Twin Falls County Commissioner Terry Kramer talks about the structure the county wants to build to hold Search and Rescue boats within the Twin Falls city limits Friday in Twin Falls. Half of the lot is completely fenced in and already houses some Search and Rescue equipment.

LANDSCAPING REQUIRED?

Twin Falls County is asking for an exemption from meeting a city code that demands property upkeep, saying landscaping the property didn't make sense, and the added expense is a hardship for the county.

TWIN FALLS • Behind apartments, past the backs of Addison Avenue businesses, sit storage facilities for the Twin Falls County Sheriff Department and Search and Rescue.

The property, surrounded by other county-owned lots off Martin Street, isn't visible from any street, Twin Falls County Commissioner Terry Kramer pointed out. But that doesn't exempt it from a city code requiring the county add landscaping and paving the lot.

Twin Falls County hopes to add a three-bay, 40-by-60-foot storage building for county-owned boats. But doing so will trigger zoning requirements that could add more than

TWIN FALLS • How impressive was the music at last week's Jazz on the Canyon Rim?

It was good enough to please the ear of a former New York City resident who moved to Twin Falls just a few days earlier.

"It's been phenomenal," Scott Farkus said Saturday of the three-day event. "It's been a hip week."

Besides having musical tastes forged in the Big Apple, Farkus has other credentials that make him a reliable critic. He's a recently hired music instructor at the College of Southern Idaho.

He wasn't alone in lauding the quality of talent that performed Thursday through Saturday. When event co-organizer and saxophonist Chris Scholes addressed the audience Saturday evening, asking people if they enjoyed the festival, their applause was overwhelming.

"It was standing room only late Sunday," he said. "We had about 180 people in the room."

They were indoors at the Twin Falls Center for the Arts' auditorium because stormy weather forced performers and listeners off the scenic canyon rim where performances were staged the first two days. That was fitting, though, because early jazz festivals

Kimberly Woman Dies in Head-on Collision

TIMES-NEWS

TWIN FALLS • A 65-year-old Kimberly woman died Sunday afternoon when her car collided head-on with another vehicle on U.S. Highway 30 near the Chobani plant in Twin Falls.

Raquel Solis was pronounced dead at the scene after the 1:48 p.m. crash at milepost 221.8, Idaho State Police said in a news release. Solis was driving a tan Toyota Corolla eastbound when it was struck by a westbound red Dodge Intrepid driven by Paula Greene, 71, of Filer, who drifted out of her lane, police said.

Greene was transported by ground ambulance to St. Luke's Regional Medical Center in Twin Falls and later taken by air ambulance to Saint Alphonsus Regional Medical Center in Boise where she was in critical condition Sunday evening.

The passenger in Solis' car, 28-year-old Luis Solis of Kimberly, was taken to St. Luke's in Twin Falls where he was listed in fair condition. He and Raquel Solis were wearing seat belts, police said, and Greene was not wearing a seat belt.

The crash blocked the road for three hours while personnel from several agencies investigated.

Police said alcohol is not believed to be a factor. The state police investigation is continuing.

Rewarding, Challenging Job for Retiring Fish and Game Commissioner

TWIN FALLS • When Wayne Wright started hunting, finding access to his favorite game spots wasn't an issue.

He knew the Castleford farmers whose land he needed to cross for prime hunting spots, making it easy to get permission. And if the farmers didn't know him, a quick drop of his father's name would do the trick.

"I knew just about everyone," Wright said. "It's not like today."

For the past eight years, Wright served as a member of the Idaho Fish and Game Commission. He served as chairman for three years.

Gov. C.L. "Butch" Otter appointed the retired cardiologist to a four-year term as the Magic Valley's representative in 2004. Two terms later, he's stepped down from the position as of early July.

It was a rewarding but challenging experience, said Wright, who is a fifth-generation Idahoan and avid sportsman.

"When I first came on, Idaho Fish and Game was the agency people loved to hate," he said. "It took a lot of work on the director's and regional supervisors' end to help repair that relationship."

During his time on the commission, Wright helped lead the discussion on how Idaho should manage its growing wolf population.

It wasn't an easy task. The commission received national scrutiny from both the federal government and environmental groups in the battle to delist the gray wolf were fundraisers that helped build the center.

After originating with Twin Falls Rotary sponsorship in Centennial Park, the festival changed ownership and its format in successive years. Experiments with other musical genres proved unsuccessful, prompting the return to jazz this year.

That met with a positive response from patrons, many of whom praised the change in format during interviews with the Times-News on Saturday. "It's nice to have it back," one man said.

Ivan Moody, a former Pasadena, Calif., resident who now lives in Twin Falls, was among the satisfied audience members on the final afternoon of performances. He was happy with this year's lineup, calling last summer's version of the festival a collection of "garage bands."

"They lost me with that," Moody said.

He showed up Saturday ready for jazz, rain or no rain.

"I had a big umbrella," Moody said. "I was prepared."

Scholes said Sunday that this year's organizers should break even financially. That's after making a contribution to the Great Basin Jazz Camp, which was held on the CSI campus from Monday through Friday last week.

Contributions also will go to the Twin Falls Education Foundation and the Magic Valley Arts Council – both of which are partners in the musical event. How much seed money will be available for a possible 2013 Jazz on the Canyon Rim remains to be seen, Scholes said.

However, he's confident the show will go on. "We haven't had our wrap-up meeting, but our intent is yes," he said. "Our intent is that we absolutely want to do it."

"The last thing I said from the stage was, 'See you next year.'" from the endangered species list.

The wolf went back and forth from being classified an endangered species but was finally delisted in 2011. Immediately afterward, the commission outlined the rules for managing and hunting wolves.

After the attention and criticism, things have since settled down, Wright said.

"It's impossible to please everyone, but I think we've taken a good approach," Wright said. "I think everyone agrees we have to manage wolves but the question is how. I think we've tried to manage wolves like any other game species, realizing that wolves are different because they're predators."

Another issue Wright also pushed as commissioner was for more state control over Idaho's wildlife in light of growing federal mandates.

"I think Idaho is perfectly willing to manage our critters and that includes wolves, ground squirrels and bird prey," he said. "The federal government has stepped up its mandates but I hope it doesn't increase. I just hope the federal government will allow the states to be in control."

As he leaves his position, Wright said he's worried about the future of access to hunting and fishing locations throughout Idaho.

"Sometimes the only way to get to the public hunting spot is through private land, and not everyone is going to give you permission to go through there," he said. "We're seeing more 'checkbook hunting' or where people are expecting payment for hunters to use their land. That's a concept that will lead to the demise for hunting."

Replacing Wright is Joan Hurlock. Hurlock is a former forensic chemist for the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives' arson unit and a former member of the U.S. Capitol Police in Washington, D.C.

She attended her first commissioner meeting last week in Bonners Ferry.

"I've known Joan for a long time," Wright said. "I think she's going to do a great job. She's not afraid to take a firm stance on things, and you need that for this job."

Zoning

$200,000 to the project – about twice what the building costs.

Twin Falls city code requires landscaping and paving in this zoning district if property owners add a certain number of buildings. At last Monday's council meeting, Twin Falls County asked for an exemption, arguing that landscaping the property didn't make sense, and the added expense was a hardship for the county.

In a letter from Twin Falls Community Development Director Mitch Humble to city council, Humble said city staff did not recommend granting the exemption, "as it is a minimum site development requirement and (staff) feels the applicant should bring the property up to minimum standards." City Engineer Jackie Fields pointed out that an unpaved lot would result in dirt on the streets.

Councilman Shawn Barigar also took issue with the county claiming hardship, especially when the city requires small businesses to adhere to the same standards.

"I have a hard time considering improvements ... to be a hardship," Barigar said. Councilman Chris Talkington agreed.

But Councilwoman Rebecca Mills-Sojka said the city has made exemptions for other applicants before. She and Councilman Jim Munn argued that the added cost would land with the taxpayers.

"The point of the code is to beautify the community," Mills-Sojka said, adding that landscape requirements make sense for high traffic areas. "But to just store equipment?"

Ultimately, the city council voted to defer the the requirements until the city receives a stormwater permit from the Environmental Protection Agency.

County Commissioner George Urie said he wasn't sure what the next step would be for the county. Though the site houses other search and rescue storage, the county may look for another, cheaper place to put the new building, he said.

"It's just another one of those things we need to make a decision on," he said.

Idaho Farm Hosts 'Weed Dating' for Singles

BY JESSIE L. BONNER
Associated Press

BOISE • For one night a year, a neighborhood farm in northwest Boise turns into a respite for singles who are tired of the same old dating scene.

A poster board planted at the entrance of Earthly Delights Farm in late June advertised "Weed Dating," with a heart-stamped arrow guiding visitors to a sign-in table, where they were each assigned a number and invited to sample beer provided by a local brewer.

The farm is among a handful across the country offering an unconventional form of speed dating. Typically, speed daters meet at a bar or restaurant and switch conversational partners every few minutes, in hopes of finding someone compatible. With weed dating, this rapid-fire courtship takes place on the farm, with singles working together in the fields.

The payoff for their toil? A chance at romance.

Joe Peraino, 27, met his previous girlfriend while weed dating at the Boise farm last year. They were together for nine months and found that few others couples could top their account of how they met, said Peraino, who has since relocated to South Carolina.

"It's a pretty fun story, because it's not like a known thing, weed dating. A lot of people are like, 'So, were you on a pot farm?'"

Casey O'Leary, 33, owns the Earthly Delights Farm and first heard of the idea from a farm in Vermont. Farms in states that include Michigan, Wisconsin, Illinois and Ohio have also advertised similar weed dating events. O'Leary organized her first weed dating last year for about 20 people, including some friends and interns on her farm.

More than 40 men and women showed up for this year's weed dating.

