Remembering His Service

SHOSHONE • His orders were to remain at a 500 feet flying altitude, but he had bullets grazing the belly of his C-47.

Serving as the plane's co-pilot, Bud Andrew began pulling the plane's nose up. He was headed to Bastion, France, and he couldn't afford a bullet hitting a gasoline tank in the gliders he was

Years later, history buffs would refer to Dec. 26, 1944, as the Battle of Bulge. At the time, Andrew was just focused on keeping his plane - and the rest of his squadron — from getting hit.

"They were shooting right under us," Andrew said. "So we kept climbing, we probably gained another 100 feet or so."

Andrew, 88, is a WWII U.S. Army Air Force veteran. Today, he lives in a quiet home nestled by a stream in Shoshone. He lives with a rather large cat and stops for coffee at the Manhattan Café.

Ask Bud a story about the war and he'll begin spitting dates and details with a razor sharp memory. He lists the dates Gooding Seeks Veterans' Names

GOODING • Gooding High School is seeking names for a new Wall of Honor, recognizing graduates who served in the armed forces.

The wall will include the name, graduation year and service branch of each graduate and will be dedicated as part of the high school's centennial in 2013. It will occupy the high school's main corridor wall.

He was drafted in 1942. He learned to fly in 1943. And he went to serve oversees just eight days after D-Day.

"I arrived in England on June 14, 1944," he said. "It didn't hurt my feelings not

His two brothers, Bill and Ralph, were also drafted. Like Bud, they became pilots. Ralph served in Japan. Bill never made it to the war. During a routine test flight in California, Bill's plane was forced to make an emergency landing in a bay. But since he never learned to swim, Bill drowned.

"It took them a week to find his body," Bud said. "When they did find him, I wasn't given leave to go to his funeral."

During his time abroad, Bud picked up a few souvenirs, but over time memories of where he gotthe items have turned hazy.

"I have a Nazi swastika armband and a bayonet, but I can't remember how I got them," he said. "I've given them to my daughter now. I just wish I could remember where I was when I found them."

While he was stationed in Orleans, France, Bud would occasionally travel to Paris. He didn't have a lot of time to explore the area but he could hop a train and be back on base the same day.

TWIN FALLS • Twin Falls County DUI Court coordinator Steve Conger said one of the worst cases he saw was a man who spent 18 years in prison off and on for DUIs. Then he got another DUI shortly after getting out of prison.

"The judge said, 'I'm going to make you do DUI court,'" Conger said. "Now he's four years sober."

Conger said he often hears from family members of people who have cleaned up after going through the court who thank him for giving them their loved one back.

"I didn't give anybody back," he said. "He chose to wake up."

determine the level of their addiction and how likely they are to reoffend.

"It was originally designed to evaluate recidivism rates among felons," Conger said.

The questions, often extremely personal, ask about employment, education, drug problems, family life, financial issues, what a person's friends are like, emotional health and a person's attitude toward the court and law enforcement.

In order to be accepted into DUI court, a person must score somewhere in the middle. A high score means DUI court won't be of much use — a person may be too entrenched in their former life, Conger said.

Score too low, and regular probation is probably the better plan.

"Basically, we could do more harm than good," Conger said.

Getting in the program can allow someone with a DUI to get a restricted driver's license that allows them to drive to and from work.

TWIN FALLS • As a result of Proposition 3 being overturned by voters, Idaho school districts could lose a total of $21.3 million in funding.

That's because they won't receive money for items under the Students Come First law such as classroom technology and funding for more math and science classes.

A document with the information is dated Oct. 29 — about a week before Election Day.

Luci Willits, chief of staff for the Idaho State Department of Education, was out of the office Friday and said she didn't have an answer to questions about the document at this time.

The department, she said, is receiving many questions following the repeal of the Students Come First

Police Investigate Fatal Crash in Jerome County

TIMES-NEWS

JEROME • Idaho State Police investigated a two vehicle crash that occurred around 1:07 p.m. on Interstate 84 at milepost 179, in Jerome County.

Rebecca Lock, 53, of Twin Falls was driving east in the right lane on Interstate 84 in a 2005 Chrysler Pacifica. Alladin Umarov, 46, of Boise was driving east in the left lane in a 2004 Toyota Camry. Lock attempted to change lanes. According to the ISP, Umarov attempted to avoid contact by driving off the interstate. While attempting to return to the road, Umarov's vehicle made contact with Lock's vehicle, resulting in Lock's vehicle rolling several times, coming to rest on its roof in the median. Umarov's vehicle continued across the lanes of travel and went off the right side of the road through a fence.

Umarov and Lock were transported by ground ambulance to St. Luke's Magic Valley Medical Center in Twin Falls. According to the ISP, a juvenile passenger in Lock's vehicle succumbed to injuries at the scene of the crash.

The left lane of travel was blocked for approximately 2

Meridian Man Convicted in Killing Wants New Trial

BOISE (AP) • A Meridian man convicted of seconddegree murder has asked for a new trial.

The Idaho Statesman reports that attorneys for Rob Hall filed the motion Thursday in 4th District Court, contending the jury's guilty verdict isn't supported by the evidence. Hall was convicted Oct. 25 in the March 2011 shooting death of his wife's lover in a drugstore parking lot. He's scheduled to be sentenced Dec. 13.

Hall's attorneys say the handgun fell out of Hall's sweat shirt pocket during a struggle with Emmett Corrigan. The attorneys say Hall has no memory of firing a gun, but had he fired it would have been in selfdefense.

A hearing on the new motion is set for Nov. 29. The motion doesn't include any new evidence.

Judge Disqualified from Case Involving Reservoir

KETCHUM (AP) • A judge who ordered a canal company to release water from a dam in south-central Idaho so a leaking hydraulic oil line could be repaired has been disqualified from the legal process at the request of the canal company.

The Idaho Mountain Ex*press* reports the Big Wood Canal Co. filed a disqualification motion against 5th District Court Judge Robert Elgee on Nov. 1.

Elgee on Oct. 23 ordered the company to release water from Magic Reservoir after Magic Reservoir Hydroelectric, a wholly owned subsidiary of J.R. Simplot Co., filed a lawsuit seeking to force the canal company to release water.

Idaho judicial rules allow a litigant to disqualify one judge without stating a reason. The case has been assigned to 5th District Court Judge Jonathan Brody, and a hearing is scheduled in Hailey for Nov. 20.

Magic Reservoir Hydroelectric in the lawsuit said it needed the reservoir lowered so it could make repairs to a leaking hydraulic oil line. The company said it faced fines of up to $32,000 a day from the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency.

The company in its lawsuit, besides requesting the drawdown, also asked for attorney fees and other costs the court deems appropriate.

In court documents, the canal company said releasing water could jeopardize water reserves for the 2013 irrigation season.

But the canal company on Oct. 29 announced that it would release the water from the reservoir that at that time held about 54,000 acre-feet of water. It said the drawdown would require about a third of that to be released.

The release from the reservoir has ramped up in recent days, with the Big Wood River flowing at 1,130 cubic feet per second below the dam on Thursday, well above the typical flow for this time of year.

Crapo, Simpson Eye Possible Budget Deal

BOISE (AP) • U.S. Sen. Mike Crapo and U.S. Rep. Mike Simpson could play key roles in crafting legislation concerning the nation's deficit and debt as the so-called fiscal cliff approaches.

The Idaho Statesman reports the two Republican lawmakers from Idaho say they want to see a deal reached.

"My first preference is we put together that kind of plan in the lame-duck session," Crapo said.

Crapo is a member of the bipartisan "Gang of Six" that pushed for a bargain last year. He's also moving up to the No. 2 Republican on the Finance Committee involved in writing tax provisions.

Simpson is an Appropriations subcommittee chairman and would be working on budget cuts.

Both lawmakers said working out a bargain could take a significant amount of

"If you're going to reform the tax code, if you're going to reform the entitlement program, that's not something you can do in a couple of weeks," Simpson said.

The fiscal cliff is an economy-rattling combination of expiring Bush- and Obamaera tax cuts and major acrossthe-board spending cuts to the Pentagon and domestic programs set to kick in Jan. 1.

Crapo said he sees a bill that puts caps on federal budgets and entitlement costs, and a range of possible tax rates. Those outlines would be handed to congressional committees to figure out the details.

"If you do something big, you have to involve the committees," Simpson said.

Idaho Republican Rep. Raul

Labrador in the run up to the election said he's not in favor of Congress taking any major action in the lame-duck session.

"Every major decision that is made during a lame-duck session is actually bad for America," he said.

It's unclear how the two sides will deal with their disagreement about raising taxes on wealthy Americans. President Barack Obama said Friday that his re-election gave him a mandate to pursue that position because "the majority of Americans agree with my approach." House Speaker John Boehner said raising tax rates as Obama wants "will destroy jobs in America."

"Both President Obama and Speaker Boehner have said they were willing to come together on these larger issues," Crapo said.

Montana Wildlife Company Will Defy State, Spare Bear

BOZEMAN, Mont. (AP) • A Montana wildlife company said Saturday that it will defy the state's request that it kill a captive brown bear involved in the fatal mauling of an animal trainer.

Demetri Price, head trainer for Animals of Montana, Inc. near Bozeman, said Saturday the company would challenge any attempt to kill nicknamed bear Yosemite.

Trainer Benjamin Cloutier was killed Nov. 4 while cleaning a cage with Yosemite and a second bear that was later shot by Price.

Price says he believes Yosemite did not take part in the mauling, although he said there was no way to know for sure. He said that when he arrived to find Cloutier dead, Griz was protecting the body and Yosemite was staying away.

The captive-bred animals were used for photography and filmmaking.

State wildlife officials on Friday requested that Yosemite be killed to protect the safety of the public and employees of Animals of Montana. It's unclear if the state's request — referred to as an order in an earlier report — has legal standing.

A spokesman for Montana

Fish, Wildlife and Parks did not immediately return a telephone message seeking comment.

The circumstances surrounding Cloutier's death remains under investigation by state and federal officials, although the Gallatin County sheriff has ruled it an accident and said it does not appear to be a criminal

Personal Experience

Jake Brady graduated DUI court in September. After his second driving under the influence charge, Brady said his attorney told him about DUI court.

After applying, Brady was placed on a waiting list for four months.

"Once I got in everything ran smoothly," he said. "It was probably one of the best things that's happened to me."

Over the year he spent in DUI court, Brady bought a house and finished his associate degree in diesel mechanics at the College of Southern Idaho.

"I did some big things in my life while I was in there," he said.

During the four months of waiting for a spot to open up, Brady said he rode a bike everywhere. Brady said he was a full-time student and was thankful his boss at Burks Tractor Co. didn't fire him after his

From work, to counseling and Alcoholics Anonymous meetings, to his CSI classes and home to his fiancée and three children, Brady was on his bike.

"It was tough, but I got through it," he While DUI court has tough requirements, Brady said the experience was worth it for many reasons.

"It sounds bad going to court every week, but you're only in there for a half hour," he said. "I recommend to people that have the option to go in on a Wednesday and check it out."

Brady also praised the court's staff.

"They're not there to get you in trouble; they're there to help you," he said. "People have a misconception. It was a life changing experience for me. I'm doing amazing right now."

Self-sustaining Program

DUI court started in Twin Falls County after a three-year grant was awarded for its creation.

The DUI court opened its doors in October 2006 with a judge, clerk, Conger and one client.

"Then we ended up with two; two turned into 12," Conger said.

Eventually, the court grew to an average of 50 people.

Now that the grant has run out, the court is supported by fees from partici-

Every client must pay a $100 monthly fee, which also covers their drug and alcohol tests. The ignition interlock that tests for alcohol in a client's vehicle costs $80 a month and treatment costs are even more. The average person spends about $2,500 on treatment during their time in DUI court, Conger said.

The cost of the program is one reason for its success, said 5th Judicial District Trial Court Administrator Linda Wright.

"They are invested in it," Wright said. "It's not a freebie to them. There are fees every week."

Court is supposed to be impersonal for a lot of different reasons, Wright said. DUI court is totally different.

"You get to feeling sort of paternal for these people," Kershaw said. "It's a whole different thing because you have a relationship."

Room to Mess Up

The court allows for some slip-ups along the way that would carry a different punishment than regular probation.

Initially, participants must attend court every Wednesday morning at 7:30 a.m. As they progress through the program, they come to court less often.

They also attend weekly therapy and 12-step programs and must regularly submit to urine analysis tests and have a breath testing device installed in their car that will prevent it from starting with a mere trace of alcohol.

In court each morning, Kershaw has just a half hour to talk with the court participants and have several people step up to answer a weekly question.

He might ask what support the court can provide, where a person was when they received their DUI or ask what it means to really be honest with themselves. Individual problems are also discussed.

If a person hasn't shown up to court, therapy or other assigned treatment, Kershaw calls them up to his bench.

Having a relapse and drinking is also a reason to be sanctioned. Participants might get a warning or could be sentenced to community service hours or a few days in jail.

Kershaw said his attitude has changed toward people who make mistakes after sentencing.

"I thought we give you a chance, if you blow it, that's it," he said.

While that's sometimes true, DUI court is different, he said.

"It doesn't work that way with addiction," Kershaw said. "We can't count on the first attempt being successful."

At the same time, Kershaw said, he doesn't want to give people permission to

Right now, Conger supervises about 40 DUI court graduates who are still on

The hope is that the DUI court experience has given them the tools to care for themselves.

"If they fail now it's a normal probation violation," he said.

Changing Lives

Many people get a DUI and never get another one, Kershaw said. They're embarrassed, they take their punishment and move on. For others, it's not so easy.

The fact that people can go through DUI court and still see their family and generally keep their job is a bonus, Kershaw said.

Those who successfully complete DUI court are much less likely to get another DUI. Kershaw said.

Kershaw said he knows the court has a positive impact on the people who go through it, but hasn't seen an impact in the number of people convicted of DUIs.

"I know it makes a difference in individual people's lives," Kershaw said. "But the DUIs keep rolling in."

No End to Legal Battle over Nev. Forest Road, Fish

BY SCOTT SONNER Associated Press

RENO, Nev. • Environmentalists waging a legal battle for more than a decade aimed at shutting down a national forest road that runs through the habitat of threatened fish in northeast Nevada say the laws of nature eventually will hand them a victory in the form of another flood that washes out the South Canyon Road leading to some of the most remote wilderness in the West.

