models that roared across the sky adjacent to the Hazelton airport Saturday during an exhibition sponsored by the Snake River Flyers as part of Hazelton Days.

Dennis Johnson of Hazelton, wearing a "Top Gun" baseball cap, stood a few yards away watching Spaulding at play. He was

Video Shows Success of Idaho Wildlife Underpass

To reduce collisions between wildlife and vehicles, officials created a passage under Idaho 21 — Idaho's first wildlife underpass.

BOISE • An average of 2,600 vehicles travel to and from the Boise area on Idaho 21 each day.

An estimated 90 percent of a herd of 5,000 to 8,000 mule deer and a herd of 300 to 1,800 elk cross the highway each fall, when they come down from the mountains to the Boise Front and the Lucky Peak area.

Some deer dart across the highway, dodging traffic. Others linger on and near the road.

Ed Bottum, a wildlife habitat biologist who has worked for Idaho Fish and Game for 25 years, recalled seeing a huge amount of blood on the highway after a crash a couple of years ago. It was the result of a motorcycle colliding with a deer — the pregnant doe was split in half. The motorcyclist spent the night at a Boise hospital but didn't suffer any life-threatening injuries.

"I found little pieces of that motorcycle 100 feet away," said Bottum, who urges motorists to slow down and drive cautiously when the deer are migrating, generally October through April.

To reduce such collisions, Fish and Game biologists worked with Idaho Transportation Department officials to create a safe passage under the

COURT INTERPRETERS

Erica De La Rosa, an interpreter for Twin Falls County, uses a Talk & Listen Kit to communicate while she translates in a Twin Falls courtroom Thursday morning.

Translators Hold Critical Role in Court

BY ALISON GENE SMITH
alismith@magicvalley.com

TWIN FALLS • Erica De La Rosa is in court nearly every day, but she never speaks for herself.

"We're not supposed to exist," she said. De La Rosa is a court certified Spanish interpreter for Twin Falls County 5th District Court. Interpreters are not lawyers or advocates and don't give legal advice or even explain to defendants possible outcomes in their case.

"You say what they say," she said, no matter how shocking or strange it might be.

Idaho law requires that courts ensure access to all people, including those with limited English proficiency or those who are deaf or hard-of-hearing. The courts meet these requirements by developing programs that improve the quality of interpretation and increase the number of qualified interpreters in the courts, according to the Idaho Supreme Court website.

Interpreters are under oath to completely and accurately translate what is said in court to the best of their ability, said Mary Jo Palma, the coordinator for translators in Twin Falls County, and a certified Spanish interpreter.

By the Numbers

2010: 910 hearings in Spanish, 156 in languages other than English or Spanish
2011: 879 hearings in Spanish, 231 in languages other than English or Spanish

"If an interpreter becomes aware they've made a mistake they're under obligation to correct it," Palma said. "If an interpreter is challenged, the judge will rule accordingly."

One case where an interpreter was questioned is currently making its way through court in Twin Falls County.

Valentin Calvillo was sentenced to serve 15 to 30 years in state prison in November 2011 after being convicted by a jury of eight counts of lewd conduct and sexual abuse of a minor in November 2010. His sentence was delayed for a year because Calvillo, 50, skipped his trial after showing up for the first few days.

When he returned, Calvillo petitioned for a new trial, arguing he misunderstood instructions from his defense counsel when he was told to leave and seek medical treatment. With waiting to send his own plane aloft. "I always wanted to go into the Air Force and fly, but my dad needed me on the farm," the lifelong Idaho resident said. Johnson admits fantasizing about flying with the U.S. Air Force's precision Thunderbirds, saying, "I fly with them every night in my dreams."

After 35 years of radio-control flying experience, Johnson has learned a basic truth about the sport.

"It's always nice to go home with your airplane in one piece," he said.

There were no mishaps Saturday, although club president Mike Verzwyvelt said crashes are inevitable during the learning stage.

"You get proficient repairing them when you start," said Pete Delis of Burley, another pilot.

Verzwyvelt laughed and nodded. "Gravity is king," he acknowledged. Rick Tidmarsh traveled from Caldwell with his plane to take part in the weekend's festivities. He credits the hobby's stress-relieving aspects for helping him quit drinking.

"I'll go out to the airstrip for an hour and everything falls away," said Tidmarsh, who's been sober for three years.

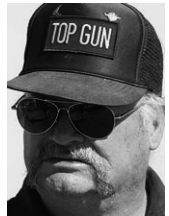

Curious onlookers arrived at the 50-by-500-foot asphalt landing strip throughout the morning and early afternoon.

Some brought lawn chairs and were content to watch the colorful planes make loops and rolls in the sky. Others got a chance to fly a training plane, with a "buddy system" of dual controls that allows an experienced pilot to intercede when a newcomer is headed for trouble.

There's not much that can go wrong, though. There are no trees or power lines anywhere close to the flying site, and an 800-foot grass runway is there for emergencies. Even a Times-News reporter held the joystick for a few minutes and avoided catastrophe.

The Snake River Flyers club has about two dozen members who each pay $100 per year for club dues and unlimited use of the landing strip. They are eager to help beginners, and encourage anyone who's curious to come out for a test flight.

Johnson's enthusiasm was typical. "Go ahead and try it, buddy," he told an onlooker. "You might get hooked."

IF YOU WANT TO FLY

Cost: Low-end training planes can be purchased for $100, but $300 to $400 will buy the best gear to get started.

Plane size: Some radio-control models are 42 percent the size of a real airplane and cost about $4,000.

Engine power: The AeroWorks Extra 300 has a 120-cc motor. Engines are more than 10-times as powerful as those a couple of decades ago, say members of the Snake River Flyers.

Fuel: Some run on nitro methane and oil at $30 per gallon while others use a less expensive gasoline and oil mixture.

a new attorney, Calvillo unsuccessfully argued for a new trial during the summer and fall of 2011.

Calvillo's attorney, Virginia Bond, was in court again two week ago asking Judge Richard Bevan for an independent translator to go over transcripts from the case and look for errors in translation.

During one hearing, Calvillo's family began gesturing to say there was a mistranslation about why Calvillo felt sick the day of the trial, Bond told the court.

Twin Falls County Chief Criminal Deputy Prosecutor Suzanne Craig said Calvillo claimed he didn't feel good about being in front of a jury, not that he was actually ill.

Since Bond wasn't the attorney during the hearing when the exchange occurred and doesn't understand Spanish herself, she wanted someone else to listen to the audio recording of the hearing to see if the transcript matches up.

Bevan agreed to take the request under advisement and a new court date was set for Aug. 2.

When a translation is questioned, it can be a bit embarrassing, De La Rosa said.

"You just say, 'excuse me your honor, the interpreter made a mistake,'" she said. "If it's a simple mistake it's not a big deal, but it's humbling."

Occasionally interpreters have to translate for someone in a language other than the one they know best. A person might speak a language that's difficult to find an interpreter for, with Spanish being their second language and English their third.

The judge speaks in English, the interpreter translates to Spanish and the defendant must translate in their head to their own language and then the process starts again.

"It's an art," De La Rosa said.

Small Plane Crashes in Idaho, 2 Hospitalized

CASCADE (AP) • Authorities say a small plane carrying four people has crashed and two of the occupants were taken to the hospital.

The Valley County Sheriff's Department says the crash occurred around 3:30 p.m. Saturday in the Bear Valley area of Valley County.

Lt. Dan Smith says in a news release that there was no word on the condition of the two people transported to the hospital.

He says the other two aboard were reported OK after the crash.

There was no immediate word on the cause of the crash, and the department dispatch office said early Saturday that it had no other details.

Pocatello Fire Victim: 'My Home Just Seemed to Vaporize'

DEVIN BODKIN
Idaho State Journal

POCATELLO • Twisted remains of a metal roof now lay where Suzanne Bielinski's home once stood off West Cinnamon Ridge.

Reduced to a pile of light gray powder, the home's frame was just one of 66 that disappeared into the air along with the smoke seen rising from the Charlotte Fire, which blackened 1,040 acres of brush and caused an estimated $7.2 million of damage in the southern foothills that overlook Pocatello.

"I'm still in shock from what happened," Bielinski said. "My home just seemed to vaporize."

Firefighters in eastern Idaho had the fire 80 percent contained Sunday but remained cautious with a forecast of high winds and hot temperatures that could put hundreds of homes at risk.

Local and state police pleaded with community members to stay off the Bannock Highway from Johnny Creek up to the top of Cahina.

Traffic on these streets had clogged lanes, making it hard for an ambulance carrying an injured person to pass through the area, police said.

The Twin Falls City Council meets at 5 p.m. today at City Council Chambers, 305 Third Avenue East.

ITD to Pause Construction over Holiday

TIMES-NEWS

TWIN FALLS • The Idaho Transportation Department will pause its highway construction projects that could affect travel for the July 4 holiday, according to a release from the department.

ITD will suspend projects statewide from Tuesday through Thursday, except in special circumstances.

Exceptions — which the department calls "extremely rare" — include:

- If crews are not working on a roadway open to the public.
- If the road is already closed and all traffic is using a designated detour.
- In an emergency situation (like flooding) where the roadway has been damaged and requires repair.
- On roads with very low traffic volumes.

"Like most of us, contractors have little interest in working over the holiday," ITD Chief Engineer Tom Cole said in the release. "Most would probably take these days off anyway, even if it was not required."

In the release, ITD also asks drivers not to drink and drive, to buckle up and to follow posted speed limits. For travel conditions, call 511 or visit 511.idaho.gov.

'Vicious' Wildfire Still a Threat in E. Idaho

BY KEITH RIDLER
Associated Press

BOISE • To city and county planners in eastern Idaho, it's called the wildland urban interface. To the people who live in the idyllic setting where Pocatello and the forest meet, it's called home.

On Thursday, pilots of wildfire retardant bombers called it the target zone as they fought a blaze that eventually destroyed 66 houses.

"The retardant bombers saved our house," said 59-year-old Doug Hofeldt, who with his wife was evacuated ahead of the Charlotte fire first to a church and then farther away to a local high school where they watched the bombers making runs.

"You could hear tires exploding on cars and propane tanks going up," he said. "It was like a war zone. The (retardant bombers) put down a strip of retardant, one strip after another. I've never seen a fire move that fast in my life. It was absolutely vicious."

In some areas the red retardant strips had on one side a blackened landscape and charred homes, and on the other side homes still standing and undamaged amid the tinder-dry vegetation. Some homes even had a coating of red.

"They dumped directly on people's houses and in many cases it saved their house from being destroyed," said Pocatello Police Lt. Paul Manning, who said his own house was saved by a big water truck.

"That was my challenge on Thursday," he said. "I was trying to run the traffic command and evacuate my house at the same time."

The 1,038-acre, human-caused fire started near the intersection of Mink Creek Road and Charlotte Drive on a windy day about five miles south of the city. It quickly spread north through grass, sagebrush and juniper trees, destroying the 66 homes, as well as 29 other structures.

Many of the buildings destroyed were in the Mink Creek area, but some survived, including Hofeldt's home. Damage has been estimated at $8 million.

Hofeldt and his wife were allowed back briefly Friday.

He had conflicting emotions when he found his house still standing.

"I guess relief that it was still there, but sadness because I know so many of my friends lost theirs," he said by phone on Sunday from a Pocatello hotel as the evacuation order remained in effect for his neighborhood. "They don't have a home to come back to."

The fire was 80 percent contained Sunday but firefighters remained cautious with a forecast of high winds and hot temperatures that could put hundreds more homes at risk.

Manning said 160 firefighters and some 40 pieces of firefighting equipment are mopping up and guarding against an escaped ember that could produce a repeat of Thursday. The fire is surrounded by paved roads or bulldozed fire lines, but a wind-whipped ember crossing a fire line could quickly cause problems in the highly populated area.

"The juniper trees just basically explode when the fire gets to them," Manning said.

He said four agencies and 17 investigators are working to figure out how the fire started. No details of the investigation have been released.

Meanwhile, he said, authorities have investigated 19 fireworks violation complaints in the last 24 hours in Bannock County.

"All fireworks complaints will be aggressively investigated with zero tolerance," he said.

highway — Idaho's first wildlife underpass.

With $800,000 in federal stimulus money, the underpass was completed in October 2010. ITD also installed an 8-foot-tall fence with galvanized steel posts and wire along the highway to help keep the deer off the road.

Fish and Game biologists have installed additional fencing on the eastern slopes above the highway to guide deer to the underpass, but more is needed to make the underpass work best. They need to raise about $140,000 to finish the last half of the roughly 1.5 miles of fencing.

The location — past the Mores Creek Bridge, or High Bridge, at milepost 18.2 — is a collision "hot spot" where a large number of deer have been hit through the years.

From 1979 to 2001, cars killed 159 deer in the area of the wildlife underpass — about seven per year.

The number killed in that area this migration season: zero.

The biologists say other factors, including migration numbers, also likely contributed to the drop in collisions this year.

Counting how many deer are hit by vehicles along Idaho 21 northeast of Boise each year is relatively easy.

The annual tally ranges from 50 to more than 200 for the 33-mile stretch of road from the highway's intersection with Warm Springs Avenue to Robie Creek.

But it's difficult to determine how many deer (and humans) have been saved from violent deaths since the underpass was installed.

There is ample evidence that deer and other animals are using the underpass. Cameras have captured deer, elk and other wildlife passing safely under the highway, often in groups.

"There's tracks all the time," Bottum said. "It works. We know it works."

"I'm confident saying there are hundreds of animals that use it."