"I feel bad if we don't have the right people for the right people," O'Leary said before addressing the crowd. "We're all weirdos, in general, people, we're all weirdos right? So like, it's just a matter of if the right weirdos show up."

In her role as matchmaker, O'Leary shook a small tambourine to catch everyone's attention and reassured those who had already started to eye each other that everybody would be paired up with everybody over the course of the evening.

With ages ranging from early 20s to early 50s, O'Leary also provided a small disclaimer.

"Obviously, there are some matches that probably are not appropriate, age-wise, and that's OK," she said. "We're all adults, so just have a good time."

Here's how it works: Each of the ladies will be assigned to a specific row, with more instructions to follow after "we get you into the beds," O'Leary said, prompting nervous snickers that erupted into laughter as the tension eased. The women were given a crash course in how to identify a weed versus a vegetable or fruit, and then instructed to pass that information along to the men, who rotated from each bed every three minutes.

"Please don't pull out our crops. This is a working farm," O'Leary said before sending them off.

With the dating in full swing, O'Leary moved between the neat rows of lettuce, strawberries, eggplant, zucchini and tomatoes. She said she likes the idea of helping gardeners and people with similar interests find each other. But seeing people weed her farm is also nice.

"I'm not a hookup coach, I'm a farmer," O'Leary said, her sinewy hands and dirt-encrusted fingernails proving her point.

Amy Johnson, 29, a Spanish elementary school teacher, heard about the event last year but couldn't make it.

"It's one of those life experiences that I might not always be able to get so why not take advantage of it this year?" Johnson said. "I'm not much into dating, like speed dating or like, online dating. But it's always fun to meet new people."

Weeding is actually one her favorite activities, she said, adding: "Last year I was joking that if I would have weeded with my ex-boyfriend, we probably would have never gotten together ... He was not a very good weeder."

Brian Cox, a 47-year-old artist and musician, came looking for a new way to meet people. "The typical speed dating, it's just kind of awkward," Cox said. "But this is just beautiful, because it's like outside, it's very organic. Literally!"

Joe DeGano, 46, a sales and marketing manager for a company that manufactures clutch components for motorcycles, said he was there "to meet chicks, to fall in love."

But for the more-reserved, the farm provided numbered mason jars that corresponded with the numbers assigned to each participant, just in case any of the weed daters were too shy to approach someone directly and wanted to instead leave a note.

That was how Peraino, an intern at the farm last year, communicated with a woman named Jenn at last year's event.

He described himself as somewhat shy, but at weed dating he found himself surrounded by people with similar interests. There were activists, gardeners, and outdoor enthusiasts.

"What I find is if you go to bars, you don't really know what people's interests are," he said. "You can't really walk into a bar and complain about climate change or peak oil without having people look at you weird. That would probably scare off a lot of people!"

Man Arrested for Indecent Exposure in Park

TWIN FALLS • A 64-year-old man was arrested Wednesday for allegedly exposing himself to two teen girls in Rock Creek Park.

Police arrived at about 6:35 p.m. to find a man, identified as Hank Plaskey, sitting on a bench.

An officer spoke with two girls, ages 15 and 16, who said they were swimming in Rock Creek with a 2-year-old girl when Plaskey started masturbating while sitting on the bench, a police report states.

Plaskey then allegedly got up and walked toward the woods with his penis still exposed, the report states.

One of the girls called her father and told him what happened, and the father called police, the report states.

According to the report, while the girls waited for police, Plaskey allegedly approached the girls and spoke to them, before returning to the park bench and masturbating again.

Plaskey denied exposing himself and masturbating, the report states. He was arrested for indecent exposure and booked into the Twin Falls County Jail. He was arraigned in Twin Falls County 5th District Court Thursday and released on his own recognizance.

A pretrial hearing is scheduled for Aug. 21.

'Chain Reaction,' a sculpture by Pulitzer Prize-winning cartoonist Paul Conrad, is seen June 10 in Santa Monica, Calif. After years of erosion by the ocean's salt air, 'Chain Reaction' is not in danger of exploding but of falling down.

Aging Anti-war Sculpture Prompts Explosive Debate

BY JOHN ROGERS
Associated Press

SANTA MONICA, Calif.

For decades the big, black mass of chain link that's piled up outside the Civic Center has alternately awed and inspired, annoyed and confounded, and, perhaps most often, simply divided residents of this otherwise famously tolerant beach town.

Nearly three stories high and shaped like an atomic bomb's giant mushroom cloud, "Chain Reaction" was sculpted out of copper, fiberglass and stainless steel as an enduring artistic statement against nuclear war. Its creator, the brilliant Los Angeles Times political cartoonist Paul Conrad, gave it to the city as a gift in 1991, and it has remained there, four blocks from the Pacific Ocean, ever since.

During that time, everyone from passing schoolchildren to inebriated rock concert patrons leaving the Santa Monica Civic Auditorium have climbed all over it. Others have mistaken it for a seal balancing a ball on its nose or the representation of a big tree. Armchair art critics have argued relentlessly over whether it's a work for the ages or just a meaningless hunk of junk.

Whatever it is, city officials say one thing has become certain: After 21 years of people climbing over it and salt air from the ocean eating away it, "Chain Reaction" is in danger of falling down.

The city's planning staff, estimating it could cost as much as $400,000 to fix, recently recommended that if proponents of the work can't raise that money by November the city should simply get rid of it. In the meantime, they've put a fence around it (chain link of course) to protect the public.

Their proposal, however, has set off a chain reaction of its own across this 8.3-square-mile coastal city, with people from seashore bars to City Hall arguing over what to do.

"For many people it is an incredibly important symbol, an icon of Santa Monica," said Jessica Cusick, the city's cultural affairs manager. "For others, it's junk and an eyesore."

Highlighting that divide, the city's Landmarks Commission voted unanimously earlier this week to declare "Chain Reaction" a local historical monument. The move came just four months after the city's Arts Commission voted in favor of dumping it.

The new designation won't necessarily save it from being hauled away if it can't be made safe, Cusick said.

The work, made from huge links of chain big enough to secure a ship's anchor, has developed noticeable cracks over the years. Some of the links have also begun to come loose and are teetering precariously.

The problem, Cusick said, is that although it has a stainless steel frame, the work is mainly supported by fiberglass, which is deteriorating.

"The materials that it was made out of were never designed for this use," she said, adding that while fiberglass is fine for a museum piece, a sturdier material like bronze should have been used for an outdoor work.

The City Council, which has the final word on the sculpture's future, will take up the issue in November.

So far supporters have raised only about $2,500, but Conrad's son, David Conrad, said he expects that to pick up now that the piece is a recognized historical landmark.

"It shows the gravity of this work and what a really cool thing it is," he said.

Fiscal Woes Jolt California Ski Town

BY JAMES NASH
Bloomberg News

MAMMOTH LAKES, Calif.

When an earthquake jolted this High Sierra mountain town of 8,200 in 1980, it caused $1.5 million in damage and kindled fears of volcanic eruption that scared off visitors to what's now the third-most-popular U.S. ski resort.

That pales in comparison with the latest troubles facing Mammoth Lakes. The second-lowest snowfall in 20 years kept tourists away in the 2011-2012 season. Home prices are down one-quarter from their peak and a $43 million breach-of-contract judgment threatens to wipe the municipal government off the map.

Mammoth Lakes, about 250 miles (400 kilometers) north of Los Angeles, was the second California municipality to seek bankruptcy protection in as many weeks. It followed Stockton, which was battered by rising employee costs and falling property values. While Mammoth Lakes's circumstances are different, the move into court may encourage other struggling municipalities to take the same step, said Lisa Greer Quateman, a Los Angeles lawyer.

"What we're seeing here is another domino in the lessening stigma of municipal bankruptcy," said Quateman, a specialist in bankruptcy restructurings at Polsinelli Shughart. "Decisionmakers rely on precedent, and there's very little precedent for something like this."

At an elevation of about 7,900 feet (2,400 meters) and surrounded by mountains rising to as much as 11,000 feet, Mammoth Lakes owes its livelihood to Mammoth Mountain Ski Area. As recently as 2005, when the resort was sold for $365 million to a buyout group led by Barry Sternlicht, the founder of Starwood Hotels & Resorts Worldwide Inc., real-estate investors were bidding on area properties sight-unseen in hopes the region might one day rival Vail or Aspen, the Colorado ski meccas.

Mammoth Lakes' resort-town economy sets it apart from Stockton, a city of 292,000, as well as from Vallejo, the city on San Francisco Bay that emerged from court supervision in 2011. What else distinguishes the town is the cause of its bankruptcy, a $43 million judgment from a lawsuit brought by a developer in 2006.

Tainted Town Reaches Cleanup Milestone

BY MATTHEW BROWN
Associated Press

BILLINGS, Mont. • Grass and freshly planted trees are sprouting in a new town park that sits atop the site of a vermiculite plant that once spewed asbestos dust across the mountain community of Libby — a welcome dose of normalcy for a city that has become synonymous with lung disease and death.

It's a major milestone for the mining town of about 3,000 people near the Canadian border where an estimated 400 people to date have been killed by asbestos exposure. More than 1,700 have been sickened. Lethal dust from the WR. Grace and Co. plant and the company's nearby mine once blanketed the town, and asbestos illnesses are still being diagnosed more than two decades after the mine was shuttered.

Following a 12-year cleanup, Riverfront Park hosted a wedding last weekend. Officials said another wedding and a blues festival are scheduled for early August. For Mayor Doug Roll, the federal government's recent transfer of the park to the city offers a symbolic break from Libby's lethal past.

"It's sort of like Phoenix rising from the ashes," Roll said. "We've had a lot of negative stuff going on and we're trying to turn that around."

But the park — the first major finished piece of a federal cleanup that so far has cost $447 million — carries a significant asterisk: Because of the difficulty of removing all the asbestos-containing vermiculite from the highly-contaminated site, federal regulators say some of the dangerous material remains.