But in the meantime, they're trying to persuade the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals to do it for them based on their claims the U.S. Forest Service illegally bowed to local political pressure and rebuilt the road after a 1995 flood in violation of a series of federal environmental laws.

"The agency decision basically ignores the law and ignores the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service's determination that this very activity of letting vehicles drive through the river is a threat to the habitat of the bull trout," said Alison Flint, an Earthjustice lawyer based in Denver who last week argued the case on behalf of The Wilderness Society and the Utah-based Great Old Broads for Wilderness.

"What happened here is they cut a deal with Elko County. There was strong local pressure to open this canyon, and the Forest Service ultimately bent to that pressure. They made a management decision to violate the law," she said in an interview after her appearance before a three-judge panel in San Francisco on Tuesday.

Specifically, the conservationists are appealing the latest related ruling in August by U.S. District Court Judge Roger Hunt in Las Vegas, who denied their request to throw out a 2005 settlement agreement between the federal government and local officials in Elko County that would legitimize the existence of the gravel road along the Jarbidge River near the Nevada-Idaho line.

The Forest Service initially decided not to rebuild the road, citing fears the road would encourage erosion and wash silt into the water, harming the river's bull trout. But protesters known as the "Shovel Brigade" worked to rebuild the road themselves in 1998 and the matter has been tied up in court since.

In addition to violating the National Environmental Policy Act and Endangered Species Act, the road violates an executive order President Carter signed in 1977 prohibiting road construction in flood plains unless there is no practical alternative, the environmen-

"This road has washed out five times in 25 years. It is in a flood plain," Flint said. "It is just a matter of time until the next major flood comes roaring down the canyon and causes major damage again, and the Forest Service will be faced with another very expensive reconstruction project."

"In the meantime, the resource and the bull trout suffer. And the real point here is that the Forest Service needs to be held accountable and comply with federal laws designed to protect these resources. A court ruling that recognizes that this road violates federal law would accomplish

BURLEY • Maxine Ruth Owsley Albertson passed away Tuesday, Nov. 6, 2012, at the Cassia Regional Medical Center in Burley at the age of 88.

Mom was born July 5, 1924, in Hagerman, Idaho, to Alvin Clark "Scott" and Millie Melissa Owsley. She was one of five children and was raised in Hagerman. Mom married Thomas Albertson on Aug. 22, 1940, and they had 60 wonderful years together. They had four children, Linda, Scott, Mike and Sherry. Scott (Diana) Albertson lives in Lewiston, Idaho; Linda Dudley passed away last year; Mike (Shirley) Albertson lives in Wendell; and Sherry (Leon) Sellers lives in Rupert.

Two things mom and dad loved to do were fish and play pinochle. The family moved from Hagerman in 1957 and lived in several places before settling in Hazelton in 1959, where dad farmed. In 1963, they moved to Burley. Mom was a pink lady at Cassia Regional Medical Center for many years and later worked as a foster grandparent at the Burley elementary schools and as a senior companion at Parke View Rehabilitation and Care Center.

She was preceded in death by her parents; two brothers, Clark and Bob; two sisters, Florance and Garnet; her daughter, Linda; and her husband, Tom.

Donald Harper 'Don' Childers

Sept. 19, 1922-Nov. 5, 2012

WENDELL • Our loving husband and father, Donald Harper "Don" Childers, 90, of Wendell, passed away Monday, Nov. 5, 2012, in Twin Falls.

He was born Sept. 19, 1922, in Twin Falls, Idaho, the youngest of four children born to Harper and Rosa Childers. Don finished the ninth grade in Jerome and worked on his father's farm until he met the love of his life, Charlotte Holloway. They were married July 16, 1950. To this union were born four wonderful children. Don worked as a cement foreman on the C.J. Strike Dam. He started farming in 1953 in the Sugarloaf area. Throughout his life, he farmed, custom thrashed and also drove for Sun Valley Stages for 34 years. Don's hobby was cutting firewood — the bigger the tree, the better. He always enjoyed the challenge the pine offered. He also enjoyed hunting, long drives and playing cards and Aggravation on New Year's Eve with Don and Sue Shewmaker.

Don is survived by his loving wife of 62 years, Charlotte Childers of Wendell; four children, Gaylin (Pam) Childers, Janet (Steve) Ploss, all of Jerome, Rod (Linda) Childers of Enterprise, Ore., and Geneal (Terry) Bailey of Big Piney, Wyo. He is also survived by six grandchildren, Jay, Angie, Tanya, Cassidy, Pepper and Buffy; and many great-grandchildren, extended family members and friends. He is preceded in death by his parents, two brothers and one sister.

Don's family would like to thank the amazing physical therapy staff at Bridgeview Estates and the staff at St. Luke's Magic Valley Medical Center for all of the wonderful care our husband and father received.

Family and friends are invited to celebrate Don's life at a potluck luncheon from 1 to 4 p.m. Saturday, Nov. 17, at the Wendell American Legion Hall, 610 W. Main St. in Wendell, Idaho.

Don's family suggests that in lieu of flowers, memorials be made in Don's name to Shriner's Hospital for Children, Fairfax Road at Virginia Street, Salt Lake City, UT 84103.

Arrangements are under the care of Farnsworth Mortuary of Jerome.

Read about the history of Veterans Day and share the story with your grandchildren. If you are a military veteran, show your grandchildren old photos, letters, medals or uniforms. Tell them your own story. Help your grandchild write a letter to a soldier currently serving our country. Have children draw a picture of Veterans Day and what this holiday means to them. If your grandchild knows someone in the military, they can draw a picture of that person and send it to them. Take your grandchildren to a Veterans Day parade or ceremony. Teach your grandchildren how to fold an American flag. Be sure to explain what each fold means. Veterans Day honors those who have served our country. It is never too early to teach youngsters about it.

Verl Woodrow Perkel

July 10, 1917-Nov. 9, 2012

HOMEDALE • Longtime Homedale area resident Verl Woodrow Perkel, 95, died peacefully in his sleep on Friday, Nov. 9, 2012, at his home.

He was born July 10, 1917, on the fruit farm that his parents, George Ward Perkel and Etta Smith, homesteaded in Homedale, Idaho. He and his twin brother, Earl, were the eldest of five children. Upon his father's death, Verl inherited Perkel Orchards, and grew and sold fruit there until he retired. After he sold the farm in 1990, he continued to stay busy in the orchards he loved by trapping gophers, one season trapping as many as married Nora He Turner in 1944, and together they had six children. They were later divorced. He married Pearl Gorton in 1976 and accepted her three children as his own.

He was an active member of the LDS Church in Homedale and held many positions in the church. He had a strong testimony of the Gospel until his dying day.

Verl was an avid bowler most of his life; he was a lover of music – playing trumpet in his family band for a number of years. He was proud of his family history and loved sharing the stories of his family with those he came in contact with including the story of how his parents arrived in Homedale by covered wagon. Verl had a remarkable memory - remembering all birthdays of his children and grandchildren. He loved having his family come to visit him and delighted in all the new grandbabies.

Verl had an active imag-of ways to help resolve the nation's energy crisis and thoroughly enjoyed his opportunities to talk with Gov. Otter and other government leaders about his ideas.

He was preceded in death by his parents, two brothers and two sisters. He was also preceded in death by two daughters, Norene Perkel, Mary Ann Perkel; and a son, Murton Perkel. He is survived by his wife, Pearl of Homedale area; daughters, Carolyn (Ron) Draper of Twin Falls, Idaho, Janet Perkel of Arizona, Marilynn (Gary) Folwell of Marsing, Idaho, and Beverly (Fred) Bilbrey of Emmett, Idaho; sons, Verl "Mike" W. Perkel Jr. of Twin Falls, Idaho, and Jay Bruce Gorton of Boise, Idaho; and numerous grandchildren, greatgrandchildren, and greatgreat-grandchildren.

Visitation will be held from 9:30 to 11 a.m. Wednesday, Nov. 14, at the church. Verl's funeral service will be at 11 a.m. Wednesday, Nov. 14, at the Homedale 2nd Ward, Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Services are under the care of Flahiff Funeral Chapel in Homedale. Interment will follow at Wilder Cemetery in Wilder, Idaho. Condolences may be given at www.Flahifffuneralchapel.com.

Gaymore Rene Wall

Aug. 16, 1933-Nov. 8, 2012

RUPERT • Gaymore Rene Wall, died Thursday, Nov. 8, 2012, at the age of 79, at the Minidoka Memorial Hospital located in Rupert, Idaho. His residence was 341 E. 200 N. in Rupert.

Gaymore was a member of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. He died as a stalwart and dedicated disciple of Jesus Christ, ready to be received into His outstretched arms and hear the glad message, "Well done thou good and faithful servant." His love for both his Father in Heaven and his Lord and Savior was deep and steady, lasting through a long life of service and devotion. He kept all his covenants with God in a way that will forever influence the lives of his descendants for good. Born Aug. 16, 1933, in Rupert, Minidoka, Idaho, Gaymore was the second child of nine born to Speed Henry Wall and Vera Luella Quarnstrom. He grew up in Rupert, attending schools there. He graduated from Rupert High School in 1951. Gaymore married Esther Noble in the Idaho Falls LDS Temple on June 7, 1951. They were lifelong sweethearts and companions. Esther died in 2006 and Gaymore has anxiously looked forward to being together with her again.

Gaymore and Esther moved to Utah soon after their marriage. They lived in Salt Lake City for many years, where they raised their family. Gaymore worked as a journeyman plumber until 1989, when he and Esther moved back to Idaho. They lived in the Paul area, where Gaymore was employed on Mike Woodland's farm until 2000. At this time they bought a little home and moved back to Rupert, living in the same ward where they had both grown up. Gaymore fulfilled many callings in the church, including serving as a bishop in the Cannon 6th Ward in Salt Lake City. Whatever church calling he was given was considered as a sacred trust to be carried out with 100 percent of his effort. He had a unique talent for teaching the gospel, which was tied to his lifelong thirst to fully understand the scriptures. Gaymore and Esther served missions for the church in Australia, Gaymore is also survived by six siblings, Jeanette Webb, Larry Wall, Myrna Grant, LaNelle Bacon, Wendy Catherman and Rick Wall. Gaymore was preceded in death by his parents; sister, Carma Lou Wall; brother, Chris Henry Wall; and a granddaughter, Laura Steel. Gaymore has 43 grandchildren and more than 70 great-grandchildren.

The funeral will be held at noon Saturday, Nov. 17, at the Rupert LDS 1st Ward Church (the former Rupert LDS Tabernacle), 806 G St. in Rupert, with Bishop Mark D. Sanderson officiating. Burial will be in the Rupert Cemetery. Friends may call from 6 until 8 p.m. Friday, Nov. 16, at the Rasmussen Funeral Home, 1350 E. 16th St. in Burley, and from 11 until 11:45 a.m. Saturday at the church.

Laura E. Mitchell

Nov. 8, 1923-Nov. 1, 2012

JEROME • On Thursday, Nov. 1, 2012, we all lost a dear friend. Laura E. Mitchell, 88, of Twin Falls and formerly of Jerome, passed away while residing at Wynwood Assisted Living Center.

Laura was born Nov. 8, 1923, in Tulsa, Okla., to William and Margaret Hallier. Her father worked as a barber and they lived in many locations throughout the Western United States. Laura's most vivid memories are from when she lived and went to school in Leadville, Colo. When she was in high school, her family moved to Albuquerque, N.M. After graduation, she began working at a local bank. At around age 20, her family moved for the last time, settling in Las Vegas, where she began her career with Mountain Bell. While working at "Ma Bell," she met Don Mitchell, and they were married on June 12, 1951. They made their home in Las Vegas until retiring, and then settled in Jerome. Don and Laura enjoyed each other's company as they traveled throughout the U.S. and Canada.

Laura is preceded in death by her parents and her husband, Don.

A celebration of life service will be held at 3 p.m. Thursday, Nov. 15, at the Wynwood Assisted Living Center, 1367 Locust St. N. in Twin Falls. Laura's extended family would like to thank the wonderful staff at Wynwood and Hospice Visions for the loving and caring help they provided for her. Arrangements are under the care of Farnsworth Mortuary of Jerome.

The Other Albertsons As rumors of a reunited grocery chain swirl, the potential owner stays under the radar in Idaho.

BY AUDREY DUTTON

Idaho Statesman

A company you've probably never heard of is rounding up money to take control all of the Albertsons supermarkets in Idaho and elsewhere that Supervalu bought six years ago. One analyst says that could put some Albertsons' employees' jobs at risk.

The company is Cerberus Capital Management, a New York private-equity firm. According to The Wall Street Journal and Debtwire, a daily trade newspaper, Cerberus is preparing to borrow $4 billion to $5 billion to acquire Supervalu, the struggling Minnesota company that bought most of Albertsons Inc. in 2006, ending Albertsons as an independent, Boise-based company.

Cerberus is intimately familiar with Albertsons. When Supervalu bought more than 1,100 Albertsons supermarkets six years ago, it cast aside about 650 Albertsons stores that it didn't want. Cerberus led a team of investors whi bought them. Cerberus and its partners created a new business to run them - or dispose of them, in hundreds of cases — and named it Albertson's LLC.

You probably haven't heard of Albertson's LLC either. But it's based in east Boise, where it shares a building at 500 E. Baybrook Court with Supervalu. Supervalu still maintains its regional offices for Albertsons stores in Boise.

Albertson's LLC shies away from publicity and maintains a low local profile. You won't find Albertson's LLC sponsoring prominent local fund-raisers for charity as Supervalu does with the annual Albertsons Open golf tournament, which it inherited from Albertsons Inc. – or buying tables at local chamber of commerce lunches. It contributes to communities where its stores are located.

The 600-plus stores in numerous states have shrunk to about 200 from Arizona to Florida as the company closed or sold stores. They still carry the Albertsons name and logo, though recently the chain started calling them Albertsons Markets. They still operate in cooperation with Supervalu under terms set in the 2006 purchase.

Supervalu, too, has closed hundreds of stores. But Supervalu has failed to boost sales and profits despite repeated efforts to turn itself around. Last summer, Supervalu essentially surrendered, putting itself up for sale and firing its CEO. If Cerberus buys Supervalu, the two Albertsons chains would be reunited.

A spokesman for Cerberus directed all questions for this story to Albertson's LLC. A spokeswoman for Albertson's LLC said the company did not want to comment.

Two Roads Traveled

Albertson's LLC takes a different hue based on the angle from which you see it. It's one of the Top 100 retailers in the country based on sales. Or, as some analysts say, it's a real estate investor that also runs grocery stores.

