Jerome Co. Commissioners Hope to Raise Deputy Pay

BY ALISON GENE SMITH
alismith@magicvalley.com

JEROME • While trying to make across-the-board cuts of 1 percent in their budget, Jerome County Commissioners are also hoping to give all county employees a 2 percent raise. If possible, they also hope to raise Jerome Sheriff's deputies' pay even more.

Commissioners spoke with Jerome County Sheriff Doug McFall and Chief Deputy Jack Johnson Tuesday during a preliminary budget meeting.

McFall told commissioners he's lost several employees to other agencies because of the low pay in Jerome County and he worries higher quality people won't apply for jobs there.

"We're lucky to get the people we do," he said.

Retaining good employees and getting new people to apply in Jerome County is the reason for the 2 percent pay increase, Commissioner Charlie Howell said.

"Two percent won't cut it," McFall said. "City police are paying three dollars more per hour than I'm paying deputies."

New people start out in Jerome, and the county spends $30,000 to $40,000 on each new employee on training before they move on to a higher paying agency, he said.

"I've got three guys looking or actively testing in other agencies," Johnson said. "It involves pay and benefits."

Both Johnson and McFall pointed out the probation and parole officers start out at higher wages than Jerome County deputies while also requiring less training. Probation and parole also lack powers of arrest.

"They have to take one of our deputies with them," Johnson said.

McFall said he could deal with the budget, but said he will probably lose more people from more positions and eventually the standards of who they employ could be lowered.

Jerome County Clerk Michelle Emerson pointed out that while the sheriff's budget was large, the county is also limited in how much it can raise taxes and lower property tax assessments.

"It's not just that your jail expenditures are going through the roof," she said.

McFall also helped brainstorm other ways to save money. He said he could cut patrol's budget, but that would mean less service for the county. He also suggested possibly cutting court security and using other deputies instead.

Overall, the commissioners said they agreed with the proposed budget, but Commissioner Roger Morley said he'd like to see what places in the justice budget could be cut in order to raise wages for deputies a little more.

Commissioners will continue their budget discussions at next week's meeting.

CROSSING GUARD

Twin Falls woman is a strong advocate for safer traffic conditions in her neighborhood.

BY STEVE KADEL
skadel@magicvalley.com

TWIN FALLS • For years, Jean Gray has watched pedestrians narrowly avoid being hit by cars on Second Avenue West in front of her home.

There's a crosswalk and two sets of warning signs – one set erected by the Idaho Transportation Department carries the force of law – but Gray says it does no good.

"They don't stop," she said of drivers. "They don't care. They think only of getting down the street."

Two boys were crossing on bicycles a couple weeks ago, proceeding as a car in the middle of three lanes stopped. But a truck barreling down the street in the far third lane had to slam on its brakes and skid to a halt to keep from knocking the children down.

And just Tuesday, while Gray was crossing the street with her grandchildren, a similar scene played out. One car stopped while another whizzed through the intersection with Buhl Street West without slowing.

"I'm not saying people are bad, but it's just crazy," Gray said. "How many children getting hit will it take?"

Statistics on the number of cars-pedestrian collisions were not immediately available Tuesday from Twin Falls police. However, the Twin Falls Transportation Safety Commission has wrestled with the issue during the past year. Commission member Rebecca Duke suggested during the Nov. 10, 2011 meeting that a flashing light be installed at the intersection.

It was discussed during a couple of later meetings, and city traffic technician Mike Sullivan investigated the cost of a light. It was estimated at $6,900, according to minutes of the Jan. 12 commission meeting. The city also conducted a traffic study to see how many vehicles cross the intersection each day.

"They don't stop. They don't care. They think only of getting down the street."

The idea of a flashing light hit a dead end at the Feb. 9 meeting. "It was recommended by the Engineering Department that nothing be changed; there is plenty of opportunity for pedestrians to cross," the commission's minutes said.

Now, with school about to start again, Gray is worried about children who will be going to and from Lincoln Elementary School two blocks away. A school official said Tuesday that 456 students were enrolled at Lincoln last spring, but information about how many of those walked to classes wasn't available.

Duke had special reason to push the issue of a flashing light with other members of the traffic safety commission. Her son was hit by a car in a different intersection near Lincoln Elementary in 2005.

The situation at Second Avenue West and Buhl Street West is muddled because Second also serves as State Highway 30. That means traffic includes large commercial trucks as well as autos and pickup trucks. It also means the city has a right to patrol the street although it is unlikely to pay for a light, Duke said.

"I still want that light there," she said this week. "I still want what's best for pedestrians." Despite that, Gray says she has come to believe a light isn't warranted.

"When it came down to the studies and the discussion and options, I think the city is right," she said. "A child needs to learn that cars in that third lane may not stop. I can make an educated decision even if I don't like it."

"We analyzed it and came to a conclusion. That doesn't mean things can't change."

Gray still wants change to happen, and she's not ready to give up the fight. After all, she and husband Ron, along with son Jamie who lives next door, received the 2012 Jim A. Mildon Traffic Safety Award from the city for convincing the state to add extra signage at the contested intersection.

Salmon-Challis Forest Fire Jumps to 3,700 Acres

TIMES-NEWS

SALMON • The lightning-caused Halstead forest fire just north of Stanley has jumped from 60 acres to 3,700 acres overnight.

As of Tuesday, close to 90 personnel were working to put out the flames, including two hotshot crews, two type 2 hand crews, two smokejumpers and air support, according to a U.S. Forest Service news release.

The fire was first detected Saturday morning. Smoke jumpers attempted to suppress the fire while it was still small but they were unsuccessful. The fire quickly spread with the help of dry fuels and unpredictable wind patterns.

Firefighters hope to contain the fire between the Beaver Creek Road and Marsh Creek area but no date has been set yet when containment will be reached.

The fire is burning almost 20 miles

Fire has caused the following closures:

Roads and areas:
Marsh Creek Trailhead
Bradley Boy Scout Camp
USFS Marsh Creek 203
USFS Beaver Creek 208 from the junction of Hwy 21 to USFS Beaver-Loom 172
USFS Beaver Loon Road

Campgrounds:
Beaver Creek Campground
Beaver Creek Camp Spur
Lola Creek Campground
Lola Camp Spur A

northwest of Stanley. Firefighters are hoping to keep the fire from encroaching on high value assets in the area, the news release stated.

California Native Steps Into Role as Idaho Fish and Game Commissioner

BY KIMBERLEE KRUESI

BUHL • Magic Valley's newest representative for the Idaho Fish and Game Commission isn't from here. And, she believes, that's a good thing.

Hurlock

In mid-July, Gov. C.L. "Butch" Otter appointed Joan Hurlock to serve as the Region 4 Commissioner. For the next four years, Hurlock will work with the seven-member commission in making critical decisions on how Idaho manages its wildlife.

She's not an Idahoan native but has spent the past 10 years living in Buhl.

"I've met a lot of people like me," she said. "We didn't grow up here but we moved to Idaho, love it and want what's best for it. I'm excited to represent that group of people for the commission."

Hurlock is a Second Amendment advocate with an interest in wildlife conservation. She's worked as a former forensic chemist for the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and

From the Notebook

Taylor Brown, a former Jerome School District board member, looks over photos of the class of 1966. We talked about the different hair styles and how much the music has changed over the years.

Editor's note: Every day, the Times-News staff witnesses things while reporting that don't make the paper. Each week, we'll flip through our notebooks and share a few of those things.

One Family, Two Life-changing Events

Which is a more important event — watching a child compete in the Olympics or the arrival of a grandchild? There is no easy way to balance events that, for many people, are a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity.

That's the dilemma Ketchum's Greg and Anne Lyle had to face. Their daughter Adrienne is competing in dressage in the Summer Olympics in London. Meanwhile, their son Andrew, living in Brazil, is an expectant father, with his wife's due date coming on one of the two dates Lyle is scheduled to compete, Aug. 2 or 3.

That is keeping big brother from traveling to London to watch little sister compete, demonstrating that some things are bigger than competing on the world's biggest stage, but Greg Lyle was quick to flip that scenario in the other direction.

"You could look at it and say, 'Where did we decide to go,' but we'll be (in Brazil) soon enough."

Celebrating Education and Love

While covering the celebration of 100 years of education in Jerome on July 21, I was fortunate to meet some couples with exceptionally long and happy marriages.

Kadel

Dean Ruhter and Shirley Evans Ruhter have been wedded for 57 years. Wilford and Carol Allison have been husband and wife for a year longer than that.

The Allisons, especially, have a bond that goes way back.

"I went to school with him since third grade," Carol said. "I know him pretty well."

Be Courteous: If You Open a Gate, Close it

In a conversation about closing gates on public lands, Stan Mai, president of Magic Valley ATV Riders expressed his frustration, saying, "I don't understand how you can be so lazy, how you can stop and open a gate but won't stop to close it." Not closing gates, he said, allows cows to escape ranchers' fields, which in turn causes ranchers to lose trust in outdoorsmen.

Welcome to the United States

Last week, I had a chance to talk with a few teenagers from China who are living with local host families through an exchange program.

Xie Pengu and Lei Sheng Cun — who are both 16 years old — took a break from learning how to play baseball to share some memorable experiences from their time in the United States so far.

Pengu was most animated while talking about how much he loves American music. After thinking for a moment trying to remember the artist's name, Pengu said he loves Taylor Swift's songs. Then Cun chimed in and noted he likes rap music the best.

A Motivational Speaker?

While reporting last week's Outdoors story on Hyndman Peak, I met David Coleman of Twin Falls descending from the summit and cheerfully rattling off his GPS stats. At that point, Coleman had already hiked 8.9 hard miles — yet he looked every bit as animated then as he did a few days later at First Federal's Business After Hours shindig. He'd make a great spokesman for the energizing effects of the Idaho outdoors.

A Community Finds Common Ground

People of all ages were mingling as I wandered into the Jerome City Park on July 21. Unlike many events in the city park, this one had a common denominator. Everyone had attended Jerome High School and had a story to go along with it. I thought how amazing it would be to have that much oral history at one's fingertips. Having someone from "The Greatest Generation" all the way to "Generation Z" covers a lot of ground when talking about the traditions of a high school. As someone who records history for a living, I felt right at home talking with folks about what it was like to have flip hair-dos and jamming to the Beach Boys in the '60s.

As I left the park I looked back and no longer saw a bunch of people milling about. It was a community getting to know each other as they shared laughs and memories about the school that gave them some of the best times of their lives.

Twin Falls Teen Sentenced in Vehicle Theft, Pursuit to Nevada

alismith@magicvalley.com

TWIN FALLS • Edna and Richard Waldrum thought things were turning around for them. They finally sold their house and were moving to Nampa. Then their truck was stolen and destroyed after a 19-year-old and several others took it on a police pursuit from Twin Falls to Wells, Nev.

Payton Lee Lewis was sentenced to one year in the state's retained jurisdiction program with an underlying sentence of four to eight years in prison for charges of eluding police and possession of a stolen vehicle.

Waldrum said her husband, who is disabled, has become depressed without their truck, which is outfitted so he could drive it.

"He went about six weeks without any transportation because my car wasn't adapted," she said.

The couple also lost money when they had to rent a truck for their move to Nampa, and the couple reported their insurance company won't cover the entire cost of the truck with all the adaptations, Deputy Prosecuting Attorney McKenzie Cole said.

Cole said Lewis, who was driving the stolen truck, eluded police for two hours until the truck finally stopped after hitting spike strips.

Lewis spoke at the hearing, saying he'd had the chance and apologized to some of the deputies involved in the pursuit.

"I'd like the victims to know I regret what happened," he said. "I didn't want anyone to get hurt by my actions. I'd like the chance to get out and help them as soon as possible."

Twin Falls County 5th District Judge Richard Bevan said he believed Lewis was remorseful but he also needed help and needed to come up with a plan for his rehabilitation and how he would pay back the victims in the case.

Jim Renaldi, left, and Joel Cortes with Renaldi Construction Inc. board up windows after removing them to send to Oregon for restoration work at the Twin Falls County Historical Society Museum Tuesday near Twin Falls.

The window restoration project will be done in two phases. During the first phase, both the south and west banks of windows will be removed from the building by local contractor Jim Renaldi of Renaldi Construction. Workers from Chosen Wood Window Maintenance of Canby, Ore., will then transport the windows to be restored in their shop. Restoration is expected to take up to eight weeks. Sometime in late September, Chosen will return the restored windows to the museum, where Renaldi will re-install them.

Wild West Town for Sale in Utah for $3.9 million

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) • The real estate listing reads like a Wild West exhibit: An old gold mine, a geyser, and a supposed hideout of famed outlaws.

It's all in a middle-of-nowhere ghost town for sale three hours southeast of Salt Lake City. Listing price? $3.9 million.

Woodside once bustled with about 300 residents in the early 1900s when it was a water stop for steam engines. Now the town sits empty — of people, that is. Two free-range llamas come with the deal.

There's a geyser, too, but it no longer shoots high after being jammed by vandals. Once, the cold-water spout shot up 75 feet and was a popular tourist attraction known as the Roadside Geyser. No entry fee required.

Even though the town has seen better days, real estate agent Mike Getzer said the property is full of potential for someone with an entrepreneurial, Wild West spirit.

"You can be the sheriff, the judge and executioner of your own town," he joked. "You can be mayor. You can be whatever you wanted. It would be amazing."

A service station also still stands on the property with a Post Office inside.

"You can be your own postmaster, too," Metzger chuckled.

Woodside sits along Route 6 in Emery County, surrounded by the Book Cliffs — desert mountains given their name because of the area topography that looks like book shelves. The town itself is flat, surrounded by brush and bisected by the Price River.

It's also a place with a legendary past.