Bottum and a fellow biologist had hoped to get a count of the animals from the still images, but that proved difficult because animals aren't one-way travelers. They go back and forth and meander.

ITD officials are pleased with the results, even if sav-

"It was really hard for me. I had to put a couple animals down that were hit."

Krista Muller, a senior wildlife technician

Deer are seen using the game underpass on Idaho 21 on April 30. An average of 2,600 vehicles travel to and from the Boise area on Idaho 21 each day. An estimated 90 percent of a herd of 5,000 to 8,000 mule deer and a herd of 300 to 1,800 elk cross the highway each fall.

ings in lives, injuries and damaged vehicles can't be quantified.

"We believe the crossing to be a great success to date and expect that when the rest of the wildlife fence is up, it will only increase its effectiveness," said Greg Vitely, ITD Southwest Idaho environmental planner.

He said it has generated enthusiasm for partnerships and other "vehicle/wildlife mitigation" elsewhere in Idaho.

The underpasses have been successfully used in Wyoming, Arizona, New Mexico, Colorado and Banff National Park in Alberta, Canada, Bottum said.

Fish and Game wildlife biologists spend two or three days each December assessing the migrating mule deer herd throughout the 36,000-acre Boise River Wildlife Management Area. They're looking for male-to-female ratios and fawn-to-doe ratios.

Those ratios provide an indication of the biological health of the deer herd, said Michelle Commons Kemner, a regional wildlife biologist for Fish and Game.

For every 100 females, there are about 60 to 80 fawns (the more the better, for a stable to increasing herd). The number of bucks varies; an ideal ratio is 25 bucks per 100 does, but 15 bucks per 100 is more typical.

This winter, the count found just about one-third of the deer typically found in the lower elevations of the Boise River area.

The mule deer that did migrate came in November, about a month later than usual. There's usually a four- or five-day period between Oct. 15 and Nov. 15 when they migrate in large numbers, usually in family groups of 12 to 20.

With mild winter conditions, many didn't migrate as close to Boise as in years past. The animals' survival strategy is to pack on as much fat as they can during summer and fall, and then try to conserve their energy resources.

If the snow is deep in the mountains and they can't forage for food, they migrate to lower elevations.

"They're not going to come down and stand near us if they don't have to," Bottum said.

Each year for at least the past decade, Fish and Game biologists have caught and put radio collars and ear tags on about 25 fawns and five to 10 does.

They're weighed, measured and checked for body fat.

"The fatter, the bigger the (fawn), the more likely the animal is going to survive," Kemner said.

Fish and Game biologists and ITD workers regularly pick up deer carcasses off the highway. A large pit behind their Idaho 21 office at milepost 15 is used for carcass disposal.

There are good years and bad years.

Krista Muller, a senior wildlife technician, said in winters past she has spent a good two hours a day retrieving carcasses from the road. She uses a winch to load them into a Fish and Game pickup.

"It was really hard for me. I had to put a couple animals down that were hit," she said.

A map on the wall of the Idaho 21 Fish and Game office shows how many deer and elk have been killed every tenth of a mile on Warm Springs and Idaho 21 in Boise out to Robie Creek for the past 33 years.

The numbers represent a minimum count, because sometimes carcasses are removed by animals or passing motorists. A law passed earlier this year makes it legal for people to pick up road kill along Idaho highways; those who do so are required to notify Fish and Game.

Wildlife biologists examine the dead animals to determine age, sex, species, disease, parasites and more.

For example, they can tell how many offspring a doe has produced. Examination of the animal's bone marrow indicates how healthy the animal was before it died.

"You can gather a lot of biological data from a carcass," Bottum said.

Idaho Near Bottom of List in Education Spending in 2009-10

BOISE (AP) • Idaho ranks second-worst in the nation for the amount of money it spends per pupil, the U.S. Census Bureau said.

Information from the 2009-2010 school year shows the state ranked only ahead of Utah. It's the second consecutive year the state ranked second worst.

"Funding is a factor in education but it's not the most important factor," Idaho State Department of Education spokeswoman Melissa McGrath told The Spokesman-Review.

"And it is not the factor that determines the quality of an education system."

The U.S. Department of Education's National Assessment of Educational Progress said Idaho eighth-graders scored above average in reading, math and science in 2011.

"In Idaho, our state spends less per student compared to most other states, but our students continually outperform students across the United States in reading, math and in science," McGrath said. "It's clear that Idaho is doing well spending its resources effectively and efficiently to benefit Idaho students."

States are also ranked for school spending per $1,000 in per-capita income for each state, with Idaho improving slightly from 41st to 38th by that measure. Idaho peaked in 2001 at 17th.

Mike Ferguson, Idaho's former chief state economist who served under five Idaho governors and now is the head of the Idaho Center for Fiscal Policy, said the numbers parallel a report he released in April that found the amount of Idaho's personal income that goes to schools dropped 23 percent between 2000 to 2013.

"The fact is that we've been essentially disinvesting in children," Ferguson said, noting Idaho has very low personal income compared to other states to begin with.

"We've always been on the low end of the scale" in per-pupil spending, he said. "It's just that we're basically, in these relative terms, getting even worse compared to what we have been able to muster previously."

The Census numbers also show that Idaho in 2009-2010 received 20.4 percent of its school funding from the federal government, the third highest of the states.

"That's the first year we did receive (federal) stimulus funding — that could definitely be the cause of it," McGrath said. "School districts this year are struggling because that one-time money is going away."

Utah Dig Unearths Large Fremont Indian Structure

GOSHEN, Utah (AP) • Archaeologists have struck gold at a dig near the town of Goshen about 35 miles south of Provo: the largest Fremont Indian structure ever found.

Jim Allison, anthropology professor at Brigham Young University, said the 850-square-foot structure is unique because it served as a communal area that brought the entire village together.

It's several times larger than typical Fremont structures, which average between 80 and 90 square feet.

"It was really almost by chance we found this and excavated it, and it's in fact the largest Fremont Indian pit structure ever excavated," he told the Deseret News.

Allison, who oversees students' work at the site, said radiocarbon dating shows it probably was occupied between 1025 and 1100.

The sheer volume of artifacts found on top of the burned-out structure is interesting, he said, and they show how the Fremont Indians lived.

"There was actually a layer of prehistoric trash that was really rich in artifacts that we found," Allison said. "We have probably a couple of hundred arrowheads. There's animal bones from meals, residue of meals they were eating. We've got corn and beans out of it, lots of broken pottery."

He said he thinks it was used as a communal building for "a fairly long time before it burned. But then I think they kept using the space for communal purposes but without the building."

The Fremont Indians inhabited sites in what are now Utah, Nevada, Idaho and Colorado between 700 and 1300. They were known for their pottery, figurines, moccasins and use of farming.

The communal structure was found in an old Fremont Indian village where a total of nine buildings have been excavated mostly by students over the last four years. Allison believes there are many more structures nearby.

"Figuring out how large this village was is difficult because the hills are active and dirt is shifting," he told Provo's Daily Herald. "This central part was completely buried and it isn't easy to tell where structures may be. There could easily be dozens more."

The site, located at the mouth of Goshen Canyon near Current Creek, now is part of the ranch property of Richard Wolf.

"It's been really a surprise to see what's been uncovered here — the artifacts, the bowls, the game pieces, the figurines they've found. It's just amazing," Wolf said.

Man Charged in Fast-food Restaurant Stabbing

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) • A 28-year-old man has been charged with attempted murder in the stabbing of another man at a Salt Lake City fast-food restaurant.

The Deseret News reports Joel Estrada of Salt Lake City was charged with the first-degree felony count Friday in 3rd District Court.

He's accused of stabbing a man about 10 times while he was waiting for his breakfast order Wednesday at a downtown Burger King.

The 25-year-old victim was critically injured and underwent surgery after being rushed to a hospital.

According to police, the victim was stabbed in the neck while Estrada stood behind him in a booth. The victim tried to take cover under the booth, but the suspect continued to stab him until fleeing the scene.

BLM Wild-horse Roundup to Resume

BY MARTIN GRIFFITH
Associated Press

RENO, Nev. • The U.S. Bureau of Land Management resumed the roundup of wild horses about 150 miles north-east of Reno on Sunday, nearly two weeks after a federal judge temporarily halted it due to foaling season.

With the end of foaling season Saturday, BLM officials said, they began removing about 200 horses from the northern portion of the Jackson Mountains Herd Management Area.

U.S. District Judge Howard McKibben on June 20 granted part of a temporary restraining order sought by horse protection advocates who say the BLM's own rules prohibit helicopter roundups during foaling season.

He allowed the roundup to continue in the southern portion of the Jackson Mountains because BLM had proven an emergency due to drought. An emergency roundup there began June 8 and ended June 22 with the removal of 424 horses.

But he said that emergency didn't stretch to the northern half of the target area covering a total of more than 400 square miles east of the Black Rock Desert. He said no helicopters could be used there at least until foaling season ended Saturday.

The rest of the roundup in the southern portion of the Jackson Mountains is expected to last about two weeks.

The roundup, which will involve the use of a helicopter to drive horses for miles to corrals, is needed because of a lack of forage and water on the range due to the drought, BLM officials said.

"Gathering the remainder of the excess animals in the northern portion will greatly assist the rangelands from a forage and water standpoint and will reduce the competition among the wild horses, permitted livestock and wildlife," said Gene Seidlitz, BLM Winnemucca District manager.

Horses removed from the range are taken to the BLM's Palomino Valley center north of Reno, where they're put up for adoption or sent to long-term pastures in the Midwest.

The roundup in the southern portion of the Jackson Mountains resulted in the "gather-related" death of only one horse and the "non-gather-related" deaths of six horses due to pre-existing health conditions, BLM spokeswoman Heather Jasinski said.

"We put them down in the field at the trap site or temporary holding corrals," she said, adding another three horses died after being transported to the Palomino Valley facility.

Anne Novak, executive director of California-based Protect Mustangs, said the animals probably would be alive today had they not been rounded up.

"Curiously, these wild horses were surviving on the range and only died at the hands of the BLM after being captured," she said. "We want transparency and request that all deaths be counted as roundup-related when they die or are euthanized within 30 days of the roundup."

Residents Tour Blaze Devastation

BY MEAD GRUVER
Associated Press

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colo. • Melted bowling balls in the front yard were among the strange sights that met C.J. Moore upon her return Sunday to her two-story home, now reduced to ashes by the worst wildfire in Colorado history.

"You wouldn't think bowling balls would melt," she told The Associated Press by phone from the scene in her Mountain Shadows neighborhood, where she was among residents who were allowed temporary visits to areas most affected by the fire.

More than a week after it sparked on June 23, the Waldo Canyon fire was still being attacked by some 1,500 personnel. But crews working grueling shifts through the hot weekend made progress against the 26-square-mile fire, and authorities said they were confident they finally had built good fire lines in many areas to stop the spread of the flames.

So far, the blaze, now 45 percent contained, has damaged or destroyed nearly 350 homes.

It was just one of several still burning in the West, where parched conditions and searing heat contributed to the woes facing crews on hundreds of square miles across Utah, Montana, Wyoming and Idaho.

In Colorado Springs, a line of cars a mile long queued up at a middle school checkpoint, where police checked the identification of returning residents and handed them water bottles.

While searching for her great-grandmother's cast-iron skillet, Moore marveled at the juxtaposition of what burned and what hadn't. The bowling balls had been garden decorations.

"To find my mail in my mailbox, unscathed. It's just unreal. Unreal," she said. "Bird baths are fine. Some of the foliage is fine."

Three neighbors' homes were unscathed. Only concrete remained of other homes, including hers. Cars were burned to nothing but charred metal.

"Good Lord! I've never seen anything like this. And thank God there was nobody there. Thank God there were no people here. There would have been no hope," Moore said.

Among the fires elsewhere in the West:

• Idaho: Firefighters in eastern Idaho had the 1,038-acre Charlotte fire 80 percent contained Sunday but remained cautious with a forecast of high winds and hot temperatures that could put hundreds of homes at risk.

• Utah: Fire commanders say Utah's largest wildfire has consumed more than 150 square miles and shows no sign of burning itself out. Hundreds of firefighters are trying to hold the Clay Springs fire from advancing on the ranching towns of Scipio and Mills on the edge of Utah's west desert. The fire has destroyed one summer home and threatens 75 others. The fire was 48 percent contained on Sunday.

• Montana: Crews in eastern Montana strengthened fire lines overnight on a 246-square-mile complex of blazes burning about 10 miles west of Lame Deer.

• Wyoming: A wind-driven wildfire in a sparsely populated area of southeastern Wyoming exploded from eight square miles to nearly 58 square miles in a single day, and an unknown number of structures have burned. About 200 structures were considered threatened.

Utah's Largest Wildfire Threatens 75 Houses

BY PAUL FOY
Associated Press

SALT LAKE CITY • Fire commanders say Utah's largest wildfire has consumed more than 150 square miles and shows no sign of burning itself out.

Hundreds of firefighters are trying to hold the Clay Springs fire from advancing on the ranching towns of Scipio and Mills on the edge of Utah's west desert.

The fire has destroyed one summer home and threatens 75 others.

The fire was 48 percent contained on Sunday, but fire managers say flames are showing "extreme resistance" to control under strong winds. The fire grew by about 18 square miles Saturday.

In all, eight wildfires are burning across Utah. An evacuation order has been

Utah Officer Falls to Death During Rescue

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) • A Utah Highway Patrol trooper has fallen to his death in a search and rescue mission near Salt Lake City.

