PARKING

Those attending the air show can park in two areas starting at 8 a.m., said Kent Atkin, who coordinated parking for the show. Parking is available immediately north of the terminal and by the Magic Valley Speedway. Parking is free and buses will be available to transport people to the show from those lots, Atkin said. Flags and markers will help indicate parking areas. "The idea is we want to park as fast as we can, get a large load and move as quick as possible," he said. "Please be patient and play nice with everybody." Atkin asks people driving to the air show to come early. Volunteers and law enforcement on duty should help facilitate parking, he said. Not Guilty Pleas in Spice Case

The four were accused of distributing synthetic marijuana and were arrested as part of a national synthetic drug operation called 'Operation Log Jam.' Their trial is set for Sept. 17 in Pocatello.

POCATELLO • Four Twin Falls residents pleaded not guilty to federal drug charges Friday morning in a Pocatello courtroom. Allen Nagel, his wife, Stephanie Nagel, his brother, Gary Nagel and Joshua Cserepes all appeared in federal court, each on a count of felony conspiracy to distribute a controlled substance analogue. The four were accused of distributing synthetic marijuana, known by "spice," "Hayze" and other names.

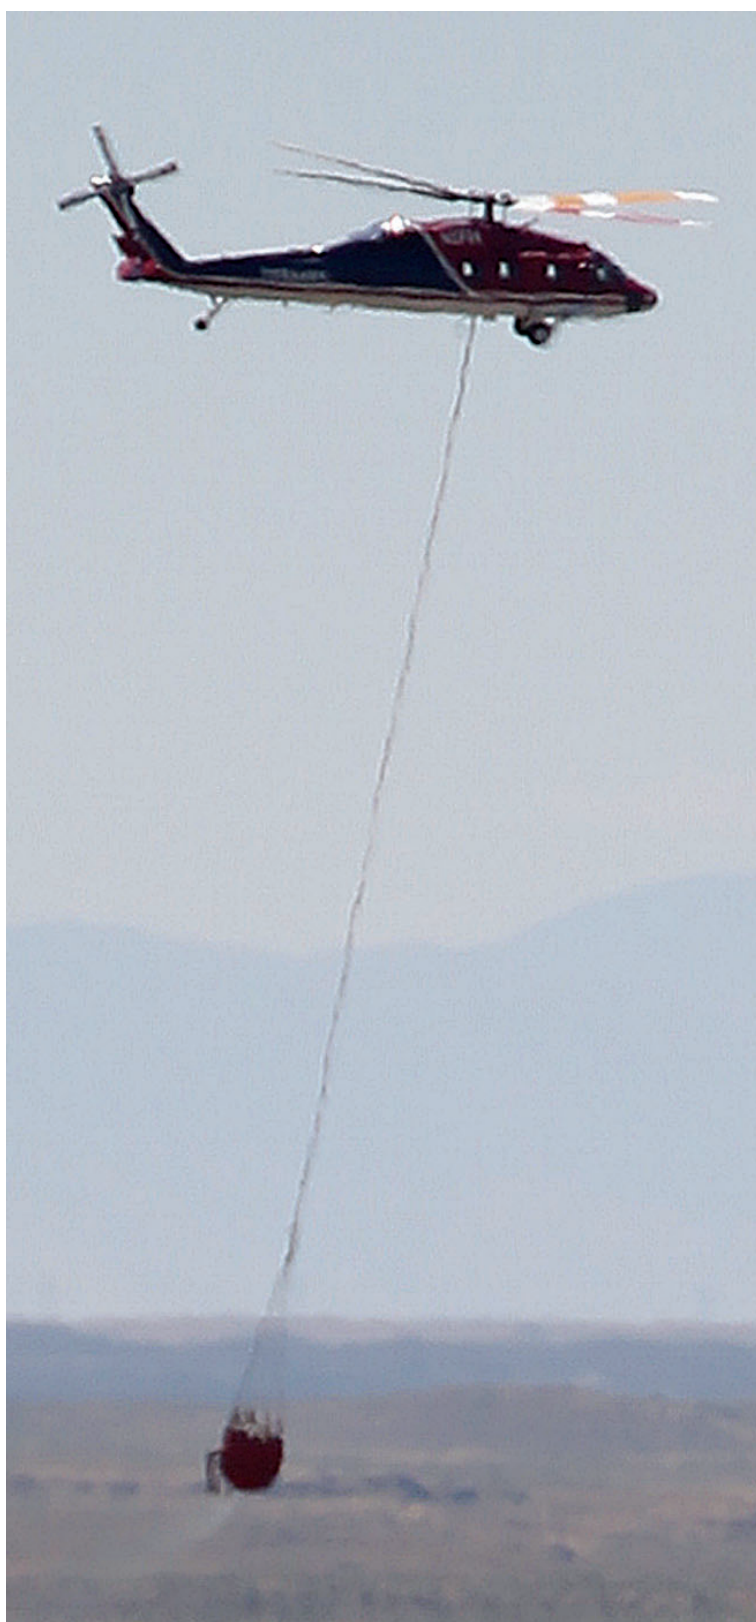

All were arrested along with a Tigard, Ore., man as part of a national synthetic drug operation called "Operation Log Jam," according to details provided by the U.S. Attorney's Office for the District of Idaho. Their trial is now set for Sept. 17 in Pocatello with Chief U.S. District Judge B. Lynn Winmill presiding. If convicted, the defendants face up to 20 years in prison, a $100,000 fine and a minimum three years of supervised release. In Twin Falls, local, state and federal law enforcement searched 11 businesses early Wednesday morning, one day after a grand jury released an indictment against the Nagels and Cserepes. Prosecutors initially sought to hold the four without bond until a trial, but Friday recommended releasing all three Nagels on certain conditions. Prosecutors asked that Cserepes remain in custody because of his prior felony record and probation violations. U.S. District Magistrate Judge Ronald Bush ordered a detention hearing on the matter for Wednesday. All four defendants were required to complete financial affidavits to determine if they were eligible for court-appointed attorneys. Please see SPICE, A2

ASK ST. LUKE'S

Assessing Your Child's Cold

How can I tell if my daughter's cold is just a cold, or something more serious? - Carla, Filer

Answered by Dr. Mitch Moffitt, St. Luke's Clinic, Pediatrics:

If your daughter experiences several mild respiratory infections each year, she's perfectly normal. Much more often than not, a respiratory infection won't require a visit to your pediatrician, but will clear up on its own in 5-7 days.

Upper respiratory infections are the most common, affecting the nose, ears, sinuses and throat. A child with an upper respiratory infection may sound congested, and may have a runny or stuffy nose, cough, sore throat, headache or fever.

Lower respiratory infections affect the lungs and bronchial tubes, and include pneumonia, bronchitis and bronchiolitis. They are less common, and often more worrisome. Symptoms can include excessive or barking coughing, fever, chest pain, and breathing difficulties.

You should call your daughter's physician if her breathing is rapid or she has to work hard to breathe; if she has little or no energy; if she is still sick and not improving after seven days; or if her condition worsens.

Home care can relieve your daughter's symptoms. Make sure she drinks plenty of fluids and gets plenty of rest. Do not allow anyone to smoke around her, and do not give her aspirin.

focus in her nose.

Viruses cause most respiratory infections, but bacteria are guilty, too, causing illnesses such as strep throat and sinus infections. Bacterial infections are treated with antibiotics; viral infections are not, because antibiotics will not help overcome these infections.

As a parent, you can help protect your daughter and others against infection by frequently washing your hands and making sure she washes, too. Keeping her home from school or day care when she is sick is also wise.

Bush asked several questions of each defendant about their answers. After both Stephanie and Allen Nagel were unsure of their total assets and liabilities, the judge ordered them to give a detailed financial statement to the court within two weeks.

Stephanie Nagel estimated her business grossed about $110,000 to $130,000 per month. But she told Bush she did not have an idea of even a range of what all her property was worth.

Allen Nagel said he told the deputy who helped him fill out the form that he paid himself $5,000 a month. But the total was actually double that, he said - $5,000 a month from his car dealership, All State Auto, and $5,000 a month from Fat Ratt Tattoo and Body Piercing.

Blaine County faces drought emergency

BY KIMBERLEE KRUESI kkruesi@magicvalley.com

HAILEY • State water officials declared a drought emergency in Blaine County due to this year's abnormally dry conditions.

The order allows the county to take actions to lessen the effects of drought conditions, according to the order issued by the Idaho Department of Water Resources.

The Big Wood River and Little Wood River's snow packs have already melted a month early and stream levels are running 20-70 percent of normal, the order explained.

According to a request from the Blaine County Commissioners, the Big Wood Reservoir's flows at Hailey were close to 800 cubic feet per second as of June 29. This is a drop in the 96-year average where flows are usually at 1130 cfs.

By declaring a drought emergency, IDWR Director

Gary Spackman is allowed to authorize temporary changes in points of diversion, place of use and purpose of use for existing water rights. However, water right holders must first fill out an application for a temporary water right change with IDWR.

By filling out a temporary change application, the water right holder assumes all risk of curtailment or mitigation if the use of water or diversion causes injury to other water rights, according to the order.

The Blaine County drought order includes water in the Fish Creek Reservoir. Currently, state wildlife officials are in the middle of trying to salvage the fish in the reservoir because they are facing dying as water levels drop. Idaho Department of Fish and Game have opened the reservoir up to anglers for harvest.

Spackman and Gov. C.L. "Butch" Otter signed the order on July 16. It will be in effect until the end of the year.

Construction at Martin-Shoup Intersection to Cause Delays through August

TWIN FALLS • On Monday, the city's public works department will begin a two-phase construction project at the intersection of Shoup Avenue West and Martin Street.

For the first phase, city crews are installing a new sewer and water line at that Twin Falls intersection.

Flaggers will direct traffic, which will be limited to eastbound and westbound traffic on Shoup Avenue. Martin Street will remain open on the north side of the intersection, but will be closed south of the intersection until Tuesday.

Drivers should expect delays and consider using Heyburn Avenue West and Carney Street.

The new pipe installation is scheduled to be completed Wednesday.

Phase two, which starts immediately after the pipe installation, involves replacing a water line along Shoup Avenue from Martin Street to Carney Street, then repaving that section of Shoup Avenue.

During the second phase, scheduled for completion on Aug. 31, traffic will be allowed on east- and westbound lanes with minor delays. The intersection of Martin Street and Shoup Avenue will remain open.

Air Show Was Pilot's Inspiration

BY ALISON GENE SMITH
alismith@magicvalley.com

TWIN FALLS • It was an air show in his youth that put U.S. Navy Capt. Brandon Cordill on the path to join the Blue Angels.

He watched them when he was young. Now, he's their Left Wing pilot, performing today.

"I never thought I'd have the chance to do it," he said. "But it sparked my interest in naval aviation."

The U.S. Navy Blue Angels headline this weekend's Air Magic Valley air show, which starts mid-morning today at Joslin Field, Magic Valley Regional Airport south of Twin Falls.

Earlier this week, the team's pilots and crew took a break from preparing for their performance to speak to the media about why they fly.

Cordill's path to the exhibition team led first to two combat deployments in Iraq and Afghanistan. While flying, Cordill said, he lost sight of his childhood dream of becoming a Blue Angel until recently when he realized he had enough flight hours to apply: 1,250.

He joined the team in September and began flying with the group in November. Each member needs about eight to 10 years of flying experience before they qualify to apply for the team.

The first time he finally flew a Blue Angels jet, Cordill said, it was totally different than flying in combat. Blue Angels jets have no external storage and are one of the lightest jets there are. The blue and yellow wings also can catch new pilots off guard, he said.

"It's like flying a whole new jet," he said.

It also causes tremendous stress on the body, he said. Pilots are required to work out six days a week to stay in top physical condition and avoid getting tired during shows.

In normal circumstances, pilots wear G-suits that compress their lower body to keep blood circulating and help avoid loss of consciousness. But Blue Angels pilots can't wear G-suits because of the different cockpit.

Petty Officer 1st Class Brian Hamilton is on the life support team. His duties include maintaining the jets' ejection seats and the heat and air conditioning on board.

"I love being around positive people, and you can't get better than these guys," he said.

Working on Blue Angels jets isn't much different than working on combat jets, he said. If it came to it, he said, it would only take about eight hours to paint a Blue Angels jet grey and get it ready for a combat mission.

Elsewhere at the airport Thursday, stunt pilot Russ Poe had a guest — Jerome High School ninth-grader Gretchen Hansten.

Poe runs the Elevate Your Life essay contest that area students entered to try to win a flight with a stunt pilot. Poe, who lost a son to drug addiction, asks the students to write essays describing their dreams and what they'll do to achieve them. Whittling the essays down to a few winners is difficult, but Poe said he thinks all the students who participate are winners since they've taken the steps to put their goals in writing.

Essay winner Hansten wrote about her dream of becoming a doctor. She said she'll take health and science classes in high school to help reach her goal.

"I want to make a difference," she said. "I hope to change somebody's life."