For three decades, the Grace plant was used to stockpile vermiculite from the mine before the material was exported by rail across the U.S. for use as attic insulation. The town's ball fields are right next door; Libby residents who today battle asbestos disease tell stories of playing in the plant's piles of raw vermiculite as children.

Just 18 inches beneath the park's surface beneath a cap of clean soil is a fluorescent orange barrier, a warning to those who dig on the site in the future that they face potential asbestos exposure.

It's one of many reminders that Libby's tragedy has yet to run its course.

The town remains under a first-of-its-kind public health emergency declaration issued by Environmental Protection Agency administrator Lisa Jackson in 2009. The deaths are expected to continue for decades due to the long latency of asbestos-related diseases.

Agency scientists still have not settled on a safe level of human exposure to the type of asbestos found in the Kootenai Valley. That means hundreds of homes and businesses cleaned once could face additional work.

Almost a million cubic yards of soil and contaminated material have been removed from Libby to date. Federal regulators say they hope to have that phase completed in the next three to five years. The end date is uncertain, pending the results of a risk assessment to determine safe levels of exposure.

The assessment could be finished sometime next year, said the EPA's Libby team leader, Victor Ketellapper. But citing the potency of Libby's asbestos, independent scientists reviewing the document already have questioned whether it goes far enough to protect human health. If they push for changes, that could further delay completion of the assessment — and the cleanup.

Jeff Camplin, an environmental safety consultant who has been working with activists in Libby, said the uncertain timetable means the EPA has pushed forward without enough scientific grounding to guide its cleanup.

"They just seem to be throwing money at the issue," said Camplin. "There's not a good handle on what is the scope of the problem, what is the overall master cleanup plan?"

CIVIL WAR DECLARED IN SYRIA

RECALL

Red Cross formal status of Syrian Conflict could result in war crimes prosecutions.

BY ALBERT AJI AND FRANK JORDANS
Associated Press

DAMASCUS, Syria • Syria's 16-month bloodbath crossed an important symbolic threshold Sunday as the international Red Cross formally declared the conflict a civil war, a status with implications for potential war crimes prosecutions.

The Red Cross statement came as United Nations observers gathered new details on what happened in a village where dozens were reported killed in a regime assault. After a second visit to Tremseh on Sunday, the team said Syrian troops went door-to-door in the small farming community, checking residents' IDs and then killing some and taking others away.

According to the U.N., the attack appeared to target army defectors and activists.

"Pools of blood and brain matter were observed in a number of homes," a U.N. statement said.

Syria denied U.N. claims that government forces had used heavy weapons such as tanks, artillery and helicopters during the attack Thursday.

Syrian Foreign Ministry spokesman Jihad Makkidssi said the violence was not an massacre — as activists and many foreign leaders have alleged — but a military operation targeting armed fighters who had taken control of the village.

"What happened wasn't an attack on civilians," Makkidssi told reporters Sunday in Damascus. He said 37 gunmen and two civilians were killed — a far lower death toll than the one put forward by anti-regime activists, some of whom estimated the dead at more than 100.

"What has been said about the use of heavy weapons is baseless," Makkidssi added.

The U.N. has implicated President Bashar Assad's forces in the assault. The head of the U.N. observer mission said Friday that monitors stationed near Tremseh saw the army using heavy weaponry and attack helicopters.

The fighting was some of the latest in the uprising against Assad, which activists say has killed more than 17,000 people. Violence continued Sunday, with more clashes reported around the capital, Damascus.

The bloodshed appeared to be escalating. On Sunday, the International Committee of the Red Cross said it now considers the Syrian conflict a civil war, meaning international humanitarian law applies throughout the country.

Also known as the rules of war, humanitarian law grants all parties in a conflict the right to use appropriate force to achieve their aims. The Geneva-based group's assessment is an important reference for determining how much and what type of force can be used, and it can form the basis for war crimes prosecutions, especially if civilians are attacked or detained enemies are abused or killed.

Ford Recalls Escape Vehicles

DETROIT • Ford Motor Co. is recalling more than 10,000 redesigned 2013 Escape SUVs to fix carpet padding that could get in the way of braking.

Ford says that wrongly positioned carpet padding could reduce space around the pedals and cause drivers to hit the side of the brake pedal when switching from the accelerator.

The auto maker told the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration that dealers will remove the carpet padding and replace a console trim panel at no charge.

Ford said the recall covered 8,266 vehicles in the U.S. Ford spokeswoman Marcey Zwiebel said it also affected about 2,000 vehicles in Canada and a couple hundred in Mexico.

Zwiebel said Ford had not received any reports of accidents or injuries related to the problem, which she said was discovered "through internal evaluations." The vehicles were built between March 8 and June 7 at Ford's assembly plant in Louisville, Ky.

The recall is expected to begin July 23. Owners may call the automaker at 866-436-7332.

Ford sold 28,500 Escapes last month, up 28 percent from June 2011.

Study: Parents Pulling Back on College Spending

BY DAVE CARPENTER
associated press

CHICAGO • Families have implemented more cost-saving strategies to cut college spending in the past academic year, choosing less expensive schools and finding more economical ways for students to attend.

More students also are living at home in order to help afford college, according to new survey results.

The findings are from an annual study released Monday by Sallie Mae, the country's largest student lender.

They show that the average amount spent on college by families responding to the survey declined by 5 percent in the 2011-12 school year. More parents and students alike said they make their college decisions based on the cost they can afford to

"We are seeing families make adjustments, saving more money and being more cost-conscious."

Sarah Ducich, senior vice president at Sallie Mae pay than in the previous four studies.

"This really reflects the economic conditions that we see today," said Sarah Ducich, senior vice president at Sallie Mae. "We are seeing families make adjustments, saving more money and being more cost-conscious."

The survey, conducted for Sallie Mae by the Ipsos polling firm, was based on telephone interviews in April and May with 1,601 college undergraduates and parents.

Parents spent an average $5,955 on college from their income and savings, results showed. That was down from $6,664 a year earlier and $8,752 the year before. They also borrowed slightly more — $1,832 compared with $1,573 in the 2010-11 survey — although that was still less than they did two years ago.

Students took on more of the burden by digging deeper into their own funds. They spent an average $2,555 on college from their savings and income in the last academic year, up from $1,944 the previous year. But their spending wasn't enough to make up for cutbacks by their parents.

All told, parents funded 37 percent of college costs through spending or borrowing, down from 47 percent two years ago. Students accounted for 30 percent; grants and scholarships footed 29 percent; and relatives and friends paid for 4 percent, according to the survey.

Just over half of the students in the survey lived at home while they attended college this year, up almost 9 percent from a year ago. Most of that increase was accounted for by families with income of more than $100,000.

A shift toward two-year colleges also was evident for a second straight year, Sallie Mae said. Respondents included 29 percent who attended two-year public schools, up from 21 percent the previous year.

Feds to Reroute S.F. Bay Ships to Protect Whales

BY JASON DEAREN
Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO • Scientists studying the carcass of a 47-foot fin whale that washed up on a beach in the Point Reyes National Seashore last month found the creature's spine and ribs severed, likely from the propeller of one of the huge cargo ships that sail those waters.

There have been many victims of such accidents in recent years as migrating blue, fin and humpback whales have been lured close to California's shore by plentiful krill, the shrimp-like organisms they eat. All three species are endangered.

Now, after a two-year effort spurred by the uptick in accidents, federal maritime officials have approved a plan to protect whales in and around San Francisco Bay. It includes rerouting shipping traffic and establishing better ways to track whale locations.

The changes crafted by the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, shipping industry representatives, whale researchers and the Coast Guard will likely take effect next year, after a final review by the United Nations International Maritime Organization.

"In 2010 it really struck home when a female blue whale carrying a calf was found dead on the beach," said Maria Brown, NOAA's superintendent for the Gulf of the Farallones National Marine Sanctuary. "And blue whales' numbers are so small — to lose a female and a new whale coming into the population really sent home the message that we needed to look at the whale strike issue."

The shipping industry worked with federal authorities to establish new cargo lanes in one of the world's busiest ports.

"Nobody wants to hit a whale, just like anybody driving down the highway doesn't want to hit anything either," said John Berge, vice president of the Pacific Merchant Shipping Association, who worked on the plan.

Norman Sas, Inventor of Electric Tabletop Football, Dies at 87

BY MARTIN WEIL

The Washington Post

Norman A. Sas, 87, who invented a buzzing, vibrating tabletop game called Tudor Electric Football, a wildly popular and long-enduring simulation of professional football action, died June 28 at his home in Vero Beach, Fla.

The cause of death was not reported. Family members confirmed his death.

With an electric motor and a sheet of metal, Mr. Sas devised a game that enthralled millions, winning the devotion of generations of children and retaining their loyalty as they grew up.

The electric motor caused up and down oscillations in the metal sheet, which was painted green with gridiron stripes to resemble a football field. The vibrations caused plastic figures to bump and push one another in a miniature evocation of gridiron play that combined an appetite for competition, a fascination with football and an American inclination toward tinkering.

The game was inspired in part by a horse racing game also produced by Mr. Sas's family-owned company that used a vibrating surface to make pieces move.

The tabletop football game, invented in 1948, became even more popular after it was licensed by the National Football League in 1967. "For the first 10 years, we generated more money for NFL properties than anyone else," Mr. Sas once said.

The game was also a major hit in the toy world at large. About 40 million were said to have been sold. People "grew up with the game imprinted on their psyches," said Jerry McGhee, a member of the board of directors of the Miniature Football Coaches Association.

The quivering playing field transmitted force to the figures through prongs jutting from their bases and emitted a steady "bzzzzz" when the switch was engaged.

In the early days, this produced uncoordinated movement over the living-room gridiron. At first, players "just went everywhere," said Lynn Schmidt, a former president of the Miniature Football Coaches Association. "They didn't know what they were doing."

