TIME FOR THE FAIR

For the participating children the lessons they learn vary from basic how to raise 4-H animals to more subtle ones about responsibility and commitment.

RUPERT • Ten-year-old Tanner Pratt of Rupert learned that raising 4-H pigs can be a bit of a rodeo. And that may be kind of fitting as months of hard work culminate next week when he takes his project to the Minidoka County Fair.

Tanner and his older brother Jaden, 13, participated in multiple 4-H projects this year along with their two 4-H Cloverbud sisters, Kaibree, 7, and Emilee, 5, including topics such as archery and Lego Robotics — but their pigs have stolen the show.

“It’s really great for them to have these experiences and learn about new things,” said the children’s mother Cami Pratt.

Minidoka County 4-H Coordinator Jeni Bywater said there are 334 children participating in the Minidoka County 4-H program

Jerome Rotary Helps Kids Get Library Cards

BY JULIE WOOTTON
jwootton@magicvalley.com

JEROME • As 12-year-old Tristn Griffis talked about the series of fantasy books he’s reading, his eyes widened with excitement.

After sitting down on a sofa in his grandparents’ house Thursday in Jerome County, he opened a book and took out his new library card — which is doubling as a bookmark.

“Probably, the biggest advantage is to be able to get more reading done,” Griffis said about having a card.

Since he got a library card June 26, he has delved into the Dragons of Deltora series.

The incoming seventh-grader — who goes to North Valley Academy in Gooding — has been powering through nearly one book each week.

But for Griffis, seeking financial help to afford a library card was a process that lasted a couple of years.

Since Griffis lives outside Jerome city limits, there’s a $45 annual fee to get a library card for the Jerome Public Library. But his grandparents — who are raising him — weren’t able to foot the bill.

After hearing about Griffis, the Jerome Rotary Club stepped in and paid the fee for his library card.

“He was absolutely elated that he could check out and read books,” club secretary Bryan Craig said.

Now, in honor of Griffis, the club is planning to develop a program to help out as many Jerome County children as possible who can’t afford a library card.

Craig said club members — along with Phillips and her grandson — will work with local schools to identify children in need.

Updated Fish Advisory for Reservoir Released

TIMES-NEWS

TWIN FALLS • State health officials have updated their fish advisory for Salmon Falls Creek Reservoir in south-central Idaho.

Updated sampling and testing for mercury show that women who are pregnant, wanting to become pregnant or nursing may now consume two meals per month of walleye if the fish is less than 16 inches in length, according to an Idaho Department Health and Welfare news release.

However, the department still recommends not eating walleye and smallmouth bass any larger than 16 inches.

State officials had a fish advisory for Salmon Falls Creek Reservoir’s since 2004 after samples showed increased

The Madness of Alligator Pops

More people show up at the California State Fair each summer than the total number of dairy cows in all of Idaho.

But while you chew on those numbers, consider that not one of those folks — and there were nearly a million of them this year — ate a tater pig.

Nor an Ice Cream Potato. Nor a trout burger.

How can people party like that?

Fair fare in California is heavy on cardiac-wise delectables such as beignet with bananas and chocolate-dipped key lime pie, and dominated by faux Mexican dishes that no real Mexican would eat. Compare and contrast that to Idaho and, say, the Twin Falls County Fair, where tater pigs — they're sausages stuffed inside a baked potato — and trout burgers are what's for dinner every evening of the year.

The tater pig, invented by the Twin Falls Magichords in 1975 and sold at the fair ever since, is a hit because it's authentic. Can't say the same for fried avocado bits and Krispy Kreme chicken sandwiches (a fried chicken patty topped with Swiss cheese and stuffed inside a glazed donut), both on offer in Sacramento.

Still, there's no cause for Idaho's fairs to be smug. They have a long way to go to catch up with the likes of the Indiana State Fair's deep-fried Twinkies (have a fatal heart attack right there on the midway and avoid those steep ER costs), Texas' fried beer, Minnesota's spaghetti-and-meatballs-on-a-stick, and Iowa's hot beef sundaes.

But the critical consensus is that the Wisconsin State Fair's deep-fried butter is the ultimate fair food. It's hard to argue with that — especially since I own stock in Merck & Co., maker of the anti-cholesterol drug Zocor.

Yet at the Sacramento fair I discovered a couple of strong challengers. The deep-fried Pop-Tarts leap to mind, along with white chocolate bacon. Both are so California — whimsy is a word overused out here for local cuisine — and yet safe bets to get you a stent in your coronary arteries before you retire.

Fortunately I always go to the fair with my lovely, health-conscious wife who permits me one — and only one — corn dog and a big cold glass of pink lemonade.

Then I sit on a bench in the midway and watch heaven stroll by: fried jellybeans, pork parfait, Spam curds (I'm not making this up), deep-fried latte (I'm still not making this up), buffalo chicken on a flapjack, fried bubblegum and Koolickle (a dill pickle soaked in Kool-Aid).

The working theory in the fair-food business is that people will eat anything outdoors — and I'm including Roadkill, the Oregon State Fair's flattened, deep-fried dough covered by fruity sauces and syrups. But I'm not sure that's true.

Many summers ago, during one of those unfortunate bumper crops of zucchini in the Magic Valley, a vendor at the Twin Falls County Fair decided to supplement menu with heart-smart zucchini bread.

He made up a couple hundred loaves of the stuff — and sold just one.

"To my mom," he explained to me. "She took it home and made fried clam sandwiches."

amounts of mercury levels in the water. There are 17 fish advisories in southern Idaho but this is the only one located in the Magic Valley.

While the Department of Health and Welfare encourages Idahoans to continue to eat fish, the public should choose carefully where and how much fish they eat.

Mercury can affect childhood development of the nervous system and hinder their ability to learn.

For the rest of the public, health officials recommend that people should also limit their intake of some fish species from the Salmon Falls Creek Reservoir.

This includes a recommendation of eating no more than six meals per month of walleye over 16 inches and only two servings of walleye if it is over 20 inches.

The public should eat up to six meals per month of smallmouth bass or 10 yellow perch.

Fire Near Dietrich Controlled Sunday Night

Lightning sparked the Sid Crossing fire 13 miles east of Dietrich about 10:30 p.m. Thursday.

TIMES-NEWS

SHOSHONE • Firefighters from the U.S. Bureau of Land Management had a 20,847-acre fire in Lincoln County controlled as of 8 p.m. Sunday, BLM spokeswoman Kyli Gough said. She added that control meant no further work was necessary.

Lightning sparked the Sid Crossing fire 13 miles east of Dietrich about 10:30 p.m. Thursday. Gough said it was contained by 8 p.m. Saturday.

No structures were damaged and no one was injured while bringing the blaze under control.

The BLM brought an array of resources to limit the fire's growth, Gough said. Quick work kept flames from reaching range allotments, power lines and railroad tracks in the area.

Firefighters responded with 13 engines, two water tenders, one bulldozer, one air attack unit, two single engine air tankers, one Type 3 helicopter, two Type 1 helicopters, two MAFFS from Boise, and two heavy air tankers from Cedar City, Utah.

A base camp was established, although it had been shut down as of Sunday evening.

A smaller blaze, the Yale Road fire, started Thursday about 4:30 p.m. near the junction of Interstates 84 and 86 in Cassia County. It reached 625 acres before it was contained Thursday night.

this year, which marks 100 years of 4-H in the state.

The program also boasts 14 new 4-H leaders bringing the total to 86.

"We have so many leaders who continue to volunteer even after their own children graduate from the program," said Bywater.

For the participating children the lessons they learn vary from basic how to raise 4-H animals to more subtle ones about responsibility and commitment.

Tanner, who's grown quite fond of his pig Red Bull, worries that the end result at the livestock sale may be difficult to endure.

"I've gotten attached to my pig," Tanner said.

He also learned a lesson about consequences and would never allow a water-mister to run too long in a pen, which can create somewhat of a swamp.

"I stepped in a deep spot and my sock came off with my boot," he said.

Tanner, one foot bare, made it out of the pen, but his boot didn't escape unscathed.

"She chewed on my rubber boot," he said.

But, the biggest challenge, Tanner said, has been getting Red Bull up to the required 235 pounds. Last week she tipped the scales at 210, which prompted Tanner to put her on a special diet that includes an abundance of cheese every night.

"The pigs love it, they think it's a treat," said Cami.

Tanner's brother, Jaden, has raised pigs for four years now, but soured on the sows slightly after receiving a painful bite last year.

"Raising pigs is kind of frustrating," said Jaden. "You are not really walking a pig, it's walking you and you have to make it look like you are walking it. I'll be happy when the pigs leave. They just get bigger and bigger and start pushing you around."

And his pig, BLT, has plenty of weight to push, last week registering the scale at 257 pounds.

He hopes have her up to 275 pounds by fair time, which is the range a "top quality" pig would likely come in at, he said.

Tanner's main goal is to raise a top quality pig and he'd really like to start from scratch with a piglet, an endeavor his mother has yet to agree to.

For the boys' sister Kaibree, the rewards are clearly evident. On the cusp of graduating from a Cloverbud to 4-H she is ready to put all of her 35 pounds into bringing home the bacon.

"I'm getting a pig and I'm going to sell it," said Kaibree.

Search Continues for Body in Snake River

TIMES-NEWS

TWIN FALLS • Searchers failed Sunday to find the body of a 41-year-old Washington state man who fell into the Snake River a day earlier and disappeared.

Twin Falls County Sheriff's Office spokeswoman Lori Stewart said the man was walking along the river Saturday near Pillar Falls, a half-mile east of the Perrine Bridge, when he slipped on some rocks and tumbled into the water about 9:30 p.m. He was accompanied on the hike by his 18-year-old daughter and her friend, who were not injured.

The man is presumed to have drowned, Stewart said, but relatives had not been notified as of 8:30 p.m. Sunday so the victim's name and hometown were not released.

Search and rescue teams from the Twin Falls County and Jerome County sheriff's offices combed the area until 12:30 a.m. Sunday after the report was received. They returned at 6 a.m. Sunday and worked until dark without finding the body. Stewart said they planned to be back at the river by 7 a.m. today.

Authorities Kill 2 Bison in S.E. Idaho

BY KEITH RIDLER

Associated Press

BOISE • Idaho officials have killed two bull bison that roamed out of Yellowstone National Park, citing concerns over the spread of brucellosis to cattle.

A spokesman for the Fremont County Sheriff's Office said one bison was killed Saturday and another Thursday in Island Park in southeastern Idaho. The area is about 15 to 20 miles west of the park.

In a statement the Idaho Department of Agriculture said the state's policy requires wild bison to be either killed or moved because of the possible spread of disease. Brucellosis can cause pregnant animals to miscarry their young. There have been no recorded instances in the wild of bison transmitting brucellosis to cattle.

"It's their instinct to migrate, and there are some bison that still retain these ancient migratory routes, almost like a map. They know where to go and they find it again."

Authorities said the bison killed Thursday was along the shoulder of U.S. Highway 20 near The Nature Conservancy's Flat Ranch. The bison killed Saturday was north of Mack's Inn.

The Nature Conservancy in a statement said the bison killed Thursday was shot by an employee of the Idaho Department of Agriculture and was not on land owned by the conservancy.

"Our staff and volunteers in Idaho are saddened about this unfortunate situation and the death of the bison," the group said in a statement that also noted its bison conservation efforts.

The Idaho Department of Agriculture did not return a call from The Associated Press on Sunday.

It's unclear when authorities last killed a bison in Idaho.

Darrell Geist with the Buffalo Field Campaign, an advocacy group based in West Yellowstone, Mont., said the last one he investigated involved a bull killed by the U.S. Department of Agriculture in August of 2009, also near the Flat Ranch.

He said bison could be entering Idaho a number of ways from Yellowstone National Park, including along Targhee Pass. He noted the region used to be a major bison migration corridor, and some bison are still drawn to it.

Minority Enrollment on Rise at UNR

RENO, Nev. (AP) • The University of Nevada, Reno had the highest percentage of minority students in its history last school year, an official said.

Serge Herzog, director of UNR's Office of Institutional Analysis, said minority students accounted for 26 percent of the total student population during the fall semester and 27 percent during the spring semester.

Herzog told the Reno Gazette-Journal that the number of minority students climbed by 8 percent, or by about 400 students.

During the fall semester, 2,032 Hispanic students represented 11.3 percent of the total student population of 18,000.

A total of 1,053 Asian students accounted for 5.8 percent, 872 multiethnic students represented 4.8 percent, 557 black students accounted for 3.1 percent and 156 American Indian/Alaska native students represented 1 percent.