Air Show Hopes to Avoid Repeat of 2008 Debts

BY MELISSA DAVLIN
mdavlin@magicvalley.com

TWIN FALLS • The last time the Blue Angels came to Twin Falls, they wowed crowds — and cost taxpayers nearly $50,000.

In September 2008, the Times-News reported that revenue from the July 2008 air show fell short of expenditures by $21,513. The report was based on information presented at a Twin Falls City Council meeting.

After that initial report, new figures came in and that debt grew to $49,649, with expenses spanning two fiscal years, said Twin Falls Financial Officer Lorie Race.

That amount was split between the city and Twin Falls County, said the city's public information officer, Joshua Palmer. The total doesn't include security provided by the city, which cost about $40,000, Palmer said.

That's a scenario city officials hope to avoid this year. The Twin Falls City Council initially approved a $25,000 loan to the air show in November, then added another $40,000 on July 16. That second loan came with the condition that organizers be prepared to shave off $20,000 in costs in case ticket revenues didn't meet projections.

In response, air show director Jim O'Donnell and his team negotiated with service providers, found more in-kind donations and canceled aircraft appearances.

That was after cutting other expenses early in the planning process, O'Donnell said.

Fans of the Blue Angels and the U.S. Army Parachute Team Golden Knights won't notice a difference.

"The core show is intact," O'Donnell said. "We were able to get that together."

Though O'Donnell didn't know how many people pre-brought tickets, he did say that many ticket outlets sold out.

"That's a good thing," he said.

The approximately $361,000 air show budget is paid for by donations, ticket sales and the money borrowed from the city of Twin Falls.

Paul Man Cited for Causing I-84 Crash and Fuel Spill

TIMES-NEWS

HAMMETT • A Paul man was cited for careless driving Thursday after causing a crash that closed a stretch of Interstate 84.

Rex Hill, 66, was headed west on I-84 Thursday afternoon in a 2002 commercial vehicle pulling a Trinity trailer. Ahead of Hill, Thomas Stewart, 55, of Boerne, Texas, was driving the rear pilot car for an oversized load. The pilot car was equipped with rotating emergency lights, flags and an oversized load sign, according to Idaho State Police.

Hill came upon the pilot car at about milepost 105.5, west of Hammett, and reportedly failed to notice Stewart driving slowly. Hill struck the pilot car from behind, causing it to go off the north shoulder of the road and overturn, according to ISP.

The fuel tank on Hill's vehicle ruptured, spilling diesel fuel for about 150 feet, and the vehicle jackknifed in the median where more fuel continued to spill.

Hill and Stewart, who both wore seatbelts, were treated at the scene of the crash and released. The incident closed I-84 for about an hour and 40 minutes.

Idaho State Police continue to investigate the crash.

Wolf Looks for Love, Finds None in Calif.

BY JEFF BARNARD
associated press

A wandering Oregon wolf that has been out looking for love has gotten the cold shoulder from people in one Northern California county.

Citing fears that if wolves move into the area they will attack cattle, Tehama County supervisors have told the California Fish and Game Commission that they oppose putting the predators on the state's endangered species list.

The county officials said in a letter this week that "experience in other states suggests that control of wolf populations will become difficult if not impossible" if wolves are listed as endangered because protection efforts are "not based on scientific evidence, but rather on ethical and moral concerns."

Supervisor Ron Warner said a public meeting on wolves hosted by a conservation group drew as big a crowd as when the county imposed restrictions on medical marijuana.

"The cattlemen were really up arms," he said. "These people are adamant about the fact they don't want the wolf reintroduced down here. We've got a big enough fight going on with the mountain lions."

The wolf known as OR-7 has been roaming Northern California looking for a mate and a new territory since last winter, when he became the first of his species in the state in more than 80 years.

His travels have been tracked by a GPS collar that reports his location several times a day. OR-7 has not been linked to any attacks on livestock, though he has apparently fed on a pile of beef bones left out by a rancher.

Most recently he has been roaming a rugged high-altitude region marked by dense forests, lakes and open meadows on public lands between Butte and Plumas counties, roughly halfway between Sacramento and the Oregon border, said Karen Kovacs, regional wildlife program manager for the California Department of Fish and Game. He has made brief forays into neighboring Tehama County.

"He is still exhibiting a fair amount of daily movement, which suggests to us he is in good health, and finding enough to eat," Kovacs said.

Noah Greenwald of the Center for Biological Diversity said they want a state endangered species listing in case federal Endangered Species Act protections are dropped. They also want to see a plan developed to assure wolves return to healthy populations in California, where they were wiped out more than 80 years ago to protect livestock.

The California Department of Fish and Game is to report to the commission during its Aug. 8-9 meeting in Ventura on whether protecting the wolf is warranted.

A public hearing on the question is scheduled for the commission's Oct. 3-4 meeting in Sacramento.

Road Work to Begin Monday

TIMES-NEWS

TWIN FALLS • The city of Twin Falls will kick off more road maintenance projects Monday on some city streets.

Emery Inc. will begin seal coating streets Monday, while Kloefer Inc. will begin slurry sealing others Wednesday.

The city applies both chip seal and slurry seal each year during the summer months to extend the life of asphalt roads and minimize long-term costs.

Workers will coat and slurry seal more than 413,000 square yards this summer — or about 23.5 miles of city streets that are 30 feet wide. It's a 25 percent increase over last year.

For a map of roads affected by the maintenance, go to Magicvalley.com.

Idaho Water Dept. Turns Down Bear River Dam Permit

BY REBECCA BOONE
Associated Press

BOISE • The Idaho Department of Water Resources has rejected a proposal to build a dam on the Bear River in southeastern Idaho's Franklin County.

The Twin Lakes Canal Company applied with the agency in 2007 to build a 108-foot-high dam in the Oneida Narrows near Preston.

The canal company wanted the dam because it typically doesn't have enough water to irrigate all the land it covers. Department officials agreed the public has an interest in augmenting the water supply to farmers, but said the benefits of building the dam don't outweigh the benefits of keeping the river and fishery as is.

The Bear River drains roughly 6,900 square miles in southwestern Wyoming, northern Utah and southeastern Idaho, carrying about a million acre-feet of water a year into the Great Salt Lake.

Idaho Falls Mayor Diagnosed with Memory Disorder

IDAHO FALLS (AP) • The mayor of Idaho Falls has been diagnosed with mild cognitive impairment, which is affecting his short-term memory.

Jared Fuhriman says he was diagnosed in June and confided in several city government colleagues before disclosing his condition

Thursday. The 50-year-old mayor says he went public in an effort to squash rumors that he was severely ill.

Fuhriman, who plans to seek a third term in 2013, says he's experienced many mild cognitive impairment symptoms, including losing his place during conversations and forgetting tasks.

CEO of Amazon Supports Washington Gay Marriage Law

OLYMPIA, Wash. (AP) • Amazon.com founder and CEO Jeff Bezos and his wife, MacKenzie, announced Friday they are donating $2.5 million to the campaign to defend Washington's same-sex marriage law.

With the gift, Washington United for Marriage has raised more than $5 million for its referendum campaign.

"It's a game changer for us," said campaign manager Zach Silk in Seattle. "It puts us in unique position to win."

But, his group is still the underdog, he said. In 32 previous elections nationally, same-sex advocates have lost.

The Washington election may be the turning point, thanks in part to the Bezos' generous donation, Silk said.

"They understand what's at stake for Washington families and what's at stake for the country," he said. "We're at a tipping point, and they really understand this is an historic moment, and they want to be on the right side of history and want to make history."

Last month Microsoft CEO Steve Ballmer and co-founder Bill Gates each donated $100,000 to support the law.

Referendum 74 was certified for the November ballot in May after gay marriage opponents in the group Preserve Marriage Washington turned in more than 240,000 signatures.

The referendum seeks to overturn the gay-marriage law signed in February by Gov. Chris Gregoire.

Preserve Marriage Washington wants to preserve marriage as the union between one man and one woman, "because marriage is a unique institution that is profoundly in the common good," the group says on its website.

The same-sex marriage law was supposed to take effect June 7 but has been put on hold.

A "yes" vote on the referendum upholds the law, and a "no" vote overturns it.

Same-sex marriage is legal in New York, Connecticut, Iowa, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Vermont and Washington, D.C. Maryland legalized gay marriage this year as well, but that state also is poised to have a public vote this fall.

In Maine, voters will decide on an initiative to approve same-sex marriage three years after a referendum overturned a law passed by the Maine Legislature. And in Minnesota, voters will decide whether to pass a constitutional amendment to ban gay marriage.

So far contributions from same-sex supporters to Washington United for Marriage far outweigh contributions to Preserve Marriage Washington.

Unemployment Could Stay High

WASHINGTON (AP) • High unemployment isn't going away — not as long as the economy grows as slowly as it did in the April-June quarter.

Weak consumer spending held growth to an annual rate of just 1.5 percent, even less than the 2 percent rate in the first quarter. And few expect the economy to accelerate in the second half of the year as Europe's financial woes and a U.S. budget crisis restrain businesses and consumers.

The growth estimate Friday from the government suggested that the U.S. economy could be at risk of stalling three years after the recession ended. Economists generally say even 2 percent annual growth would add only about 90,000 jobs a month. That's too few to keep up with population growth and drive down the unemployment rate, which is stuck at 8.2 percent.

The figures came in the Commerce Department's quarterly report on gross domestic product. GDP measures the country's total output of goods and services, from the purchase of a cup of coffee to the sale of fighter jets.

"The main takeaway from today's report, the specifics aside, is that the U.S. economy is barely growing," said Dan Greenhaus, chief economic strategist at BTIG LLC. "It's no wonder the unemployment rate cannot move lower."

Sal Guatieri, senior economist at BMO Capital Markets, expects the unemployment rate to end this year — and next year — at 8.3 percent. He said he foresees no decline in unemployment because of how tepid he thinks economic growth will remain: 2.2 percent for all of 2012 and 2 percent for 2013.

Stocks rose as investors shrugged off the sluggish U.S. growth and focused instead on pledges from European leaders to preserve the union of the 17 countries that use the euro. The Dow Jones industrial average closed up more than 187 points. Broader indexes also jumped.

Terri LoPrimo's painted lawn in the Staten Island borough of New York is seen Thursday. When this summer's nationwide drought turned her prized lawn brown, LoPrimo fought back in a new way: She had it painted green.

Brown Grass? Paint it Green

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) • When this summer's drought turned her prized lawn brown, Terri LoPrimo fought back, but not with sprinklers: She had it painted green, making her suddenly lush-appearing yard the envy of her neighborhood.

The Staten Island, N.Y., resident and her husband, Ronnie, hired an entrepreneur to spruce up their yard by spraying it with a green organic dye. By Monday, the couple's property was aglow with newly green blades of grass and no watering needed to sustain it.

"It looks just like a spring lawn, the way it looks after a rain. It's really gorgeous," said LoPrimo, a 62-year-old retiree.

With two-thirds of the nation covered by a drought that stretches from coast to coast, residents and businesses in normally well-watered areas are catching on to the lawn-painting practice employed for years in the West and Southwest to give luster to faded turf.

LoPrimo paid $125 to green up her roughly 830-square-foot lawn. She said it was worth every penny to keep her home of 33 years graced by an attractive yard.

Neighbors and friends have complimented the LoPrimos on their lawn's appearance, and she said one envious friend asked for the number of their contractor, Joe Perazzo.

Perazzo, who teaches physical education at Brooklyn's High School of Sports Management, began painting lawns during his summer break three years ago. His Staten Island company touched up close to 20 lawns this summer, making it his best year to date.

"I'm booked solid for next week. If you look around, most of the lawns need some TLC," Perazzo said.

He charges 15 cents per square foot to spray on a non-toxic, environmentally friendly turf dye that he said is commonly used on golf courses.

Anaheim Police Open Fire on Suspect Again

ANAHEIM, Calif. (AP) • Anaheim police opened fire on a burglary suspect Friday morning, days after officers fatally shot two people and sparked violent protests in the Southern California city.

It was unclear whether anyone was hurt in the confrontation and no one has checked into local hospitals with a gunshot wound, said police Sgt. Bob Dunn.

Police answering a burglar alarm at a condominium complex clubhouse at about 3:15 a.m. spotted appliances outside and a man leaving the building, Dunn said.

An officer began chasing him while another officer checked out a nearby car, which suddenly sped off in the direction of the first officer, Dunn said.

The second officer then opened fire on the car but the driver escaped, Dunn said.

A search for the first man ended about 45 minutes later when a paroled burglar was found hiding near some train tracks, Dunn said.

The man had been bitten by a police dog and was taken to a hospital for treatment before being booked on suspicion of burglary and resisting arrest. His name was not immediately released.

The shooting came as activists in Los Angeles, Seattle and other cities called for Friday solidarity protests over the earlier police killings.

Last Saturday, a police officer fatally shot Manuel Diaz, who was unarmed, outside an apartment complex. Officers said Diaz, who had a criminal record, failed to heed orders and threw something as he fled police.