Sheriff Jim Winder of the Unified Police says Aaron Beesley fell from a 90-foot cliff Saturday during the rescue of two stranded teenage hikers on Mount Olympus.

No one saw the fall that killed the 13-year Patrol veteran.

Winder says a rescue helicopter located the hikers and carried them to safety, while the 34-year-old Beesley was left behind on the ground.

The helicopter returned but was unable to locate the trooper. Winder told reporters at a news conference late Saturday night that searchers found him a short while later at the bottom of the cliff.

Officials say Beesley apparently was trying to retrieve his backpack when he lost his footing and plunged to his death.

Winder says the married father of three children "died in the line of duty while engaged in a heroic effort."

Video Shows Horses Being Shocked

RENO, Nev. (AP) • A national animal rights group has released video footage that it says shows Reno Rodeo horses getting shocked just before they leave chutes for competition in violation of the rodeo's policy.

Representatives of Showing Animals Respect and Kindness, or SHARK, say the video shows someone clandestinely giving electric shocks to horses as they're released at the rodeo that was staged from June 14-23.

"Literally, these animals have to be tortured to get them to perform, and that is animal cruelty pure and simple," said SHARK spokesman Stuart Chaifetz.

After watching the video, rodeo spokesman Steve Schroeder acknowledged to the Reno Gazette-Journal that bucking horses were shocked.

"It is true, that guy is shocking horses, and we're not OK with that," he said.

Cowboys were found to be "messing" with overhead cameras the rodeo installed after SHARK released similar video in 2011, Schroeder added, and the man who administered the shocks worked "really hard to stay out of camera view."

Schroeder wouldn't identify the man, but said he no longer would be allowed at the rodeo. He said he expects the man and the contractor to face fines.

The man was identified as working for the livestock contractor Big Bend/Flying Five Rodeo Co. Attempts by The Associated Press to reach the company's owners were unsuccessful Sunday.

The Professional Rodeo Cowboys Association allows electric shocks, but the Reno Rodeo doesn't want them, Schroeder said. The PRCA position on shocks — or "hot shots" — trumps the Reno Rodeo's policy when an animal won't leave a stall.

Even so, Schroeder said, that situation was seen in only two of SHARKS' video clips. In seven other clips, "the horses were not in a situation where a shock would've been called for," he said.

SHARK's video also showed two running calves that were roped around the neck and flipped over on their backs. One calf's rear leg was injured and the animal is seen hobbling out of the arena. The other calf's neck appeared to break as the contestant continues to tie its legs, and the animal was loaded into a pickup for removal.

Schroeder said the two injuries in calf-roping competition were unfortunate incidents that sometimes happen at rodeos.

SHARK maintains the video clips show "jerk downs," which the PRCA has prohibited for the 2012 season. A jerk down occurs "if a contestant jerks a calf over backwards in tie-down roping," according to PRCA's Website.

Schroeder said the Reno Rodeo wants better enforcement with disqualifications and fines large enough to dissuade jerk downs in serious cases.

Scouts from Fire-ravaged Town Die in Wyoming Crash

BY THOMAS PEIPERT
Associated Press

THERMOPOLIS, Wyo. • Five people died when a vehicle returning to Colorado from a Boy Scout camp in Wyoming slammed head-on into a motor home, authorities said Sunday.

Among the victims were three Scouts and their adult troop leader, all from Woodland Park, Colo., a town ravaged in recent weeks by wildfires, the Colorado Springs Gazette reported. A 3-year-old passenger in the motor home also died, the Wyoming Highway Patrol said.

Four others were injured in the crash on Highway 120 on Saturday near Thermopolis in north-central Wyoming. Their conditions were not immediately known.

The Boy Scouts were traveling in a Honda Element, which was one of three vehicles taking a group of Scouts back to the Colorado Springs area. The two other vehicles transporting the Scouts were not involved in the crash.

The newspaper also reported Sunday that the local Boy Scouts council released a statement saying "yesterday was an extremely difficult day for the entire Scouting family."

The Highway Patrol declined to release any other information, including the names of the victims.

Hot Springs County Sheriff Lou Falgoust told The Billings (Mont.) Gazette the troop members were working toward their Eagle Scout badges and had been camping around an area known as Pahaska Teepee, near Yellowstone National Park.

Investigators are still trying to determine why the Honda crossed the center line.

GOP: Voters Will Have Final Say on Health Care Law

BY ANNE FLAHERTY
Associated Press

WASHINGTON • Republican congressional leaders said Sunday that voters — not the Supreme Court — will have the final word on President Barack Obama's health care law come November. And they are betting that the law's unpopularity will be enough to drive Democrats from power.

The White House's response? Bring it on.

"We've got one last chance here to beat Obamacare, and we can do that in the November election," said Senate Minority Leader Mitch McConnell, calling the law the "single worst piece of legislation" passed in modern times.

White House chief of staff Jack Lew countered that he believes most Americans want to put the health care debate to rest.

"I actually think the American people want us to focus on the economy, on creating jobs and moving forward," said Lew.

Republicans and Democrats have been wrangling for the upper hand in the health care debate since last week's Supreme Court ruling upholding the law's mandate that individuals buy health insurance or face a penalty. Chief Justice John Roberts, a conservative, provided the pivotal vote in that decision by ruling that the penalty was legal under the government's taxing authority.

While technically handing a political victory to Obama, Roberts' ruling invigorated Republicans eager to cast the law as a new tax.

"The American people do not want to go down this path," said House Majority Leader John Boehner, R-Ohio. "They do not want the government telling them what kind of insurance policy they have to buy, and how much they have to pay for it, and if you don't like it we're going to tax you."

Democrats refute the characterization of the law. Lew said the mandate would impact only 1 percent of Americans — those who can afford health insurance but refuse to buy it.

"This is a penalty on free riders," said Sen. Chuck Schumer, D-N.Y.

"We've got one last chance here to beat Obamacare, and we can do that in the November election."

Senate Minority Leader
Mitch McConnell

Yet public opposition to the health care law remains high. Forty-seven percent of respondents in a recent Associated Press-GfK poll said they oppose the law while 33 percent said they support it.

However, much of the polling does find strong support for individual elements, like allowing young adults to remain on their parents' plan to age 26. Some Democrats see that as an opening to reframe the debate.

Republicans say they believe last week's ruling by the high court gives them fresh ammunition to attack Obama — and the Democrats who support him — in the upcoming election because of the health care bill's connection to jobs. The GOP says the law puts onerous mandates on industry that could stifle job creation.

"I think it's intertwined with the economy, and I think it's an example where Washington doesn't get it," said Sen. Tom Coburn, R-Okla., of the health care bill.

House Minority Leader Nancy Pelosi said Sunday that Republicans, including Mitt Romney, are "being the mouthpiece of the health care industry" and that the bill will actually improve the economy.

"The costs were unsustainable," she said of the current health care system. "It's a competitiveness issue for business and for our economy. So we had to (come) to a place where we lowered costs to all concerned, and that we again take it down a path where we continue to lower costs."

If given control of the Senate next year, McConnell said he would support using budget reconciliation rules to repeal the health care law. Doing so would prohibit Senate filibusters and require only 51 votes to succeed. In 2010, Republicans lambasted Democrats for relying on these rules to pass the health care bill, calling their tactics unusual and hyperpartisan.

McConnell said he'll do whatever it takes to repeal the law.

"I'm confident they're going to give us the votes to repeal it," he said of the American public.

The House is scheduled to vote to overturn the law on July 9. The vote will largely be symbolic since the Democrats control the Senate. But it will put lawmakers on record for the upcoming political campaign.

McConnell and Lew spoke on "Fox News Sunday." Boehner, Schumer and Coburn spoke on CBS' "Face the Nation." Pelosi spoke on NBC's "Meet the Press."

Fort Bragg Soldier Who Shot Commander Dies

FORT BRAGG, N.C. (AP)

Military officials say a soldier who shot and killed his superior officer at Fort Bragg and then turned the gun on himself is also dead.

The Army said in a news release Sunday that 27-year-old Spc. Ricky G. Elder of Hutchinson, Kan., died Friday.

The statement from Fort Bragg said Elder was recently charged with larceny of a toolkit valued at $1,700 and had been awaiting court martial.

Lt. Col. Roy Tisdale of Alvin, Texas, was fatally wounded Thursday during a safety briefing. A third soldier, 22-year-old Spc. Michael E. Latham of Vacaville, Calif., also was wounded and has been released from the hospital.

Elder enlisted in the Army in 2004. He deployed to Iraq from October 2006 to November 2007 and to Afghanistan from September 2010 to July 2011.

Officials: Airbus Plant Will Employ 1,000

BY PHILLIP RAWLS
Associated Press

MONTGOMERY, Ala. • Airbus's planned aircraft assembly plant in Alabama will cost $600 million to build and will employ 1,000 people when it reaches full production, officials said Sunday ahead of an official announcement.

Two state officials with knowledge of the company's plans said the plant in Alabama's port city of Mobile should create about 2,500 construction jobs, and it will turn out about four planes a month in 2017. The officials spoke to The Associated Press condition of anonymity because they weren't authorized to discuss the plant ahead of Monday's announcement.

The company's first aircraft assembly plant in America will produce single-aisle passenger planes that will compete with Boeing. The plant will be located at Brookley Aeroplex, which was an Air Force base until its closure in 1969.

News of the plant broke last week, and details about it have gradually emerged in

“While it is interesting once again to see Airbus promising to move jobs from Europe to the United States, no matter how many are created, the numbers pale in comparison to the thousands of U.S. jobs destroyed by illegal subsidies.”

A statement issued by Boeing media reports.

The dean of the business school at the University of South Alabama, Carl Moore, said attracting a company like Airbus could have a transforming effect on Alabama like Mercedes-Benz had when it picked Alabama for its first American assembly plant in 1993.

“It's a prestige name that's internationally known,” Dean Carl C. Moore of the University of South Alabama said.

Mercedes' plant was so successful that it was soon followed by Honda and Hyundai assembly plants and a Toyota engine plant that reshaped the manufacturing economy in a state still reeling from the loss of textile and apparel jobs.

The Airbus announcement comes as Alabama struggles to recover from the recession. Unemployment has dropped from 10.0 percent in July 2011 to 7.4 percent in May, but part of that drop came from people leaving the work force rather than finding jobs.

Moore said one job at an aircraft assembly plant can create up to three jobs at suppliers. “It will be a tremendous economic impact for Mobile, the surrounding area and the state,” Moore said.

The project marks the second time that Airbus' parent company, the European Aeronautic Defense and Space Co., has been attracted to Mobile. EADS planned to build a $600 million, 1,400-employee assembly line at Brookley for Air Force refueling tankers if it won a federal contract, but the company lost the five-year competition to Boeing in 2011.

Boeing is a longtime employer in Alabama with defense and rocket operations that employ 2,700 in north Alabama. It used the upcoming announcement to criticize what it sees as European government subsidies that help Airbus compete. “While it is interesting once again to see Airbus promising to move jobs from Europe to the United States, no matter how many are created, the numbers pale in comparison to the thousands of U.S. jobs destroyed by illegal subsidies,” the company said in a statement.

The Mobile operation will join Airbus assembly plants in in Toulouse, France; Hamburg, Germany; and Tianjin, China.

“It's going to have a very positive impact on Mobile and hopefully it will lead to an interest in Mobile for more aerospace jobs,” said former Gov. Don Siegelman, a Mobile native who recruited some of Alabama's auto plants and suppliers.

Conn. Inmate Saw Oysters as Way Out from Death Row

HARTFORD, Conn. (AP) •

A Connecticut man on death row for the killings of a mother and her two daughters in a 2007 home invasion says he came up with a bizarre plan to end his own life by lying about killing others in a spree of violence.

In an interview with The Hartford Courant, Steven Hayes said he fabricated claims in letters last year that he killed 17 people and committed dozens of drugged date rapes. He had hoped prison authorities would notify police and that he could trade information for food, including oysters to which he is deathly allergic.

“I planned to eat them and have them find me dead in my cell the next morning,” he said.

Hayes' desire to die has been a theme of his defense since the July 23, 2007, killings.

He raped and strangled Jennifer Hawke-Petit. Her daughters, Hayley, 17, and Michaela, 11, died of smoke inhalation after they were doused with gasoline and the house was set on fire.

Joshua Komisarjevsky also was convicted and sentenced to death for the killings. In an interview with The Associated Press in May, Komisarjevsky declined an opportunity to express remorse.

Hayes said he would not follow the example set by serial killer Michael Ross, a Connecticut death row inmate who waived his appeals and was executed in 2005. Hayes said he promised his lawyer he would not end his appeals to hasten his own execution.

His public defender, Thomas Ullmann, confirmed his client's promise.

“He has made a commitment to me that he will not pull a Michael Ross,” he said.

Hayes said he expected to die as he and Komisarjevsky fled the burning house. He expected Cheshire police officers to shoot him when they saw the fake but authentic-looking gun he was carrying or when Komisarjevsky rammed their getaway vehicle into a police cruiser.

As his trial was getting underway, Hayes was found unconscious in his prison cell after overdosing on prescription medication. In testimony at the trial, Hayes said he slashed his wrists, slammed his mother's car into a rock and tied a sock around his neck.

He also said he fantasized about putting his head in a prison cell toilet and doing a back flip, but didn't because he feared he would be paralyzed rather than die.

OBITUARIES

Prosecutor Who Led Historic Case Dies

BRANDON, Miss. (AP) • Jack Brooks Lacy Jr., who as an assistant U.S. attorney led the first federal murder prosecution in a civil rights-era killing, has died. He was 69.

