Alleged Victim Speaks at Abuse Trial

BY LAURIE WELCH
lwelch@magicvalley.com

BURLEY • A Cassia County jury heard testimony Wednesday from the alleged victim, her counselor and the detective who investigated the case charging a former Oakley High School teacher with sexual misconduct in a storage closet in the back of his science classroom.

Andrew, 63, is charged with two counts of felony lewd conduct with a child under 16 and one felony count of sexual abuse of a child under 16.

The second day of the trial was filled with long pauses by the alleged victim as she tried to recount details of the alleged abuse that occurred in 2007 when she was 14.

Testimony often paused for breaks so the jury could be removed from the room.

During one break, 5th District Judge Jonathan Brody admonished a family member from making facial and hand gestures to the alleged victim while she testified; During another, the attorneys argued how expert testimony could be used.

During opening statements, Andrew's attorney Kent Jensen said they would prove the alleged victim's memory is inaccurate and the details she says occurred do not fit known timelines.

Jensen and Cassia County Deputy Prosecutor Doug Abenroth both indicated they would

Jerome Restructures Wastewater Department

BY JULIE WOOTTON
jwootton@magicvalley.com

JEROME • More than a year after sewage overflow issues at Jerome's wastewater treatment plant, city officials are restructuring the department.

City spokeswoman Zoe Monahan wrote in an email to the Times-News that restructuring was a policy decision made by Mayor John Shine and City Council members.

It coincides with mandates from the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency and will "better service industry and resident users of our wastewater treatment facilities," Monahan said.

Monahan confirmed earlier this month that former wastewater director John Boyd is no longer a city employee.

Boyd — who worked for the city for about 20 years — wrote in an email to the Times-News last week that he

ANIMAL COPS: TWIN FALLS

City takes over animal control within city limits

The Cost Behind the Shift

Shifting animal control duties from Twin Falls County to the city of Twin Falls meant reappropriating money, but that doesn't mean taxpayers are paying more.

In fiscal year 2012, the city of Twin Falls paid $108,000 to Twin Falls County for animal control services. That same money now goes to pay two full-time animal control officers who work for the city.

The city budgeted $376,874 for animal control and shelter costs in fiscal year 2013. This summer, the city also spent $12,500 on a used truck that was fixed up for animal control.

That 2013 appropriation is up from the $340,000 the city spent for animal control and the shelter in fiscal year 2012. That slight increase is to give current employees a raise, add an employee, and pay for capital projects, said Assistant City Manager Mike Williams.

Capt. Tim Miller of the Twin Falls County Sheriff's Office said the county used to employ two full-time animal control officers, but those men are now assigned to different duties. The county still takes care of animal control outside of city limits, Miller said, but nearly three-fourths of animal control calls are for the city.

TWIN FALLS • Officer Steve Nutting loves his new job as an animal control officer, except for one aspect: A small dog named Mario.

Mario, a miniature pinscher, has eluded Nutting and other officers for weeks. On Wednesday, Nutting chased him through a neighborhood, then Harmon Park, but the dog disappeared through a fence.

"That's the fastest dog I ever seen in my life," Nutting said, shaking his head.

Mario aside, Nutting successfully catches delinquent dogs on most calls. Nutting is one of two new animal control officers employed by the Twin Falls Police Department. The city of Twin Falls took over animal control within city limits starting this summer. Since

Beauty and Solitude in the Pioneer Mountains

BY VIRGINIA HUTCHINS

KETCHUM • For the reporting and photography in today's feature on Fall Creek trails, I headed for Surprise Valley with my backpack and camera, hiking through brief hail and a long rain shower.

I intended to camp in a meadow that's about 4 1/2 miles — and a climb of a couple of thousand feet — from the Fall Creek trailhead. But when I trudged into the meadow, I found that the spring-fed creek I'd counted on for the night's water was almost dried up. With water bottles near empty, I had to move on.

My dismay was quickly erased by the increasing beauty of a rain-

Hidden History

This primitive rock hut stands on the bank of the Snake River, downstream from Milner Dam. Chinese miners built this rock hut, probably in the 1870s, as shelter during the 10 years they inhabited the Snake River Canyon. According to the 1870 census, the Chinese made up nearly a third of the population in the Territory of Idaho.

Mining on the Banks of the Snake River

BY MYCHEL MATTHEWS

TWIN FALLS • In the early days, Idaho was a desolate land that emigrants had to pass through to get somewhere else.

Nothing about the barren landscape said "Home Sweet Home."

Nothing, that is, until gold was found.

In 1860, the first significant gold discovery was made in Idaho. It wouldn't be long before miners rushed into the area, prompting the formation of Idaho Territory in 1863.

And with the miners came even more population. Freight-haulers kept the miners connected with suppliers on the outside, and storekeepers and cattlemen kept the miners fed.

The same scenario unfolded over and over across Idaho — even along the banks of the Snake River.

Gold was discovered below Shoshone Falls in 1869, and hundreds of miners moved into the canyon in hopes of finding their fortune. The best placer for mining was said to have been the stretch from just east of Murtaugh to Clark's Ferry, west of Twin Falls. In 1870, 400 men worked the sand bars in the canyon for $4 per day.

Three short-lived towns popped up in the areas with the easiest access to the most gold flour: Shoshone City between Shoshone Falls and the Twin Falls, Springtown near the present-day Hansen Bridge, and Drytown at the mouth of Dry Creek near Murtaugh.

Gold yields diminished quickly in the canyon, and many mining claims were sold or abandoned. Miners began other careers, and business owners moved their operations out of the canyon as other settlements began to take shape.

Chinese miners, who were previously discouraged from moving into the area, were eventually welcomed as mining claims to the newcomers.

Springtown, the longest-lived mining town along the river, would eventually become known as the Mon-Tung Chinese site.

For 10 years, the Chinese mined the Mon-Tung site. They raised vegetables and herbs in terraced gardens and lived in crude rock huts. Several of these rock shelters remain in the canyon today.

According to the 1870 census, 28 percent of the population of Idaho Territory was Chinese — including many displaced railroad workers, and miners who had come to the United States specifically looking for gold.

Shelter

then, Nutting and his colleague, Ed Gudge, have had a lot to learn — and a lot of dogs to chase.

Before this summer, the Twin Falls County Sheriff's Office handled animal control in city limits. That changed in June, and Nutting was reassigned from airport security to dog catching. He and the other animal control officer did ride-alongs with Twin Falls County and Boise animal control officers.

Joshua Palmer, spokesman for the city of Twin Falls, said the city wanted to take over animal control to take out the middleman.

"With the county (doing animal control), we were a little too far removed from it all," Palmer said. Under the old system, the city would receive animal control reports. Now, the city has more control.

"It holds us more accountable," Palmer said.

Nutting prefers this job, as it's more exciting than airport patrol.

And there are plenty of calls to take. Most days, it's one right after another, he said, and he has to consciously set aside time for a lunch break.

Nutting doesn't chase only dogs. In the short time he's been an animal control officer, Nutting has already helped catch a varied menagerie: a rooster, an iguana, rabbits, a baby llama and a goat. Gudge caught a peacock, and Nutting helped save baby squirrels who had fallen out of their nest.

And duties aren't limited to catching animals who flee. He talks to dog owners about excessive barking and tracks down people who leave their dogs in hot cars. (If he can't find them in nearby stores, "I'll get into the vehicle somehow" to save the dog, he said.)

Nutting took time Wednesday morning to examine a yard from which two dogs frequently escape.

To his dismay, the dogs weren't in the yard, even though he thought he had fixed the hole. The homeowners weren't home, either. Nutting found another weak spot in the fence and mended it with a wire, then gave a neighbor a business card and told her to call if she sees the dogs loose.

That's how Nutting prefers to operate: With prevention and education. He issues citations for repeat or brazen offenses, but tries to work with citizens first.

"We're not out here to write tickets left and right," he said. "We're out here to fix problems."

Twin Falls Animal Shelter Director Debbie Blackwood said she enjoys working with both the county and the city.

The animal shelter is currently overcrowded, with about 350 more animals processed through the facility compared to this time last year.

But Blackwood isn't sure it's because the city took over animal control.

"I'm happy with their service. I was happy with the county's service," she said.

And Nutting is happy to provide it.

"You think a dog catcher is a mean ol' guy who hates animals," he said. "But it's just the opposite with me."

Late morning, Nutting received a call about two beagles on 5th Avenue North, heading toward the jail.

Nutting drove to the neighborhood, circling the area and peering into alleys before finding the dogs 15 minutes later. He tossed biscuits to the beagles, who grabbed them, then took off running.

He caught them on 4th Avenue North, then lifted them into the back of his truck, talking sweetly to them as he eased them into the kennel.

After failed attempts to reach the owners by calling the numbers on the dog tags, Nutting transported the pair to the shelter. While there, he commiserated with a shelter worker about the elusive Mario.

Before leaving for his next call, Nutting set a bowl of water inside the kennel for the beagles. They wagged their tails as he approached the cage.

"There you go, fellers," Nutting said. "Hope you get home this afternoon."

with his hands and mouth.

Licensed counselor Jason Jacobia testified that it took a year of weekly counseling sessions with the alleged victim before she disclosed the details of the sexual abuse to him. He said she exhibited symptoms of disassociation where she stared into space, trembled and didn't respond to her name being called.

During cross-examination Jensen pointed out the differences between the counseling sessions and forensic investigation where a counselor would not ask the alleged victim leading questions. He also pointed out that some of the victim's questions to the counselor — like why a perpetrator commits sexual abuse crimes — could have been used by her to make a more formidable allegation against Andrew.

Cassia County Sheriff's Detective Loyal Egbert said when he interviewed Andrew about the incident, he said he knew a female had made a complaint about him through his church but he did not know who it was.

Egbert said Andrew denied the allegations and said he would take a polygraph test, though the prosecutor's office never administered one.

was told his job position wasn't needed due to a reduction in force.

He said he can't comment further on changes to the city's wastewater department.

On Sept. 6, the city announced the hiring of a wastewater superintendent.

Gilbert Sanchez — a Magic Valley native — brings more than 35 years of experience to the city's new job position. His salary has been set at $98,000.

"He is highly regarded in his profession, and with his appointment as Wastewater Superintendent the City will raise its skill, experience and professionalism to a new level," Shine said in a statement.

Before accepting the job in Jerome, Sanchez worked as a project manager at Veolia Water North America in Caldwell.

He will work with city officials on the planned expansion of the wastewater treatment plant.

Leadership Change

In a March 2012 email obtained through a public records request, Shine communicated with City Council members about Boyd's position as wastewater director.

Boyd requested a closed-door council meeting to discuss leadership at the wastewater treatment plant.

Shine wrote to City Council members that he told Boyd he would be replaced as soon as a new supervisor could be hired, according to the email.

In a July email from Finance Director Ross Hyatt to a representative from Keller Associates and a few city administrators, Boyd's name was included in a list of recommended wastewater job positions for the 2013 budget.

Later in the month, Shine responded to concerns about a wastewater pretreatment program model in a July email to City Council members.

He wrote there would only be one manager at the wastewater treatment plant — the superintendent.

Expanding the Plant

Shine told the Times-News in July that Jerome city needs more wastewater capacity to allow for future economic development.

Proposed improvements at the plant are also closely linked to sewage overflow issues that occurred more than a year ago.

In early 2011, the wastewater treatment plant's membrane filtration system was clogged by a foreign substance.

Initially, city officials said calcium discharge by an industrial source led to the problem.

But after further analysis, the city announced this March that wastewater discharges resulted from city operator error.

Since then, the city has been working with the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency to address concerns.

Jerome officials are also working with environmental engineering firm Keller Associates to put together a master plan for the wastewater treatment plant.

To cover the cost of a planned expansion, the original plan was to take a bond request to voters in November.

Last month, though, the City Council voted to hold off. That will allow more time to develop a plan for improvements.

A bond amount still hasn't been set, but $43 million is the maximum under the city's budget for the next fiscal year.

Report: Medicaid Expansion Would Cover 10,000 from Magic Valley

BY KIMBERLEE KRUESI
kkruesi@magicvalley.com

TWIN FALLS • As Idaho leaders grapple with whether to allow more residents to apply for Medicaid, a new report is giving light to who those newly eligible individuals might look like.

Under the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act, states are given the option to expand their Medicaid qualifications. The federal government has offered to pay 100 percent of the expansion's cost for three years, gradually reducing the funding to 90 percent by 2020.

Idaho is currently studying the matter. In July, Gov. C.L. "Butch" Otter appointed a Medicaid expansion working group to examine the state's options.

Meanwhile, the Idaho Department of Health and Welfare plans to release a report today on who would qualify for the state's expanded Medicaid services.

gan in April, before the U.S. Supreme Court upheld the health care reform law in June. Utah-based Leavitt Partners conducted the report for Health and Welfare.

The report, according to a copy obtained by the Times-News, claims that close to 111,500 additional Idahoans would qualify for Medicaid if the state expanded its eligibility. Close to 10,000 of those newly eligible Idahoans would be from the Magic Valley.

The report also shows that newly eligible individuals are more likely to have prevalent mental health issues, have chronic health conditions and have an income below the federal poverty line.

For more information on the report's conclusions, read Friday's Times-News and check online at Magicvalley.com.

New Portal Shows Health and Wellness Resources Available

TIMES-NEWS

TWIN FALLS • Want to know what local health and wellness resources are available in your area? Go online.

Idaho's public health districts are funding an online program that will serve as a resource for finding more information on community health.

The website includes information on health education, county health indicators, and national rankings broken down by both county and public health district boundaries, according to a news release from the South Central Public Health District.

The easy-to-use information is designed to provide community health leaders, lawmakers and stakeholders with the best information to improve the quality of health for the state's residents.

There are close to 170 customized health indicators for each county, according to the news release.

"Since limited resources are a challenge for many local and governmental agencies, having access to this data can help local public health leaders and other policy makers direct their resources to areas that will target specific health issues and create healthier populations in their jurisdictions," said Rene LeBlanc, SCPHD director, said in a news release.

The network website will also provide resource libraries and information on prevention testing, treatment and interactive self-assessment tools.

SCPHD encourages the public to visit the website at <http://idaho.networkofcare.org/>.

use expert testimony regarding sexual child abuse.

The alleged victim, now 20 years old, told the jury that she was often talkative and disruptive in her classes and suffered from family problems at home and poor performance at school. She said at the beginning of her freshman year, Andrew was kind to her and often praised her. When he returned from surgery where she said he had a brain tumor removed, she said he had changed — often humiliating her in class and making her sit near his desk. She said he often made her "feel stupid." But she said she still sought out his counsel on various issues, including those occurring in her family, and wanted his approval.

When she began talking about the specific incident of alleged abuse, she hung her head and there were long pauses as Abenroth tried to get her to speak about the details. She said she and Andrew were putting things away in the closet when he closed the door and removed her shorts. She said she was crying and continued to cry as he touched her sexually with his hands and mouth.

Licensed counselor Jason Jacobia testified that it took a year of weekly counseling sessions with the alleged victim before she disclosed the details of the sexual abuse to him. He said she exhibited symptoms of disassociation where she stared into space, trembled and didn't respond to her name being called.

During cross-examination Jensen pointed out the differences between the counseling sessions and forensic investigation where a counselor would not ask the alleged victim leading questions. He also pointed out that some of the victim's questions to the counselor — like why a perpetrator commits sexual abuse crimes — could have been used by her to make a more formidable allegation against Andrew.

Cassia County Sheriff's Detective Loyal Egbert said when he interviewed Andrew about the incident, he said he knew a female had made a complaint about him through his church but he did not know who it was.

Egbert said Andrew denied the allegations and said he would take a polygraph test, though the prosecutor's office never administered one.

The Surprise Valley trail is often faint, so I paused at each cairn or tree blaze to locate the next one, as the setting sun turned the hanging valley's massive east wall golden, then salmon, then pink.

Near a pond, I made camp in an idyllic spot with a cushion of pine needles for the tent and big rocks for the packs.

When the full moon finally rose over that east wall, it bathed my camp in light and illuminated the trees' white bark. Hours later, ice crystals on the moonlit ground sparkled like a layer of diamonds.

OUR VIEW

Feeling our Infantilism

WASHINGTON • In every year divisible by four, the dominant superstition of American politics — faith in the magic of presidential words and deeds — reaches an apogee that feeds national narcissism: Everything that happens anywhere is about us, is a response to something America did or did not do, and can be controlled by a president doing — even just saying — something.

This self-absorption was evident as Mitt Romney and the Obama administration sparred about violence directed at U.S. facilities in the Middle East and elsewhere. Romney called this the fruit of administration weakness; the administration blamed it on a video. It would require exquisitely precise intellectual calipers to gauge which idea is silliest.

In Egypt, Libya and elsewhere, the crumbling of old regimes and hierarchies has ignited complex sectarian and tribal power struggles, in which some participants find anti-Americanism useful. None of the people involved — some cunning, some deranged — take their cues from utterances by America's president. So it was passing strange for Rich Williamson, former assistant secretary of state and current Romney adviser, to say, regarding the Egypt and Libya attacks, "There's a pretty compelling story that if you had a President Romney, you'd be in a different situation."