On Sunday night, police shot to death Joel Acevedo, a suspected gang member they say fired at officers after a pursuit.

The shootings prompted four days of violent protests, culminating Tuesday night in hundreds of demonstrators surging through downtown streets. Police said some in the crowd smashed the windows of 20 businesses, set trash can fires, threw rocks and bottles at police and damaged City Hall and police headquarters. Two dozen people were arrested.

Russia Wants More Naval Bases Abroad

MOSCOW (AP) • Russia is talking to Cuba, Vietnam and the Indian Ocean island country of Seychelles about housing Russian navy ships, the nation's navy chief said in remarks reported Friday.

Vice Admiral Viktor Chirkov told the state RIA Novosti news agency that Russia is in talks about setting up maintenance and supply facilities for Russian ships in those countries but wouldn't give any further details.

Russia's only existing naval base outside is located in the Syrian port of Tartus. A squadron of Russian navy ships, including several assault ships carrying marines, is currently heading to Tartus in a show of support for a longtime ally whom Moscow protected from international sanctions and continued to supply with weapons.

Chirkov's statement marked a sharp about-face for Russia, which closed a Soviet-era naval base at Vietnam's Cam Ranh Bay and a spy base in Lourdes on Cuba in the early 2000s during President Vladimir Putin's first term.

Along with financial reasons, that move was part of Putin's bid to improve ties with the United States. But relations with Washington deteriorated and Putin, who was re-elected to a third term in March, has grown increasingly eager to challenge Washington.

OPINION

“The lives that were saved that night. That's the comfort you take from this.”

Deputy Chief Chris Henderson saying firefighters did an incredible job after it took dispatchers more than 20 minutes into the crisis at the Colorado movie theater to ask the Cunningham Fire Protection District and other nearby agencies to provide aid at the multiplex in the Denver suburb of Aurora.

CHEERS & JEERS

JEERS to goat man and the worst pre-hunting season scouting strategy of the year.

According to Associated Press reports, a man was spotted this past week dressed in a goat suit among a herd of wild goats in the mountains of northern Utah.

According to a witness, the man appeared to be acting like a goat while wearing a costume, which had fake horns and a cloth mask with cut-out eye holes.

His presence amused newspaper readers across the country and worried wildlife management officials who thought he was an eccentric animal lover setting himself up to get shot by an unsuspecting hunter.

Turns out “goat man,” as he came to be known in headlines, is a 57-year-old California man “preparing for Canadian archery season.”

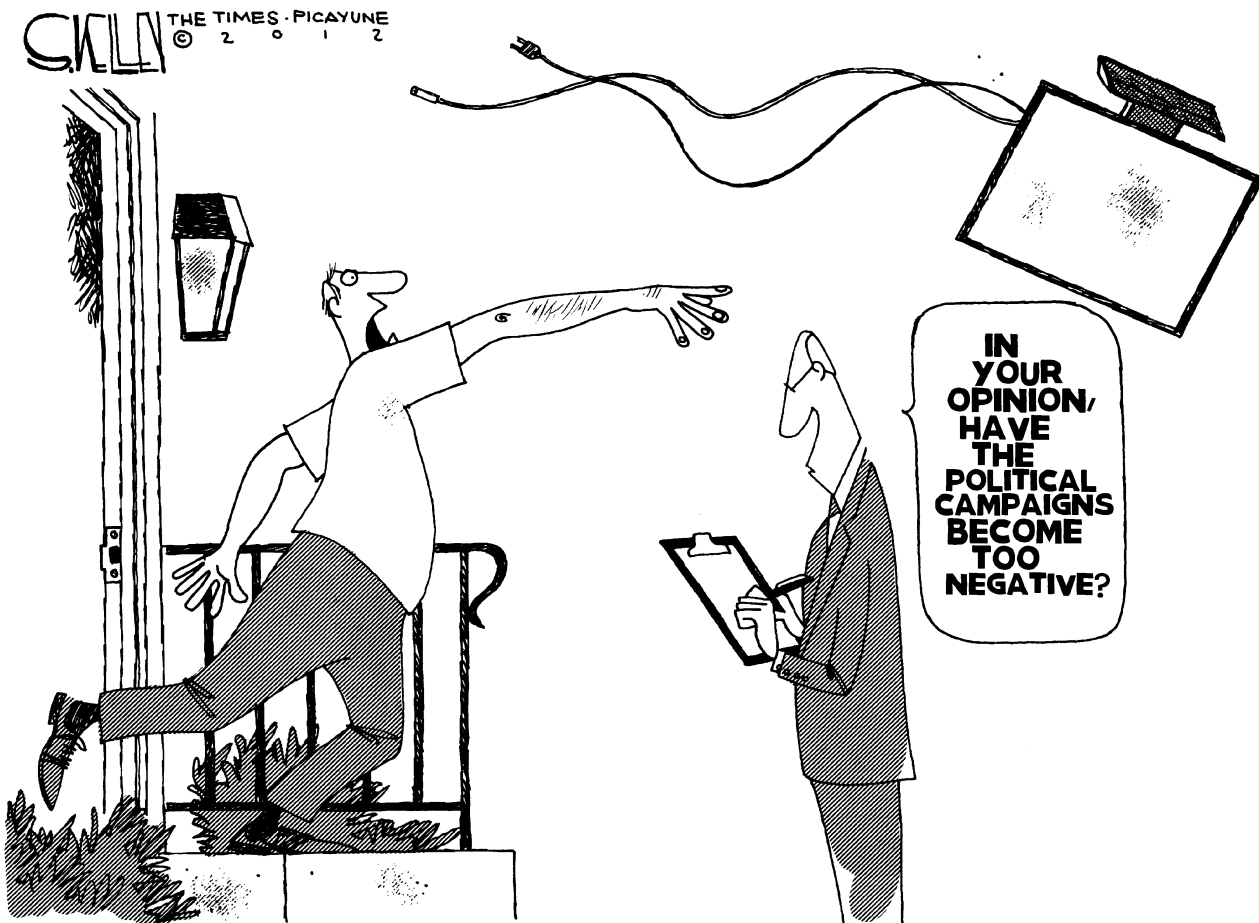

JEERS to the Heyburn City Council who continue to show that big government is still alive and well, even in conservative, small-town Idaho. The council this week tabled a vote on a list of regulations connected to its commercial garbage hauling licenses — not so they can reconsider the measure but to give the three companies vying for commercial accounts in the city a chance to read the new requirements before they are passed.

The new standards came after the council retracted a previous decision to offer an exclusive contract to PSI Environmental Systems to offer commercial services in town. A competitor with existing business contracts in town, Total Waste Management, sued over the exclusive license.

The stringent licenses give the city the right to pull said contract for any number of violations, including not responding properly to a customer complaint.

JEERS to Twin Falls’ continued subsidizing of events when fundraising goals aren’t met.

What’s the incentive for the community to donate or for organizers to hustle for those donations if both sides know the city will come to the rescue?

Week in Washington? Mitt Romney

BY CHRIS CILLIZZA
The Washington Post

Someone should have told Mitt Romney that they still speak English in England.

The Republican presidential candidate seemed to be talking in a foreign language, politically speaking, during what should have been a largely ceremonial first leg of his I-am-ready-to-be-president European tour.

First, there was the quote from a Romney “adviser” who told the London Telegraph that the former Massachusetts governor understands “Anglo-Saxon heritage” better than President Obama does. (The Romney campaign denied any affiliation with said “adviser,” and we’re inclined to take its side on that one.)

Then came the real problems — caused by Romney himself.

They started when he told NBC’s Brian Williams that the recently reported security problems surrounding the London Olympics were “disconcerting.” Cue outrage as everyone from British Prime Minister David Cameron to London Mayor Boris “The Hair” Johnson defended the Games. (But also note that, as Washington Post media blogger Erik Wemple points out, for most of the past month, “British and stateside media just wouldn’t shut up about how badly the Brits were mis-managing preparations for the London Olympics.”)

Romney backtracked in subsequent interviews, describing London as “fabulous” and even praising the city’s “great weather.” Um ... Then there were Romney’s very public comments about a very private meeting with the head of MI-6, the British intelligence agency, a break of protocol that the Guardian summed up thusly: “The British take on the national secret intelligence service comes with an extra-heavy dollop of the whole secret thing.”

Romney’s “performance” could well be forgotten by the time his European trip concludes with visits to Poland and Israel. But a headline that reads “Mitt the Twit” (as the Sun’s did) probably isn’t a good thing for a presidential candidate.

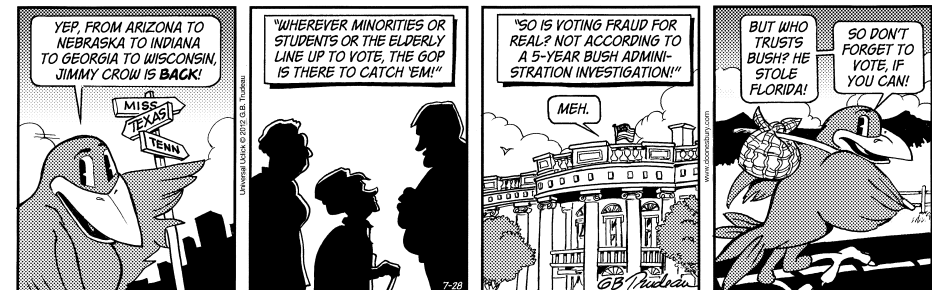

Mitt Romney, for losing something in translation, you had the worst week in Washington. Congrats, or something.

Mont. Wildfire Threat Eases

BILLINGS, Mont. (AP) • Fire crews working in cooler temperatures Friday made gains on major wildfires threatening homes in central and southern Montana, but officials warned more blazes were possible.

A mandatory evacuation for 20 to 30 homes south of Columbus was downgraded to voluntary, and significant progress was reported on a fire north of Winnett.

Yet with the landscape dried out from recent hot weather and a high likelihood of new lightning strikes, conditions were considered prime for new fires to erupt. Authorities said the fire season is likely to drag on for a while.

"It's just so dry everything is ready to go," said John Grassy with the Montana Department of Natural Resources and Conservation.

Stillwater County commissioners lifted the evacuation order on the 5-square-mile Skibstad fire south of Columbus on Friday morning after firefighters declared it more than one-third contained.

More than 230 personnel were helping fight the blaze burning in grass and timber.

Some structures were burned, but officials have not said whether they are houses or outbuildings.

A survey of damaged areas was planned Friday. A shelter for evacuees was set up at the school, but no one was staying there Friday morning, said fire information officer Cindy Super.

Meanwhile, north of Winnett, the Wolf Creek Fire grew to 19 square miles by Friday morning — a dramatic expansion from roughly 1 square mile about 24 hours earlier. The fire burning in juniper, sage and grass was about half contained with 12 houses and outbuildings threatened.

Much of the growth was attributed to a pair of backfires that were lit to starve the blaze of fuel and stop its advance, said Steve Knox with the Bureau of Land Management.

Knox described the danger to the threatened houses and outbuildings as minimal and added that full containment of the blaze was expected possible by Saturday. The fire is bordered by the two burned out areas on its east and west sides, by a road to the north and the Sacagawea River — known locally as Crooked Creek — to the south.

The Skibstad fire burns Wednesday southeast of Columbus, Mont. The fire was moving toward a 124-house rural subdivision Thursday after burning through almost 5 square miles of timber and grasslands.

Knox said officials were anticipating more fires as early as Friday afternoon after beating back as many as ten small fires that ignited over the last several days.

Two other blazes in the area — the 15 Mile Fire to the south and the Garden Coulee Fire on the Charles M. Russell National Wildlife Refuge — burned a combined 2 1/2 square miles.

State Rejects Proposed Bear River Dam Project

BY REBECCA BOONE
Associated Press

BOISE • The Idaho Department of Water Resources rejected a proposal to build a dam on the Bear River.

The Twin Lakes Canal Co. filed an application with the agency in 2007 to build a 700-foot-long, 108-foot-high dam in Oneida Narrows near Preston in eastern Idaho. The proposed dam would have created a reservoir with a surface area spanning more than half a mile.

The river already has three hydroelectric dams operated by PacifiCorp Energy, and the proposal for a fourth attracted vigorous opposition from anglers, recreationists and environmentalists.

Andrea Santarsiere of the Greater Yellowstone Coalition said the conservation group was happy with the decision involving the last free-flowing section of the Bear River that's accessible to the public. "We commend the department for recognizing that keeping the river free-flowing has benefits to the imperiled native Bonneville cutthroat trout, wildlife, recreational use. All of that would have been lost if the dam went forward," Santarsiere said.

Officials with the Twin Lakes Canal Co. didn't immediately return a call from The Associated Press seeking comment.

The company wanted to build the dam because it typically doesn't have enough water to irrigate all the land of its shareholders.

In the written decision denying the permit, Idaho Water Resources Department officials said the public has an interest in augmenting the water supply to farmers, but the benefits of building the dam don't outweigh the benefits of keeping the river as is.