Lacy died Friday of a single bullet to the head, Rankin County Coroner Jimmy Roberts said. He said he would not have the autopsy report until Monday, but suspects suicide.

Lacy was known for his work in the 2003 conviction of former Ku Klux Klansman Ernest Avants for aiding and abetting the murder of black sharecropper Ben Chester White on federal property. Prosecutors said White, 67, was killed in the Homochitto National Forest in 1966 in an attempt to lure Martin Luther King Jr. to southwest Mississippi for assassination.

After his federal work, Lacy became assistant state attorney general for the Mississippi Band of Choctaws.

“Jack had an undying commitment to doing what was right as a public servant,” John Dowdy, criminal division chief for the U.S. Attorney's Office said.

“His passion over the years became serving for the betterment of the Mississippi Band of Choctaw Indians. He will be sorely missed, no question,” Dowdy told The Clarion-Ledger.

Lacy's first job was as a disc jockey after he ran out of money to attend the University of Mississippi, where he graduated in 1968 with a degree in English literature.

He taught there for 14 years before finishing law school at age 40.

In 2003, Lacy said the only reason federal prosecutors were able to bring the White case back to court was that the killing was found to have taken place on federal land. “It's one of those incredible accidents of history,” Lacy said.

A state jury had acquitted Avants of murder in 1967.

Prosecutors said Avants and two companions offered White $2 and a soda to help them find a dog lost in the woods. White, who had no connection with the civil rights movement, was driven to a national forest, shot to death and dumped into a creek bed. His last words, according to testimony: “Oh Lord, what have I done to deserve this?”

The verdict was returned less than three hours after final arguments in the case and just three days after the trial began.

According to court documents, Avants told investigators in 1967 he had fired a shotgun blast into White's head after another man killed him with 15 to 18 automatic rifle bullets.

Funeral plans were incomplete Sunday, according to Ott & Lee Funeral Home in Brandon, a suburb of Jackson.

N.Y. Utility, Union Talks Collapse Amid Hot Weather

BY VERENA DOBNIK
Associated Press

NEW YORK • Consolidated Edison closed walk-in centers, suspended meter readings and limited work on major construction projects in New York on Sunday after contract talks between the utility and its unionized workers broke down in the middle of a wave of extremely hot weather.

Negotiations stopped just before 2 a.m. Sunday, a couple of hours after the existing contract expired. The impasse came as New York braced for more high temperatures that will increase demand for air conditioning among the utility's 3.2 million customers.

On Sunday morning, police set up barricades in front of Con Ed's headquarters near Manhattan's Union Square.

“This is crazy! There's a heat wave,” said David

Palomino, a facility mechanic who rushed to headquarters after finishing his early shift to find out what was coming next. He was one of few workers there; a union official said more picketing was planned for Monday.

“The fight has escalated” between the two sides, Palomino said, explaining that workers fear losing chunks of their pensions and benefits.

Temperatures were in the 90s Sunday, with a heat advisory for the afternoon, and were expected to be in the high 80s and lower 90s in coming days.

At an electronics and air conditioning retailer across the street from Con Ed, manager Ramon Nieves said there have been multiple power outages in recent years in his Queens neighborhood.

“I'm mad at Con Ed — what are they thinking?” he said. “A lot of people could get sick in this heat.”

Q. Do you have tips for helping parents move from the family home into a smaller apartment or house?

A. Downsizing can be an emotional process for all concerned. Ease into it if you can. If you know a move is only a matter of time, convince your parents to start sorting even some of their belongings. They will likely want to “re-home” certain items to younger family members. This can turn into a great family get-together where stories and memories are shared across generations. Once the decision to move is made be sensitive and organized! Check the layout of your parents' new home; make a sketch and take measurements. For sorting and packing, start with rooms that are used least on a daily basis—possibly the attic or garage. Not everything will fit in the new place. Your parents, with assistance, will decide what to keep, give to family and friends, sell or donate, or just throw away. Expect both tears and smiles as you help yourself, and your parents, through a huge life change.

Veterans Respond to Court Overturning Lying Law

BY ALLEN REED
Associated Press

FAYETTEVILLE, N.C. • Jack Jacobs can proudly — and truthfully — say he was awarded the Medal of Honor for his valor in Vietnam. After a recent Supreme Court ruling, anyone else is free under the First Amendment to make the same claim, whether it's true or not.

Some military veterans say they consider the ruling a slap in the face. For Jacobs, though, it was the right decision. He said he wore the uniform to protect people's rights — even if he doesn't agree with how they exercise those rights.

"There are lots of things people do that revolt me, but I'm happy that I fought for this country not to give them the right to do something stupid, but for the majority of the people to do the right thing," said Jacobs, 66, who earned the Medal of Honor in 1969 for carrying several of his buddies to safety from a shelled rice field despite the shrapnel wounds in his head, the streaming blood clouding his vision.

"I'm a free speech guy," he said.

The high court ruled 6-3 on Thursday to toss out the conviction of Xavier Alvarez, a former California politician who lied about being a decorated military veteran. He had been charged under the 2006 Stolen Valor Act, which made it a crime to lie about receiving the Medal of Honor and other prestigious military recognitions. The decision invalidated the law, as the justices ruled Alvarez's fabricated story was constitutionally protected speech.

For 87-year-old Murel Winans, lies about service can cause real harm and lead people to doubt the veracity of claims made by people who actually served during wartime. He said he didn't buy the free speech argument.

"You feel like you never earned it, because when you tell someone what you've done, they'll say, 'you're lying just like those other guys,'" said Winans, 87, who described himself as a "fresh young hill-billy from West Virginia" when he landed on Normandy's Omaha Beach on June 6, 1944 — his 19th birthday.

The law was inspired by the 1998 book "Stolen Valor" by B.G. "Jug" Burkett, a Vietnam veteran. The government had argued the law was a needed tool to protect the integrity of military medals.

The ruling was issued the same day as the high court's landmark decision upholding President Barack Obama's signature health care overhaul. While much of the nation watched with rapt focus on what would become of the law that requires every American to have health insurance, many people in military communities were more focused on the ruling on the Stolen Valor Act.

Emotions ran high in Fayetteville, home to the 251-square-mile Fort Bragg. About 38 percent of North Carolina's population is either currently in the service, a veteran or a dependent of one, according to the N.C. Department of Administration. The state is also home to the sprawling Camp Lejeune, known for its training in amphibious assaults like the one at Normandy.

"My boys are out there giving their heart and soul," said Rose Moore, whose son is stationed in Afghanistan. "To have someone say they did it and they didn't do anything — it's a lie, it's dishonest."

Army Capt. Albert Bryant acknowledged that he was disappointed, saying the lies can detract from people who earn something like the Medal of Honor. However, his disappointment was somewhat tempered.

"I know it's the First Amendment, but maybe you need to have an amendment to the amendment to protect our enlisted men and women," Bryant said. "Very few things in life are black and white so you have to take certain things in context, but there has to be some kind of common sense applied."

The decision doesn't give anyone carte blanche to lie about their service record in an effort to get free perks, however. Anyone who fabricates any honors can still face fraud charges, which is what happened to former Marine Sgt. David Budwah in 2009. He was demoted to private and dishonorably discharged after pretending to be a wounded war hero to get free seats at rock concerts and sports events.

Twenty-year Army veteran Raymond Hunt said the justices made the right move in protecting free speech. He said it's enough that Alvarez has been publicly shamed.

"For the rest of his life he has to walk around with that look on his face and know that he was the biggest liar in the country on something that is so sensitive to our country," Hunt said.

Retired Army Lt. Hal Fritz said the court treated those medals as something abstract. But for him, it's a memory.

Fritz was leading a seven-vehicle armored column down a Vietnam highway in 1969 when enemy combatants launched a surprise attack from all sides. Fritz was seriously wounded in the crossfire, but ran through the machine gun blasts to rally his troops. After his platoon survived the first wave, Fritz charged into a second enemy advancement armed with only a pistol and a bayonet. He was seriously wounded, but refused medical attention until all of his men had been cared for. He was awarded the Medal of Honor in 1971.

"We would disagree with the majority saying lying about receiving the medals doesn't devalue them," said Fritz, 68, who now lives in Illinois. "I would say go back with me to Vietnam dragging the dead and dying off the battlefield."

The Medal of Honor is among the rarest of honors: Only 81 of the 3,457 recipients since the Civil War are still living. Of those, only three are younger than 35, according to the Congressional Medal of Honor Society.

U.S. Judge Temporarily Blocks Miss. Abortion Law

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) • A federal judge on Sunday temporarily blocked enforcement of a Mississippi law that could shut down the only abortion clinic in the state.

U.S. District Judge Daniel P. Jordan in Jackson issued a temporary restraining order the day the new law took effect.

He set a July 11 hearing to determine whether to block the law for a longer time.

"Though the debate over abortion continues, there exists legal precedent the court must follow," Jordan wrote.

The law requires anyone performing abortions at the state's only clinic to be an OB-GYN with privileges to admit patients to a local hospital. Such privileges can be difficult to obtain, and the clinic contends the mandate is designed to put it out of business. A clinic spokeswoman, Betty Thompson, has said the two physicians who do abortions there are OB-GYNs who travel from other states.

Mexican Old Guard Leads, Ruling Party Concedes

MEXICO CITY (AP) • Mexico's voters appeared poised to bring the old guard back to power on Sunday in a mostly quiet and orderly vote that was marked by a heavy police and troop presence in violence-plagued parts of the country.

The former ruling Institutional Revolutionary Party, known as the PRI, led by telegenic former Mexico State Gov. Enrique Pena Nieto, has held a strong lead throughout the campaign. The party, voted out of the presidency in 2000 after 71 years in power, also appeared likely to retake at least a plurality in the two houses of Congress and some governorship.

The party has been bolstered by voter fatigue with a sluggish economy and the sharp escalation of a drug war that has killed roughly 50,000 Mexicans over the past six years. The desire for change suddenly works to benefit the PRI, which ran Mexico from 1929 to 2000, and many see their victory as inevitable.

Syrian Opposition Rejects New International Plan

BEIRUT (AP) • Syria's main opposition groups rejected on Sunday a new international plan that calls for a transitional government because the compromise agreement did not bar President Bashar Assad from participating.

Their reaction held out little hope for an end to more than 15 months of carnage on a day when the main opposition group said 800 people were killed in violence in the past week alone.

Opposition activists groups say more than 14,000 people have been killed since the uprising against President Bashar Assad's authoritarian rule began in March 2011, or on average about 900 a month. That would make last week's toll alone almost as high as the monthly average as government forces furiously pounded rebellious towns and cities with helicopters, tanks and artillery in an offensive aimed at recovering rebel-held territories.

Iran Feels Pinch of New EU Oil Sanctions

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TEHRAN, Iran • As new European Union sanctions targeting Iran's vital oil industry took effect Sunday, Tehran acknowledged the measures aimed at reining in its disputed nuclear program were taking a toll. The vice president said authorities had stockpiled imported goods and hard currency to help cushion the blow to the economy.

The ban by the 27-member EU on the purchase of Iranian oil dealt the Islamic Republic its second economic setback in days, following fresh U.S. sanctions that prohibit the world's banks from completing oil transactions with Iranian banks. Combined, the measures significantly ratchet up the pressure on an Iranian economy already squeezed by previous rounds of sanctions.

"Today, we are facing the heaviest of sanctions, and we ask people to help officials in this battle," Vice President Mohammad Reza Rahimi was quoted as saying on state television's website.

He said the "dastardly sanctions" might cause "occasional confusion" in the domestic market. Iran reacted furiously when the U.S. and EU sanctions were announced, threatening to block the strategic Strait of Hormuz, a vital waterway used to ship about one-fifth of the world's oil. On Sunday Iranian officials appeared to be backing away from that threat, which roiled international oil markets at the time.

Mid-Atlantic Power Outages Could Last Days

BY BEN NUCKOLS
Associated Press

FRANCONIA, Va. • A day after seeking refuge at shopping malls and movie theaters, hoping the lights would be back on when they returned, 3 million residents faced a grim reality Sunday: stifling homes, spoiled food and a looming commute filled with knocked-out stoplights.

Two days after storms tore across the eastern U.S., power outages were forcing people to get creative to stay cool in dangerously hot weather. Temperatures approached 100 degrees in many storm-stricken areas, and utility officials said the power will likely be out for several more days.

"If we don't get power tonight, we'll have to throw everything away," Susan Fritz, a mother of three, said grimly of her refrigerator and freezer. Fritz came to a library in Bethesda, Md., so her son could do school work. She charged her phone and iPad at her local gym.

On Sunday night, federal and state officials in the mid-Atlantic region gave many workers the option of staying home Monday to ease congestion on the roads. Federal agencies will be open in Washington, but non-emergency employees have the option of taking leave or working from home. Maryland's governor also gave state workers wide leeway for staying out of the office.

The storm was blamed for 14 deaths, most from trees falling on homes and cars. Meanwhile, Coast Guard officials say they have suspended the search for a man who went missing early Saturday while boating during the storm off Maryland.

The bulk of the damage was in West Virginia, Washington and the capital's Virginia and Maryland suburbs. At least six of the dead were killed in Virginia, including a 90-year-old woman asleep in her bed when a tree slammed into her home. Two young cousins in New Jersey were killed when a tree fell on their tent while camping. Two were killed in Maryland, one in Ohio, one in Kentucky and one in Washington.

Quick Facts on Storms, Summer Heat in Eastern U.S.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

Millions are staring down the prospect of several more days without electricity in the middle of a heat wave after severe storms over the weekend.