A total of 12,329 white students accounted for 68.5 percent of the total enrollment.

While UNR still has more female than male students, Herzog said, the school is following a national trend that shows more men are starting to go to college.

In 2004-05, the first year UNR broke students down by gender, there were 1,680 more female than male students, he said. During the fall semester, the gap closed to fewer than 1,070 more females than males on campus.

There were 9,537 female students, or 53 percent of the total population, compared with 8,467 male students, or 47 percent.

Also last fall, 3,281 students from other states or countries attended UNR, a 29 percent increase from the previous year.

California provides the largest number of out-of-state undergraduate students to UNR by far, followed by Hawaii, Arkansas, Oregon, Washington, Colorado, Idaho and Arizona.

Library

"I think teachers will be our biggest asset there," Phillips said.

Last week, Griffis talked at the Rotary Club meeting about what his library card means for him.

Griffis said reading is a way to "be smart" and learn new words. Without a library card during past years, he "played all summer" instead of reading.

When Phillips took him to the library to get a card, she found out about the fee for out-of-city residents.

The Jerome Public Library is supported by city property taxes. And people who live outside the city limits don't contribute to that tax base.

The $45 annual fee per household is the equivalent to what city residents pay through property taxes. The fee is waived for county residents who are at least 65 years old.

Library director Patty Metcalf said she hasn't heard of many residents who can't pay the fee for a library card.

"As a librarian, I wish I could give a free library card to everyone," she said.

Once Griffis found out about the library card fee, he started writing letters to local and state officials — including Gov. C.L. "Butch" Otter and Idaho public schools chief Tom Luna.

Phillips said the goal was to spur action and find help for other children who don't have a library card.

She's not sure who ended up calling the Jerome Rotary Club, but said she's thankful. And she encouraged her grandson to return the favor.

"We always try to teach Tristin when you get something, you need to give back," she said.

After raising about $75 by auctioning off a quilt, Griffis tried to give the money to Rotary Club. Members told him to keep it.

Craig said he was impressed the 12-year-old felt the need to try to repay the club.

It's not the first time, though, that Griffis has raised money for different organizations and school groups.

"Tristin loves to do fundraisers," Phillips said.

Utah Group Wants Citizen Resolutions on Ballots

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) • A Salt Lake City group is challenging a state law that forbids citizen-initiated ballot resolutions that express an opinion or endorse an idea.

The challenge from Move to Amend comes after the group gathered enough signatures for a resolution this year asking voters to condemn the 2010 U.S. Supreme Court's Citizen United decision. The decision lifted many spending restrictions on spending from corporations and unions in elections, upholding the First Amendment rights of such groups.

Salt Lake City stopped the group's ballot initiative, saying state law only permits citizen-initiated initiatives that create laws. The group wants voters to weigh in on whether to support the idea of a federal constitutional amendment that says corporations are not people and money is not speech.

The group presented arguments last week before the Utah Supreme Court, which could issue a ruling in August.

Senior City Attorney Betsy Haws argues that case law says opinions and beliefs are not subject to ballot initiatives.

"If the people said, 'Yes we stand with the Move to Amend movement,' it would have no different impact than if they said, 'No we don't stand with it.' There's nothing binding that is created by the petition as it's written," she said.

Caleb Proulx, a law student and member of Move to Amend, said the issue centers around how the word "legislation" is defined. He said for lawmakers it covers bills, as well as nonbinding resolutions.

"The people can't do the same thing because courts have interpreted legislation as meaning only law, only something that binds people," Proulx said. "There's a big disparity and that's what we're trying to correct."

Haws said the city sympathizes with residents wanting to express their opinions on policy, and that the City Council is considering an ordinance to allow such citizen resolutions.

GOP Cries Foul over Democratic Party Staffing

BY MATT GOURAS

Associated Press

HELENA, Mont. • The spokesman for Steve Bullock's campaign for governor doesn't work directly for him and is instead paid by the Montana Democratic Party — a practice recently clarified as perfectly legal by the commissioner of political practices despite bitter GOP criticism that it undermines donation limits.

Democrats say the May ruling, which declared that such sharing of staff is OK, only ratifies coordination that has always taken place and is necessary since the party and its staff only exist to help its candidates. The party is also paying the spokesman for attorney general candidate Pam Bucy.

Republicans counter that state law bans the practice of spending unlimited party money directly on candidates for a reason, and argue that shuffling staffer salaries from the candidate to the central party gets around these caps.

The GOP says that using party money to pay staffers is a big advantage for campaigns that face stricter donation limits.

It is yet another campaign finance argument in an election cycle that has seen those battles in Montana reach the U.S. Supreme Court. In this one, however, there is a bit of role reversal.

Democratic candidates like Bullock, who have fought conservative-led efforts making it easier for big money to flow into elections, find themselves advancing a system that pays their staff with party money which can come in big chunks from corporate political action committees and others.

And Republicans, whose allies continue to argue in ongoing legal challenges for the dismantling of many state laws limiting donations and transparency, are in this instance saying more control is needed over campaign spending.

Those cases are playing out on a much larger stage and hinge around the U.S. Supreme Court's 2010 ruling in the Citizens United case that freed up the way corporations and unions can spend money in elections. That ruling was then used to toss out Montana's century-old ban on some corporate spending in state races, and is being used in an ongoing argument that donation limits and other campaign regulations need to be overturned.

In the May decision, Commissioner of Political Practices Jim Murray wrote that paying staffers does not constitute a campaign donation to the candidate, which the GOP had argued it was.

GOP spokesman Chris Shipp said it is particularly ironic for Bullock, who has been arguing in court against allowing more corporate money in state politics, to use the central party to pay his staffers. The original complaint that spawned the commissioner's ruling on the matter came from a GOP allegation that Bullock's 2008 campaign for attorney general wrongly used two staffers paid for by the party.

Drop in Wildfires Attributed to Rain, Restrictions

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) • State officials attribute a decrease in Utah wildfires in recent weeks to a combination of rain and restrictions on guns and fireworks.

Jason Curry, spokesman for the Utah Division of Forestry, Fire and State Lands, said not a single wildfire has been sparked by guns since a ban on target shooting in some rural areas took effect July 11.

And he said only one of about 600 wildfires in Utah this season has been started by fireworks.

"I think everybody is on such high alert right now that I think those restrictions are taking a little bit stronger hold in people's minds and everybody's watching out for one another," Curry said.

But he warned the fire season is only half over and fire danger remains high across the state.

"Right now, things are looking great, but when humidity drops vegetation dries out quickly," he said. "We have to be cautious still."

"We're still getting human-caused fires on a daily basis throughout the state. The higher humidity and the rain have allowed us to get a handle on those fires a little bit more quickly. But in reality they're still happening and there still is quite a bit of danger," he added.

Drought May Mean Fewer, Smaller Animals at Fairs

BY CARRIE ANTLINGER
Associated Press

MILWAUKEE • State and county fairs in the sweltering and drought-stricken Midwest may see some skinnier pigs and smaller squash this year.

The dozen pigs Greg Marzahl and his 15-year-old daughter are bringing to the Wisconsin State Fair are smaller than those he'd normally show. Marzahl, who had three grand champion pigs last year, said his pigs are around about 15 pounds smaller than the normal 275 pounds. The heat is affecting their virility and appetites, he said.

"We've had a hard time getting them to eat enough to get that condition on them," said Marzahl, who has about 35 show pigs and a few lambs on his 160-acre farm in Oxford.

The Wisconsin fair opens its 11-day run Thursday in the Milwaukee suburb of West Allis. State fairs also are set to begin in the next two weeks in Indiana, Iowa and Illinois, which also have been hit hard this summer by unusual heat and drought.

People watch as spring and fall calves are auctioned off at the Burwell Livestock Market in Burwell, Neb. State and county fairs in the sweltering and drought-stricken Midwest may see smaller livestock this year.

Marzahl still plans to bring his pigs to the fair, expecting his competition will have smaller animals too.

That's been the case at some county fairs that already have been held in the state.

David Laatsch, an agriculture agent with the University of Wisconsin Extension, said he's judge several poultry contests for county fairs this summer and has seen fewer exhibitors and smaller animals. The heat also causes narrower and fewer feathers on poultry, he said.

Laatsch thought some potential exhibitors might have decided to leave their dairy cows home because they were already stressed. Heat disrupts cows' reproductive cycles, and their milk production goes down, he said.

Liana Glavin, secretary of the Adams County Fair Board, has three teenage daughters involved in 4-H. They will bring some of their 12 cows to the county fair this year but leave a mother and her calf behind because of the stress of the heat.

Other exhibitors aren't even coming, she said, although she didn't immediately have figures.

Glavin said the pasture on her farm in Arkdale is completely dried up, when normally the cows can eat until October. Prices for feed have skyrocketed, and Glavin said she doesn't know how much longer she can afford to keep her farm if the prices stay high and the drought continues.

"It's scary but at the same time it's sad," she said. "My kids bought their cows for a 4-H project. We've had the cows for seven years. When you only have 12 of them you are more attached to them."

Astrid Newenhouse, an agriculture scientist at the University of Wisconsin-Madison, judged vegetables and flowers for ages 8 to 18 at this year's Dane County fair, which ended July 22. She said entries were down by about two-thirds.

"I have never seen the drought like that before, this severe before," said Newenhouse, who has judged for 23 years.

The fair had just one gladiola. Typically, it has about two dozen. She said lilies were smaller and not as colorful and all of the vegetables were smaller.

Most years when she asks children to describe their projects, they usually say what they liked best about the plant.

This year, "the first thing they mentioned was how much they watered them," Newenhouse said.

Companies Say 3 Million Unfilled Positions in Skill Crisis

BY LORRAINE WOELLERT
Bloomberg News

WASHINGTON • Roddale Smith knew he could do better than totting chairs around at Cincinnati Children's Hospital Medical Center. And when he decided to pursue an education, he didn't have to go far. His employer brought the classroom to him.

It paid off for both sides. Smith, 32, graduated from nursing school last month and Children's Hospital, in need of skilled workers, has a new job waiting for him. His salary, now $12 an hour, will almost double.

"Moving furniture does not have a direct impact on patient care," said Smith, who started his training in 2008. "I wanted a career, earning a larger salary and making a more significant difference."

Even with almost 13 million Americans looking for work and 8 million more settling for part-time jobs, almost half the 1,361 U.S. employers surveyed in January by ManpowerGroup say they can't find workers to fill positions. At the same time, American employers are less likely than their counterparts overseas to invest in training, the Milwaukee-based staffing company reported last month.

Companies have reported more than 3 million job openings every month since February 2011, according to the Department of Labor.

To narrow the skills gap, employers are teaming up with philanthropies, governments and community colleges to develop a ready resource: their existing workforce. The practice, known as upskilling, builds on the "up from the mailroom" idea, the management philosophy that the best person for a job could be one a company already has.

Hospitals, which experienced a nursing shortage more than a decade ago, in particular are turning to their own staff to cultivate technicians and nurses, said Fred Dedrick, executive director of the National Fund for Workforce Solutions. The Boston-based nonprofit organization partners with companies and governments to set up regional training cooperatives.

Children's Hospital is part of one such group, a three-state effort called Partners for a Competitive Workforce. The consortium's five health-care members have identified the skills they need and joined forces to design training programs.

"It's a grow-your-own strategy," said partnership Executive Director Ross Meyer. "We are seeing employers stepping up because they're not getting their needs met. We've leveraged public, philanthropic and private dollars to fill the gap."

The potential training pool can include housekeepers, clerks, low-skilled technicians and cafeteria workers. Some have no formal training beyond high school and haven't been inside a classroom in decades.

Besides hospitals, factories and construction companies are reviving apprenticeships and collaborating with community colleges and each other to develop courses. The Department of Labor spends about $7 billion a year to fund jobs training and other workforce development.

Most companies are using that support to avoid layoffs or train existing employees, said Jane Oates, assistant secretary for employment and training at the Department of Labor.

"You get a new worker of any age who comes into a job, I don't care how qualified they are on paper, you don't know how they're going to work," she said. With an existing employee, "you know they've come to work for the last X years."

Grooming incumbent workers fell out of favor with the rise of information technology and the knowledge and service economies, which created demand for highly specific skills and led to certification programs and other types of education, said Anthony Carnevale, director of the Georgetown University Center on Education and the Workforce, in Washington.

Vietnam Considers Same-sex Marriage

BY MARGIE MASON
Associated Press

HANOI, Vietnam • Dinh Thi Hong Loan grasps her girlfriend's hand, and the two gaze into each other's love-struck eyes. Smiling, they talk about their upcoming wedding — how they'll exchange rings and toast the beginning of their lives together.