The river is a highly used fishery, department officials noted, and many of the animal species in the region rely on the water and riparian areas for food, cover and nesting.

The river is home to the Bonneville cutthroat trout, one of 14 cutthroat species in the West.

The trout isn't listed as a threatened or endangered species, but in 2006 the Idaho Department of Fish and Game put in place more restrictive fishing regulations to help protect it in the Bear River.

The proposed reservoir would also lead to evaporation of some water, which would adversely affect the water rights of people downstream, the department found.

PacifiCorp Energy initially threw its support behind the proposed dam but backed away from the project after determining a new dam would conflict with its existing hydroelectric license.

The Bear River drains an area of 6,900 square miles in southwestern Wyoming, northern Utah and southeastern Idaho, carrying about a million acre-feet of water a year.

TransCanada Gets OK for South Part of Keystone XL Oil Pipeline

HOUSTON (AP) • A Canadian company that wants to build an oil pipeline from Alberta's tar sands region to Texas refineries has received a final permit for the Gulf Coast portion of the project and announced Friday that construction on the 485-mile section would start in the coming weeks.

President Barack Obama encouraged TransCanada to move ahead with the segment that will run from a refinery in Cushing, Okla. to Texas after he rejected the broader plan, saying the pipeline needed to be rerouted around Nebraska's sensitive Sand Hills region. For that project, TransCanada needs presidential approval because it crosses an international border.

The shorter portion only requires permits from state and federal agencies. TransCanada said the final of three permits it needed from the Army Corps of Engineers had been approved.

"Receiving this final, key Army Corps permit for the Gulf Coast Project is very positive news. TransCanada is now poised to put approximately 4,000 Americans to work constructing the $2.3 billion pipeline that will be built in three distinct 'spreads' or sections," Russ Girling, TransCanada's president and chief executive officer, said in a statement.

The line from Cushing will help relieve a bottleneck at the Oklahoma refinery, but doesn't fulfill TransCanada's goal of transporting more Canadian crude to the U.S.

Pipeline advocates say that would help decrease U.S. reliance on oil from unstable, sometimes unfriendly, countries, and provide much-needed jobs to an economy suffering from 8.2 percent unemployment. But critics argue the tar sands oil is dirtier than most other heavy crudes refined in the United States and will further harm the air in the already polluted Gulf Coast.

Chris Wilson, an organizer with Stop Tarsands Oil Pipelines, condemned the permitting of the pipeline.

"It appears that President Obama is only too happy to turn up the flow of toxic tar sands through our states, but we're here to say, 'Don't mess with Texas or Oklahoma,'" Wilson said.

Idaho School Offers Shoshoni Classes

Blackfoot High School will teach the language as part of an effort to preserve it among youth.

BLACKFOOT (AP) • A southeastern Idaho school district has decided to offer classes in Shoshoni language and culture.

The Blackfoot School District's governing board met Thursday and said the courses will be offered at Blackfoot High School during the upcoming school year. The classes are part of efforts to preserve the Shoshoni language among youth, board member Peter Lipovac said.

"The Shoshoni classes are the result of a statewide push to help save Shoshoni language and culture in the state," Lipovac told the Idaho State Journal.

Tribal members petitioned early this year to build a Shoshoni charter school for students in kindergarten through sixth grades but that effort failed to gain traction in Bingham and Bannock counties, where the Blackfoot and Pocatello school districts declined to provide funding.

Charter schools are funded with public money but given more freedom in how they operate and often have a particular focus.

"Our decision to implement the classes isn't the direct result of the Shoshoni charter school failing to get approved here," Lipovac said.

The proposal to build a Shoshoni charter school in Fort Hall is still alive.

Proposed charter schools can seek approval through their local school districts, or through Idaho's Public Charter School Commission, which falls under the state Board of Education.

That's where tribal members have taken their petition.

State officials are expected to reach a decision by the end of September.

The Shoshoni language offered at Blackfoot High School will not be as concentrated at those proposed at the Fort Hall charter school, Lipovac said.

"The courses at Blackfoot High will not be immersion courses," Lipovac said. "An immersion course is when the course material is taught in the language being learned. The Fort Hall charter school is proposed to be an immersion school."

Drug Company to Pay $151M For Inflating Prices on Brand Names

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) • McKesson Corp. will pay $151 million to 29 states, including Idaho, and the District of Columbia to settle a lawsuit alleging the company inflated prices of hundreds of prescription drugs, causing state Medicaid programs to overpay millions of dollars in reimbursements, officials said Friday.

The agreement with San Francisco-based McKesson, one of the country's largest drug wholesalers, settles allegations the company deliberately inflated drug prices by as much as 25 percent from 2001 to 2009.

An investigation by state and federal agencies found that McKesson overbilled for more than 1,400 brand-name drugs from 2001 to 2009. They include commonly prescribed medications such as Adderall, Allegra, Ambien, Celexa, Lipitor, Neurontin, Prevacid, Prozac and Ritalin, officials said.

California will receive about $24 million of the settlement, said state Attorney General Kamala Harris. That money will go to the state Medicaid program, not recipients.

"In these difficult budget times, it is crucial that California's scarce public resources support the urgent needs of our state," Harris said in a statement. "We cannot allow dollars meant for patients to be diverted to inflate corporate profits."

McKesson representative Kris Fortner said the claims against the company are without merit, but "given the inherent uncertainty of litigation, we determined that this settlement was in the best interest of our employees, customers, suppliers and shareholders."

"We did not manipulate drug prices and did not violate any laws," Fortner said.

The settlement stems from a 2005 whistleblower lawsuit that was filed under federal and states' false claims statutes. It alleged that McKesson inflated average wholesale prices reported to First Data Bank, which many state Medicaid programs use to set payment rates for pharmaceutical reimbursement.

The federal government settled its portion of the lawsuit in April for more than $187 million.

Centuries Old American Flag to Remain in Montana

GREAT FALLS, Mont. (AP) • A district judge has denied a request by a member of a feuding family to take a 200-year-old, 13-star American flag out of Montana.

The Great Falls Tribune reported that District Judge Thomas McKittrick made the ruling Thursday involving the flag that was once part of a treaty agreement.

Since the death of Dorothy Gopher in 2008, her children have been fighting over which of her two sons, Glen Gopher or Mike Gopher, should become the flag's caretaker.

McKittrick ordered last year that Dorothy Gopher's estate, including the flag, be administered by Cascade County Public Administrator Jerry Boland. The flag is being kept in a bank's safety deposit box in Great Falls.

Glen Gopher, the oldest sibling and who wanted to take the flag to Michigan, contends the flag was given to ancestors of the Gopher family and it should remain with the family.

Mike Gopher said the flag was given to the entire Ojibwe band and is a common heritage of those who claim membership. The group is not recognized as a tribe by the federal government.

Both brothers said they want the flag to be put on display at a Great Falls museum where it can be preserved. But each brother and their backers are suspicious of what might happen should one brother become sole caretaker of the valuable artifact.

Glen Gopher on Thursday asked to take the flag to Michigan for a three-day Native American celebration and have the flag back in the safety deposit box no later than Aug. 7. A letter from the Saginaw Chippewa Tribe filed with the court said Glen Gopher was given a check to repay him for travel and food.

McKittrick said he knew of the request before the hearing. But Mike Gopher's attorney, Neal DuBois, said they were not made aware of the plan.

Vegas DUI Case Leads to German Fugitive's Arrest

LAS VEGAS (AP) • A fingerprint match in a Las Vegas-area drunken driving case led U.S. authorities to a German fugitive in a $100 million international fraud scheme who had been on the run for five years.

U.S. marshals recently learned that a fingerprint from a 51-year-old man arrested in February 2011 belonged to Ulrich Felix Anton Engler, and they joined Las Vegas police financial crimes detectives to locate and arrest him late Wednesday, Las Vegas police Officer Bill Cassell said.

FBI agents and local police on Friday began tracing Engler's steps in southern Nevada, finding more than 1,000 pieces of artwork at a storage facility he rented in Boulder City, about 25 miles east of Las Vegas.

"We're investigating what, if any, criminal activity Mr. Engler might have been involved with in Las Vegas," Cassell said.

Super Stocks Back in Mix at Speedway

Series features several drivers in pursuit of a track championship.

TIMES-NEWS

TWIN FALLS • It has been more than three weeks since the Super Stocks got together for a good high-speed battle around the one-third mile track. Tonight, the drivers will make up for lost time with two main event races.

Her 20-point lead over three-time champion Kris McKean has been looking pretty good to the Hannah Newhouse crew, but to the McKean camp two main event wins would make a world of difference as championship night draws closer.

Casey Pehrson has been sneaking up in the standings and is currently just 11 points behind McKean. Daniel Shirley also has some ground to make up but in the meantime he has to keep looking over his shoulder for Kendel Woll who trails him in the standings by just 16 points.

In the Hornets division standings Jeff Peck had been holding on to fairly comfortable lead but mechanical issues last time out has reduced his advantage over Lane Walker to just five points. Josh Black could give everyone a run for the show after an impressive race July 21 landed him in the winner's circle in the debut of the No. 19 car.

Whelen All-American Series racing action will also feature the Street Stocks while the Thunderdogs will fight it out in their own double mains. Additionally, the huge ball has been re-inflated to make its way back to the infield for another round of car soccer – Olympic style.

Gates open at 4:00 p.m. and qualifying begins at 6.

LONDON OLYMPICS 2012

Cauldron Lighters a Surprise

Who will light the flame? The question vexed Olympic fans for years. Roger Bannister? Steve Redgrave? David Beckham?

Nope, nope and nope. Seven teenage British athletes lowered torches to trumpet-like tubes that spread into a ring of fire during one of the signature moments of director Danny Boyle's $42 million show. The copper "petals" then rose skyward and came together to form the elegant cauldron.

Fireworks erupted over the stadium to music from Pink Floyd. With a singalong of "Hey Jude," Beatle Paul McCartney closed a show that ran 45 minutes beyond its scheduled three hours.

WITH ROYALTY AND ROCK, BRITAIN OPENS ITS OLYMPICS

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LONDON • The queen and James Bond gave the London Olympics a royal entrance like no other Friday in an opening ceremony that rolled to the rock of the Beatles, the Stones and The Who.

And the creative genius of Danny Boyle spiced it all together. Brilliant. Cheeky, too.

The highlight of the Oscar-winning director's $42 million show was pure movie magic, using trickery to make it seem that Britain's beloved 86-year-old Queen Elizabeth II had parachuted into the stadium with the nation's most famous spy.

A short film showed Daniel Craig as 007 driving to Buckingham Palace in a black London cab and, pursued by the royal corgis, meeting the queen, who played herself.

"Good evening, Mr. Bond," she said.

They were shown flying in a helicopter over London landmarks and a waving statue of Winston Churchill — the queen in a salmon-colored dress, Bond dashing as ever in a black tuxedo — before leaping into the inky night over Olympic Park.

At the same moment, real skydivers appeared as the stadium throbbed to the James Bond theme. And moments after that, the monarch appeared in person, accompanied by her husband, Prince Philip.

Organizers said it was thought to be the first time she has acted on film.

"The queen made herself more accessible than ever before," Boyle said.

In the stadium, Elizabeth stood solemnly while a children's choir serenaded her with "God Save the Queen," and members of the Royal Navy, Army and Royal Air Force raised the Union Jack.

Boyle sprang another giant surprise and picked seven teenage athletes for the supreme honor of igniting the Olympic cauldron. Together, they touched flaming torches to trumpetlike tubes that spread into a ring of fire.

The flames rose and joined elegantly together to form the cauldron. Fireworks erupted over the stadium to music from Pink Floyd. And with a singalong of "Hey Jude," Beatle Paul McCartney closed a show that ran 45 minutes beyond its scheduled three hours.

Organizers said the cauldron would be moved Sunday night to the corner of the stadium where a giant bell tolled during the show.

Boyle turned the stadium into a giant juke box, with a nonstop

A Fan of the Olympics

Editor's Note: From time to time, the Times-News will break through its male-dominated presence in the sports section with a voice from the opposite sex. This marks the first piece in an occasional series from freelance writer Rachel Gattuso.

Undoubtedly, you've noticed the 2012 Summer Olympics begin this weekend. From glossy magazine pictorials and posts in the blogosphere to the American team-themed ads on TV and endless feature stories on cable news channels, it's nearly impossible to escape the enthusiasm surrounding the upcoming Games.

Despite the endless hype, I'm a fan of the Olympics. I'm a fan of sports in general, but in a nonchalant way; the way I'm a fan of anyone who sticks with their dreams. And the Olympics showcase that superbly.

I won't pretend to be an expert in the sweat and grit that is the world of sports, but I hope to lend a different perspective through this column — one that takes a step back to ask questions or offer thoughts influenced by my world view.

In full disclosure, my sport history includes: volleyball, softball, equestrian 3-day eventing, a golf swing I attempt to improve, and countless fall Sundays making guacamole and asking questions about football (By the way, I believe the Penn State sanctions are extreme and punish the students instead of the administration).