Joe Albertson built Albertsons in 1939, starting from a single store at 16th and State streets. It grew into the second-largest grocery chain in the country. Albertsons bought other companies as it grew. By 2005, it was in three dozen states under a dozen banners and employed 240,000 people.

But it struggled even then. Analysts say Albertsons Inc. stumbled in its later years because it overextended itself in acquisitions, the management in Boise didn't fully understand the East Coast market and it faced tough competitors like Walmart and Boise's WinCo Foods. That's what led to the sale in 2006. "The very worst stores went to Albertson's LLC, and Supervalu took the very best ones," said David J. Livingston, a Milwaukee-based supermarket analyst. Cerberus, which specializes in distressed businesses, wasted no time paring its portfolio. By the end of the year, Albertson's LLC had shuttered or announced plans to close about 250 of those stores.

What happened from 2006 to 2012 has been a lesson in expectations. The worst stores turned out to be the best investments, analysts said.

Here's why: Supervalu bought the best-performing Albertsons stores, but they were still below average for the grocery-store universe, Livingston said. "And not only that, they borrowed money to do it, which makes the story turn out worse," he

Supervalu borrowed $6.5 billion to finance the pur-

Meanwhile, Albertsons LLC sold many of its stores piecemeal, said Burt Flickinger, a supermarket and retail analyst and the managing director of Strategic Resource Group in New York. For example, Albertson's LLC bought a slew of Florida stores and sold dozens of them to a competing supermarket chain, Publix, before the Florida commercial and residential real estate collapse, Flickinger said. Those sales were "extremely profitable,: he said.

They "made money both operating stores and selling stores - probably made more money selling stores," Flickinger said.

A case study on the Cerberus website shows how it handled an unnamed grocery-chain acquisition whose details match the Albertsons purchase.

"When a Cerberus-led consortium of investors and two retailers acquired the company, it was suffering from years of mismanaged stores and substantial real estate debt," Cerberus said.

Cerberus said it cut debt from $1 billion to $120 million by refinancing or paying creditors, sold and leased back properties to cut more than $300 million in real estate debt, cut product costs by switching its supply to a retailer-owned cooperative, and launched new storebranded products.

Albertson's LLC now has about 20,000 employees, according to its website. A report by the National Retail Federation says it had $4.1 billion in U.S. sales last year, about 5 percent less than in

Shrewd Investors

Livingston describes Albertson's LLC as "grocery store morticians" who take dead stores and embalm them, making them presentable for viewings, and then burying them when they're ready to be sold off.

"They're salvage operators," he said.

Supervalu won't talk about a possible Cerberus purchase. Spokesman Mike Siemienas said Supervalu is in "active dialogues with several parties" about a possible deal, and there is no guarantee that talks will end in a sale or any other transaction.

One of the wild cards in Albertson's LLC's future as a grocery-store operator, especially after a Supervalu takeover, is the growth of competitors, led by WinCo, Flickinger said. He called WinCo "the worst nightmare for Albertson's LLC in Arizona and all the Intermountain region."

WinCo is trouncing even low-priced competitors, he said. One key product supplier whom Flickinger declined to name told him WinCo sold twice as much of that product than a competing Walmart less than two miles away. When Win-Co arrives in a city, Albertsons stores lose about onethird of that product's sales, he said.

Albertson's LLC's stores in Arizona tend to price key goods about 27 percent higher than Walmart and Target and about 29 percent higher than WinCo, he said. But the Albertsons stores excel in food freshness, cleanliness, food safety and customer service, he said.

Cerberus's partners in the 2006 purchase were Kimco Realty Corp. of New Hyde Park, N.Y.; Schottenstein Stores Corp. of Columbus, Ohio; Lubert-Adler Partners of Philadelphia; and Klaff Realty LP of Chicago.

In an August conference call with investors, Kimco Chief Financial Officer Glenn Cohen called Albertson's LLC "an investment that keeps on giving," The Wall Street Journal reported. Kimco's $51 million for a 15 percent stake has been repaid nearly five times over, Cohen

Will Albertson's in Idaho Close?

Livingston predicts a Cerberus acquisition would lead to stores being sold to competitors such as WinCo, Whole Foods and Walmart, which is rolling out its small Walmart Neighborhood Markets. The properties also could be subdivided for dol-

The website for Albertsons Market says the chain's goal isn't to be the biggest grocery retailer but to be best. Analysts say its remaining stores are profitable.

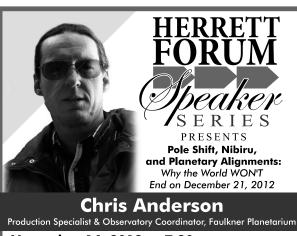

"Albertsons is still a very viable competitor in New Mexico and Arizona, where Albertson's LLC has over 70 stores," Flickinger said.

He's also optimistic that an acquisition wo''t spell the end of Albertsons stores in their home state. Supervalu has not closed any Idaho stores in its six years of ownership.

TWIN FALLS • The latest world grain balance sheet didn't hold a lot of good news for Idaho's small grain producers.

U.S. Department of Agriculture forecasters shaved 50 million bushels off anticipated wheat exports due to the slow pace of exports to date. Less wheat in the export channels means more wheat in bins, and so USDA raised projected ending stocks by the same amount to 704 million bu.

That's not considered a burdensome level, but it is about 38 million bu. higher than the average trade pre-report estimate.

Even though Idaho exports about half the wheat grown in the state, Blaine Jacobson isn't surprised nor panicked by the November World Agriculture Supply and Demand Estimate.

"Competing crops have reduced the amount of U.S. wheat available for export so I don't think we'll be gaining market share in the current crop year," the executive director for the Idaho Wheat Commission said.

"However, if prices stay high it will lead to larger crops next year and larger supplies to be able to export from."

Brian Basting, with Advance Trading, thought the United States would be in a position to make more export sales, but now says the U.S. is likely to remain a residual supplier. He was somewhat surprised to see USDA raise its forecast for exports from the FSU 12 by 3 million metric tons (mmt).

Russia accounts for 1 mmt of that increase and Ukraine 2 mmt. Russia and Ukraine are more concerned with maintaining their world share than maintaining stocks, Basting said in a conference call sponsored by the Minneapolis Grain Exchange following release of the November report.

When the 1 mmt increase in exports from the European Union and the 0.5 mmt increase from India is factored in, it's no wonder that U.S. exports are Basting is also watching the situation in Canada closely. USDA is forecasting that Canada will produce a 26.7 mmt crop and export 19 mmt. In comparison, Canada produced 25.3 mmt last year and exported 17.35 mmt.

"We are looking at stronger competition than we expected just a few months ago," Basting

One potential bright spot is that USDA cut its forecast for the Australian wheat crop by 2 mmt and exports by 1.5 mmt.

"That may give a ray of hope for the second half of the marketing year (December to May)," Basting said.

If the Australian crop continues to deteriorate, demand for wheat from the Pacific Northwest should increase. Jacobson said a short Australian crop could lead to contracting for hard white wheat because Australia Standard White is more similar to hard white grown in Idaho than soft white.

Initial reaction from the report was to push wheat prices lower. Paul Patterson, a grain economist with the University of Idaho, wouldn't be surprised to see soft white wheat drop back below the $9 per bu. price it has achieved lately and to trade mostly in the $8.50 to $8.80 per bu. range.

Corn prices at today's level puts a $8.25 to $8.40 floor under soft white wheat.

"It would take a substantial drop in corn prices, which I don't expect, to lower this floor," Patterson said.

However, Basting expects corn prices to continue drifting lower under weak demand. If the Corn Belt continues to be dry next year or the Argentina crop is smaller than anticipated, prices could begin rising again. USDA lowered the average farm-gate price for U.S. corn to a range of $6.95 to $8.25 per bu.

USDA tightened the average farm-gate price range for wheat to $7.75 to $8.45 per bu. compared to $7.24 for the 2011-12 marketing year, which ended May 31, 2012. Barley price was also tightened to a range of $6.05 to $6.85 per bu.

Idaho Dairymen's Association Leads Effort to Help Dairy Producers Cut Energy Costs

TWIN FALLS • In today's economic climate dairy producers are focused on maximizing operational budgets. While Idaho's energy costs are lower than the national average, dairy producers could gain substantial savings and efficiencies by knowing exactly how energy (electricity, propane, diesel and natural gas) is being used in their operations, how it affects the utility bills, and what steps can be taken to cut costs and save energy.

The Industry Relations Committee of the Idaho Dairymen's Association (IDA) board of directors is leading an awareness effort in partnership with the Innovation Center for U.S. Dairy®, USDA-Natural Resources and Conservation Services, EnSave, and others in the state to help dairy producers to increase energy efficiency, cut costs and save energy.

"These are tough, economic times and producers are struggling to cash flow their farms. So, looking at every opportunity for helping them to find savings makes good business sense. We want our Farm Energy Efficiency effort to connect Idaho producers with information that will benefit their farms," says Tony VanderHulst, IDA's new dairy producer president. "The first step will be to encourage producers to get an energy audit that breaks down their energy bill and identifies areas for improvement. The second is to connect them to funds and services which allow them to make changes."

The campaign kicked off this week at the 2012 Annual Meeting of the United Dairymen of Idaho at the Boise Center. Don Schriver, representing Dairy Management, Inc. and the Innovation Center for U.S. Dairy, spoke about the Innovation Center's efforts and the economic benefits of doing more with less (energy).

"The Farm Energy Efficiency project is one of the Innovation Center for U.S. Dairy's projects that is focused on promoting the value of an energy audit in helping producers identify best practices and equipment upgrades that can save them money and make their operations more efficient. The goal is 7,200 energy audits conducted on farms by 2020," said Schriver. "We can save a lot of energy by just rolling up our sleeves and going after the 'low hanging fruit' - energy conservation and energy efficiency." An energy audit is a farm specific analysis of energy use and recommendations to reduce energy usage or ways to increase production using the same amount of fuel or electricity. It generally identifies savings opportunities between 10 to 35 percent, which can lead to thousands of dollars in annual savings.

Dairy producers can use an energy audit to identify specific opportunities to save, and then implement the recommendations to achieve those savings. While every Please see DAIRY, AG2

A Thanksgiving I'll Never Forget

one Thanksgiving morning, my husband and I woke up to find frost on the pumpkins and I knew that so much was going on today. Like any other late November here in southern Idaho, Thanksgiving signifies the last weekend of pheasant hunting and I have never been happy about that.

'Maybe after I get the turkey in the oven, we can all walk through the corn field and scare up some roosters," I thought.

Then the phone rang. It was a call from Austin, our 10-year-old grandson.

'Grandpa," he said. "We will be at your house for Thanksgiving dinner, and I want to come out early to help you with the turkey."

"Fine," grandpa replied. "With dinner at 4, you will need to come before lunch?

'Ok, now wait for me to kill the turkey. I'll see you then," Austin said.

We won a turkey at a drawing at one of the schools and we began six weeks of grain feeding to fatten a bird for us to enjoy good turkey at our traditional event. There would be several other grandkids and their mothers joining us, which brightened the prospect of the weekend.

Before we acquired this turkey, I was contemplating a Thanksgiving dinner we had celebrated at our house when our children were young. That year, we planned that everything fixed for dinner would be foods that we had grown on our own farm or harvested. We enjoyed pheasant, venison and trout; cucumber pickles, corn, potatoes, homemade rolls and, of course, pumpkin pie. All the decorations were handmade, including the candles. Nothing was bought in town. We gals dressed as the women and girls in the

But on this day, never did I suspect we would have such mayhem. I'll tell you about the turkey we were about to behead.

She was a tame bird that sang a pretty song as she begged for her grain. Therefore, the children called her Songbird when they fed her a handful of grain. This chore was enjoyed by all the grandkids when they came out to our farm. Something we never thought of was that they thought of her as a

Now it was the day of her doom. However, Austin never told the others what we had planned. When he arrived, he and grandpa went out to the pen to catch the bird and take her into the shop where the chopping block was set up.

"I'll hold her for you while you make a good chop," grandpa instructed Austin.

The axe went up and Austin laid down the first blow only miss slightly.

However, blood began to spill everywhere as the turkey fought and soon the two were spattered with blood. "Austin, try once again, only aim right in the middle," grandpa then had to shout as the younger kids had come into the shop and began to yell over what was going on.

Austin told them to get back and laid the sharp edge dead center and this time severed the head.

"Got 'em that time," he velled over the havoc the kids were making. Grandpa took the carcass outside and let it hop around as a chicken with its head cut off does. Then their work really began with the cleaning and the plucking of feathers.

By then, the other grandkids ran into the house to tell their mothers what had happened. As usual, it was up to the mothers to soothe over these situations. It was not until later, that we realized it was not over.

At four o'clock, grandpa called us all to the dinner table. But wait. Where were the four smaller kids? The mothers went in the back room to get them and we could hear their protests. It seemed the 6- and 8-yearolds refused to join us.

"We're not going to eat Songbird," one of them yelled.

One of the mothers was carrying the 4-year-old who was sobbing on her shoulder. When she sat him down, he crawled under the table and wouldn't join us

"Let him stay," I said. "I understand how he feels. At one Easter dinner, the same unhappy event happened to me about one of our 'bum' lambs when I was a child."

Without the protesters joining us, we began eating our traditional dinner. Austin enjoyed telling all that had happened and how excited he was to have been a part of it. I guess often the older child needed to vent every once in a while and we let him talk — except for the blood all over the place descriptions. (I must admit it was the toughest turkey I ever cooked. Is that called getting even?) I don't know about your traditions of Thanksgiving dinner – whether it is helping at a food bank, feeding other less fortunate families, inviting a new family from your neighborhood to your home, or serving foods that you have grown. I just wish you a great time of celebrating together and maybe watching the Macy's parade or a football game.

But don't forget the reason this American holiday was established in the early 1600s. The New Colonies in Virginia spent three days of "thanksgivings" - days of prayer thanking God for blessings of good harvest and plenty of rain.

AGRICULTURE BRIEF

Deadline for NRCS Financial Assistance Programs Nov. 16

BOISE • The Idaho Natural Resources Conservation Service is reminding producers that applications for the Environmental Quality Incentives Program (EQIP) are due Friday, Nov. 16 for fiscal year 2013 funding.

Applications for four special initiatives funded through EQIP are also due: the Organic, On Farm Energy, Seasonal High Tunnel and Working Lands for Wildlife Initiatives.