The lesbians' marriage ceremony in the Vietnamese capital won't be officially recognized, but that could soon change. Vietnam's Communist government is now considering whether to allow same-sex couples to marry or legally register and receive rights — positioning the country to be the first in Asia to do so.

"Our love for each other is real and nothing changes regardless of whether the law is passed or not," said Loan, 31. "But when it is passed, we will definitely go get registered. I can't wait!"

Even longtime gay-rights activists are stunned by the Justice Ministry's proposal to include same-sex couples in its overhaul of the country's marriage law. No one knows what form it will take or whether it will survive long enough to be debated before the National Assembly next year, but supporters say the fact that it's even being considered is a victory in a region where simply being gay can result in jail sentences or whippings with a rattan cane.

"I think everyone is surprised," said Vien Tanjung, an Indonesian gay-rights activist. "Even if it's not successful it's already making history. For me, personally, I think it's going to go through."

Vietnam seems an unlikely champion of gay-rights issues. It is routinely lambasted by the international community over its dismal human rights record, often locking up political dissidents who call for democracy or religious freedom. Up until just a few years ago, homosexuality was labeled as a "social evil" alongside drug addiction and prostitution.

Dinh Thi Hong Loan, 30, left, and Nguyen Thi Chi, 20, walk on a walking-tunnel near Thong Nhat park, Hanoi, Vietnam. The Communist government is now considering whether to allow same-sex couples to marry or legally register and receive rights — positioning Vietnam to become the first country in Asia to do so.

And Vietnam's gay community itself was once so underground that few groups or meeting places existed. It was taboo to even talk about the issue.

But over the past five years, that's slowly started to change. Vietnam's state-run media, unable to write about politically sensitive topics or openly criticize the one-party government, have embraced the chance to explore gay issues. They have run lengthy newspaper stories and television broadcasts, including one live special that won a top award.

Video of Vietnam's first publicized gay wedding went viral online in 2010, and a few other ceremonies followed, capturing widespread public attention. The Justice Ministry now says a legal framework is necessary because the courts do not know how to handle disputes between same-sex couples living together. The new law could provide rights such as owning property, inheriting and adopting children.

"I think, as far as human rights are concerned, it's time for us to look at the reality," Justice Minister Ha Hung Cuong said Tuesday in an online chat broadcast on national TV and radio. "The number of homosexuals has mounted to hundreds of thousands. It's not a small figure. They live together without registering marriage. They may own property. We, of course, have to handle these issues legally."

Globally, 11 countries have legalized same-sex marriage since the Netherlands became the first to do so in 2001. Only a few U.S. states allow it, but President Barack Obama provided hope for many couples worldwide after announcing his support earlier this year.

The issue has remained largely off the table across Asia. In Thailand, many tourists see a vibrant gay, lesbian and transgender community, but it exists largely as part of the country's lucrative entertainment industry, separated from politics and conservative Thai society. Muslim-dominated nations such as Indonesia have strict laws against homosexuality. Sodomy can result in up to 20 years in jail and caning in Malaysia. But that hasn't stopped some from continuing to fight for more rights and visibility.

In Singapore, more than 15,000 people — double last year's turnout — recently held up pink lights in a park at night to support acceptance of the community in a modern city-state where gay sex remains illegal, even though the law is not enforced.

Panetta Heads to Mideast; Syria High on the Agenda

BY ROBERT BURNS
Associated Press

ABOARD A US MILITARY AIRCRAFT • U.S. Defense Secretary Leon Panetta began a five-day Mideast trip Sunday to consult with the new Islamist leaders of Tunisia and Egypt and to meet with long-standing allies Israel and Jordan.

High on the agenda at each stop is expected to be the accelerating crisis in Syria, which potentially has grave implications for Israel. The Jewish state fears the unrest will spill over the border and that the long-quiet Golan Heights, captured from Syria in 1967, will become a new Islamist front against Israel.

Syria has strong ties to Iran, Israel's most fearsome enemy, and to Palestinian and Lebanese militants who have warred with Israel. Jordan's worries include a potential refugee crisis on its border.

Panetta's press secretary, George Little, said the trip is intended to affirm a U.S. commitment to stability in the Middle East and North Africa at a time the U.S. military is shifting more of its attention to Asia.

"That will require strengthening traditional alliances with countries like Israel and Jordan and building strong partnerships with new democratic governments," Little said last week in previewing the trip.

Panetta will be in Jerusalem just days after a visit by U.S. Republican presidential hopeful Mitt Romney, who has been highly critical of President Barack Obama's approach to Israel.

Panetta is expected to highlight U.S. cooperation with Israel on building more effective missile defenses, including the Iron Dome system that is designed to shoot down short-range rockets and artillery shells. That air defense system was developed in response to Israel's 2006 war with Hezbollah militants in Lebanon, who fired thousands of rockets, mostly short-range Katyushas, into northern Israel. The U.S. has provided $205 million for the project, and on Friday, Obama announced the release of a further $70 million.

In Tunis, Panetta plans to meet with his Tunisian counterpart as well as President Moncef Marzouki, leader of the small, secular Congress for the Republic party.

2 NATO Service Members Killed

BY RAHIM FAIEZ
Associated Press

KABUL, Afghanistan • The NATO military coalition on Sunday said two service members were killed in an insurgent attack in the west of the country.

The military alliance known as ISAF didn't provide further details. NATO also did not provide the nationalities of the dead. The deaths bring the number of international service members killed in Afghanistan so far this month to at least 44.

The latest casualties underscored the volatility of Afghanistan as NATO scales back its operations, planning to hand over security responsibility to local forces by the end of 2014.

The coalition also denied as "incorrect" Pakistani claims that its military had informed NATO 52 times in recent months that insurgents were crossing from Pakistan into Afghanistan.

"Whenever the Pakistani military has requested assistance, ISAF immediately dispatched the appropriate force to deal with the issue," the coalition said in a statement. "In the spirit of recent improving relations with the Pakistani military, ISAF will continue to take every Pakistani military report of cross-border movement very seriously and will assist whenever and wherever possible."

Pakistan's ambassador to the United States on Saturday claimed that Pakistan had reported 52 times to NATO in recent months when militants were spotted crossing into Afghan territory.

Sherry Rehman made the comments during the Aspen Security Forum being held in Colorado. She spoke via video teleconference.

The United States has criticized Pakistan for not doing enough to crack down on militants sheltering in safe havens in that country's lawless tribal areas, which border Afghanistan. They include the al-Qaida affiliated Haqqani network thought to be mostly in the North Waziristan region.

"We have many shared interests, including our respective commitments for coordinated action against the cross-border attacks of the Haqqani terrorists from North Waziristan who threaten Afghanistan, Pakistan, and the region," the NATO statement said.

Earlier, Afghan officials said insurgents shot and killed a government official in eastern Afghanistan.

The Wardak province governor's office said in a statement that the head of volatile Chak district was driving to his office Sunday when gunmen overtook his car. They shot both Mohammad Ismail Wafa and his adult son. The son was wounded.

ARK. SLAYING SUSPECT CLAIMED MENTAL ILLNESS IN 2007

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) • Records show that an Arkansas man suspected of killing his parents and abducting his sister claimed to be mentally ill in 2007 before eventually pleading guilty to assaulting a family or household member.

Antonio Whitlow was arrested Saturday in Memphis, Tenn., hours after his parents were found slain in their home in Little Rock, about 135 miles away. Authorities say his 12-year-old sister was with him and seemed unharmed.

Records show that Whitlow pleaded not guilty by reason of mental disease or defect in 2007 to a charge of aggravated assault on a family or household member.

Whitlow was found fit to stand trial after a psychiatric evaluation and he changed his plea to guilty.

He was sentenced to five years' probation. The term would have expired in October.

IRAN URGES BABY BOOM

BY NASSER KARIMI
Associated Press

TEHRAN, Iran • Iran's new message to parents: Get busy and have babies.

In a major reversal of once far-reaching family planning policies, authorities are now slashing its birth-control programs in an attempt to avoid an aging demographic similar to many Western countries that are struggling to keep up with state medical and social security costs.

The changes — announced in Iranian media last week — came after Supreme Leader Ayatollah Ali Khamenei described the country's wide-ranging contraceptive services as “wrong.” The independent Shargh newspaper quoted Mohammad Esmail Motlag, a Health Ministry official, as saying family planning programs have been cut from the budget for the current Iranian year, which began in March.

It's still unclear, however, whether the high-level appeals for bigger families will translate into a new population spike. Iran's economy is stumbling under a combination of international sanctions, inflation and double-digit unemployment. Many young people, particularly in Tehran and other large cities, are postponing marriage or keeping their families small because of the uncertainties.

Ali Reza Khamesian, a columnist whose work appears in several pro-reform newspapers, said the change in policy also may be an attempt to send a message to the world that Iran is not suffering from sanctions imposed over the nuclear program that the West suspects is aimed at producing weapons — something Tehran denies.

More than half of Iran's population is under 35 years old. Those youth form the base of opposition groups, including the so-called Green Movement that led unprecedented street protests after President Mahmoud Ahmadinejad's disputed re-election in 2009.

Professor on Quest for India's Hidden Inventors

RAVI NESSMAN
Associated Press

SEHORE, India • It's 43 degrees Celsius (110 F), and Prof. Anil Gupta has been hiking the scorched plains of central India for hours. But he smiles widely as he enters a tiny village in search of another unsung genius.

“If you have any new ideas or you have any new inventions, I'm here to promote you,” he tells farmers squatting beside a dusty roadside shrine to the Hindu god Shiva.

For more than two decades, Gupta has scoured rural India for its hidden innovations, motivated by the belief that the most powerful ideas for fighting poverty and hardship won't come from corporate research labs, but from ordinary people struggling to survive.

Gupta and his aides have uncovered more than 25,000 inventions, from the bicycle-mounted crop sprayer to the electric paintbrush that never needs to be dipped in a paint can.

Many of the cheap, simple ideas he spreads for free from one poor village to another with the inventor's blessing. Some he is working to bring to market, ensuring the innovator gets the credit and the profit that will spur others to create as well. Many ideas are simply documented in his database waiting for some investor to spot their potential. He routinely dispenses tiny grants, either from a government fund or his own web of organizations, to help poor innovators finish their projects.

Gupta's explorations have boosted inventors throughout rural India who, much like the “mad” uncles tinkering away in garages around the world, are dismissed as nuts by their neighbors until he arrives and declares them geniuses.

Take Nattubhai Vader, a farmer from the state of Gujarat, who watched women and children harvesting an especially troublesome variety of cotton and figured there had to be a better way.

Vader designed and then obsessively tweaked a massive apparatus of spinning rubber hoses and vacuums that fits over a tractor and can pick as much cotton in one hour as 10 people can in two days, he said.

He sank more than $20,000 into the harvester before his wife threatened to divorce him if he didn't save the family's remaining money for their kids' education. A few years later, Gupta found Vader, gave him the funding to restart and now plans to bring in a team of engineering students to refine it.

An Indian villager drives a tractor whose rear tires are filled with water for added weight to work on a field in the village of Dawatha in the Sehore district of Madhya Pradesh, India.

At the heart of Gupta's mission are his grueling weeklong Shodh Yatras, consisting of 20 kilometer (12 mile) daily hikes in the searing summer and frigid winter, nights spent sleeping in school courtyards, meals of watery lentils. The idea is to scare off uncommitted “tourists” and give participants a taste of peasant life.

“Your eyes will open and you will see things you've never seen before,” Akash Badave, a 23-year-old preparing to be rural administrator, says Gupta told him before the first of his three Shodh Yatras. “And that was the case.”

On one recent trek along parched hillsides in the central state of Madhya Pradesh, Gupta was accompanied by dozens of followers: young urbanites curious about rural poverty, an engineer who came to find herself, a team of inventors he collected from his previous journeys.

In Dhaboti, Gupta was escorted through the streets by a drummer calling out the villagers, Murali Dar, 80, hobbled over on a cane, holding twigs from a tree. A powder made from these can cure a fever, he said. Another man brought herbs to cure jaundice, yet another a wild lemon for animal cramps.

Kanhiaya Lal, 62, brought branches he uses to make an antidote for snake bites.

“If I die, the secret will die with me of how to cure people,” he said.

The offerings were documented by assistants with notebooks. Then, in a simple ceremony that reduced its participants to silent awe, Gupta gave each man a certificate and draped a shawl on his shoulders.