"It was random, but it was beautiful," said Earl Shores, co-author of a forthcoming book about electric football called "Unforgettable Buzz."

The tabletop game's unpredictability was suggestive of the element of chance in football. A figure, Shores said, might without warning "make a random turn or movement and avoid an opposing player."

Actress Celeste Holm poses at a friend's home in March 1997 in Santa Monica, Calif.

Oscar-winning Actress Celeste Holm Dies at 95

BY MARK KENNEDY

Associated Press

NEW YORK • Celeste Holm, a versatile, bright-eyed blonde who soared to Broadway fame in "Oklahoma!" and won an Oscar in "Gentleman's Agreement" but whose last years were filled with financial difficulty and estrangement from her sons, died Sunday, a relative said. She was 95.

Holm had been hospitalized about two weeks ago with dehydration. She asked her husband on Friday to bring her home and spent her final days with her husband, Frank Basile, and other relatives and close friends by her side, said Amy Phillips, a great-niece of Holm's.

Holm died around 3:30 a.m. at her longtime apartment on Central Park West, located in the same building where Robert De Niro lives and where a fire broke out last month, Phillips said.

"I think she wanted to be here, in her home, among her things, with people who loved her," she said.

In a career that spanned more than half a century, Holm played everyone from Ado Annie — the girl who just can't say no in "Oklahoma!" — to a worldly theatrical agent in the 1991 comedy "I Hate Hamlet" to guest star turns on TV shows such as "Fantasy Island" and "Love Boat II" to Bette Davis' best friend in "All About Eve."

She won the Academy Award in 1947 for best supporting actress for her performance in "Gentleman's Agreement" and received Oscar nominations for "Come to the Stable" (1949) and "All About Eve" (1950).

Holm was also known for her untiring charity work — at one time she served on nine boards — and was a board member emeritus of the National Mental Health Association.

She was once president of the Creative Arts Rehabilitation Center, which treats emotionally disturbed people using arts therapies. Over the years, she raised $20,000 for UNICEF by charging 50 cents apiece for autographs.

President Ronald Reagan appointed her to a six-year term on the National Council on the Arts in 1982. In New York, she was active in the Save the Theatres Committee and was once arrested during a vigorous protest against the demolition of several theaters.

But late in her life she was in a bitter, multi-year family legal battle that pitted her two sons against her and her fifth husband — former waiter Basile, whom she married in 2004 and was more than 45 years her junior. The court fight over investments and inheritance wiped away much of her savings and left her dependent on Social Security. The actress and her sons no longer spoke, and she was sued for overdue maintenance and legal fees on her Manhattan apartment.

BUHL

James Edward Paulson was born June 4, 1937, in Del Norte, Colo., the middle son of Oscar and Arabelle Paulson. Jim passed away peacefully on Saturday, July 14, 2012, at the Desert View Care Center in Buhl.

He spent his childhood working on the ranch, bucking 100-pound potato sacks, stacking hay, and riding the trail to take cows to the range. His mom raised chickens to sell the eggs and they milked a few cows to separate and sell cream since times were tough during the Depression years. He remembered his mom driving to the top of the hill, turning off the car, and coasting down the hill to save gas.

Jim loved sports and played them all. He often told his grandkids about being a freshman, tackling the hero on the opposing team, and the coach making him captain for homecoming! He had to kiss the senior homecoming queen, even though he was extremely bashful.

Jim was always an early riser, which was instilled in him by his dad who often said, "When I say jump, you jump, and ask how high on the way up."

Jim and Glennys Davis were married in 1955. They spent the first two years of married life in a two-room house, where they pumped water outside and had to walk a path to the privy. They farmed with family in Colorado, where all four of their children were born.

In 1973 they moved to Buhl, Idaho, making nine separate trips to haul all of their machinery and 50 head of cows with an old bob-tail truck and trailer. On the farm, their kids remember all of the rocks they had to pick and the tall, tall Idaho corn.

Jim loved watching all his kids' ball games and 4-H shows. Their home basketball and volleyball courts were always busy with kids and friends.

He farmed, sold real estate, and managed his apartments. Jim's legacy to his kids was to work hard, work together, and live within your means. Many times he repeated his mom's favorite saying, "Do the best you can and that will be bad enough."

Upon retiring he spent time at their cabin and bought a boat to go fishing. His favorite day would be to pick up Gene Mendini, drive to Strike Dam where Don Davis would be waiting and catch perch all day.

"God grant that I may live to fish until my dying day. And when it comes to my last cast, I then humbly pray, When in my Lord's great landing net and I'm Peacefully asleep that in His mercy I be judged; Big enough to keep!"

His past time was carving log beads and working with wood. He made a log swing for each of his kids and grandchildren, plus made the two-seated benches for the Red Fish Lake Lodge.

His parents and younger brother Hank preceded him in death. Surviving Jim is one brother, Ronnie; his wife Glennys; his children and best friends, Gail (Charlene) Paulson, Gary (Roxanne) Paulson, Greg (Shawna) Paulson, and Jayme (Jamie) Shouse. Eight grandchildren called him grandpa, Mathew (Kristina) Paulson with great-granddaughter Arabelle, Rodney (Chelsy) Paulson, Christopher Paulson, Rachele (Will) Bossert, Cory (Kenji) Paulson, Tara (Dade) Pettinger, Darby Shouse, and Taylor Paulson.

A private family service will be held at a later date. Our family would like to make a contribution in Jim's name to the Ronald McDonald House in Boise if you would like to share. Memorial contributions can be mailed to Glennys Paulson at Box 350 Jerome, ID 83338 or to any of the family members.

“There is no whining in politics. Stop demanding an apology, release your tax returns.”

John Weaver, a veteran Republican strategist, after presumptive GOP nominee Mitt Romney said anew that he won't go beyond releasing his 2010 tax records and, before the election, his 2011 taxes

Democrats Need to Get Their Message Down

Since their summer convention in Boise, Idaho Democrats have spread out across the state to start campaigning.

Randy Stapilus

Ridenbaugh.com

Campaigning saying what?

What they said at their convention is in part a reflection of Republican electoral success: A good deal of the platform is a refutation of 2010 Idaho Republican convention positions. There's this, for example, from the party's platform preamble – actually, this is almost half of it:

“We reject closed, private elections and voter intimidation. We demand that we continue direct election of US Senators. We reject unwanted government intrusion into medical decisions. We recognize the need for a modern federal banking system, and reject a return to the gold standard as inconsistent with a 21st century economy. We reject the position that state governments have an arbitrary right to nullify federal laws, a position that was settled nearly 150 years ago through bloody conflict.”

Probably a majority of Idahoans would agree to that point. But as for clearly saying what Idaho Democrats are for, as distinct from Republican expressions of broader policy, that's an old problem. The Republicans have honed a short-form mantra (One, two: Lower taxes, less gov – hey, you live in Idaho, you know the drill); the Democrats have not. It's not that the Democrats have no ideas or principles, it's that they're less easily compressed.

John Rusche, the Lewiston Democrat who is House minority leader and informally centerpoint for Democratic legislative candidates around the state, acknowledged: “It's a hard thing to encapsulate on a bumper sticker.”

One highly important issue for candidates, he said, is support for education, in a traditional sense – “The need for improved performance doesn't mean depriving students of teachers; it requires investment.” Another is economic development, which takes “more than just tax cuts: You have have to have healthy community, education, and capital available. You have to be able to train and retrain the work force. ... There is a public good, and government has a role.”

While Democrats generally, he suggested, are talking about these things, though their overall messages will be influenced by who they are and what their district is like. Another candidate remarked of the convention, “there wasn't a lot of comparing notes.”