But the Olympics bring stories of hope and perseverance (that sometimes make my 1-mile runs pale in comparison) front and center, and this year, especially for women competitors. From the promising fact that all competing countries now have female athletes to a pregnant competitive shooter, women across the world have ample reasons to cheer on our representatives. NBC even called this year's games the Year of The Woman.

But it's not all sugar and spice and leaps in equality.

There are a few headlines that highlight battles still being fought for women's equality in the famed games. For example, ESPN's annual "Body Issue" caught a little heat for what some people perceived to be a discrepancy in how women Olympians were showcased versus their male counterparts. A critic at Feministing.com pointed out that most men in this issue were posed in action shots pertaining to their sport whereas a larger portion of women were posed in shots that had little to do with their upcoming Olympic sport, e.g. Hope Solo watering a lawn, sans soccer ball.

In addition, during qualifying trials, two players on the United Kingdom's volleyball team sported Quick Response codes (barcode-like images smart phones scan that take operators to dedicated websites) from sponsors on the posterior of their bikini bottoms. They were received with mixed reactions.

Another example is that the 2012 London Games will be the first official games wherein women will be allowed to compete in boxing; eight years after Million Dollar Baby premiered and decades since the notion of women as delicate flowers began to wilt.

I believe it's important these stories find the light of day, but I don't necessarily think they need to dominate the conversation. In a much better vein of conversation, espnW unveiled a list of their top 40 athletes to celebrate the 40th anniversary of Title IX. While I don't have the space to reveal my top 40, I will share two female athletes I believe emulate true equality in professional athletics.

TWIN FALLS • Again the Twin Falls Cowboys stunted their own momentum.

This time they couldn't hold off the opposing charge.

Twin Falls short-circuited its own success, running into two outs in the first inning, and the Cowboys didn't cross home plate again as Idaho Falls won the Class AA American Legion Baseball Area C Tournament 7-1 on Friday night.

Lee Johnson, Casey Merritt and Zayne Slotten singled in succession in the first inning, Slotten's hit plating Merritt. But Johnson and Slotten both

BURLEY FINDS A WAY TO REACH TITLE GAME

TIMES-NEWS

IDAHO FALLS • Taylor Carson's two-run home run in the fifth tied the game, and Jack Darrington and R.J. Nevarez added RBI singles later in the frame as Burley rallied from an early hole to beat the Idaho Falls Bees 7-4 Friday to reach the Class A American Legion Baseball Area C Tournament championship game.

Jake Mills overcame a dislocated pelvis in the second inning to gut out a complete-game performance, striking out four while walking one.

"Nobody would have blamed him if he came out, but he competed," Burley coach Devin Kunz said. "He battled through it and I tried to talk him out of (pitching) but he didn't want out."

Burley plays the Idaho Falls Royals today at 6 p.m. to determine one of the district's two spots. Should Burley lose, it will play for the district's second spot in the state tournament Sunday.

IDAHO FALLS GRIZZ 3, TWIN FALLS COWBOYS 2
Despite being the No. 2 seed in the tournament, the Cowboys fell meekly at districts, losing an elimination game to the Idaho Falls Grizz and finishing 0-2 in the tournament.

"It's a tough way to tend the season in the district tournament," Twin Falls coach Mark Schaal said. "We were better than that."

Kaleb Jones struck out seven and walked two in going the distance, but for the second straight day, the Cowboys' bats mustered but two runs.

"We went cold on our hitting," Schaal said, "but our pitching and defense was solid all weekend."

The Cowboys finish their season with a record of 25-15.

UPPER VALLEY 5, TWIN FALLS HAWKS 1

Four first-inning runs doomed Twin Falls to elimination at the hands of Upper Valley.

Jacob Newton got the only hit for the Hawks, who scored their only run in the fourth inning.

BLACKFOOT 3, KIMBERLY 1

Kimberly outhit Blackfoot but didn't get the timely hits and committed three errors in a season-ending loss.

The Astros took the lead in the third inning on Bo Petterson's single, but Blackfoot came back with two in the fourth and tacked on another in the fifth to stay alive.

Merritt was 2-for-4, the only Cowboy to get multiple hits. The front four in the lineup accounted for all the hits, with the Nos. 5-9 slots going a combined 0-for-15 with 10 strikeouts.

Idaho Falls didn't hit many balls hard, but the Bandits found plenty of open grass when they made contact. They chased Michael Garcia in the fifth inning, touching him up for six runs on seven hits.

"We forced them into some bad contact at times, but it always seemed to find a hole. You wish some of that falls your way too, but that's baseball," Stadelmeir said.

Kole Hostert went 3-for-4 for the Bandits, while Anthony Brady struck out 13 and allowed just two hits after the first inning.

rock and pop homage to cool Britannia that ensured the show never caught its breath.

The high-adrenaline soundtrack veered from classical to irreverent. Boyle daringly included the Sex Pistols' "Pretty Vacant" and a snippet of its version of "God Save the Queen" — an anti-establishment punk anthem once banned by the BBC.

The encyclopedic review of modern British music continued with a 1918 Broadway standard adopted by the West Ham football team, the Rolling Stones' "(I Can't Get No) Satisfaction" and "Bohemian Rhapsody," by still another Queen, and other tracks too numerous to mention, but not to dance to.

The evening started with fighter jets streaming red, white and blue smoke and roaring over the stadium, packed with a buzzing crowd of 60,000 people, at 8:12 p.m. — or 20:12 in the 24-hour time observed by Britons.

Boyle, one of Britain's most successful filmmakers, who directed "Slumdog Millionaire" and "Trainspotting," had a ball with his favored medium, mixing filmed passages with live action in the stadium to hypnotic effect, with 15,000 volunteers taking part in the show.

Actor Rowan Atkinson as "Mr. Bean" provided laughs, shown dreaming that he was appearing in "Chariots of Fire," the inspiring story of a Scotsman and an Englishman at the 1924 Paris Games.

There was a high-speed flyover of the Thames, the river that winds like a vein through London and was the gateway for the city's rise over the centuries as a great global hub of trade and industry.

Headlong rushes of movie images took spectators on wondrous, heart-racing voyages through everything British: a cricket match, the London Tube and the roaring, abundant seas that buffet and protect this island nation.

Opening the ceremony, children popped balloons with each number from 10 to 1, leading a countdown that climaxed with Bradley Wiggins, the newly crowned Tour de France champion.

Wearing his yellow winner's jersey, Wiggins rang a 23-ton Olympic Bell from the same London foundry that made Big Ben and Philadelphia's Liberty Bell. Its thunderous chime was a nod to the British tradition of pealing bells to celebrate the end of war and the crowning of kings and queens, and now for the opening of a 17-day festival of sports — London's record third as host.

The show then shifted to a portrait of a idyllic rural Britain — a place of meadows, farms, sport on village greens, picnics and Winnie-the-Pooh, A.A. Milne's bear who has delighted generations of British children tucked warmly in bed.

But that "green and pleasant land," to quote poet William Blake, then took a darker, grittier turn.

The set was literally torn asunder, the hedgerows and farm fences carried away, as Boyle shifted to the industrial transformation that revolutionized Britain in the 18th and 19th centuries, the foundation for an empire that reshaped world history. Belching chimneys rose where only moments earlier sheep had trod.

The Industrial Revolution also produced terrifying weapons, and Boyle built a moment of hush into his show to honor those killed in war.

"This is not specific to a country. This is across all countries, and the fallen

First is Jenn Shelton, a runner featured in the book "Born to Run" by Christopher McDougall, a book that prompted the barefoot running craze. Shelton is known for two things — knocking back drinks the night before a marathon and then blowing past the front runners in the race.

But Shelton's cup of tea isn't merely 26.2 miles. She is one of few who have taken up ultramarathons, races that consist of up to 100 miles and are run off-road. This figure blows my mind considering I can barely run 2 miles, much less with alcohol in my system.

Aside from breaking barriers in extreme running, Shelton's record-breaking times are crumbling notions that men and women should compete among their respective genders. Shelton is often beating the boys. She qualified to run in the 2012 Olympic marathon trials, but was not selected. Still, running 100 miles? That's true athletic prowess.

Secondly is Karen O'Connor. I'm biased because I used to compete in 3-day eventing, but the equestrian trials are my favorite as they are one of few Olympic sports in which men and women compete together.

Horse and rider can compete in three different events: dressage, a test of the horse and rider's ability to perform a pattern while communicating through seemingly unnoticeable cues; show jumping, where horse and rider navigate a jump course of tight turns and precariously positioned fence poles that bring scores down when displaced; and cross-country, a jump course stretching over several miles containing up to 45 solid, imposing fences.

O'Connor has been an Olympic competitor since the 1988 Seoul games, but I first fell in love with her when watching a video of the 1996 Olympic Games in Atlanta, where she helped the American team clinch the silver medal.

O'Connor and her horse Biko were pure poetry on the cross-country course, and their teamwork reinforced my belief that it is one of the toughest sports. Not only do equestrian athletes have to master their own body and mind, they have to control their animals' as well. At 54, O'Connor is the most talented, dedicated athlete I know — man or woman.

While I'm looking forward to watching the world's women continue breaking down barriers, I admit my favorite Olympic athlete this year is a male: Mr. Medicott — O'Connor's horse.

Big Unit Returns to Be Honored by Mariners

ASSOCIATED PRESS
SEATTLE • Randy Johnson says no one other than his wife truly understands how special Seattle is to him. It's where he became the most feared left-handed pitcher in baseball and helped save the franchise from moving with the Mariners' stirring run to the playoffs in 1995.

Johnson spoke Friday afternoon following a luncheon on the turf at Safeco Field where he and Wilson will be honored before Saturday's game against Kansas City. Johnson never played at Safeco Field in a Mariners uniform but was largely responsible for the 1995 season that ultimately was the catalyst for the team staying in the Pacific Northwest and one of the finest stadiums in baseball being constructed. It's the departure from Seattle that still eats at Johnson, especially when fans occasionally bring up the 1998 season. Johnson was in the final year of his contract with Seattle and admits he was distracted by the talks surrounding a new deal that dragged on through the season. Johnson went 9-10 with a 4.48 ERA with Seattle before being traded to Houston, where he closed the season 10-1.

cleared up, too. I never wanted to leave," Johnson said. "I didn't mean to get off on that, and hopefully no one will even write about that, because today and tomorrow are special days. But it bothered me when I left here. Seattle means so much to me. It really does." While most of his individual and team success came after Johnson left the Mariners, it was in Seattle that he transformed from a lanky project with a cannon arm into a left-hander no one wanted to face. "My time here was a lot like the Seattle weather," Johnson said. "When you woke up in the morning it was a nice day that was the day I struck out 15. If you woke up and it was raining outside that was the day I was walking seven and I couldn't get out of the third inning. All anyone wants is some consistency. You want to see the sun every once in a while here in Seattle and all

Former Penn St. Players Say Freeh Report "Flawed"

ASSOCIATED PRESS
Franco Harris and two other former Penn State football players say the report about Penn State's handling of the Jerry Sandusky sex abuse scandal "is highly flawed, and factually insufficient." Harris, Rudy Glocker and Christian Marrone sent to other Penn State alumni an email and letter criticizing the Freeh report that they plan to publish in The Wall Street Journal and other large publications. The email and letter were obtained by The Associated Press on Friday. The players claim there was a rush to judgment by the media, the board of trustees, university officials and the NCAA after the blistering report was released two weeks ago. The report compiled by a team led by former FBI director Louis Freeh accuses school officials, including late coach Joe Paterno, of covering up the abuse to avoid bad publicity. "A grave injustice has occurred over these past two weeks that began with the issuance of the Freeh report," the email states. "After much review, it's clear the report is highly flawed, and factually insufficient. Yet, the media, the Board of Trustees, University officials and the NCAA, seem to have read only the conclusions and not the content of the report and have failed to question the report's evidentiary basis or lack thereof — they have rushed to judgment. As a result, OUR program has been brutally harmed and our Coach has been completely tarnished." Sandusky, the former longtime defensive coordinator at Penn State under Paterno, was convicted of using his position at Penn State and as head of a youth charity to molest 10 boys over a period of 15 years. He's awaiting sentencing. Penn State was sanctioned by the NCAA for its handling of the Sandusky case, based largely on the findings in the Freeh report. The NCAA did not conduct its own investigation nor did it wait for criminal cases against two other Penn State officials to play out.

'Selena' Star Lupe Ontiveros Dies at 69

BY E.J. TAMARA
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES • Veteran actress Lupe Ontiveros, who appeared in scores of TV shows and movies including "Desperate Housewives," "Selena" and "As Good As It Gets," has died. She was 69.

Ontiveros died Thursday at a hospital in Whittier, Calif., a suburb southeast of Los Angeles, after a brief battle with liver cancer, according to longtime friend and family spokesman Jerry Velasco.

She was perhaps best known for her role in "Selena," the 1997 biopic based on the life story of the Tejano pop star. Ontiveros played Yolanda Saldivar, who in real-life was convicted of killing Selena Quintanilla. The film launched the career of Jennifer Lopez, who played the title part.