In the village of Moghra, a truck halted in a cloud of dust in the courtyard where Gupta and his team had spent the night. Abdul Rahim Khan had rushed over when his brother told him of the arrival of a man who might finally appreciate his work.

The farmer unloaded a miniature cotton gin that cost less than $4 to make and saved 10 times as much each year in processing fees. “A very good idea,” Gupta pronounced. Next was a wooden fodder cutter he made for a fraction the cost of the metal ones on the market.

Any more ideas? Gupta asked. Khan had been toying with a design for a more efficient soybean harvester, but he didn't have the 8,000 rupees ($150) for a prototype, he said.

Gupta promised him the money.

Khan's obsessions had made him an object of ridicule. Now, “I'm feeling very happy that someone has recognized my ideas and is trying to take it forward,” he said.

Gupta was pleased as well. Out-of-the-box thinkers need to be encouraged, not insulted, he said.

Gupta insisted every one of his 29 treks had yielded innovations. If the men didn't bring him inventions, he called on the women to bring recipes — “chemistry,” he said. He interviewed every centenarian he met, documenting their secrets of longevity and dismissing doubts they may not be anywhere near as old as they claimed.

He carried a spoon and small plastic bags to dig up dirt — “microbial memories” — for later analysis, and photographed anything that caught his eye, such as an interesting paint job.

Gupta ran excitedly to a field being plowed and stepped through a barbed wire fence. He had heard tractor owners in the area were filling their tires with water to make them heavier for digging into the hard soil.

He located Ghanshayam Yadav, the man credited with having the idea in 2004. Farmers were having trouble plowing the increasingly dense fields and the tractor company was charging 10,000 rupees ($180) for 80 kilogram (175-pound) weights, Yadav said. Instead, he pumped 200 kilograms (440 pounds) of water into the tires for just 200 rupees ($4).

Cheaper, better, longer lasting, more efficient. “This is an amazing experiment,” Gupta said. He gave Yadav a shawl.

Gupta dreams his ideas will expand beyond India's borders, with treks for knowledge spreading to the unexplored corners of the globe.

For now he presses on, jumping over a ditch in a dried up lake bed on his way to the next village.

“There's so much to see,” he says. “You would need several lifetimes.”

Dad Shoots His 2 Kids, 1 Fatally

WORCESTER, Mass. (AP) • A man who had recently separated from his wife shot his two children, killing his 7-year-old daughter, before committing suicide, prosecutors said.

A family member called police Saturday night after finding the bodies of 41-year-old Daryl Benway and his daughter, Abigail, in the master bedroom of their two-story Oxford home, Worcester County District Attorney Joseph Early Jr. said.

Benway's 9-year-old son, Owen, was found shot in the head in the kitchen and was taken to UMass Memorial Children's Medical Center in serious condition. Owen has been in pediatric intensive care, a spokesman for Early said Sunday. He said he had no additional information about Owen Benway's condition, and a hospital spokeswoman would not comment.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

Kelleen Benway is detained by a police officer after she returned to her home on Main Street in Oxford, Mass., where multiple shootings occurred.

Benway's wife, Kelleen, returned home after the shootings, unaware of what had happened, and found a swarm of police cruisers and television crews, Early said. She was taken to the children's hospital, where authorities told her the fates of her children and husband.

Early said he couldn't speculate on a motive. He said the Benways separated weeks ago but were still married.

No restraining orders had been filed against Daryl Benway, and he had no criminal record, the DA said. He had a gun license that expired in 1999, Early said.

On Daryl Benway's Facebook page, his profile picture posted in December showed him with his family in front of a Christmas tree. He described the woman next to him as “my beautiful wife Kelleen.” Owen stood in front of him in a white dress shirt and red plaid tie, while brown-haired Abigail wore a black and white dress with a black hair bow.

Report: Little Progress in Fighting Food-Borne Illnesses

BY DINA ELBOGHADAY
The Washington Post

Little progress has been made in combating many types of food-borne illnesses in recent years, according to new federal data, an outcome that food safety advocates say underscores the need to put into place the landmark food-safety bill signed by President Barack Obama more than a year ago.

The most recent figures from the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention show that the rates of infections linked to four out of five key pathogens it tracks — salmonella, vibrio, campylobacter and listeria — remained relatively steady or increased from 2007 through 2011. The exception is a strain of E. coli, which has been tied to fewer illnesses in the same time frame.

The results frustrated consumer advocates, who along with industry groups pushed for passage of the Food Safety Modernization Act, which empowers the Food and Drug Administration to prevent food-borne illnesses instead of simply reacting to them. Obama signed the legislation in January 2011 after a string of food-borne outbreaks shook consumer confidence in the nation's food supply.

But the administration has not met the deadlines for releasing draft rules needed to implement key provisions of the law, including one that would mandate that food imported into this country meet the same safety standards as food produced domestically.

“Everyone was hoping that this new food safety law would be in place and we'd start seeing improvements by now,” said Erik Olson, a director at the Pew Health Group. “What these CDC numbers show is that unless new protections are put into place, millions of Americans are going to continue to get sick from contaminated food.”

Retired Adm. James D. Watkins, Leader of AIDS, Ocean Commissions, Dies at 85

BY VALERIE J. NELSON
Los Angeles Times (MCT)

Navy Adm. James D. Watkins was considered "an unlikely hero" after he was called out of retirement in 1987 to accomplish what many considered a near-impossible task — taking over the leadership of a beleaguered and divided presidential commission on AIDS.

A former chief of naval operations, Watkins was a deeply religious Roman Catholic father of six who had once called the military's ban on homosexuals "a sound policy." Yet he was also known as an independent and analytical thinker.

Asked by the Reagan administration to formulate a national strategy to deal with the AIDS epidemic, the commission united under Watkins' new leadership, releasing a 1988 report that was widely praised for its ambitious health care initiatives and its compassion.

"It was vintage Jim Watkins," Adm. William J.

Crowe Jr., then chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, told The Times in 1988. "He learned everything he could about it, analyzed it, then divided it up into manageable areas. It's just the kind of thing he does so well."

Watkins, 85, who was secretary of Energy under President George H.W. Bush, died Thursday at his home in Alexandria, Va. He had been in declining health in recent years, said his brother, John.

After taking charge of the Energy Department in 1989, Watkins launched the first program to clean up pollution at the nation's nuclear plants and spearheaded the administration's energy legislation.

Bush acknowledged choosing Watkins in part because of a background in nuclear energy that included serving under Adm. Hyman Rickover, who guided the Navy's development of nuclear propulsion in the early 1970s. The two grew close, and when Rickover died in 1986 Watkins gave the eulogy.

"The Navy changed me," Watkins told the Los Angeles Times in 1988. "Rickover had an intense interest in getting involved with the best and the brightest, and he drove it very hard.... He got me to understand the importance of education and doing everything you can to measure up to your God-given potential."

At the Energy Department, Watkins also developed a 10-point plan to strengthen environmental protection and waste management activities in the agency, and instituted policy designed to decrease American dependence on foreign oil. He left the post in 1993.

During his 37-year naval career, he rose to chief naval officer and was known for developing a maritime strategy for dealing with the Soviet Union and for improving the lives of those serving in the Navy and their families, according to Jonathan Greenert, chief of naval operations.

"Watkins was an innovative thinker," Greenert said,

"who pushed our Navy forward."

The sixth of seven children, James David Watkins was born March 7, 1927, at home in Alhambra. His grandfather George Clinton Ward was president of Southern California Edison in the early 1930s, and his father, Edward Francis Watkins, owned the Southern California Winery Co. and grew grapes in what is now San Marino. After losing his ranch during Prohibition, his father went to work for Edison.

James Watkins once said his mother, Louise, was a woman 30 years ahead of her time. In 1938, she unsuccessfully sought the Republican nomination for Senate.

After receiving a bachelor's degree from the U.S. Naval Academy in 1949, Watkins served on submarines during the Korean and Vietnam wars. In 1958, he earned a master's degree in mechanical engineering from the U.S. Naval Postgraduate School in Monterey.

South African Baboon Rescuer Dies in Fire

BY JON GAMBRELL
Associated Press

JOHANNESBURG • Conservationist Rita Miljo, who cared for and reintroduced packs of baboons back into the wilds of South Africa, died in a fire that destroyed much of the headquarters of the sanctuary she built, a sanctuary official said Saturday. She was 81.

Miljo died Friday in the small apartment she kept above the clinic of the Centre for Animal Rehabilitation & Education in the bush of Limpopo province, said Karl Pierce, a director with the sanctuary. With her at her death was Bobby, the first battered Chacma baboon she ever rescued and nursed back to health in 1980 after spiriting her away from a national park without a permit. Bobby also died in the fire, along with two other older baboons that stayed in her apartment, Pierce said.

The fire broke out around 8 p.m. Friday after volunteers and workers left the center for the evening, Pierce said. No one else was injured in the blaze, which consumed the clinic, offices and a house on the property, about 400 kilometers (250 miles) northeast of Johannesburg. The cause of the fire remains under investigation.

While Miljo no longer ran day-to-day operations of the center, which cares for more than 400 baboons, she remained a constant presence and a figurehead for the organization she founded in 1989.

"Everybody's still in shock about this," Pierce said.

Born in Germany in 1931, Miljo came to South Africa in the 1950s. In a 2008 article about her in The Washington Post Magazine, Miljo said helping baboons taught her "why people behave the way they do."

"Chimpanzees can be deceitful, just like humans, whereas baboons haven't learned that yet," she said at the time. "So what you learn from the baboons is the truth about yourself. Chimpanzees have already learned to find beautiful little excuses for their behavior."

In South Africa, baboons have a troublesome reputation. In Cape Town, baboons remain known for raiding cars and frightening tourists. Baboons are a protected species under South African legislation but their aggressive pursuits of food have led to conflicts with residents.

Miljo nursed orphaned and injured baboons back to health, then pioneered ways of reintroducing whole troops of cared-for baboons back into the wild, her center said. In 1994, the center successfully released 10 hand-reared baboons back into the wild. A year later, 70 percent had survived and integrated back into the wild population, the center said, a success as many thought the human-cared-for baboons wouldn't be able to adjust.

LeFavour’s Run for U.S. Congress Seat Could Create Small Revolution

A long-held principle in electoral politics: Until the votes are counted, there are no absolutes – no 100 percent chance of winning, no zero percent chance of losing. Even in a race that looks like a slam dunk, there’s a little room for long-shot possibility.

Randy Stapilus
Ridenbaugh.com

So the newly-posted Facebook page from 2nd district Democratic challenger Nicole LeFavour, “Why Nicole can win,” makes for provocative reading. Widespread wisdom is that six-term Republican incumbent Mike Simpson is solidly positioned for a seventh term; is there an argument to the contrary? (Bearing in mind, it would be political malpractice for her not to pitch one.)

To start: Idaho’s congressional districts change this year, and the second now includes more of Boise than before, including nearly all its Democratic-leaning voters. “Some consider this district stronger for Democrats than Idaho’s first congressional district was when Walt Minnick was elected to U.S. Congress in 2008.” Maybe. But Minnick won in unusual conditions, and lost two years later.

Second, “Mike Simpson simply has never faced a democratic opponent who is both well-funded and well-organized. He has grown comfortable without a challenger for so many years and has spent much of his time out of state, his responses to constituent letters growing less and less personal.” The second point is a matter of perspective, but as to the first, Simpson has had serious opponents. He was held to 52 percent in his first 1998 run against former Representative Richard Stallings, and Simpson’s weakest re-elect in the last decade, 62 percent, was against former legislator and ace organizer Jim Hansen.