Historians believe Butch Cassidy and his gang once used the remote canyon country of the San Rafael Swell near Woodside as a hideout.

"And nobody's ever found it — at least that they're admitting," Metzger said.

The town's owner, Roy Pogue, 63, is selling it, in part, because he can't take care of the land anymore and said his wife "likes people and we didn't have neighbors out there."

Pogue bought the property in 1990 from a doctor in Provo. He planned to farm and ranch on the land with the water rights that come with it. Instead, he found himself more often helping travelers whose vehicles broke down, so he refurbished the old service station and opened it for business. Because of its proximity to the tourist hub of Moab, about 80 miles south, he had plenty of people stopping by.

Nevada Sage Grouse Panel Tweaks Recommendations

BY SANDRA CHEREB
Associated Press

CARSON CITY, Nev. • An advisory committee empaneled by Gov. Brian Sandoval refined its blueprint Tuesday on how Nevada can lessen threats to sage grouse and keep the bird off the endangered species list.

The panel meeting in Carson City scrutinized and tweaked recommendations made over the past 10 weeks to its plan to protect the bird, covering everything from how wildfires are managed and burned areas rehabilitated to mining and mineral exploration, ranching, wild horses and predator control.

One thing became clear — the endeavor will not be easy or without cost. And it's a challenge resource managers have known for years.

Steve Robinson worked on former Gov. Kenny Guinn's sage grouse plan as a resource specialist more than a decade ago. He said planners knew back then what needed to be done — and what needed to be funded — but "that didn't happen."

Robinson said federal agencies "need to be involved financially" if efforts to protect the bird are to succeed.

"Nevada is not going to do it on its own," he said. His comment brought agreement from panel members including the chairman, Carson City Mayor Bob Crowell, who said federal agencies "need to put their money where their mouth is."

Ted Koch, Nevada supervisor for the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, pledged $40,000 to further the state's efforts as the plan takes shape.

Nevada's goal is to come up with a plan to protect the chicken-sized bird and its habitat, making a listing by the federal government unnecessary. Officials here and around the West fear designating sage grouse as threatened or endangered would cripple economies, jeopardize rural lifestyles and seriously hinder mining, renewable energy and other natural resource development.

Two years ago, the Fish and Wildlife Service determined sage grouse deserved federal protection, but other species took priority. A legal settlement now gives the agency until 2015 to decide the bird's status.

Nevada's plan will be submitted to the agency as one alternative to consider as it prepares an environmental study and makes a decision about the bird. Another big player will be the U.S. Bureau of Land Management, which controls about 85 percent of lands in the state.

Committee members and others at Tuesday's meeting scolded the BLM for a newly released memorandum that some suggested showed its lack of commitment to a compromised resolution by seemingly backing a 2011 technical report on how sage grouse should be managed.

Debra Struhsacker, executive director of the Nevada Mineral Resources Alliance, said the BLM's July 23 internal memo implies the agency has already decided to adopt that report, "thus calling into question whether BLM will consider other alternative conservation measures."

In a letter to the committee, Struhsacker said the technical report recommended "withdrawing areas with priority sage grouse habitat from mineral entry and invalidating mining claims that are being explored or used for mining support facilities."

Those recommendations, she said, would be "very harmful" to Nevada's mineral industry.

Committee member Allen Biaggi noted the panel met two days after the BLM memo was dated, but no mention of it was made during the meeting. He called the memo "troubling" and said it undermined trust in the federal agency.

Joe Tague, BLM branch chief for renewable resources and planning, tried to deflate the controversy, saying the memo was to clarify how agency personnel should evaluate projects and land uses until a final sage grouse plan is adopted.

"The intent is for this to be in place until the planning is done. No further than that," he said.

"You say, 'Gosh, this guy is so scripted, the campaign is so disciplined, so smart, how could this happen?'"

Hogan Gidley, a senior aide under former Republican presidential candidate Rick Santorum in comments after Mitt Romney outraged Palestinians, telling Jewish donors that their culture is part of what has allowed them to be more economically successful than the Palestinians.

Obama, Democrats Play Chicken with Military Budget

Only a handful of legislative days remain to resolve the devastating cuts to our military, known as sequestration, before the campaign trail becomes the sole focus of political activity.

Howard P. 'Buck' McKeon

Special to the Washington Post

The false notion persists that the deadline is Jan. 2, when the Office of Management and Budget is charged with making arbitrary, across-the-board cuts to every part of the military. But federal law requires that companies give their employees at least 60 days' warning when it is "reasonably foreseeable" that cuts could lead to layoffs. The required notification for cuts to the federal workforce is as much as 105 days, and similar standards apply to troops who will be involuntarily separated. That means, barring any guidance from the White House or the resolution of sequestration, hundreds of thousands of Americans, including those fighting our wars, should find pink slips in their mailboxes only a few weeks before Election Day.

The consequences of all this have been well reported. Sequestration was meant to be the "poison pill" that would guarantee that all parties came to the negotiating table. Obviously, it didn't work.

I am among those who voted for the Budget Control Act and, given its unintended consequences, I am obligated to resolve the crisis it has created.

Even though President Barack Obama signed the Budget Control Act into law and insisted on the sequester so another debt-limit increase didn't materialize before the election, it doesn't appear that he shares the same commitment to resolution. The only conceivable reason for him to perpetuate this uncertainty is to secure a domestic agenda that has repeatedly been rejected by the American people.

He should end the uncertainty, speak truthfully about the consequences and bring Senate Democrats to the table with a solution. Fundamentally, his choice is to treat our troops as heroes or use them as leverage. This week, when the president's budget director, Jeffrey Zients, testifies before the House Armed Services Committee, Republicans will continue to press the president to pursue this approach. This is a chance for Zients to dispel uncertainty and explain how Obama intends to implement these arbitrary cuts.

I fear, however, that he will present no new information and will use the hearing to continue the president's brinkmanship approach, insisting on the wholesale adoption of the Obama budget plan and dismissing all other options. In a recent op-ed, Zients explained this "balanced" approach to finding the $1.2 trillion in savings necessary to resolve sequestration; he claimed that his plan would reduce the deficit by more than $4 trillion by proposing $2.50 in spending cuts for every $1 in new revenue. The rationale for this approach is that after 10 years of war, we need to continue making new investments in domestic programs before we can reset our forces. But the numbers don't hold up. Zients arrives at his $2.50-to-$1 ratio by a series of budget gimmicks, claiming spending reductions that are actually tax increases and double-counting spending reductions that are already in law. Most concerning, Zients claims $848 billion in "savings" by counting funds that were never requested in the first place. House Republicans, acting responsibly, have passed a plan that replaces the first year of cuts to military and domestic spending through reforms to entitlement programs. If Democrats still find that unacceptable, I hope they can at least use it as the basis for a compromise.

That path involves using spending cuts and reforms that can attract bipartisan support in place of the impending cuts to our military. To date, the president has been unwilling to embrace this approach; such a plan would make the bipartisan savings unavailable to reduce the price tag of his ambitious slate of post-election spending.

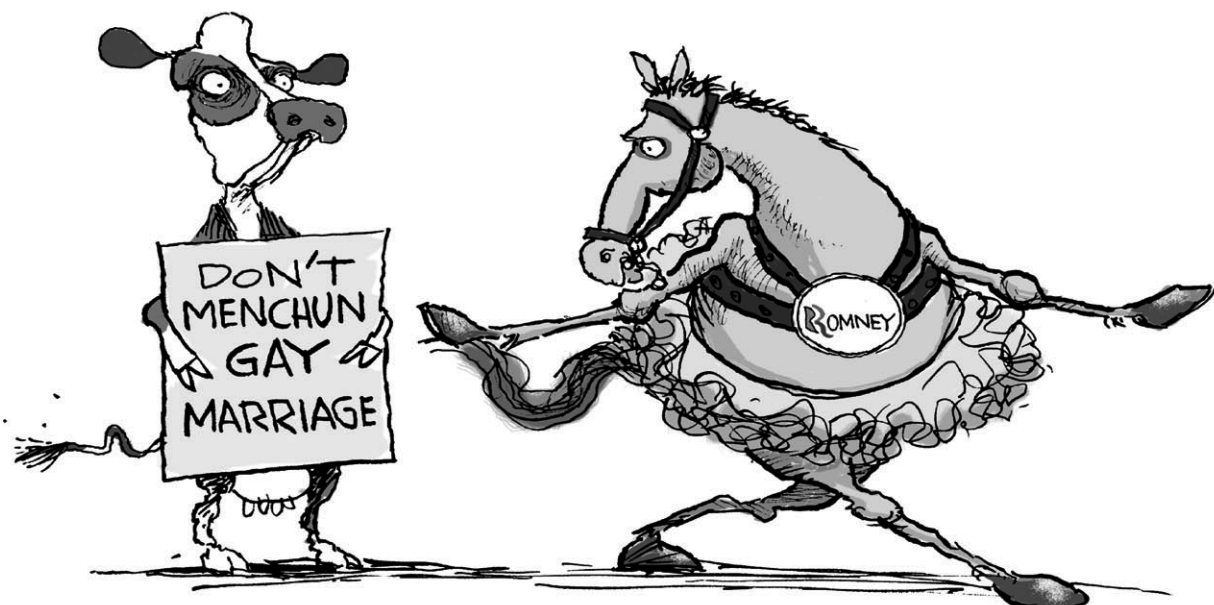

There is no reason that such a compromise can't be reached in September or October. It might make larger agreements on taxes and domestic spending more difficult, but it would prioritize our obligation to national security and the men and women who provide it.

In the meantime, the president and Senate Democrats' inaction is doing damage. I fear the assessment one of our senior military leaders expressed privately is spot-on: America's inability to govern ourselves past sequestration plays directly into the hands of those who spread a narrative of American decline and, ultimately, would thrust us into a more dangerous world.

If the United States faced an external enemy who threatened to do this kind of damage to our national security, the president would have the primary obligation to resolve it. To avert these cuts is to intimidate our enemies, reassure our allies and keep faith with those who have sacrificed so much for so long. The commander in chief must act.

Should Felons Be Allowed to Vote?

Editor's note: The following editorial appeared in Monday's Washington Post.

In 1965, when he signed the Voting Rights Act, Lyndon B. Johnson called the vote "the most powerful instrument ever devised by man for breaking down injustice and destroying the terrible walls which imprison men because they are different from other men." In the midst of the civil rights movement, Johnson sounded a call to arms against racial disenfranchisement. Nearly 50 years later, that unfortunately remains a battle.

In an election year when many states have added dubious voter ID requirements sure to affect minority voters disproportionately, another set of impediments to the franchise worsens the problem: laws in 11 states, including Virginia, that disenfranchise felons. Given that African Americans constitute 38.2 percent of the prison population but just 12.6 percent of the general population, a disproportionate share of these disenfranchised people are black. According to a study released this month by the Sentencing Project, about 7.7 percent of the African American voting-age population is disenfranchised, compared with 1.8 percent of the non-African American population. In Virginia, Kentucky and Florida, felon disenfranchisement affects a staggering one in five African Americans. There's no excuse for that.

The underlying question is why these states disenfranchise felons who've served their sentences, paid their dues and rejoined their communities. According to the Sentencing Project, of the 5.85 million Americans subject to felon disenfranchisement, almost half, or 2.6 million, are out of prison. If a purpose of punishment is to rehabilitate persons to become functioning members of society upon their release, why would you deprive those who succeed of a fundamental right of citizenship?

Although states have made advances in restoring voting rights to felons who've completed parole, the franchise should be automatically restored after a sentence is completed, as it is in Maryland. Johnson's words ring hollow when "the terrible walls which imprison men" continue to reinforce inequality in more ways than one.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Way Property Is Assessed Doesn't Meet the Logic Test

Well, probably you're as glad as I am that the property taxes due in June are over and done with. Paying is no fun in June but far easier than paying in December.

Now I understand the need for such a thing, but there are a few questions I'd like to ask if I could just find that yellow brick road. A community needs streets, fire and police protection, water, gas, electricity, sewer and schools. For these things, we pay property taxes. But wait a minute, the bill I get every month from water, gas and electric pays for that part.

So a structure like a bomb shelter, detached garage or root cellar might require the services of firemen but no police protection is needed. They may require road access. A home structure might need both any and all. Unimproved land, however, has need for none of the listed services.

So that brings up the question of assessment. A 20,000-square-foot mansion probably is in greater jeopardy of major catastrophe than a 400-square-foot shack. Although I can't see why even if the shack has Italian marble floors, all utilities controlled by a computer, a slate roof, hand-painted wall murals, solid gold bathroom fittings, custom furniture made of hand-carved imported hardwoods, hard-wired surround sound, a 9,000-square-inch 3-D television with optional holograph capability, hand-woven alpaca carpets and fully voice-activated kitchen, should affect the assessment.

That's what we pay insurance for, but there is no increased need for city services, so why is the assessor interested? The 20,000-square-foot mansion filled with thrift store cast-off furniture still has a greater need for fire and police help.

Leave the Hatred out of Political Arguments

Today, I read some comments on one of the news stations and I feel sick inside at the horrible responses made by the citizens of this great country.

I am sad to think we read and post untruths about our president. I don't care which party we are from, I hate the nasty remarks made against the office of the president of the United States. I resent the way we treated President Bush, and I resent the way we are treating President Obama.

It is great to have different opinions, but it's another thing to bash them as human beings. When shootings such as the one that happened in Colorado give people the opportunity to post such hatred, it cuts into the hearts of all Americans. Are we so engrossed in hatred we can't see the compassion that our leader and his family are showing to the families of those lost loved ones?

Please, please take a moment to reflect on how you would feel if this was our family and our community. Argue the points in politics, be leave the hatred out.