Childlike credulity about presidents' abilities to subdue turbulent portions of the world by projecting "strength," or to "manage" the domestic economy, encourages political infantilism. This manifests itself in people seeking in public figures attributes pertinent only to private life.

A recent Washington Post/ABC News poll asked respondents to say which presidential candidate "would you prefer to have take care of you if you were sick" and which "would you rather invite to dinner at your home." What is depressing about these questions is not that they miss the point of presidential elections nowadays but that they seem to touch the electorate's erogenous zones.

"Tell me your troubles," urged President Franklin Roosevelt in a broadcast fireside chat. But the idea of the president as Consoler in Chief and master of the bedside manner was unique to FDR until the 1990s. Then a nation with few pains had a president who promised to feel them.

Imagine, if you can, wanting Dwight Eisenhower at your bedside. Or imagine him, who had seen serious pain, pretending to feel others' Did anyone in 1952 ask voters whether they would prefer to have Eisenhower or Adlai Stevenson come to dinner? The nation liked Ike but hired him not for the pleasure of his company but to have him see that the laws were faithfully executed and to preserve the peace, which he did.

An attractive aspect of Romney as a candidate is how endearingly unsuited he is to politics in an era when "friend" has become a verb. Would that he could just say this:

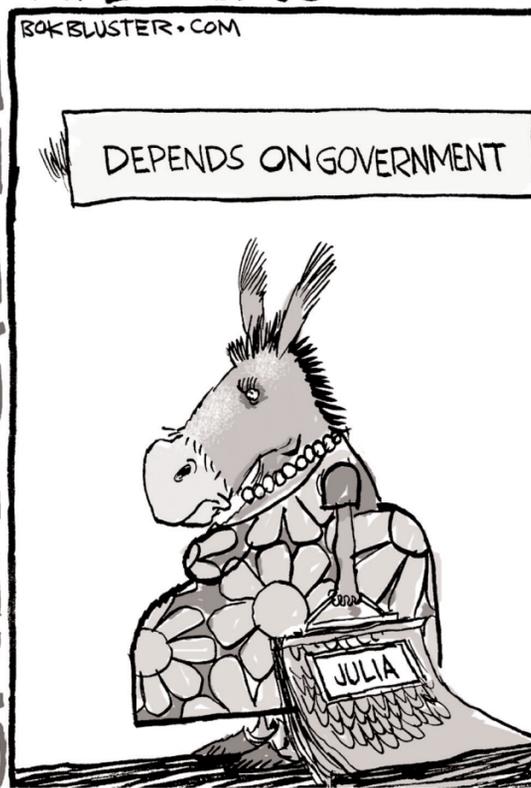

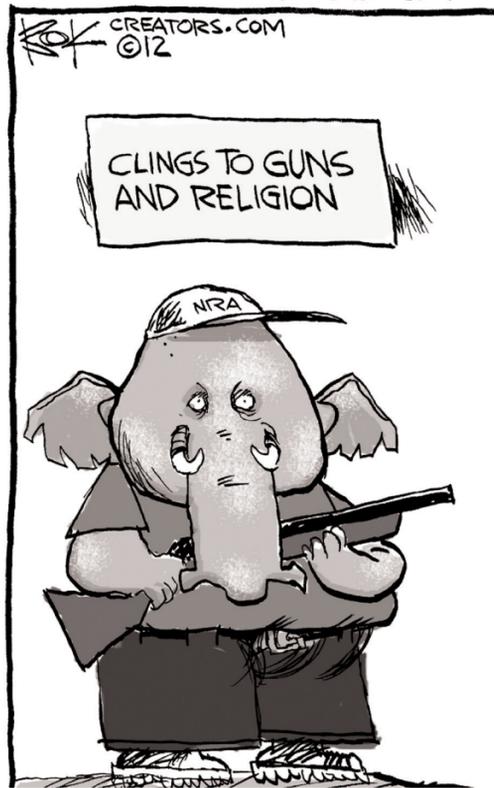

"I am not running to be your friend, because I hope you pick your friends from among people you actually know and for reasons unrelated to politics. And I will not insult your intelligence by claiming to feel your pain, which really is yours. Neither will I tell you that as president I would pacify distant mobs. I am running just to make government somewhat less destructive, to partially ameliorate the country's largest afflictions, and to make the world a bit less dangerous.

"My candidacy comes down to an eight-word question, and it is not 'Will you call me about your tummy ache?' Rather, it is: 'Is this really the best we can do?' It is difficult to prevent Americans from briskly creating wealth, but bad choices by both parties have done so. My opponent is making many promises, although a simple apology would suffice. My promise is that although I will not really create millions of jobs, I will, if Congress cooperates, remove some of the obstacles to your doing so.

"If you want a president who is the center of a government-centered society, pick the other fellow. If you endorse a dependency agenda — more and more people dependent in more and more ways on a government fewer and fewer are paying for — vote for the other party. If you do not share my opponent's horror about being mostly on your own in the pursuit of happiness that you define on your own, give me a try. If it doesn't work out, you can fire me in four years."

Someday, someone is going to seek the presidency by demystifying it. Many voters will be astonished by, and even be grateful for, the novelty of being addressed as adults.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Claims in Ad an Insult to Hard-working Idahoans

Response to Frank Vandersloot's recent full-page ad on Sept. 9 with headline, "Unions Declare War on Idaho Kids!":

This is the typical classic GOP agenda rhetoric of lies, fear and hate in the most extreme. To allege union bosses wage a war on children is a despicable statement and further proves your character as per the full-page ads you had printed last year in Idaho papers. To say that we declare war on our children is a disgrace and insult to hard-working Idahoans and Americans.

We as parents, tax-paying, productive members of society care for education in the best interest of the children, unlike you and the rest of the GOP, most notably Mitt Romney, who only cares about one thing — money and those you can control because of it. An example would be moving the Fourth of July celebration from Sunday to Monday in Idaho Falls for your personal agenda and to achieve your ultimate goal of where America is a country with the filthy rich and the dirt poor.

The facts are:
No. 1: The term "union bosses" implies one is a gangster and/or dictator when, in fact, business managers, presidents and reps are elected by the membership. Union members enjoy the given right of having a voice in the terms and conditions of employment with wages, benefits and who represents them as per the National Labor Relations Act.

No. 2: You say unions spent tens of thousands of dollars to fight the Luna laws when, in fact, every person that participated in the petition signings, union and non-union in every branch of the work force volunteered their time and money to stop Mr. Luna's so-called reform. Despite your propaganda ads, we were successful in getting the referendums on the ballot and will be successful in repealing them in November.

No. 3: To date since the GOP attack on teachers, hundreds have left the state because of Luna and Otter and your egotistical financial dominating tactics.

Mr. Vandersloot, because of your financial status, you may control certain entities within the city of Idaho Falls and the surrounding areas and your employees with your money, but you do not control the whole Idaho work force.

Many Sources Available to Explain Why Obama Hates America

Virginia Mae Pratt, 89, who died recently, was a wonderful example of Christ-like living. She truly loved God, family, many friends and country. Virginia was still working hard to preserve our freedom for her posterity by writing to elected officials and letters to the editor including getting the United States out of the communist-controlled United Nations and restoring our God-inspired Constitution. It was truly a blessing to have Virginia as a special friend to see her beautiful spirit following Christ's teachings.

Please attend William Jasper speaking on "Agenda 21 — Regulation Overload," Thursday, Sept. 27, at 7 p.m. at the Red Lion Hotel Canyon Springs in Twin Falls. He attended both United Nations Agenda 21 (redistribute our wealth and control us) conferences in Rio de Janeiro in 1992 and 2012. Learn how Agenda 21 is destroying our freedom and how to stop it!

The 664-page book, "Obama and the Enemies Within," by Trevor Loudon is jam packed with facts exposing Obama's countless connections with radical revolutionaries and communists. Obama's mentor, communist Frank Marshall Davis, represents the tip of the iceberg. One of Davis' Communist Party comrades was Vernon Jarrett. They were both elected officers of CPUSA in Chicago. Jarrett is the father-in-law of Valerie Jarrett, who is now a senior advisor to President Obama.

Loudon's websites, www.KeyWiki.org and www.Trevorloudon.com, contain extensive factual documentation to supplement his book.

Another book, "No Higher Power: Obama's War on Religious Freedom," by Phyllis Schafly exposes Obama's anti-Christian, pro-Muslim policies which have led to the anti-American violence in the Middle East. More than once, Obama has stated that his religion is Islam.

See the movie, "Obama 2016," to learn why Obama hates America and is deliberately destroying our economy as he implements the socialist/Marxist agenda.

Woman Accused of Stealing $15,000 from Employer

BY ALISON GENE SMITH
alismsmith@magicvalley.com

TWIN FALLS • A Twin Falls woman is accused of stealing nearly $15,000 from her employer over four years.

Jenny Lyn Davis, 32, was charged with grand theft and arraigned in Twin Falls County 5th Magistrate Court on Sept. 12.

On March 6 police spoke to a manager of KJ's Superstore at 1612 Blue Lakes Blvd. N. The manager reported that Davis, a former employee, stole about $14,922.64 while she was employed there from Feb. 2008 to Feb. 2012, a police report states.

According to the report, the manager said he had worked there since December 2011 and noticed the store was having an inventory shortage that was getting worse over the months. The manager said most of the missing items were tobacco products and district managers began checking every transaction in the store, the report states.

According to the report the managers discovered Davis was repeatedly using the "error correct" button to clear products from the register.

When she used the error correct function, the report states, Davis could prevent the sale of items from being recorded, making it look like the items were never sold. Davis then allegedly pocketed the excess money in her till.

In Feb. 2012, the managers confronted Davis about the stolen money. According to the report, Davis said she didn't know why she stole the money and said she never meant to hurt anyone. The managers gave her the option to repay the money instead of calling the police, the report states. According to the report, Davis promised she would pay the money back with help from her grandparents and brought in the title to her 1996 Dodge pickup that the managers could hold until she paid the money back. She also allegedly said she would turn over her entire tax return to the store, but failed to, the report states.

Davis was arrested on Sept. 11 and is scheduled for a preliminary hearing on Friday.

Great Falls Woman Charged with Shaking Baby

GREAT FALLS, Mont. (AP) • A 21-year-old Great Falls woman faces charges for allegedly shaking her infant daughter, causing life-threatening brain injuries.

The Great Falls Tribune reports 21-year-old Jasmine Nichole Eskew was arrested on suspicion of aggravated assault and criminal endangerment after police say she acknowledged shaking her 6-month-old daughter Tuesday.

Police were called to the Benefis East emergency room after the baby was brought in with bleeding in her brain. The child was flown to Sacred Heart Hospital in Spokane, Wash., for treatment.

Court records say Eskew told police the baby was crying in her crib and she picked her up and shook her.

Medical personnel at Sacred Heart told detectives late Tuesday that the infant's injuries were life-threatening and likely disabling.

Eskew was scheduled to make an initial court appearance Wednesday afternoon.

Wildfires Expose Protected Relics

BY KIMBERLEE KRUESI
kkruesi@magicvalley.com

BURLEY • This year's fire season not only cleared out thousands of acres of vegetation, but has also exposed culturally and historically significant artifacts across south-central Idaho.

Public lands officials are now urging people not to disturb the relics.

"The chances are pretty high that people are going to be running across something," said Suzanne Henrikson, archeologist with the U.S. Bureau of Land Management's Burley field office. "Especially in burn areas, these relics have no vegetation to cover them."

The BLM is charged with protecting these relics and is prohibited by federal law from pinpointing the exact location of those they do find. However, Henrikson said that running across a historically valuable artifact is possible across the entire 400,000-acre BLM Twin Falls District.

"These are areas where Native Americans lived for thousands of years before we ever showed up," Henrikson said. "These artifacts vary from arrowheads to just everyday items that Native Americans might have used back then."

If the fire has exposed a new ancient artifact, the BLM must secure it before fire rehabilitation can begin. This includes documenting the relic location and pointing out where drill seeding shouldn't occur.

There is some hesitancy from the BLM on alerting the public that there are historically significant relics now visible thanks to the fire, Henrikson said.

The agency wants to inform the public on what to do if they find something — but officials don't want to increase the chance of vandalism, she said.

"These relics are a finite resource," she said. "Once they're picked up and taken back, that information is lost forever"

Man Injured by Grizzly Bear in Madison Range

BILLINGS, Mont. (AP) • State wildlife officials say a grizzly bear bit a Pennsylvania man on the hands and arms as he was archery hunting with his wife in the Madison Range southeast of Ennis.

Montana Fish, Wildlife and Parks spokeswoman Andrea Jones said Wednesday the unidentified man was treated at a hospital and released after last week's encounter.

He was using an elk call when the grizzly emerged from nearby brush, jumped on the man, bit him and ran off.

Jones says the grizzly was not killed because it was acting defensively.

Separately, officials say they captured a 5-year-old female grizzly and her cub southeast of Red Lodge after the animals killed six cows and calves this summer.

The adult bear was killed and the cub held for placement in a zoo.

The New Burley Airport Users Association Calls for New Airport

BY LAURIE WELCH
lwelch@magicvalley.com

BURLEY • Dax Duffin, president of the newly formed Burley Airport Users Association, met with the Burley City Council Tuesday to inform the council on the mission of the group.

"What we'd like to see from the city of Burley is transparency, honesty and integrity," Duffin said.

Duffin said some of the members of the group would like to see a new airport and others would like to keep the current one functional. But, he said, they are all concerned about maintaining an airport in Burley.

Burley Mayor Terry Greenman said the city welcomes the association's input on the site selection of a new airport. The mayor also said it's interesting how the public doesn't show up until they think an airport or other facility is going to be located in their backyards.

"Then they all show up," he said.

Greenman defended the city's process and said officials have tried to include everyone in it.

In other business, the council unanimously approved the one-year law enforcement services contract with the county for $1.4 million.

The council unanimously approved hiring Peter Quist to represent the city during meetings with the fire department's labor union. The city has reached an impasse in negotiations on the new contract.

The council declared a street sweeper as surplus and set a minimum price at $3,500.

University of Idaho Studies Staff Salaries

BOISE (AP) • The University of Idaho is launching a review into staff salaries with the goal of adopting more equitable and understandable compensation policies by next July, according to a memo sent to employees earlier this week.

The study is being launched after a faculty group recently complained about hefty raises awarded to some administrators and staff, but university spokeswoman Karen Hunt said Wednesday the review into staff salaries is not related to concerns from the Idaho Federation of Teachers.

"The study is completely independent of the complaints," Hunt said.

In the union's most recent newsletter, president Nick Gier complained that while university employees are receiving a 2 percent raise following several years of stagnant salaries, some administrators and staff are receiving that pay

"It is really hard to keep talented people that are beneficial to the university if we can't compensate them accordingly"

University Spokeswoman Karen Hunt

bump and then some.

Gier, a retired philosophy professor, cited university budget documents, saying three deans received additional 10.2 percent, 8.5 percent and 3 percent raises, while the provost's administrative assistant got a 9.4 percent pay increase, and school counsel received a 3 percent pay boost.

The university's human rights officer received a 12 percent raise while the director of development received a 6.6 percent increase this year, said Gier, who argued that the "under the table" pay raises should have been discussed with faculty.

"We're not complaining about these people getting raises, but let's discuss it openly," Gier told The Associated Press.

The university didn't dispute Gier's numbers.

The salary study will look only at staff salaries, not faculty compensation, and was announced Monday in a memo from the school's executive director for human resources, Greg Walters. The university is bringing on a human resources consulting firm that specializes in higher education issues to assist with the project, Walters said.

Sibson Consulting's work with the university will begin later this week.

"We anticipate an implementation of the new classification and compensation systems on July 1, 2013," Walters said in the memo.

University of Idaho President Duane Nellis has previously raised concerns about losing top faculty and staff because of salaries.

Nellis told lawmakers in January that most employees on the Moscow campus haven't had a raise in four years and boosting compensation was his top priority.

"It is really hard to keep talented people that are beneficial to the university if we can't compensate them accordingly," Hunt said.

The Idaho Legislature approved a 2 percent, across-the-board raise for state workers meeting performance standards, giving universities about 60 percent of the money necessary to fund the salary increases. The University of Idaho has said it will use money from a tuition increase this year to help pay for the rest of the 2 percent pay raise.

Justice Dept. Faulted for Gun Trafficking

WASHINGTON (AP) • The Justice Department's internal watchdog on Wednesday faulted the agency for misguided strategies, errors in judgment and management failures during a bungled gun-trafficking probe in Arizona that disregarded public safety and resulted in hundreds of weapons turning up at crime scenes in the U.S. and Mexico.

A former head of the department's Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives and a deputy assistant attorney general in Justice's criminal division the department upon the report's release — the first by retirement, the second by resignation.

In the 471-page report, Inspector General Michael Horowitz referred more than a dozen people for possible department disciplinary action for their roles in Operation Fast and Furious and a separate, earlier probe known as Wide Receiver, undertaken during the George W. Bush administration.