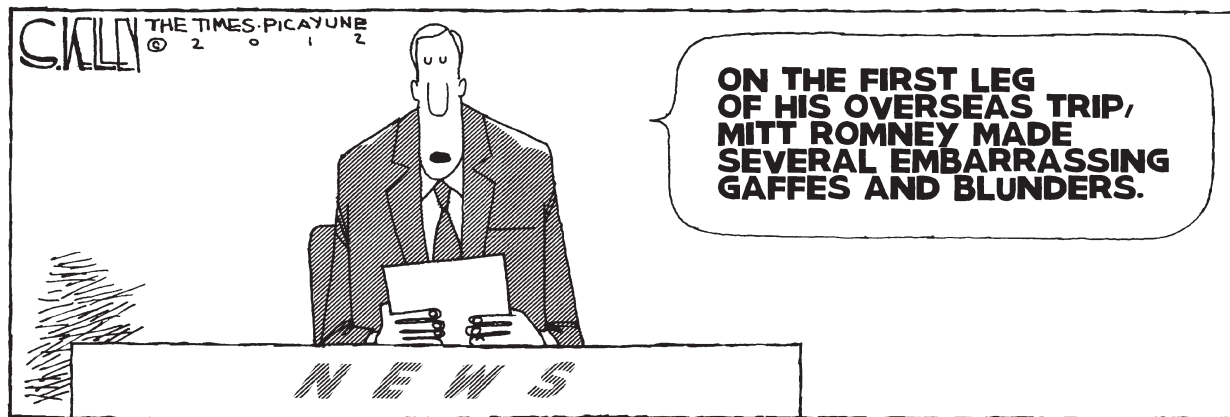

“Few people realize the level of name recognition and support Nicole has in Eastern Idaho where her work leading efforts to stop Tom Luna’s efforts to replace teachers with laptops made her a familiar face and leader for thousands of teachers and parents.” She may get some help there, but remember: Luna won the district in a landslide in 2010, and the region has many legislators who backed his school change efforts.

LeFavour is a good fundraiser, at “almost $160,000 so far.” But: Simpson’s cash intake, as of June 30, was $955,982. Much of that has been spent, but he easily could raise more. She is a hard-working and strong campaigner, better than most – but not all – of her predecessor challengers.

The page rousts the elephant in the room: “For those who ask, can a gay person win, especially in eastern Idaho? Remember LDS families have gay kids too. ... While there may remain dwindling tension over the issue of marriage, animosity toward gay people generally is quickly vanishing.” This is a wild card, but there are factors in play before you even get to it. LeFavour is a relatively liberal, north Boise Democrat campaigning in a district where most voters routinely support very different candidates. Presidential years in Idaho usually help Republicans. There’s literally nothing in the last two decades of Idaho voting history in the second district to argue for an upset.

Suggesting though – leaving aside the horse race – some real utility in her run. Instead of encountering a Democrat running as Republican-lite, or quickly forgettable, eastern Idahoans will be getting some world-view expansion. LeFavour is working hard introducing herself to people who rarely see or hear from anyone like her. In parts of Idaho where cultural norms and demographics are tightly limited, she could create a small revolution – an awareness of more than one way to look at things politically. Which may be a radical concept in some parts of the Gem State.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Hate the Sin, Love the Sinner

This is in response to Melissa Andrews’ letter on July 23:

Whatever happened to Love Thy Neighbor and Do Unto Others?

It’s sad to learn from your letter you were brought up a Christian but are no longer. I believe you may have been brought up in a Christian home.

I also see from your letter that it’s because Christians (true, ones that uphold God’s word) cannot condone the gays, lesbians (homosexual) lifestyle.

You ask, is that Christian? Melissa, the answer is yes! We are to still love all people and we hope and pray they turn from their sinful ways. But political correctness has nothing to do with Christianity.

We, as Christians, cannot judge these things as God has already done so in his word. We Christians must stand firm on God’s word. Hate the sin – love the sinner.

God would like for all to go to heaven, but even his word says: Many will seek but few will find.

We must look at things as God looks at things, not as the world does as the world becomes complacent. But God is unchanging.

God never said it would be easy to be a Christian, but to rise anew with Christ for the remission of sin by baptism.

You seem to be judging people for standing firm with God and not compromising. I’m proud to be a Christian. God bless the politically correct while praying continually for them.

If U.S. Apologizes to Its Citizens, Why Doesn’t Japan?

Finally, someone has the same idea as I.

Where are the apologies to the USA? I haven’t heard or seen of any memorials to the thousands of U.S. POWs who were tortured, starved and killed by the Japanese.

I haven’t heard of their families being recompensed by the Japanese government, nor have they apologized in any shape or form for all the atrocities they perpetrated upon our citizens.

Why does the USA have to apologize for defending ourselves?

Come on, you bleeding hearts, use your common sense! Or has common sense vanished from our country?

Of course, our government has been apologizing to everyone for the last 3 1/2 years since Emperor B.O. got in office.

Why Yahoo’s New CEO Still Can’t Have It All

Last month it was the cover story in the Atlantic: an explanation of “Why Women Still Can’t Have It All.” Last week came a response from the business pages: “Oh, But You Can.”

Anne-Marie Slaughter, who quit her high-ranking job at the State Department to return to teaching at Princeton University and spend more time with her family, is the author of the magazine cover story. Then Marissa Mayer rocked the male-dominated world of technology when she was named chief executive officer of Yahoo and announced she was pregnant.

The headlines about Mayer are deserved. No one can remember another woman about to deliver a child getting the top job anywhere. Only 4 percent of Fortune 500 CEOs are female, and most of those became so after their child-bearing years were over. The only other tech CEO, Meg Whitman of Hewlett-Packard, is 55.

In government, too, top jobs – look at the Supreme Court, for example – typically go to women whose children are grown (Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg) or who don’t have any (Justices Elena Kagan and Sonia Sotomayor). Back in the Dark Ages, when I was a government lawyer and pregnant, I waited as long as possible to divulge my pregnancy. I preferred to be thought of as fat rather than irrelevant. Who was going to give work to someone who at best would shortly be disappearing for three months and at worst would be distracted for the next 18 years?

Margaret Carlson

So yes, it is good news that Mayer broke the nursery ceiling, especially if it trickles down. Now that we’re done cheering, let’s have a quiet moment to think about who’s more right about the state of women in the workplace: the professor or the CEO?

Slaughter congratulated Mayer on her triumph with the cautionary note that not everyone should try this at home. Mayer, she said, proves her point: The only woman who can have it all is “superhuman, rich, and in charge.”

Look at Mayer’s statement about coming back to work. “My maternity leave will be a few weeks long and I’ll work through it,” she told Fortune. Thanks a lot for that.

True, Mayer actually doesn’t need time off in the sense the rest of us do. As the boss, she’s the queen of flex-time. Worried about making it to the office for a meeting, or a conference call, or a PowerPoint presentation? Not Mayer. The meeting starts when she says it starts – and will as long as she’s there.

And would Yahoo be giving the job to a pregnant woman if it weren’t already in a what-the-heck state of mind? After all, this is a company whose stock has lost half its value in the past four years and has scrolled through CEOs like so many instant messages. Mayer’s selection doesn’t mean Exxon Mobil or IBM will be picking a pregnant CEO anytime soon.

There’s also a sense that this choice is proof of the “glass cliff” theory, which says a woman only gets a job when the odds are stacked against her success. And when it’s not worth as much anymore. Doors to the medical profession swung open wider for women once it stopped paying so well.

Then there’s money, which is one thing that separates the happy working mothers from the harried working mothers. Mayer, wealthy from her time at Google and destined to be well-paid at Yahoo, may well change a diaper. But I bet she will never have to run out at midnight to Wal-Mart to buy a box of Pampers. Peek inside the household of a woman at the top, and you will find out that she doesn’t just have a great nanny, she has several. It’s a family version of outsourcing. This doesn’t make Mayer a bad mother – just a more efficient one.

We don’t know, and neither does Mayer, whether her energies and emotions will be divided in ways she isn’t anticipating. The crushing desire to be in two places at once doesn’t end with breastfeeding and frequent visits to the pediatrician.

Slaughter writes about how, once upon a time, she smiled a “faintly superior smile” when another woman told her she would be taking some time off. Slaughter had been part of the chorus “making millions of women feel that they are to blame if they cannot manage to rise up the ladder as fast as men and also have a family and an active home life.” Then she got a job outside academia, working long hours on someone else’s schedule. She quit.

The howls were as loud at this admission as the cheers were long for Mayer. But Slaughter is the one who has the workplace right. It’s a difficult place for working parents of both sexes, although we wouldn’t be having this debate if Yahoo’s new CEO were an expectant father.

This difficulty is not due to a failure of ambition, brains or effort, or of legislation (that said, better maternity leave, flextime and child care would help). There’s no legislation that will put more than 24 hours in a day or get you home for dinner and bedtime. If you have a child with problems – and who doesn’t at some point? – it’s even harder.

Marissa Mayer, meet Anne-Marie Slaughter. You have a lot to talk about.

In Obama Era, Have Race Relations Improved?

BY JESSE WASHINGTON
Associated Press

PHILADELPHIA • Ask Americans how race relations have changed under their first black president and they are ready with answers.

Ashley Ray, a white woman, hears more people debating racial issues. "I know a lot of people who really thought we were OK as a nation, a culture, and now they understand that we're not," she says.

Karl Douglass, a black man, sees stereotypes easing. "White people deal with me and my family differently," he says.

Jose Lozano, who is Hispanic by way of Puerto Rico, believes prejudice is emerging from the shadows. "Now the racism is coming out," he says.

In the afterglow of Barack Obama's historic victory, most people in the United States believed that race relations would improve. Nearly four years later, has that dream come true? Americans have no shortage of thoughtful opinions, and no consensus.

As the nation moves toward the multiracial future heralded by this son of an African father and white mother, the events of Obama's first term, and what people make of them, help trace the racial arc of his presidency.

Arizona Gov. Jan Brewer points during an intense conversation in January with President Barack Obama after he arrived at Phoenix-Mesa Gateway Airport, in Mesa, Ariz. In the summer of 2010, race and politics collided when Arizona Republicans passed an immigration law that critics said would lead to racial profiling of Hispanics.

Shortly before the 2008 election, 56 percent of Americans surveyed by the Gallup organization said that race relations would improve if Obama were elected. One day after his victory, 70 percent said race relations would improve and only 10 percent predicted they would get worse.

Just weeks after taking office, Obama said, "There was justifiable pride on the part of the country that we had taken a step to move us beyond some of the searing legacies of racial discrimination."

Then he joked, "But that lasted about a day."

Or, rather, three months.

By July 2009, the black Harvard professor Henry Louis Gates was arrested for yelling at a white police officer who questioned whether Gates had broken into his own home. Asked to comment, Obama said he didn't know all the facts, but Gates was a personal friend and the officer had acted "stupidly."

The uproar was immediate. Obama acknowledged afterward, "I could've calibrated those words differently."

Ed Cattaneo, a retired computer training manager from Cape May, N.J., points to that episode as evidence of how Obama has hurt race relations.

"He's made them terrible," says Cattaneo, who is white. He also sees Obama as siding against white people through actions such as his Justice Department's decision to drop voter intimidation charges against New Black Panthers and in a program to turn out the black vote called "African-Americans for Obama."

Larry Sharkey, also white, draws different conclusions from the past four years.

"Attitudes are much better," Sharkey says as he slices raw meat in a Philadelphia butcher shop. He remembers welcoming a black family that moved next door to him 20 years ago in Claymont, Del. A white neighbor advised him not to associate with the new arrivals, warning, "Your property values are going to go down."

That kind of thing would never happen today, Sharkey says.

As Obama dealt with fallout from the Gates affair during the summer of 2009, the tea party coalesced out of opposition to Obama's stimulus and health care proposals. The vast majority of tea partiers were white. A small number of them displayed racist signs or were connected to white supremacist groups, prompting the question: Are Obama's opponents motivated by dislike of the president's policies, his race — or both?

As that debate grew, Obama retreated to the race-neutral stance that has been a hallmark of his career. An October 2009 Gallup poll showed a large drop in racial optimism since the election, with 41 percent of respondents saying that race relations had improved under Obama. Thirty-five percent said there was no change and 22 percent said race relations were worse.

The president has discussed race in occasional speeches to groups such as the National Urban League or the National Council of La Raza, and in interviews with Hispanic and African-American media outlets. But he usually walks a careful line, allowing the nation to get used to the idea of a black president without doing things to make race seem a central aspect of his governance.

"There is a totally different psychological frame of reference that this country has never had," says William Smith, executive director of the National Center for Race Amity at Wheelock College.

Rep. Dave Camp Patiently Pursues Tax Reform

LORI MONTGOMERY
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON • Earlier this year, as House Republicans began strategizing for the November elections, conservatives badgered their leaders to unveil a detailed plan to overhaul the U.S. tax code. The GOP has vowed to lop 10 points off the top tax rate, and many House freshmen were eager to make that promise a centerpiece of their first re-election campaigns.

It fell to Rep. Dave Camp, R-Mich., to convince them that tax reform, like so many things in Washington, is more complicated than it might seem.

In a series of meetings, the chairman of the tax-writing House Ways and Means Committee gently explained that lowering rates would explode the budget deficit unless Republicans also proposed pruning back expensive credits and deductions that benefit millions of ordinary people. The break for home mortgage interest, for example, or the $1,000 child credit. Or that stalwart of GOP orthodoxy, the 15 percent rate for capital gains.