Name Released from Oakley Fatal Crash

BY LAURIE WELCH

OAKLEY • The Cassia County Sheriff's Office released the name of an Oakley man Tuesday who was killed Sunday in a one-vehicle rollover crash near Oakley Reservoir.

Mark Whitman, 52, was killed after his vehicle went off Trapper Creek Road at 5:39 p.m. about five miles southwest of Oakley.

According to the sheriff's report, Whitman was partially ejected from his 2001 Dodge pickup after it went down an embankment. The vehicle landed on its side.

Two adult dogs and several puppies were taken from the crash site to an undisclosed animal shelter.

Cassia County Undersheriff George Warrell said Whitman's identity was not disclosed on Monday pending notification of out-of-state relatives.

In the report, inattention was listed as a possible contributing circumstance in the crash.

According to the report it is unknown if alcohol use contributed to the crash. A blood test was performed and the results are pending.

The crash remains under investigation.

A Family Affair

Family has seen generations through Minidoka County Fair.

BY LAURIE WELCH
lwelch@magicvalley.com

RUPERT • In 1948, the first Minidoka County Fair was held in the sheep shed and was a canvas-covered affair. The style review was held on the back of an old hay wagon covered by Adaline Beaver's living room rug.

Although much has changed in the 64 years since that first county fair — the Beaver family's passion for bringing together the community and sharing farm news has remained constant.

Adaline, who was involved in the Cassia County Fair from 1943 to 1947, her husband Hylak Beaver and a group of like-minded community leaders, brought the best of their neighboring county's fair to Minidoka County.

"They decided we needed our own fair," said Bene Beaver, who married Beaver's grandson, Gary Beaver, and continues to carry on the family's tradition of 4-H leadership.

A Minidoka County grange fair was held in Rupert prior to the establishment of the county fair, Bene said.

"We contacted the Posse and made arrangements with them to use their grounds," Adaline is quoted as saying in an undated South Idaho Press article. The land was eventually purchased and it became the Minidoka County Fairgrounds. "We went to the merchants in the area and coaxed, and begged them to offer prizes to the youngsters who were winners in each category."

Leadership Roles

4-H youth under the direction of Tom Neighborly built the first cinderblock building at the fairground. All the materials for the project were donated.

Later, a mill levy was added to county property taxes to pay for the fair expenses.

Since 1948, eight members of the Beaver family have accumulated 231 years of involvement in 4-H, which is more than any other family in the county.

"We've gone through a lot of county agents during that time," Bene said.

In the early years of 4-H, boys participated in livestock projects and girls were steered toward sewing and cooking projects, which were Adaline's specialties, taught in a club called the "Stitch N Spatter." Hylak led the livestock projects.

"Gary took 4-H from his grandma, so he had to take cooking and sewing," Bene said. "But, you wouldn't know it today because it takes him four pans to boil water!"

Today there still is a 4-H Adaline Beaver award for the top 4-H seamstress and cook, Bene said.

After Bene and Gary married in 1976, they followed the family's direction and became 4-H leaders. Today, they head a group with their son, Jesse and daughter-in-law, Laura, called the Clover Club, which averages about 45 members.

Changes

"When we first started as leaders, the fairgrounds were a lot different," Bene said. "The steers kept getting loose and going to town. They would end up in downtown Rupert."

Bene and Gary put up gates to help contain the wandering animals while the groundskeeper kept an eye on the Beavers from his house.

Over the years, the Beavers witnessed the implementation of computers into the program and watched as the animals grew taller and leaner.

"If you look at pictures when Gary was in 4-H, the steers had really short legs and they were stocky," Bene said.

Bene said decades ago people wanted the most meat they could get from an animal and they ate all of it including the fat. Today the market demands leaner cuts of meat.

Other changes increased safety. Now Cloverbuds, which are youth ages 5-7, can only take on animal projects that will weigh less than they do at completion.

"When Jesse was 7 years old he weighed 51 pounds, his first steer weighed 1,451 pounds," Bene said.

The Record Book

Bene said as leaders the Beaver family places the most importance on the record book.

Years ago without a computer to access information, farmers and ranchers had to keep records so they knew what worked and where mistakes were made.

Bene said although businesses "are wonderful" to support 4-H with high

Officials Scale Back Efforts to Find Man Near Pillar Falls

TIMES-NEWS

TWIN FALLS • A full-scale search for a Washington man who is presumed to have drowned in the Snake River has been downgraded, according to an announcement from the Twin Falls County Sheriff's Office.

About 25 deputies and search and rescue members were involved in the search efforts that began Saturday night after reports of the drowning. A dive team and underwater cameras were used during the search, which took a total of 35 hours.

Searches will still continue several times a day by boat, according to the announcement.

Underwater conditions in the area are difficult. Search team members looked through boulders, crevices and underwater caves through dangerous currents at depths exceeding 50 feet, the announcement stated.

"None of the team wants to go home without finishing the job," Lt. Daron Brown said in the announcement. "But our people and resources have been exhausted. It's tough to make that call."

The victim, 42-year-old Justice Kramer of Graham, Wash., was hiking with his daughter and her friend at Pillar Falls when he slipped off a rock and fell into the water late Saturday.

Emergency crews responded by boat and pulled the other two hikers off the rock, and then began searching.

The Pillar Falls area is one of the most dangerous and deadly areas of the Snake River. The Sheriff's Office urges people to use extreme caution while recreating there, according to the release.

State Agency: School Laptop Program on Track

BOISE (AP) • State officials negotiating to supply every high school teacher and student with a laptop under Idaho's contested education reforms report that they're still on track to get the program started this fall — even after hitting a snag last month.

The laptop program will be rolled out over five years with an estimated $60 million price tag and is one of the most visible pieces of public schools chief Tom Luna's "Students Come First" reforms, which face a test on the November ballot.

Officials abandoned the original bidding process meant to provide the laptop devices in late June, citing insufficient competition. As a result, the state Department of Administration is negotiating directly with providers of computers and services for the devices.

The agency updated the state Department of Education in a memo late last week.

"Negotiations are proceeding as planned, and we hope to conclude with a signed contract in the near term," said agency administrator Bill Burns in his letter Thursday. The note was also sent to members of Luna's technology task force who were charged with making recommendations on the laptop program.

"We are still on track to meet the program's original delivery objectives with the first wave of mobile computing devices reaching schools this fall," Burns said.

Teachers are supposed to get the devices during the upcoming school year while students will receive the devices starting in 2013. Under the reforms, Idaho is also becoming the first state in the nation to require high school students to take at least two credits online to graduate.

At the ballot box, voters will be asked to approve or reject the three laws that make up Luna's reform plan. Critics collected more than 74,000 signatures on each of three petitions last spring to put Proposition 1, Proposition 2 and Proposition 3 to a vote.

Proposition 1 relates to the part of the reforms that limits teacher collective bargaining and phases out continuing contracts often likened to tenure. Proposition 2 includes the merit pay plan that awards teachers bonuses for raising student achievement.

Idaho Mulls Hunt for Sage Grouse

BOISE (AP) • Idaho wildlife officials want the public's input on proposed hunting changes for sage grouse, a game bird that's a candidate for federal Endangered Species Act protections.

The Idaho Fish and Game Commission plans to take up recommendations for the 2012 sage grouse hunting season at its Aug. 23 meeting.

If adopted, the changes would follow guidelines laid out in Idaho's state plan meant to protect the birds — and help convince federal officials that Idaho is doing enough without federal listing.

A listing could dramatically affect activities including ranching in sage grouse habitat.

Among changes include closure of all sage grouse hunting in Elmore County, from a portion last year, and moving opening day to Sept. 15, earlier than in 2011.

Officials urge people to go to <http://fishandgame.idaho.gov> for information.

GOP Official Sued over Alleged Ponzi Profits

IDAHO FALLS (AP) • A lawsuit between a federal court receiver trying to recover money from a multi-million dollar Ponzi scheme and the head of the Bonneville County Republican Party has gone to trial in eastern Idaho.

The trial began in U.S. District Court in Pocatello on Tuesday morning. The Post Register reported court receiver Wayne Klein sued GOP official Doyle Beck in 2010, contending Beck received $55,000 in fraudulent payments from a company called Trigon Group run by Daren Palmer.

Palmer was convicted last year on federal wire fraud and money laundering charges for what prosecutors said was the largest Ponzi scheme in state history.

Court records showed that Palmer's Trigon Group received about $75.8 million from 68 investors between 2002 and 2008, and lost more than $20 million of that money.

Palmer was sued by the federal Securities and Exchange Commission and the Commodity Futures Trading Commission, and those agencies won $90 million in restitution and fines.

Romney Returns,
Heads out on Campaign Trail

WASHINGTON (AP) • Wrapping up a stumble-marred overseas trip, Mitt Romney pivoted quickly into a three-month stretch to the election on Tuesday with a new feel-good television ad. Aides simultaneously stoked speculation about his vice presidential pick.

The economy was Romney's primary text abroad as well as at home. "We could probably learn something from what's happening right here," the former Massachusetts governor said of Polish policies shortly before boarding his chartered jet for the flight back to the U.S. He arrived in Boston early Tuesday evening.

Advisers accompanying him said he would resume criticism of President Barack Obama's record soon enough, after observing a moratorium while on foreign soil. Yet a new television commercial suggested another immediate priority was to close a likeability gap in the polls.

Shorn of any criticism of Obama, the ad appears designed to introduce Romney to voters in battleground states who know little or nothing about his personal background except what they've seen and heard in unflattering commercials aired by Democrats.

In the ad, Romney speaks of his years in private business, in government and as the head of the Olympic Games in Salt Lake City a decade ago and says, "I want to use those experiences to help Americans have a better future."

In the final hours of his trip, in Warsaw, the Republican extolled the Polish economy as a model for the rest of the world in an era of slow growth or worse, and he simultaneously sought to limit the political fallout caused by comments he made earlier on a stop in Israel.

"The world should pay close attention to the transformation of the Polish economy" since the end of communist rule more than two decades ago, he said in a speech in the Polish capital city. "A march toward economic liberty and smaller government has meant a march toward higher living standards, a strong military that defends liberty at home and abroad and an important and growing role on the international stage.

"Rather than heeding the false promise of a government-dominated economy, Poland sought to stimulate innovation, attract investment, expand trade and live within its means," he added.

It was thinly veiled criticism — one of several instances on the trip — of the policies Obama has pursued while in office, and Romney was slightly less veiled in a Fox News interview. He did not mention that joblessness in Poland is over 12 percent, roughly half again as much as in the United States.

Republicans are Outraising Rivals,
Hope to Hold House

WASHINGTON • Trying to win a second term in the House, Republican Nan Hayworth of New York has almost tripled her fundraising.

"I'm out there on the road, in the district, as I should be," Hayworth said. "I have a team that's amazing. But dollars are required. Those dollars go toward cable, radio, brochures, getting the troops on the ground."

The fundraising by Republicans in competitive races is a boost to the party's chances of retaining the House this fall. Republicans made a net gain of 64 seats in November 2010 and recaptured the majority they held from 1995 to 2007.

Of the 19 Republicans most in danger of losing their House seats in November, including Hayworth, 14 had more money in the bank as of June 30 than their opponents.

Ebola Spreads in Uganda. Six more patients suspected to have Ebola have been admitted to the hospital days after investigators confirmed an outbreak of the highly infectious disease in a remote corner of western Uganda, a health official said on Monday. Stephen Byaruhanga, health secretary of the affected Kibaale district, said possible cases of Ebola, at first concentrated in a single village, are now being reported in more villages. "It's no longer just one village. There are many villages affected," Byaruhanga said.

Israel to Draft Ultra-Orthodox. In a step that could intensify a major rift among Israelis, the defense minister Tuesday ordered the army to prepare for a universal draft of ultra-Orthodox Jewish men. Many in the insular community say they would rather go to jail than comply with an end to the decades-long draft exemptions that have caused increasing outrage in the country. Ehud Barak gave officials a month to craft a plan, trying to buy time in a last-ditch effort to find an agreed solution. His order came before the expiration of a law that granted tens of thousands of Orthodox Jews exemptions.

Vets React to Fresh Iraq Violence

Former Marine Lance Cpl. Andrew Rothlein poses for a photo in League City, Texas. Rothlein fought in Fallujah in 2004.

SAN DIEGO (AP) • Just months after the U.S. military departed, violence in Iraq is increasing. Hundreds of people died in recent weeks in bombings and drive-by shootings, some claimed by al-Qaida insurgents.

How do the U.S. troops who fought in Iraq for nearly nine years, and in December completed withdrawing from what was supposed to be an emerging democracy, view the turmoil? What do they feel it means to the legacy of their time on the ground?

More than 1.5 million Americans served in the Iraq War, and these are just a handful of voices from among those ranks, offering a range of perspectives. Some worry the sacrifices may have been for nothing. Others have put all news of Iraq behind them as they focus on their civilian lives. Some take a long view and say history has yet to decide the war's outcome. Here are their views:

Former Marine Lance Cpl. Andrew Rothlein, from League City, Texas, fought in a unit in Fallujah in 2004, going building to building hunting insurgent snipers in one of the bloodiest battles of the war. He joined the Marines fresh out of high school, emboldened to do something for his country after the 9/11 terror attacks. He left the service six years ago and Iraq's unrest this year leaves him wondering why nearly 4,500 American military members died in the war.

"What did we lose our lives for?" Rothlein asks. "We never really saw States, communities try to clean up after disasterous fires leave their surroundings in ruins.

DENVER (AP) • A once-thriving Colorado neighborhood of homes and trees was reduced to a barren expanse of ash and debris. Across the state, a river prized for its trout, rapids and pristine water instead flows as an oily, black brew every time rain falls on nearby slopes charred by wildfire.