"We do accept applications for these programs on a continuous basis, however only the applications received by November 16th will be considered for funding this fiscal year," said Ron Brooks, Idaho NRCS EQIP manager. "The applications we receive by this date will be evaluated and contracts awarded based on available funds."

• EQIP is a Farm Bill program that helps agricultural producers complete resource conservation projects and make conservation-related management changes on their farms or ranches.

• The Organic Initiative can help certified and transitioning organic producers invest in practices such as cover crops, nutrient management, or drip irrigation to improve soils or conserve water.

• The On-Farm Energy Initiative offers producers the opportunity to develop Agricultural Energy Management Plans that assess their farms' energy consumption for equipment and farm facilities. It can also help producers to implement conservation practices identified in their Agricultural Energy Management Plan. • The Seasonal High Tunnel Initiative helps producers plan for and install steelframed, polyethylene-covered structures that extend the growing season.

• The Working Lands for Wildlife Initiative in Idaho focuses on improving or restoring greater sagegrouse habitat.

For more information on these programs as well as eligibility requirements, stop by the USDA service center or visit NRCS online at http://www.id.nrcs.usda.gov/programs/.

Genetically Modified Seeds Help Increase Wyoming Sugar Beet Yield

BY KYLE ROERINK Star-Tribune

Sugar beet growers had a sweet year in Wyoming.

Farmers in the state reported their highest beet vields to date.

While crops like corn and wheat were anemic during the summer drought, sugar beet growers said their output superseded last year's record-setting numbers by 1,000 pounds per acre. The average in the Big Horn Basin was 29.3 tons per acre in 2012, up from 28.8 in 2011, according to Wyoming Sugar Vice President Vince Salzman.

The temperature and the water supply were not an issue. There was plenty of water from the snow pack to irrigate crops. And there was an optimum number of growing-degree days, a measurement of the daily highs and lows in temperature that assesses the suitability for crop yields, said Glen Reed, president of the Big Horn Beet Growers Association and member of the Western Sugar Cooperative.

Farmers throughout the state work with co-ops like Western Sugar, a multi-state partnership that receives beets from Montana, Idaho and Nebraska. Farmers can buy shares of the co-op and must produce an acre of beets for each share. The co-op processes and markets the sugar for the growers.

Reed is a beet farmer in Lovell and member of Western Sugar. He projects an average increase in his crop from 28.9 tons per acre in 2011 to 29.1 tons in 2012.

Beet refining usually begins in the end of September and runs until the middle of November. The jump in the yield spurred the coop to start production at the factory two weeks sooner than projected, Reed said.

"They had to get them all sliced before they started rotting," he said.

The 29.3 ton-per-acre

The increase in the beet yield is nothing new in the state. There is a seven-ton uptick in the beet harvest in the past 15 years, said Craig Spencer, an agriculturist with Western Sugar. Farmers in Wyoming have been using new technology to increase the sugar beet output since 2007, said Lyle Evelo, a farmer in Heart Mountain. The catalyst for the increase, he said, is genetically modified seeds.

"We can control the weeds so much better, and it's so much safer than before," he said.

The seeds, sold by Monsanto as Roundup Ready, are "definitely a factor" in the increased yields, Reed said. They are resistant to the powerful herbicide glyphosate, also known as Roundup, and just received non-regulated status by the U.S. Department of Agriculture after a three-year court battle with organic beet growers opposed to genetically modified seeds.

"Whenever you take away a crop's competition, you are going to produce more," Reed said. "There's only a certain amount of water and nutrients." More than 95 percent of Wyoming's sugar beet farmers use Roundup Ready seeds. "It allows us to use less chemicals than ever before," Spencer said. Because the seeds are au-tomatically resistant to weed killer, crop yields are not inhibited by multiple chemicals used to eliminate weeds. The lack of chemicals hasn't just led to larger yields. It's led to larger beets.

McKamey Farms harvested a 35-pound beet this September in Worland. The largest beet they'd ever seen was 8 pounds smaller, the Northern Wyoming Daily News reported.

The sugar beet industry brings in more than $44 million per year to Wyoming.

dairy operation is different, research shows that the best way for producers to identify the greatest opportunity for savings on their energy bills is to get a farm audit.

According to EnSave, agricultural energy leader and partner on the Innovation Center's national awareness effort for farm energy efficiency, a qualified farm energy audit is an important step towards better energy efficiency and adds value to dairy operations, regardless of size, type or age.

"An energy audit breaks down the utility bill and pinpoints the location and amount of energy being used on the dairy and provides recommendations for the best improvements," said Schriver.

Available Now: Farm Energy Audit Funds

The Idaho Farm Energy Efficiency Steering Committee wants producers to know about an immediate energy-saving opportunity. Idaho producers, who are interested in energy savings, are urged to apply for funds at their local Natural Resources and Conservation Service office that will pay for an energy audit through Environmental Quality Incentives Program (EQIP).

"The process is easy. It's important that dairy producers apply now while money is available," said Rebecca MacLeod, USDA-NRCS' national energy liaison for the Innovation Center. "Last year, NRCS awarded nearly $15 million to agriculture to help finance onfarm energy initiatives."

EQIP funding covers most of the cost of an Agriculture Energy Management Plan, commonly called an energy audit. And, an NRCS-accepted farm energy audit gives producers more opportunities to qualify for additional EQIP funding for energy improvements. Watch for more on Farm Energy Efficiency.

BY JEFF WILSON Bloomberg News CHICAGO • Surging turkey prices mean this year's Thanksgiving dinner will cost 0.6 percent more than in 2011, even with cheaper holi-> kin pie, a farm group said. The average cost of feeding 10 people the 12 items typically served during the holiday meal will be $49.48, up from $49.20 last year, according to the American Farm Bureau Federation. While that's the highest since the survey began in 1986, the inflation-adjusted cost is down from last year, which was the highest since 1990. The

The Department of Agriculture estimates the cost of all food will increase 2.5 percent to 3.5 percent this year, with an even bigger increase in 2013, after the nation's worst drought since the 1950s damaged crops and forced livestock producers to shrink their herds.

U.S. celebrates Thanksgiving

this year on Nov. 22.

Cost of Thanksgiving Dinner Rises 28 Cents "At just under $5 per person, the cost of this year's meal remains a bargain," Bob Stallman, president of the farm group, said Thursday in an e-mailed statement. Turkey prices, up 3.1 percent, accounted for 66 cents of the increase in the cost of the meal, according to the survey. The national average price for a 16-pound bird is $22.23 this year, or about $1.39 a pound, excluding grocer promotions or rebates, the Federation said. "Most Americans will pay about the same as last year at the grocery store for a turkey and all the trimmings," John Anderson, the bureau's deputy chief economist, said in the release. "A slight increase in demand for turkey is responsible for the moderate price increase."

About 304.6 million pounds of frozen whole turkeys were in U.S. warehouses at the end of September, down 9 percent from a year earlier, Department of Agriculture data show. About 184 million young turkeys were processed in the first nine months of the year, up 1.9 percent from the same period a year earlier. The cost of a 12-ounce package of pre-cooked rolls rose 3 cents, and miscellaneous items including onions, eggs, sugar, flour and butter to prepare the dinner rose 8 cents. A relish made of celery and carrots was unchanged.

The costs for a half-pint of whipping cream fell 13 cents, the biggest of the declines this year. Prices also fell for a 30ounce can of pumpkin-pie mix, 14 ounces of stuffing mix, 3 pounds of sweet potatoes, a gallon of whole milk, 12 ounces of fresh cranberries, a pound of frozen green peas and two pie shells.

The informal price survey was first conducted in 1986. A total of 155 volunteer shoppers from 35 states participated in this year's project. The menu for the dinner has remained unchanged since 1986 to allow for consistent price comparisons.

Milk futures on the Chicago Mercantile Exchange have gained 5.3 percent in the past year as high feed costs slowed production. Wheat prices on the Chicago Board of Trade have jumped 37 percent from a year earlier on declining global production.

Drought's Effects Hit Hay Harvest, Cattle Industry

UTICA, Ind. (AP) • Mike Myers knows he's one of the Owner of M&M Cattle Company in Utica, Myers is one of the few livestock farmers in southern Indiana who isn't going to have to find a new source of feed for his livestock this winter. Myers buys and sells hav, and he bought some in the spring with the intent of reselling it. Now, that won't be necessary.

"I was just lucky, you know what I mean?" Myers told the News and Tribune. "I'm going to lose the profit of selling the hay, because I was planning on selling it, but I am going to have enough to take care of my livestock."

Others won't be so lucky. Because of the drought that took place over much of the summer, there were fewer cuts of alfalfa, said David Hynes, Clark County Purdue Extension educator.

"I think typically, we get five cuttings of alfalfa," Hynes said. "Guys were saying they got three, maybe four. As far as the grasses go, any summer grasses were hit pretty hard, but the cool-season grasses shouldn't be too bad, I don't

"I haven't heard anybody complaining about grass shortages. It's been mostly alfalfa that's short."

Typically, Marysvillebased hay seller Jeff Bayes gets $5 per bale of alfalfa.

But then again, typically his barn is full at this time of year and he has enough to get through a season.

"Of course, we're short," Bayes said. "We're going to run out."

These days, Bayes is charging his repeat customers the regular price, but new customers are being asked $8 per bale.

"I've had some people walk away. There are some people that won't give that," Bayes said. "But I'm going to run out, so I had to slow things down. That's the only way I could see to slow it down and not let them clean me out."

There are strong indications that the drought-related shortage is going to send ripples throughout the industry. September cattle placements onto feedlots dropped 19 percent compared with September of 2011, according to a study by the U.S. Department of Agriculture. Furthermore, the USDA lists 54 percent of the nation's pastures in "poor" or "very poor" condition.

"Farmers will have to find some alternate ways to feed their animals," Hynes said. "If they have cows with calves, they're going to have to figure out how to maybe early wean some of the calves so that the cows won't eat as much. They may have to sell off some animals (for early slaughter).

Alternative feeds are made from corn and soybeans, both of which also had short harvests this year. High feed costs have caused feedlot managers to lose up to an estimated $200 per head, according to a Kansas State University study.

"As a result of the slowing placements in the past three months, the number of cattle on feed dropped to 3 percent below year-ago levels on Oct. 1," said Chris Hurt, Purdue Extension agricultural economist. "Cattle on feed will play a role in rationing the nation's short corn supply."

The end result won't put smiles on many faces in the checkout lanes of local grocery stores. A 4 percent drop in the national beefcow herd will mean higher prices for consumers, according to a Purdue University release.

Feed prices will need to drop off before the country's cattle numbers recover, Hurt said.

"That moderation in feed prices could begin in a small way with lower soybean meal prices in the spring of 2013, assuming reasonable South American sovbean production," Hurt said. "Further declines in feed costs could occur with a better grazing season in the spring and summer of 2013 and a return to larger U.S. corn and soybean crops next year."

Purdue Research Farm Gets Organic Certification

WEST LAFAYETTE, Ind. (AP) • A 10-acre Purdue University research farm has been certified as organic, giving Purdue scientists a chance to play a bigger role in the growing organic farming field.

Organic farmers raise crops without synthetic pesticides or fertilizers. Purdue's Meigs Farm near the West Lafayette campus was certified as organic in October by the Ohio Ecological Food and Farm Purdue weed scientist Kevin Gibson says the farm will allow researchers to evaluate organic-farming management practices like crop rotations, pest management and the use of cover crops. It also will allow them to assess how particular crop varieties perform under organic conditions.

Getting organic certification usually takes about three years, but Meigs Farm obtained it in 18 months because the land had not been used for conventional farming for several years.

family encouraged her to apply.

"Until I started getting involved I had no idea that we had a Mrs. in our community," she said.

The Mrs. title is a little different than the Miss competition, which is usually televised. In the Mrs. competition women are 21-56 years old, married, and have children.

Dastrup sent in a head shot, filled out an online application that outlined her community involvement and her background, and wrote a letter about herself. She wasn't required to compete in a pageant but was judged from the materials she sent.

BUHL • Retirement is supposed to be a golden era of opportunity for travel, relaxation and fun, but Myra Lively, 75, often felt lonely and bored.

That changed when a friend invited her to a Northview Ladies Club meeting about a year ago. On Wednesday, Lively was among some two dozen members at the club's annual auction, held at Lincoln Courts in Buhl.

"It's been very good therapy for me. I've met new people and made friends. Being retired and staying home I wasn't doing anything else," Lively said. Club President Mary Wonenberg, 73, said the organization formed in 1926 and was originally named the Northview Community

During World War II, the club's roster of about 30 women would gather in each other's homes or the old Northview Grange, wrapping bandages to send abroad. And even when rationing coupons were the law of the land, the club gathered resources to make sure nobody went without.

"Now we can't give up on each other," said Wonenberg, a member since 1974.

The Lifetime in a Library

BY TETONA DUNLAP tdunlap@magicvalley.com

When We Met

I sat and talked with Mareda Wright inside the Idaho and Pacific Northwest Room at the Twin Falls Public Library on

I had met Wright once before in late August when I was working on a story that required checking out a book or two from the library. She was very knowledgeable and had already pulled several items she thought would help.

Wright is known by even her fellow employees as someone they can turn to when they need help. Wright started working at the library Oct. 1, 1967. This year she celebrates 45 years of filling such roles as a page, a book mender and a clerk on the library's bookmobile. Now, Wright is the Technical Services Department supervisor and the volunteer coordinator.

Unlike most workers nowadays, Wright did not have to fill out an application. There isn't even a resume for her on file at the library.

"I do remember as a child coming to the library," Wright said. "I never in a million years thought I'd work here."

Wright said it's because she didn't know what she wanted to do with the rest of her life. She was attending the College of Southern Idaho, taking general studies classes, when her mother got her an interview with the assistant director of the library.

"I was immediately hired," Wright

Over the years she has worked for three directors and watched the library grow. As new technology invaded the book stacks she became versed in it, learning three online databases, and has helped transfer about 200,000 titles onto them. Wright catalogues everything. She has even catalogued a brick.

"Normally we are a collection of the printed word and photographs, but we also have a brick," she said.

The brick was donated to the library after the old four-story Vera C. O'Leary Middle School was demolished. Wright said it was located near where the Twin Falls County Jail now stands. The building was previously known as Twin Falls Junior High and before that was the Twin Falls High School. Wright went to junior high in the building.

Other non-book items she has catalogued are birdhouses and a clock made from old Idaho license plates. Inmates at the Idaho State Correctional Institute in Boise made these, purchased at the Idaho Library Association conference.