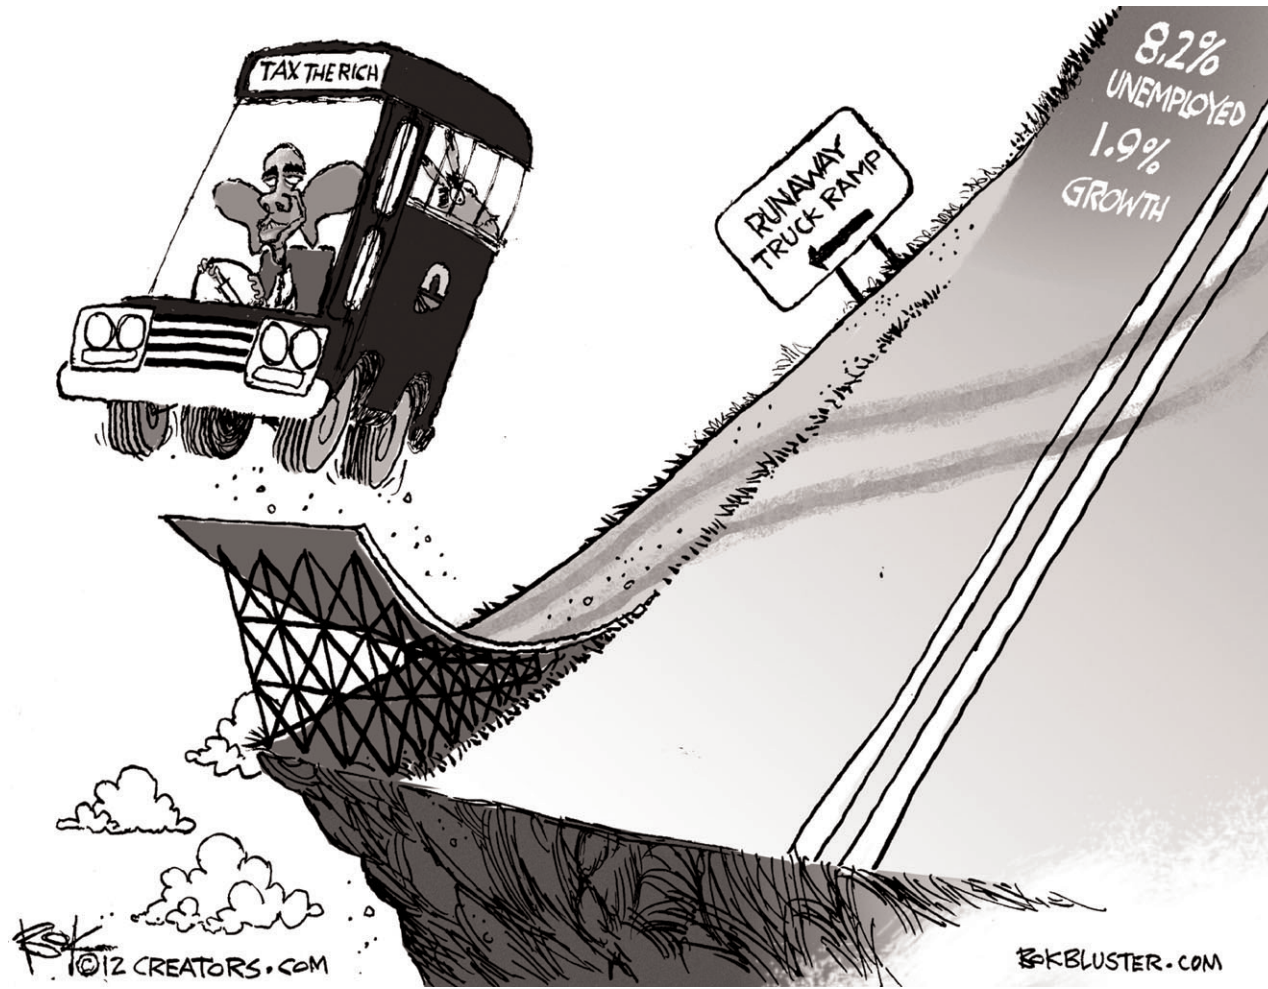

But after talking to a few Democratic candidates (a larger than usual number of Democrats are running for the Legislature this year), a couple of philosophical themes are woven through these policy themes.

One is pragmatism, often expressed as a willingness to work with the other party (an obvious necessity in a Legislature dominated by the other guys). Senate candidate Betty Richardson at Boise, for example, running in a traditionally Republican district (something like it has only elected one Democrat to the Legislature for one term, ever), spoke of intent to cross the aisle and work with Republican legislators. Hard-core baiting is not on her agenda.

The other philosophical is a sense of “the common good.” This tends not to be pushed as far as it might, but a sense of some degree of community, which was once a larger part of conservatism than it is now, seems to be working its way into Democratic arguments, even in more conservative and Republican areas. A decade or two ago, that might not have made for much difference from many Republican candidates; now, it could.

As to what messages gain some traction, we may have to wait until fall, or so, to see.

What You Can't Do on a Presidential Vacation

At the end of his summer vacation last week, Mitt Romney got the question inevitable for anyone in the White House or hoping to get there:

At Bradley's Hardware in Wolfeboro, N.H., Romney was asked if, at a time of such “grim economic news,” he should be vacationing at all. Romney responded that if he became president, he would make sure all Americans get the “capacity to take a vacation now and then with their loved ones.”

We're not supposed to begrudge our leaders their time away. Point taken. What people resent is how politicians carefully calculate when, where and for how long they'll take off to ZIP Codes that are cool in the summer, warm in the winter and generally inaccessible to Joe the Plumber.

On the other hand, catching an overhauled, overgroomed, and over-protected politico in a body of expensive water is one of the few chances those of us canoeing in a state park get to see the man inside the suit. (Or woman inside the pantsuit, as the case may be; see, for example, Hillary Clinton mini-golfing on Martha's Vineyard in Massachusetts, hiking in Wyoming or dancing in her bathing suit in the U.S. Virgin Islands.) The photos of Romney whooshing across the lake on a water scooter were so revealing because they were so rare. His thighs are pasty! His hair moves! He likes turquoise for his swimming trunks!

The specter of Romney frolicking (later he was in a gigantic boat) in sight of his mansion unhinged the editors of The Wall Street Journal. Not only is the presumptive Republican nominee squandering a historic opportunity, they wrote, but just as President Barack Obama's campaign is successfully defining Romney as an out-of-touch offshoring

Margaret Carlson

Bloomberg News

elitist hiding money in the Cayman Islands, “the rich man obliged by vacationing this week at his lakeside home with a jet-ski cameo.”

The Journal's editorial page usually celebrates moguls at play. In Romney's case it channeled the pain of campaign operatives who quake at the thought of their principals out of sight – and, more important, mobile-phone range. It leads to nothing but trouble and embarrassing photographs. Think of Bill Clinton's flabby thighs in swimming trunks, Obama shirtlessly surfing in Hawaii, Jimmy Carter and the killer rabbit, John Kerry windsurfing after he blew in the wind over voting for funding for the war in Iraq before he voted against it.

Normal people – the most significant voting bloc – don't windsurf, or like people who do, or so pollsters would have us believe. The Vineyard combines everything normal people don't like: swells from the Acela corridor and pointy-heads from the Ivy League aboard non-motorized boats. Clinton aide Dick Morris was so alarmed by Clinton's Martha's Vineyard vacations that he forced the family to go to Wyoming and ride horses. Someone with an eye on Joe the Plumber told Obama to forgo his trip to the Vineyard this year.

To comply with the first rule of politics, Romney should be spending the summer defining himself before Obama finishes the job for him. Fueled by Obama campaign attack ads, the image of Romney as a heartless job out-sourcer with the ethic of Gordon Gekko and temperament of Scrooge (he gives a lot to the Mormon Church but to no one else) is taking hold. Among swing-state voters who said the ads changed their minds, 76 percent now support the president, versus 16 percent for Romney.

To comply with the first rule of politics, Romney should be spending the summer defining himself before Obama finishes the job for him. Fueled by Obama campaign attack ads, the image of Romney as a heartless job out-sourcer with the ethic of Gordon Gekko and temperament of Scrooge (he gives a lot to the Mormon Church but to no one else) is taking hold. Among swing-state voters who said the ads changed their minds, 76 percent now support the president, versus 16 percent for Romney.

Yet Romney is nothing if not fearless. He topped off his vacation by heading to New York's Hamptons for three fundraisers. Like Willie Sutton, Romney went there because that's where the money is. Where else to soak the rich but where the rich are soaking? Despite being behind in fundraising (in June, Obama collected $71 million to Romney's $106 million), the president decided the Hamptons were too dangerous a place to be seen in campaign season.

Romney goes all funny when the subject of money comes up, joking about having once been unemployed and about having multiple Cadillacs. He dismisses concerns about income inequality as the preoccupation of the “envy-oriented” and says the subject is something to be discussed in “quiet rooms.”

In his defense, Republicans probably are more forgiving of candidates who flaunt their wealth – so long as they observe certain guidelines:

- As much as possible, refer to each of your multiple homes as a family compound.
- Own, don't rent like the Democrats do. See, for example, Romney's lake, George W. Bush's ranch, Dwight Eisenhower's farm; also Clinton's and Obama's houses on Martha's Vineyard. (John Kennedy and Kerry are exceptions to this rule.)

- Stay inland (Romney, Bush, Ronald Reagan) or, if you must dunk in an ocean, do so in a swing state (Richard Nixon in Key Biscayne, Fla.) or the Pacific (Romney in the La Jolla enclave of San Diego).

- Recreate with high-RPM toys: snowmobiles, ATVs, speedboats, etc. Only wussy liberals waste time cross-country skiing, sailing and surfing.

Luckily for Romney, there were more pictures of his many grandchildren than his house. Tanned with good teeth and hair, they look like the Kennedys, who somehow escaped the effete label despite such decadent pursuits as tennis and yachting.

Republicans give their leaders more room to relax. Reagan took 349 days over eight years at his California ranch, and Bush topped him with 490 days at his ranch in Texas (make that 977 vacation days if you count time at Camp David). Democrats are just more anxious. Obama's time off this year will be as close to a staycation as his family will allow.

Obama's Pros and Cons as Summer of Campaigning Starts

BY JULIE PACE
Associated Press

WASHINGTON • Four months from Election Day, President Barack Obama has an edge in support among women, African-Americans, Hispanics and young people, groups that could swing the race in November.

He retains the power of incumbency and people generally like him.

But there are indications that Obama's supporters aren't as enthusiastic about him as they once were, and the Democrat no longer is in a fundraising league of his own, with Republican Mitt Romney and GOP-leaning groups raking in the campaign cash.

Plus, the shaky economy, which crashed in fall of 2008 and helped Obama capture the presidency, is a huge vulnerability. Come November, it could trump all his other advantages.

A look at Obama's assets and liabilities:

Advantages

Power of Incumbency: He's the president, and that means he can set the national agenda. It's a power Obama has put to good use during his re-election campaign. He used the anniversary of Osama bin Laden's death to remind voters of his national security credentials. He made a direct appeal to Hispanics by announcing a more lenient immigration policy for people who came to the U.S. illegally as children. The president also already is known to the public so his campaign can focus its efforts on defining Romney instead of spending time and money introducing Obama.

Demographics: Obama leads Romney among women, African-Americans, Hispanics and young people, edges with key voting blocs that could help him capture battleground states. The Obama campaign is banking on support from Hispanics to win out west in places like Nevada and Colorado, and in Virginia, where the Hispanic population has surged. High turnout among African-Americans would help Obama in North Carolina.

olina. And if Obama wins the women vote, it would be a significant boost to his efforts to reach the 270 electoral votes needed for victory.