In New Mexico, the Santa Clara Pueblo are seeking volunteers to fill sandbags for fear the American Indian village of 3,100 will be washed away by runoff from mountainsides left denuded by a blaze last year.

Wildfires across the West are burning homes, businesses, bridges and other infrastructure necessary for everyday life — and the disaster isn't over when the wildfire is snuffed out and the firefighters go home.

Erosion from seared hillsides buries roads in mud and pollutes rivers that supply tap water. The point was driven home earlier this week when a mudslide following heavy rain in Colorado's Waldo Canyon burn area temporarily closed U.S. 24 near Manitou Springs.

Electricity, water and gas lines have to be repaired and recharged. Debris from burned-out homes has to be hauled away and new houses must be built. Even if the work starts while the fire is still burning, experts say recovery can take years and untold millions of dollars simply to make conditions

Half of India Left in the Dark

NEW DELHI (AP) • Electric crematoria were snuffed out with bodies inside, New Delhi's Metro shut down and hundreds of coal miners were trapped underground after three Indian electric grids collapsed in a cascade Tuesday, cutting power to 620 million people in the world's biggest blackout.

While Indians were furious and embarrassed, many took the crisis in stride, inured by the constant — though far less widespread — outages triggered by the huge electricity deficit stymieing the development of this would-be Asian power.

Hospitals, factories and the airports switched to their diesel generators during the hours-long cut across half of India. Many homes relied on backup systems powered by truck batteries. And hundreds of millions of India's poorest had no electricity to lose.

"The blackout might have been huge, but it wasn't unbearably long," said Satish, the owner of a coffee and juice shop in central Delhi who uses

The crisis was the second record-breaking outage in two days. India's northern grid failed Monday, leaving

Margaret E. Whiting

June 17, 1918-July 29, 2012

RUPERT

Margaret E. Whiting, our beloved mother, grandmother, great-grandmother and sister, passed away peacefully in her sleep Sunday, July 29, 2012, in Burley, Idaho, at the age of 94.

She was born June 17, 1918, in Paradise Valley, Nev., the youngest daughter of Timoteo and Amelia Plaza Evaseta. She has one living sister, Filamina Rochford of Rupert. She married Maylon Reese Whiting of Rupert on Sept. 17, 1934, in Salt Lake City, Utah. They were the proud parents of four daughters, Janet Harper (Jay) of Malta, Joyce Parker (deceased), Vicki Ovard Condie (Vic) of St. George, Utah, and Marsha Dutson of St. George, Utah. Marge and Maylon had 15 grandchildren; 44 great-grandchildren; and 12 great-great-grandchildren. They spent many years in the Burley area farming and then moved to Malta in 1953, where they owned and operated Whiting Mercantile for many years. They then relocated in Elba on Maylon's ranch and, upon his ill health, moved to Rupert.

Mom was an active member of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints after her conversion in 1962. She served in the Primary presidency and was a visiting teacher. She served on the city council in Malta for many years. She will long be remembered by all the delicious smells that would filter through the store from her cooking. She was the very best cook and always had something for someone to eat at any time of the day or night. She was such a hard worker and spent long hard days tending the store and never complained. Words cannot describe the kindness she gave to others and her life was full of unselfish acts. All who knew her loved her. Up until the very end, Mom always cared about the way she looked. She loved nice clothes, her hair to look just right, the nails painted and her lipstick on. She was truly beautiful "inside and out." The nicest compliment one could pay to her daughters would be to say: "They are just like their mother."

Marge is preceded in death by her husband, Maylon Whiting; daughter, Joyce Parker; sister, Remedius Hale; grandsons, Troy Parker and Bradley Dwane Ovard; and granddaughter, Summer Dutson.

The funeral will be held 11 a.m. Saturday, Aug. 4, at the Hansen Mortuary, 710 Sixth St. in Rupert, with visitation one hour prior to the service. Services will conclude with interment at the Rupert Cemetery.

War on Terror Shifts to N. Africa

Defense Secretary Leon Panetta urges North African countries to develop counter-terrorism operations that can yield results.

BLOOMBERG NEWS

WASHINGTON • The Obama administration no longer sees the greatest terrorist threats in Afghanistan or Pakistan.

Instead, U.S. counterterrorism officials are increasingly focused on a broad swath of northern Africa from Somalia through Chad, Niger and Mali to Mauritania and south into Nigeria, said three administration officials who work on the issue.

Defense Secretary Leon Panetta Tuesday spotlighted the growing threat of terrorism outside the Middle East, and Secretary of State Hillary Clinton begins a two-week trip to Africa that includes stops in Senegal, South Sudan, Uganda, Kenya, Malawi and South Africa.

"We continue to be concerned about al-Qaida's presence in Yemen, Somalia and North Africa," Panetta said in Tunisia, his first stop on a weeklong trip expected to focus on the Middle East. "For that reason, we strongly urge countries like Tunisia to develop counter-terrorism operations that can yield results."

The region includes both populated areas and wild spaces such as northern Mali, which one of the administration officials compared to Afghanistan in the 1990's before the overthrow of the Taliban.

The intelligence reporting from the area, which comes from the French foreign intelligence service, as well as the Central Intelligence Agency and others, cites increasing cooperation among radical Islamist groups, sizable supplies of weapons looted from Libya and recruiting of locals by terrorist groups such as al-Qaida in the Islamic Maghreb and Nigeria's Boko Haram.

"This issue has raised a very high level of concern," said Republican Rep. Mike Rogers of Michigan, chairman of the House intelligence committee, in a telephone interview. "We've seen these groups improve their organization and capabilities, then be able to operationalize those capabilities. This is a new trend."

Recent White House meetings on counterterrorism have been devoted almost entirely to northern Africa, protecting Nigerian oil production and developing programs in local languages, with Nigeria's Ibo at the top of the list, according to the three officials, who are participants.

"Africa is probably the most important continent in the 21st century for a lot of reasons, one of which is helping us prevent terrorism from taking root in the continent," said Johnny Isakson of Georgia, the ranking Republican on the Senate Foreign Relations subcommittee on African affairs.

"Terrorists take advantage of hunger and poverty," he said in a telephone interview. "There is a lot of that on the African continent."

To counter the threat, the Obama administration, both independently and in concert with France and other European allies, has stepped up military and intelligence support and training for African regimes threatened by Islamic extremism, the U.S. officials said.

The U.S. has provided training and non-lethal equipment to more than 215,000 peacekeepers from African militaries in 25 partner countries since 1997, according to U.S. Africa Command.

Still, the U.S. wants to help root out terrorist groups quietly, without a large military footprint that could cause a public backlash as the Pentagon faces budget cuts and withdraws American troops from Afghanistan.

Throughout the entire African continent, the U.S. has no more than 5,000 military personnel, including Defense Department civilians, at any given time, said Eric Elliott, a spokesman for the Africa Command, one of six regionally focused U.S. military commands.

In one sign of U.S. and African reticence toward a visible American presence, the headquarters of Africa Command isn't even in Africa. It's in Stuttgart, Germany.

"U.S. forces in Africa aren't going to solve the problems of these countries," said Rick "Ozzie" Nelson, a senior fellow for homeland security and counter-terrorism at the Center for Strategic and International Studies in Washington.

justice. Sure we took out Saddam but none of the other lives needed to be lost. Iraq's not free. Afghanistan is not free. They're still basically at the same stage as they were when we went in."

"We knew what could happen as soon as the troops pulled out," said Indianapolis Marine veteran Matthew Ranbarger, 27, who fought alongside Rothlein. "They have been fighting each other for thousands of years, before America was even founded. We did our job. There is only so much we can do. They have to do their part now."

Rothlein says he has been comforted by Vietnam veterans, who he says know what it was like to fight in a controversial war with no clear victory, then return home to hear their fellow citizens debate whether it was all worth it. Don't go there, they tell him. Just accept that it is what it is.

Former Marine 1st Sgt. Todd Kennedy served two tours in Iraq but said he no longer closely follows the news there, especially since his fellow troops have left for another conflict or come home.

After a 22-year military career, Kennedy said he is focusing on life back home. The 41-year-old is working "To me and some of my fellow soldiers, it feels like we gave all this for nothing."

Army Staff Sgt. Jesus Lozacruz

on dual degrees in history and anthropology at San Diego State University.

"For me personally, I have no regrets about the deployments, I have no regrets about the (Iraq) conflict in general," he said. "In any war there are lessons learned. Any war has its skeletons. Any war has its debates, repercussions, its conspiracies. Regardless of whether it was right or wrong to go into there, for me personally, it's not something I did a lot of dwelling on. It's one of those things. The nation called on me, so it was something I had to do."

Army Capt. Lauren A. Cabral helped train Iraqi women in 2007 for a security force in one of Baghdad's most dangerous districts, which she called a historic milestone for women who volunteered because they thought Iraq was getting better.

Cabral said her fellow soldiers of 3rd Squadron, 7th U.S. Cavalry, witnessed the Adahmiah district go from a "hopeless state where soldiers and hundreds of local nationals were dying every day, to a hopeful and desired environment. Watching this event unfold for those few days was so inspiring."

Cabral said she doesn't know if the renewed violence means Iraq can't achieve stability.

"Most of the reported attacks seem to state that the target is civilians in predominantly Shiite communities. The public sees the events that are catastrophic, can see a possible historic cycle rising again, but what about the noble and accomplished events that are happening in Iraq? Those are the things the citizens of the U.S. need to know about and to ensure us all that the sacrifices that were made by our country were not done in vain," she wrote in an email.

Army Staff Sgt. Jesus Lozacruz, of Tustin, Calif., says he survived 11 explosions and 126 missions during his two tours in Iraq, and he tries not to think about the country's troubles. It only compounds his despair over what seemed to him an unnecessary war and brings up haunting memories, like the time he shot and killed an armed woman and child after an ambush.

"It's like there was no purpose," he says. "To me and some of my fellow soldiers, it feels like we gave all this for nothing ... We went there and gave all this just to withdraw out of nowhere? We did all this stuff, set up all kinds of things, and now it's gone, it's trashed."

"The only time the Iraqis are going to get peace is if someone is going to go there and bring them support again. They're not going to be able to go shopping and not worry about getting blown up in their own town. They're not going to have that tranquility again anytime soon."

The 32-year-old was in his third year at Cal State-Fullerton in 2000 when he dropped out and joined the Army at his mother's request, as a way to keep an eye on his newly enlisted younger brother, Moises.

Lozacruz was excited to be part of the U.S. war on terror when he first went to Iraq with the invading forces in 2003. Soon though, he began to question why the Americans were there. There were no weapons of mass destruction and Lozacruz, trained in logistics, spent a lot of time protecting shipments of oil.

"That's when I started to get disappointed. We're getting shot at like crazy, for what? I never stopped doing my duties, but I didn't agree with it. Our mentality became, we just want to do what we have to do to come home."

livable again.

In New Mexico, the Santa Clara Pueblo is seeking volunteers to fill sandbags for fear the American Indian village of 3,100 will be washed away by runoff from mountainsides left denuded by a blaze last year.

Electricity, water and gas lines have to be repaired and recharged.

Debris from burned-out homes has to be hauled away and new houses must be built.

Even if the work starts while the fire is still burning, experts say recovery can take years and untold millions of dollars simply to make conditions livable again.

Lisa Maser, whose northern Colorado home survived a blaze that destroyed 259 homes and charred more than 136 square miles, now thinks of her life in two periods: before and after the High Park Fire.

"It's very eerie," Maser said of the charred hillsides in her rural neighborhood west of Fort Collins, where the blaze left a layer of fine, sandy black ash, and where flood waters could strand them in the event of a heavy rainstorm. "It's amazing that it got so close."

In Colorado alone, insurers estimate that wildfires have caused some $450 million in damage to personal property, and that number is expected to grow.

Nationally, the U.S. Forest Service is on track for another possible record with nearly $28 million spent so far on burned-area recovery work. The agency spent a record $48 million last year.

Harris Sherman, the USDA undersecretary who oversees the agency and the Natural Resources Conservation Service, said the federal government tries to get into burned areas as quickly as possible to predict what some of the fallout might be.

"There are not only immediate effects. There are long-term implications to this," Sherman said. "We all need to be aware of the fact that the landscape doesn't restore overnight. It can take years, if not decades."

The number of fires and total acreage burned in the West this summer is roughly within range of the past decade's average. But the fires are bigger, they're burning with greater severity, and they are burning areas where the potential impacts are greater.

The blazes have charred forests and private land near suburban communities, rather than remote wilderness, raising the price tag for a recovery that challenges everyone from homeowners and anglers to forest managers and water plant operators.

In addition to Colorado and New Mexico, burned-area response specialists are working in Arizona, Nevada, Utah and Wyoming to finalize contracts for seeding and mulching, stabilize roads and trails, prep culverts for higher flows of water and put up warning signs.

Nick Schroeder's Pineapple-Pepper Brine

- 1 gallon cold water
- 17 ounces kosher salt
- 1 1/2 cups of brown sugar
- 1 20 ounce can of pineapple chunks
- 1 tablespoon granulated garlic
- 1 tablespoon granulated onion
- 4 tablespoons big cracked pepper

Mix all these ingredients thoroughly to make a brine. Place fish in brine and soak for 18 hours in the refrigerator. The longer the fish is soaked the more salty it will taste. Take out of the brine and rinse off. Place the fish back in the refrigerator until it is shiny. This takes about three hours. Then smoke the fish for four hours. All times can be adjusted for personal preferences.

SMOKE ADDS MOISTURE, SPICE & EVERYTHING NICE

Cooking with smoke might be a slower process, but many prefer the method over traditional grilling.

BY TETONA DUNLAP
tdunlap@magicvalley.com

TWIN FALLS • Where there is smoke, there is fire.