One of the things Wright said she loves about her job is that every day is different.

"Working at the library it is a public place, and when I hire someone I make the statement anything that is humanely possible has and will happen here," she said. Though Wright did not elaborate on a specific incident, she never knows what to expect when she comes to work.

"We get all walks of life at the library;"

Why You Might Know Her

Wright was born and raised in Twin Falls and enjoys local history. She and her husband, Cecil, wrote a book called "The Knowledge Box," about the history of Twin Falls County schools, which was released in 2004. The book was completed after eight years of research she did in her spare time. Turn-of-the-century schools, she said, were called "knowledge boxes."

Also, Wright has made many contacts pects she will read more once she retires. Working at the library was her first and probably last job. "I'm nearing my retirement," she said.

Wright reads a lot for her job but sus-

What's Next For Her

The library's board of trustees and staff presented Wright with a plaque on the 45th anniversary of her start date Oct. 1. The Idaho-shaped plaque hangs outside the Idaho and Pacific Northwest Room.

But before Wright catalogues her last book she has one request. Recently the library purchased a bookmobile, with services that will start sometime next

"I want to ride the bookmobile one more time for old time sakes," Wright

Mrs. Twin Falls

"My biggest contribution is that I'm dedicated and I think Idaho is a good state to live in and it helps me be a good representative," Dastrup said.

On Oct. 24, the stay-at-home mom was home with her youngest daughter while her two other children were at school.

Not only does Dastrup fit the family criteria, she also fulfills another important part of the Mrs. title: community involvement.

"I am a fifth-generation Idahoan, and I have a huge heart for the community," Dastrup said.

One of the people Dastrup looks up to is her grandfather, Keith Sligar, who built 1000 Springs Resort in Hagerman and was active in the community. He had cancer and died at age 61, which is a reason Dastrup's platform is breast cancer aware-

"My goal is to put together an assembly in high schools to start looking for breast cancer," Dastrup said. She said it's important because breast cancer is being detected in females in their early 20s now. She pointed out that men are not exempt from breast cancer.

"My grandmother is a breast cancer survivor, and my daughter's grandmother died from breast cancer," Dastrup said.

She is active in Tough Enough to Wear Pink, a campaign that empowers rodeos and western events to focus attention on the need for a cure and to raise money.

came from shows like "Toddlers and Tiaras" on TLC.

"I don't know if it's the Mrs. at the end of it, but it's not a catty competition," Dastrup said. "We were helping each other, fixing each other's dresses. This organization is very tight-knit, and we refer to each other as 'pageant sisters.'"

Dastrup was asked to represent Twin Falls again, so she will have another opportunity to compete for the Mrs. Idaho America title.

Right now, because of the holiday season, her appearances have slowed down. She participated in Bras Across the Canyon on Oct. 20, a breast cancer awareness event and fundraiser in Twin Today, women's clubs or "homemaker" clubs aren't commonplace. But according to the Iowa State University Center for Agricultural History and Rural Studies, the women's movement of the 1920s had such organizations popping up across the country. The women's movement called for volunteerism and community service, and involvement in a homemaker club fulfilled that "without challenging male leadership or conceptions of femininity," wrote Jenny Barker-Devine at the center's website, history.iastate.edu.

According to the Northview club's record book from 1929, community service was an essential focus. Founding member Doris Albee writes in the club song, "Our aim shall ever be to help our community. We'll ever do what's right with all our might ...," and the club's motto is "Impossible is Un-American," framing the ladies as ready for a challenge.

Aid Arrives in N.J. by Train; L.B.I. Residents Return

TRENTON, N.J. (AP) • New Jerseyans working to recover from Superstorm Sandy received a boost Saturday from kindred spirits in Louisiana, whose memories of devastating Hurricane Katrina prompted them to send tons of relief items north via rail.

An Amtrak train from New Orleans arrived in Newark with a boxcar filled with donations. Volunteers from both states then began working with officials in Hoboken and Bayonne to distribute baby formula, school supplies and other essentials to those hard-hit communities and beyond.

Farther south along the shore, most residents of storm-ravaged Long Beach Island were allowed to return home Saturday for the first time since Sandy made landfall Oct. 29.

Many houses there suffered extensive destruction and flooding. Steve Kramer told WCAU-TV in Philadelphia that his home in Beach Haven was inundated with about 4 feet of water, ruining rugs, couches and beds.

But not all island residents were allowed back home. The island community of Holgate remains closed because extensive storm damage and impassable roads.

The developments came as utility companies worked to restore power from outages caused by both Sandy and a nor'easter that swept through the region a few days ago. More than 100,000 New Jersey customers remained without electricity Saturday afternoon, mainly along the coast. Most service was expected to be restored over the weekend.

Also, state-imposed gas limits continued in 12 of 21 counties. The rationing based on license plate numbers will be evaluated in the days ahead to see how much longer it's needed, according to Michael Drewniak, a spokesman for Gov. Chris Christie.

The restrictions, coupled with power restoration, have mitigated the long waits that drivers endured at service stations just after the storm, said Sal Risalvato, executive director of the New Jersey Gasoline, Convenience Store and Automotive Association. But distribution problems mean that stations were only getting about 60 to 70 percent of the gas they need, Risalvato said Saturday. "It may take another week or so before it gets back to normal," he said.

Back in Newark, the so-called Train of Hope arrived at Penn Station on Saturday afternoon after a 1,200-mile, 30-hour trip. Much of the donated relief items came from the New Orleans suburbs of St. Tammany Parish and Slidell, which suffered extensive flooding during Katrina in 2005.

Five more pallets of donations will travel up on another train Sunday, she added.

Also Saturday, the Obama administration extended the federal government's commitment to cover all costs for emergency power and public transportation in New Jersey through Nov. 14. That's an increase from the standard coverage of 75 percent, according to a statement

Across America, Veterans Day Commemorations Get Under Way

BY JESSICA GRESKO AND KEVIN MCGILL

Associated Press

Saturday marked the first of what will be three days of Veterans Day commemorations across the United States.

The holiday falls on a Sunday, and the federal observance is on Monday. It's the first such day honoring the men and women who served in uniform since the last U.S. troops left Iraq in December 2011.

It's also a chance to thank those who stormed the beaches during World War  $\Pi$  – a population that is rapidly shrinking with most of those former troops now in their 80s and 90s.

At the Vietnam Veterans Memorial in Washington, a steady stream of visitors arrived Saturday morning as the names of the 58,000 people on the wall were being read over a loudspeaker.

Some visitors took pictures, others made rubbings of names, and some left mementos: a leather jacket, a flag made out of construction paper, pictures of young soldiers and even several snow globes with an American eagle inside.

Alfred A. Atwood, 65, of Chattanooga, Tenn., was visiting the wall for the first time.

"I've just never been able to do it," Atwood said of visiting the memorial, which was completed in 1982.

Atwood, who later became a police detective, said he knows a number of people on the wall, but the one name he wanted to find Saturday was his friend Ronald L. Wright. The two had grown up together, and when Atwood decided to join the Marines at 18 there was no stopping Wright, Atwood said.

Wright died in 1968 when he stepped on a land mine, Atwood said, and Wright's mother always blamed him for her son's death. He's never been able to bring himself to visit his friend's grave, he said.

On Saturday he found Wright's name on panel 44E, row 60, and he ran his fingers over it, shaking his head.

"I'm still in the blocking stage. I want to go somewhere and sit down and think a minute," he said after seeing Wright's name. "All I can see when I was touching and reading his name was his mother's face telling me I got her son killed."

A half-dozen women of various ages knitted intently near a pile of handmade scarves while frail, silver-haired men sat waiting for a chance to tell their war stories Saturday as tourists and veterans filed into the National World War II Museum in New Orleans.

The museum planned a series of events to celebrate the Veterans Day weekend.

The knitters had gathered to commemorate 1940s homefront efforts to supply World War II troops with warm socks and sweaters.

Nearby, Tom Blakey, 92, of New Orleans sat behind a small table with two grainy black and white photos of his younger self, one standing at ease in uniform in 1942, the other aboard a motorcycle in 1944. Also on the table were pictures of a bridge on the Merderet River in Normandy — a bridge that he and fellow members of the Army's 82nd Airborne fought to secure as the D-Day invasion unfolded in 1944.

Blakey pointed with gnarled fingers at a map of the landing site and said holding the bridge was key to keeping German forces away from Utah and Omaha beaches. "If we'd a let them get to Utah and Omaha, the men on those beaches would have been in bad shape," he said.

At the National Cemetery in Bourne, Mass., on Cape Cod, about 1,000 people including Cub Scouts and Gold Star Mothers gathered on a crisp fall day for a short ceremony.

They then spread out to plant 56,000 flags amid the cemetery's flat gravestones, transforming the green landscape into a sea of fluttering red, white and blue.

HIGH COURT TO TAKE FRESH LOOK AT VOTING RIGHTS LAW

WASHINGTON (AP) • The Supreme Court will consider eliminating the government's most potent weapon against racial discrimination at polling places since the 1960s. The court acted three days after a diverse coalition of voters propelled President Barack Obama to a second term in the White House.

With a look at affirmative action in higher education already on the agenda, the court is putting a spotlight on race by re-examining the ongoing necessity of laws and programs aimed at giving racial minorities access to major areas of American life from which they once were systematically excluded.

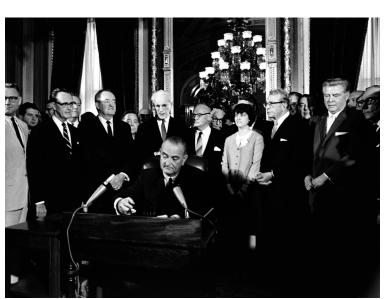

"This is a term in which many core pillars of civil rights and pathways to opportunity hang in the balance," said Debo Adegbile, acting president and director-counsel of the NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund.

In an order Friday, the justices agreed to hear a constitutional challenge to the part of the landmark Voting Rights Act that requires all or parts of 16 states with a history of discrimination in voting to get federal approval before making any changes in the way they hold elections.

The high court considered the same issue three years ago but side-stepped what Chief Justice John Roberts then called "a difficult constitutional question." The new appeal from Shelby County, Ala., near Birmingham, says state and local governments covered by the law have made significant progress and no longer should be forced to live under oversight from Washington.

"The America that elected and reelected Barack Obama as its first African-American president is far different than when the Voting Rights Act was first enacted in 1965. Congress unwisely reauthorized a bill that is stuck in a Jim Crow-era time warp. It is unconstitutional," said Edward Blum, director of the not-for-profit Project on Fair Representation, which is funding the challenges to the voting rights law and affirmative action.

But defenders of the law said there is a continuing need for it and pointed to the Justice Department's efforts to block voter ID laws in South Carolina and Texas, as well as a redistricting plan in Texas that a federal court found discriminated against the state's large and growing Hispanic population. "What we know even more clearly now than we did when the court last considered this question is that a troubling strain of obstructing the path to the ballot box remains a part of our society," Adegbile said.

AFTER ATTACK ON JEEP, ISRAELI ARMY KILLS 4 IN GAZA

GAZA CITY, Gaza Strip (AP) • Palestinian militants fired an anti-tank missile at an Israeli jeep patrolling the border with Gaza and the Israelis fired back into the Palestinian territory, killing four civilians, officials and witnesses said.

Israel's military said four of its soldiers were wounded in the missile attack, including one seriously. Ashraf al-Kidra, a Gaza health ministry spokesman, said all four Palestinians killed were civilians between the ages of 16 and 18 and that among the 25 wounded were children.

The military wing of the leftist Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine took responsibility but it still remains unclear whom in fact was behind the attack. The PFLP often takes credit for attacks that later turn out to be the work of Hamas or Islamic Jihad militants.

Gaza militants often fire rockets from the Israel-Gaza border area toward nearby Israeli communities and lowlevel clashes with the Israeli military are common. But when casualties are involved, particularly civilians, the potential for escalation grows significantly.

Witnesses said that following the large explosion that started the incident, Israel retaliated with tank and machine gun fire toward residential areas at the al-Muntar hill in the central part of the territory, hitting people who were returning from a funeral east of Gaza City.

In a first response to Saturday's incident, Israeli Defense Minister Ehud Barak said the military had responded aggressively to the attack and will "consider further reaction in the coming days."

The Israeli military said it holds Gaza's Hamas rulers responsible for the attack and that it "will not tolerate" such incidents.

Mideast Nuke Talks Called Off

VIENNA (AP) • Attempts to find Arab-Israeli common ground on banning weapons of mass destruction from the Mideast have failed, and high-profile talks on the issue have been called off, diplomats said Saturday.

The two diplomats said the United States, one of the organizers, would likely make a formal announcement soon saying that with tensions in the region remaining high, "time is not opportune" for such a gathering. The diplomats spoke on condition of anonymity because they were not authorized to divulge the cancellation ahead of the formal announcement.

The meeting — to be held in Helsinki, Finland, by year's end — was on shaky ground since it was agreed to in 2010 by the 189 member nations of the Nuclear Nonproliferation Treaty. Its key sponsors were the U.S., Russia and Britain, but they said such a meeting was only possible if all countries - especially Israel - agreed to attend.

The decision to postpone, if not to scrap it, will cast doubt on the significance of the NPT and its attempts every five years to advance nonproliferation. Any new attempt is unlikely until the NPT conference meets again in 2015.

Hopes for such a meeting were alive as recently as Tuesday, when Iran joined Arab nations in saying that it planned to attend, leaving Israel as the only undecided country. Tehran's announcement came at a Brussels seminar on a Mideast nuclear-free zone also attended by Israel and the Arab countries, and described as largely free of regional tensions. But the two diplomats said the decision to call off the Helsinki meeting had already been made by the time Iran declared Tuesday that it would attend.

But a decision to give up on staging such a gathering after it was approved by the NPT is more than a reflection of Mideast realities.

Iran, the Arab nations and most other developing countries say the emphasis should be on the U.S. and other nucleararmed states that want NPT members to disarm. Such nations also castigate the West for supporting Israel and its widely suspected nuclear weapons program. Washington and its allies say Iran, North Korea and Syria are the greatest proliferation threats, even though Tehran and Damascus deny allegations of secret nuclear activities linked to weapons.

Argentine Crew Prevents Ghana from Moving Ship

ACCRA, Ghana (AP) • Sailors aboard an Argentina navy sailing ship seized in a billion-dollar international debt controversy brandished weapons to block Ghanaian officials from moving the vessel to a less busy dock, an official of the Ghana Ports and Harbors Authority said Saturday.