Releasing such a plan in an election year would invite attack by Democrats, Camp said, and could forever poison the well for reform. His reasoning prevailed. And Camp, a low-key 11-term veteran, managed to unite his often impatient caucus behind his own slow but methodical drive to make a landmark revision of the nation's tax laws a legislative reality, rather than just another campaign talking point.

Now, as Washington bickers over whether to keep existing tax policy a bit longer, Camp is focused on finishing the job. Leaders in both parties say they want 2013 to be the year Congress finally enacts a simpler, fairer tax code. Last week, Camp unveiled legislation laying out his principles for reform and establishing deadlines to force action sometime next summer.

Analysts predict this will be much harder than the last major tax reform, under Ronald Reagan in 1986. Then, there was broad agreement to close obvious loopholes that were abused by businesses and investors and use the extra cash to lower rates for individuals. Today, lawmakers confront a code strewn with popular deductions that serve important social goals and powerful interests.

In 1986, "there were giant loopholes that were just ripe for closing," said Syracuse University economist Leonard Burman, who worked on reform in the Reagan Treasury Department. Today, "there is again a broad perception that the tax system is broken. But people's ideas about the right kind of tax system vary dramatically."

Questions About the Final Days of the Campaign

BY DAN BALZ
The Washington Post

1. Will this campaign be relentlessly negative to the end?

Isn't the answer already obvious? President Barack Obama and presumptive Republican nominee Mitt Romney have already spent $59 million to air more than 170,000 negative ads, according to Kantar Media's Campaign Media Analysis Group. And that doesn't include the handiwork of the super PACs, which are spending prodigiously and whose ads will be even more negative than those by the candidates.

In the estimation of John Geer, a political scientist at Vanderbilt University who wrote a book about the value of negative ads, this campaign will be "the most negative since the advent of television." The reason: "Neither has a very solid vision about the future except, 'You don't want the other guy,'" Democratic strategist Rick Ridder said.

Not that there won't be some positive ads. The president used the Opening Ceremonies of the Olympics to air a generally positive commercial. At some point, say Republican strategists, Romney will need to define himself more positively than he's done so far.

The candidates' advisers think that, however much voters deny the negativity, they watch and can be swayed by negative ads. The more you see an ad on television, the more you can assume the candidate behind it thinks it's working to his benefit. That's why the Obama attack ad featuring Romney singing "America the Beautiful" is running constantly in swing-state markets.

2. Will Romney's choice of a vice presidential running mate make any difference?

In the short term, Romney's decision will be important. His choice will say something about Romney and what message he wants to send about his candidacy. The process of picking the running mate will be the first thing he does that will be looked at in the context of presidential decision making.

But what impact will it have? Would Sen. Rob Portman of Ohio deliver his state in November? Would former Minnesota governor Tim Pawlenty put his state in play — or help elsewhere in the upper Midwest? Would Sen. Marco Rubio energize non-Cuban Hispanic voters in Florida and beyond? Is an out-of-box pick too risky after Sarah Palin?

3. Is the president hostage to the economic news between now and November?

Saying the president is hostage to the economic news may be too strong, but the weak economy is a main reason Romney has a chance to win and there's little Obama can do to change the trajectory.

Friday's report showing that gross domestic product grew at a rate of just 1.5 percent in the second quarter followed a June jobs report showing the third straight month with fewer than 100,000 jobs added to the workforce. Another jobs report is coming at the end of the week.

Lynn Vavreck, a political scientist at UCLA, argues that Obama is tied to what has already happened this year. Voters' perceptions about the economy, she said, become baked by the end of the second quarter. That's bad news for the president, which is why Republican strategists such as Whit Ayers and Jon McHenry argue that "if the news doesn't get better by November, Obama doesn't win."

The economy isn't the only thing that will decide the election, but it's difficult to point to anything more important. It's the central tenet of Romney's candidacy and the reason Romney advisers remain confident that he will prevail in November, despite some of the problems he's had the past month.

4. Do Romney's wealth and business record make him more or less electable?

You'll get more debate about this than almost anything else about the campaign, much of it colored by partisanship. Republicans think that, in the end, Romney's business is a plus and his wealth won't be held against him. Democrats think the combination could be decisive in keeping the president in office.

"Romney doesn't seem capable of feeling people's pain," said Democratic strategist Craig Varoga. "His work at Bain is a huge disability," added Steve Rosenthal, another Democratic strategist with long-time ties to the labor movement. Celinda Lake, a Democratic pollster, said the way Romney has dealt with his wealth "is a negative in terms of being in touch."

Republicans disagree. "It definitely makes him more electable," said Hogan Gidley, a GOP strategist. Steve Grubbs, an Iowa Republican strategist, said Romney's business background, "will be a benefit no matter how much the president's team tries to trash it."

Mysterious Nodding Disease Afflicts Young Ugandans

BY RODNEY MUHUMUZA
Associated Press

KITGUM, Uganda • Augustine Languna's eyes welled up and then his voice failed as he recalled the drowning death of his 16-year-old daughter. The women near him looked away, respectfully avoiding the kind of raw emotion that the head of the family rarely displayed.

"What is traumatizing us," he said after regaining his composure, "is that the well where she died is where we still go for drinking water."

Joyce Labol was found dead about three years ago. As she bent low to fetch water from a pond a half mile from Languna's compound of thatched huts, an uncontrollable spasm overcame her. The teen was one of more than 300 young Ugandans who have died as a result of the mysterious illness that is afflicting more and more children across northern Uganda and in pockets of South Sudan.

The disease is called nodding syndrome, or nodding head disease, because those who have it nod their heads and sometimes go into epileptic-like fits. The disease stunts children's growth and destroys their cognition, rendering them unable to perform small tasks. Some victims don't recognize their own parents.

Ugandan officials say some 3,000 children in the East African country suffer from the affliction. Some caregivers even tie nodding syndrome children up to trees so that they don't have to monitor them every minute of the day.

Beginning Monday, Uganda hosts a four-day international conference on nodding syndrome that health officials believe will lead to a clearer understanding of the mysterious disease.

World Health Organization officials in Uganda said the conference will be attended by about 120 scientists from all over the world. Anthony Mbonye, of Uganda's Ministry of Health, said the conference will allow scientists to share knowledge about the disease.

A woman demonstrates how she ties her two children, who suffer from nodding disease, in order for them to minimize their movement. The disease stunts children and destroys their cognition, rendering them unable to perform small tasks.

Scientists are working to find the cause of the disease, which is stretching health care capacities here and testing the patience of a community looking for answers as to why it attacks mostly children between the ages of 5 and 15, why it's concentrated in certain communities, and whether it is contagious.

The U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, which has been investigating nodding syndrome at the request of the Ugandan government, has ruled out 36 possible causes since 2009 and is carrying out a clinical trial for potential treatments. In mid-February the lead investigator said on a visit to Uganda that there is now "clear evidence that this is an epidemic" about which very little is known.

"We did repeated exams on several of these children and found that some of the children had stayed the same, some of the children had gotten worse, none of the children had improved," said Scott Dowell, director of CDC's Division of Global Disease Detection and Emergency Response.

Researchers are focusing on the connection between nodding syndrome and the parasite that causes river blindness, Dowell said, though it is not yet clear there are any links. Onchocerciasis, or river blindness, has been around for a long time, but nodding syndrome is somewhat new, he said. "And we also know that there are many parts of the world that have onchocerciasis but have no evidence of nodding syndrome."

Many residents here in the northernmost reaches of Uganda, nearly 300 miles from Kampala, say they think the disease is rooted in violence. Locals have said it's the only explanation for the disease's prevalence in places most affected by the legacy of a brutal war carried out by Joseph Kony, the leader of the Lord's Resistance Army, a rebel group. Kony and the group have waged a campaign of murder, rape, and the abduction of boys and girls who go on to become killing machines or sex slaves.

"We the Acholi have suffered a lot, and I am asking why," said Benjamin Ojwang, an Anglican bishop in the area. "In the absence of Kony, we were beginning to find relative peace. When are our people going to rest?"

A disease as strange as nodding head gives people a sense of hopelessness and helplessness, said N.K. Okun-Okaka, a retired veterinarian who has the status of a village elder.

"They can only do something about it if they know the cause, how it is spread. My heart goes out to these children. We feel very sorry and we feel like we do not live in the modern world," he said.

Ugandan health officials have known about the disease for nearly 10 years. By 2006, after Kony was repulsed from Ugandan territory, health care providers had diagnosed several cases of epilepsy without stopping to ask why.

The Art of the Deal: CSI Alum Chasing Dream, History

In between playing for the New York Knicks' summer league team in Las Vegas and getting ready to play for his home country in attempting to qualify for next year's European Championships, former CSI Golden Eagle Artisan "Art" Parakhouski made a stop in Twin Falls to visit some old friends and acquaintances.

"This is kind of my vacation," Parakhouski said Friday night over dinner with some athletic officials at CSI before heading back to Belarus.

and the Twin Falls Chamber of Commerce would have quite an endorsement. As it is, all spots on the globe are candidates for appearances by professional, non-Olympic basketball players this time of year, when the eyes and minds of basketball fans everywhere are focused on London.

"I took a couple of days to recover from summer league and to set my mind for playing for my national team," said Parakhouski, who is still the leading candidate to become the first NBA player from Belarus, even after a collegiate career at Radford that saw him go undrafted and forced him to go to Europe and play in leagues in Latvia and Ukraine.

But before he can make progress toward that goal, there is qualification for the European Championships, to be held in Slovenia. The first qualifying game is against the Czech Republic on Aug. 15. Belarus will vie for a spot in Group F against the Czechs, Turkey, Italy and Portugal. It can qualify for the championships if it finishes in the top two in group play or is one of the four-best third-place teams. However, eight teams have already qualified — seven based on having qualified for the Olympics, plus the host nation.

Once that month-long qualification process is over, it's back to the United States and Knicks training camp in September. There, Parakhouski will again pursue his goal of making an NBA roster, although as a free agent, there is nothing to stop another NBA team from signing him to a contract and inviting him to its training camp.

Johnson Dominant at Indy, Wins 4th Brickyard 400

ASSOCIATED PRESS

INDIANAPOLIS • Jimmie Johnson fondly recalls watching the Indianapolis 500 as a kid in California, rearranging the couch cushions so he could pretend he was sitting in a race car.

Johnson's grandfather was an A.J. Foyt fan. Johnson liked Rick Mears. And now Johnson might be mentioned in the same breath as those two drivers and other Indy greats.

Johnson stamped another exclamation point on his racing resume Sunday, a dominant drive that ended with his fourth career Brickyard 400 victory.

"I'm able to join racing legends, my heroes and people I looked up to my entire life," Johnson said. "To join them was a huge, huge honor!"

With the win, Johnson joined Hendrick Motorsports teammate Jeff Gordon as the only NASCAR drivers to win four times at the historic 2.5-mile track, which has hosted stock car racing since 1994.

The victory also puts Johnson among some top names in the track's record books.

Only three drivers have won four Indianapolis 500s: Foyt, Mears and Al Unser Sr. Formula One ace Michael Schumacher won the U.S. Grand Prix five times on Indy's road course configuration.

French Get Revenge for 2008 Relay Loss to U.S.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LONDON • Ryan Lochte grabbed at the edge of the pool, head down, staring at the water. Michael Phelps glared at the scoreboard, trying to digest the first silver medal of his Olympic career.

Right beside them, the French celebrated.

It was just like 2008 but with the roles reversed.

This time, it was France chasing down the United States — and Lochte, no less — to win another riveting relay at the Olympics.

"We got our revenge," French swimmer Clement Lefert said.

With Phelps looking much stronger than he did the night before, the Americans built a commanding lead over the first three legs of the 4x100-meter freestyle relay Sunday and never really had to worry about the defending world champions from Australia.

When Lochte dove into the water on the anchor leg, he was a half-body length ahead of the field and looking to add another gold to his dominating victory Saturday in the 400 individual medley.

U.S. Men Rout France 98-71 in Olympic Hoops

LONDON • The hiccups outnumbered the highlights, and for a while the U.S. racked up fouls faster than points.

The opener wasn't artistic. However, it was enough — easily enough.

Kevin Durant scored 22 points in his Olympic debut, Kevin Love added 14 and LeBron James had eight assists as the American men's basketball team overcame some sloppy moments with a 98-71 win Sunday over France.

"We know everybody else expects us to win by 40 points," said Carmelo Anthony. "For us, a win's a win. We expect every game to be like this one."