And though a big puff of black might mean you burned dinner, some in Twin Falls are embracing smoke as a cooking method.

"It's like a cult," said Mike Brock, an employee at Brizee Heating, Air Conditioning and Fireplaces in Twin Falls. "Once you get these grills you are hooked. It's almost like a following; they have all these recipes out there and it's endless."

The store sells two types of smokers — The Big Green Egg Charcoal Grill and Traeger Wood Pellet Grills.

Brock said he enjoys cooking with smoke because it adds a lot of moisture to food. Because it is an indirect heat, foods can be cooked slower and longer.

"It won't burn like on a gas grill,"

Brock said.

It isn't just steaks and burgers that can be prepared in a smoker. Cookies and bread and even pizza — almost anything — can be smoked.

"(Cookies) seem to be more moist and flavorful," Brock said.

Do you really want mesquite-flavored chocolate chip cookies? Brock said that's not the case. "The cookies are not in there long enough to get the smoky flavor."

But if you do want that smoke flavor to permeate your chickens or ribs, you can leave them in there practically all day.

During lunch, Brock throws in some meat to make jerky that is ready by the end of the day when he gets off work. This is the same for just about anything you want to cook in a smoker.

"Baby back ribs: Put it on and do something else," Brock said.

People who own smokers tend to exchange a lot of recipes.

"I make cakes, pies, turkeys, hams, duck ...," said Darren Hall of Twin Falls.

If you want to smoke a pizza, Hall said, you basically bake it like it's an oven up to 325 degrees. But these slices of cheese and pepperoni will remind you more of pies made in a brick oven.

Hall often takes his smoker camping. While he didn't take it on his fishing trip in Canada in late July, he plans to put it to use when he returns. While in Canada, Hall intended to fillet his catches and freeze them so when he returns home he can smoke them into jerky.

John Anderson of Twin Falls loves cooking with smoke because of the slow process. He often places a pot of water inside to add more moisture.

Anderson said adding smokiness to foods usually takes 30 minutes to an hour. As soon as the wood chips burn up then the heat finishes the cooking process.

"The payoff is a very delicious meal," Anderson said.

A Wall Street Journal article said that while 86 percent of American households own a grill, sales of wood chips and plants are on the rise. Also increasing are the hours people spend smoking rather than grilling. Home cooks will spend an average of 7.5 hours a week cooking with smoke outdoors this summer compared with grillers who tend the fire for only 5.3 hours weekly.

According to the same article, many restaurants in New York City are embracing smoke and cooking woods such as apricot, alder, grapevine and oak in their dishes, desserts and cocktails.

In Twin Falls, Beacon Grill owner Nick Schroeder likes to lace smoke in several dishes at home and his restaurant.

Schroeder uses fruit woods like apple or cherry because he has found that southern Idahoans prefer sweet rather than bold.

"It's milder, people aren't used to harsh smoke," Schroeder said.

He has spent the past 10 years or more experimenting with smoke-infused dishes.

"You name it, I've smoked it," he said.

One of his favorite recipes is a smoked vegetable soup of red and green peppers and red onions. He said it's a creamy soup because the smoke cooks the crunchy vegetables down.

The prime rib Philly his restaurant serves is made from smoked whole prime ribs that are diced and served with equal parts onions and peppers.

The smoking process can take hours, but the end product is worth the wait.

"It's just an added flavor and another way to season your meal," Schroeder said.

see how bringing this together can inspire the palate," Moss said. "To get the juices going to do things yourself and not be scared."

Moss has found that typically when people think about herbs they either love them or they're scared of them. To help break that barrier of the unknown, she's put together the festival in an entertaining way.

Two bands will kick off the evening's festivities and in between shows there will be a hot pepper eating contest — complete with a jug of milk.

Local morning meteorologist Nick Kosir, of KMVT, will serve as a judge for the night's chef's challenge but also as a participant in the contest.

"I take my eating contests pretty seriously," Kosir said. "I'm going to go home and eat 14 hot jalapeno peppers a night."

All joking aside, Kosir did take home second place in a hot tamale eating contests in Texas years ago.

"I like hot, spicy food," he said. "I'm just going to do what I can and see if my stomach explodes."

Festivities also will include a chef's cook off. Local chefs will compete to create the dishes of appetizers, entrées and desserts all containing herbs. There will be celebrity judging as well as people's choice awards.

"We've asked the chefs to bring 700 samples in whatever category they would like and they can participate in more than one category," Moss said.

The samples of herb-filled food will be judged not just in gold, silver and bronze, but as most creative and best use of an herb.

Multiple vendors and food establishments are scheduled to be at the event, along with a tomato tasting station where the greenhouse will provide a taste of every tomato it grows.

To quench thirst, visitors can try cocktails infused with herbs. Beverages with hints of lavender and basil will accompany liquors at a full bar. To keep the event family-friendly, herb-infused waters, lemonades and teas also will be on hand.

"We want everyone to know this is an adaptable way to appease all palates," Moss said. "Even if you burn macaroni, you can come here and get inspired!"

Fennel: What They Are and How to Use Them

BY J.M. HIRSCH

Associated Press

If ever there was a vegetable dogged by misunderstanding, fresh fennel is it.

Because while it may taste like anise and look like a bulb, it is neither. And don't let the grocery workers who love to label it that way tell you otherwise.

While fennel is a relative of anise, they are separate plants. And while the base of fennel is bulbous, that's a shape, not its plant variety. So now that we've cleared up what fennel isn't, let's focus on what it is.

Fresh fennel resembles a cross between cabbage, celery and dill. The taste is assertively (though not unpleasantly) licorice and sweet. The base of the fennel is round with tightly overlapping pale green leaves. Sprouting out of that are long celery-like stalks topped with fine frilly leaves.

Technically speaking, all parts of the plant are edible, but most people will find the stalks too tough and fibrous to eat. The leaves can be chopped and used to flavor salads, dressings, marinades and sauces. They tend to have a slightly more citrusy flavor than the base.

The base (or bulb) is delicious raw or cooked. The thick bottom and outer leaves usually are trimmed off, then the rest can be sliced or chopped.

Fennel is particularly popular in the cuisines of the Mediterranean, particularly Italy, where it has been grown since the 17th century.

For ideas for using fennel, check out the Off the Beaten Aisle column over on Food Network: <http://bit.ly/O9xOoi>

Fennel Egg Salad Sandwich

Start to finish: 15 minutes. Servings: 3. To hard-boil eggs, place them in a medium saucepan and add enough cold water to cover by 1 inch. Bring to a simmer, then reduce heat to maintain a bare simmer, cover and cook for 14 minutes.

1/2 cup mayonnaise
1 tablespoon Dijon mustard

Splash hot sauce
Zest of 1/2 a lemon
1 teaspoon lemon juice
Salt and ground black pepper
1 small red onion, finely diced
1/2 fennel bulb, trimmed and finely chopped
6 eggs, hard-boiled, cooled and peeled
Lettuce or other greens
6 slices sandwich bread, lightly buttered and toasted
Pinch smoked paprika

In a medium bowl, whisk together the mayonnaise, mustard, hot sauce and lemon zest and juice. Taste, then season with salt and pepper.

Mix in the red onion and fennel. Coarsely chop the eggs, then gently stir them in. The eggs should be thoroughly mixed, but not mashed.

Arrange a bed of greens over 3 slices of the bread, then divide the egg salad between them. Sprinkle each with smoked paprika before topping with a second slice of bread.

This cut of meat is not inexpensive, so let this meal be the start of a special week-night. Because yes, the dish tastes that good. Use an instant-read thermometer to ensure the veal is cooked properly.

Serve with a tomato salad or sauteed spinach.

You'll have aioli left over. Refrigerate in an airtight container for 3 days. The addition of the almonds stabilizes the aioli, allowing it to be frozen for up to 3 months; wrap tablespoon increments in plastic wrap, then place those bundles in a resealable plastic food storage bag. The aioli would be great with grilled vegetables, steamed artichokes, roast chicken or even baked fish.

Pan-Fried Veal Chops With Rosemary-Almond Aioli

2 servings.

6 tablespoons blanched sliced (skinless) or slivered almonds
Leaves from 2 1/2 stems rosemary
2 cloves garlic
7 tablespoons extra-virgin

DEB LINDSEY • FOR THE WASHINGTON POST; TABLEWARE FROM CRATE AND BARREL

olive oil
2 bone-in veal chops, 3/4 inch thick (10 to 14 ounces total)
Kosher salt
Freshly ground black pepper
1 large lemon
1 teaspoon Dijon-style mustard
2 large pasteurized egg yolks

Preheat the oven to 375 degrees. Spread the almonds on a baking sheet. Finely chop the rosemary to yield 2 tablespoons plus 2 teaspoons; transfer the 2 tablespoons to the food processor. Coarsely chop the garlic and transfer to the food processor.

Use 1 teaspoon of the oil to rub all over the veal chops, then use 2 teaspoons of the finely chopped rosemary to rub into the meat. Season all over with salt and pepper to taste. Let the meat sit for 10 minutes.

Meanwhile, toast the almonds in the oven for about 4 minutes, until fragrant and lightly browned. Transfer (warm) to the food processor.

Heat 2 teaspoons of the oil in a skillet over medium-high heat, until the oil shimmers. Add the veal chops and cook for 4 minutes without disturbing them; a nice browned crust will form. Turn over the chops and cook for 5 or 6 minutes, until the internal temperature of the meat registers 130 to 135 degrees (medium-rare). Cut the lemon in half. Squeeze the juice of 1/2 lemon around the meat, then use a wooden spatula to dislodge any browned bits; this will form a pan sauce. Remove from the heat.

While the chops are cooking, squeeze the juice of the remaining lemon half into the food processor, taking care not to let any seeds fall in. Add the mustard and egg yolks; season with a pinch of the salt and pepper. Puree to form a mixture in which the nuts are finely chopped. With the motor running, add the remaining 6 tablespoons of oil through the feed-tube opening in a slow, steady stream to form a thick, textured aioli. The yield will be about 3/4 cup.

Place a veal chop on each plate, then spoon some of the pan sauce around and on the meat. Add a dollop of the aioli to each portion, either on or near the meat. Serve right away. YOU CAN GET HOOKED ON GRILLING FISH

BY KATHLEEN PURVIS

McClatchy Newspapers

Question: When I try to grill fish, they turn out dry, bland or both. Do you have any tips for cooking salmon or swordfish on a gas grill?

Answer: Fish ought to be so simple, but they can be tricky. You can increase your chances of success.

• Get good fish. Frozen fish, particularly fish steaks, aren't that bad, but pre-marinated, frozen fish that's been soaking in a gloppy sauce isn't going to do well. It's worth going to a good store where you can ask the person who's selling the fish where it came from and how fresh it is.

• Clean and oil the grill grates. I use a grill brush on my grill as soon as I take food off, because the grates clean easier when they're hot. If you didn't do that, wait until the grates are hot and give them a good rub with a heavy grill brush or even a ball of foil. Then either oil the grate or brush some oil on the fish.

• Don't turn the fish too soon. Meats, including fish and chicken, do this cool thing where they release from hot metal when they're ready to turn. Try to slide a spatula under it; if it's sticking, give it a minute.

• Don't overcook it. Dry fish is overcooked fish. Measure the thickness by pointing your index finger down next to the fish. The first line of your joint is 1 inch. A general rule is 10 minutes per inch. That's total, not per side.

• Give it a flavor boost when it comes off the fire. A squirt of lemon, a small pat of flavored butter, maybe a drizzle of olive oil.

PINEAPPLE SALSA COMPLEMENTS GRILLED FISH

THE WASHINGTON POST

Pineapple is easy to grill, and it's versatile. You can chop it as a topping for ice cream or skewer it along with hunks of plantain and whole strawberries for a refreshing kebab. In salsas, its sweet, faintly tart flavor and solid texture embrace hot peppers and lime juice. Scatter the salsa on grilled fish, or eat it by itself with tostadas or plantain chips.

Wear gloves when chopping the habanero pepper. Otherwise, you could transfer its heat to your eyes or other tender parts of your body.

The pineapple can be grilled up to 2 days before you plan to use it. The assembled salsa keeps well in a sealed container in the refrigerator for 3 days. From columnist Jim Shahin.

Fire-Grilled Pineapple Salsa

Makes about 1 cup.

1 pineapple
Olive oil (optional)
1 tablespoon freshly squeezed lime juice (from 1 medium lime)
3 tablespoons diced red onion
1/2 teaspoon minced habanero pepper, preferably red (to add color)
3 tablespoons cilantro leaves, coarsely chopped
Salt

Prepare the grill for direct heat. If using a gas grill, preheat to medium-high (450 degrees). If using a charcoal grill, light the charcoal; when the coals are ready, distribute them evenly under the cooking area. For a medium-hot fire, you should be able to hold your hand about 6 inches above the coals for 4 or 5 seconds. Have ready a spray water bottle for taming any flames.

Slice off the spiky top and about 1/2 inch from the base of the pineapple. Use a sharp knife to cut away the peel and eyes. Slice the pineapple in half lengthwise. Slice one of the halves lengthwise into 2 wedges; cut out the core from the 2 wedges and discard it. Save the remaining pineapple half for another use.

If desired, lightly grease the sides of the pineapple wedges with a little oil. When the grill is ready, transfer the wedges to the grate and grill on each side for 3 to 4 minutes or until the pineapple turns a golden color or you start to see some char. Transfer the pineapple wedges to a cutting board. When they're cool enough to handle, after about 5 minutes, dice the pineapple to yield about 1 cup and transfer it to a medium bowl. If you have more pineapple than you need, reserve the remainder for another purpose, such as an ice cream topping or an addition to a fruit salad.