Likability: No matter how bad the economy gets or how low Obama's job approval ratings dip, polls show many Americans still like the president. And that personal appeal could make a big difference with undecided voters who may find it hard to vote against someone they like. About 50 percent of those surveyed in a recent NBC News/Wall Street Journal poll felt positively about Obama, compared to 33 percent who felt positively about Romney.

Strong Surrogates: The Obama campaign has two popular and persuasive surrogates at its disposal: Michelle Obama and Vice President Joe Biden. Both keep up a robust campaign schedule. They head to battleground states when official business keeps the president in Washington. And they're dispatched to places where they may be more popular than he is. The first lady's approval ratings — 64 percent view her favorably according to a recent Pew poll — far exceed her husband's. And Biden has an easier rapport than Obama with white, working class voters in places like Ohio and Pennsylvania.

Liabilities

Economy: There is no greater threat to Obama's re-election prospects than the economy. Even the most loyal Obama supporters say that if the already shaky economy softens any further before Election Day, the president's chances of winning will be significantly diminished. The nation's unemployment rate is stuck above 8 percent, though it has come down from its high of 10.1 percent in 2009. No one in the White House or Obama campaign expect significant economic improvement before the election. But advisers do fear that the economy could get worse, it could cement the notion with voters that the president is the wrong economic steward.

Outside money: Romney and outside groups supporting him are expected to spend more than $1 billion during the campaign, with much money being used to flood the airwaves with TV ads attacking the president. Democrats have struggled to compete with the torrent of GOP money. A Democratic super political action committee hasn't come close to matching the fundraising totals of its Republican counterparts. And Obama's campaign was vastly out-raised by Romney's campaign last month. The president and his advisers say Obama could be the first incumbent running for re-election to get outspent — though they also may be trying to motivate reluctant Democratic donors.

Waning Enthusiasm: Obama himself acknowledges that his candidacy isn't as exciting as it was in 2008 when he was a political newcomer. Voters who lack enthusiasm may not donate money or volunteer for his campaign. They also may not show up to vote in November. That's a particular concern for Obama among young people, who not only voted for him in large numbers in 2008, but were a core part of his volunteer base. A Pew Research Center poll conducted last month showed that 60 percent of younger voters say they are giving quite a lot of thought to the election, down from 71 percent in 2008.

Lack of second term specifics: Obama's re-election rationale is based more on broad themes, like economic fairness, than specific policy objectives for a second term. A recent economic speech in Ohio was largely a rehash of ideas the president has previously proposed. It left the president open to criticism from Republicans and some Democrats who say he hasn't provided voters a clear enough sense of what he wants to do in a second term. Obama campaign officials counter this criticism by saying the president still wants to pass previously proposed ideas that were blocked by Congress in his first term — and by noting that Romney hasn't offered many specifics of his own.

Mitt Romney Faces Summer of Hurdles, Opportunities

BY KASIE HUNT
Associated Press

WASHINGTON • As the White House challenger, Mitt Romney can seize on the attention that accompanies the selection of a running mate. When the London Olympics get under way, he can use that spotlight to play up his leadership of the 2002 Winter Games in Salt Lake City.

His candidacy also is benefiting from the fundraising power of outside GOP-aligned political groups that are spending millions on TV ads to promote him and undercut President Barack Obama. The weak economic recovery offers the chance for Romney to make inroads among unhappy voters.

Not all is rosy, however, for the former Massachusetts governor.

Health care is the last thing Romney wants to talk about. As he appeals to independent voters, he has to fend off charges that by moving to the middle, he's changing core positions for political purposes.

Advantages

Picking a vice president: It's one of the biggest decisions Romney will make during the campaign and will shed light on Romney's judgment at a time when voters are just getting to know him. Announcing the decision will ensure that he can dominate headlines, for a few days at least, in the middle of an otherwise slow summer, and could provide a fundraising boost. With a running mate in place, Romney will gain a new top surrogate who is likely to act in the traditional role of a vice presidential nominee: attacking the top of the other ticket — Obama in this case.

The Olympics: The 2012 Games in London are made for Romney as he looks to showcase one of his signature achievements, his work running the 2002 Olympics in Salt Lake City. The event was mired in scandal before Utah leaders hired Romney to try and dig them out of the mess. Romney's campaign so far has refrained from introducing to the general electorate his record as steward of the Olympics, but aides have planned extensively for the August games. Look for Romney to do interviews with major media outlets and attend the opening ceremonies as well as a few events.

Super political action committees: Romney has exceeded fundraising expectations, and he's also getting lots of help from wealthy Republican donors and some Supreme Court decisions. The new rules allow outside groups to spend millions — individuals don't have the same $2,500 limit that's placed on the official campaign — to run TV ads.

The Republican National Convention: The spotlight will be on Tampa, Fla., at the end of August, where the Republican challenger will accept the party's nomination and his running mate with make a national debut. Numerous rising stars within the Republican Party will get prime speaking slots. At a time when Democrats control the White House and Senate, Romney and the Republican Party will command attention for a full week.

Liabilities

Health care: It's the last thing Romney wants to talk about. In June, the Supreme Court ruled that the key part of Obama's health care law — the requirement that all in the U.S. carry health insurance — is constitutional under the power Congress has to levy taxes. Romney enacted a similar mandate in Massachusetts when he was governor, calling the requirement a penalty instead of a tax. After the Supreme Court decision, a senior Romney adviser appeared on MSNBC and said Romney didn't believe either mandate was a tax; the candidate reversed that position just a few days later, telling CBS that Obama's mandate is a tax.

Moving to the middle: After a brutal primary, Romney is working to appeal to independent, swing and other voters he'll need to beat Obama. But moving to the middle is a dangerous endeavor for a politician who's been accused of changing his core positions to accommodate political realities. An example: immigration. After months of using the issue to bloody his primary opponents, Romney has softened his rhetoric and tone in a bid to attract Hispanic voters.

Staying in the spotlight: It's always a problem for a challenger running against an incumbent president: attention. Without the bully pulpit the presidency allows, staying in the spotlight through the Olympic Games and long summer vacations will be challenging for a candidate who still needs to introduce himself to voters. Romney will have some high-profile opportunities to get noticed, particularly his selection of a vice president. But Obama still has an edge.

Defining himself before Obama does: Romney still isn't well known to most voters. In a May Associated Press-GfK poll, 44 percent of adults felt they had "a good idea of what policies Mitt Romney would pursue if elected president," compared with 67 percent who said they had a good idea of the policies Obama would pursue.

Worshippers attend Mass June 10 at the Assumption of Our Lady Catholic Church in Nweli, South Africa. The Catholic schoolteacher who helped build the church, Benedict Daswa, revered for his good deeds, honesty and compassion, was also a fierce foe of the witchcraft widely practiced here. When a lightning bolt struck the village and Daswa resisted the elders' call for hiring an exorcist, he was chased into a pub and beaten to death.

Mob Violence Victim Could Be 1st S.African Saint

BY DONNA BRYSON
Associated Press

NWELI, South Africa • Everyone in this poor northern corner of South Africa has a story about Benedict Daswa's kindness to his neighbors, his schoolteacher colleagues, the young villagers he helped to feed.

Daswa

It's therefore all the more horrifying that some of those same friends and neighbors were in the mob that beat him to death in a spasm of violence born of a flash of lightning and a witch hunt.

And even now, 22 years later, the pain and anger linger. A movement is under way to have the Vatican declare Daswa South Africa's first saint, but it has stirred concerns that old grudges which should have faded in the new post-apartheid South Africa could come surging back.

1990 was a tumultuous year in South Africa. Apartheid was ending, and violent passions were being unleashed. Recriminations and superstitions were swirling. Witch hunts — the literal kind, still prevalent on African communities — were claiming the lives of men and women.

When lightning struck homes in Nweli, the elders suspected witchcraft and wanted to hire a witch-finder. Daswa, a primary school headmaster and devout Catholic, objected. A week later he was murdered.

No one has ever been prosecuted in the case, and witnesses have refrained from speaking up. The ringleader died in a car accident years ago. Some of those in the lynch mob still live here. Today the watchword in the village of Nweli is reconciliation, and the proponents of sainthood for Daswa are quick to stress that they are not looking to reopen the investigation or hold any individual accountable.

In Assumption of Our Lady, Nweli's tiny brick church with log rafters crisscrossed like fingers laced in prayer, about 40 worshippers recently celebrated Corpus Christi, reading from Psalms in Venda, the region's main language: "O precious in the eyes of the Lord is the death of his faithful servant."

Chris Maphaphuli, who was inspired by Daswa to become a teacher and counted him as a friend, said reopening the investigation of the killing would accomplish nothing. "As Jesus was forgiving, so we must also forgive," he said.

Joao Rodrigues, the Catholic bishop in the diocese where Daswa lived and died, said the canonization effort had nothing to do with bringing the killers to justice. "Fundamentally, we believe he died with forgiveness in his heart," he said. The aim is "to highlight that the man who was killed was a man of God and that his death is a testimony to his faith."

Daswa, born Tshimangadzo, took the name Benedict when he became a Catholic. A village catechist who inspired him to convert from traditional beliefs was named Benedict. St. Benedict the African, who lived in the 16th century, was the son of slaves brought from Africa to Sicily.

Pope Benedict XVI last year called on African Christians to identify African saints to inspire them. But Rodrigues said the Daswa campaign evolved not because of orders from above, but because his predecessor, Bishop Hugh Slattery, had heard how Catholics in Nweli revered Daswa.

Daswa founded a soccer team for Nweli. He started a vegetable garden where youngsters could grow food for their families and sell produce to pay for school fees and uniforms — this at a time when the apartheid government did little to help the nonwhite needy. He was seen as a man who lived by his principles and his religion.

"This school is my home," said Alicia Nembambula, who taught there when Daswa was its principal. "Wherever we look, we have his memory. If he is looking at us, he can see his fruits."

But he also made enemies with his opposition to superstitious practices and his defense of people accused of witchcraft. He had already had to cut his ties with the soccer team he founded, because he wouldn't let the players carry lucky charms.