The report did not criticize Attorney General Eric Holder, but said lower-level officials should have briefed him about the investigation much earlier.

The report found no evidence that Holder was informed about the Fast and Furious operation before Jan. 31, 2011, or that the attorney general was told about the much-disputed gun-walking tactic employed by the ATF.

perimental tactic, barred under long-standing department policy. ATF agents in Arizona allowed suspected "straw purchasers," in these cases believed to be working for Mexican drug gangs, to leave Phoenix-area gun stores with weapons in order to track them and bring charges against gun-smuggling kingpins who long had eluded prosecution, but they lost track of most of the guns. The experimental operations were a response to widespread criticisms of the agency's anti-smuggling efforts. Because of thin ATF staffing and weak penalties, the traditional strategy of arresting suspected straw buyers as soon as possible had failed to stop the flow of tens of thousands of guns to Mexico — more than 68,000 in the past five years.

The inspector general found fault with the work of the senior ATF leadership, the ATF staff and U.S. attorney's office in Phoenix and senior officials of Justice's criminal division in Washington. He also said that poor internal information-gathering and drafting at Justice and ATF caused the department to initially misinform Congress about Fast and Furious, beginning with a Feb. 4, 2011, letter.

"The inspector general's report confirms findings by Congress' investigation of a near total disregard for public safety in Operation Fast and Furious," said Rep. Darrell Issa, R-Calif., chairman of the House Oversight and Government Reform Committee.

Tax Penalty Could Hit 6 Million Uninsured People

WASHINGTON (AP) • Nearly 6 million Americans — most of them in the middle class — will face a tax penalty for not carrying medical coverage once President Barack Obama's health care overhaul law is fully in place, congressional budget analysts said Wednesday.

The new estimate amounts to an inconvenient fact for the administration, a reminder of what critics see as broken promises.

The numbers from the nonpartisan Congressional Budget Office are significantly higher than a previous projection by the same office in 2010, shortly after the law passed.

The earlier estimate found 4 million people would be affected in 2016, when the penalty is fully in effect. The difference — 2 million people — represents a 50 percent increase.

That's still only a sliver of the population, given that more than 150 million people currently are covered by employer plans. Nonetheless, in his

New French Cartoons Inflammе Prophet Film Tensions

PARIS (AP) • France stepped up security Wednesday at its embassies across the Muslim world after a French satirical weekly revived a formula that it has already used to capture attention: Publishing crude, lewd caricatures of Islam's Prophet Muhammad.

Wednesday's issue of the provocative satirical weekly Charlie Hebdo, whose offices were firebombed last year, raised concerns that France could face violent protests like the ones targeting the United States over an amateur video produced in California that have left at least 30 people dead.

The drawings, some of which depicted Muhammad naked and in demeaning or pornographic poses, were met with a swift rebuke by the French government, which warned the magazine could be inflaming tensions, even as it reiterated France's free speech protections.

The principle of freedom of expression "must not be infringed," Foreign Minister Laurent Fabius said, speaking on France Inter radio.

But he added: "Is it pertinent, intelligent, in this context to pour oil on the fire?"

The answer is no!"

Anger over the film "Innocence of Muslims" has fueled violent protests from Asia to Africa. In the Lebanese port city of Tyre, tens of thousands of people marched in the streets Wednesday, chanting "Oh, America, you are God's enemy!"

Worried France might be targeted, the government ordered its embassies, cultural centers, schools and other official sites to close on Friday — the Muslim holy day — in 20 countries. It also immediately shut down its embassy and the French school in Tunisia, the site of deadly protests at the U.S. Embassy last week.

The French Foreign Ministry issued a travel warning urging French citizens in the Muslim world to exercise "the greatest vigilance," avoiding public gatherings and "sensitive buildings."

The controversy could prove tricky for France, which has struggled to integrate its Muslim population, Western Europe's largest. Many Muslims believe the Prophet Muhammad should not be depicted at all because it might encourage idolatry.

Arizona Immigration Law Spurs Education Campaign

PHOENIX (AP) • A day after the most contentious provision of Arizona's immigration law took effect, rallies were planned around Phoenix to protest the law that civil rights activists contend will lead to systematic racial profiling.

Leticia Ramirez told immigrants who are in the United States illegally, like herself, that they should offer only their name and date of birth — and carry no documents that show where they were born, if pulled over by police.

"We want to teach the community how to defend themselves, how to answer to police, how to be prepared, and to have confidence that they're going to have help," said Ramirez.

U.S. District Judge Susan Bolton ruled Tuesday that police can immediately start enforcing the law's so-called "show me your papers" provision. It requires officers, while enforcing other laws, to question the immigration status of those suspected of being in the country illegally.

The U.S. Supreme Court upheld the provision in June on the grounds that it doesn't conflict with federal law. Opponents argued that it would lead to systematic racial profiling.

Bolton said the law's opponents were merely speculating on racial profiling claims.

The 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals is considering a request to halt the questioning requirement.

In the meantime, a hot line by the civil rights advocates has been fielding calls from people wanting to know their rights if questioned about their immigration status.

The View from Mars

On Mars, a partial eclipse of the sun isn't quite as rare as on Earth. So NASA's Mars Curiosity rover is snapping hundreds of pictures of the spectacle for the folks back home to ooh and aah over. Two moons zip around the red planet and they're closer and faster than our lumbering moon, so eclipses are more common.

Calif. Man Arrested after Internet Comments about Killing Children

LOS ANGELES (AP) • Rants, racist remarks and menacing words permeate the Internet these days, so why did police decide to arrest a Yale dropout for investigation of making online death threats against children and hold him on a bail amount usually reserved for suspected killers?

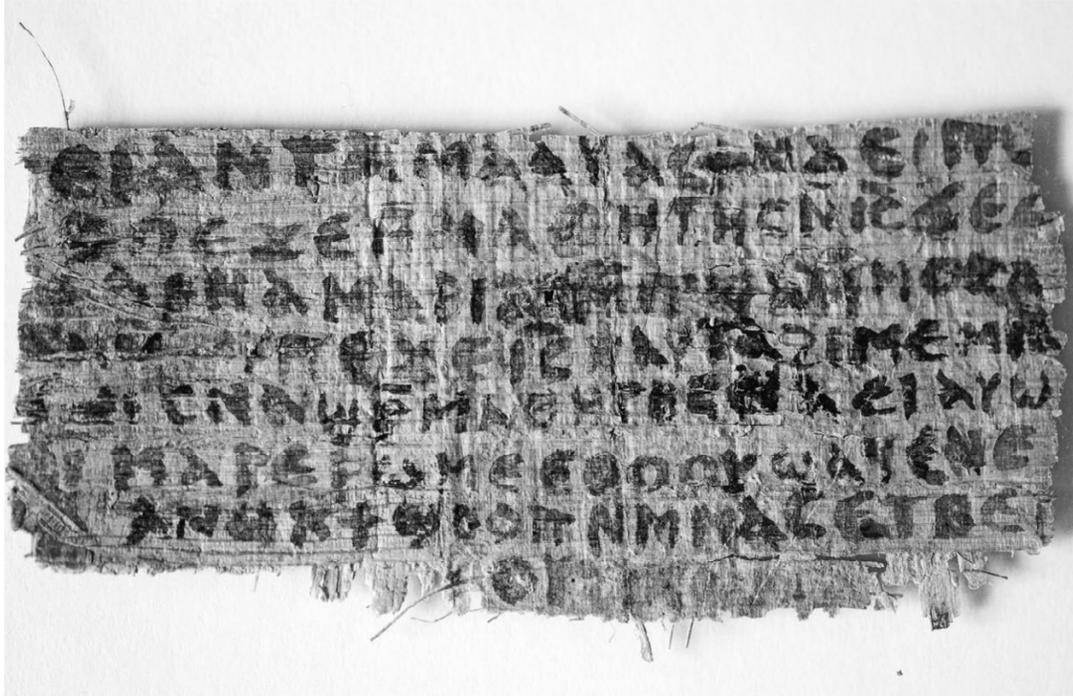

Authorities said they considered several factors in the case against 21-year-old Eric Yee, who was arrested this week after commenting about a story on ESPN's website about the cost of new Nike sneakers named after LeBron James.

Authorities claimed Yee said he wouldn't mind killing children, and that there were unregistered weapons in the Santa Clarita, Calif., house he shares with his parents that overlooks two schools.

Yee was charged Wednesday with a single count of possessing an illegal firearm and was expected to be arraigned later in the day, district attorney spokeswoman Jane Robison said.

His father, Roger Manfoo Yee, 62, was charged with the same crime, although Robison said he had not been arrested and was not expected in court.

Prosecutors planned to ask that Eric Yee's bail remain at $1 million.

This photo released by Harvard University shows a fourth century fragment of papyrus that divinity professor Karen L. King says is the only existing ancient text that quotes Jesus explicitly referring to having a wife.

Doubts over 'Jesus' Wife' Papyrus

ROME (AP) • Is a scrap of papyrus suggesting that Jesus had a wife authentic?

Scholars on Wednesday questioned the much-publicized discovery by a Harvard scholar that a 4th century fragment of papyrus provided the first evidence that some early Christians believed Jesus was married.

And experts in the illicit antiquities trade also wondered about the motive of the fragment's anonymous owner, noting that the document's value has likely increased amid the publicity of the still-unproven find.

Karen King, a professor of early Christianity at Harvard Divinity School, announced the finding Tuesday at an international congress on Coptic studies in Rome. The text, written in Coptic and probably translated from a 2nd century Greek text, contains a dialogue in which Jesus refers to "my wife," whom he identifies as Mary.

King's paper, and the front-page attention it received in some U.S. newspapers that got advance word about it, was a hot topic of conversation Wednesday at the conference.

Christian tradition has long held that Jesus was unmarried, although there is no reliable historical evidence to support that, King said. Any evidence pointing to whether Jesus was married or had a female disciple could have ripple effects in current debates over the role of women in the church.

Stephen Emmel, a professor of Coptology at the University of Muenster who was on the international advisory panel that reviewed the 2006 discovery of the Gospel of Judas, said the text accurately quotes Jesus as saying "my wife." But he questioned whether the document was authentic.

"There's something about this fragment in its appearance and also in the grammar of the Coptic that strikes me as being not completely convincing somehow," he said in an interview on the sidelines of the conference.

Another participant at the congress, Alin Suciu, a papyrologist at the University of Hamburg, was more blunt.

"I would say it's a forgery. The script doesn't look authentic" when compared to other samples of Coptic papyrus script dated to the 4th century, he said.

King acknowledged Wednesday that questions remain about the fragment, and she welcomed the feedback from her colleagues. She said she planned to subject the document to ink tests to determine if the chemical components match those used in antiquity.

"We still have some work to do, testing the ink and so on and so forth, but what is exciting about this fragment is that it's the first case we have of Christians claiming that Jesus had a wife," she said.

She stressed that the text, assuming it's authentic, doesn't provide any historical evidence that Jesus was actually married, only that some two centuries after he died, some early Christians believed he had a wife.

Myanmar's Suu Kyi Gets Congress' Highest Honor

WASHINGTON (AP) • Lawmakers united by their respect of Myanmar democracy leader Aung San Suu Kyi on Wednesday presented her with Congress' highest civilian honor in a ceremony in the Capitol Rotunda, ahead of a meeting with President Barack Obama.

Suu Kyi described it as "one of the most moving days of my life."

She was awarded the Congressional Gold Medal in 2008 while under a 15-year house arrest for her peaceful struggle against military rule.

Her long-awaited visit to America finally provided an opportunity for her to receive the honor in person in Congress' most majestic setting, beneath the dome of the Capitol and ringed by marble statues of former presidents.

The 67-year-old Nobel laureate said it was worth the years of waiting, being honored "in a house undivided, a house joined together to welcome a stranger from a distant land."

Previous recipients of the medal include George Washington, Tibetan Buddhist leader the Dalai Lama and Pope John Paul II.

She then met privately at the White House with Obama, another winner of the Nobel Peace Prize. They appeared relaxed and were smiling as they talked in the Oval Office. Neither made formal comments to the photographers gathered to briefly witness the meeting.

Concern Follows End of Teacher Strike

CHICAGO (AP) • Mayor Rahm Emanuel secured an extension of Chicago's school day and empowered principals to hire the teachers they want. Teachers were able to soften a new evaluation process and win some job protections.

As students returned to the classroom Wednesday following a seven-day teachers strike, both sides found reasons to celebrate victory. But for all the rhetoric, the wider effects of the walkout were difficult to gauge, and experts said the walkout might not resonate far beyond Chicago, a union-built city where organized labor still wields considerable power.

"I think a lot of what went on to a certain extent is peculiar to Chicago," said Martin Malin, director of the Institute for Law and the Workplace at the Kent College of Law in Chicago.

A report that characterized the relationship between the teachers union and Emanuel as "toxic" was on point, Malin said. Now that a deal has been reached, the challenge for both parties "is to seize that and work on really transforming the relationship."

Everyone involved in the dispute emerged with an achievement to trumpet: Teachers said the strike sparked a national conversation about school reform. Union activists said it provided inspiration for employee unions that have lost ground nationally. And Emanuel declared it a boon for students trapped in failing schools.

American Federation of Teachers President Randi Weingarten said the strike showed that teachers want a voice in improving schools rather than shouldering the blame for those that are failing.

IS POT THE NEXT TAX WINDFALL?

DENVER (AP) • A catchy pro-marijuana jingle for Colorado voters considering legalizing the drug goes like this: "Jobs for our people. Money for schools. Who could ask for more?"

It's a bit more complicated than that in the three states — Colorado, Oregon and Washington — that could become the first to legalize marijuana this fall.

The debate over how much tax money recreational marijuana laws could produce is playing an outsize role in the campaigns for and against legalization — and both sides concede they're not really sure what would happen.

Pro-pot campaigners say it could prove a windfall for cash-strapped states with new taxes on pot and reduced criminal justice costs.

State government skeptics warn legalization would lead to costly legal battles and expensive new bureaucracies to regulate marijuana.

In all three states asking voters to decide whether residents can smoke pot, the proponents promise big rewards, though estimates of tax revenue vary widely:

- Colorado's campaign touts money for school construction. Ads promote the measure with the tag line, "Strict Regulation. Fund Education." State analysts project somewhere between $5 million and $22 million a year. An economist whose study was funded by a pro-pot group projects a $60 million boost by 2017.

- Washington's campaign promises to devote more than half of marijuana taxes to substance-abuse prevention, research, education and health care. Washington state analysts have produced the most generous estimate of how much tax revenue legal pot could produce, at nearly $2 billion over five years.

- Oregon's measure, known as the Cannabis Tax Act, would devote 90 percent of recreational marijuana proceeds to the state's general fund. Oregon's fiscal analysts haven't even guessed at the total revenue, citing the many uncertainties inherent in a new marijuana market. They have projected prison savings between $1.4 million and $2.4 million a year if marijuana use was legal without a doctor's recommendation.

"We all know there's a market for marijuana, but right now the profits are all going to drug cartels or underground," said Brian Vicente, a lawyer working for Colorado's Campaign To Regulate Marijuana Like Alcohol.

first campaign for the White House, Obama pledged not to raise taxes on individuals making less than $200,000 a year and couples making less than $250,000.

And the budget office analysis found that nearly 80 percent of those who'll face the penalty would be making up to or less than five times the federal poverty level. Currently that would work out to $55,850 or less for an individual and $115,250 or less for a family of four.

Average penalty: about $1,200 in 2016.

"The bad news and broken promises from Obamacare just keep piling up," said Rep. Dave Camp, R-Mich., chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, who wants to repeal the law.

Starting in 2014, virtually every legal resident of the U.S. will be required to carry health insurance or face a tax penalty, with exemptions for financial hardship, religious objections and certain other circumstances. Most people will not have to worry about the requirement since they already have coverage through employers, government programs like Medicare or by buying their own policies.

A spokeswoman for the Obama administration said

98 percent of Americans will not be affected by the tax penalty — and suggested that those who will be should face up to their civic responsibilities.