Seeking a second straight gold medal to match the redemptive one they captured in Beijing four years ago, the Americans expected a tough test from a French team featuring San Antonio guard Tony Parker and five other NBA players. And although the U.S. was never in real trouble — it only led 22-21 after one quarter — there were enough flaws (14 turnovers, 26 fouls) to keep coach Mike Krzyzewski and his staff busy and this superstar-laden squad

"It wasn't perfect," said James, who only took six shots while setting up his teammates. "We've still got room for improvement. We had too many turnovers, too many fouls and we had a couple of defensive rebounds we could have come up with. But overall, we played a pretty good game for as close to 40 minutes as possible!"

Kobe Bryant had said this team could beat the 1992 Dream Team that changed international hoops forever at the Barcelona Games. That matchup is mythical, but the London Games aren't and this U.S. team will have to play much better in upcoming games if it plans to maintain American dominance.

"It was working pretty good for us running down low, and we were just kind of hanging out waiting for her to burn her stuff up," McKean said. "Towards the end of the race she couldn't hold it in there and we drove right around."

Knowing she had a strong car, but needing a few adjustments between races, Newhouse lined up seventh for the second main event of the night with McKean starting eighth. Pehrson again held the early lead until Daniel Shirley went out front at Lap 8.

Nine laps later, Newhouse knew the fine-tuning had worked when she took over as front-runner and began to pull away from the rest of the field. With just four laps remaining in the race she seemed well on her way to victory, but the caution was displayed after the cars of McKean and Daniel Shirley, who were battling for the second position, connected in turn four.

After the restart Newhouse quickly took back command of the race and finished 1.556 seconds ahead of Casey Pehrson, who toughed out a second-place finish. Dan Pehrson held on for third followed by McKean and Shirley.

"I had a really tight car in the first main and Kris (McKean) had just enough to get past me," Newhouse said. "Later, I thought if my car was a piece of junk driving wise but we were leading the pack, I wondered what it was going to be like if we got it good. That's what we did for the second main — we took our best guess at it and it worked. Another win and more points."

Reports of questionable fuel used in the Newhouse car circulated during post-race inspection but the race results stood.

Dale Miles took the lead from wife Billi Miles at Lap 4 of the Street Stocks main event race but Ernie Hall, who took the green flag from the rear of the field took over at Lap 14. Pressure to the new leader throughout the remaining laps was given by Jason Todd, but in the sprint to the checkered Hall hauled in the win. Never letting up, Hall edged Todd for the victory by just slightly more than half a second.

Jeff Peck stayed out just enough in front of Lane Walker and Chad Everett for another Hornets main event win and driving the Hoffa Mobile, Peck also took the main event win for the Thunderdogs.

Piercy Wins the Canadian Open

ANCASTER, Ontario • Four straight birdies put Scott Piercy into the mix early. One big par at the end made him a winner Sunday at the Canadian Open.

Piercy won for the second time in his career when he closed with a 3-under 67, and William McGirt and Robert Garrigus stumbled on the closing stretch at Hamilton Golf & Country Club to finish a stroke back.

McGirt, atop the leaderboard for much of the final round, had his first three-putt bogey of the week on the 15th hole when he ran a 45-foot putt some 15 feet by the hole. Tied for the lead playing the 18th, he put his approach into the bunker and blasted out to 18 feet, missing the par putt that would have forced a playoff. McGirt closed with a 69.

Garrigus, the 54-hole leader, missed six putts inside 8 feet. The last one was the most costly. He three-putted from long range just off the green on the 16th, missing an 8-footer for par that left him one shot behind. He missed a 15-foot birdie putt on the 18th to force a playoff and had to settle for a 70.

SENIOR BRITISH OPEN TURNBERRY, Scotland • Fred Couples won the Senior British Open, birdieing the final two holes for a two-stroke victory over Gary Hallberg on Turnberry's Ailsa Course.

EVIAN MASTERS EVIAN-LES-BAINS, France • South Korea's Inbee Park won the Evian Masters, closing with a 6-under 66 for a two-stroke victory over third-round leader Stacy Lewis and Karrie Webb.

NATIONWIDE CHILDREN'S HOSPITAL INVITATIONAL COLUMBUS, Ohio • Ben Kohles won the Web.com Tour's Nationwide Children's Hospital Invitational in his first professional start, beating Luke Guthrie with a birdie on the first hole of a playoff.

North Korean Olympic Weightlifter Steals the Show

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LONDON • Four things to know about Sunday, Day 2 of the London Olympics:

- Whoa! North Korean lifts three times body weight for gold.
- Niger rower inspires Olympic crowd.
- Organizers turn to troops, teachers and students to fill empty seats.
- Rhode wins record-breaking skeet gold for U.S.

• • •

North Korea's Om Yun Chol said he wanted to lift a big weight and make the other athletes nervous.

He definitely nailed that strategy.

Om, standing all of 5 feet and 123 pounds, won a gold medal by confidently lifting an Olympic-record 370 pounds in the clean and jerk at the London Games.

Only a handful of people have lifted more than three times their body weight, and this one came out of nowhere.

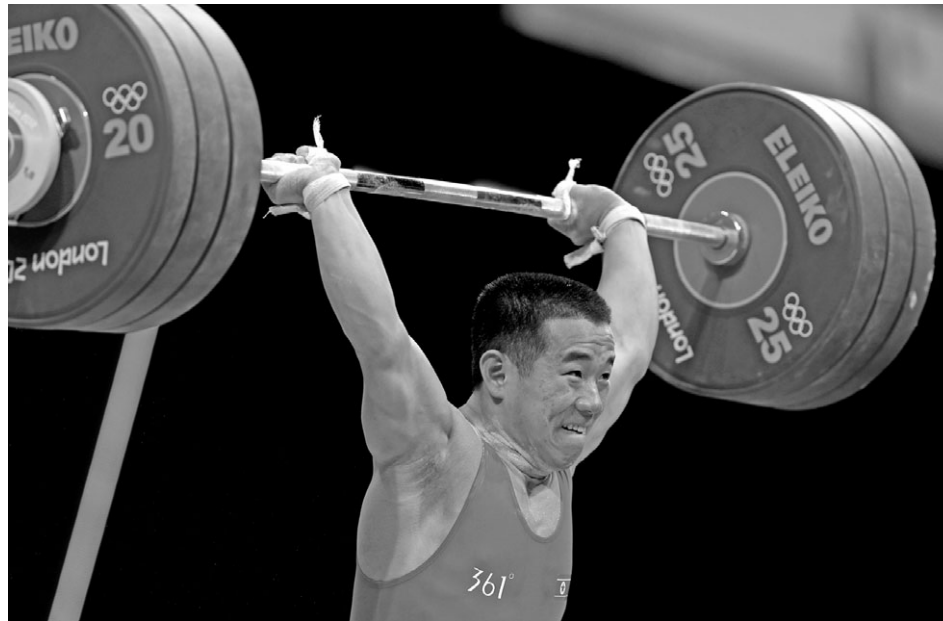

Om was in the "B" group with lower-ranked competitors and lifted weights of 160 and 165 kilograms on his first two attempts early in the day. He got the crowd roaring when it was announced he would go for 168 kilograms — the Olympic record.

Among the few lifters who have cleared three times their body weight are Halil Mutlu and Naim Suleymanoglu, also of Turkey, known as the "Pocket Hercules."

A rower from Niger also captivated an Olympic crowd on Sunday when he trudged to the finish in last place in a single sculls repechage.

With the packed grandstand cheering him on at Dorney Lake, 35-year-old Hamadou Djibo Issaka pushed through the pain and found enough energy to finish nearly 1 minute, 40 seconds behind the winner.

horn, he slumped over in his boat, totally spent. After a few seconds, he lifted his head and saluted the crowd while wearing a wide grin.

Djibo Issaka learned how to row only three months ago and has a technique that can generously be described as crude. He received a wild card from the IOC Tripartite Commission, which allows each National Olympic Committee to enter up to five athletes for the Summer Games.

"It went well," he said in French to The Associated Press. "I passed the finish line. It was great."

After some seats were empty on the first full day of competition, organizers turned to troops, teachers and students to fill the gaps at a handful of Olympic venues.

Organizing chief Sebastian Coe predicted unused tickets, largely by Olympic and sports officials, will not be an issue as the games proceed.

"It is obvious, some of those seats are not being used in the early rounds," he said at a briefing.

Coe's organizing team has long promised to fill venues and avoid a similar problem from the Beijing Olympics.

Kimberly Rhode also put on a show at the Royal Artillery Barracks, winning the gold medal in women's skeet shooting to become the first American to take an individual sport medal in five consecutive Olympics.

Rhode tied the world record and set an Olympic mark with 99 points. She also set an Olympic record in qualifying, missing only one of her 75 shots.

The rest of the Olympic action Sunday:

GYMNASTICS

The U.S. women had the top score in qualifying, but the big story was world champion Jordyn Wieber.

Wieber, a heavy favorite, is out of the all-around competition after finishing behind teammates Aly Raisman and Gabby Douglas. Countries are limited to two gymnasts in the all-around and event finals.

TENNIS

Maria Sharapova won her

Olympic debut indoors, beating Shahar Peer of Israel 6-2, 6-0, and Novak Djokovic, Andy Murray and David Ferrer were among the seeded winners on the men's side at Wimbledon.

VOLLEYBALL

So far, so good for the defending champion U.S. men's team, which opened Olympic play by sweeping Serbia behind Matt Anderson's 18 points.

Captain Clay Stanley added 13 points in the 25-17, 25-22, 25-21 victory at Earls Court.

WATER POLO

Peter Varellas had three goals to lead the United States to an 8-7 victory over Montenegro.

U.S. captain Tony Azevedo scored with less than a minute to play, but Vladimir Gojkovic answered 10 seconds later to pull back within a goal.

Montenegro then had possession with 17 seconds to play but couldn't get off a shot before time expired.

France had the lead in Beijing and its best sprinter, Alain Bernard, going out on the final leg. But Lezak swam the fastest relay leg in history, drafting Bernard along the lane rope and beating him by a scant 0.08 seconds to keep Phelps on track for his record eight gold medals.

That was one of the great-est races in Olympic history.

This one wasn't too shabby, either.

"I was just really excited and I think I overswam the first 50 and it hurt me for the last 50," Lochte said. "But we were able to get a medal, so I guess that's good."

Au revoir, France.

The U.S. team's lead ballooned to 78-51 after three quarters, allowing Krzyzewski to rest Bryant, James and Durant for most of the fourth quarter. With the game well in hand, Krzyzewski even gave 19-year-old Anthony Davis, the top pick in June's NBA draft, his first taste of Olympic play.

Durant had struggled to score during a recent exhibi-

"I'm just trying to make a team, that's it," Parakhouski said.

Part of focusing on that goal is to not be concerned with silly observations made by non-players, such as the one this writer made with a question about not being able to play with one-time potential future teammate Jeremy Lin, who signed with the Houston Rockets in the offseason.

"I didn't think about it," Parakhouski said, who thought Linsanity heading to Houston was "crazy, but it's a business."

"I have a goal to make it to the NBA," Parakhouski said, "so I didn't think about who was or could be on the floor?"

He did give a little more thought to another question, namely, who was going to take gold in London.

"Probably the USA," he said. "They're stronger than any of the teams so far."

It won't show up in any box score, but when — not if — the United States wins gold in men's basketball, there should be an assist recorded somewhere for the 1992 Dream Team.

While Kobe Bryant opened the door for a public examination of his brain matter when he suggested this year's Olympic team could beat the Dream Team, can we say that the response by the latter, most notably Michael Jordan, has provided this year's team with the motivation to perform and get others to think otherwise?

It's one thing to settle for bronze, as the U.S. (which also featured LeBron James and Carmelo Anthony) did in embarrassing fashion in the 2004 Games. Quite another to be dissed by the players you idolized growing up.

Regardless of which corner you fall in, this much is indisputable: There is much more talent spread around the globe in 2012 than there was in 1992, and no team in 1992 featured as much NBA talent as Spain. And the U.S. beat the Spaniards by 20-plus in a Games tune-up last week.

The Dream Team has the benefit of full careers from all of its players to quickly dismiss Bryant's claims. Remember, Jordan (and Olympics teammate Scottie Pippen) had won just two of their six rings in 1992 — or one more than LeBron. Bryant already has five rings. If LeBron adds three or four more titles, and players like Kevin Durant and Russell Westbrook win multiple rings, will it really be that obvious 20 years from now that the Dream Team is still the best?

Brickyard

Johnson took it all in during a unique family moment of his own after the race, taking a victory lap in a pace car with his wife, his daughter and his crew guys all piled on board.