Crewmen on the ARA Libertad showed their rifles to deter Ghanaian officials from boarding the South American ship Thursday, Kumi Adjei-Sam, the corporate affairs manager of the ports authority, told The Associated Press.

Ghana's government has not commented on the show of force against officials of this African nation.

Ghanaian judge Richard Agyei-Frimpong ruled last week that the Libertad should be moved from its current position while Argentina fights a court order to hold the ship against payment of $1.3 billion Ghanaians should stop "illeto a group holding bonds on which Argentina defaulted in

Ports officials say the ship's current location prevents other vessels from berthing, costing the agency tens of thousands of dollars a day in lost fees. Argentina's Defense Ministry issued a statement Friday saying the ship will not budge while the detention order is being appealed.

It said the ship's crew, under orders from Buenos Aires, pulled up the gangplank to prevent Ghanaian authorities from boarding. In response, Ghana shut off water and electricity and brought a crane to lift officials onto the ship to move it. "An order was for the crew to show up on the deck, with its regular weapons, with the purpose of dissuading any attempt to board it," the Argentine ministry said.

The ministry said the gal measures such as forcing us to move and cutting off basic supplies, which represent a violation on our sovereignty and an act of hostility."

Ghanaian courts ordered the ship detained Oct. 2 in response to U.S. court decisions in favor of investors holding bonds on which Argentina defaulted.

Argentina's problems grew larger Friday, when U.S. District Judge Thomas Griesa warned Argentine President Cristina Fernandez not to "defy and evade" his orders on how much Latin America's third-largest economy will have to pay bondholders.

Griesa will decide the amount Dec. 1, a day before Argentina is due to make the first of three payments of more than $3 billion to bondholders who accepted restructuring of their debt at a

Wave of Violence Sweeps Through Brazil's Largest City

SAO PAULO (AP) • At least 140 people have been murdered in South America's biggest city over the past two weeks in a rising wave of violence, Sao Paulo's Public Safety Department says.

Killings in Sao Paulo began sharply increasing in September, a month in which 144 people were killed, the department's website says. It says a total of 982 homicides took place in the city during the first nine months of the year. The victims included 90 police officers, most of them gunned down while off duty.

A Public Safety Department official said Saturday that the killings of police have been ordered by imprisoned leaders of an organized crime group called the First Capital Command in reprisal for a crackdown on the drug trade. The official spoke on condition of anonymity because he was not authorized to speak to the press.

The First Capital Command is one of Brazil's most notorious organized crime groups. Based in Sao Paulo state prisons, the group allegedly was behind several waves of attacks on police, government buildings, banks and public buses in 2006. Those assaults and counterattacks by police in the slums killed more than 200 people.

With the latest violence, shops and schools in some Sao Paulo districts closed early this past week as rumors of gang-imposed curfews spread.

"In view of the wave of violence in the city's south zone, the school's directors decided to send staff and students home early so as to assure their safety," Eliane Valerio de Souza, administrative assistant at a professional training school, told the newspaper Folha de S. Paulo.

Sao Paulo state authorities last week said incarcerated leaders of the First Capital Command suspected of using smuggled cellphones to order attacks and coordinate drug sales, murders of rival gang members and the purchase of weapons, would be transferred to a maximum security federal prison outside the state.

On Thursday, one of the gang's lower echelon leaders was sent to a federal penitentiary in northern Brazil. Others are expected be transferred by the end of the month.

25 DEAD, 100 INJURED IN MYANMAR TRAIN

Sunday, November 11, 2012 • People 5

YANGON, Myanmar (AP) • Authorities said Saturday that casualties from a fiery train accident had reached 25 dead and almost 100 injured. The report raised the number of injured after a carriage full of fuel burst into flames.

State television had said Friday that 64 people were injured in an explosion and fire after dozens of people rushed to skim fuel from a derailed tanker train's overturned carriages.

An official from the Myanma Railways department said Saturday that engineers are trying to clear the track to resume rail service after Friday morning's accident near Kantbalu, about 500 miles north of Yangon. He also said the injury toll had increased to 93. The train was travelling from Yangon to the Kachin state capital of Myitkyina. The official refused to give his name because he was not authorized to speak to the press.

Victims Testify About Details of Afghan Massacre

JOINT BASE LEWIS-Mc-CHORD, Wash. (AP) • Stories of the massacre came, one by one, over a live video link from Afghanistan into a military courtroom outside Seattle: torched bodies, a son finding his wounded father, boys cowering behind a curtain while others screamed "We are children! We are

As the Afghans recounted the horror that left 16 dead in the darkness early on March 11, the U.S. soldier accused of carrying out the rampage sat quietly in the courtroom.

At one point, Staff Sgt. Robert Bales moved closer to a large monitor showing the testimony. At other times, he watched as it played on a laptop screen in front of him. Either way, he gave no discernible reaction to the stories he heard.

Speaking through an interpreter, one Afghan closed his remarks with the words: "My request is to get justice."

The hearing at Joint Base Lewis-McChord is meant to help determine whether Bales, 39, will face a courtmartial in the deaths of the seven adults and nine children. He could face the death penalty if he is convicted.

Bales, an Ohio native and father of two from Lake Tapps, Wash., has not entered a plea and was not expected to testify. His attorneys have not discussed the evidence, but say he has post-traumatic stress disorder and suffered a concussive head injury while serving in Iraq.

The hearing, which began Monday, was held overnight Friday to accommodate the Afghan witnesses.

Sadiquallah said the shooter had a gun and a light, but he could not identify the man. The other child was hit in the thigh and also survived. He is scheduled to testify Saturday

As those two were hiding,

Sadiquallah's older brother, Quadratullah, sought refuge with other children in a different part of the house. When the gunman found them, Quadratullah testified, the children scrambled, yelling "We are children! We are children!"

The boys' father, Haji Mohammed Naim, was the first person shot at the home. He testified that he was awoken by shots and dogs barking. He asked his wife to light a lantern, and saw the shooter climb over a compound wall.

"He jumped from the wall, and I just saw the light on his head," Naim said. "He just started shooting me." Asked how close the gunman was to him when he was shot, the thick-bearded Naim gestured toward a water bottle on the table in front of him, less than an arm's length away: "He was as close as this bottle."

Prosecutors say Bales broke his shooting rampage into two episodes, attacking one village, returning to the base and

Spread of Prostate Cancer Therapy Questioned as Unnecessary

BY PETER WALDMAN
Bloomberg News

SAN FRANCISCO • When Max Calderon learned he had prostate cancer in 2010, his urologist recommended radiation therapy at a clinic in Salinas, Calif.

Calderon had just turned 77 and wasn't an ideal candidate for the treatment, according to national guidelines established by 21 U.S. cancerresearch centers. Lab tests showed a high probability his cancer had spread, and his advanced age pointed to the use of other therapies.

But he said his urologist, Amir Saffarian, didn't mention alternatives, so he made 47 trips to the clinic, 28 miles from his home. Calderon said he never saw Saffarian there — even though his records show the urologist billed Medicare and Medicaid $30,000 for the treatment.

"The way they do their business, there's something fishy going on," Calderon said in an interview before his death in August at 79, after the cancer metastasized.

Investigators with the Department of Health and Human Services are examining Calderon's case history to see whether the Salinas clinic and doctors who send patients there are violating laws against making referrals chiefly for financial gain, according to people familiar with the matter.

Neither Saffarian nor Aytac Apaydin and Stephen Worsham, listed in state records as owners of Salinas Valley Urology Associates and its radiation clinic, responded to questions.

The Calderon case has drawn attention to incentives that are channeling men into a treatment that delivers negligible benefits when compared to less expensive care, according to three studies in the past two years and seven doctors who've studied prostate treatment. The financial incentives raised concerns in Washington, where

The offices of Salinas Valley Urology are seen in Salinas, Calif., Oct. 26. The spread of intensity-modulated radiation therapy is helping push up the cost of caring for prostate patients faster than any other cancer group.

the Medicare program on Nov. 1 cut reimbursement rates for radiation treatment.
Like Saffarian one in five

Like Saffarian, one in five U.S. urologists add to their income by billing for the type of treatment in question, according to the journal Urology Times. Called intensity-modulated radiation therapy, or IMRT, it uses imaging software to focus multi-angled X-rays on tumors, aiming to deliver bigger doses with fewer side effects than prior technologies.

Medicare pays up to $40,000 per patient for IM-RT, or 645 times what a urologist gets for a standard office visit and as much as 20 times what the federal insurance program pays a surgeon to remove a cancerous prostate gland, according to studies. Reimbursement from private insurers for IMRT can be even higher, urologists say.

The spread of IMRT is helping raise the cost of caring for prostate patients faster than any other cancer group. The National Cancer Institute forecasts 38 percent after-inflation growth by 2020 from the $11.9 billion spent on the disease in 2010. "IMRT is overused, period," said urologist Matthew Cooperberg of the University of California, San Francisco, who has authored at least 18 studies on prostate treatment.

IMRT's backers say it's spreading because it works. Research on whether it's better or safer than alternatives such as surgery or radioactive implants is mixed, partly depending on the age of the patients and the severity of the disease.

For certain younger patients with aggressive disease, the National Comprehensive Cancer Network guidelines written by the 21 research centers say it's appropriate.

"IMRT is safer and more effective than the technology it replaced," said Deepak Kapoor, a urologist in Melville, N.Y. Kapoor is president of the Large Urology Group Practice Association, a trade group that includes doctors who have invested in IMRT machines and bill for their use.

Federal and state statutes — collectively known as the self-referral and anti-kick-back laws — bar doctors from referring patients to businesses in which they have a financial interest, or to receive money for referrals.

But over the years, a broad set of exemptions has evolved. One permits doctors to provide "ancillary services" to patients in their own offices. Doctors also can extend the "ancillary" exemption to medical facilities in which they invest.

"The complexity of the law and regulations has provided ways for creative entrepreneurs and their lawyers to clearly defy our intent of halting profiteering at the expense of patient care and taxpayer dollars," said Representative Pete Stark, the California Democrat who wrote a 1989 law meant to end physician self-referral.

In urology, doctors' financial gain has a history of influencing prostate cancer treatment, according to studies and successful federal prosecutions. The disease, a malignancy in the gland below the bladder that helps make semen, is the most common U.S. cancer with 242,000 new cases annually.

Favorable Medicare payouts for hormone drugs like Lupron and Zoladex induced "remarkable changes" in treatment in the 1990's, according to a 2010 study in the New England Journal of Medicine led by Vahakn Shahinian of the University of Michigan Medical School.

Urologists could make $5,000 per patient dispensing Lupron, thanks to secret discounts and kickbacks from drug makers, according to the Justice Department. In 1997 the 25 top-prescribing Lupron urologists each averaged $1.6 million in Medicare payments, prosecutors said.

4.3 Magnitude Quake in Kentucky Rattles Region

BY JOSEPH SERNA

Los Angeles Times

A 4.3 magnitude earthquake centered in southeastern Kentucky on Saturday has shaken residents from northern Ohio to North Carolina and Alabama.

The earthquake, centered more than half a mile underground about eight miles west of Whitesburg, Ky., did not appear to cause any structural damage in the Ohio Valley. The epicenter was about 35 miles west of the southwestern Virginia border. It occurred at 12:08 p.m. local time, according to the federal agency that sylvania, Georgia, Indiana and North Carolina reported feeling the temblor on the U.S. Geological Survey's website, some more than 300 miles away.

Shocks of 2.2 and 2.5 magnitude at shallower depths also are listed on the website, recorded as occurring within the hour and a half following Kentucky's biggest earthquake was a 5.2 in 1980 in Sharpsburg, a town in Kentucky's northeast.

Property damage totaled more than $1 million during that temblor, with collapsed chimneys and cracks in the ground seen about 7.5 miles away from the epicenter.

Earthquakes east of the blor on the East Coast can be felt 10 times farther away than if it happened in California, according to the US-GS. An earthquake in Maine last month was felt as far south as Connecticut, rattling windows and shaking kitchen tables.

Also on Saturday, a 3.1

magnitude quake in Alaska recorded at 12:01 p.m. local time is listed on the website, but no reports from the public are listed.

Fisheries Nations Set To Discuss Tuna

BY MICHAEL CASEY

Associated Press

DUBAI, United Arab Emirates • After defeating a proposal in 2010 to ban the export of an endangered fish that is a key ingredient of sushi, Japan and Asian nations argued it should be left to quota-setting international fisheries bodies to bring the species back from the brink.

Two years on, their strategy for rebuilding stocks of Atlantic Bluefin tuna appears to be working.

Thanks in part to a sharp reduction in the amount of fish legally caught, the bluefin population in the Atlantic is on the rebound though "the magnitude and speed of the increase vary considerably," according to a stock assessment by scientists released ahead of the annual International Commission for the Conservation of Atlantic Tunas which starts Monday in Morocco.

"We have been working and campaigning on the issue of bluefin tuna for 12 years so to finally see signs of a recovery trend is good news'', said Sergi Tudela, head of the fisheries program at WWF Mediterranean.

"We need to see how the recovery trend progresses over time," he said. "In the meantime, we cannot lower our guard, management efforts need to be maintained and even strengthened. Bluefin tuna fisheries management will not become a success overnight."

Environmentalists are calling on the 48 nations in ICCAT to endorse scientific recommendations to keep the current quotas of 14,200 tons a year intact for the next three years. They will also be pushing for increased protection for other threatened species, including shortfin mako and porbeagle sharks as well as blue marlin and white marlin.

"This year is really a test year for ICCAT," said Amanda Nickson, director of the Global Tuna Conservation Campaign at the Pew Environment Group.

"The stock assessment results seem to indicate there may be the possibility of a glimmer of recovery but it's so uncertain at the moment," she said. "This is the first year where they will have to stick to science even if it does look like there is a bit of good news. So it's important from our perspective we retain pressure on governments at ICCAT to listen to that science. Our key message is to hold those quotas where they are."

The BBC Director General, George Entwistle, left, stands with the Chairman of the BBC Trust, Lord Chris Patten, as he announces his resignation as director general outside New Broadcasting House in central London, after recent news program problems.

BBC CHIEF QUITS AFTER SAYING TELEVISION REPORT WAS WRONG

BY CASSANDRA VINOGRAD

Associated Press

LONDON • The BBC's top executive resigned Saturday night after the prestigious broadcaster's marquee news magazine wrongly implicated a British politician in a child sex-abuse scandal, plunging the network into further uncertainty amid a controversy that exploded after it decided not to air similar allegations against one of its own stars who police now say was one of nation's worst pedophiles.