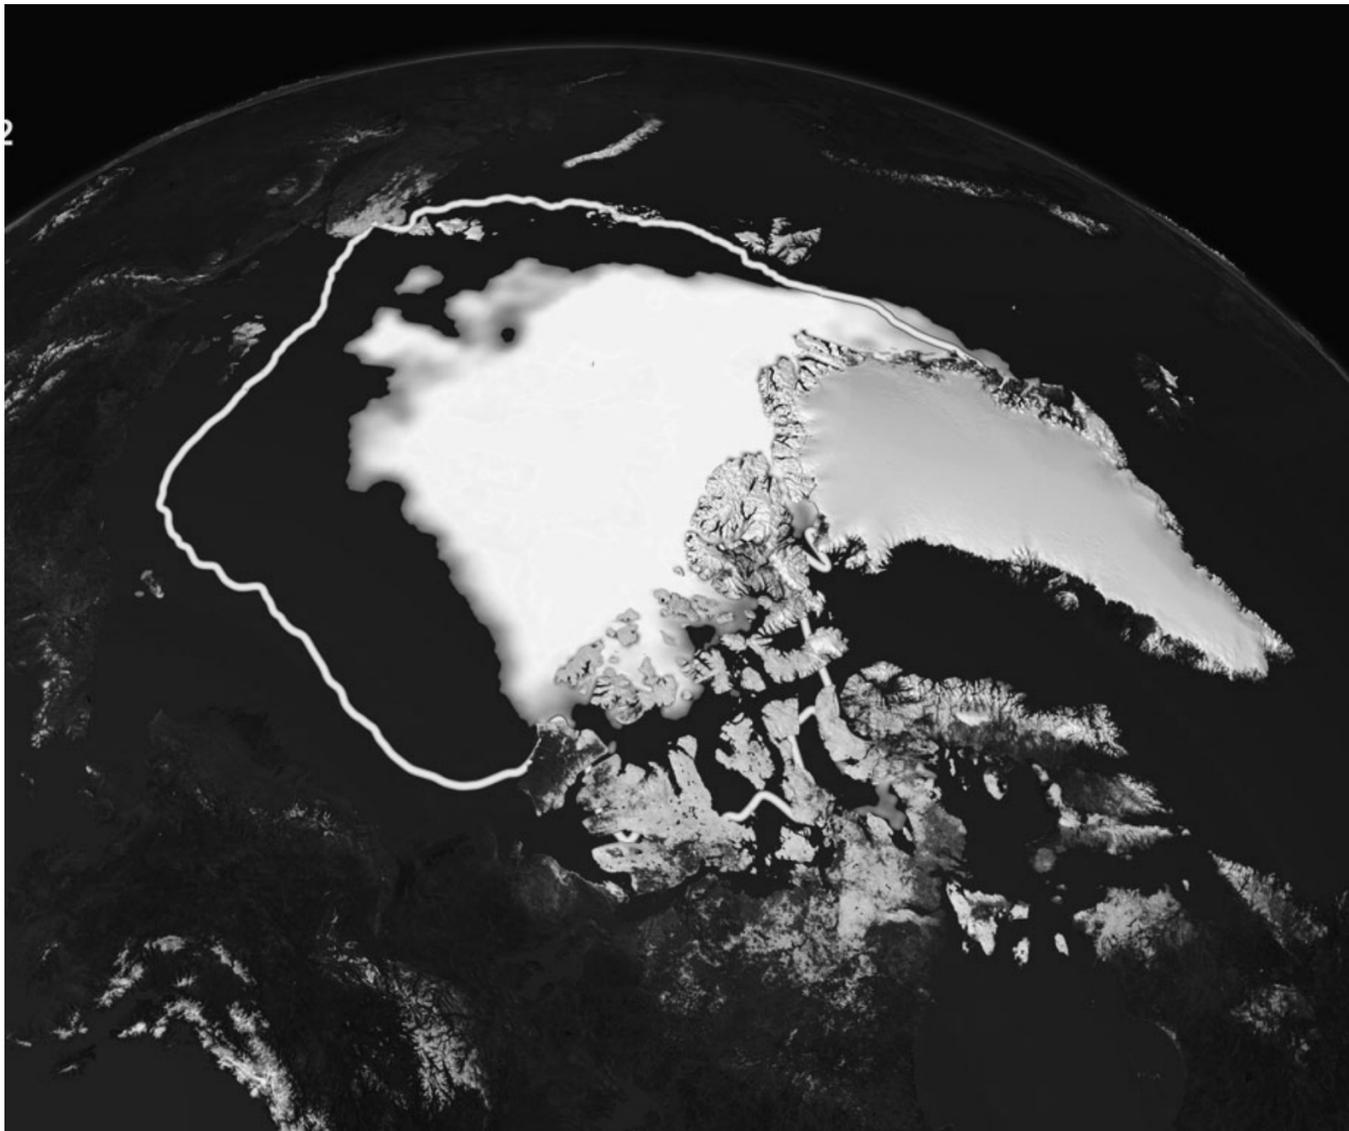

"This [analysis] doesn't change the basic fact that the individual responsibility policy will only affect people who can afford health care but choose not to buy it," said Erin Shields Britt of the Health and Human Services Department. "We're no longer going to subsidize the care of those who can afford to buy insurance but make a choice not to buy it."

The budget office said most of the increase in its estimate is due to changes in underlying projections about the economy, incorporating the effects of new federal legislation, as well as higher unemployment and lower wages.

The Supreme Court upheld Obama's law as constitutional in a 5-4 decision this summer, finding that the insurance mandate and the tax penalty enforcing it fall within the power of Congress to impose taxes. The penalty will be collected by the IRS, just like taxes.

The budget office said the penalty will raise $6.9 billion in 2016.

The new law will also provide government aid to help middle-class and low-income households afford coverage, the financial carrot that balances out the penalty.

FDA Urged to Set Arsenic Standards in Rice

WASHINGTON (AP) • The Food and Drug Administration may consider new standards for the levels of arsenic in rice as consumer groups are calling for federal guidance on how much of the carcinogen can be present in food.

So far, FDA officials say they have found no evidence that suggests rice is unsafe to eat. The agency has studied the issue for decades but is in the middle of conducting a new study of 1,200 samples of grocery-store rice products — short and long-grain rice, adult and baby cereals, drinks and even rice cakes — to measure arsenic levels.

Rice is thought to have arsenic in higher levels than most other foods because it is grown in water on the ground, optimal conditions for the contaminant to be absorbed in the rice. There are no federal standards for how much arsenic is allowed in food.

Arsenic is naturally present in water, air, food and soil in two forms, organic and inorganic. According to the FDA, organic arsenic passes through the body quickly and is essentially harmless. Inorganic arsenic — the type found in some pesticides and insecticides — can be toxic and may pose a cancer risk if consumed at high levels or over a long period.

How much arsenic rice eaters are consuming, and whether those levels are dangerous, still remains to be seen.

Arctic Ice Shrinks to All-time Low

WASHINGTON (AP) • In a critical climate indicator showing an ever warming world, the amount of ice in the Arctic Ocean shrank to an all-time low this year, obliterating old records.

The ice cap at the North Pole measured 1.32 million square miles on Sunday. That's 18 percent smaller than the previous record of 1.61 million square miles set in 2007, according to the National Snow and Ice Data Center in Boulder, Colo. Records go back to 1979 based on satellite tracking.

"On top of that, we're smashing a record that smashed a record," said data center scientist Walt Meier. Sea ice shrank in 2007 to levels 22 percent below the previous record of 2005.

Ice in the Arctic melts in summer and grows in winter, and it started growing again on Monday. In the 1980s, Meier said, summer sea ice would cover an area slightly smaller than the Lower 48 states. Now it is about half that.

Global warming has melted more sea ice and made it thinner over the last couple decades with it getting much more extreme this year, surprisingly so, said snow and ice data center director Mark Serreze.

"Recently the loss of summer ice has accelerated and the six lowest September ice extents have all been in the past six years," Serreze said. "I think that's quite remarkable."

Serreze said except for one strong storm that contributed to the ice loss, this summer melt was more from the steady effects of day-to-day global warming. But he and others say the polar regions are where the globe first sees the signs of climate change.

Russia Accuses USAID of Swaying Elections

MOSCOW (AP) • Russia explained its decision to end the U.S. Agency for International Development's two decades of work in Russia by saying Wednesday that the agency was using its money to influence elections — a claim the U.S. denied.

The U.S. State Department announced Tuesday that Russia has demanded USAID leave the country, a culmination of years of resentment over what Moscow sees as American interference aimed at undermining President Vladimir Putin's hold on power.

"We are talking about attempts through the issuing of grants to affect the course of political processes, including elections on various levels, and institutions of civil society," Foreign Ministry spokesman Alexander Lukashevich said.

Nearly 60 percent of the aid agency's $50 million annual budget this year has been allocated for the promotion of democracy and civil society in Russia. Some of this money has gone to support Russia's only independent election monitoring group, Golos, which fielded thousands of observers in last winter's elections and compiled reports of widespread vote fraud in support of Putin's party.

Putin had accused Western governments of trying to influence the December parliamentary vote through their grant recipients, and a state-owned television channel directly denounced Golos, showing suitcases full of dollars that the group supposedly had received. After those elections set off an unprecedented wave of protests, Putin accused the demonstrators of being in the pay of Washington.

The U.S. State Department denied that it was trying to affect the outcome of elections.

"We completely reject the notion that our support for civil society, democracy, human rights in any way interferes with elections, whether in Russia or anywhere else in the world," spokeswoman Victoria Nuland told reporters in Washington. "We do these programs all over the world. We are even-handed as to access to the resources for political parties."

Grigory Melkonyants, the deputy director of Golos, said the expulsion of USAID was a logical extension of a Kremlin crackdown on dissent since Putin returned to the presidency in May.

"All of this is part of a series of moves aimed at toughening policy toward protests, the Internet, NGOs and freedom of speech," he said. "The people who make these decisions intend to crack down on dissent and criticism in a way that is as harsh as possible. It is frightening even to think about what may happen tomorrow."

Among the new laws passed this summer is one that requires non-governmental organizations that receive foreign funding and engage in vaguely defined political activity to register as "foreign agents," which is intended to destroy their credibility among Russians.

But few sources of funding are available within Russia for organizations whose work, even if not directly political, can be seen as providing a check on the government. The Moscow office of Transparency International and two of Russia's oldest and most respected human rights organizations, Memorial and the Moscow Helsinki Group, are among those that have come to depend on foreign money.

Sudan Refugees Flee Bombings

YIDA, South Sudan (AP) • Newly arrived refugees at a camp along the volatile South Sudan-Sudan border say renewed fighting between rebels and Sudan's military is likely to send thousands more people to an expanding camp here filled with refugees of war and hunger.

Two teenagers — Abdul Karim Mustafa and his neighbor Zeinab Abdallah Kuwa — are looking forward to beginning school in October at the Yida camp. The two say classes will help them forget the violence they left behind.

South Kordofan has been gripped by the violent struggle between the rebel SPLA-North and the Sudanese Armed Forces. The fighting began in June 2011 following disputed gubernatorial elections.

As the fighting intensified, tens of thousands began streaming into South Sudan. Since February, the population of Yida skyrocketed from 17,000 to 65,000 refugees.

Mustafa, 15, and Kuwa, 18, left home on Sept. 11. Mustafa said his parents stayed behind because his father was too sick to move. Kuwa said her parents had already left for Yida camp. The two walked four days in order to reach Yida. They drank water from rivers and accepted food from well-wishers. They brought nothing but the clothes they wore.

In its efforts to quell the rebels in South Kordofan, Sudan has routinely employed crude bombs rolled from the backs of Antonov warplanes to target the SPLA-North fighters. But the bombs often fall in civilian areas. After months of bombings, many were unable to plant crops and took refuge in nearby caves in the Nuba mountains.

U.S. Plans Naval Exercises with China

HONOLULU (AP) • The U.S. intends to ask China to send a ship to join the world's largest maritime exercises for the first time in Hawaiian waters in two years.

The Navy will invite the Asian country to send a ship to the 2014 Rim of the Pacific exercises, U.S. Defense Secretary Leon Panetta told reporters in Beijing on Wednesday.

China sent military observers to watch the drills in 1998, but has never sent a vessel.

Panetta said he discussed ways to extend cooperation between the two militaries during a meeting with China's national defense minister, Gen. Liang Guanglie.

The defense secretary noted that China and the U.S. participated this week in an exercise to counter pirates in the Gulf of Aden.

Space shuttle Endeavour flies over Ellington Field on Wednesday in Houston atop the shuttle aircraft carrier.

Space Shuttle Endeavour Makes One Last Stop in Houston

HOUSTON (AP) • Waving American flags and space shuttle toys, hundreds of people lined the streets and crowded the airport Wednesday as they watched space shuttle Endeavour touch down in Houston on its way to be permanently displayed in California. But for many, the experience was bittersweet, tinged with an aftertaste of having been cheated of something they believe should rightfully have been theirs. "I think that it's the worst thing that they can do, rotten all the way," said 84-year-old Mary Weiss, clinging to her walker just before Endeavour, riding piggy back on a jumbo jet, landed after flying low over Gulf Coast towns, New Orleans and then downtown Houston and its airports. Space City, partly made famous by Tom Hanks when he uttered the line "Houston, we have a problem" in the movie "Apollo 13," has long tied its fortune to a mix of oil and NASA. Astronauts train in the humid, mosquito-ridden city. Many call it home years after they retire. The Johnson Space Center and an adjacent museum hug Galveston Bay. Yet Houston's bid for a shuttle was rejected after the White House retired the fleet last summer to spend more time and money on reaching destinations such as asteroids and Mars. Instead, Houston got a replica that used to be displayed at the Kennedy Space Center. "I think it's a pretty rotten deal, basically," said Scott Rush, 54, of Crystal Beach, Texas, wearing a T-shirt proudly proclaiming that he had witnessed Endeavour's final launch. "The one we're getting is a toy. An important toy, but a toy nonetheless." Back-to-back delays in the ferry flight resulted in one day being cut from the Houston visit. But Wednesday dawned under bright sunshine and cooler-than-normal temperatures, drawing hundreds of excited people, many of whom brought children or grandchildren along. After landing, the Endeavour rolled slowly in front of the cheering crowd. It circled and preened like a model on the catwalk, giving awed spectators an opportunity to take pictures from a variety of angles. "I want to go on it," said 3-year-old Joshua Lee as he headed to the landing area with his mother and grandmother. Joshua's mother, Jacqueline Lee of Houston, viewed the landing as an educational opportunity she had to share with her son. "It's history in the making and it probably will be the end and I don't know if he'll get to see this again," Lee said. "I wish we were able to rally enough to have it stay here in Texas since we've had a major input in all the history of NASA." NASA still plays a large role in Houston, and astronaut Clayton Anderson, who lived on the International Space Station from June to November 2007, encouraged people to focus on a new era of space exploration. "The shuttles are a wonderful legacy, a huge part of Houston, but now it's time to look to the future," said Anderson, who lives in the Houston suburb of League City. Earlier Wednesday, hundreds gathered in Cape Canaveral, Fla., to bid Endeavour farewell. The shuttle will spend the night in Houston before continuing its journey to Los Angeles International Airport, where it's scheduled to land Friday. In mid-October, Endeavour will be transported down city streets to the California Science Center. This is the last flight for a space shuttle. Atlantis will remain at Kennedy for display. Discovery already is at the Smithsonian Institution, parked at a hangar in Virginia since April. Endeavour — the replacement for the destroyed Challenger shuttle — made its debut in 1992 and flew 25 times in space before retiring.

ON TARGET: YOUR WEEKLY HUNTING REPORT

Upland Game Season Expected to be the Best in Recent Years

A warm, dry spring and early summer were generally favorable for upland bird nesting. Recent reports by Idaho Department of Fish and Game, gathered from surveys, field personnel and landowners, suggest that upland bird populations had good hatches across the valley.

The good news for you: This fall should be one of the best bird-hunting seasons in recent years.

An example is the gray partridge: 217 huns were observed during a roadside survey in August, but only 70 in 2011. Also, dove hunters usually enjoyed good hunting through the first two weeks of September.

Big game: The fall season started with a bang, said Jeff Frost, owner of Intermountain Taxidermy and Worldwide Adventures in Twin Falls.

"We have seen a fair amount of early antelope and elk coming through the shop," Frost said, "but not as many early rifle and archery deer as of yet. The hunters are saying the fires from this year have really pushed the deer into nontraditional areas. I expect as the main rifle season approaches in October, the deer hunters will have better success as the herds acclimate to their new surroundings."

"Moose hunters are enjoying good success so far, as the numbers and size of bulls are very impressive this year."

Black bear: What stands out so far this season is the black bear, Frost said. "Rarely have we seen these types or number of bears coming into the shop in the fall season," he said. "Lots of hunters are seeing or taking bears out while hunting deer and elk."

FALL CREEK in the fall

VIRGINIA HUTCHINS • TIMES-NEWS

Jeremiah Burnett of Mountain Home, right, and Matthew Frost of Pocatello descend the Fall Creek Trail — near the creek's Left Fork — after a Sept. 1 horseback ride to Moose Lake. 'As a kid, we'd come up here every Fourth of July,' said Burnett, who grew up in Arco.

KETCHUM • Now's the time to revel in the golden glory of aspens, as their autumn color illuminates swaths of Idaho's mountains.

And what better place to do that than Fall Creek Canyon? In this Pioneer Mountain drainage northeast of Ketchum, those aspen leaves catch the sunlight against a backdrop of high granite peaks, hanging valleys, numerous waterfalls and dramatic erosion scars from flash floods and avalanches.

Moderately easy for the first three miles along Fall Creek, the trail leads into proposed wilderness area within the Salmon-Challis National Forest.

"It's a relatively easy hike, and you're able to see some beautiful scenery there," said Bart Gamett, a U.S. Forest Service fish biologist in the Lost River Ranger District.