Food is beginning to spoil, and many people have to charge modern conveniences like cellphones in their cars or at libraries. Utility companies say they are bringing in crews from around the country to help, but they still say it could be several days before everyone has electricity again.

By Sunday evening, the number of those without power had dipped to about 2.7 million customers, down from more than 3 million at the peak of the outages.

Deaths

Authorities have confirmed at least 17 deaths related to the storms that swept across the eastern U.S. Deaths have been reported in North Carolina, Virginia, Maryland, Washington, D.C., New Jersey, Kentucky and Ohio.

Power Outages

About 545,000 were without power in Maryland; 643,000 in Virginia; 318,000 in Washington, D.C., and some surrounding areas; 600,000 in Ohio; 460,000 in West Virginia; and 122,000 in New Jersey.

Heat

By Sunday night, just under 2.7 million people were sweltering through a second day of extreme heat, with temperatures approaching or exceeding 100 degrees in many areas. Forecasters are warning people to stay inside, avoid direct sun and drink plenty of fluids.

Midweek July Fourth Causes Muddle for Travelers

For the first time in five years Independence Day falls on a Wednesday, leaving travelers unsure when to celebrate and worrying those who make a living off tourists.

BY SCOTT MAYEROWITZ
Associated Press

NEW YORK • Who knew the calendar could cause so much vacation heartburn?

For the first time in five years Independence Day falls on a Wednesday, leaving travelers unsure when to celebrate and worrying those who make a living off tourists.

"The midweek holiday seems to have travelers confused," said Anthony Del Gaudio, vice president of hotel sales for Loews Hotels, which isn't seeing the normal July Fourth spike in bookings. Those who sell vacations say this year's calendar gives Americans more options: Tack on Saturday through Tuesday or Thursday through Sunday to the holiday, or just take the entire week off.

But consumers' confidence has been waning. Now, some aren't happy about having to burn an extra vacation day or two to get that long weekend. From 2008 through 2011, the work holiday fell on either Friday or Monday, so employees and their families got an automatic three-day weekend, similar to Memorial Day and Labor Day.

"It's irritating because everybody wants those three, four-day holiday weekends," said Tom Donohue, who runs an HIV awareness program based in Charlottesville, Va.

In recent years, he's traveled to see family in Pennsylvania, including his father whose birthday is on July 2. There's swimming and boating on the Susquehanna River and — of course — fireworks.

Not this year. Donohue plans to stay local, saving those days off "for an actual vacation," a Caribbean cruise in October.

Others are determined to have their summer holiday no matter what.

Alicia Hutton, her husband and their two daughters are flying from Boston to Baltimore to see family. The parents had to take two extra days off from their jobs to make the Wednesday-Saturday trip work.

"It's not ideal because normally we would tack on one day to a long weekend," Hutton said.

AAA, one of the nation's largest travel agencies, projects 42.3 million Americans will journey 50 miles or more from home between July 3 and July 8. That's roughly the same amount that traveled in 2007, the last time July Fourth fell on a Wednesday. Last year, when the holiday fell on a Monday, 40.3 million people traveled. But before you think it's a big increase, note that AAA's economists changed how they estimated the number of travelers: They used a six-day period this year compared to five last year.

"In general, we think that travel from last year is pretty flat," said Shane Norton, a director at IHS Global Insight, which provides economic forecasting and research for AAA.

The economy weighs heavily on families' travel plans. Consumer confidence has fallen for four straight months as Americans continue to worry about their jobs and retirement funds. The June reader of a widely followed confidence index was 62. A reading of 90 indicates a healthy economy.

That helps explain why families don't seem prepared yet to splurge on vacation. Many want to get away but are opting for lower-priced hotels and are looking specifically for properties with free breakfast and Internet. Or they're choosing instead to stay with friends or relatives.

The typical traveler will spend $749 over six days, down from $807 over five days last year, according to an online survey of 344 people conducted for AAA. Another look at the holiday, by Visa Inc., shows that all Americans — whether traveling or not — will spend an average of $191 on July 4th activities, down from $216 last year. Visa surveyed 1,012 people by telephone.

Get Ready for Battle on Obamacare

Probably no state in the union than Idaho has been more officially aligned against the Affordable Care Act. Now it is going to have to decide what it will do about its terms.

The court challenge, turned aside (in general) by the U.S. Supreme Court on Thursday, likely means the law's provisions mostly will stand. The one major unpopular part of the law, the insurance mandate, will be defended to the death by the insurance lobby. And most of the other pieces, such as such as the ban on pre-existing condition denials, payments in the donut hole and extensions of parental policies to twenty-something children, among others, separately will be politically hard to reverse.

Thursday's decision, widely unexpected (the online InTrade site ran at 73 percent predicting a mandate overturn minutes before the decision was announced), is a real head-snapper in Idaho, where officials like Governor C.L. "Butch" Otter, the congressional delegation and legislative leaders have routinely described it and the whole law as unconstitutional. Otter's official website even has a whole page with numerous links headlined "Fighting Obamacare," wherein labeled "unconstitutional." (Will that be edited?) Idaho is in a category distinct from many other states, including Washington and Oregon, where officials have moved to establish health insurance exchanges and take other actions.

Idaho may even lead its pack. In 2010, the Idaho Legislature was first in the nation to vote for a lawsuit to overturn the Affordable Care Act. Soon after, legislators gave serious consideration to what amounted to nullification (Idaho was among about a dozen states where that idea was pursued seriously) — an effort blocked by a narrow vote of a Senate committee (one of whose opposition Republicans, John McGee, won't be back). Legislators held off partly on the theory that the law would be thrown out by the Supreme Court. In April 2010 Otter issued an executive order which, his news release said, "directs State agencies not to establish new programs, promulgate rules or accept federal funding to implement Obamacare. It also bars State agencies from assisting federal agencies in implementing the law."

Randy Stapilus
Ridenbaugh.com

And now? Get ready for battle. The two top state Senate Republican leaders, President pro tem Brent Hill and Majority Leader Bart Davis, were among the critics of the nullification legislation; don't be surprised if both are challenged. Nullification legislation will be back, whoever is in the White House next January.

While the Supreme Court said that states can opt out of the law's Medicaid expansion without costing them all Medicaid payments, it still allowed substantial penalty in new funds. Will the Idaho Legislature write it off?

There is an aspect to the law Otter did support (in a different fashion) putting in place: The exchange of private health insurance plans. That was derailed by the legislature; now, budget committee Co-chairman Dean Cameron said after the decision, "Unfortunately, if (Republicans) do not win the presidential election or are able to take over Congress — both the House and Senate — it leaves Idaho completely behind the eight-ball."

One of the biggest questions remaining: Will the 19 percent of Idahoans, about 294,000 of the state's citizens, along with the many hundreds of thousands of others left behind in the health care system America has had, be forgotten in the battle over ideology?

Hunter's Book an Insensitive Fantasy

With the publication of "What Really Happened: Our Daughter, and Me," Rielle Hunter enters the company of Jennifer Flowers (movies), Donna Rice (jeans) and Monica Lewinsky (handbags) who try to get something other than the obvious out of their brush with political fame.

In Hunter's book, moxie, ambition, and self-delusion ooze from every pore. Just as Flowers insists she wasn't just a lounge singer, Hunter maintains that she was more than a videographer. She had studied Eastern philosophy in California and came to New York to be a spiritual adviser.

Maybe that's why she stood at the door of the Regency Hotel in Manhattan in 2006 and whispered "You're so hot" in Edwards's ear. Frances Quinn Hunter, the result of subsequent encounters, is now 4 years old.

And that gives Hunter her excuse for giving up her career in spirituality for writing: She wants her daughter, and Edwards' children, to have an accurate record of her place in their father's life.

Margaret Carlson
Bloomberg News

While most of us would look for a quiet moment and a private venue for such a delicate conversation, Hunter decided the better venue is a book, a prime-time ABC News special and multiple talk shows. The book supplements earlier documentary evidence provided by Hunter in April 2010 in the form of a spread in GQ magazine in which she tells her story posing, legs spread and in a man's shirt, with a bevy of stuffed animals.

We already lived through Edwards' dalliance with Hunter. Is there any reason to relive it? There is — if only to see how so many were fooled by such a shallow man. Selected as the vice-presidential candidate of a major party in 2004! Serious candidate for president in 2008! Father of the Year in 2007! Hunter accidentally reveals someone who didn't deserve to be a senator, much less a president.

Edwards is self-absorbed, vain, lazy and remarkably comfortable with a lie. He spent as much time on the phone (four hours a night) as in briefings. Of course, it showed in the endless primping waiting to go on TV, the empty emoting over the two Americas, the mushy reasons for running.

The only surprise in this book is Hunter giving full vent to her hatred for Elizabeth Edwards, John's deceased wife, who had to cope with both the return of deadly cancer and Edwards' affair, which she discovered little by little.

In Hunter's telling, Elizabeth should have been fine with all this. Instead she is a "witch on wheels" who is crazy, venomous and unreasonable. Feeling bad that his wife's cancer had returned in 2007, Edwards broke up with Hunter and held a press conference saying he would be with Elizabeth every step of the way. Less than 24 hours later, he called Hunter.

What makes this tell-all more noxious is that Edwards is complicit in the further humiliation of his children and his parents. He didn't write the book, obviously, though some parts detailing Elizabeth's reaction to Hunter had to come from him. But he has helped to promote it. After Edwards' trial (at which he was acquitted on one count that he used campaign funds to keep his mistress), he announced from the courthouse steps his devotion to "my precious Quinn, whom I love more than any of you can imagine."

There was no such fulsome affection for his father, stricken beside him, or his daughter Cate, who lent him dignity every day walking into the courthouse. A couple of weeks later, just before publicity for the book begins, Edwards takes Hunter and his daughter to a beach house in North Carolina to flirt, kiss, and play in the sand. Turns out, lying low was for trial. Frolicking on the beach on Father's Day weekend while his motherless children celebrated alone — that's for the book.

Rielle thinks she's the victim, Elizabeth the villain and Johnny, who did it all for love, the hero. Her book may be shelved under nonfiction, but her story is pure fantasy.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Celebrate Independence Day by Giving Thanks to God

The Declaration of Independence states that our rights come from God and government is needed only to protect those rights. If you feel your rights come from government, then don't complain when government takes away your right to life, liberty and property.

Patrick Henry said that this nation was founded on Christian principles contained in the Holy Bible. The Supreme Court in 1892 ruled that "our institutions are emphatically Christian."

George Washington stated that the Christian religion and morality were indispensable supports for good government and warned that we would lose our freedom if we separated God from government.

Presently, we have separation of church and state (although not found in the First Amendment or the Constitution) because of unconstitutional Supreme Court decisions that have resulted in secular humanism's moral decay.

Eight words (taken out of context) of President Jefferson's 1802 letter was used to remove biblical principles from schools and public institutions. Jefferson was ambassador in France when the Constitution and Bill of Rights were written. The 145 founders who were involved clearly stated that they did not want a state church or denomination. They wanted religion, morality and knowledge to be taught in schools which was included in the Northwest Ordinance of 1787 concerning new states coming into the union.

President Jefferson ordered that the Bible be read in Washington, D.C., schools.

Congress purchased 20,000 Bibles and authorized the government printing of Bibles. The motto of the Revolutionary War for Independence was: "No king, but King Jesus."

The founders honored Independence Day as a religious holiday because the author of liberty, Jesus Christ, made freedom and independence possible for us. We should impeach secular judges and bring God back into our institutions. To verify our Christian heritage, contact www.wallbuilders.com.

Celebrate Independence Day by giving thanks to God.

Animal Trapping an Unfortunate Addition to Hunt Amendment

I am disappointed to learn that the Idaho Legislature is putting a constitutional amendment (HJR2) on the ballot this November to guarantee forever the rights of Idahoans to hunt, fish and trap.

While most people in Idaho are not opposed to hunting and fishing, many do not support trapping. This constitutional amendment has included hunting and fishing in order to enlist the support of those that hunt and fish.

They know that protecting just the ability to trap animals would never stand on its own as trapping is a cruel way to kill animals. An animal caught in a leg-hold trap can suffer for days trying to wrench itself free before the trapper comes back to kill it. About 40,000 fur-bearing animals die in Idaho this way every winter.

This amendment would take away the ability of regular citizens to ever bring forth a citizen's initiative regarding wildlife issues. That is why Idaho has the initiative process — to allow average citizens to bring an issue to the vote of the people.

Do not forever prohibit our right to make wildlife decisions in Idaho. The professional biologists at the Idaho Fish and Game Department are far better suited to decide what the best way is to manage our wildlife. Amending our constitution to guarantee the right to trap animals is a misuse of the constitutional amendment process.

Idaho hunters pride themselves in fair chase in their sport. How fair is it to kill an animal in a trap that is unable to get away? Defeat of this amendment would not change the right to hunt and fish in Idaho.

If you are interested in assisting to help defeat this amendment, please visit Idahoans Against Trapping website at www.iatvoteno.org and help us to protect our wildlife and our Constitution. Donations would be greatly appreciated.

Man Charged in 7-year-old Girl's Death in Chicago

CHICAGO (AP) • A 26-year-old suspected gang member has been charged with first-degree murder and aggravated battery in the shooting death of a 7-year-old girl who was gunned down while selling snow cones near her house last week.

Police say Jerrell Dorsey of Chicago was taken into custody Friday night and charged early Sunday. He appeared in court later Sunday, where a judge ordered him held without bail.