In a brief statement outside BBC headquarters, Entwistle said he decided to do the "honorable thing" and step down after just eight weeks in the job.

"When appointed to the role, with 23 years' experience as a producer and leader at the BBC, I was confident the trustees had chosen the best candidate for the post, and the right person to tackle the challenges and opportunities ahead. However the wholly exceptional events of the past few weeks have led me to conclude that the BBC should appoint a new leader," he said.

It was a rapid about face for Entwistle, who earlier Saturday had insisted he had no plans to resign – despite growing questions about his leadership and the BBC's integrity in wake of the scan-

John Whittingdale, chairman of the Britain's Commons Culture, Media and Sport Committee, said Entwistle had no choice but to go, as recent events had left the impression that the BBC's management has "lost their grip" of the organization.

"I think that what has happened in the last few days has immensely weakened his authority and credibility," Whittingdale said in response to the resignation. "It would have been very difficult for him to continue in those circumstances."

Entwistle assumed the mantle as head of the BBC just two months ago from Mark Thompson, who was appointed chief executive of The New York Times Co. in August and is due to take up the post next month.

Last month he was faced with his first crisis due to the growing scandal revolving around Jimmy Savile, the renowned BBC TV host who died last year and who is alleged to have sexually abused numerous young people.

In addition to the troubling possibility that Savile may have used his position — and BBC premises — to carry out assaults, the scandal further jolted BBC because its "Newsnight" investigative program, decided to shelve its own report into allegations against Savile.

That decision prompted deep soul-searching at the venerated broadcaster and assurances from Entwistle that he would get to the bottom of the decision. But the furore was reignited when the same program aired a report on Nov. 2 about alleged sex abuse in Wales in the 1970s and 1980s. During the program, victim Steve Messham claimed he had been abused by a senior Conservative Party figure.

The BBC didn't name the alleged abuser, but online rumors focused on Alistair McAlpine, a Conservative Party member of the House of Lords. On Friday, he issued a fierce denial and threatened

Messham then said he had been mistaken about his abuser's identity and apologized to McAlpine, prompting fury over the BBC's decision to air the report, the suspension of investigative programs at "Newsnight" and mounting questions over Entwistle's leadership.

Enwistle had insisted he was not aware of the program before it was broadcast saying in hindsight he wished the matter had been referred to him.

But that stand drew incredulity from politicians and media watchers wondering how he could have allowed a second botched handling of a high-profile child sex-abuse story so soon after the broadcaster was pitched into crisis over allegations against its late TV host Jimmy Savile. The BBC Trust's chairman, Chris Patten, called Saturday "one of the saddest evenings of my public life" but praised Entwistle's "honor and courage" in tendering his resignation.

"At the heart of the BBC is its role as a trusted global news organisation, and as the Editor-in-Chief of this organisation, George has very honourably offered us his resignation because of the unacceptable mistakes and the unacceptable shoddy journalism which has caused so much controversy," Patten

British Culture Secretary Maria Miller welcomed the resignation, calling it "regrettable but the right decision."

"It is vital that credibility and public trust in this important national institution is restored. It is now crucial that the BBC puts the systems in place to ensure it can make first class news and current affairs programs," she said.

Pot Votes in Colo., Wash. Raise Specter of Weed Tourism

BY KRISTEN WYATT Associated Press

DENVER • Hit the slopes and then a bong?

Marijuana legalization votes this week in Colorado and Washington state don't just set up an epic state-federal showdown on drug laws for residents. The measures also open the door for marijuana tourism.

Both marijuana measures make marijuana possession in small amounts OK for all adults over 21 - not just state residents but visitors, too. Tourists may not be able to pack their bowls along with their bags, but as long as out-of-state tourists purchase and use the drug while in Colorado or Washington, they wouldn't violate the marijuana measures.

Of course, that's assuming the recreational marijuana measures take effect at all. That was very much in doubt Friday as the states awaited word on possible lawsuits from the U.S. Department of Justice asserting federal supremacy over drug law.

So the future of marijuana tourism in Colorado and Washington is hazy. But that hasn't stopped rampant speculation, especially in Colorado, where tourism is the No. 2 industry thanks to the Rocky Mountains and a vibrant ski industry.

The day after Colorado approved recreational marijuana by a wide margin, the headline in the Aspen Times asked, "Aspendam?" referring to Amsterdam's marijuana cafes.

Colorado's tourism director, Al White, tried to downplay the prospect of a new marijuana tourism boom.

"It won't be as big a deal as either side hopes or fears," White said.

Maybe not. But many are asking about marijuana

Ski resorts are "certainly watching it closely," said Jennifer Rudolph of Colorado Ski Country USA, a trade association that represents 21 Colorado resorts.

Any plans for an adultsonly après lounge where skiers could get more than an Irish coffee to numb their

"There's a lot that remains to be seen," Rudolph said with a chuckle. "I guess you could say we're waiting for the smoke to clear."

The Colorado counties where big ski resorts are located seem to have made up their minds. The marijuana measure passed by overwhelming margins, with more support than in less visited areas.

The home county of Aspen approved the marijuana measure more than 3-to-1. More than two-thirds approved marijuana in the home county of Colorado's largest ski resort, Vail. The home county of Telluride ski resort gave marijuana legalization its most lopsided victory, nearly 8 in 10 favoring the measure.

"Some folks might come to Colorado to enjoy some marijuana as will be their right. So what?" said Betty Aldworth, advocacy director for the Colorado marijuana campaign.

Washington state already sees a version of marijuana tourism.

Every summer on the shores of the Puget Sound, host is "Hempfest," which according to organizers attracted around 250,000 people over three days this year. For those three days, people are largely left alone to smoke publically at a local park, even as police stand by. "People travel to Seattle from other states and countries to attend Seattle Hempfest every year to experience the limited freedom that happens at the event," said executive director Vivian McPeak. "It's reasonable to assume that people will travel to Washington assuming that the federal government doesn't inter-

McPeak draw parallels to Amsterdam where an annual "Cannabis Cup" attracts tourists from all over the world and Vancouver, British Columbia, which has lax marijuana rules that have borne marijuana cafes drawing travelers.

Amsterdam's marijuana tourism is in a hazy spot these days, though. The incoming Dutch government suggested a national "weed pass" that would have been available only to residents and that would have effectively banned tourists from Amsterdam's marijuana cafes. The "weed pass" idea was scrapped, but under a provisional governing pact unveiled last week, Dutch cities can bar foreigners from weed shops if they choose.

In Denver, some feared that the Colorado marijuana vote could deter tourists, not to mention business visi-

"Colorado's brand will be damaged, and we may attract fewer conventions and see a decline in leisure travel," Visit Denver CEO Richard Scharf said in a statement before the vote. Colorado's governor opposed the measure but said after its passage that he didn't envision marijuana tourism materializing.

"I don't think that's going to happen," Democratic Gov. John Hickenlooper said. "They're going to flock here to buy marijuana as if they're going to take it back? On an airplane? That seems unlikely to me." Colorado's measure specifically bans public use of the drug. But guidelines for commercial sales are still to be worked out. The state's 536 medical marijuana dispensaries are banned from allowing on-site consumption, but lawmakers could set different rules for recreational marijuana shops.

Marijuana backers downplayed the impact on tourism. Aldworth pointed out that pot-smoking tourists wouldn't exactly be new. Colorado ski slopes already are dotted with "smoke shacks," old mining cabins that have been illicitly repurposed as places to smoke pot out of the cold. And the ski resort town of Breckenridge dropped criminal penalties for marijuana use two years ago.

"Some folks come to Colorado and enjoy some marijuana while they are here today," Aldworth said.

The sheriff of the county including Aspen was sanguine about the prospects of pot-smoking visitors.

"For me, it's going to be live and let live. If people want to come to Colorado because pot is legal – and that's the sole reason - it's up to them," Pitkin County Sheriff Joe DiSalvo told The Aspen Times. "I am not the lifestyle police."

Forest Officials Study Grizzly Bear Danger at Campgrounds Surrounding Yellowstone National Park

BY BRETT FRENCH

The Billings Gazette

As grizzly bear populations in Yellowstone National Park have grown, supervisors of the six national forests surrounding the park in Montana, Wyoming and Idaho have had to be more vigilant about precautions campgrounds.

But in 2010, the mauling death of a Michigan man at a Montana campground just outside Yellowstone's boundary northeast prompted forest officials to agree to undertake a collective review of their pro-

"The goal was initially to look at the causal factors that would put a campground at greater risk for grizzly bear incidents," said Marna Daley, Montana's Gallatin National Forest public affairs officer.

Those concerns seemed more valid after two hikers in Yellowstone were killed by grizzly bears in the summer of 2011.

At a meeting this month, the supervisors will receive the information that Forest Service grizzly bear coordinator Dan Tyres has gathered over the past two years after visiting 166 developed campgrounds around the park.

In addition to providing a practical inventory of what is in each campground - everything from the number of sites to how many food storage boxes may be present - the information will include bear distribution in the forests based on 21 years of data.

"The Forest Service already has a good idea of how to secure attractants at campsites," Tyres said. "But this will give us a better idea of where the infrastructure is at across the greater Yellowstone area." Homework

Tyres also studied the reams of literature already written on bear encounters in campgrounds and boiled that down into what has worked and what has not. The options available to the Forest Service vary

Campgrounds could be restricted to hard-sided trailers and campers only. The amount of hiding cover could be reduced. Campgrounds could be moved away from streams and rivers, which are migratory corridors for bears and other wildlife. Patrols at campgrounds could be stepped up by campground hosts. More information could be handed out or signs posted to educate the public. Campgrounds could even be organized like the old wagon trains, with hard-sided campers on the outside edges of the campground sheltering the tent campers in the middle.

"These have all been tried with different levels of success in different areas," Tyres said.

The data confirm what the agency already knew anecdotally.

"We already have a good idea of where we more often see bears," Tyres said. "This formalizes it."

The question arises, though, about how safe the Forest Service should make the great outdoors. Taken to the extreme, should campgrounds be fenced to keep bears out? Should the fences be electrified?

That's not likely to hap-

"There's a level of risk you take when visiting a national forest," Kristie Salzmann, information officer for the Shoshone National Forest in Wyoming. "We can't guarantee your safety at all

No matter what's decided by the forest supervisors, Tyres sees his collection of information as invaluable to the forest workers on the ground, giving them a better idea of what each of the area's 166 campgrounds contains.

"This is more about putting the tools in their hands," he said.

Chile Searches for 3 Missing European Tourists

SANTIAGO, Chile (AP) • Three days of searching has found no trace of three European tourists who went missing while hiking at one of this South American nation's most active volcanos, authorities said Saturday.

Teams led by special police and the Andean Aid Team have been sweeping the area around the Villarica volcano in Chile's central valley since Thursday morn-and Luca Ogliengo, 25, of Italy. Ogliengo's family has rented a private helicopter to join the search.

The missing Europeans are identified as Dmitry Sivenkov, 32, of Russia; Gillhem Bellon, 25, of France;

The hikers haven't been heard from since around 7 p.m. Wednesday, when one of them called his girlfriend who lives in the nearby community of Pucon, authorities said. He told her it was getting late and dark so the group decided to sleep over at the volcano and descend the next day.

"What worries us is that they were unprepared to sleep over in the volcano," the director of the regional emergency office, Janet Medrano, told The Associated Press. "They were there only for a day hike and that night a cold front cooled temperatures and brought a lot of snow, which could have covered their footprints," Medrano said.

The search began early Thursday after the snowy weather cleared out.

"Unfortunately,

She said Saturday's search began at 6 a.m. and ended at three days there's no trace of these persons," Medrano

Idaho code 39-5703 reads that it shall be unlawful for a minor to possess, receive, purchase, sell, distribute, use or consume tobacco products or electronic cigarettes. A minor may possess but not sell or distribute tobacco products or electronic cigarettes in the course of employment, for duties such as stocking shelves or carrying purchases to customers' vehicles.

The only exception to this law is that a minor can't be charged if participating in a "sting" operation where a minor was used in making random unannounced visits to retailers.

Now the news I'm sure you wanted to know. Violation of this code is a misdemeanor with a fine of up to $300. It could also involve community service where tobacco awareness would be the

I should add that you will need to get a permit to sell the electronic cigarettes because if you were caught selling them without a permit the fine would be $300 and up to 6 months in jail. If it were made to a minor then the fine goes to no less than $500 and no more than a $1,000 fine. If you continued to sell without a permit the fine could be a $1,000 a day until one was filed for. Idaho Code 39-5709 is the code with all the rules here.

In case you need to know where to go to file for a permit, you should be able to find the answer by checking out Idaho Statue title 67, Chapter 52. This is the Idaho Administrative Procedures Act.

American Cancer Society Needs Volunteers

TWIN FALLS • The American Cancer Society is looking for people interested in serving as volunteers for its Cancer Resource Center located at St. Luke's MSTI in Twin Falls.

The Cancer Resource Center is operated in partnership between the American Cancer Society and St. Luke's MSTI. It offers area cancer patients, their families, caregivers and the public immediate information about specific cancers, services and programs offered by the American Cancer Society, in addition to resources available in the area.

Volunteers can sign up for as many hours as they wish but are required to register for at least one four-hour shift per week. Peggy Schultz, Quality of Life manager for the American Cancer Society, said many of the volunteers staffing the center are cancer survivors themselves, giving them a firsthand insight into what the patients are experiencing.

Volunteers will be trained on the latest information and resources available to share with cancer patients. Those wishing to serve as volunteers are required to have computer experience. Experience in working in a healthcare setting is beneficial, though not required. Volunteer candidates should also be compassionate to the needs of the patients.

SICK, FRAIL STRUGGLE MOST IN STORM'S AFTERMATH

NEW YORK (AP) • Some of society's most vulnerable people — the elderly, the disabled and the chronically ill — have been pushed to the brink in the powerless, flood-ravaged neighborhoods struggling to recover from Superstorm Sandy.

The storm didn't just knock out electricity and destroy property when it came ashore in places like the Far Rockaway section of Queens. It disrupted the fragile support networks that allowed the neighborhood's frailest residents to get by.

cableone.net 🗊 📴

Here, the catastrophe has closed pharmacies, kept home care aids from getting to elderly clients and made getting around in a wheelchair impossible. The city has recorded at least two deaths of older men in darkened buildings.