"Keep looking around at the panoramic views," said day hiker Dave Karlsen of Ketchum, whom I met on the trail Sept. 1. "They're all over the place."

A couple of huge flash floods in Fall Creek — the most recent was almost 30 years ago — and more frequent winter avalanches scarred the canyon and piled up debris. Here hikers can ponder massive forces in the shadow of massive mountains.

VIRGINIA HUTCHINS • TIMES-NEWS

Intending to camp at Moose Lake, Les Johnson of Middleton climbs the Fall Creek Trail with a big backpack. 'We got it all,' he said. 'The kitchen sink's in here someplace.'

And throughout the whole Fall Creek drainage, an alert hiker can hope to see deer, elk, mountain goats, small mammals and birds, Gamett said. The moose are less common, and the wolves usually stay out of sight. "They're certainly up there. But seeing them would not be a very common thing."

Keep an eye on the sky, too. "You could expect snow at any time now," Gamett said Friday. And in Fall Creek Canyon, the snowfall could be significant. In fact, in this drainage's higher elevations, snow might fall any month of the year.

Beyond those easy three miles,

Hints for Staying Safe in Bear Country

Andrew Weeks
Trails and Tales

Game season is upon us. You can tell by the color orange, both in the trees and in hunters' clothing. But as a couple of hunters recently found out, orange can't protect you from all backcountry dangers.

A nonresident hunter was bitten by a grizzly bear while trying to retrieve an elk he had shot near Sheridan Creek in eastern Idaho's Fremont County. The Michigan man and his hunting partner were following the elk's blood trail when they were suddenly charged by a grizzly, according to an Idaho Department of Fish and Game report. The bear bit the hunter on an arm and then ran back into forest cover.

After about four miles of hiking, the pair made it out of the wilderness and drove to a medical center in Ashton, where the hunter was treated and released.

Do keep that orange vest on, but pay attention to the suggestions in "How to Hunt Safely in Grizzly Bear Country," a brochure Fish and Game mails to hunters holding tags for elk in areas known to be frequented by grizzlies.

Some of things the brochure encourages: Carry bear spray and have it readily accessible, and make lots of noise when retrieving game. If a hunter has time to field dress an animal but cannot remove it all before dark, the entrails should be moved as far as possible

Moose Lake

Most of the hikers and horsemen in Fall Creek head for Moose Lake, the gem of Fall Creek's Right Fork.

Four factors tend to affect the popularity of lakes in the Lost River district, Gamett said: if the trailhead is accessible by car (not just high-clearance four-wheel drive), if there's a maintained trail to the lake, if the lake is named on a map and if the lake's trail is encountered before others in the drainage.

"Moose Lake meets all of those criteria," he said. "It's a very scenic lake. It's surrounded by timber and has some very scenic peaks back behind it."

And it can't hurt that you'll find fish in Moose Lake.

"Probably 95 percent of the fish you catch there will be brook trout," Gamett said, but you might find rainbow trout on your line, too.

Matthew Frost of Pocatello, riding a horse on Fall Creek Trail for the first time Sept. 1, relished the sight from this hanging valley just before the Right Fork trail reaches Moose Lake.

"When you get up to the top ... you can look back and it's just vast openness over the valley," Frost said.

Backpacker Ron Day of Nampa led three friends with bulging packs toward Moose Lake that day.

"I did this trail about 12 to 15 years ago. ... I always wanted to come back," Day said. "We're going back to Moose Lake because the scenery there is just spectacular."

One note of warning for early-season hikers: To reach Moose Lake, come prepared to ford Fall Creek without a bridge.

"It's a fairly good-sized stream. It will require wading the creek," Gamett said.

Surprise Valley

A longer, harder hike into another of Fall Creek Canyon's hanging valleys leads to a pond, a small lake, meadows, springs and — if you haven't had enough climbing yet — a high ridge with a view of Broad Canyon and the peaks beyond.

What's the surprise? I figure it's the upper end of Surprise Valley itself: an unpredictably wide, lush clearing just below the ridgeline, where spring-fed creeks

Find the Trailhead

From Ketchum's Main Street, turn east onto Sun Valley Road and set your vehicle's trip odometer. After passing Sun Valley, the road turns to gravel and climbs Trail Creek Canyon on a high, narrow ledge. Be alert for opposing traffic around each bend; there are no guard rails, and many spots on the road aren't wide enough for two vehicles. Once you pass the Trail Creek summit, you can loosen those white knuckles on your steering wheel.

After driving 22 miles from Ketchum, turn right toward Copper Basin and Wildhorse; this intersection has a sign. In another 2 miles you'll reach a fork; keep right there (the left heads toward Copper Basin). One mile later, you'll pass the U.S. Forest Service's Wildhorse guard station. Then after another 2.4 miles, turn left toward Fall Creek. After a half-mile, that road ends at the trailhead.

Getting started: The trailhead has a large parking lot, an outhouse and a short, paved trail that overlooks a falls. But to hike the Fall Creek Canyon trails described here, walk north instead — toward a wide bridge and a dirt trail. There's a fence to keep cattle out of Fall Creek Canyon; close the gate behind you.

What's allowed: Just hikers and horses; mountain bikes and all motorized travel are prohibited.

wind through a meadow.

But you won't find fish in Surprise Valley, Gamett said.

After it diverges from the main Fall Creek Trail, the trail to Surprise Valley is particularly steep and rocky. Farther on, parts of the trail are quite faint, so you'll have to stay alert and find your way with the help of cairns and tree blazes. Forest rangers have only a small window each year when the entire trail is snow-free for maintenance.

A highlight here is the outlet of the lower pond. It tumbles out of a notch in the side of Surprise Valley in a long and extravagant cascade.

Each new vantage point along that cascade's banks gives the explorer a new reward, but enjoying this spectacle requires rough scrambling and serious caution on spray-wetted rocks. First you'll find sweet story-book spots with mossy stones and grass-covered banks. But under the pleasant splashing you'll hear a deep rumble; the real drama is downstream, where the water tumbles down a rock face toward Fall Creek a thousand feet below.

Other Options along Fall Creek

In Gamett's experience, the best way to see that long waterfall doesn't involve hiking into Surprise Valley at all. Rather, he suggested, stay on the main Fall Creek Trail for another mile and a half, then scramble up onto the west face of Fall Creek Canyon for a great perspective on that waterfall.

• Shortly after that point, the maintained trail along Fall Creek ends. "Beyond that it's just cross-country travel," Gamett said.

But experienced hikers with good maps can find four lakes farther up the main Fall Creek. "I've been to all of them, but it involves a bit of a challenge ... you really need to know what you're doing in order to find them," he said.

• Another option for solitude-hungry hikers and horsemen is a trail along the creek's Left Fork, leading to an unnamed lake and a few small ponds in another hanging valley. You'll encounter that fork in the trail almost two miles from the trailhead.

"The left fork doesn't see nearly the amount of use

Distance and Elevation

The most popular destination within Fall Creek Canyon is Moose Lake, followed by Surprise Valley. Here's how far you'll hike — and how high you'll climb as you do it.

Trailhead: 7,240 feet high.

Right Fork trail diverges from the main trail: At 7,800 feet; this is 3 miles from the trailhead. The Right Fork trail leads another 2 miles to Moose Lake, at 9,345 feet.

Surprise Valley trail diverges from the main trail: At 8,080 feet; this is 3.5 miles from the trailhead. The Surprise Valley trail leads another 1.5 miles to a small pond (at 9,340 feet), then another 1.5 miles to the upper lake (at 10,148 feet), then another half-mile to the saddle (at about 11,000 feet) of a high ridge that looks down into Betty Lake and Broad Canyon.

that the Right Fork or Surprise Valley do," Gamett said.

• Want to see something incredible without climbing into any of the three hanging valleys? Stay on the main Fall Creek Trail, and between the Right Fork turnout and the Surprise Valley turnout you'll hear water just to the west of the trail. Venture into the forest there and you'll find several amazing waterfalls on Fall Creek that aren't visible from the trail.

Back in the Hunt

A paralyzed former baseball player returns to the outdoors.

BY MICHAEL PEARCE

The Wichita Eagle

WICHITA, Kan. • Strapped in a wheelchair, Carl Hall could only watch last week as others did the kinds of hunting chores he once relished.

Since 2010, legs that had spent as much time following bird dogs as churning base paths during a storied baseball career at Wichita State have remained immobile.

Quick hands that once led to conference and national honors, and called in turkeys for his kids, are also lifeless.

But his powers of speech were going full bore as he sat in the building darkness.

Hall, 41, laughed aloud, joked and chattered nearly nonstop. The talk was mostly focused on a dead 10-point whitetail lying by his chair.

Earlier he'd shot the animal that was his welcome back into his beloved outdoors.

"For two years all I could do was talk about (hunting) and think about it," he said. "This feels like the first time I ever went, only maybe it's even better."

Some of Hall's best childhood memories are of tagging along with his brothers on hunting and fishing trips in the Flint Hills, or wherever the bass were biting and the pheasants flushing.

He'd rather talk about trips afield with his four children than anything in his baseball career.

That intense focus on the outdoors didn't die when a 2010 car accident left him mostly paralyzed.

Pat Hall said his younger brother was more focused on what he could still do, rather than what he couldn't do, not long after the accident.

The prospect of shooting and fishing again brought hope.

Hard Work

Staff at Colorado's Craig Hospital, where Hall spent about four months in rehabilitation, told him of adaptive equipment that could allow most paraplegics to fire a gun or operate a rod and reel, among other things.

"About all I wanted to do was see the guns and shoot," Hall said of working with the staff. "I finally got to in a gymnasium with a BB gun." The apparatus that allows him to shoot attaches to a wheelchair. Hall aims the gun by moving a joystick with his chin. A sip on a tube pulls the trigger.

He also learned to use a tube to cast and retrieve the line on an adaptive fishing outfit.

But Hall and his family knew a lot of hard work lay ahead if he was to again enjoy the outdoors.

Then again, hard work has never been a problem for the man who was a walk-on at Wichita State and achieved conference player of the year and third team All-American honors.

Physically, he had to retrain his body to swallow and breathe on its own. The very limited movement in his right arm is still being developed.

Mentally, Hall said he had to get his life in order, too. He credits his wife, Stacey, other family members and friends with helping him get to where he is today.

He's currently researching and writing a workbook for those who've just endured a serious spinal injury.

"I had a great family to work for me, but not everybody is that lucky," he said. "I can make things a lot easier for them, from the time of the injury on."

Hall's also back into a place he favored before the accident — the family kitchen.

After researching a recipe online, he supervises his family on how to turn it into a great meal.

This summer he started thinking it was time to add venison to their fare.

"I thought about it last year, but I just wasn't in a good place," Hall said. "Now I have a lot more energy and a lot more determination."

Going Afield

I don't want to give away your secret hunting spot or blind, but I'd like to visit with a hunting group in the field to catch the sense of things as you track or wait for game, or even relax at camp.

Or maybe I could meet with you early in the morning as you pack up for the next hunt — preferably if you're bringing along a child on his or her first trip.

All fodder for a future hunting story. What do you think? If you're interested, let me know: 735-3233 or aweeks@magicvalley.com.

Wildlife Tracts Help Meet Wildlife Needs

"I've seen signs labeling areas as 'Wildlife Tracts.' These small parcels scattered around the Magic Valley have ladders or fence crossings for public access. What is the wildlife tracts program and can I hunt these areas?"

ty irrigated wildlife cover, often with food plots of grain or corn. In return, farmers are allowed to farm a portion of public land.

The Wildlife Tracts program is a cooperative venture between the Bureau of Land Management, the Idaho Department of Fish and Game and the United States Bureau of Reclamation. A wildlife tract consists of BLM and/or USBR lands, usually surrounded by private agricultural property, managed as wildlife habitat with Idaho Fish and Game.

Seventy-four BLM tracts were originally set aside in Blaine, Cassia, Elmore, Gooding, Jerome, Lincoln, Minidoka, Owyhee and Twin Falls counties. Twenty-seven USBR tracts were set aside during the original development of the Minidoka Project's North Side Pumping Division in 1981. There have been some additions since its beginning, so today there are 284 tracts in the program totaling over 33,500 acres. Typically the tracts were parcels of land that could not be irrigated or farmed and were not homesteaded.

Wildlife tracts help meet the needs of wildlife like pheasants, gray partridge, valley quail, and mule deer found close to farms. This program provides islands of permanent wildlife habitat, such as shrub cover in an ever-changing agricultural environment. Without this cover, upland game birds are vulnerable to weather extremes and predators.

Non-game wildlife also benefits greatly from wildlife tracts. Non-game wildlife commonly seen on or near these tracts include Swainson's and ferruginous hawks, burrowing owls, Brewer's sparrows, sage thrashers, long-billed curlews, waterfowl and song birds.

The public benefits greatly from the recreational opportunities these tracts provide. Upland game bird and big game hunting are popular on most wildlife tracts, while many also are used for birdwatching, photography, and hiking.

The Wildlife Tracts program is often considered a win-win because it can benefit local farmers as well as increasing the amount of wildlife habitat available for public access. Portions of some BLM tracts, for instance, are currently farmed under Cooperative Farming Agreements between the BLM, IDFG and private landowners.

Under these cooperative farming agreements, farmers typically provide and maintain good-quality

Guaranteed public access to both the private and public land in these agreements increases the acreage available to hunters and other recreationists. The success of the Wildlife Tracts program is rooted in cooperation and mutual benefit. Landowners, public land managers, wildlife enthusiasts and dozens of bird and mammal species all have benefited from the work accomplished through this program.

Set aside primarily as wildlife habitat, some tracts remain in poor condition. Wildfires, unauthorized farming and grazing, and trash dumping have diminished or eliminated wildlife values on some parcels. However, the potential still exists for establishing quality wildlife habitat on these tracts.

The BLM, USBR, and IDFG have plans to improve habitat conditions through a variety of projects. In the past, guzzlers, raptor platforms, kestrels and bluebird boxes, and a variety of other habitat improvements were conducted on some of the tracts. Others have been seeded with grasses and forbs to provide nesting cover. Future work includes planting shelterbelts, shrub thickets, installing additional guzzlers, repairing and putting up new fences, and rehabilitating burned tracts.

Success will take time, money and a lot of hard work, but the increased abundance of wildlife for the public to enjoy should be well worth the effort.

The agencies involved would like to invite the public's help to improve and maintain the wildlife habitat on these tracts. Individually or as an organization we would welcome assistance in project construction and maintenance, planting trees and shrubs, recording wildlife observations and/or reporting vandalism and other abuses.

To find out how you can help, contact the BLM or USBR in Burley or the Fish and Game regional office in Jerome.

As you use these tracts, please respect the rights of adjacent landowners and their property. Remember, these tracts are public land and benefit people and wildlife. Enjoy them!

Suiting Up for Upland Game

Rich Simpson

Shooting the Bull

While it may be debatable whether clothes make the man, I can promise you that suiting up in proper hunting attire will not only guarantee greater comfort for you in the field, it can even increase the odds of filling your game pouch this season; that's a win-win situation.

Before you run down to your favorite sporting goods emporium with your hard-earned dollars in hand, let's check out some worthy contenders for our head-to-toe outfitting options.

Let's start with our heads. Since temperature and moisture extremes are the norm rather than the exception when hunting our western game birds, a quality hat should be considered an essential part of our kit. Experienced hunters generally wear a ball cap or cowboy hat on mild, sunny days, but keep a light wool/poly hat tucked in their day packs should nasty weather decide to move in.

To help ensure that no one is tempted to wave their shotgun barrel in your direction, a blaze orange bonnet or a strip of fluorescent tape wrapped around your Stetson, should keep you conspicuously visible whether you're trudging through knee-high stubble or pushing through head-high cattails.

For durability, visual contrast, depth perception, and for blocking out glare while hunting, the No. 1 optometrist-recommended choice are a pair of amber-brown tinted polycarbonate glasses.

Though initially somewhat pricey, they should be considered a true bargain when it comes to safeguarding our priceless eyesight.

Now let's consider outfitting our torsos. When the weather begins to cool down, I pull on a pair of polypropylene underwear. Manufactured in a variety of thicknesses, this marvelous synthetic effectively wicks moisture away from your skin, keeping you comfortably warm and dry in every conceivable temperature range.

For upland game hunting this fall, I finally broke down and purchased a pair of Wrangler brush pants. These cordura-reinforced and teflon-fabric protected jeans will not only shield my legs while I plow through thick brambles and clutching overgrowth, I'll do it without picking up a gross ton of weed seeds and cockle burrs. Forsaken forever will be my once beloved wool army trousers.

Now let's dress and address our lowly beasts of burden: our feet. My feet sweat heavily and I have found polypropylene liner socks to be a godsend since they possess the very same moisture-wicking properties that make their underwear so marvelous. Depending on the boots I'm wearing for the particular hunt, I layer a quality wool stocking of appropriate thickness over the polys; comfort and warmth for your precious bunions.