Heaven Sutton was with her mother Wednesday night when police say someone walked up to another group of people and opened fire down the street. The girl was struck by a stray bullet as she ran away.

The Chicago Tribune reports that Dorsey's lawyer, Eric Dunham, said Dorsey was in the area when the girl was shot but was not the gunman.

Jeff Brantingham, anthropology professor at the University of California Los Angeles, displays computer-generated 'predictive policing' zones on Friday at the Los Angeles Police Department Unified Command Post in Los Angeles.

Sci-fi Policing: Predicting Crime before It Occurs

Police officials say they are having success with a computer algorithm model that helps determine where to send officers to prevent or possibly interrupt a crime, which may serve as a model for other cash-strapped law enforcement agencies.

BY GREG RISLING
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES • Los Angeles police are aiming to beat suspects to the scene of a crime by using computers to predict where trouble might occur.

The Los Angeles Police Department is the largest agency to embrace an experiment known as "predictive policing," which crunches data to determine where to send officers to thwart would-be thieves and burglars. Time Magazine called it one of the best inventions of 2011.

Early successes could serve as a model for other cash-strapped law enforcement agencies, but some legal observers are concerned it could lead to unlawful stops and searches that violate Fourth Amendment protections.

In the San Fernando Valley, where the program was launched late last year, officers are seeing double-digit drops in burglaries and other property crimes. The program has turned enough in-house skeptics into believers that there are plans to roll it out citywide by next summer.

"We have prevented hundreds and hundreds of people coming home and seeing their homes robbed," said police Capt. Sean Malinowski.

Crime mapping has long been a tool used to determine where the bad guys lurk. The idea has evolved from colored pins placed on a map to identifying "hot spots" via a computer database based on past crimes and possible patterns.

Over the past decade, many large police departments, including Los Angeles and New York City, have used CompStat, a system that tracks crime figures and enables police to send extra officers to trouble spots.

The new program used by LAPD and police in the Northern California city of Santa Cruz is more timely and precise, proponents said. Built on the same model for predicting aftershocks following an earthquake, the software promises to show officers what might be coming based on simple, constantly calibrated data — location, time and type of crime.

The software generates prediction boxes — as small as 500 square feet — on a patrol map. When officers have spare time, they are told to "go in the box."

The goal is not to boost the number of arrests, a common police benchmark to reflect crime reduction. Officers want to either intercept a crime in progress or deter would-be criminals.

"I want to disrupt an activity before an arrest is made," Malinowski said. "You can't arrest your way out of some of these problems."

Jeff Brantingham, an anthropology professor at the University of California, Los Angeles, said the data also is derived from criminal behaviors — repeat victimization and the notion that criminals tend not to stray too far from areas they know best.

"Alone, a man carrying a bag is not reasonable suspicion. But in court, the officer will say, 'The computer told me to go there.' For the lawyer or the court, what are you going to do with this information? You can't cross-examine a computer."

Andrew Guthrie Ferguson, an assistant law professor at the University of the District of Columbia

"If you are victimized today the risk that you'll be a victim again goes way up," said Brantingham, who co-founded a software company tapped by LAPD for its program.

So far, the program has been implemented in five LAPD divisions that cover 130 square miles and roughly 1.3 million people. In the valley's Foothill Division, where more than half of the crimes committed are property-related, about 170 patrol officers are spending a total of about 70 hours a week working in the boxes.

In one instance, a police captain questioned sending officers into a box that was on the edge of his coverage area. Officers went out and didn't find anything, but returned several nights later and found a guy breaking a window.

The division leads the department in crime reduction, Malinowski said. Crimes were down in the area 13 percent following the rollout compared to a slight uptick across the rest of the city where the program wasn't being used.

"If you had told us a few years ago you could get an algorithm to perform as the same as a crime analyst, we would think you were crazy," Malinowski said. "Even the most skeptical people are now coming up to me and saying, 'I think this is working.'"

Other police departments across the nation are using similar approaches. Tech titan IBM has teamed up with police in Memphis and Charleston, S.C., to provide analysis; Minneapolis police are breaking down crime statistics and factoring in geographic locations to determine future crimes.

Andrew Guthrie Ferguson, an assistant law professor at the University of the District of Columbia, has written about predictive policing and how it may impact Fourth Amendment protections from unlawful searches and seizures.

Ferguson said the trend is "a seductive idea" for law enforcement agencies that carry a lot of power. He believes the LAPD has done a good job with the data but he's concerned that other departments could abuse the process with racial profiling or stereotyping a neighborhood or an area.

"There are real pressures to expand this nationally and see it succeed," Ferguson said. "I think it's an important innovation. But like any innovation, it's not foolproof, and looking closely at the data is important to ensure it doesn't harm the civil liberties of the people living in those areas."

Ferguson said he envisions a legal challenge at some point. He used an example of an officer patrolling a predicted area of burglary and who sees a man carrying a bag and detains the man because he looks suspicious.

"Alone, a man carrying a bag is not reasonable suspicion," Ferguson explained. "But in court, the officer will say, 'The computer told me to go there? For the lawyer or the court, what are you going to do with this information? You can't cross-examine a computer.'"

Some States Trim Use of Planes in Speed Traps

BY DAVID B. CARUSO
Associated Press

NEW YORK • Highway signs throughout New York warn that when it comes to catching speeders, the long arm of the law extends even into the sky. "State Police aircraft used in speed enforcement," they say.

Actually, lead-footed drivers hitting the interstates for the Independence Day holiday can keep their eyes on the road. The New York State Police, who once routinely used planes to clock motorists, haven't written a single ticket in that manner since at least 2005.

"It hasn't been entirely eliminated," Sgt. Kern Swoboda, a state police spokesman, said of the signs. "We still have the airplanes." But in these budget-conscious times, he said, launching aircraft to catch speeders just isn't fiscally prudent.

New York is one of several states to scale back the use of aircraft for traffic enforcement in recent years because of budget cuts or concerns about cost-effectiveness.

Typically, aerial enforcement programs involve a plane, a pilot, a spotter to time vehicles as they travel between lines painted on the road and several cruisers to pull people over and issue tickets.

"That ain't cheap," Swoboda said. He added that updated laser technology now allows a trooper on the ground to get speed readings over long distances and in heavy traffic — two situations where aircraft used to be superior.

"So what better way to do it than have three guys at a U-turn?" Swoboda said. "We found that it was far more efficient, and a lot less expensive."

A full accounting of which law enforcement agencies have curtailed the use of aircraft for speed enforcement was unavailable, but the list includes some states that had previously made robust use of the tactic.

The California Highway Patrol still has 15 planes used to catch speeders, but spokeswoman Fran Clader said that as the department's annual air operations budget has dropped from about $12 million to $8 million, aircraft became more focused on supporting searches and pursuits.

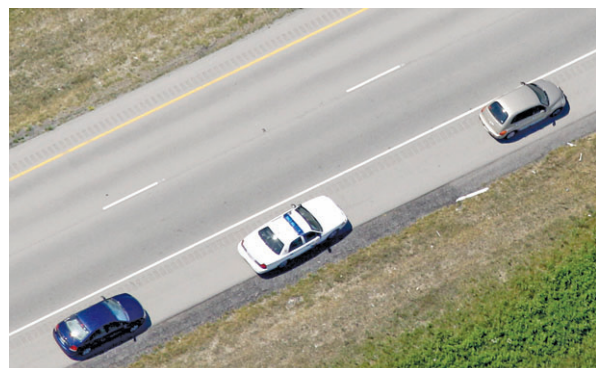

"We still enforce speed with the fixed-wing aircraft but in a much-reduced capacity," she said.

The Virginia State Police launched an aggressive aerial speed enforcement program in 2000 but largely abandoned regular patrols after 2007. Last year, it flew only one such mission, which resulted in tickets being given to 20 drivers, the department said. It flew four missions the year before, none in 2009 and only one in 2008.

"Due to economic conditions and mandated budget cuts ... we've had to look at cost savings," said department spokeswoman Corinne Geller.

She said it cost about $150 per hour to operate the planes — a figure that includes fuel and maintenance but not manpower. In the past, she said, the speed enforcement flights were paid for with federal grants. But with less federal money coming in lately, resources have been focused on keeping troopers on the road.

The Washington State Patrol's aviation section, which had been participating in roughly 13,500 traffic stops per year, had to scale back after suffering a $1.4 million budget cut over a two-year period that began in 2009, according to unit commander Lt. Jim Nobach. It lost three pilots, who had to return to road duties. Flight hours were slashed by 39 percent. As a result, aircraft are now stopping 5,000 fewer drivers per year.

An Ohio State Highway Patrol trooper, center, tickets two motorists caught speeding on Wednesday by a patrol aircraft on Ohio Route 2 near Vermilion, Ohio. While Ohio still aggressively uses aircraft to catch speeders, many states have cut back or eliminated aerial enforcement due to budget concerns.

Gun Group Takes 'Junk' Guns to Chicago for Trade-in

BY JIM JAWORSKI
Chicago Tribune (MCT)

CHICAGO • Last weekend, members of a downstate Illinois pro-gun group drove to Chicago, handed in about 60 weapons to the city's trade-in program and walked out with more than $6,200 in gift cards.

While the city program is meant to reduce the number of deadly weapons in Chicago, the guns traded in were rusted, damaged and, according to the group, pretty much useless.

Police said the group is taking advantage of a program intended to take firearms off the street. Members of Guns Save Life, in Champaign County, countered that they are putting the money to good use — to purchase ammunition and firearms for a youth program that teaches gun safety and marksmanship. The group also traded in BB guns and starter pistols.

"We just took advantage of Chicago's induced, artificial market on rusty junk," said John Boch, the group's president.

The city collected 5,500 weapons at city churches June 23. Police handed out a $100 gift card per firearm and a $10 gift card for a BB gun or replica.

Guns Save Life has done the same thing twice before, and most of the weapons are of little value and are collecting dust in the closet of members or relatives. Boch said the guns were so beaten and worn that one of them, a shotgun, broke while being inspected by a police officer. The group did not get a gift card for that gun.

"Some of them are about 100 years old," he said. "They are rusty. Some have been in fires. It's just junk."

“I now have a new outlook on life.”

Last year, I went to a HealthFair screening. The ultrasound revealed that my right carotid artery was 75 percent blocked. The HealthFair technicians advised me to contact my family doctor immediately. A few days later, a vascular surgeon confirmed HealthFair's findings, and I was told that I needed to have surgery on my carotid artery. The surgery solved the problem. I sing HealthFair's praises regularly. I now have a new outlook on life and cherish every moment. Thanks for being there, HealthFair.

Heart Disease, Stroke and Aneurysm Screening Package

Echocardiogram (ECHO) Ultrasound Test	➔	A video ultrasound of the heart, which may detect enlargement of the heart, valve abnormalities, blood clots and tumors.
Electrocardiogram (EKG)	➔	This screening provides a picture of the heart's electrical activity, which may predict pending heart attack, irregular rhythms and more.
Hardening of the Arteries (ASI) Test	➔	Arteriosclerosis reduces flexibility in the arteries. The higher the ASI, the more likely someone is to have hardening of the arteries.
Stroke/Carotid Artery Ultrasound Test	➔	This ultrasound test identifies plaque buildup in the carotid arteries, which is a leading cause of stroke.
Peripheral Arterial Disease (PAD) Test	➔	Leg cramps due to poor circulation could indicate something more serious. This screening measures the extremities for peripheral arterial disease.
Abdominal Aortic Aneurysm Ultrasound	➔	This screening checks for aneurysms in the abdomen. The danger lies in the risk of the aneurysms bursting or rupturing. (Four-hour fast required)

BSU to Remain as Football-only Member in Big East Conference

TIMES-NEWS

BOISE • Boise State University announced today that it is remaining as a football-only member of the Big East Conference and is in ongoing, substantive discussions with the Big West Conference to be the home for the majority of its Olympic sports. Consistent with these discussions, the Big West announced today that it will hold a meeting of its presidents prior to the start of the coming academ-ic year for a final decision on Boise State's membership in the Big West beginning July 1, 2013. "There is no doubt that conference affiliation is a difficult and complex issue, but I am very pleased where we stand today and excited for the future prospects of all of our Bronco sports," said Boise State President Bob Kustra. Boise State has issued its withdrawal notice to the Mountain West Conference effective June 30, 2013.

Ortiz, Red Sox Beat Mariners in 10th Inning

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SEATTLE • David Ortiz hit a sacrifice fly in the 10th inning and the Boston Red Sox beat the Seattle Mariners 2-1 for a split of the four-game series.

Ortiz, announced earlier in the day as the AL's designated hitter in the All-Star game, hit a 2-0 pitch to deep right field for the go-ahead run.

Vicente Padilla (2-0) pitched a scoreless ninth. Alfredo Aceves recorded his 19th save.

Pedroia tied it in the eighth with his sixth home run of the season. He connected off Jason Vargas, who allowed five hits in eight innings.

Vargas has given up 22 homers this year, matching a career high — it took him 201 innings last year, 117 this season. When the ball went over the fence, Vargas put both hands on top of his head and Pedroia pumped a fist as he rounded first.

The day after the Seattle bullpen was forced to throw 8 1-3 innings because of an elbow injury to starter Erasmo Ramirez, Vargas gave the Mariners relievers some rest.

Boston starter Felix Doubront lasted just 4 1-3 innings and issued a career-high five walks. He struck out four, allowed three hits and repeatedly wiggled free to allow just a run.

Padilla worked around a one-out double from Justin Smoak in the bottom of the ninth. Dustin Ackley popped out and Brendan Ryan flied out.