The trouble came to a head in 1990 when lightning damaged some of the village huts. The village headman gathered his counselors, Daswa among them, in the kraal, the cattle enclosure that served as a meeting place. Daswa argued lightning was a natural phenomenon and refused to join in paying for a witch-finder.

A week later, driving home, he found the road blocked by a log. It was an ambush. Young men pelted him with stones. He fled across a field and into a village pub, where he was clubbed and beaten to death.

It was Feb. 2, 1990. On that day F.W. de Klerk, the country's last white president, announced he was legalizing the African National Congress and would soon free its imprisoned leader, Nelson Mandela.

Maphaphuli said his friend was human, with faults; he could be sharp-tongued, but quick to apologize. He could be boastful about his faith, but he kept to his promises. He was a respected man, relatively rich, and that stirred jealousy.

Daswa's commitment to resisting superstition became all too public, Maphaphuli suggested. "It's then that they started to hate him. To hunt him. Because they wanted to do away with him."

In 2009, diocesan officials presented an initial case for beatification, based on Daswa's writings and interviews with those who knew him, to the Vatican's Sacred Congregation for the Causes of the Saints. The Vatican accepted the dossier and moved to the next step of formally requesting further documentation. That should be completed by year's end and a recommendation made to the pope.

ECSD Pulled Jackpot Football Out of Idaho

Jackpot had requested full membership in the Idaho High School Activities Association after several years as a football-only member.

ELKO, Nev. • The buck stops here. It might be the best explanation to offer — both economically and decision-making authority — as to why Jackpot's football program is rejoining Nevada. After four seasons playing in Idaho, the Jaguars' gridiron team is back in Nevada after a decision by the Nevada Interscholastic Activities Association made it official this past spring.

However, it was not the NIAA's decision where this change came about. The NIAA only takes on requests pertaining to individual schools from the school's district leadership. So the decision rested closer to home with Elko County School District Superintendent Jeff Zander making the call.

"Jackpot had asked to take all their sports to Idaho," Zander said in an interview Thursday. "I decided Jackpot is a Nevada school and should play in Nevada. The NIAA was restructuring their leagues, and I thought the timing was right to bring all (of Jackpot's) sports back to Nevada."

Jackpot was granted the opportunity to move its football program to Idaho in 2008 due to several factors — one of the biggest for Jackpot athletic director Kim Smith was competitive balance.

"Because we can't be competitive in that league," Smith said in a 2008 interview with the Free Press. "It's also an issue of safety for our kids."

"I've not seen where it is beneficial for us to play Wells or Carlin just to lose 74-4. It's not a win-win situation for us or for them."

Smith, who is still the AD at the border town school, had hopes of keeping the Jaguars in Idaho. In March, she traveled to the NIAA's Board of Control meeting in Reno to speak up for the school's wishes, but it proved to be a fruitless trip.

Last week, Smith referred the Free Press to Zander for questions on the move back to Nevada, but she believed most Jackpot residents wanted to remain in Idaho.

"There was a lot of support for Idaho," she said. "We're Nevada people, but it makes more sense to go to Idaho. We're only 45 minutes from Twin Falls."

The travel costs and missed class time were factors in the 2008 decision as well. Jackpot's closest rival in Nevada is Wells, which is about 75 miles south. One-way trips to Carlin (150 miles), Owyhee (220), Eureka (230), Austin (276) and McDermitt (315) are much longer than many of the trips Jackpot had into Idaho.

Zander acknowledged the travel concerns and said the decision to bring Jackpot's football program back to Nevada was a difficult one to make because many wanted to remain in Idaho, but he was also concerned about the precedent set if the Jaguars were to move their sports to Idaho.

"If we grant it to Jackpot, what if Owyhee wanted to go to Idaho or West Wendover to Utah? Where does this thing end?" Zander questioned. "I know there is travel, but that

The Damage Has Been Done

What's another log on this fire, right? THE NEWS: The Freeh Report unapologetically concludes that Joe Paterno was just as culpable and guilty as his direct superiors in covering up the rampant sexual abuse being perpetrated by longtime assistant coach Jerry Sandusky during and after his tenure as an assistant football coach at Penn State.

him such a platform, but on the condition that at least one of Sandusky's victims is on the set to dispute the propaganda being spewed by Jay Paterno.

Why hasn't someone in the college football community denounced the prevailing line of thought from Paterno apologists (mostly his former players), which is, "But he did so much good for so many people!"? Are we really to believe that Paterno and Paterno alone could have graduated the players he did while still winning big? Unfortunately, most of Paterno's coaching peers are no longer with us to denounce this line of thinking and stand up for their profession. It would be interesting to see what Bo Schembechler, John McKay or Bear Bryant would say if they were still around today.

Bobby Bowden is still with us, but his and Paterno's pursuit of Eddie Robinson's coaching wins record created too strong of a bond. Some might mistake a Bowden denouncement as grandstanding to be recognized as the true all-time wins leader. It would be like Sammy Sosa campaigning for Mark McGwire to be enshrined in Cooperstown.

There are calls for the NCAA to punish Penn State, even punishment as extreme as the death penalty that was handed down to Southern Methodist in the 1980s. I'm not sure the NCAA can do much here, and the possibility that it can't — all while putting that devilishly dirty cheating athletic powerhouse known as Caltech on probation — underscores the uselessness of the NCAA in doing what's really right.

But who's to say the Big 10 Conference can't or won't mete out its own justice. Can you imagine the conference's remaining 11 schools voting to kick Penn State out ... and replace the

KAHNE WINS AT NEW HAMPSHIRE, 2ND VICTORY OF SEASON

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOUDON, N.H. • The best car was rolling toward victory — until its driver and crew chief couldn't agree on how many tires to change.

Kasey Kahne capitalized on that confusion between Denny Hamlin behind the wheel and Darian Grubb in the pits to win his second Sprint Cup race of the year and make a leap toward one of the 12 spots in the Chase that determines this year's NASCAR champion.

"For those guys to miscommunicate, that helped us a ton," Kahne said. "I'll take 'em any way we can."

Hamlin's Toyota led for 150 of the 300 laps at the one-mile New Hampshire Motor Speedway on Sunday. His communication wasn't quite as good.

Kahne, who finished second two weeks ago at Kentucky to Brad Keselowski, went ahead to stay during a restart on the 240th lap when Hamlin spent extra time in the pits as his crew changed all four tires.

Hamlin wanted just two new ones.

"Darian asked me how much of the tires I felt I'd used up. I felt like I had used up a substantial amount," he said. "(I said) give me tires and no adjustments. He thought I meant four tires. Nothing's a given. Even though it looked like we had one in the bag if we took two tires, you never know."

Kahne doesn't feel he stole a victory.

"I wouldn't say 'stolen.' We ran in the top four the whole race," he said. "We were in pretty good shape, (but) if he was to keep the track position I never would have passed him."

Hamlin's longer pit stop left him all the way back in 13th place, but he kept passing cars until only Kahne remained in front. Then he simply ran out of miles and Kahne won by 2.738 seconds.

Harrison Tosses 5-hitter as Rangers Beat Mariners

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SEATTLE • Matt Harrison tossed a five-hitter, Adrian Beltre had three hits and two RBIs, and the Rangers won for the fourth time in five games spanning the All-Star break.

Harrison's 12th win kept him even with Tampa Bay's David Price for the most in the American League and continued his streak against the Mariners. Harrison (12-4) has won eight straight starts against Seattle and is 5-0 at Safeco Field.

It was Harrison's second shutout of the season and No. 4 for his career. He threw 114 pitches and allowed just four singles and Brendan Ryan's two-out double in the fifth inning.

Ian Kinsler hit his 10th homer of the season on the first pitch of the fifth inning by Seattle starter Hisashi Iwakuma (1-2).

Mariners rookie Jesus Montero singled in the first inning to snap an 0-for-23 skid.

Nittany Lions with the Fighting Irish of Notre Dame?

With everything we have seen in conference realignment, don't bet against it just yet.

THE NEWS: Sage Stallone, son of movie star Sylvester Stallone, dies at 36.

THE MUSE: Sage played in only one of the Rocky franchise's six movies, although his character as Rocky Balboa Jr. was a part of all but the first movie in the series. But when news of his death became known Friday night, this corner took a quick moment to give his rankings of the Rocky movies to the copy desk, as well as give them a piece of Rocky trivia that was embarrassingly incomplete.

The rankings go: 1. Rocky; 2. Rocky Balboa (that's VI for you Roman numeral enthusiasts); 3. III; 4. II; 5. IV; 6. V. Anyone who puts Rocky 5 anywhere but last probably has been hit in the head too many times by Tommy Morrison. Of course, the original is best and there's some wiggle room in the middle.

The trivia? Besides Stallone, who is the only actor to appear in all six Rocky films? Anyone who is a fan of the series should know the answer is Burt Young, who played Paulie, Balboa's brother-in-law.

But there is a second actor — Tony Burton, who played the role of Tony "Duke" Evers — who was a part of all six films. He was Apollo Creed's trainer for the first two fights before becoming Rocky's trainer in III, IV and Rocky Balboa; his role in V came at the beginning of the movie, which is actually a continuation from the ending of IV.

For someone that is as big of a fan of the Rocky franchise as I, such an oversight was not nearly as bad as realizing that not only was Burt Young not dead (as I recalled to the copy desk), but that we share the same birthday as well.

Wiggins Holds Tour Lead as Tacks, Nails Mar Road

FOIX, France • Crashes, falls, fractures — Bradley Wiggins has seen it all. Now add tacks and nails to the list. Still, nothing can break his stranglehold on the Tour de France.

On a day of sabotage in the Pyrenees, Wiggins had luck on his side. He avoided the chaos and spent another trouble-free stage as his Sky team controlled his main rivals to protect his yellow jersey.