While the choices in quality boots are equally exhaustive, I settled long ago on sturdy Gore-Tex/leather field boots that tread the soggy grouse woods and dry stubble fields with equal aplomb. Find the style and construction best suited to your needs.

The upland seasons are upon us. Shop carefully and outfit yourself with the gear best suited to your tastes and hunting requirements. You'll have better hunts this fall; I promise!

Good hunting!

Sturgeon is the Hottest Star of Wisconsin

BY PAUL A. SMITH

Milwaukee Journal Sentinel

MILWAUKEE • Wisconsin is blessed with more than 160 species of fish and several world-class fisheries.

Anglers come from far and wide to take part in the state's musky, trout, salmon and smallmouth bass fisheries, to name several.

But even these popular fishes, it can be argued, take a back seat to another Wisconsin species: the lake sturgeon.

The sturgeon is the state's heaviest, longest-lived and most ancient fish. It's also arguably the one that can teach us the most.

"You have to respect a fish that has been around since the dinosaurs and can live longer than we can," said Ron Bruch, former Lake Winnebago sturgeon biologist for the Wisconsin Department of Natural Resources.

Bruch, now a fisheries manager working in the DNR's central office, made a presentation on the sturgeon at a meeting of the Wisconsin Outdoor Communicators Association in Eagle River.

The story of the sturgeon in Wisconsin is one of a successful management program and ongoing restoration.

The Lake Winnebago system is home to the strongest population of lake sturgeon in the world.

But it wasn't always so.

"Every sturgeon population in the world has been over-exploited, including the Winnebago population," Bruch said.

There are 25 species of sturgeon in the world, including eight in North America. The fish exist only in the northern hemisphere.

lion years ago.

"They were around when the dinosaurs were here," Bruch said. "Whatever killed the dinosaurs didn't kill the sturgeon."

Bruch said the sturgeon is distantly-related to sharks.

Sturgeon are also big: Some species exceed 2,200 pounds. The lake sturgeon found in Wisconsin can exceed 200 pounds.

But it's not known just how big they can get.

"They haven't been allowed to show us how big and how old they can get since pre-settlement times," Bruch said.

Many fish species can tolerate a 30 percent harvest of adult stock each year. Because the sturgeon is slow to mature and females reproduce only every three to five years, the DNR limits the sturgeon harvest to 5 percent of adult stock each year.

Working with local citizens and conservation groups, the DNR formed a Sturgeon Advisory Committee in 1992 to guide management of the species on the Winnebago system.

One group, Sturgeon For Tomorrow, has donated more than $500,000 for sturgeon management and research.

"These groups and individuals, many of them sturgeon spearers, have helped create the protective regulations we have today," Bruch said.

As a result, the sturgeon in Winnebago are growing older and reaching larger sizes.

A sturgeon spearing season is held in February on the Winnebago chain of lakes. And a hook-and-line fishing season is held in fall in several waters, including the Wisconsin and Menominee rivers.

The sturgeon provides a unique shot in the arm to the local economy. The sturgeon spearing season provides an estimated $3.5 million economic impact over 10 days to the economy around Winnebago system.

And in people turn out in droves to view spawning sturgeon, generating a $50,000 in economic impact in three days in Shiocton, Shawano and New London.

In April, DNR crews tagged a female sturgeon on the Wolf River that was 87.5 inches in length and weighed approximately 240 pounds.

Perhaps most impressive of all: The fish was an estimated 125 years old.

Bruch said the sturgeon hasn't just shown us what it takes to survive — it has rallied people to work together for the long-term good of a resource.

Bozeman Group Proposing Ice Climbing Tower

BOZEMAN, Mont. (AP) • Bozeman-area climbers and others are hoping to get in on the ground floor of an Olympic movement by building an 84-foot-tall ice climbing tower at the Gallatin County Fairgrounds.

World-renowned climber Conrad Anker, Montana State architecture professor Mike Everts and others presented a plan for an ice climbing tower to county commissioners on Tuesday, the Bozeman Daily Chronicle reported. The group hopes to gain permission to build the $3 million to $4 million tower and outdoor performance venue on county property.

Hyalite Canyon ice climbing guidebook author Joe Josephson told commissioners there is a World Cup competition for ice climbing and the event will be a demonstration sport at the 2014 Winter Olympics in Sochi, Russia.

The only way ice climbing can become a medal sport is if there are world-class training and competition facilities around the world. Bozeman's could be the first of its kind in the western hemisphere, Josephson said.

"We could be part of an Olympic movement right here," Josephson said.

Proponents say the tower could be used as an elite training and international competition venue as well as for rock climbing and rescue training. It would also include an outdoor concert venue.

Students in the Montana State University architect-ture and engineering programs submitted designs while MSU business students are conducting on-going feasibility studies. The winning design is the work of former architecture students Michael Spencer and Tymer Tilton and engineering student P.J. Kolnik. All three are climbers.

The tower would be built using stacked shipping containers as structural support and include office spaces and housing for visiting athletes. There will be solar panels and the ability to re-use water from the ice to irrigate the nearby baseball fields, Anker said.

The group is seeking a corporate sponsor that would retain naming rights for the tower, but Anker said he wanted to make sure they had a spot to build it before he approached anyone. The group is not seeking taxpayer funding.

"To climb a mountain, you don't go out there until you have everything prepared," said Anker.

Fairgrounds Director Sue Shockley supports the project.

Recent rodeo events that brought hundreds of people to Bozeman for four or five days translated to an infusion of more than $2 million for local hotels, restaurants and shops, she said.

"That's what the payback for a $3 million to $4 million investment would mean for our community," Shockley said. "It's huge. We have to find a way to make it happen."

Wyo. Hunting, Fishing Numbers Increase

BY CHRISTINE PETERSON
Star-Tribune

CASPER, Wyo. • Sons can be pretty persistent, and Brian Heithoff's was no exception.

The 12-year-old boy asked and asked his dad if he could learn to hunt, but Heithoff had never hunted before. He didn't own a gun and wasn't sure if he wanted to learn. Jack kept pestering.

It would be time they could spend together, he told his dad.

That did it. Heithoff, Jack and Jack's twin sister, Tillie, just finished hunter education with a local group in Pine Bluffs, adding more people to a growing list of Wyoming residents who hunt, fish and watch wildlife. The twins will try their newly-learned skills in a High Plains Pheasants Forever youth hunt next month.

New numbers are out and Wyoming, along with 27 other states, saw increases in hunting, fishing or wildlife-associated recreation since 2006.

More people involved with wildlife means more people interested in conservation. Wildlife-associated activities are also a billion-dollar industry in Wyoming, fueling part of the state's economy and possibly helping curb a wildlife-management deficit, said Eric Keszler, a public information officer for the Wyoming Game and Fish Department.

The number of resident hunters in Wyoming rose from 50,000 to 96,000 and resident anglers grew from 96,000 to 110,000, according to the National Survey of Fishing, Hunting and Wildlife-Associated Recreation released recently by the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service. The recent increase follows decades of falling numbers in Wyoming and many other states. The number of anglers in Wyoming dropped 51 percent from 1996 to 2006 and the number of resident hunters fell 25 percent, according to past reports.

Reasons for the decline vary, though television, games and other sports and activities are often to blame, Keszler said.

He was surprised by the jump in hunting numbers, and why those numbers have started moving back up is anyone's guess, he said.

"We would like to think a lot of the programs we've started to recruit hunters and anglers have made a difference," he said. "But it could be with the economy. People see hunting and fishing as something they can do for recreation close to home." The Game and Fish Department recently finished its 15th annual Hunting and Fishing Expo in Casper where about 13,000 people, mostly school groups, learned about outdoor, wildlife-related activities. Department officials also started a new program called Forever Wild that works to recruit families, not just youth, into hunting, fishing and the outdoors.

Wildlife officials are trying to influence families like the Heithoffs.

Heithoff moved his family to Pine Bluffs from Iowa, and Wyoming's outdoor culture helped convince him, along with his son's interest, to try hunting.

"Up until a year ago, I never thought I'd hunt," Heithoff said. "It's a pretty good support network here, I think. I don't feel on my own at all."

Waterfowl Youth Hunts Planned

TIMES-NEWS

Young hunters who want an early shot at a duck or goose may participate in the youth waterfowl hunt on Sept. 29 and 30.

The hunt is open to youths 15 and younger. The waterfowl youth hunt includes goose, duck, coot and snipe.

The regular waterfowl season opens the following weekend. But the opening land areas have changed. Area 2 was Area 1 in the past.

The season opens on Oct. 6 in what is now called Area 1.

Area 1 includes all of the Fort Hall Indian Reservation, including private in-holdings; Bannock County; Bingham County, except that portion within the Blackfoot Reservoir drainage; Caribou County within the Fort Hall Indian Reservation; and Power County east of State Highway 37 and State Highway 39.

The season opens Oct. 13 in the rest of the state — now known as Area 2.

Youth hunt bag limits for ducks and geese are the same as for the general season. The daily limit is seven ducks, which may include no more than one canvasback, two pintails, two redheads or two mallard hens. Youths may also harvest four dark geese.

Hunters must have a 2012 Idaho hunting license and a federal migratory game bird harvest information program validation. But a federal duck stamp is not required for hunters 15 and under.

At least one adult 18 years old or older having a valid hunting license, must accompany each youth hunting party into the field at all times. Adults are not allowed to hunt.

All other state and federal migratory game bird hunting rules and regulations still apply. See the 2012 Waterfowl Seasons and Rules brochure available at hunting license vendors, Fish and Game offices and online at: <http://fishandgame.idaho.gov>.

What Did You Get for Your Birthday? A Wild Boar

BY SUSAN COCKING
The Miami Herald

DUNNELLON, Fla. • To celebrate her 19th birthday, Taylor Elliott wanted to kill her first wild hog. So her parents, Mark and Ellen Elliott of Orlando, sprang for a new 12-gauge shotgun and a weekend at a private, 4,000-acre hunting lease. Since the family had never hunted together, they signed up with Beyond B.O.W. — a 2-year-old, guided hunting program founded by Tampa outdoors outfitter Jeanene Arrington-Fisher.

Beyond B.O.W. is an extension of the Florida Fish and Wildlife Conservation Commission's popular "Becoming an Outdoors Woman" workshops, which have introduced hundreds of women to hunting, fishing, camping, paddling and other skills over the past 18 years. Arrington-Fisher, a longtime B.O.W. instructor, says some of her students needed a bit of extra encouragement to enjoy their newfound skills in the wild.

"Once women finished their classes, they were still intimidated to take their children out," she said. "Beyond B.O.W. allows us to offer events more to families. A guide or instructor is present and women feel more comfortable, and they'll come out with their children and their husband."

Arrington-Fisher arranged the weekend at the Dunnellon hunting lease for the Elliotts and five other female hunters. The outing included group meals, camping facilities, transportation to hunting blinds, and a hunting guide, if requested.

However, Taylor wanted to sit in her ground blind alone with her new gun, unassisted. After all, the Seminole State College sophomore was hardly new to the outdoors; she builds custom fishing rods as a part-time job and has been fishing "since I could walk."

"I liked fishing, and I figured I'd try hunting," she said.

Taylor sat patiently in her blind, gun on her lap, all afternoon on a recent Friday, waiting to see if a feral hog would come to a nearby feeder. Just before dark, her quiet vigil was rewarded.

A large, black boar wandered up to the feeder about 100 feet from where Taylor sat.

"I was sitting down, just took my time," she recounted. "Too much adrenaline, so I didn't feel anything."

She aimed and shot the animal behind the shoulder. It charged off a short distance, then she heard it bash into a tree. Taylor left the blind and searched for about 10 minutes before finding her quarry dead next to the tree. She sent a text message to Arrington-Fisher, who sent a couple of fellow hunters to help Taylor load the hog onto an ATV.

Back at camp, Taylor posed, smiling, for numerous photos of her trophy, estimated at 200 pounds with 2 1/2-inch tusks.

"You should mount the head because that's a big hog," advised fellow hunter Ellie Willingham, 24, a taxidermist and furrier in Odessa, who also was looking to shoot her first hog.

Willingham said she encountered a herd of about a dozen of the animals while in her blind. She fired her rifle but missed.

"The sight might have been off on my gun," Willingham said. "I didn't hit anything."

Septic Systems Cleared in Hood Canal Fish Kills

SEATTLE (AP) • Don't blame septic system failures for fish die-offs that seem to occur every few years in the Hood Canal.

A new report by the Environmental Protection Agency and the state Ecology Department determined that human sources of nitrogen are insignificant in contributing to the low-oxygen events that kill fish.

The Seattle Times reports the study highlights the difficulty of understanding complex variables that can harm marine life.

The agencies concluded the overwhelming causes of fish kills in the Hood Canal are ocean conditions and the geography of the canal on the east side of the Olympic Peninsula. Water circulates poorly in the waterway and fish die at times from lack of oxygen.

OBITUARIES

Patricia 'Patty' Ann Laib Cunningham

May 9, 1945-Sept. 10, 2012

CARSON CITY, Nev. • Patricia 'Patty' Ann Laib Cunningham, 67, died peacefully Monday, Sept. 10, 2012, at her home.

She was born May 9, 1945, in Twin Falls, Idaho, to Florence Renken Fusselman Laib and John G. Laib. Her entire childhood was an idyllic one, happily and loudly shared with her sister and four brothers. She dearly loved Idaho, graduating from Twin Falls Senior High School in 1963.

She married LeRoy Cunningham on Oct. 11, 1963, and they made their home in Carson City, Nev. Their marriage was loud and happy, filled with Patty's infectious laughter, LeRoy's practical jokes and the rambunctious joy of their two daughters, Lora and Angela.

Although Patty's priorities were her husband, home and family, she also did book-keeping for LeRoy's various businesses. Later she worked at Garden America in Carson City until the business relocated to Texas.

Her darling LeRoy died Oct. 7, 2011, after a long illness, leaving Patty to start her life again without him. She was thrilled to start classes this semester at Western Nevada College, even nervously buying a laptop; her thumb drive reflected her joy, the sole entry reading "This is the time of my life."

In addition to LeRoy, Patty was predeceased by her father, John; mother, Florence; brother, Donald; nephew, Todd Laib; and niece, Cyndi Chiles. She is survived by her daughters, Lora (Jim) of Gardnerville, Nev., and Angela (Mark) of Winnemucca, Nev., stepchildren, Jeff (Joyce) of Carson City, Nev., Glen (Julee) of Washington and Julie Ann of Oregon; 14 grandchildren; 11 great-grandchildren; sister, Betty of Twin Falls; brothers, Duane (Sally) and Bob, all of Boise, and Paul of Meridian; and many nephews and nieces.

Patty touched everyone with her nurturing, loving and accepting ways. Her strength and optimism will encourage the family and carry us through this difficult time.

In lieu of flowers, please honor Patty by donating to your favorite charity. The family will hold a private memorial service in Nevada and a second one in Idaho for family and friends.

Roy Dean 'Rock' Rost

March 30, 1929-Sept. 17, 2012

WENDELL • Roy Dean "Rock" Rost of Wendell, Idaho, passed away at home Monday, Sept. 17, 2012.

A graveside service will be held at noon Friday, Sept. 21, at the Wendell Cemetery. The family will host an open house at Rock's residence immediately following the service to 3 p.m. Arrangements are under the direction of Rost Funeral Home, McMurtrey Chapel in Mountain Home.

Roy attended school in Wendell and enjoyed motorcycle riding and racing, which he shared with his children and grandchildren. At an early age working in the fields with his father, he became skilled in the custom harvesting trade which he later built into Rost Grinding Company, which he owned and operated until his health failed. Rock worked at the Fairfield Sawmill, owned by his father, F.H. Rost, and Stan Ramsey. He was part of the construction crew during the construction of the Lower Salmon Falls power plant, as well as the missile silos in Mountain Home.

Rock worked with John Dixon constructing trails for the U.S. Forest Service in the Bitterroot Range of Idaho. He also worked with his son, Rut, in various construction projects.

Rock is survived by his wife of 62 years, Frances of Wendell; four children, Greg and wife Julie of Salt Lake City, Utah, Deb and husband Carl Gibbs of Wendell, Russell "Rut" and wife Cyndi of Wendell, and Tony and wife Mary of Twin Falls; sister, Verda of Ogden, Utah; eight grandchildren; and six great-grandchildren. He was preceded in death by father, Frank H. Rost; mother, Albertine Gold; sister, Grace; and brothers, Frank and Wayne.

Memorial contributions can be made in Rock's name to the Elk's Rehabilitation Hospital, 600 Robbins Road, Boise, ID 83701.

Larry Dever, Cochise County Sheriff, Dies at 60

PHOENIX (AP) • Larry Dever, the four-term Republican sheriff of Cochise County who was an outspoken advocate for stronger border security, has been killed in a one-vehicle crash near the northern Arizona town of Williams. He was 60.

Dever was driving on a dirt Forest Service road on the way to meet family members for a camping and hunting trip at White Horse Lake south of Williams when his pickup rolled, according to a news release from the Coconino County Sheriff's Office. Dever was dead at the scene. It's not clear if Dever was wearing a seat belt, but he was not ejected, Coconino County sheriff's spokesman Gerry Blair said. There was no sign Dever had been drinking.