But that was only one of many roles. Ontiveros worked steadily in TV and film for more than 35 years.

"I want to go from the set to the grave," she quipped in 2010 while receiving a lifetime achievement award from the National Association of Latino Independent Producers. "From the stage to the grave, that's how I want go."

Her credits include "Real Women Have Curves," TV's "Desperate Housewives" and — as in "The Goonies" — many, many turns as a housekeeper. She once estimated she played a maid more than 300 times on the stage and screen.

"I've had a hell of a good time playing those maids," she told LA Weekly in 2002. "Each one to me is very special ... No matter how much I resent the stupidity that is written into them, the audacity that the industry has when they portray us in such a nonsensical, idiotic, such — oh my God! — such a degrading manner, still, my humor survives in these maids. I'm very proud of them."

This Oct. 7, 2008 file photo shows actress Lupe Ontiveros at Padres Contra El Cancer's 8th annual "El Sueño de Esperanza" benefit gala in Los Angeles. Ontiveros, the popular Texan actress known for her portrayal of Yolanda Saldivar in "Selena," died Thursday, July 26, 2012, of cancer at the Presbyterian Hospital in the City of Whittier, Calif., according to friend and comedian Rick Najera. She was 69.

Born Guadalupe Moreno in El Paso, Texas, on Sept. 17, 1942, Ontiveros caught the acting bug in 1972 when she answered a newspaper ad for movie extras. She went on to help establish the Latino Theater Company in Los Angeles and advocated for Latino performers throughout her career.

"She worked tirelessly to perfect her craft and open doors for countless Latinos along the way," said Alex Nogales, president of the National Hispanic Media

Coalition. "Hollywood never gave her the lead role, but in our hearts she will be remembered as our leading lady. She will be deeply missed by all of us."

Ontiveros is survived by her husband, three sons and two granddaughters.

Glass, Alabama Teacher at the Forefront of Civil Rights Activism, Dies at 96

BY ADAM BERNSTEIN
The Washington Post

Almost a decade before the arrest of Rosa Parks in 1955 sparked the Montgomery bus boycott and helped catapult civil rights to the political forefront, a group of teachers at the historically black Alabama State College in Montgomery formed the Women's Political Council to campaign against the abuses and indignities of segregation.

Their activism — notably on the inequalities of the Montgomery bus system — set the groundwork for the rise of an obscure Montgomery preacher, Martin Luther King Jr., who eventually took the lead in the successful boycott.

Many of the women remained historical footnotes, which did not sit well with Thelma Glass, who was secretary of the Women's Political Council and helped champion the boycott long before it happened. "The men talked about it, you know, but we were ready to take action," Glass told an Alabama State publication last year.

One of the last surviving core members of the women's council, Glass died July 24 at 96. The death, at a Montgomery hospital, was confirmed by a great-niece, Marcia Ivery Young. She did not provide a cause of death.

The women's council, formed at Alabama State in 1946, included at its peak as many as 300 public school teachers, social workers, nurses and wives of black professionals in Montgomery.

Glass joined the organization soon after she began teaching at Alabama State in 1947. Howard O. Robinson, the university archivist, called Glass part of a "small cadre of women who were in front and the most active in the Women's Political Council."

She remained involved even when membership dwindled to four, Robinson said. Many abandoned the group amid intense political pressure against its efforts to enfranchise black voters (by providing help to pass the racist literacy tests required for voting). The key focus of the council was to end the humiliations inflicted on the tens of thousands of African Americans who rode the public buses.

Blacks were forced to stand even when seats were empty, and the buses stopped much less frequently in black neighborhoods than in white areas, Glass later testified in court when the city tried to declare the boycott illegal. She added that drivers would often speed away between the time an African American paid his fare at the front door and was forced to enter through the rear door.

The Women's Political Council, led by Alabama State English teacher Jo Ann Robinson, confronted the city commissioners with detailed information about drivers, dates and routes where problems recurred.

Robinson wrote in her memoir, "The Montgomery Bus Boycott and the Women Who Started It" (1987), that Glass and another colleague were "sharp, asked a deluge of questions and pressed the commissioners for answers."

Physicist Who Invented Full-body CT Scanner, Dies at 86

BY EMILY LANGER
The Washington Post

Robert S. Ledley, a Georgetown University physicist who was credited with inventing the first full-body CT scanner, a machine that revolutionized medical diagnostics by allowing doctors to gaze inside their patients' tissues without ever touching a scalpel, died July 24 at the Arden Courts nursing facility in Kensington, Md. He was 86.

His death, of Alzheimer's disease, was confirmed by his son Fred Ledley. Ledley was a Laurel, Md. resident.

Ledley was trained as a dentist — in case his career in physics didn't pan out — and became a scientific polymath. In the late 1950s, when most doctors still worked with pen and paper, he became a prominent advocate for using data processors to help diagnose disease.

Then, in 1973, Ledley introduced one of the most powerful diagnostic aides since the discovery of X-rays in 1895. He called his invention the automatic computerized transverse axial scanner (ACTA). It was, in effect, the first machine capable of producing cross-section-tional images of any part of the body.

Today, the CT scan is a commonplace medical procedure. ("CT" stands for computed tomography; another moniker is CAT scan, for computer-assisted tomography.) Ledley's prototype did not include the modern machine's dreaded tunnel — in his original design, the patient passed through a thinner ring-like scanner — but most CT scanners today rely on his basic concept.

CT technology, originally formulated several years earlier by Nobel Prize-winning scientists Godfrey Hounsfield and Allan M. Cormack, transformed medical imaging. Before the advent of CT scans, doctors relied on X-ray images, which showed only hard tissue such as bone.

CT scans offer near-photographic renderings of soft tissue and organs such as the brain and heart. On X-rays, tumors show up as faint shadows or not at all. With a CT scanner, doctors can use cross-sectional images to pinpoint a tumor's location — and without subjecting the patient to potentially life-threatening surgery.

about a dream she had."

Grace Ruth Denham was born in Minneapolis on May 7, 1915. She married John Keillor in 1936, and the couple raised six children in a Brooklyn Park house that John Keillor built in 1947.

'The Great Omission'

Here's your Bible trivia question for the day: What is the Biblical phrase most often quoted and most often ignored in the American Christian experience?

Here's a hint: It's in the New Testament.

Give up? It's buried in the last few verses of Matthew's gospel, "...go and make disciples..." (Matthew 28:18-20). We call that passage the Great Commission. You'd think that if we identify it as "Great" that it should be a pretty big deal, right?

Here's the reality. Rarely do we Christian types get up tight if believers in our spiritual circles ignore the Great Commission as a part of their spiritual calling. Try this survey: Ask a fellow "believer" who they're discipling these days and watch for the blank stare. Somehow, between Jesus' day and our day, "believer" and "disciple" have spun into two separate identities.

I can honestly say that I've NEVER, NOT ONCE in over 30 years as a pastor (actually 33 years, 1 month, and 29 days) been challenged because we weren't prioritizing discipleship. On the other hand, I've often been challenged (in love of course) over church programs, church music selection, and of course ... Sunday morning coffee flavors. What's with that?

It's not coincidental that when God entered time and history, he chose to enter our world at ground zero of the Jewish discipleship movement. The place? Galilee. The time? First century AD.

Into that strategic place and at that strategic moment, Jesus modeled a radically effective mentoring method and merged it with His revolutionary message to spread the good news of the kingdom of God. Another stroke of divine brilliance!

I would suggest that the METHOD of Jesus was as significant as the MESSAGE of Jesus.

We lay claim to an "aha" moment when we read in Acts 11 that we were called Christians first at Antioch. What rarely gets mentioned is that same verse claims we were called "disciples" before we were called "Christians."

I suggest it's time to reclaim our original identity and calling!

What does that mean for you and me? That we reclaim the priority of the Great Commission with the same passion we proclaim the power of the cross and the empty tomb.

Brian Vriesman is pastor of Twin Falls Reformed Church.

A Culture of Faith

Magic Valley churches with Spanish services draw large Hispanic populations.

BY ANDREW WEEKS
aweeks@magicvalley.com

TWIN FALLS • Whenever Julia Cruz visits Twin Falls, she makes sure to attend Mass at St. Edward's Catholic Church.

The services are always friendly and allow her to associate with people of her own culture.

Why? Because on Sunday afternoons the church delivers Mass entirely in Spanish, said the Rev. Marcos Sanchez.

On July 22, the church pews were full. Some Hispanics stood, sat or kneeled in the lobby because there wasn't room for them inside.

"I'm so happy to see that," said Angel Vera, a former Kimberly resident who visited St. Edward's on Sunday for the first time in more than 25 years.

Vera, who now lives in Santa Rosa, Calif., said he's happy to see how much things have improved for the Magic Valley's Hispanics since the 1980s. Back in the late '70s, he and other Hispanics went to St. Edward's on a snowy day — but were prevented from entering the church because the Spanish priest had not yet arrived, he

Vera said. "The main priest wouldn't let us in, so there we were standing outside in the snowdrifts,"

McGinnis to Host Discussion at Unitarian Church

TWIN FALLS • Mary McGinnis will host a discussion of the role "gender" plays in our society and an exploration of our own views when the Magic Valley Unitarian Universalist Fellowship meets at 10:30 a.m. Sunday at the Twin Falls Senior Center, 530 Shoshone St. W.

The title, "Free to be Me and You," comes from a project of the Ms. Foundation for Women in the early '70s, resulting in a record album and a book of the same name.

It has been more than 40 years since the "Free to be Me and You" project. What progress have we made toward the project's goal, and where does gender bias both toward women and men live in our society today? Those who wish can share what they think about men and women, what they say about men/women and how they behave.

Can we really affirm "the inherent worth and dignity of every person" if we confine their individuality within preset and prejudged parameters of gender?

Newcomers are welcome. Child care is available. Information: Ken Whiting at 734-9161.

our Sunday clothes in the snow?"

After this happened a few times, he and others contacted the Boise diocese and were given permission to start Our Lady of Guadalupe Parish, a Spanish parish, in Twin Falls. Things started changing for the Hispanic community after that — and because of positive news coverage by the Times-News, he said.

Other Churches Reach Out

Today, St. Edward's is a popular church for Hispanics, but it isn't the only one in Magic Valley.

"It's kind of complicated because there are national Mexicans from Mexico and Mexican-Americans," said the Rev. Paul Rodriguez, pastor of Beautiful Gate Baptist Church in Twin Falls. "National Mexicans tend to go to Catholic churches because that church is big in Mexico. We get a lot of Mexican-Americans at our church."

"But," he continued, "something strange is happening. We are growing. We have a lot of Anglos that come to our church."

He said all services are in English but translated into Spanish by interpreters.

"We only have two people in our congregation who don't speak English," Rodriguez said, noting that other congregations under the Magic Valley Baptist Association umbrella are Southern Baptist churches in Rupert and Bellevue. The Rupert one — also with Spanish interpreters — sees many Hispanics.

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints has Spanish-speaking services at ward houses on Sundays, both in Twin Falls and Murtaugh.

"We have in the Twin Falls West Stake a Spanish branch," said Del Traveller, area spokesman for the LDS church. He said Hispanics who live within other ward boundaries often go to the branch because it's more comfortable for them.

Services there are the same as in wards — or larger, organized congregations — with Primary, Sunday school, Priesthood and Relief Society classes, and Sacrament meeting.

"It's a full program," Traveller said, noting there are a number of faithful Hispanic LDS in the area. "It's really pretty strong, it's really well attended."

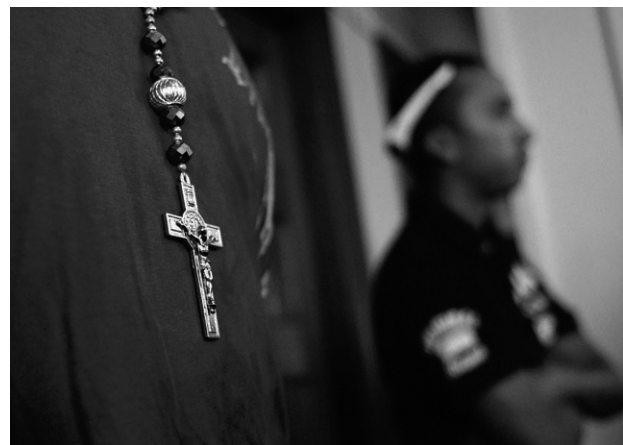

Lighthouse Christian Fellowship has a Hispanic following, the Rev. Greg Fadness said. To better serve it, the church is considering airing a Spanish-speaking TV program and providing interpreter services during worship.

"It's a way for us to build a bridge to the Hispanic community, letting them know we care," he said. "A good portion of our church is Hispanic. I think that's pretty reflective of our valley. We'd like to do a better job to reach them."

Faithful Catholics

Religious conviction has little to do with race and a lot to do with how a person is raised, Cruz said. For her, faith in the Catholic church is paramount.