Ichiro Suzuki's sacrifice fly drove in Chone Figgins, who had singled to lead off the third inning then stole second. Brendan Ryan's single up the middle pushed Figgins to third with none out.

Despite the brisk start to the inning, Seattle scored just once. Casper Wells struck out, Kyle Seager walked and Jesus Montero flied out.

Doubront was replaced by Matt Albers after hitting Seager to load the bases in the fifth. Jesus Montero bounced into a double play on the first pitch from Albers.

Pehrson Polishes Off Main Event Victory

BY LINDA BRITTSAN

For the Times-News

TWIN FALLS • The usual suspects were up front for the final laps of the Commercial Tire Super Stocks main event race at Magic Valley Speedway on Saturday, but this time it was Casey Pehrson who came through with the main event win.

After taking over the front runner position from his father Dan Pehrson at lap five, Casey Pehrson managed to defend his lead despite rounds of pressure on his rear bumper from Kris McKean. Soon Hannah Newhouse and Daniel Shirley got in on the mix and the three shuffled for position behind Pehrson until the caution was brought out at lap 25 for debris.

After the restart Daniel Shirley was Pehrson's biggest rival while Newhouse and McKean battled just behind. At lap 30 Shirley took over as frontrunner but four laps later the caution flag was once again displayed after Willie Dalton spun on the back stretch. Taking his position on the high side for what would be the final restart Pehrson retook the lead, defending his position until the checkered flag flew at lap 40.

"I hate getting out in front early like that because I get real cautious," Pehrson said. "Then the 23 car (Shirley) came out of nowhere and passed me. It kind of made me mad how fast he went around me so at the last restart I just told myself that I was going to beat him."

Shirley reported "misfiring" in the engine in the late stages of the race.

Ernie Hall took command of the Brennan's Carpet Street Stocks race right out of the gate. Starting third in a pack of seven Hall went to the lead as soon as the first lap was put up on the scoreboard. From there he began to pull away from the rest of the field and by lap 10 he led Paul Browne by a wide margin. As the race progressed caution-free, Hall cruised to the checkered flag 7.607 seconds ahead of Browne for his third main event win of season.

"Paul (Browne) is so good that if he gets out in front of me I can't catch him," Hall reported. "So if I am out in front I really have to go. I have to keep the pressure on him in the point standings so he doesn't get too far ahead!"

Magic Valley Speedway Results

Commercial Tire Super Stocks: 1. Casey Pehrson, 2. Daniel Shirley, 3. Hannah Newhouse, 4. Kris McKean, 5. Kendel Woll.

Brennan's Carpet Street Stocks: 1. Ernie Hall, 2. Paul Browne, 3. Russell Dalton, 4. Jay McDonald, 5. Mitch Pehrson.

Magic Valley Pipe Hornets: 1. Jason Quale, 2. Jeff Peck, 3. Chad Everett, 4. Eddy Cole, 5. James Cole.

Quale's Electronics Jr. Stingers: 1. Hailey Douglas, 2. Justice Coates, 3. Rieleo Browne, 4. Makayla Woll, 5. Trenton Thomas.

The Car Store Thunderdogs: 1. The Tank, 2. Hoffa Mobile, 3. Stinkin Lincoln.

In other action Jason Quale led the Magic Valley Pipe Hornets main event race by a wide margin until the caution came out at lap seven. Undaunted, Quale retook command of the race and quickly began pulling away from his biggest contender for the win, Jeff Pack. It was Quale's first trip to the winner's circle of the season.

Hailey Douglas won the first round of competition in the Quale's Electronics Jr. Stingers race for the fall championship and Douglas Brownfield drove "The Tank" to victory with The Car Store Thunderdogs.

Phelps Locks Up Another 8-race Program in London

ASSOCIATED PRESS

OMAHA, Neb. • Michael Phelps' Olympic program is set. He'll be going for another eight gold medals.

He's not the only one who'll be busy in London. Get ready to see a lot of Missy Franklin.

And how 'bout Anthony Ervin! After eight years away from swimming, he'll be at the Olympics, too.

Phelps wrapped up another stellar week at the U.S. trials Sunday night, rallying to win the 100-meter butterfly and secure his spot in five individual races at the Olympics. Throw in the three relays, and that adds up to eight.

Again. "I guess that's OK," Phelps said nonchalantly.

Franklin will have four individual races in London after capping her week with a dominating win in the 200 backstroke. She's expected to swim all three relays, as well, setting her up to become the first U.S. woman to swim seven events in a single games.

Uhh, make that the first female. She's still a girl, a 17-year-old who'll be a high school senior in the fall. But first, she's got some important business this summer: the Olympics.

"I can't believe I have seven events," Franklin said. "It's so overwhelming but Please see SWIMMING, S2

MILWAUKEE • Pinch runner Carlos Gomez raced home following two throwing errors after he stole second base in the bottom of the ninth inning to lift the Milwaukee Brewers over Arizona.

Gomez entered after Aramis Ramirez drew a leadoff walk from Patrick Corbin (2-4). With one out, Gomez swiped second and jumped to his feet as the throw from catcher Miguel Montero ended up in center field. Outfielder Gerardo Parra picked up the ball but threw wildly to third, allowing Gomez to score the winning run.

John Axford (2-5) pitched a scoreless ninth inning.

Spain Wins Again, Beating Italy 4-0 at Euro 2012

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KIEV, Ukraine • Just like clockwork, Spain's "tiki taka" passing game tore Italy apart.

The World Cup champions controlled the play Sunday in the European Championship final, as they usually do. They moved the ball up the field with short pass after short pass, as they usually do.

But, incredibly, they also managed to score a whopping four goals, something they don't usually do.

It all added up to a 4-0 win over Italy and a third straight major soccer title for Spain.

"We won being true to our playing style, and by moving the ball the way we moved it we knew how to take charge of the match," said Spain goalkeeper Iker Casillas, the team's captain. "What we do is difficult but we make it look easy."

Casillas and Spain striker Fernando Torres also made their own histories. Torres became the first man to score in two European Championship finals, and Casillas played in his record 100th victory in international soccer.

Spain's other goals on Sunday at the Olympic Stadium came from David Silva,

ASSOCIATED PRESS

Jordi Alba and Juan Mata.

"We were superior to Italy," said midfielder Xavi Hernandez, perhaps Spain's most influential player over the last four years. "We played a complete game and perhaps the best of the entire European Championship. We made history!"

Four years ago at Euro 2008, Spain ended a 44-year drought of major titles, beating Germany 1-0 in the final to start a run that has been unmatched by any other team in history.

Although they lost to the United States in the semifinals of the Confederations Cup in 2009, snapping a record 15-game winning streak, the Spanish have been nearly impossible to beat in competitive matches.

A year after that game against the Americans, Spain opened the 2010 World Cup with a loss to Switzerland. But they then went on a tear, winning their next six games to finally claim a World Cup title and undoubtedly shed for good the "underachiever" tag.

In all that time since Euro 2008, Spain has won with flair, using its short passing game — dubbed "tiki taka" by the Spanish media and adopted by the team — to dazzle scrambling opponents.

"Tonight, there was no contest," Italy goalkeeper Gianluigi Buffon said. "They were too superior, so the bitterness at losing this final is only relative."

Spearmon Cruises in 200 with No Controversy

ASSOCIATED PRESS

EUGENE, Ore. • With a Monday runoff in the women's 100 meters still looming over the U.S. track trials, Wallace Spearmon kept the men's 200 controversy-free with an easy victory.

Spearmon got off to a slow start, but recovered in time to win in 19.82 seconds Sunday at Hayward Field.

His victory — and his chance for redemption at the London Games after losing the bronze medal to disqualification in Beijing — was an expected finish to what should have been the conclusion to the trials.

Instead, Allyson Felix and Jeneba Tarmoh will run Monday afternoon to settle a third-place tie in the 100 for the final spot on the U.S. Olympic team.

Felix and Tarmoh finished in a dead heat for third in the 100 more than a week ago behind winner Carmelita Jeter and Tianna Madison, putting the team for the event in limbo. Track officials had no policy in place to resolve it but the next day devised a tiebreaker that included the options of a runoff or a coin flip.

The decision was put off eight days to allow Felix and Tarmoh to focus on the 200, which Felix handily won Saturday night. Tarmoh finished fifth.

On Sunday morning the athletes got together with track officials and decided on the Monday runoff.

USA Track and Field was criticized because there was no tiebreaking policy in the first place and because the matter lingered for so long. It certainly got most of the attention on Sunday as the trials wound to a close.

Wearing his sunglasses, Spearmon overcame his shaky start and finished the 200 well in front of runner-up Maurice Mitchell and Isaiah Young.

Spearmon is anxious to erase the bad memories from Beijing, when he was disqualified for a lane violation.

"That's definitely something that's been on my mind since 2008. It's hard to make one Olympic team, go and make the final, step on the line when you thought you had a medal, do about 300 meters of the victory lap and have to live with that," he said. "If I didn't make the team this year, that would've been on my mind the rest of my life — the chance I could've had. Being able to go back and make my second Olympic team and have a chance at redemption, I don't take my second chances lightly. I'm going to go out there and leave it all on the track."

Spearmon was the obvious favorite in the field, which was somewhat diluted when sprinters Justin Gatlin and Tyson Gay decided to pass after securing spots on the Olympic team in the 100. And reigning Olympic 200 bronze medalist Walter Dix didn't run because of a lingering hamstring injury that was apparent in the 100.

Dix's only option for making it to London will be as a member of the 400 relay team.

Shortly after Spearmon claimed his third U.S. title in the event, his good friend Usain Bolt ran the 200 at the Jamaican Trials, finishing second to Yohan Blake. The trio of Blake, Bolt and Spearmon instantly became the favorites going into London.

In other events on Sunday, defending outdoor champion Lashinda Demus won the women's 400 hurdles in 53.98, joining runner-up Georganne Moline and third-place finisher T'Erica Brown on the Olympic team.

On the men's side, Michael Tinsley won the 400 hurdles in 48.33, besting reigning Olympic champion Angelo Taylor and defending Olympic silver medalist Kerion Clement.

Bershawn Jackson, the defending Olympic bronze medalist, fell into the finish but finished fourth.

London will be Taylor's fourth Olympics.

"Not many people make it to their fourth Olympic team, so this is something that I really wanted to do," Taylor said. "I knew the competition I was facing. My main goal was just to stay healthy, and goal No. 2 was just to make the team."

Leo Manzano won the men's 1,500 in 3:35.75, followed by former Oregon Ducks teammates Matthew Centrowitz and Andrew Wheating.

so exciting. The whole week went really, really well."

Ervin will have only one event in London, a chaotic dash from one of the pool to the other. But it's amazing that he's going at all, considering he walked away from the sport in 2003 while at the peak of his career, burned out and desperate to discover a deeper meaning to life. He spent eight years working odd jobs, finished his college degree and even auctioned off the gold medal he won in the 50 free at Sydney in 2000 to aid tsunami victims.

Now, after returning to the sport just a year ago, he's got a chance to win another gold. A runner-up finish behind Cullen Jones in the 50 freestyle locked up his improbable spot on the American team.

"I am surprised to be here at all," said the 31-year-old Ervin, whose has a sleeve of tattoos on each arm and turns interviews into a discussion on everything from philosophy to Biblical parables.

He put on quite a show during the medal ceremony, grabbing the mic and shouting, "The journey continues, because I'm going to Londonnnnn!" Then, after slandering it to the deck with a loud thud, he took off on a victory lap around the arena, soaking up the cheers of more than 12,000 fans.

SAN JOSE, Calif. • Sam Mikulak heard the names rattled off. Jake Dalton. Jonathan Horton.

Each announcement followed by 10 seconds of clapping and a brief wave from the latest members of the U.S. men's Olympic gymnastics team.

"It seemed like an eternity that's for sure," Mikulak said.

More than enough time for the 19-year-old to wonder if he made the wrong decision on Saturday when he rested his sprained left ankle rather than compete in the final day of Olympic trials.

"The whole time I was in the meeting, it was panic," Mikulak said.

Relax kid, you're good. Mikulak was the final name called by U.S. men's program director Dennis McIntyre on Sunday, though it took a moment for it to sink through his perfectly spiked hairdo.

"It hilarious because they said Sam and Sam was just like 'What? What?'" Horton said. "Sam was just like so pumped, it was awesome."

Reaching a goal more than a decade in the making has a tendency to do that to somebody.

Mikulak, Dalton and Horton will join trials winner Danell Leyva and national champion John Orozco in London on a team expected to challenge longtime powers Japan and China for team gold.

Chris Brooks, Steven Legendre and Alex Naddour are the alternates.

Horton gives a veteran presence to the deepest U.S. Olympic team in recent memory. The 26-year-old helped the U.S. win a team bronze in Beijing four years ago, then added a silver medal on high bar. None of the other four members are over 20.

"It shows that the future, we're going to be tough," Mikulak said with a laugh.

And, the U.S. hopes, in the present too. U.S. men's team coordinator Kevin Mazeika is confident Mikulak will be ready when men's qualifying starts at the O2 Arena on July 28.

Mikulak will undergo intense rehab and likely won't be able to do full routines on floor or vault for two weeks. He will join the rest of the team at training camp in Colorado Springs, Colo., from July 8-11 and coach Kurt Golder believes the first University of Michigan male gymnast to make an Olympic team will be close to 100 percent.