He entered the national spotlight as one of Arizona's four border sheriffs who asked to legally defend the state's controversial anti-illegal immigration law, known as SB1070, in federal court. He said at the time that the federal government was failing to secure the border and praised the law, which includes provisions that require police to question a person's immigration status while enforcing other laws and if officers suspect the person is in the county illegally.

Ashbel Green, Editor of Cronkite, Dies at 84

NEW YORK (AP) • Ashbel Green, a versatile and respected editor at Alfred A. Knopf who persuaded Gabriel Garcia Marquez to switch publishers, worked on Walter Cronkite's memoir and a foreign policy book by President George H.W. Bush and helped discover the crime classic "The Friends of Eddie Coyle," has died at age 84.

The publisher announced Wednesday that Green died Tuesday night while dining with his wife, Elizabeth Osha, near their home in Stonington, Conn. The cause of death was not immediately given.

Green, known to his friends as Ash, was an old-school publishing man who preferred a typewriter to computers and was praised by The New York Observer as "an exemplar of elegance, decency and seriousness." He acquired and edited hundreds of books and as managing editor at Knopf looked through the endless unsolicited manuscripts known as the slushpile.

"Ash was a prodigious talent, one of the most significant editorial figures in modern publishing, famous for his breadth of reading and grasp of history," Knopf president Sonny Mehta said in a statement.

SWAC Volleyball Campaign Begins Tonight

No. 4 CSI This Weekend

Today: vs. No. 16 Snow College, 7 p.m., CSI gym
Saturday: vs. No. 7 Salt Lake CC, 1 p.m., CSI gym

BY DAVID BASHORE
dbashore@magicvalley.com

TWIN FALLS • The College of Southern had 16 nonconference matches to get things figured out.

Now begins the arduous process of defending the Golden Eagles' region championship.

While not where it wants to be just yet, fourth-ranked CSI (15-1) feels it's in good position as Scenic West Athletic Conference play begins tonight when 16th-ranked Snow College (10-3) comes to town.

"We've had great practices the last little bit, but we know there's another level we want to get to," said middle blocker Eseta Maka, from New Zealand.

This week's opening of the Scenic West schedule should help the Golden Eagles get to that level. After Snow's visit, No. 7 Salt Lake Community College (15-3) comes in on Saturday, and current No. 1 North Idaho College (12-0) visits next Friday.

Each team poses its challenges. Snow is a good blocking club, Salt Lake is tough to beat when the Bruins stay in-system, and North Idaho is annoyingly good defensively, keeping play alive long enough to get the ball to its bangers on the left side.

Still, the Golden Eagles believe they have answers to all those questions and more, as long as they can keep out of their own way.

"I think we can win a game of side-out percentages with those teams, as long as we're not giving away free points," CSI head coach Heidi Cartisser said. "As long as we keep our errors low, we're tough to beat too."

The first three matches of the conference season will provide challenges that the other two, against Utah State University-College of Eastern Utah and Colorado Northwestern Community College, likely won't. Add that to the 10 matches CSI played against teams that were ranked at any point in the season, and six of those teams are currently ranked, and it's easy to see why the team is so confident.

But in order to both achieve their goal of defending their Region 18 title and realize their dreams of winning a second national championship in four seasons, the Golden Eagles are worrying more about themselves than the standing of their opponent from match to match.

"For me, I don't even look at rankings. That only allows us to play to

History Could Be Repeating Itself in Declo

ASHLEY SMITH • TIMES-NEWS

Kai Garner (8) and Declo have been running away from all comers so far this season.

I've been trying to wrap my brain around this Declo High football team.

The air in Declo feels similar to — but not quite like — 2009, when the Hornets went 11-0 until losing in the Class 2A championship game.

At 3-0, this year's team may go undefeated again. After all, its five remaining opponents, combined, have a 2-14 record and are averaging 8.9 points per game.

Makes one think Declo's school record for shutouts in a season (four) will shatter faster than a baseball team holding batting practice inside a window factory. Heck, after blanking North Fremont and Kimberly the first two weeks of the season, the Hornets are already halfway there.

How would this year's Hornets stack up against the 2009 team? When it comes to specific personnel — Quarterback: Kai Garner vs. Jeremy Jenkins; Running backs: Jason Gillette-Drexton Thrall vs. Tyler Briggs-Larsen Webb; 2012's fiercer linemen vs. 2009's beefier linemen — we'll leave that debate for folks down at the Declo Country Store.

Ryan Howe

Times-News

To better understand these Hornets, I visited with Declo assistant coach Drew Matsen, who played a huge role in Declo's back-to-back 2A runner-up teams in 2008 and 2009. He sees many similarities.

"Do they have what it takes? Without a doubt," said Matsen. "If they can stay focused game to game, I see them going all the way."

Eight of Declo's starters contributed to the school's back-to-back state wrestling championships, with a third expected this winter. Two others played on Burley's American Legion Baseball state title team last summer. That moxie has carried over to the football field.

"When I come to practice and look in their eyes, it's the look of state champions," Matsen said. "The determination and dedication they have, they want nothing less and I don't think they will settle for anything less."

Just like 2009, Declo is blowing opponents out (130-14 through three games). That leaves head coach Kelly Kidd toeing a fine line between sportsmanship and preparing his kids for a state playoff run.

Two weeks ago, Declo led Kimberly 42-0 early in the fourth quarter when the Bulldogs drove on the Hornet backups to Declo's 11-yard line. Kidd inserted his starting defense, not to be prideful and preserve the shutout, but to practice goal-line defense. Up until that point, Kimberly hadn't even crossed midfield.

With starters, as Kenny Rogers might say, you gotta know when to play 'em, know when to pull 'em.

Sometime in the next few weeks, Declo will have a game decided by halftime. An opponent will wave the white flag. Kidd will need to keep his starters in the game longer than he would like, simply because he owes it to his kids — and the entire Declo community — to prepare them for their ultimate goal. Come November, the Hornets will need to be able to play four quarters of football.

Conditioning in practice isn't the same as conditioning in a game. And practicing schemes against your own JV kids isn't the same as Friday nights.

Before Canyon Conference teams use this column as bulletin board material, understand this is solely the opinion of the writer. When asked about the topic, Coach Kidd wouldn't bite.

"Any team in our conference can beat us," Kidd said. "We talk about having a target on our back; we're pretty comfortable with it. But we have to be prepared. ... Every team that plays Declo, it seems like it's their week to shine. It's a measure of how they're doing in their program. Even the teams that haven't played well, they're waiting for their chance to beat Declo."

Only one team beat Declo in 2009. No telling when — or if — it happens in 2012.

A national football audience will again be watching on ESPN when Boise State and Brigham Young University kick off at 7 p.m. today at Bronco Stadium. That's good news for Boise State, because its record in nationally televised games is 59-10.

The young Boise State team needs every advantage it can get against a talented BYU squad that would be 3-0 if it hadn't lost by a whisker to Utah on Saturday.

However, Boise State faces a big challenge from the Cougars. The BYU defense, which ranks third in the nation with 13 quarterback sacks this season, is particularly worrisome for Boise State coach Chris Petersen.

"They play really hard, physical football," he said

Bronco Fans Eager for BYU Game

BY STEVE KADEL
skadel@magicvalley.com

TWIN FALLS • Several days ago, the digital timer at Anchor Bistro in Twin Falls began counting down the days, hours, seconds and minutes until tonight's kickoff between Boise State and Brigham Young University.

Do football fans across Idaho consider this a big game? Well, at the Anchor there was already talk about BYU as the Broncos methodically dismantled Miami (Ohio) on Saturday.

Tim Obenchain, co-owner of the Anchor, was decked out in blue and orange. He confidently looked ahead to the season's biggest matchup in Boise.

"Boise's gonna kick the stuffing out of them," he said nonchalantly.

Others in his group nodded. Bring on those poor Cougars, they seemed to say.

Doug Bryson sat near Obenchain and also wore the school colors. He held Savannah Slagel, 7, the daughter of Bryson's friend Corinne Slagel, as the girl led a cheer.

With a blue and orange lei around her neck and orange called out "Boise!" and those at the table responded with "State!"

Despite his color coordinated T-shirt, Bryson whispered that he's from Ohio and was silently rooting for the team from Miami last weekend. He isn't going to get away from that tonight.

Across the room, Boise State student Maddie Dye of Twin Falls was watching the lopsided Boise State-Miami game, too. She had definite thoughts about the BYU challenge.

"I don't think it will be a high-scoring game," she said. "It will be pretty close, maybe 35-27. I think (Boise State) can pull it out!"

Pelini Would Rather Skip Games Vs. FCS

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LINCOLN, Neb. • Nebraska coach Bo Pelini says up front that he'd rather not play Idaho State.

Cornhuskers fans aren't excited about it either, though out of habit they'll show up 85,000 strong Saturday for Memorial Stadium's 321st straight sellout.

Even the most optimistic Idaho State fan probably doesn't hold out much hope the FCS-level Bengals (1-1) can keep up with the No. 25 Huskers (2-1).

The Bengals will take their lumps and go back to Pocatello with a $600,000 check and memories of playing in one of the bastions of college football.

Idaho State-Nebraska is among more than 100 games this year matching a team from the Football Championship Subdivision against one from the big-boy Football Bowl Subdivision.

In one afternoon the Bengals will earn 5 percent of the $12 million annual budget for their 13-sport athletic department.

"Games like this have become, if you allow me to say it, a necessary evil," Idaho State athletic director Jeff Tingey said.

Nebraska, for its part, gets a seventh home game. Athletic director Tom Osborne has said that's the number needed to balance the $83 million budget for his 23-sport department.

This is the third straight year Nebraska will play an FCS opponent.

"I'm not big on playing these games," Pelini said. "I'd rather play all I-A opponents.

I'm not sitting here trying to talk bad about Idaho State. I'm talking about what we like to do as a football program. There are a lot of scheduling difficulties. You look across the country and you see a lot of them, and you talk to a lot of coaches and a lot of them aren't real fond of playing these games."

The number of FCS-FBS games has increased sharply since 2006, when the NCAA began allowing teams to schedule 12 regular-season games.

Some of the games are downright ugly (see Oklahoma State 84, Savannah State 0).

Yes, there have been memorable upsets (see Appalachian State 34, Michigan 32 in 2007).

Usually the games are forgettable, though there have been a couple surprises this year with Youngstown State upsetting Pittsburgh and Sacramento State toppling Colorado.

Sacramento State is, along with Idaho State, a member of the Big Sky Conference, which is 4-12 this season against FBS teams.

Idaho State played its opener at FBS-level Air Force and lost 49-21. Bengals receiver Derek Graves said the three touchdowns his team scored against Air Force's No. 1 defense, plus the success of other Big Sky teams against FBS opponents, motivates him for the Nebraska game.

"We're trying to go in there and win," Graves said. "That's the only reason why you play the game. If you're not playing the game to try to win, there's no point in playing. We might as well stay at home."

NHL Cancels September Preseason Games

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK • The NHL canceled its entire September preseason game schedule on Wednesday, the first on-ice casualty of the four-day lockout.

The league is wiping out all games through Sept. 30, a move it deems "necessary because of the absence of a collective bargaining agreement" with the players' association.

The NHL also said the 2012 Kraft Hockeyville pre-season game, scheduled for Oct. 3 in Belleville, Ontario, has been postponed until 2013, bringing the total to 60 games called off on Wednesday.

The regular season is scheduled to begin on Oct. 11.

NHL Deputy Commissioner Bill Daly said the league has "no set policy on cancellations" of other games.

Also Wednesday, a person familiar with the plan says NHL employees at the league offices will switch to a four-day work week Oct. 1 because of the lockout.

The move will effectively cut salaries by 20 percent. The person spoke on condition of anonymity Wednesday because the NHL hadn't made the plan public.

The news was first reported by The Canadian Press.

The Florida Panthers and Ottawa Senators have let staff go because of the lockout, while several other teams have said they don't have any plans to do so as of now.

The league locked out its players on Sunday, its fourth shutdown since 1992.

The preseason cancellations included a Washington Capitals game against the Columbus Blue Jackets on Sept. 26 in Baltimore. Last year, in the inaugural Baltimore Hockey Classic, the Capitals hosted the Nashville Predators and drew a sold-out crowd.

Fred Couples Elected to Golf Hall of Fame

ASSOCIATED PRESS

ATLANTA • Fred Couples, a former Masters champion and one of the most popular figures in the game, was elected into the World Golf Hall of Fame on Wednesday.

Couples described himself as a good player, but not a great player, though he's turned in some amazing performances.

Among his 15 wins on the PGA Tour are the 1992 Masters and two at The Players Championship, including an eagle-birdie-par finish in 1996. He played in the Ryder Cup and Presidents Cup five times each, and next year will be captain of the Presidents Cup for the third time. He was No. 1 in the world for four months in 1992.

"There are other people in the Hall of Fame that are maybe good players. But good is a good thing," Couples said from Riviera Country Club in Los Angeles. "I've been good at it for a long time, and I hope to continue to play a few more years."

Couples was elected on the PGA Tour ballot with a record-low 51 percent. The minimum for election is 65 percent, although there is a clause that when no one gets the minimum, the leading vote-getter is elected provided he has at least 50 percent of the vote.

Vijay Singh was elected in 2005 with 56 percent.

Still to be announced are the results from the International ballot, along with who is selected from the Veteran's category and Lifetime Achievement to round out the 2013 class. The induction will be May 6 — the Monday of The Players Championship — at the World Golf Village in St. Augustine, Fla.

The voters consist of international golf and sports media, Hall of Fame members, golf and sports historians and dignitaries from each of the major golf organizations.

Couples jokingly referred to the election as a popularity contest, although it did raise questions.

Davis Love III, who has won 20 times on the PGA Tour, including the 1997 PGA Championship and The Players Championship twice, received 38 percent of the vote. He tied for second in the voting with Ken Venturi, the 1964 U.S. Open champion who won 14 times and was the longtime analyst for CBS Sports.

Mark O'Meara won 16 times on the PGA Tour and two majors, both in 1998 when he became the oldest player to win two majors in one year. He was fourth in the voting with 36 percent of the vote.

Boise

Plus, he's got them playing at a really high level.

"They're good at stopping the run and putting pressure on the passer, using lots of different blitzes. BYU is as good as anybody in the country on defense. We will be tested severely."

Boise State quarterback Joe Southwick played well against Miami, hitting 24 of 31 passes for 304 yards and two touchdowns. The Bronco offensive line hasn't allowed a sack this season, although that record will be tested tonight.

Mendenhall said the lack of sacks results partly from the offensive line's talent and partly from the Boise State system. He noted the Broncos have ranked in the top 10 in fewest sacks allowed for the past five years.

Mendenhall added that just playing in Boise is a tall order.

"It's hard to go in and win," he said. "Fans support the culture. They're also coached really, really well. The systems on both sides are very good and there is mastery at what they do. Guys are raised in the system so there is execution at such a high level."

For his part, Petersen is concerned about his team's youth. Boise State lost 17 starters from last year's team, including nine defensive starters — seven of whom signed with NFL teams.

"This is a different team than we've had the past few years," Petersen acknowledged. "It's a lot younger than we've been."

One veteran is D.J. Harper, a sixth-year senior who has been plagued with injuries during his career. He ripped Miami for 162 yards and three rushing touchdowns (four overall) Saturday, and Petersen says he needs to perform at a high level again.

"We know what he can do if he's given the opportunity," Petersen said. "If we give him the ball enough he's going to make plays."

As for his defense, the coach was pleased with the improvement it showed against Miami after the season-opening loss at Michigan State.

"We tackled a little better," Petersen said. "I'm anxious to watch those guys. It's still unknown what we have there."

Besides the attractive television record, there's another statistic in Boise State's favor going into the non-conference game. The Broncos have not suffered a September loss at home since 2001.

Panthers Look to Prove Themselves

ASSOCIATED PRESS

Cam Newton is enough reason to tune into any NFL game. That Newton and Carolina come off an upset of New Orleans and now face the inconsistent defending Super Bowl champions on Thursday night makes Giants-Panthers even more intriguing.

This is a chance for the Panthers to declare themselves something more than a fun team to watch.

"This is a big stage for us," coach Ron Rivera said. "It's been a long time coming that we've played a game like this. It's the type of game that can show that we're really making progress. To come back and play really well would speak well as to where we're headed as a football team."

Where the Giants were headed last Sunday through 30 minutes was 0-2. Tampa Bay's Josh Freeman picked apart a New York defense that is struggling in the secondary, in part due to injuries but also because of weak performances from usual standouts, especially cornerback Corey Webster.

Carolina, a 1-point underdog at home, has Steve Smith and a rapidly developing Brandon LaFell at receiver.

"He's established himself as a very good complement to Steve Smith," Rivera said.