Add the onion, lime juice, habanero and cilantro to the pineapple, and season with salt to taste. Stir to combine. Serve at room temperature, or cover, refrigerate and serve chilled. Per tablespoon: 5 calories, 0 g protein, 2 g carbohydrates, 0 g fat, 0 g saturated fat, 0 mg cholesterol, 20 mg sodium, 0 g dietary fiber, 1 g sugar.

Recipes to Pull Cottage Cheese out of the '70s

MATTHEW MEAD • ASSOCIATED PRESS

BY ALISON LADMAN
For The Associated Press

Could there be a food more heavily burdened with a dull reputation? Has anyone even eaten cottage cheese since the 1970s?

Turns out that like so many foods today, this aged icon of the fat-free diet movement has been getting the artisanal treatment by cheesemakers around the country, giving fresh life to a food most of us haven't thought about in decades. So we decided it was time to reimagine how we eat it and come up with recipes worthy of the new breed of high-quality cottage cheeses.

Cottage Cheese Pie

Start to finish: 1 hour.
Servings: 8.

16-ounce container cottage cheese, divided

1/2 cup (1 stick) unsalted butter, room temperature
Salt
1 cup all-purpose flour
2 whole eggs
2 egg yolks
1/2 cup sugar
Zest and juice of 1 orange
Zest and juice of 1 lime
1/4 cup heavy cream
Fresh berries, to serve

Heat the oven to 350 degrees.

In a medium bowl, use an electric mixer to beat together 1/2 cup of cottage cheese, the butter and a pinch of salt until well combined. Add the flour and beat just until incorporated.

Form the dough into a round and transfer to a lightly floured counter. With a rolling pin, roll out the dough into a 12-inch circle, then fit it into a 9-inch pie pan. Trim off most of the overhang, leaving about 1/2 inch. Crimp the edge with a decorative flute or fold the excess under itself and crimp with a fork. Set the pie pan on a baking sheet and set aside.

In a medium bowl, whisk together the eggs, yolks and sugar until smooth and slightly frothy. Stir in the orange and lime zests and juices, along with the heavy cream and remaining cottage cheese. Spoon the mixture into the prepared pie shell and bake for 35 to 40 minutes, or until just set in the middle.

Allow to cool to room temperature and serve topped with fresh berries. Refrigerate any leftovers.

Cottage Cheese Pepper Dip

Start to finish: 15 minutes.
Servings: 8.

16-ounce container cottage cheese
1/2 teaspoon ground black pepper

Pinch cayenne pepper
1/4 teaspoon smoked paprika, plus more to garnish
1/2 cup chopped cherry peppers
1 tablespoon cherry pepper liquid (from the jar of cherry peppers)
1 tablespoon diced banana peppers
1/4 cup diced Kalamata olives
Chips, toasted baguette rounds, crackers or vegetables, to serve

In a medium bowl, stir together the cottage cheese, black pepper, cayenne, paprika, cherry peppers, cherry pepper liquid, banana peppers and Kalamata olives. Spoon the mixture evenly into a casserole or other serving dish. Sprinkle with additional paprika. Serve with toasted chips, toasted baguette rounds, crackers or vegetables.

Pork Strip Dinner in 30 Minutes

BONNIE S. BENWICK
The Washington Post

Flavors are light and clean-tasting in this simple dish, proving that fresh, seasonal ingredients (from a trip to the farmers market) can yield a main course that tastes as good the next day as room-temperature leftovers as it does warm on the dinner plate.

Not all markets carry creme fraiche; you can substitute sour cream or make your own creme fraiche, but you won't be able to make it in a hurry.

Serve with crusty bread for mopping up the sauce. Adapted from "Hot & Cheesy," by Clifford A. Wright (Wiley, 2012).

Pork Strips With Carrot and Leeks in Chevre Sauce

3 servings.

Kosher salt
12 ounces young, tender carrots
14 ounces boneless pork loin
2 thin leeks
1 tablespoon unsalted butter
1 tablespoon walnut oil (may substitute grapeseed oil)
Leaves from 6 to 8 stems flat-leaf parsley

1/4 cup dry white wine
4 ounces chevre (soft goat cheese)
1/4 cup creme fraiche (may substitute regular or low-fat sour cream; see NOTE)
Freshly ground black pepper

Bring a medium saucepan of water to a boil over high heat. Add a generous pinch of salt.

Meanwhile, peel and trim the carrots, then cut them in half crosswise and then lengthwise. Add to the water and cook for 3 or 4 minutes, until tender but firm. Drain.

While the carrots are cooking, trim all visible fat from the pork. Cut the meat into 1/2-inch strips. Trim off and discard the root end and dark-green parts of the leeks. Cut the remaining leeks in half lengthwise, then crosswise into thin slices. Rinse well to remove any grit.

Heat the butter and oil in a large skillet over medium-high heat. Add the pork and cook for about 2 minutes, until it loses its raw look. Add the leeks and stir to coat; reduce the heat to medium-low and cook for about 8 minutes, stirring occasionally.

Meanwhile, finely chop the parsley to yield 1/4 cup. Add the parcooked carrots and stir to coat; cook for about 3 minutes, then stir in the wine, chevre, creme fraiche and parsley. Taste, then season with salt and pepper as needed. Cook for about 5 minutes, stirring occasionally, to form a slightly thickened sauce.

Divide among individual plates. Serve warm. Note: To make creme fraiche, combine 2 cups of unadulterated heavy cream and 1 to 2 tablespoons of buttermilk in a medium saucepan over low heat, until heated through (about 85 degrees on an instant-read thermometer). Transfer to a clean glass jar; let stand at room temperature for 8 to 24 hours or until thickened. It will smell slightly sour. Stir, and refrigerate for at least 24 hours before using. The creme fraiche can be refrigerated for up to 2 weeks.

Dinner and Lunch: Cook Pork Once, Eat Two Meals

BY J.M. HIRSCH
Associated Press

The best dinners are those that not only are delicious in their own right, but that also leave ample leftovers that can be easily reworked into an equally delicious lunch the next day.

As the father of a voracious 7-year-old boy — and as a father who packs said voracious boy's school lunch every day — I've become a pro at these dinner-lunch combos. Any day that I can cook once and feed my kid twice is a very good day. The trick, however, is to make sure the lunches made from leftovers are fresh and don't, well, taste like leftovers.

But this doesn't require a lot of work. A bit of imagination will take you far when it comes to reworking leftovers.

This recipe for grilled hoisin pork tenderloin is one of my favorites for this. The dinner itself is simple and wonderful and can be prepped the morning before. At dinner, I just toss the marinated tenderloin on the grill along with a few vegetables and it's good to go.

The next day, I turn the leftover pork into barbecue pulled pork, which can be eaten on a bun or in a whole-wheat wrap. It also can be served warm or cold; my son loves it both ways. When I'm pressed for time, I spoon the cold pulled pork onto the bread, wrap it and toss it in his lunch box. When I have more time, I pack the bread separately, heat the pork and pack it in a thermos. He actually enjoys assembling the sandwich himself.

And this can be done with grilled chicken leftovers, too. Just follow the simple directions below.

Grilled Hoisin Pork Tenderloin with Cumin Onions

The pork should marinate for at least 30 minutes, but the longer the better. I like to start it in the morning so it's ready to go at dinner. You even could do it the night before. This recipe makes enough for 4 dinners, plus leftovers. It also makes 5 onions, assuming 4 for dinner and another to be used with the leftovers. Start to finish: 30 minutes, plus marinating. Servings: 4 dinners, plus 2 lunches.

9.4-ounce jar hoisin sauce
1 cup red wine
1/4 cup soy sauce
4 cloves garlic, minced
1 teaspoon hot sauce
2 pounds pork tenderloins
5 large yellow onions
2 tablespoons olive oil
Kosher salt and ground black pepper
1 tablespoon whole cumin seeds

In a large zip-close plastic bag, combine the hoisin, wine, soy sauce, garlic and hot sauce. Seal the bag and gently shake to mix well. Add the pork tenderloins, then close the bag and gently turn to ensure the meat is well coated. Refrigerate for at least 30 minutes and up to 24 hours.

Trim the ends from the onions, then peel off the outer layer of skin. Place the onions in a second large zip-close plastic bag; add the olive oil, a bit of salt and pepper, and the cumin seeds. Seal the bag, then gently shake to coat evenly. Refrigerate until ready to grill the meat.

When ready to cook, heat one side of the grill to medium-high, the other side to low.

Using an oil-soaked paper towel held with tongs, oil the grill grates. Add the whole onions to the cooler side of the grill. Grill, covered, for 5 minutes. Turn the onions, then add the pork to the cooler side of the grill. Grill the pork for 6 minutes per side. Remove the onions when they are very tender and the meat when it is nicely seared on the outside and reaches 145 F at the center. Transfer the pork and onions to a platter and let the meat rest for 5 minutes. Thinly slice the pork and serve with an onion.

Leftover Makeover: Barbecue Pulled Pork Sandwich

The next morning, place any leftover pork in a large bowl. Use 2 forks to tear and pull apart the pork into thin strands. Any leftover onions can be finely chopped, then added to the bowl. Add 1/4 to 1/2 cup of bottled barbecue sauce and mix well. If you like it spicy, a splash of hot sauce also could be added.

For a cold sandwich, the pulled pork can spooned onto bread and packed in a lunch box (with a cooler pack). For a hot sandwich, microwave the pulled pork for 1 to 2 minutes, or until hot, then pack in a preheated thermos with bread packed separately.

A Blueberry Muffin that Thinks It's a Pancake

BY J.M. HIRSCH
Associated Press

What do you do when you are hankering for blueberry muffins, but don't have a muffin pan handy? Or maybe you just don't feel like cranking up the oven on a hot summer day.

During a recent vacation (sans muffin pan) I discovered that you cook them in a skillet, using the muffin batter the same as you would pancake batter. And the results are outstanding.

Why not just make blueberry pancakes? To answer that, we need to look at the differences between pancake and muffin batters. Though recipes will vary, most pancake and muffin recipes call for equal amounts of flour and eggs. But while pancakes call for more liquid, muffins get more (often way more) sugar, fat and baking powder.

That's why muffins are dense and cake-like, while pancakes are light and fluffy.

So while muffin batter cooked in a skillet may resemble a pancake, the taste is all muffin. I even top the muffins with a blend of cinnamon-sugar (just as you would a muffin); this caramelizes beautifully when you flip them. And while muffins can take half an hour to bake, these pancake-style muffins cook up in just minutes.

Also, this recipe works just as well with white whole-wheat flour as with all-purpose flour, so substitute equally if you want a whole-grain option.

Skillet Blueberry Muffin Pancakes

Start to finish: 20 minutes.
Servings: 4.

For the muffins:

- 2 cups all-purpose flour
- 1/2 cup sugar
- 1 tablespoon baking powder
- 1 teaspoon cinnamon

- 1/2 teaspoon salt
- Zest of 1 lemon
- 1 cup milk
- 1 egg
- 2 tablespoons canola or vegetable oil
- 1 teaspoon vanilla extract
- 1 cup fresh blueberries
- For the topping:
- 2 tablespoons brown sugar
- 2 teaspoons cinnamon

In a large bowl, stir together the flour, sugar, baking powder, cinnamon, salt and lemon zest. In a separate bowl or 2-cup liquid measuring cup, whisk together the milk, egg, oil and vanilla. Add the liquid ingredients to the dry, then stir just until a batter forms. Gently stir in the blueberries. Set aside.

In a small bowl, mix together the brown sugar and cinnamon.

Heat a large skillet over medium. Coat the skillet with cooking spray, reduce heat to low, then ladle batter into the skillet, using about 1/4 to 1/3 cup per muffin. Do not crowd the pan, as the muffins will spread. Sprinkle the top of each muffin with a bit of the topping. Cover and cook for 6 to 8 minutes, or until risen and browned on the bottom. Use a spatula to flip and cook for another 2 to 4 minutes. Repeat with remaining batter.

Appetizer: Sweet-Spicy Crab Pancakes

THE WASHINGTON POST

These crab pancakes are adapted from "Jeffrey Saad's Global Kitchen: Recipes Without Borders" (Ballantine Books, 2012).

Crab Pancakes With Sweet-Spicy Hoisin Sauce

Makes 12 to 14 pancakes (6 to 7 appetizer servings).

For the sauce:

- 1/4 cup low-sodium soy sauce
- 1/2 cup hoisin sauce
- 1 teaspoon finely chopped, seeded serrano pepper (for extra heat, leave in the seeds)

For the pancakes:

- 1 1/2 cups rice flour
- 1 teaspoon kosher salt
- 1 cup low-fat coconut milk
- 1/2 cup water
- 4 large eggs
- 2 tablespoons white sesame seeds
- About 1 tablespoon peanut oil
- 8 ounces crabmeat, picked over to remove shells and cartilage
- 1/4 cup chopped mint
- 1/4 cup chopped cilantro

For the sauce: Whisk together the soy sauce, hoisin sauce and serrano pepper in a medium bowl.

For the pancakes: Whisk together the rice flour, salt, coconut milk, water and eggs in a mixing bowl to form a smooth batter.

Toast the sesame seeds in a large nonstick skillet over medium heat for about 2 minutes, shaking the skillet so the seeds don't burn. Transfer to a small bowl to cool.

Return the empty skillet to medium heat. Add 1 teaspoon of the oil and swirl to coat evenly.

Once the oil is hot, pour about four 1/4-cup scoops of batter into the skillet, spaced far enough apart so they won't run together. Once the pancakes start to bubble on top, sprinkle some of the crabmeat, mint and cilantro evenly on each one, then flip the pancakes over. Cook for about 3 minutes or until golden. Transfer to a platter and cover loosely to keep warm. Repeat the cooking process, adding 1 teaspoon of oil for each subsequent batch, using all the batter.