Cruz lives in American Falls but travels around southern Idaho several times a month visiting family, including a daughter in Twin Falls. In Twin Falls she visits St. Edward's; when she's in Burley she attends Mass at St. Therese's Little Flower Catholic Church, which offers both English and Spanish services; when she's elsewhere she tries to find an other Catholic church.

"Everywhere I go, I can go to a church," she said.

Living a religious life is important to her, she said. She appreciates the values taught to her at an early age and has tried to instill them in her own children.

"My mom told me I was baptized Catholic and that I should never change my faith," Cruz said, noting that Mormon missionaries sometimes visit her home, trying to teach her tenets of their faith. The LDS missionaries are nice young men, she said, and she enjoys visiting with them, but she refuses to join their religion or any other.

"I won't do it, I won't do it. I told my mom I won't do it," she said. "I carry my rosary beads, I say my prayers."

Her faith has helped Cruz get through many of life's trials.

"If I have faith in something, like one of my saints, like St. Jude ..." she trailed off. "That's the first thing you have to have, is faith. I have a lot of faith in St. Jude."

Every month or so she sends $10 — sometimes more — to St. Jude Children's Research Hospital in Chicago.

In the Catholic faith, St. Jude is the patron saint of lost causes, meaning when all other avenues for help seem lost he is the one to call upon.

"He means a lot to me," Cruz said.

Cruz said she doesn't mind attending English-speaking Mass, and frequently does, but she prefers Spanish-speaking services because she better understands what is said and done during the service. Fellowshiping with other Hispanics also is nice, she said.

"There is a lot of people who are Catholic over here," she said. "Yes, a lot of people."

That's a welcome sight to Vera, the former Kimberly resident.

Why the perceived prejudice at St. Edward's when he lived in Idaho decades ago? "Who knows?" Vera said. "Back in the late '70s and early '80s, it was still like pioneer times in the Twin Falls area — to put it nicely?"

So last weekend's visit to St. Edward's surprised him.

"I can't believe it," he said. "We go inside and there's standing room only, a Mexican priest is performing services, and everyone was very educated and excited. It made my heart pound. I hear Jerome has a big Hispanic community, too. I'm very happy that people are embracing our culture in the area."

Forces Ready for Battle in Aleppo

Government troops and rebel soldiers mass around Syria's commercial capital and most affluent city.

BY PATRICK J. MCDONNELL
Los Angeles Times

BEIRUT • An impending battle for the northern city of Aleppo could prove to be a decisive moment for both sides in the Syrian conflict, threatening President Bashar Assad with a loss he may not survive and rebels with a rout that highlights their disorganization and lack of firepower.

Government troops and rebel forces were massing Friday around Syria's commercial capital and richest city. Until a rebel offensive swept in from the outskirts this week, the city had been relatively calm and firmly under government control.

Syrian state television played martial music and showed stock footage of fervent conscripts signing up for military service. Assad was shown in camouflage, peering into binoculars alongside military commanders. Although the footage was probably shot long ago, playing it now emphasized the importance of the moment. In a front-page headline, the pro-government Al Watan newspaper spoke of a "Mother of All Battles" for the city of 2 million people.

The United Nations human rights chief voiced "deep alarm" over the buildup of forces in Aleppo, saying it "bodes ill for the people of that city."

U.S. officials warned of a possible massacre — reminiscent of fears during last year's Libyan uprising for the rebel-city of Benghazi. Western-led air strikes destroyed Moammar Gadhafi's mechanized columns, saving the city from being overrun.

But mindful of the complexity of the Syrian conflict, Western officials have said consistently that they do not intend to intervene in Syria. That leaves government forces, heavily armed but stretched thin across the country, to battle poorly armed rebels who nevertheless appear to have seized the momentum.

Few doubt that the government will do everything it can to retain control of Aleppo, the country's economic hub, which is also the gateway to northern Syria.

"Assad can not afford to lose control of Aleppo," said Fawaz A. Gerges, director of the Middle East Centre at the London School of Economics. "It is as important as Damascus, if not more so, to Assad's survival."

A rebel-held Aleppo could morph into a kind of Syrian Benghazi, opening the way for the rebels to control northern Syria and create an opposition safe haven just 200 miles from Damascus, the capital.

The region also is close to rebel supply lines in neighboring Turkey.

UN States Fail to Reach Treaty for Arms Trade

UNITED NATIONS (AP) • Member states failed to reach agreement Friday on a new U.N. treaty to regulate the multibillion dollar global arms trade, and some diplomats and supporters blamed the United States for triggering the unraveling of the monthlong negotiating conference.

Hopes had been raised that agreement could be reached on a revised treaty text that closed some major loopholes by Friday's deadline for action. But the U.S. announced Friday morning that it needed more time to consider the proposed treaty — and Russia and China then also asked for more time.

"This was stunning cowardice by the Obama administration, which at the last minute did an about-face and scuttled progress toward a global arms treaty, just as it reached the finish line," said Suzanne Nossel, executive director of Amnesty International USA. "It's a staggering abdication of leadership by the world's largest exporter of conventional weapons to pull the plug on the talks just as they were nearing an historic breakthrough."

A Western diplomat, speaking on condition of anonymity because of the sensitivity of the issue, also blamed the U.S., saying "they derailed the process," adding that nothing will happen to revive negotiations until after the U.S. presidential election in November.

Chief U.S. negotiator Thomas Countryman refused to talk to several dozen reporters when the meeting broke up.

U.S. State Department spokeswoman Victoria Nuland, said in a statement Friday evening that the U.S. supports a second round of negotiations next year.

"While we sought to conclude the month's negotiations with a treaty, more time is a reasonable request for such a complex and critical issue," the statement said.

The draft treaty would require all countries to establish national regulations to control the transfer of conventional arms and to regulate arms brokers. It would prohibit states that ratify the treaty from transferring conventional weapons if they would violate arms embargoes or if they would promote acts of genocide, crimes against humanity or war crimes.

In considering whether to authorize the export of arms, the draft says a country must evaluate whether the weapon would be used to violate international human rights or humanitarian laws or be used by terrorists, organized crime or for corrupt practices.

Many countries, including the U.S., control arms exports but there has never been an international treaty regulating the estimated $60 billion global arms trade. For more than a decade, activists and some governments have been pushing for international rules to try to keep illicit weapons out of the hands of terrorists, insurgent fighters and organized crime.

The U.N. General Assembly voted in December 2006 to work toward a treaty regulating the growing arms trade, with the U.S. casting a "no" vote. In October 2009, the Obama administration reversed the Bush administration's position and supported an assembly resolution to hold four preparatory meetings and a four-week U.N. conference in 2012 to draft an arms trade treaty.

The United States insisted that a treaty had to be approved by the consensus of all 193 U.N. member states.

Ambassador Roberto Garcia Moritan, the conference chairman, said treaty supporters knew "this was going to be difficult to achieve."

He said negotiations failed because some delegations didn't like the draft though "the overwhelming majority in the room did." He added that some countries from the beginning of negotiations had "different views" on a treaty, including Syria, Iran and North Korea.

Amnesty's Nossel accused the U.S. of raising eleventh-hour issues "and wanting more time to consult with itself," which stopped the momentum toward agreement.

Despite the failure to reach agreement, Moritan predicted that "we certainly are going to have a treaty in 2012."

Road work to begin Monday

TIMES-NEWS

TWIN FALLS • The city of Twin Falls will kick off more road maintenance projects Monday on some city streets.
 Emery Inc. will begin seal coating streets Monday, while Kloepper Inc. will begin slurry sealing others Wednesday.
 The city applies both chip seal and slurry seal each year during the summer months to extend the life of asphalt roads and minimize long-term costs.

 Workers will coat and slurry seal more than 413,000 square yards this summer — or about 23.5 miles of city streets that are 30 feet wide. It's a 25 percent increase over last year.
 For a map of roads affected by the maintenance, go to Magicvalley.com.

Today is Saturday, July 28, the 210th day of 2012. There are 156 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight:
On July 28, 1932, federal troops acting at the order of President Herbert Hoover forcibly dispersed the so-called "Bonus Army" of World War I veterans who had gathered by the thousands in Washington to demand payments they weren't scheduled to receive until 1945.

TODAY IN HISTORY

On this date:
In 1540, King Henry VIII's chief minister, Thomas Cromwell, was executed, the same day Henry married his fifth wife, Catherine Howard.

In 1609, the English ship Sea Venture, commanded by Adm. Sir George Somers, ran ashore on Bermuda, where the passengers and crew founded a colony.

In 1794, Maximilien Robespierre, a leading figure of the French Revolution, was sent to the guillotine.

In 1821, Peru declared its independence from Spain.

In 1914, World War I began as Austria-Hungary declared war on Serbia.

In 1928, the Summer Olympic games opened in Amsterdam.

In 1943, President Franklin D. Roosevelt announced the end of coffee rationing, which had limited people to one pound of coffee every five weeks since it began in Nov. 1942.

In 1945, a U.S. Army bomber crashed into the 79th floor of New York's Empire State Building, killing 14 people. The U.S. Senate ratified the United Nations Charter by a vote of 89-2.

In 1959, in preparation for statehood, Hawaiians voted to send the first Chinese-American, Republican Hiram L. Fong, to the U.S. Senate and the first Japanese-American, Democrat Daniel K. Inouye, to the U.S. House of Representatives.

In 1962, 19 passengers were killed when a Pennsylvania Railroad Co. train enroute from Harrisburg to Philadelphia derailed in Steelton.

In 1976, an earthquake devastated northern China, killing at least 242,000 people, according to an official estimate.

In 1990, political newcomer and upset winner Alberto Fujimori was sworn in for his first term as president of Peru.

Ten years ago: Nine coal miners trapped in the flooded Quecreek Mine in Somerset, Pa., were rescued after 77 hours underground. Speaking publicly on the church abuse scandal for the first time, Pope John Paul II told young Catholics in Toronto that sexual abuse of children by priests "fills us all with a deep sense of sadness and shame." Cycling champion Lance Armstrong won his fourth straight Tour de France.

Five years ago: Vice President Dick Cheney, with a history of heart problems, had surgery to replace an implanted device that was monitoring his heartbeat.

One year ago: The body of the military chief of the Libyan rebels' National Transitional Council, Abdel-Fattah Younis, was found dumped outside Benghazi along with those of two top aides.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE®

Bobby Wolff

"An expert is one who knows more and more about less and less."

— Nicholas Murray Butler

Terence Reese was the expert's expert when it came to writing. He was the first to publicize plays that are now part of every top player's repertoire. The following example, from his book "The Expert Game," shows how ruffing-squeezes materialize, and also how good players build up a picture of the whole hand and convert that assessment into a winning endgame.

When this hand occurred in the Cavendish Pairs, the field generally elected to open one diamond, although the hand offers an impossible rebid no matter what happens next. To my mind that argues for a strong opening bid. Be that as it may, a sizable percentage of the field went overboard in six diamonds, and only one pair was lucky enough to make it when the opening lead by an uninspired West was the spade king. However, the contract is actually laydown on any lead but a club, and should be brought in if East makes the understandable early discard of a spade, allowing South to read the position in that suit. Declarer simply runs all his trumps but two.

In the five-card ending, West must keep three spades and one heart and must thus bare his club king. Now declarer leads to the club ace and ruffs a heart, reducing West to three spades; then a low spade from hand endplays West at trick 12.

If West keeps two hearts and three spades in the five-card ending, a club to the ace executes the same squeeze. West has to release a nonmaterial card because declarer still has a trump left.

ANSWER: Your partner's jump to four hearts suggests a heart control and a slam-try for spades. With nothing to spare for your initial action and a wasted heart queen, simply sign off in four spades. To cuebid five clubs, you might need, say, the trump king in addition to your values.

DEAR ABBY: I have an offensive habit of looking people "up and down" when I first meet them, and when I think no one is aware of it. I have tried breaking myself of the habit, but I often don't realize I'm doing it until I catch myself. I know other people notice.

I'm a shy, self-conscious person, but at my age I should be comfortable enough with myself to not allow my insecurities to be so obvious. How can I stop this bad habit?

— MS. LOOKIE-LOO IN GEORGIA

DEAR MS. LOOKIE-LOO: You may be looking people up and down because your social insecurity makes it difficult for you to look them in the eye — which is what you should be doing. As with any habit, breaking it will take practice. When you meet someone, make a conscious effort to look no further down than the person's shoulders. If you can't continue eye contact, shift your glance between the person's mouth and forehead.

DEAR ABBY: My co-workers and I are having a debate and need you to settle it for us. "Anthony" was born in Mexico and spoke Spanish for the first four years of his life. He was then adopted and has lived in the United States ever since. He does not remember any Spanish at all.

Anthony says that Spanish is his first language (since it was the first one he learned) and that English is his second. My other co-workers, however, say that Spanish cannot be his first language if he doesn't know any. Who is correct?