But the Giants (No. 8 in the AP Pro32) have a way of confounding everyone, just as they did against the Buccaneers with an awful first half followed by a sensational comeback. In the same game, Eli Manning went from horrid to spectacular, and the Panthers (No. 17, AP Pro32) need to improve their pass rush and run defense.

We think they will, making the kind of statement Rivera is hoping for.

Conference Clashes at Oklahoma and Florida State

ASSOCIATED PRESS

Raised stakes and contempt bred by familiarity. Conference play is different, and at this point it becomes the focus of the college football season.

The Big 12 starts Saturday with a showdown in Oklahoma, as the sixth-ranked Sooners face No. 15 Kansas State. In the Atlantic Coast Conference, No. 4 Florida State and No. 10 Clemson will go a long way toward deciding a division title in Tallahassee, Fla.

The Sooners and Wildcats bring contrasting offensive styles to Norman. Oklahoma plays up-tempo and tends to air it out with quarterback Landry Jones. K-State's star quarterback Collin Klein is battering ram who leads a deliberate, run-first attack.

Last year, the Wildcats were 7-0 when Oklahoma came to Manhattan, Kan., and the Sooners turned what was billed as a big game into a laugher. Jones passed for a school-record 505 yards in a 58-17 victory, in which the Sooners outscored the Wildcats 35-0 in the second half.

Kansas State's pass defense is shaky again, ranking at the bottom of the Big 12. The Wildcats' best defense might be Klein and tailback John Hubert churning out yards on the ground and keeping Jones on the bench.

Oklahoma coach Bob Stoops is 7-1 against his former boss, Kansas State's Bill Snyder.

In Tallahassee, the Seminoles are coming off a 52-0 victory against Wake Forest that looked about as easy as the Savannah State game the weekend before. They'll be looking for a little payback against the Tigers.

Clemson beat the 'Noles 35-30 last season and went on to win the Atlantic Division, and eventually the ACC title.

Clemson's ability to keep Florida State's talented defensive ends Bjoern Werner and Cornelius Carradine away from quarterback Tajh Boyd will be key.

Lots can happen, but it'd be a big surprise if the winner Saturday night in Doak Campbell Stadium wasn't playing in the ACC title game.

In the Pac-12, the marquee game is in Eugene, Ore., and it's for fans of fast-break football. Rich Rodriguez, one of the godfathers of the fast-pace spread offense craze, against Chip Kelly, who has revved up the spread to warp speed with the Ducks.

No. 3 Oregon has been unchallenged through three games, with D'Anthony Thomas racking up big plays. No. 22 Arizona is off to an encouraging start with Rodriguez, but the Wildcats will get a better idea of where they stand Saturday night.

Wild Card Adds Some Intrigue to Baseball

For baseball purists, there's not a whole lot to like about what Bud Selig has done to the national pastime.

More proof of that came Wednesday when Selig said he wasn't likely to do anything about Melky Cabrera winning the NL batting title while serving a 50-game suspension for a positive drug test. He also said he has no plans to do some things he should have done a long time ago — like take Barry Bonds' name off the top of the career home run list and restore Roger Maris as the legitimate single-season home run record holder.

"You can't change records because once you get into that it would never stop," Selig said in an interview for the YES Network. "It would create more problems than it would solve."

It wouldn't, but that's not the real reason baseball won't wipe the steroid slate clean. Times are good, teams are flush, and there's no real incentive for Selig to reopen the drug scandal that once threatened the game's very integrity. While stripping Cabrera of the title would be easy enough, it would spark yet another debate over whether baseball has really conquered its drug-related demons.

Purists may object, but they should understand that Selig's main job is not to uphold decades of baseball tradition, but to make baseball owners money.

That's why Seattle and Oakland met in the not-so-traditional season opener in Japan, and it's why the World Series might not end this year until November.

It's also why the Dodgers are playing in Yankee Stadium next year in June instead of October, and why the lines between the National League and American League are so blurred by interleague play that they mean nothing anymore.

Give Selig credit for doing his job well. There are new stadiums in almost every city, teams are being sold for astonishing sums, and Major League Baseball is so attractive that ESPN doubled down on it last month with a new contract that pays some $700 million a year.

And even the purists have to be rethinking the one money-making idea that really works — the addition of two new wild-card slots to the playoffs.

Without it, the New York Yankees might be a short losing streak away from not making the postseason at all. With it, the Baltimore Orioles have a good shot at the playoffs for the first time in 15 years.

Without it, the St. Louis Cardinals would have no chance of repeating their improbable run to a World Series title. With it, the Oakland A's are suddenly a threat to the usual big spenders.

We may never have a day in baseball again like the final day of last year's regular season, when after three blown saves and two walk-off wins, the Cardinals and Tampa Bay made the playoffs. But the first day of this postseason could come close, with two teams moving on and two others eliminated in the space of a few hours.

It's a tantalizing prospect, even for baseball fans who remember the days when finishing on top of the regular season standings was a guaranteed ticket into the World Series.

Imagine the Yankees having to jet across the country to play one game in Oakland, with the loser done for the season. Could easily happen. Something Yankee fans couldn't have imagined when their team held a 10-game lead in the AL East in mid-July.

How about the Cardinals against the Atlanta Braves — one game, winner take all. Is there any better way for the Braves to avenge an extra-inning loss on last season's final day that put the Cards in the playoffs?

The fear was that the expansion of the playoffs to 10 teams would take away from the division races, but the prospect of not having to play one game with the season on the line now makes winning the division even more important. It may not seem fair to players who have just battled through a 162-game regular season to have to win one game to advance, but it gives a jolt to the first day of the postseason. And until now, that buzz has been missing.

It may have also encouraged the Dodgers to break the bank for Adrian Gonzalez and others in a desperate move by new owners to deliver a playoff team — a move that hasn't quite worked out.

That's baseball, though, a game that can't always be neatly figured out. At the same time the Dodgers were spending millions, their rivals in the Bay Area were losing their best player in Cabrera. The Giants were a game out of first place then, but now they're running away with the NL West after going 21-9 without the leading hitter in the league.

The Yankees, meanwhile, are in danger of blowing the AL East, while the Boston Red Sox are an odd collection of players who have nothing left to play for this year.

It's all part of the beauty of a game that stretches from the first warm days of spring to the chilly nights of fall.

The addition of two wild-card teams give fans more reasons to hope in September, and more reasons not to change the channel when football is in full swing.

Like almost every idea hatched by Selig, it was designed to make money — and this one actually works.

Commissioners Discuss Tweaking College Football Postseason Format

ASSOCIATED PRESS

ROSEMONT, Ill. • Conference commissioners are considering the possibility of adding another game to be part of the semifinal rotation for the new college football playoff.

The postseason plan approved by university presidents in June called for the national semifinals to rotate among six bowl sites. The years those sites do not host semifinals, they would be marquee bowl games, involving other highly ranked teams.

tails still be worked before the format is implemented in 2014, including the composition of the selection committee that will pick the playoff participants, site of the first championship game and revenue distribution.

And now it seems like the plan might be tweaked to give teams that don't make the playoff more chances to play in high revenue games.

"They created a playoff and they had a working concept for access, but they knew that more conversations were needed," BCS executive director Bill Hancock said Wednesday after the second day of meetings. "There was discussion about access and whether another game might be necessary. There was ...but how it comes out, we don't know."

Good Luck to all the M.V. Teams!

Today is Thursday, Sept. 20, the 264th day of 2012. There are 102 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight:

On Sept. 20, 1962, James Meredith, a black student, was blocked from enrolling at the University of Mississippi by Democratic Gov. Ross R. Barnett. (Meredith was later admitted.)

TODAY IN HISTORY

On this date:

In 1519, Portuguese explorer Ferdinand Magellan and his crew set out from Spain on five ships to find a western passage to the Spice Islands. (Magellan was killed enroute, but one of his ships eventually circled the world.)

In 1870, Italian troops took control of the Papal States, leading to the unification of Italy.

In 1873, panic swept the floor of the New York Stock Exchange in the wake of railroad bond defaults and bank failures.

In 1884, the National Equal Rights Party was formed during a convention of suffragists in San Francisco; the convention nominated Belva Ann Bennett Lockwood for president.

In 1911, the British liner RMS Olympic collided with the Royal Navy cruiser HMS Hawke off the Isle of Wight; although seriously damaged, the Olympic was able to return to Southampton under its own power.

In 1947, former New York City Mayor Fiorello La Guardia died.

In 1958, Martin Luther King Jr. was seriously wounded during a book signing at a New York City department store when Izola Curry stabbed him in the chest. (Curry was later found mentally incompetent.)

In 1973, in their so-called "battle of the sexes," tennis star Billie Jean King defeated Bobby Riggs in straight sets, 6-4, 6-3, 6-3, at the Houston Astrodome.

In 1980, Spectacular Bid, ridden by Bill Shoemaker, ran as the only entry in the Woodward Stakes at Belmont Park in New York after three potential challengers dropped out in horse racing's first walkover since 1949.

In 1996, President Bill Clinton announced that he was signing the Defense of Marriage Act, a bill outlawing same-sex marriages, but said it should not be used as an excuse for discrimination, violence or intimidation against gays and lesbians.

Ten years ago: President George W. Bush appealed to a reluctant Russian President Vladimir Putin to back a new U.N. resolution that would threaten Iraq with war if it did not disarm; Russian officials indicated there might be room for compromise. William Rosenberg, founder of the Dunkin' Donuts chain, died in Mashpee, Mass., at age 86.

Five years ago: President George W. Bush declined to criticize Blackwater USA, a security company in Iraq accused in a shooting that resulted in civilian deaths, saying investigators needed to determine if the guards violated rules governing their operations. Thousands of chanting demonstrators filled the streets of Jena, La., in support of six black teenagers initially charged with attempted murder in the beating of a white classmate. Floyd Landis lost his expensive and explosive case when two of three arbitrators upheld the results of a test that showed the 2006 Tour de France champion had used synthetic testosterone to fuel his spectacular comeback victory. (Landis forfeited his Tour title and was subject to a two-year ban, retroactive to Jan. 30, 2007.)

One year ago: Repeal of the U.S. military's 18-year-old "don't ask, don't tell" compromise took effect, allowing gay and lesbian service members to serve openly. A suicide bomber posing as a Taliban peace envoy assassinated former Afghan President Burhanuddin Rabbani, who had headed a government council seeking a political settlement with the insurgents.

Burley, Rupert, Paul, Hailey, Kimberly, Shoshone 678-2201 or 735-3302

Gooding, Jerome, Filer, Buhl, Wendell. 735-3346

DEAR ABBY: I have to respond to your reply to "Tammi's Mom in N.J." (June 21), whose daughter won't answer her texts at college. Our daughter, "Jill," attended college 12 hours from home. She would text me almost every day — short, sweet messages always ending with "Luv U, XOXO." I looked forward to those texts because they were a lifeline to my daughter.

DEAR ABBY
Jeanne Phillips

Tammi's Mom is coping with empty nest syndrome, which no child can understand until she experiences it one day herself. Thankfully, Jill knew how much her texts meant to me. They got me through four long years without her. I hope Tammi sees this and appreciates that she has a mom who isn't smothering her, but who loves and cares about her.

— REMEMBERING IN JOHNSTOWN, PA.
DEAR REMEMBERING: Thank you for sharing. I stressed to Tammi's Mom that her daughter is growing up and trying to establish independence. However, readers were quick to point out that Tammi still owes her mother the courtesy of keeping in touch:

DEAR ABBY: When I was away at college, many students expected their parents to pay their tuition and living expenses, but stay out of their lives. Tammi's Mom said she'd be happy with a call or text every two or three days. I don't think that is unreasonable.

I have lived several hundred miles away from my family for 10 years now. I enjoy a great deal of independence, but I know it worries my parents to have me so far away. I call them every day or two. These quick phone calls (usually only five minutes) help them see that I'm safe and happy, and also allow me to remain emotionally close to my family, even though I'm not geographically close.

Abby, asking for a quick text, which takes only a few moments, is NOT "helicopter parenting."

— INDEPENDENT GIRL IN ARIZONA

DEAR ABBY: To Tammi's Mom, I say — it's time to get a life! Do things now that you've always wanted to do. If you're married, find things in common again. Sometimes when we raise our kids, we can become consumed with their wants and needs, and our marriages suffer.

Take up a new hobby and let your baby bird spread her wings. She'll thank you for it and will WANT to call you when you stop calling or texting every day. If you get yourself busy, you'll spend less time sitting by the phone.

— KNOWS FROM EXPERIENCE

DEAR ABBY: Until recently, I had two children in college — one close to home, the other several hours away. Unfortunately, there is so much violence everywhere today and kids are vulnerable to it, especially around many colleges and universities.

Kids send hundreds of text messages a day to their friends. I don't think it's too much to ask for an occasional text from your child to make sure he or she is indeed safe.

— BILL IN BLOOMSBURY, N.J.

DEAR ABBY: When my daughter left for college, I told her I was not going to call her because I didn't want to intrude on her new life, but that I would be happy to talk to her anytime she called me. Doing this empowered my somewhat rebellious girl by putting HER in charge. As a result, she would call me several times a week and our relationship was strengthened.

— WISE PARENT IN COLORADO

DEAR ABBY: While I was away at college, my dad was like Tammi's Mom, and it drove me nuts. So we compromised. Every Sunday morning at 9, Dad and I would talk on the phone. That way he could catch up on my week and know I was OK. Mom needs to give her daughter space.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE Bobby Wolff

"Nothing puzzles me more than time and space; and yet nothing troubles me less, as I never think about them."
— Charles Lamb

Reaching six no-trump from the North seat would be too hard for most of us. After you (South) open two clubs and rebid two no-trump to show a good 22-24 points, you have failed the "test." Incidentally, North might have explored for a minor-suit fit, the easiest way being to jump to five no-trump to offer a choice of slams.

Of course, West leads a heart. Resignedly, you call for dummy's heart queen, not in the least surprised when this loses to East's king. How will you play the contract when East returns a second round of hearts, removing your safe entry to dummy at an inconvenient moment?

Five diamond tricks and four club tricks will bring the total to 12. You will need to find East with the club king, of course, but you must also solve the blockage problem in diamonds. The best line is to lead the club queen from dummy. If East follows with a low club, you must unblock the club 10 from your hand. When the finesse wins, as you must hope, you continue with a low club to your jack. If East began with a doubleton or tripleton club king, you will be able to pick up the clubs. Then you can unblock the three top diamond honors and finally return to dummy by overtaking the club five with dummy's six.

Dummy's two remaining diamonds, plus the top spades in your hand, will allow you to claim the slam.

ANSWER: Your partner's jump to three diamonds is invitational, not forcing. (With a game-force, he would start with a cuebid.) So you can expect a 5-4 hand with extras, and in that context your best game is surely four hearts since it is easy to imagine hands where both red suits will have three top losers. So bid four hearts.

IF SEPTEMBER 20 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY: You might think you have the upper hand during the next two months if career, finances, business or ambitions are in question. You might, however, become fascinated by something that will waste both your time and resources; it might even mean a brief fling with a member of the opposite sex. Love and romance run more smoothly next March. Get as many irons into the fire as possible next April when your business aptitude accelerates. Once you get things launched you can coast on easy street. For best results wait until next spring to further your career prospects, launch a new business or upgrade your financial condition.

HOROSCOPE

Jeraldine Saunders

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Hunker down with the headlines. It is to your advantage to stay abreast of the latest news and data, as well as local gossip. Let others know what you think and you may be surprised by a change in behavior.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): You may meet someone who makes you think of white picket fences and two dogs in the yard. New contacts might improve your financial status by accident. Think before taking irrevocable action.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): You've got the gift of gab. You are able to talk your way into a better situation. It is an excellent time to make presentation or unveil new ideas. You can make new contacts or hook up romantically.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Become an avid student of human nature and learn everything you can. You have a knack for sparkling conversations and entertaining ideas. Use wisdom and tact to direct energies into constructive avenues.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Smart is not necessarily wise. You might experience mind-blowing revelations but must differentiate between an attainable ideal and a ludicrous goal. Rather than investing money, invest in new studies.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): You can always change your mind. The decisions you make are not commandments etched in stone. If you feel you may have chosen poorly in the past, there is no shame in choosing again.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Meet a mentor with a Mensa mentality. Hook up with someone who is not only shrewd and intelligent, but who also has a passion to succeed; a little of that talent for business success may rub off.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Speak from the heart; wear it on your sleeve. There's no need to put on airs as you will reach the pinnacle by being yourself whether the subject is business, romance, or friendship. Share the wealth.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Choices may create chances. Use your mental binoculars to look into the future to consider whether or not you can secure something more valuable and useful. To become efficient you need to prioritize.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You can be caring and kind without being critical. Walk a fine line between being cooperative and remaining independent. It may be difficult to implement change without being considered outlandish.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): If you are busy or over-scheduled you might make snap judgments. You must focus on the most significant details. Consider constructive ideals without condoning yourself off from essential facts.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Revisit the Vulcan mind meld. Quit worrying about circumstances that you can't control. You can only control your own actions and reactions. Release worry and fears that hold you back. Meditate.