Serve warm, with the sweet-spicy hoisin sauce, some of the remaining cilantro and mint, and a sprinkle of the sesame seeds.

Cracking Down on Cheating at Spudman

My sixth grade teacher Ms. Johnson only had three classroom rules: 1. Respect others. 2. Respect yourself. 3. No cheating.

One time, I witnessed my friend Jeremy scribbling vocabulary words on the palm of his hand prior to our spelling quiz.

"It's only cheating if you get caught, and Ms. Johnson sits behind her desk and doesn't watch us take the quiz," he explained. "Besides, what do you care? My quiz score doesn't affect your grade."

Participants of the Burley Lions Club Spudman Triathlon have noticed many Jeremys over the years. They're the bike drafters.

Drafting is when a cyclist rides inches behind another cyclist. The lead cyclist blocks the wind, creating a wake of air. The trailing cyclist then uses less energy to maintain the same speed, causing an unfair advantage.

It's spelled c-h-e-a-t-i-n-g.

Drafting is illegal in triathlon, Spudman included. But for years, Spudman officials acted like Ms. Johnson and allowed it to slide.

You know something has gotten out of hand when it's developed a reputation. My uncle traveled from Utah to do his first Spudman last Saturday. I asked what he had heard about the race.

"The fast swim," he said, referring to the Snake River's current, "and everybody drafts on the bike."

It's true. What's the point of having a rule if it's not enforced?

Simons Back on Sidelines at NVA

BY PATRICK SHELTRA
psheltra@magicvalley.com

GOODING • A familiar face is back on the high school football coaching scene.

Ed Simons Jr., who coached at Dietrich for seven seasons spanning from 1997-2008 and whose experience in the game spans all or parts of five decades, is the new coach at North Valley Academy.

It is Simons' first coaching job after leading the since-closed Magic Valley Christian School's junior varsity team in the 2010 season. Simons replaces Dan Turner, who guided NVA in its first season of varsity football last year, but will still play an active role in helping grow the program.

Simons was out of football for the 2011 season, but when Magic Valley Christian closed, many of its players who played under Simons went to Lighthouse Christian, which won the Class 1A Division II state title.

"I really hated to see (Magic Valley Christian) close down," Simons said. "It was a unique experience and I really enjoyed it."

He's hoping to get more of the same at North Valley Academy.

"These guys, they call themselves the Patriots and they chose the name well," Simons said. "They have a lot of enthusiasm and this ol' Marine is happy to be here."

Simons was encouraged by his wife, Audrey, a "football nut" according to her husband. And at an age in which most coaches have long since hung up the whistle, the 74-year-old Simons has the energy and, just as importantly, the sense of humor required for dealing with high school kids much younger than him.

For the second straight year, Canyon Ridge athletes will be featured prominently on the school's athletic schedule posters. Schedule posters have become a source of revenue for some athletic departments, though the Riverhawks plan to self-produce theirs this year.

SCHOOLS FIND PROFITS IN POSTERS

Area schools don't get rich off the seasonal sports promotion, but every little bit helps.

BY DAVID BASHORE

TWIN FALLS • Even high school athletic departments can find success in outsourcing.

In the seemingly unending game of turning over rocks in search of athletic dollars, schools are relying on ever-growing sources of small revenue streams. One of those that fly particularly under the radar: the schedule posters fans may collect or see at a local business.

A handful of poster companies compete for schools' attention. Once a deal is secured, the company receives action photos from the schools for the schedule posters, and then calls local businesses to sell advertising space on the prints. Then the finished product is sent to the school for distribution, along with a cut of the net proceeds.

"I think it works pretty well for us, in the sense that it's a lot of time and effort to cold call and we get a certain percentage back from the company," said Twin Falls High School Athletic Director Mike Federico. "The information of our schedule goes out to the community. That's good considering most of us are half-time ADs, and we don't have lot of time to do that. We're more managers it seems like, sometimes."

In recent years job definitions have evolved, tasks increased and time become scarcer, and athletic directors have turned to the outside specialty companies to help bring a little extra money into the coffers.

Federico estimated that over the last four years, during which he's sampled several different companies' services, the athletic department has gotten between $700-$2,500 per athletic season, with three seasons per school year. The school's fine arts program also does a concert poster, he said.

Last season Twin Falls used All-American Sports Posters, and this year the Bruins are going

LONDON • One by one, the Americans thundered down the runway, soared high above the vault and slammed into the mat.

Boom! Boom! Boom! When the fireworks were over, so was everybody else's chance for the gold medal.

The Americans lived up to their considerable hype and then some Tuesday night, routing silver medalist Russia and everybody else on their way to their first Olympic title in women's gymnastics since 1996. Their score of 183.596 was a whopping five points better than Russia's, and set off a debate over whether this is the best U.S. team of all time. Romania won the bronze.

"Others might disagree. The '96 team might disagree. But this is the best team," U.S. coach John Geddert said.

The Americans didn't botch a single routine, and all but three of their 12 scores were 15.0 or higher. The Russians, on the other hand, had just one score above 15 in their last two events as they unraveled

Phelps becomes Olympics' most-decorated medalist in style, spurring U.S. to gold in 4x200 freestyle relay.

LONDON • Michael Phelps swam into history with his 19th Olympic medal, and this one was a more appropriate color.

With a lot of help from his friends, Phelps took down the last major record that wasn't his alone, swimming the anchor leg for the United States in a gold medal-winning performance of the 4x200-meter freestyle relay Tuesday night.

About an hour earlier, Phelps took one of the most frustrating defeats of his brilliant career, making a shocking blunder at the finish and settling for silver in his signature event, the 200 butterfly.

That tied the record for career medals held by Soviet gymnast Larisa Latynina, but it was hardly a triumphant moment. Phelps slung away his cap in disgust and struggled to force a smile at the medal ceremony.

But any disappointment from that race was gone by the time he dived in the water on the relay, having been staked to a huge lead by teammates Ryan Lochte, Conor Dwyer and Ricky Berens.

Before the race, they all down the stretch. They sat on the sidelines sniffing and watching glumly as the Americans turned their final event, floor exercise, into a coronation.

When the final standings flashed, chants of “U-S-A! U-S-A!” rocked the arena, and the U.S. women, who backed up to get a better view of the scoreboard, held up their index fingers for the cameras — in case anyone had a doubt.

“The feeling was incredible,” world champion Jordyn Wieber said. “To have this gold medal around your neck, it’s really an indescribable feeling.”

The Americans had come into the last two Olympics as world champions, only to leave without the gold. But national team coordinator Martha Karolyi recognized six months ago that this was a special group, stronger than previous U.S. teams.

It’s not just the titles these Americans have won, though there are plenty: last year’s team gold at the world championships, along with Wieber’s all-around crown and McKayla Maroney’s title on vault. It’s their fierce competitiveness, and the unshakable faith they have in themselves. Rather than flinching under the weight of the heavy expectations, it made them stronger. When they noticed the Russians and Romanians peeking in on their training sessions, they cranked up the oomph in their routines, the better to intimidate.

Even Wieber’s failure to qualify for the all-around final, which left her teammates stunned following Sunday’s sessions, turned out to be a minor speed-bump.

“I told them just believe in yourself,” Maroney said. “Live up to that Olympic moment, because you’re

A delayed broadcast of her race will be on KTVB/Ch. 7 at 11:30 p.m. The other Idaho Olympian scheduled to compete this week, Ketchum’s Adrienne Lyle, will take her turn in dressage on Aug. 3 at 5:51 a.m. That competition will be broadcast live on cable channel MSNBC.

Track and field, featuring Nick Symmonds (Bishop Kelly), Jarred Rome (Boise State) and Kurt Felix (Boise State, competing for Grenada) begins next week.

never, ever going to forget it.”

Unforgettable, like their performance.

The Americans opened on vault, their strongest event, unleashing a barrage right that let the Russians know in no uncertain terms that they — and everyone else — would be playing for silver.

“They’re just so far ahead of anyone else,” Britain’s Rebecca Tunney said.

All of the Americans do the high-difficulty, high-scoring Amanar — a round-off onto the takeoff board, back handspring onto the table and 2.5 twisting somersaults before landing. It’s got a start value — the measure of difficulty — of 6.5, a whopping 0.7 above the vault most other gymnasts do, and they ripped off one massive one after another.

Now they need a catchy nickname, something like “The Magnificent Seven” from 1996.

“I like Fierce Five,” Maroney said. “Because we are definitely the fiercest team out there.”

Keep Calm and Shut Up!

Oh, the things that come out of the mouths of babes, er, athletes.

Vile things. Racist things. A ton of stupid things.

Greek triple jumper Voula Papachristou should be in London now, enjoying life in the athletes village while preparing for her specialty in the Olympic stadium. Instead she’s stuck back home after offering up her idea of a joke on Twitter, everyone’s medium of choice nowadays.

“With so many Africans in Greece, the West Nile mosquitoes will be getting home food!!!” Papachristou tweeted.

Swiss soccer player Michel Morganella made it here, but barely had time to check into the athletes village before he was sent packing. Not surprising after he said in a tweet that the South Koreans he had just played against were a “bunch of mongoloids” who “can go burn.”

The official motto of the London Olympics is “Inspire a Generation.” Maybe it should be “Keep Calm and Shut Up!”

It used to be drugs that got you kicked out of the Olympics. Now it’s the most intoxicating drug of all: The ability to let the world know your thoughts in 140 characters or less.

The Olympics have always been populated by big talkers, from a young Cassius Clay to Charles Barkley, who said in 1992 he was afraid an Angolan player was going to pull a spear on him. Everything is magnified these days by social media, though, which isn’t always terribly social.

These are the Twitter Games, where things once said just between teammates or friends are now blared for everyone. Everything from the Olympic experience (just great) to the food (mostly bad) to how 18-year-old British weightlifter Zoe Smith looks (by most accounts, pretty good) is dissected online, often in great detail.

The IOC endorses it, mostly because it has no choice. Luckily, Twitter was in its infancy in Beijing or the Chinese government might have tossed everyone out for some of the comments that would have come that country’s way. Britain is, last time anyone checked, a democracy with certain free-speech rights, though there are laws against people going over the line.

But who among the fat cats running the IOC would have thought that the medium would be used to attack the organization itself? Apparently free food and lodging for three weeks and a chance to compete for a medal wasn’t enough to satisfy athletes who ran a Twitter campaign — so far unsuccessful — to be able to promote their own sponsors at the games.

The good thing is there’s no filter, allowing athletes to pass along their musings to their followers with no translators, spokesmen or Olympic officials getting in the way.

The bad thing is there’s no filter, allowing athletes to say anything they want no matter how ridiculous it is or whom it offends.

“When’s da Gun shooting competition?” hurdler Lolo Jones wanted to know the other day, in a tweet that prompted former Olympic gold medalist Diane Dixon to tweet back it was “NOT funny AT ALL!” in the wake of the Colorado shootings. The back-and-forth touched off yet another Twitter debate over what Jones wrote, which she tweeted was made in the context of hunting back home in Louisiana.

There wasn’t much debate about what U.S. soccer goalie Hope Solo meant when she tweeted that NBC analyst Brandi Chastain — who so famously took off her shirt to celebrate the winning goal for a groundbreaking U.S. team in the 1999 World Cup — should quit criticizing the team’s defense “until you get more educated” and that “the game has changed from a decade ago.”

Solo didn’t even get a slap on the wrist for that. Then again, announcers may be fair game because they’re technically part of media no one likes anyway.

“It’s just my opinion, and nothing else really matters, to be honest,” Solo said a few days later.

It does matter when it’s broadcast to the world with the swipe of a finger or the click of a mouse.

“People have their opinions, but you do have to be careful who you offend and the whole freedom of speech thing sometimes is a fine line,” U.S. basketball player Candace Parker said Tuesday. “You don’t want to speak too much.”

Not everything is negative on Twitter, of course. Far from it. The vast majority of tweets urge athletes on, celebrate their achievements, commiserate with them when things go bad, and share their triumphs.

When 17-year-old swimming sensation Missy Franklin won her first gold medal, she got a tweet from teen heartthrob Justin Bieber telling her he was a fan.

“I just died!” Franklin tweeted back. “Thankyou!”

Not much to say after that, except this: Keep Calm and Tweet Away.

“I was trying to do the best that I can,” said Franklin, who still has four more events in London. “I was in an incredible heat. I really wanted to go best time.”

Phelps

Berens handed off a lead of nearly 4 seconds to Phelps, who lingered a bit on the blocks, knowing the only way he could blow this one was to get disqualified. Then he set off on what amounted to four victory laps of the pool — down and back, then down and back again, the roar in the Olympic Aquatics Centre getting louder as he approached the finish.

Lochte stood on the deck, waving his arms. Dwyer and Berens pumped their fists. And Phelps touched the wall for his first gold of the London Games with a cumulative time of 6 minutes, 59.70 seconds.

No one else was close. France’s Yannick Agnel swam a faster final leg than Phelps, but it wasn’t nearly good enough, his country taking silver in 7:02.77. China was far back in third at 7:06.30.

Phelps might have backed into the record a bit by failing to win any of his first three events at these games, but there’s no denying his legacy as one of the greatest Olympians ever — if not THE greatest.

Phelps has 15 golds in his career, six more than anyone else, to go along with two silvers and two bronzes. After failing to medal in his only race at the 2000 Sydney Games, he won six golds and two bronzes in Athens, followed by his epic eight gold medals in Beijing. And now the swan song, not nearly as epic but enough.

Latynina won nine golds, five silvers and four bronzes from 1956-64.

“You are now a complete legend!” the public-address announced bellowed, accompanied by the Foo Fighters’ song “Best of You.”