Dalton, the reigning NCAA champion, gives the U.S. someone who can put up eye-popping numbers on floor and vault. The 20-year-old won both events during trials easily, his explosiveness on the floor leaving Brooks to joke he was "disgusted" watching Dalton's powerful tumbling runs.

The junior at Oklahoma called the moment "bittersweet" because it means the tight-knit group of 15 national team members will be split up. The alternates will stay in Birmingham — about two hours northwest — during the games. Brooks will try to stay focused, pointing out the U.S. used two alternates in Beijing four years ago.

"That's something you notice," he said. "At the same time, you know you want the guys in front of you to stay healthy."

PUBLISH: June 11, 18, 25 and July 2, 2012

NOTICE OF REQUEST FOR STATEMENT OF QUALIFICATIONS (SOQ) CITY OF KIMBERLY HEALTH CARE FACILITY CONSTRUCTION

1. The City of Kimberly is accepting Statements of Qualifications (SOQ's) from qualified public works licensed contractors interested in construction of a new medical, behavioral health, and dental care facility, located in Kimberly, Idaho, intended for use by Family Health Services Corporation. This project is funded in part by funds from the Idaho Community Development Block Grant awarded to the City of Kimberly.

2. The purpose of this Request for Qualifications is to prequalify public works licensed contractors for participation in the competitive bidding process for construction of medical facilities in accordance with Idaho Statute 67-2805 Category B competitive bidding process. The Category B competitive bidding process consists of two stages - an initial stage to prequalify prospective contractors based on The City of Kimberly and Family Health Services Corporation's qualification criteria for the project, followed by a stage during which sealed bids will be accepted only from prequalified contractors.

Categories for evaluation are:

A) Experience in construction of medical/dental facilities;

B) Quality/quantity of references;

C) Company's financial ability to construct the project; and

D) Company's ability to complete the project within the given time frames

3. Family Health Services Corporation owns and operates medical, behavioral health, and dental facilities in Twin Falls, Buhl and Jerome, Idaho, which serve Twin Falls County and Jerome County residents. The existing centers treat patients for medical, behavioral health, and dental needs. Due to the increased demands in these areas of service, Family Health Services Corporation will be adding operation of a new 4,000 square foot facility in Kimberly.

4. Schedule:

• Issue Request for Qualifications: 6/25/2012

• Statement of Qualifications Due: 7/20/2012

• Notification of Prequalified Contractors: Week of Aug 13, 2012

5. This Request for Qualifications does not commit The City of Kimberly or Family Health Services Corporation to enter into any contract, to pay any costs incurred in the preparation of a proposal, bid or in subsequent negotiations, or to procure or to contract for any project.

6. In the event that it is necessary to revise any part of the Request for Qualifications document, timely addenda will be sent via e-mail, fax, or certified mail to those contractors that have requested a copy of the Request for Qualifications document. All addenda must be signed and included with the SOQ.

7. The City of Kimberly and Family Health Services Corporation assume no liability for disclosure of proprietary material submitted by respondents to this Request for Qualifications. All SOQ submittals shall be considered public documents under applicable state law except to the extent portions of the submittals are otherwise protected under applicable law. Responders should segregate any asserted proprietary information and provide an explanation as to why such information shall not be deemed a public record, citing the applicable exception under the Idaho Public Records Act.

8. In evaluating each of the SOQ's, The City of Kimberly, Family Health Services Corporation and their consultants will consider all of the information provided by the contractors and the responsiveness of the SOQ. The City of Kimberly, Family Health Services Corporation and their consultants may conduct such investigations as they deem necessary to assist in the evaluation of a potential contractor. In order to qualify for participation in the competitive bid process for medical building construction services, contractors must provide all of the requested information in the Request for Qualifications.

9. Written objections to qualification procedures must be received at least five (5) business days before the date and time upon which SOQ's are due. If deemed necessary by The City of Kimberly, The City of Kimberly will respond to any such objection in writing and communicate such response to the objector and all other contractors seeking to prequalify, adjusting submittal timeframes if necessary.

10. SOQ's must conform to the instructions presented in the formal Request for Qualifications. One (1) hard copy must be received by 12:00 noon on July 20, 2012. The City of Kimberly will not accept copies sent by fax or e-mail. SOQ's must be submitted in a sealed envelope or package and clearly marked SOQ FOR CITY OF KIMBERLY / FAMILY HEALTH SERVICES CORPORATION CONSTRUCTION CONTRACTOR, with the contractor's name and address clearly indicated on the envelope or package. SOQ's must be in the actual possession of The City of Kimberly on or prior to the above-noted time and date at the location indicated below. Late submittals shall be returned to the sender unopened and shall not be considered nor evaluated. SOQ's shall be sent to:

IF JULY 2 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY: Your friendly side is in full bloom this month, so it is a good time to enjoy a weekend with other likeminded individuals or to join a group, club or organization. Because you are a bit too focused on being logical in August, it is wise to check with your friends before making family decisions or taking on any important new project or relationship. Your ability to analyze numbers and make strategically sound decisions involving your career or business is highlighted during November. Get your ducks in a row before January when your luck temporarily desserts you and people will be more critical of your transgressions or errors. Work hard and pay bills on time.

HOROSCOPE Jeraldine Saunders

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Bright-eyed and bushy-tailed bats a thousand. People love to know that you have an interest in their opinions and are charmed when you ask intelligent questions. Leave the "me-first attitude" at home.

TAURUS (Apr. 20-May 20): Loving someone who doesn't love you back is like hugging a cactus. The tighter you hold on, the more it hurts. A physical attraction isn't the barometer to use when deciding whom to pair off with.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Charm and disarm them. You may be more appealing to a special someone or become absorbed in a creative effort that takes up all of your time. An existing romance could vibrate with harmony.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Work hard to wrap up important business issues early in the day so you have plenty of time to spend with family and friends. Surprise visits or invitations could be in the stars. Avoid major expenditures.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): No cats were harmed in the making of your curiosity. It is perfectly acceptable to ask questions. Sincere inquisitiveness will serve to highlight your intelligence, rather than demonstrating ignorance.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): People won't always say what they mean. Or they might say something at the wrong time. Wait until next week to nail down an important deal or have a heart-to-heart discussion with a loved one.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Don't rain on someone's parade. When you judge someone without knowing them, you do not define them, you define yourself. You can follow your bliss as long as you don't give in to fads or fancies.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Measure up. Friends don't care if you live in a mansion or a cardboard box. You might feel the spur of implied criticism even when none is meant. Don't be overly self-conscious in group situations.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You aren't ready to swim with the big fishes, but the little ones only get thrown back. Don't hang out with people who have given up on their dreams because they will be jealous of yours.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Remain aboveboard and don't go overboard. You may exaggerate your success or your failures. You might be restless to make changes, but shouldn't dive in to a new project or relationship.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): In your darkest hour, you can always find the light within. You will do quite well simply resting on your laurels. This is good time to study technological matters or to apply scientific analysis.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): The clock strikes the hour for genius. New ideas and ingenious methods can put you on track to material success. This is a great time to brainstorm but not a good time to put financial ideas into action.

DEAR ABBY: When I was a child, my mother — a bipolar schizophrenic — abused me. At 12, I decided I had had enough of her mental and physical abuse. A family friend helped me to leave and be placed with my father. I am now 35 and haven't seen my mother since then.

DEAR ABBY
Jeanne Phillips

A few years ago I wrote her a letter. In it I included pictures of my children, saying I would like her to know her grandchildren. She ripped the photos into pieces and sent them back with a note telling me to leave her alone and that I had "made my choice in life."

Last month, I received a letter from her saying she regretted destroying the pictures and would now like me to send more and she could meet us all. She also asked me for $6,000. She claims I "know" she never abused me and that she isn't mentally ill.

It has taken a long time for me to overcome the things she did to me. Even now, when I drive through the old neighborhoods where we lived — a different one for every grade I went to school — I break down in tears from the memories of her abuse.

Should I write my mother back or just let it go?

— ON AN EMOTIONAL ROLLER COASTER IN ILLINOIS

DEAR ON AN EMOTIONAL ROLLER COASTER: Let it go. Until your mother is well enough to admit what she did to you — and she ISN'T — do not expose your children to her. And as to the $6,000, if you can afford to spend that kind of money, spend it on therapy to overcome the sadness that still lingers from your abusive childhood. If you give it to your mother, she will only ask you for more and more.

DEAR ABBY: My wife, "Diane," and her youngest sister, "Jenny," have grown closer in recent years. Jenny and her husband have been married as long as Diane and I have. Our children are close in age, and none of us is wealthy.

We live in different states. In her attempt to stay connected to Diane, Jenny sends gifts on every conceivable occasion and non-occasion. She sends boxes of cheap items she picks up at her local dollar store — household knickknacks, toys, kitchen gadgets, plastic trinkets and costume jewelry. It's always things we neither need nor use, and the postage probably costs more than the items in those boxes.

Abby, I don't like it. Our home is already jammed with too much stuff. I have told my wife I want her sister to stop sending all that junk. Of course, she doesn't want to hurt her sister's feelings, so she says nothing. I have threatened to tell Jenny myself, but I know that would be a mistake. I don't interact with her and her husband anyway, and we don't communicate well. What can I do?

— STUFFED WITH STUFF IN OREGON

DEAR STUFFED: You can't "do" anything because this is something your wife is going to have to deal with. Diane should tell Jenny that the two of you have reached a point in life where you are no longer able to accept things because you have nowhere to put them, and are now in the process of clearing out items you no longer use. She should tell her sister that when she wants to reach out, please do so on the Internet or pick up the phone.

However, if Sissy refuses to take the hint, you and your wife should look for some place to donate the unwanted items. A thrift shop, church sale, women's shelter or children's hospital would be ideal — if Diane agrees, that is.

Nowhere to stand but on!"*

— Benjamin King

The European Championships, which take place every year, just wrapped up last week in Dublin. The championships run on an alternate-year cycle, and the events that have just finished decided who will get to represent Europe in next year's world championships. However, last year's events were open to everyone, and players from all over the world participated.

England's Gunnar Hallberg is a Swedish expatriate who has won two world titles since moving 20 years or so ago. He participated in the senior events with a Swedish partner of his from a few decades ago, Hans Gothe, and was full of praise for the defense his partner had encountered in today's deal.

Against Gothe's contract of three no-trump, Wlodzimierz Inicki led the club three, and partner Stefan Cabaj smoothly inserted the jack.

When Gothe took the trick, the contract could no longer be made. Declarer had six diamonds, one club and one heart, but when South crossed to the diamond 10 to lead a spade toward his king, Cabaj went up with the ace and ran the club suit.

In the other room, three no-trump made nine tricks on a spade lead. But note that if East wins the club ace at the first trick and continues with the jack, declarer can duck and needs simply to guess the spades to make his game.

Of course, in a perfect world, South would have ducked the club jack at the first trick — far easier with all four hands on view!

ANSWER: Your LHO might have jumped to slam with a void, figuring Blackwood would not help. or he may simply be gambling, not wanting to give anything away to the opening leader. Either way, a small-diamond lead looks right. When in doubt, go active against small slams.

Today is Monday, July 2, the 184th day of 2012. There are 182 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight:

On July 2, 1937, aviator Amelia Earhart and navigator Fred Noonan disappeared over the Pacific Ocean while attempting to make the first round-the-world flight along the equator.

TODAY IN HISTORY

On this date:

In 1776, the Continental Congress passed a resolution saying that "these United Colonies are, and of right ought to be, free and independent States."

In 1812, Connecticut Gov. Roger Griswold declared his state's militia would not serve in the war against Britain, reflecting New Englanders' opposition to the conflict.

In 1862, during the Civil War, Confederate forces led by Gen. Robert E. Lee withdrew to Richmond, Va., after driving back Union Maj. Gen. George B. McClellan's troops.

In 1881, President James A. Garfield was shot by Charles J. Guiteau at the Washington railroad station; Garfield died the following September. (Guiteau was hanged in June 1882.)

In 1912, the Democratic National Convention in Baltimore nominated New Jersey Gov. Woodrow Wilson for president.

In 1926, the United States Army Air Corps was created.

In 1961, author Ernest Hemingway shot himself to death at his home in Ketchum, Idaho.

In 1962, the first Walmart store (called "Wal-Mart Discount City") was opened in Rogers, Ark., by Sam Walton and his brother, James.

In 1964, President Lyndon B. Johnson signed into law a sweeping civil rights bill passed by Congress.

In 1978, Andy Rooney delivered his first commentary on CBS' "60 Minutes" in which he criticized people who keep track of traffic fatalities on holiday weekends.

In 1982, Larry Walters of San Pedro, Calif., used a lawn chair equipped with 45 helium-filled weather balloons to rise to an altitude of 16,000 feet; he landed eight miles away in Long Beach.

In 1997, actor James Stewart died in Beverly Hills, Calif., at age 89.

Ten years ago: American adventurer Steve Fossett became the first person to fly a balloon solo around the world as he returned to western Australia.

Five years ago: President George W. Bush commuted the sentence of former aide I. Lewis "Scooter" Libby, sparing him a 2 1/2-year prison term in the CIA leak case. Russian President Vladimir Putin concluded his visit to Kennebunkport, Maine, where he'd held talks with President Bush. Opera singer Beverly Sills died in New York at age 78.

One year ago: Petra Kvitová beat Maria Sharapova 6-3, 6-4 to become the first left-handed woman to win the Wimbledon title since Martina Navratilova in 1990.

THOUGHT FOR TODAY

"Courage is the price that life exacts for granting peace, The soul that knows it not, knows no release from little things."

- Amelia Earhart (1897-1937?)