At least 30 riders were disrupted by tire punctures at the top of the final climb after tacks and small nails were tossed on the road. Tour officials asked police to investigate.

Defending champion Cadel Evans was caught in the havoc. He had to wait three times for assistance. He lost nearly two minutes at one point before teammates arrived and gave the former world champion a rear wheel.

But Wiggins honored cycling etiquette by not attempting to capitalize on Evans' misfortune. He urged the peloton to slow down to allow Evans to return to the pack. Wiggins and Evans finished in the same time — 18 minutes, 15 seconds behind Luis Leon Sanchez of Spain, who won the 119-mile, 14th stage between Limoux and Foix.

This was the first day of racing in the Pyrenees, and Wiggins kept his overall lead of 2:05 over Sky teammate Christopher Froome. Vincenzo Nibali of Italy is third, 2:23 off the pace while Evans remains fourth, 3:19 behind.

After crashing out of the race with a broken collarbone last year, Wiggins has been enjoying the perfect Tour so far with the help of a team dedicated to his quest for cycling's most revered prize.

With only two big mountain stages remaining before the race ends in Paris next Sunday, and a long time trial where Wiggins is expected to blow his rivals apart, the former Olympic track champion looks all but guaranteed to become the first Brit to win the Tour. Yet, he is well aware of the dangers that can arise anywhere.

"What can you do? It's something we can't control," Wiggins said, referring to the sabotage that could have led to a reshuffle of the standings.

school is funded by Nevada taxpayers and should compete in Nevada."

Zander mentioned the California border schools that play in Nevada and some of the feelings about those programs winning Nevada high school state titles. For example, Elko's girls soccer program has finished as state runner-up the past two seasons to California's South Tahoe High School, and the Tribe's baseball program lost in the state championship to Truckee High School. The Wolverines are also a powerhouse in football as well with three straight state titles. The South Tahoe boys cross country team won the state title with Elko taking second.

The superintendent wondered if Jackpot were to start winning state titles if Idaho be as welcoming to the school.

Zander acknowledged the sentiment in Jackpot was probably split more toward the school playing in Idaho, but he said there were some who wanted to play in Nevada.

One not in the Nevada camp is former Jackpot football coach Rick Pike, who was replaced as football coach recently by Steve Montonye.

"It was all politics," Pike said. "It was more economic for us to go to Idaho. The coaches wanted to keep the football program where it is at in Idaho."

Politics or not, the Jaguars are back in Nevada for now and possibly for good.

THE FAMILY CIRCUS

By Bil Keane

“Okay, PJ’s all ready to go out and get some sun.”

Today is Monday, July 16, the 198th day of 2012. There are 168 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight:

On July 16, 1862, Flag Officer David G. Farragut became the first rear admiral in the United States Navy.

On this date:

In 1212, the Battle of Las Navas de Tolosa took place in Spain, resulting in victory for allied Christian troops over forces of the Almohad Empire.

TODAY IN HISTORY

In 1790, a site along the Potomac River was designated the permanent seat of the United States government; the area became Washington, D.C.

In 1909, the Audi auto company was founded in Zwickau, Germany, by August Horch.

In 1912, New York gambler Herman Rosenthal, set to testify before a grand jury about police corruption, was gunned down by members of the Lennox Avenue Gang.

In 1935, the first parking meters were installed in Oklahoma City.

In 1945, the United States exploded its first experimental atomic bomb in the desert of Alamogordo, N.M.

In 1951, the novel “The Catcher in the Rye” by J.D. Salinger was first published by Little, Brown and Co.

In 1964, as he accepted the Republican presidential nomination in San Francisco, Barry M. Goldwater said “extremism in the defense of liberty is no vice” and that “moderation in the pursuit of justice is no virtue.”

In 1969, Apollo 11 blasted off from Cape Kennedy on the first manned mission to the surface of the moon.

In 1973, during the Senate Watergate hearings, former White House aide Alexander P. Butterfield publicly revealed the existence of President Richard Nixon’s secret taping system.

In 1981, singer Harry Chapin was killed when his car was struck by a tractor-trailer on New York’s Long Island Expressway.

In 1999, John F. Kennedy Jr., his wife, Carolyn, and her sister, Lauren Bessette, died when their single-engine plane, piloted by Kennedy, plunged into the Atlantic Ocean near Martha’s Vineyard, Mass.

Ten years ago: The Irish Republican Army issued an unprecedented apology for hundreds of civilian deaths over 30 years.

Five years ago: Declaring a “moment of choice” in the Middle East, President George W. Bush said he would call Israel, the Palestinians and others in the region to a peace conference. A man carrying a gun and declaring “I am the emperor” was shot and killed by security outside the offices of Colorado Gov. Bill Ritter.

(The man was identified as 32-year-old Aaron Snyder.) A 6.8-magnitude earthquake on Japan’s northwest coast killed 11 people and caused radioactive leaks at the Kashiwazaki-Kariwa nuclear power plant.

One year ago: Venezuelan President Hugo Chavez left his country for Cuba to begin chemotherapy, vowing to win his fight against cancer and calling for his political allies to stay united in his absence.

IF JULY 16 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY: You may dream the impossible dream between now and the end of August, but those dreams can come true through hard work and industry, especially within the areas of business or career. Your initiative and precision are tools that will help you reach professional objectives. Your fantasies will grow wings if you take a vacation or accept an opportunity to meet a new amorous partner in early August. December is a particularly fine time to launch your most precious plans, seek sound advice, make desirable changes or to life-altering decisions.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Go to the circus for feats of derring-do. In your private life, risk-taking could be tempting, but your middle name isn't Evel Knievel. You are wise enough to know just how far you can safely go.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Remain upbeat. Your just rewards are coming and the check is in the mail. No amount of worry or fretting will make them arrive any sooner or later than the perfect time they are supposed to.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): If it's meant to be, it will be. You can trust that the universe will provide just what you need when you need it. Communicate with friends in brainstorming sessions; this may unleash innovative ideas.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): "Cancer the Crab" would prefer to be known as "Cancer the Caring." Although you are sometimes teased about being "crabby," others do understand that you usually have their best interests at heart.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Where there's a will, there's a way. If you have a compelling question, just ask the right people and you will get a useful, wise answer. Valuable input will be available from associates and loved ones

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Fight off a temporary urge to make a drastic change. It might be better to suffer through a brief period of boredom or put up with a conflict because quenching the thirst for excitement could be costly.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You may be in the mood for a change of scene. The things that grab your attention today could trigger a resolution to try something new and different. Bright ideas are worthy of thoughtful perusal.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): If you go out on a limb, watch where you start sawing. Tame an urge to make adamant demands or to offer forceful opinions. What you believe in today could change by tomorrow.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Consider not only the cost, but the benefits. Keep your ears open — especially when in the vicinity of well-connected friends and acquaintances. You might hear something worthwhile.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Tough times are like physical exercise. You may not enjoy it while you are doing it, but you will be stronger because of it in the end. Be sure there is a safety net if you engage in anything risky.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Short-term rewards don't add up when compared to long-term risks. You can achieve your dreams and be successful by being dedicated to achieving long-range plans. Avoid unnecessary perils.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): United we stand, divided we fall. If you are one with the universe, then it only makes sense that the universe is one with you. Collaboration with someone special could be just what the doctor ordered.

DEAR ABBY: There is a guy at work I've been attracted to for as long as I have worked here — six years. I work in the office and he is in the field. We see each other a couple of times a week, if that.

DEAR ABBY
Jeanne Phillips

We attended a retirement party for one of the employees recently. He started pursuing me. We ended up getting to know each other and stayed together the rest of the night. We seemed to get along very well.

We took a drive, and he was holding my hand and saying all the things a woman wants to hear. We kissed. When the night came to an end, we sat in his car and hugged and fell asleep together. (He did not push me to do anything more than the kissing, hugging and hand-holding, which I respect.) It seemed like a beautiful dream.

The following week at work he claimed not to remember much of that night, although he seemed to have a smirk on his face when he said it. Abby, anytime I hook up with someone, I tell myself, "Let's see what happens," and I don't pursue it any further, hoping the guy will. (I'm shy when it comes to men.) Then nothing ever happens. I'll be 30 soon and I've been single almost 10 years.

Should I pursue this further, or leave it alone and see what happens as I've always done?

— SMITTEN
IN MICHIGAN

DEAR SMITTEN: Whether you pursue it further or leave it alone, NOTHING is going to happen with this fellow. When he told you he "didn't remember" much about that night, he was conveying the message that you, too, should forget it. So take the hint and thank your lucky stars that the "beautiful dream" wasn't more X-rated than the one you described.

DEAR ABBY: My wife and I have a "friend" who is involved in a charitable organization that provides donated items to people in need via community giveaways.

Over the years we have given various items to this person to use in these giveaways. However, we have noticed that some of the items we have given her are now showing up in her home, and clothing we donated is being worn by her family members.

Abby, we donated because we believed our things were going to those in need. Are we wrong to be upset that they have been kept for her family's use? We are considering no longer giving our donations to her.

She is a wonderful person, and we're hesitant to confront her with our concerns, but we are left feeling our generosity was abused. How should we handle this?

— USED AND ABUSED IN S. CALIF

DEAR USED: Unless this "wonderful person" has been paying the organization for your items, what she is doing could be considered theft or fraud and an abuse of your generosity. To prevent it from happening in the future, deliver the items directly to the organization and not to her.

DEAR ABBY: When is it appropriate to ask a stepparent about a deceased parent's will? I don't want to cause any hard feelings, but I think that at some point I have a right to know about my parent's will.

— CATHY IN GEORGIA

DEAR CATHY: Of course you have the right to know about the contents of your parent's will. I don't know how long your parent has been gone, but if it has been more than a month, contact his or her attorney and inquire.