— SPEAKING UP IN INDIANAPOLIS

DEAR SPEAKING UP: If Spanish was the language your co-worker learned in his early childhood, then Spanish was his first language. However, because he has spoken (and thought) only in English since the age of 4, English is his DOMINANT language. Readers, do you agree?

DEAR ABBY: My wife and I went out to dinner recently at an upscale restaurant in a hotel in a nearby city. During the dinner I asked my wife not to scrape bread crumbs from the tablecloth onto the floor, and to please not use her fingernail to pry something from between her teeth.

She became upset with me for saying it. What she was doing embarrassed me; it didn't look appropriate. She says I should have waited to tell her. We have agreed to abide by your words.

— EMBARRASSED

HUSBAND IN OREGON DEAR EMBARRASSED: As long as you couldn't be overheard, there was nothing wrong with you saying it. In an upscale restaurant, the server is supposed to remove crumbs from the table — not the diner. And if there was food between your wife's teeth, she should have excused herself from the table to remove it. (Ick!)

DEAR ABBY: I am a 14-year-old girl and have a brother two years older than me. We look a lot alike. I often get, "You look like the girl version of your brother," etc. This doesn't bother me, but I really don't know a polite response to the comment. Any ideas?

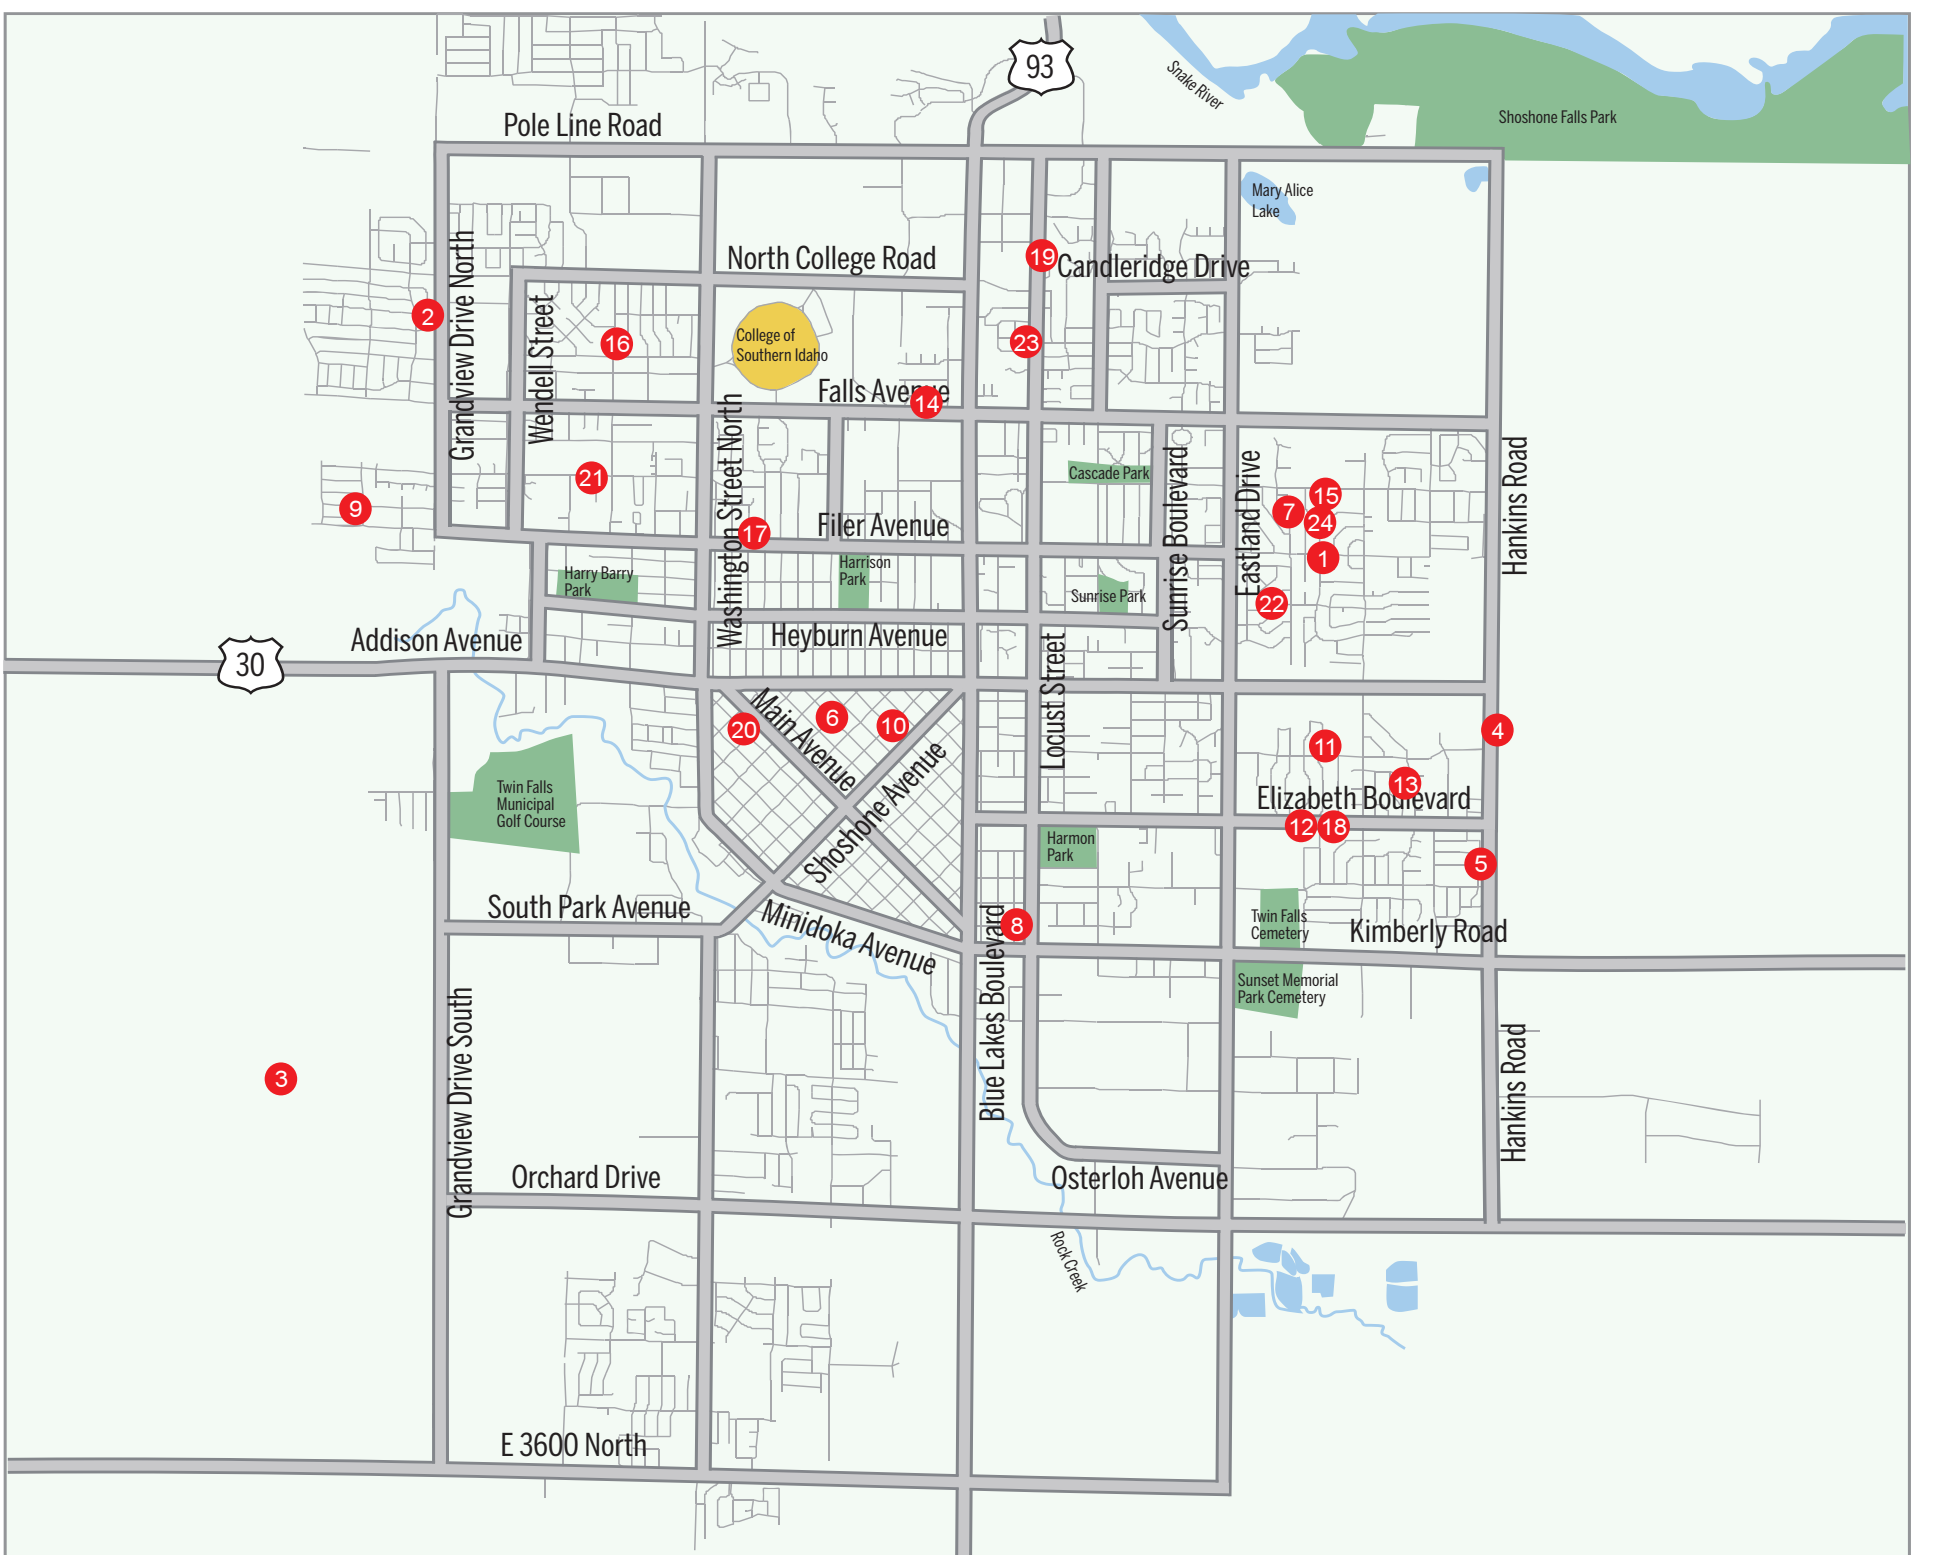

— RESEMBLES MY BROTHER

DEAR RESEMBLES: Just smile and say, "No, he looks like the boy version of ME."

IF JULY 28 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY: September and early October is your time to shine. If you are hunting for a job or hoping to land a promotion, that's the best time to give events a little push in the right direction through interviews or applications. If single, you might meet the person of your dreams, as well. The people you meet at that time could become lifelong friends and because your judgment is better than usual it is a good time to make profound decisions.

HOROSCOPE
Jeraldine Saunders

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Patience is a virtue. A chain of events may not be moving fast enough for your liking. Look for tasks and hobbies that can pass the time and take your mind away from waiting. There is time enough.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Those who live in glass houses should not throw stones. You may be called upon to assist a friend or to strike a compromise. Discuss issues openly and frankly rather than trying to impose your will.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Brainstorming yields results. Thinking an issue over carefully may provide insights that will help you solve the problem. Don't fret over past mistakes when you can use the experience to aid you in the future.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Sometimes conventional wisdom doesn't help. The only way to solve a current problem is by some creative thinking and innovation. Don't beat around the bush with friends, get your point across.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): If the dice aren't rolling your way, perhaps you should play a different game. Change may be the key to breaking out of a current rut. Wiping the slate clean could improve your confidence and your outlook.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Make an adventure of exploration. Break out of the doldrums by seeking out people and places that are fresh and new. Meeting people from different social sets could be interesting and enlightening.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Play the referee. Those around you may not get along, so step in and show them the error of their ways. A candid conversation could yield valuable information if you are perceptive.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Only the sheriff can lay down the law. Avoid conflicts by not trying to make others bend to your will. Look for ways to reach a compromise that will keep everyone happy. Simple solutions work best.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): No one ever said it was going to be easy. Perseverance and fortitude make the results all the more satisfying. This is a time to gather information and act swiftly on generous impulses.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Recharge your batteries. There's no point in starting anything new if you're exhausted before you begin. Take things slow and easy by sharing time with loved ones or engaging in leisure activities.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): There's always room for improvement. You are rightfully proud of your accomplishments, but you know deep down that you can do better. Push yourself to the limit to achieve the greatest results.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Don't hold back. Follow your whims and seek out people who think along similar lines. The urge to break old habits may lead to a positive change. Don't expect others to always honor casual promises.