Phelps still has three more events in London before he retires, three more chances to establish a mark that will be hard for anyone to touch.

“It has been a pretty amazing career,” the 27-year-old said, “but we still have a couple races to go.”

In the first final of the night, American Allison Schmitt won the 200 freestyle with a dominating performance that left everyone else, including teammate Missy Franklin, battling for the other medals.

Schmitt won in an Olympic-record 1:53.61. France’s Camille Muffat took silver in 1:55.58, almost a body length behind, while Bronte Barrett of Australia took the bronze over Franklin by a thousandth of a second. Barrett touched in 1:55.81. Franklin, who led after the first 50, was fourth in 1:55.82.

“I was just racing,” said Schmitt, who is quietly becoming one of the stars of the pool. “I knew I had to kick it. I just look at that scoreboard and see 53 and first place. I couldn’t be happier.”

She captured her first career gold medal, to go along with a silver in the 400 free and a bronze in the 4x100 free relay.

The 17-year-old Franklin was denied her third medal of the games, one night after her gutsy victory in the 100 backstroke earned her a tweet-out from pop star Justin Bieber.

“I was trying to do the best that I can,” said Franklin, who still has four more events in London. “I was in an incredible heat. I really wanted to go best time.”

Simons

“I’m old enough to vote and old enough to know who to vote for,” Simons quipped when asked to clarify his age.

The Patriots open the season Aug. 31 at Sho-Ban, with their home opener against Richfield two weeks thereafter. But the game with the most intrigue is in NVA’s next-to-last game of the regular season, Oct. 12 at Dietrich.

“There are a lot of great people in Dietrich,” Simons said. “It will be a fun thing for us.”

With enrollment at NVA, which went winless in its inaugural season, Simons is hoping to see similar growth in the football program, which fielded a roster that just squeaked over 10 players in games last year.

“Hopefully we’ll get 16 to 18 kids out and field a competitive football team,” Simons said.

Future Still Unclear for Vandal Football

BY JOSH WRIGHT

For the Times-News

MOSCOW • Where the University of Idaho’s athletic programs — most notably, its football team — will land after the collapse of the Western Athletic Conference has been left unresolved since early May.

That’s meant nearly three months of persistent questions for UI football coach Robb Akey, who’d rather talk about the depth of the Vandals’ linebacker group or potential at wide receiver than the program’s likely move to independent status.

Starting today, the focus shifts. Idaho players report for fall camp, and with the first practice Thursday, Akey can fully devote his time to football.

“It will be a nice changeup,” said Akey, entering his sixth season at Idaho.

The Vandals will hold the first of 20 fall camp practices at 3:30 p.m. After school begins on Aug. 20, the Vandals will start full preparations for their Aug. 30 season opener with Eastern Washington at the Kibbie Dome.

UI has yet to announce its intentions for the 2013 season. It’s possible that it will become an independent, which would force athletic director Rob Spear to find Football Bowl Sub-division opponents willing to come to Moscow during the conference portion of their schedules.

Paralleling the conference uncertainty for the Vandals is the string of unknowns on the field. The Vandals enter camp without a starting quarterback — it will either be Dominique Blackman or Taylor Davis — and with just two of five starting spots on the offensive line locked up.

In preseason WAC polls, the Vandals were selected to finish fourth by the media and fifth by the coaches in the seven-team league. In both, they flip-flopped with New Mexico State, which also has an uncertain future at the FBS level.

The conference scramble kicked into gear just days after the Vandals wrapped up spring practice, when the Mountain West and Sun Belt Conference spurned UI and NMSU in favor of other schools.

“I’ve got a football team, I’ve got a coaching staff, I’ve got a guy I look in the mirror everyday that’s sitting here,” Akey said, “and I’m kind of tired of people telling me we’re not good enough, we’re not wanted, we’re not going to do this, we’re not going to do that.”

UI went 2-10 in 2011 after winning 14 games the previous two years. Akey has since announced the hiring of two new offensive assistants — receivers coach Mike Levenseller and line coach Gordy Shaw — while elevating Jason Gesser to offensive coordinator.

The changes have already made an impact, Akey said. It helped that nearly every scholarship player and walk-on was in Moscow for what the coach described as a “tremendous summer.”

NOTES: Receiver Justin Veltung (turf toe) will participate in non-contact drills only to start fall camp, while several offensive linemen who also missed spring camp are ready to go, Akey said. Guard/center Guy Reynolds (knee) is the only linemen yet to be cleared. Akey said running back Trae Armstrong, part of this year’s signing class, has elected to pursue track and field and won’t attend UI.

Posters

with All Around Sports. Both are Boise-based companies.

It's not limited just to the big schools, though — Class 1A schools like Dietrich and Hagerman have also gotten in on the act in recent years. Both are using All-American his year.

It doesn't generate a ton of revenue, especially for the smaller schools, but every little bit helps. The tradeoff of saving hours of labor as opposed to a 10- to 15-percent cut of the profits, in the estimation of some, is a good one.

"We could probably radically increase the revenue if we did our own posters, but it's worth it to me to have them do that," said Hagerman A.D. Kevin Cato, who's also a government and United States history teacher at the school, as well as the head boys basketball coach.

"I think last year we got 300 or 400 dollars. It gets divided up to the program so it ends up being a really small amount, but every little bit helps. If we did it ourselves we'd get 100 percent of the profit, so it'd be better, but with the time into it ... I guess if I was just an AD and didn't teach and coach, it might be something to look at."

While the idea of outsourcing posters for a share of the profits seems to be growing more popular, one school views it as a public service more than a money-making strategy. It also shows that while there's a mutual business interest, there's still some blurring between a partnership and a company-client relationship.

Unsatisfied with last year's experience with a San Diego-based company, Canyon Ridge has turned to self-production and promotion for the 2012-13 school year.

Arrangements were put in place before Kim Wray took over as athletic director with the beginning of last school year, and it wasn't quite what she expected.

"Whoever we were going through, they weren't very friendly, and they torqued me off in the spring. It's too much work on our end not to be treated very well," Wray said. "I don't care to get any money from the posters, so we're trying to do it ourselves and sell some sponsorships, just enough to cover the cost of the posters."

Federico, meanwhile, plans to continue with his school's plan after doing years of homework.

"I've looked at all of them, spent four different years with four different companies, finding out which is the best in terms of money back to us, service, quality of posters," he said. "It's been a feeling-out process, but next year we'll probably do a two-year thing with whoever we pick."

Spudman

However, the Spudman committee this year wisely decided to police the bike course and penalize drafters. According to race director Cade Richman, more than 30 racers were busted and penalized.

"Most people might not understand the reasoning behind it. We didn't do it to penalize racers; we did it for safety," Richman said. "It will make it a more legitimate race and a safer race."

Rick Dayley, president of Southern Idaho Cycling Klub (SICK) and a Spudman competitor said he's happy that Spudman is stepping up the rule enforcement.

"Advantage or disadvantage, you can throw that out the window," Dayley said. "From a safety factor, it creates a better situation."

Sure, race officials didn't catch all the drafters on Saturday. But it's a good start.

And wouldn't you know it, there were zero bike accidents this year. It's the first wreck-free Spudman in many years, despite hosting the second-largest number of competitors in its 26-year history.

Besides the obvious safety factor, what do we care if someone decides to cheat during Spudman? Typically those people aren't in the running for a coveted Spud trophy, anyway. Plus, Mr.

Drafter's race doesn't affect my time, right?

Perhaps. But for athletes who have trained hard and are running an honest race, nothing is more aggravating than to see someone cheating. It's like watching Jeremy ace the spelling test. Drafters would be violating all three of Ms. Johnson's rules, especially No. 2.

We applaud the Burley Lions for taking steps toward safety and integrity.

Next, they should do something about the rule-breakers using iPods.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE® Bobby Wolff

"As I know more of mankind I expect less of them, and am ready now to call a man a good man upon easier terms than I was formerly."

— Samuel Johnson

It is unusual if there is no Zia coup to report from a tournament in which Zia Mahmood is participating. At the 2008 Buffet Bridge Cup he did not let us down.

The hand is from the Individual, and the scoring was by Point-a-Board. That meant that overtricks and undertricks were just as important as bidding to the best contract. In turn, this led to players going for the jugular.

A word on the auction: Nowadays many players introduce a major before a minor, even when the minor is stronger — or even longer — on hands worth just one bid. That is why Zia preferred one spade to one diamond as his initial response.

The no-trump game can be beaten by a heart lead. The defenders can set up hearts before a spade trick can be established. However, since North was marked with a singleton diamond at most, there was little reason for West to look further for a lead. The diamond four went to the two and king, and now nine tricks are available if the ace is played. But Zia ducked, following with a deceptive diamond five!

A heart return would still have seen the defense win out. But East saw no reason to switch, given the relative strengths of dummy's red suits, so he returned a diamond to the 10 and queen. Fully taken in, West continued with diamonds rather than cashing out spades, enabling Zia to wrap up an overtrick to secure the full point.

ANSWER: Your choices are to raise spades to whatever level you think appropriate, to cuebid in hearts to show a limit raise, or to jump in diamonds. This last call in a competitive auction should be a fit-jump suggesting precisely this amount of spade support and a source of tricks in diamonds. So it would be my choice.

 Yesterday's Jumbles: RIGID AVOID REGRET CATTLE
 Answer: After he trained by running, cycling and swimming, the athlete decided to — GIVE IT A "TRI!"

THAT SCRAMBLED WORD GAME

by David L. Hoyt and Jeff Knurek

Now arrange the circled letters to form the surprise answer, as suggested by the above cartoon.

(Answers tomorrow)

DEAR ABBY: I found out my husband has been corresponding with prostitutes he picked up when we went on vacation. He emailed them twice, but the second one hurt me the most. He sent her money. I confronted him and was ready to end the marriage, but we have a son.

DEAR ABBY
 Jeanne Phillips

He denied having sexual contact with the women and said he was just flirting, so I forgave him. But I told him I won't tolerate it a third time. He agreed to have marriage counseling and do his part to convince me he will change. Is it worth it to try again for the sake of our son? I don't trust him anymore, but I still love him.

— READY TO LET GO
DEAR READY: When a man gives money to a hooker, it's usually for a reason. The reason isn't charity; it's for services he wants rendered. (And they don't take money in arrears.)

No one can decide for you whether or not to stay in the marriage, but before making any decisions, make it your first priority to contact your doctor and be checked for STDs. Who knows what your husband might have picked up while "flirting."

If you do decide to remain in the marriage, you'd be wise to schedule regular appointments for STD check-ups. Your husband has shown himself to be not only a philanderer but also a liar.

DEAR ABBY: I have been meaning to write to you for a long time. Now that we have gone through another year of Mother's Day and Father's Day, would you PLEASE acknowledge those of us who did NOT have a parent who deserved to be honored? SOME PEOPLE SHOULD NOT BE ALLOWED TO BE PARENTS! I dread these commercialized days every year. Our planet does not lack for population. We don't need more people. There are horror stories every day in the media about child abuse, yet you honor these people without qualification. For those who have parents who deserve to be honored, I'm happy for you. But the celebration is only salt in the wounds of those of us who wish we'd never been born.

— ONE OF THEM IN LONGMONT, COLO.
DEAR ONE OF THEM: I agree that the commercialization of certain holidays can be painful for those who cannot join in the celebration. This would include children and adults who were abused or neglected by their parents, as well as those who no longer have living parents.

I doubt many people remain childless for the public good. Usually there are deeply personal reasons for it. For people who are childless by choice, every day is an affirmation of their decision. However, for those who want children and cannot have them, their loss can be excruciating.

IF AUGUST 1 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY: The full moon today may mark this birthday as the beginning of a new phase for relationships, finances and family. You can expect to enjoy more freedom in your life this year and will thrive due to exposure to new people and situations that invigorate the senses. Feel free to experiment, but keep yourself footloose and fancy free until October and November when your motivations shift and you are an apex of wisdom. People who are have your best interests at heart and plans that fulfill their promise are most likely to manifest during October. A new romance or lifelong friendship might find you as well.

HOROSCOPE

Jeraldine Saunders

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Work-related situations could come full circle. Small details could take up extra time but will be well worth the extra effort. Absorb advice and helpful information wherever money is at stake.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): This full moon may highlight information that has come your way. You may get a handle on whom you can trust and what facts are crucial for your success. Develop strategies for handling assets.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Someone lights up your life. You might become more aware of who your real friends are and who truly loves you. Relationships that stand the test of time are illuminated under the full moon.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Money makes the world go around. Shared resources could come to light under the gentle beams of tonight's full moon. This is a good time to dream big and share your ideas with loved ones.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): The end of the lunar cycle ushered in with a full moon in your opposite sign may highlight your sensitivity toward partners, mates and close friends. Their loyalty is a reflection of your own.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Consider the cost as well as the benefits. You can't handle your money with only economy in mind. You need to think about the long-term effects of your present spending habits and investments.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Putting a positive spin on your creative efforts is easy as Sunday morning. You might be picky about the details, but your precision just makes people appreciate your dedication and clamor for more.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Passions power up to a peak. You might find time to stroll in the moonlight with the one you love under the light of tonight's full moon. Home and family are favorably placed in the limelight now.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Your dreams are real to you under the light of tonight's full moon. If you are passionate enough about making your dreams a reality, you will be able to accomplish much.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): What goes around comes around. This full moon may mark the successful completion of some recent business or financial push. Appreciative people repay your past politeness.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Life is up-close and personal, as tonight's full moon in your sign lets you see what you have accomplished in the past month. Devote your full attention to strategic or romantic alliances.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Kites only fly high because they are tethered to the ground. Every time you exaggerate your talents, someone or something will come along to burst your bubble. Achieve a happy medium.