"You can actually look in the moment, and look around and realize that you're at the Brickyard — and won — was really special," Johnson said.

And while his daughter, Genevieve, enjoyed playing with a microphone in Johnson's post-race news conference, they couldn't convince her to join in as they completed the tradition of kneeling to kiss the yard of bricks at the start/finish line.

"She wasn't into it," Johnson joked.

Johnson also won the Brickyard in 2006, 2008 and 2009.

"They're that good, and they deserve it," Gordon said.

Kyle Busch finished second, followed by Greg Biffle, Dale Earnhardt Jr. and Gordon. Polesitter Denny Hamlin was sixth.

Or, should we say, not fast enough.

Yannick Agnel, playing the chaser role that Jason Lezak did for the Americans four years ago in this same event, sliced through the water and was right on Lochte's shoulder as they made the flip at the far end of the pool. With about 25 meters to go, they were stroke for stroke. But Lochte, who had already competed in 1,200 meters of racing over the first two days, simply didn't have enough left to hold off the towering, 20-year-old Frenchman, one of the sport's real rising stars.

"I gave everything in the last 50 until he cracked," Agnel said. "In the last 10 meters, I saw that he was really cracking?"

Agnel touched in 3 minutes, 9.93 seconds, having gone exactly 1 second faster than Lochte over the last two laps. Lochte and the Americans dropped to silver in 3:10.38, while Australia — the favorite — didn't even get a medal. Russia took the bronze in 3:11.41, edging the team from Down Under by 0.22.

Phelps settled for his 17th career medal and completed his collection of Olympic colors, adding a silver to his 14 golds and two bronzes. He also moved a step closer to becoming the most decorated Olympian ever, just one away from tying the mark for most career medals held by Soviet gymnast Larisa Latynina, and has five events to go.

"At least I'm in a medal today," Phelps said ruefully, referring to a fourth-place finish in his first race of the London Games.

But silver was a bitter disappointment for the Americans, who know how the French felt four years ago.

Basketball

"We know we have to keep going for 40 minutes and play hard," said Bryant, who only played 12 minutes.

Afterward, Parker, who nearly missed these games after undergoing surgery for a freak eye injury, didn't want to concede anything to the Americans. But when asked if the U.S. team can be beat, he took a contemplative pause before responding.

"They're going to be very, very tough to beat," Parker said.

At times, the Americans' offense was erratic. The U.S. missed its first six 3-pointers and settled too quickly for jump shots instead of driving to the basket. But France wasn't able to capitalize as the U.S. turned up its pressure on defense and forced 18 turnovers.

With first lady Michelle Obama on hand to cheer on the U.S., Durant, Anthony and Tyson Chandler added nine rebounds apiece for the Americans, who will next play Tuesday against Tunisia, beaten 60-56 by Nigeria in the tournament opener.

As they left the floor, the U.S. players stopped to hug

Mrs. Obama, who can report back to her commander in chief husband that his favorite team has taken its first step toward gold.

Parker, playing with goggles to protect a surgically repaired left eye, scored 10 points but France fell to 0-5 in Olympic competition against the USA. Ali Traore scored 12 points to lead France, which got few uncontested looks from the outside and missed 20 of 22 3-pointers.

"They pressured us from the start until the end," said France coach Vincent Collet.

With the U.S. leading 52-36 at halftime, Durant opened the second half with a 3-pointer, Bryant dropped one from long range and after James dunked an alley-oop pass from Deron Williams, the Americans led 64-43.

Au revoir, France.

The U.S. team's lead ballooned to 78-51 after three quarters, allowing Krzyzewski to rest Bryant, James and Durant for most of the fourth quarter. With the game well in hand, Krzyzewski even gave 19-year-old Anthony Davis, the top pick in June's NBA draft, his first taste of Olympic play.

Durant had struggled to score during a recent exhibition tour, prompting James to give his close friend and teammate a pep talk.

"I told K.D. to be himself," James said. "We need the K.D. who scores. We don't need the K.D. who defers."

Unlike his peers, Krzyzewski has the luxury of a deep bench and he was forced to go it early and often in the first half, when the Americans got into four trouble. They were called for 18 personals and complained about some of the calls. Anthony and Russell Westbrook spent the final six minutes of the second quarter on the bench after picking up their third fouls.

THE STATE OF IDAHO SENDS GREETING TO: Reynaldo Barron Briceno

YOU ARE HEREBY NOTIFIED THAT:

A petition has been filed in the above-entitled matter in the Magistrate Division of District Court of Gooding County, Idaho, by the Prosecuting Attorney, alleging that the above-named child comes within the purview of the Child Protection Act, and You, Reynaldo Barron Briceno, the biological father of Dustin Dakota Barron, are hereby directed to appear personally before the court for a(n) Adjudicatory Hearing at the Gooding County Courthouse, 624 Main, Gooding, Idaho on the 15th day of August, 2012, at 10:00 a.m.

You are hereby notified that service of such summons upon you, as the parent(s), guardian(s), or custodian(s) of the respective child, does confer the personal jurisdiction of the court upon you and does subject you to the provisions of the Child Protective Act.

I need a raise, SERIOUSLY!

TIMES-NEWS

DEAR ABBY: I am a 46-year-old female being married for the second time. My first marriage took place 28 years ago and didn't cost my parents a penny because there was no wedding.

I would like to ask them to contribute financially this time to help with the cost of a small, intimate ceremony and dinner for fewer than 20 people. Am I asking too much?

— SECOND TIME AROUND IN ORLANDO, FLA.

DEAR ABBY
Jeanne Phillips

DEAR SECOND TIME AROUND: Yes. Couples on their "second bounce" pay for their OWN weddings. And by the way, there is no obligation on the part of the bride's parents to pay for her wedding even the first time around. A wedding is a GIFT, and to solicit a gift is inappropriate. If your parents volunteer to chip in for your wedding, then it's fine to accept. But don't ask them to do it. That you didn't have a wedding the first time around does not obligate them to pay for one now.

DEAR ABBY: I'm a 38-year-old woman who has moved around my whole life. Because of this, I have no childhood friends who have carried over to adulthood. I am friendless and lonely for companionship. I have a husband and a son, but I long for a female friend I can chat with, shop with or just sit with and be around.

I have tried meeting new people at the park with my son, and I felt like I hit it off with a few people, but they all (at this age) already have dear friends and don't seem interested in changing their circles. Am I destined to be lonely?

— JUST ME IN TENNESSEE

DEAR JUST ME: I don't know how much free time you have on your hands, but you need to meet more people than the women at the park. If you have become isolated waiting for someone to rescue you from your loneliness, please understand that the cure for loneliness is to DO something.

Volunteer at a school, museum, hospital, library or food bank. Join a garden club, bridge club or book club. Look around and see if you can find any other lonely people and turn them into friends. If you pick up the phone, you will find it rings on both ends.

DEAR ABBY: My dad and I were very close. He would tease me about being a tightwad and I'd tease him about being a spendthrift. When he passed away last year, I was — and still am — devastated.

I recently visited the library and, while looking at some books for sale, I found one by an author I like. I said to myself that if I had the correct amount of change in my purse, I could buy it guilt-free. Unfortunately, I was a few cents short.

As I turned to put the book back on the shelf, I spotted a dime on the floor. Like the writers of the "pennies from heaven" letters you have shared, I am certain that the dime was from my dad, who was essentially buying the book for me. I purchased it and will treasure it always.

— GRATEFUL DAUGHTER

DEAR GRATEFUL: What a sweet letter. I hope you will enjoy the book for years to come. It speaks "volumes" about your relationship with your dad.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE®

Bobby Wolff

"The loud laugh that spoke the vacant mind ..."

— Oliver Goldsmith

One of the biggest problems we all encounter at the bridge table is what I have previously referred to as Premature Euphoria. This deal, which comes from a recent major championship, was played in four spades by both Souths.

In one room, where the Italians were declaring, West hit upon the devastating lead of the heart queen. Now whatever declarer did, he was sunk.

In the other room, Alfredo Versace was not blessed with second sight. He led the diamond queen, which gave declarer a good chance to make her contract. Monica Cuzzi won her ace and correctly shifted to a heart. Versace inserted the queen, and declarer won dummy's ace, crossed to the club king, then played the diamond king to pitch a heart. Now she ruffed a diamond to dummy to play a spade to her king.

Alas for her, Versace could win his spade ace and return a heart to his partner. A further heart then sealed declarer's fate since the spade jack was promoted to a defensive trick whatever she did next.

Had the play not started so well for declarer, she might have thought longer and harder about the route to success. All declarer had to do was to duck the first heart trick. She then can win the heart continuation and take the heart discard as before, then lead a trump. West has to win, but the key difference now is that he can no longer reach his partner via a heart for the trump promotion.

ANSWER: Players are always taught to lead fourth-highest of their longest and strongest, but with a relatively weak hand, you could consider trying to hit partner. Leading a diamond would be a truly wild shot, but if you find your partner with honor-fourth or -fifth in one major, which suit will be easier to set up? I say spades, so lead the spade queen.

Do-It-Yourself Ideas

Wheelbarrow Planter

This versatile wooden wheelbarrow planter is a do-it-yourself version of a garden classic. Filled with plants or flowers, it's perfect for the porch or patio, or even indoors. And although it's not designed to carry loads, the wheel actually turns so it's easy to move.

To build, simply trace the full-size patterns onto redwood (other woods may be substituted), cut the pieces out, assemble and finish. The planter measures about 40 inches long by 10 inches wide by 15 inches tall.

Today is Monday, July 30, the 212th day of 2012. There are 154 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight: On July 30, 1942, President Franklin D. Roosevelt signed a bill creating a women's auxiliary agency in the Navy known as "Women Accepted for Volunteer Emergency Service" - WAVES for short.

TODAY IN HISTORY

On this date: In 1619, the first representative assembly in America convened in Jamestown in the Virginia Colony.

In 1729, Baltimore, Md. was founded.

In 1864, during the Civil War, Union forces tried to take Petersburg, Va., by exploding a gunpowder-filled mine under Confederate defense lines; the attack failed.

In 1912, Emperor Meiji of Japan died after a reign of 45 years.

In 1918, poet Joyce Kilmer, a sergeant in the 165th U.S. Infantry Regiment, was killed during the Second Battle of the Marne in World War I. (Kilmer is perhaps best remembered for his poem "Trees.")

In 1932, the Summer Olympic Games opened in Los Angeles.

In 1945, the Portland class heavy cruiser USS Indianapolis was torpedoed by a Japanese submarine during World War II; only 316 out of some 1,200 men survived.

In 1956, President Dwight D. Eisenhower signed a measure making "In God We Trust" the national motto, replacing "E Pluribus Unum" ("Out of many, one").

In 1962, the Trans-Canada Highway was officially opened at Rogers Pass in British Columbia.

In 1965, President Lyndon B. Johnson signed into law the Medicare bill, which went into effect the following year.

In 1975, former Teamsters union president Jimmy Hoffa disappeared in suburban Detroit; although presumed dead, his remains have never been found.

In 1980, Israel's Knesset passed a law reaffirming all of Jerusalem as the capital of the Jewish state.

Ten years ago: President George W. Bush signed into law the most far-reaching government crackdown on business fraud since the Depression. Expelled from Congress a week earlier, an unrepentant James A. Traficant Jr. was sentenced to eight years behind bars for corruption; the Ohio Democrat made it clear he intended to run for re-election from his prison cell, and win. (He didn't.) Pope John Paul II canonized Pedro de San Jose Betancur, Central America's first saint. WNBA player Lisa Leslie of the Los Angeles Sparks became the first woman to dunk in a professional game, jamming on a breakaway in the first half of the Sparks' 82-73 loss to the Miami Sol.

Five years ago: President George W. Bush and British Prime Minister Gordon Brown, meeting at Camp David, forged a unified stand on Iraq. Chief Justice John Roberts was taken to a hospital after a seizure caused him to fall on a dock near his summer home in Maine. A second South Korean hostage was slain by the Taliban in central Afghanistan. Death claimed Swedish movie director Ingmar Bergman at age 89; Italian filmmaker Michelangelo Antonioni at age 94; and Hall of Fame football coach Bill Walsh at age 75.

One year ago: NATO jets bombed three Libyan state TV satellite transmitters in Tripoli, targeting a propaganda tool in Moammar Gadhafi's fight against rebels. Caribbean Airlines Flight 523 from New York, a Boeing 737-800, slid off the end of a rainy runway in Guyana and broke in half; all 163 people on board survived.