For some living in the disaster zone, it has all been too much. When a team of medics and National Guardsmen turned up at Sheila Goldberg's apartment tower in Far Rockaway on Friday to check on the well-being of residents, floor by floor, the 75-year-old burst into tears and begged for help caring for her 85-year-old husband. "This is a blessing. I'm at my wit's end," she said, sobbing.

In Staten Island's waterlogged New Dorp section, volunteers walked in knots, often carrying shovels and pails with the price tags still on them.

Lighthouse Christian and Salmon River Set up Title Clash

TIMES-NEWS

GARDEN VALLEY • Logan Bosma threw for four touchdowns and rushed for four more as Lighthouse Christian earned its second straight 1A-II championship game appearance with a 58-14 win over Garden Valley on Saturday.

Bosma's arm accounted for 226 yards, including 63 yards and two touchdown strikes to Eli Berndt. His other touchdown passes went to Phillip DeMello and Dillon Wilson, both in the first quarter.

Adam Taylor rushed for 135 yards, while the defense forced four turnovers two picks each for Berndt and Luc Fadness.

Garden Valley (9-2) ran 92 offensive plays in its nohuddle attack, compared to 64 for the Lions. But eventually the superior team pulled away, scoring 30 points in the fourth quarter to ice it.

"That's a good football team. They weren't 9-1 by accident," said Lighthouse Chrsitian. "It took us a while to grind them out."

The Lions (9-2) advance to face Salmon River, which they beat on the way to the title last year, next weekend in the Boise area. Day, time and site were not determined at press time.

expectations every season," Garner said. "The community backs us 100 percent and we have great fans, generation after generation."

With a 1-yard QB sneak by Garner, Declo led 8-0 at halftime after two quarters full of penalties and turnovers by each team. The Hornets had three drives inside the red zone killed by yellow flags and a fumble.

"I was disappointed in the first half. Maybe we bailed out of what we do a little soon," said Declo head coach Kelly Kidd. "We went (back) to things that are bread and butter for us."

That bread and butter is Declo's pounding running game, out of the wing-T and double wing. The Hornets finished with 502 yards rushing, led by Jason Gillette's 133 yards and two touchdowns.

When Gillette briefly went to the sideline with a minor injury, Jackson Duncan (92 yards) Josh Phillips (65 yards), Drexton Thrall yards), Stirland Zollinger (21 yards), and Boston Webb (17 yards) helped carry the load.

Declo's ground-andpound left Marsing defenders with hands on their hips and gasping for air.

"We had skeptics who said our schedule wasn't tough enough, so it was important that we get our kids conditioned," said Kidd. "Coach (Rhett) Matsen and coach (Winn) Osterhout take care of conditioning. I turned it over to them because I'm a softy when it comes to conditioning. Garner took a quarterback draw, shed four tacklers and scampered 28 yards for a touchdown, capping a 10-play, 80yard drive to put Declo ahead 16-0.

After an 11-play, 83-yard drive, the Hornets extended the lead 23-0 at the end of the third quarter on a 14-yard run by Gillette.

Later in the fourth, Gillette dove into the end zone for a 1-yard score to set a new school record for touchdowns in a season with his 29th, surpassing Ja $son\,Webb's\,mark\,from\,1998.$

Once again sparked by point guard Montigo Alford, who attacked the Mustangs' porous 2-3 zone and rattled its point guards on defense, the Golden Eagles methodically dissected a defense that, for all its length and leaping ability, lacked the continuity and discipline to make it matter.

"We came in and got a couple easy baskets that we finished," head coach Steve Gosar said. "We know they blocked a lot of shots last night and we were going to have to finish at the rim strong. And we did."

CSI paired Alford's penetration, which resulted in eight of the team's 17 assists, with Billy Reader post-ups. Reader's strength effectively neutralized the Mustangs length, and resulted in not just Reader scores - matched Reid with 14 points - but inside-out shots for guys like Reid and Jaysean Paige.

Paige, originally from New York, played against two of Monroe College's players and was certainly known in high school by much of the roster. Paige wanted to prove a point about his new school. "I wanted to show them how hard we work down here and that we don't take plays off," Paige said.

The discrepancy in hustle and execution was matched only by the Mustangs' trashtalk to production ratio, with much of it aimed at Paige early-on. Despite the goading, Paige played in control for the most part, snatching three steals on a night his shot was off.

CSI out-rebounded Monroe College 43-34, out-shot them by 15 percent from the field, had 11 fewer turnovers, and held a 25 point led for much of the contest despite getting seven fewer blocks. Alford, Reid, Paige, Trevor Ritchie and Reader all scored in double figures.

Higgins led the Warriors on their only offensive scoring drive of the game, a 10play, 72-yard drive resulting in a 1-yard touchdown run for John Lister.

of my high school tournament games, Aneli Otineru came and told me about CSI, and that they were interested," Passi recalled. "They offered me and my best friend (sophomore setter Marie Fujii), and we took a leap of faith."

Two years, two national tournament appearances and a Region 18 Player of the Year nod later, that faith has been rewarded and then some. Passi is headed home to the top 10 program in Manoa. But she has unfinished business here first.

"Last year when we watched the championship match, that should have been us," Passi said. "I'm fire and fury (emotionally), and I wanted to do everything. I wanted to win and be the MVP and all of that.

"This year I'm just working harder, and when I was able to let go of it being about me, I started playing better and we all started playing better."

Passi just may achieve all she wants, but Mellupe has risen to the fore in the past two weeks to prove herself as quite the sidekick.

The sophomore from Riga, Latvia, stole the show at the Region 18 Tournament, which the Golden Eagles won handily. In addition to being a first-team all-region selection, Mellupe was named the tournament's most outstanding player.

"Everything Liene is, is It hasn't always been that easy. The self-professed city girl came to rural Idaho sight unseen, and still hasn't adjusted to life some 5,100 miles from home. Suffering a torn ACL early her freshman season didn't help either. Away from home and family, and unable to play, she poured herself into rehabbing.

"It was really tough, because I wanted to help my team and I couldn't do anything," Mellupe said. "Mentally it wasn't that hard, because there wasn't a lot I could do but work to get back."

Mellupe returned in five months from the ACL injury. The knee still bothers her after games, but not during. Cartisser believes fans and teammates are just now seeing what Mellupe is fully capable of.

because of how hard she works," Cartisser said. "I've never had anyone come back from an ACL that quickly, and that's just because she got after it. She's a great player but she's also had to work really hard to be as good as she is."

So when CSI leaves early Tuesday for the national tournament that starts two days later, their hopes hingeson the two right-sided players that have taken divergent paths to leadership roles.

"I think the fact they're so different speaks a lot to the character we have in that locker room, that they can just mesh," Cartisser said. "This is a driven group that has that one common goal."

Florida (9-1) did little on offense most of the day and looked to be in serious trouble when quarterback Jeff Driskel left the game with an ankle injury.

NO. 9 LSU 37, NO. 23 MISSISSIPPI STATE 17

BATON ROUGE, La. • Zach Mettenberger passed for 273 yards and two touchdowns, and LSU kept alive faint hope of a Southeastern Conference title.

Where's the Idaho Game?

The Idaho-BYU football game, which started at 8:15 p.m., was still in progress at the time the Times-News went to print. BYU led Idaho 42-7 at halftime. For a full recap visit Magicvalley.com or see Monday's Times-News.

Playing in the last home game of his SU career, Nassib directed an offense that gained 524 total yards. Nassib went 15 of 23 and passed Donovan McNabb for second on the school's career yards passing list.

NO. 12 SOUTH CAROLINA 38, ARKANSAS 20

COLUMBIA, S.C. • Connor Shaw threw for two touchdowns and ran for another score for South Carolina.

Shaw was 15 of 23 for 279 yards for the Gamecocks (8-2, 6-2 Southeastern Conference), who finished with six league wins for only the second time in 20 years in the SEC.

NO. 14 OKLAHOMA 42, BAYLOR 34

NORMAN, Okla. • Landry Jones threw for 277 yards and two touchdowns, Damien Williams ran for 99 yards and two scores and Bob Stoops moved into sole possession of second place on the school's career wins list.

Backup quarterback Blake Bell scored on a 55-yard keeper in the fourth quarter for the longest run by a quarterback in the Stoops era.

NO. 15 STANFORD 27, NO. 13 OREGON STATE 23 STANFORD, Calif. • Kevin Hogan threw for 254 yards and three touchdowns in his first collegiate start, and Stanford overcame four turnovers to rally past Oregon State.

Cody Vaz fumbled late in the fourth quarter to give the Cardinal (8-2, 6-1) the ball at the Beavers 29. The only Oregon State (7-2, 5-2) turnover turned out to be the difference.

NO. 18 NEBRASKA 32, PENN STATE 23

LINCOLN, Neb. • Taylor Martinez threw a 5-yard touchdown pass to Jamal Turner for Nebraska's first lead, and the Cornhuskers overcame a doubledigit, second-half deficit for the fourth time this season.

Ameer Abdullah ran for 116 yards on a career-high 31 carries, and Martinez finished with 104 yards as the Huskers pounded away on the ground on a windy afternoon at Memorial Stadium.

NO. 19 TEXAS 33, IOWA STATE 7

AUSTIN, Texas • David Ash passed for 364 yards and two touchdowns and Texas honored former coach Darrell Royal by whipping Iowa State.

Ash had a 61-yard touchdown pass to Mike Davis in the first quarter. Johnathan Gray ran for two touchdowns for the Longhorns (8-2, 5-2 Big 12), who won their fourth in a row.

NO. 19 LOUISIANA TECH 62, TEXAS STATE 55

SAN MARCOS, Texas • Kenneth Dixon ran for four touchdowns to set a single-season NCAA freshman record and No.19 Louisiana Tech scored on all but two possessions.

The Bulldogs (9-1, 4-0) have won 10 straight in the Western Athletic Conference. They racked up 627 yards, while allowing 577, and kept slim hopes for a BCS bid alive.

NO. 21 USC 38, ARIZONA STATE 17

LOS ANGELES • Margise Lee caught 10 passes for 161 yards and a touchdown, Curtis Mc-Neal rushed for 163 yards and two more scores, and Southern California bounced back from consecutive losses against skidding Arizona State.

Matt Barkley threw for 222 yards and three TDs while becoming the leading passer in conference history for the Trojans (7-3,5-3 Pac-12), who overcame a slow start and five turnovers to snap their twogame skid. USC hasn't lost three straight since 2001, former coach Pete Carroll's first season.

NO. 24 RUTGERS 28, ARMY 7 PISCATAWAY, N.J. • Brandon Coleman caught his second touchdown of the game on a 31yard pass from Gary Nova with 8:49 to play and Rutgers survived a valiant effort by mistake-prone Army.

In bouncing back from its first loss and a two-week layoff that featured Hurricane Sandy and a Nor'easter that dumped a foot of snow in New Jersey, the Scarlet Knights (8-1) scored three times in the final nine minutes. They also got a 2-yard touchdown run from Savon Huggins and a 73-yard fumble return by Duron Harmon in the final minute.

NO. 25 TEXAS TECH 41, KANSAS 34

LUBBOCK, Texas • Running back Eric Stephens threw a 3yardjump pass to Darrin Moore for a touchdown in double overtime to lead Texas Tech past Kansas. Kansashada chance to tie but Michael Cummings couldn't connect with Tre' Parmalee in the end zone on fourth-and-9.

JEFFERSON LEADS JAZZ OVER SUNS

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SALT LAKE CITY • Al Jefferson had 27 points and 14 rebounds, and the Utah Jazz built a 22-point lead and held on for a 94-81 victory Saturday night over the Phoenix Suns.

Michael Beasley's follow dunk after a Jazz turnover cut Utah's lead to 79-74 with about 5 minutes remaining.

But Jefferson's steal and 19footer by Paul Millsap halted a nearly 6-minute scoreless streak for the Jazz and started a 7-0 run, capped by Marvin Williams' 3 pointer.

Millsap added 18 points and 13 rebounds for Utah.

Luis Scola led the Suns with 21 points and Jared Dudley scored 16.

ROCKETS 96, PISTONS 82 HOUSTON • James Harden scored 20 points, Omer Asik had 14 and the Houston Rockets beat the winless Detroit Pistons in their first game without coach Kevin McHale.

The team announced earlier Saturday that McHale was taking an immediate leave of absence to deal with a family matter.

The Pistons fell to 0-7. Brandon Knight scored 16 points, and Greg Monroe added 12 points and 11 re-

PACERS 89, WIZARDS 85

INDIANAPOLIS • Paul George scored 20 points and Indiana stopped a three-game slide.

Roy Hibbert added seven points, 12 rebounds and two blocks for the Pacers (3-4). Gerald Green had 15 points and Lance Stephenson scored 12 in his first start of the season.

Washington carried a 72-70 lead into the fourth quarter, and Jordan Crawford promptly made a 3-pointer to extend the lead to five. But the Pacers then grabbed control with a 10-0 run.

BULLS 87, TIMBERWOLVES 80

CHICAGO • Nate Robinson scored 18 points and the Bulls ended the Timberwolves' three-game winning Chicago lost starting point guard Kirk Hinrich to a right hip strain in the second quarter, and Robinson helped pick up the slack by playing 31 minutes. Hinrich had 11 points in the period as the Bulls beat Minnesota for the sixth straight time.

Joakim Noah added 17 points and seven rebounds and Luol Deng had 16 points and seven boards for the Bulls (4-2).

Nikola Pekovic led the shorthanded Timberwolves (4-2) with 18 points and eight rebounds. Andrei Kirilenko added 11 points, 12 rebounds and seven assists.

The Timberwolves had just 11 players available. Ricky Rubio (left knee surgery) and Kevin Love (fractured right hand) have been out all season. J.J. Barea missed his second straight game with a sprained left foot, while Brandon Roy missed his first game of the season with a sore

76ERS 93, RAPTORS 83

TORONTO • Thaddeus Young, Jrue Holiday and Nick Young scored 16 points apiece, helping the 76ers pick up another road win.

Spencer Hawes had 12 points and 11 rebounds, Dorell Wright added 15 points and Philadelphia won its third straight, with all three victories on the road. It's the first time the 76ers have done that since February 2003.

The Sixers, who won 106-100 at Boston on Friday night, knocked off another Atlantic Division opponent thanks to a huge second quarter that saw them turn a six-point deficit into a 19-point lead. Andrea Bargnani led Toronto with 23 points, while DeMar DeRozan had 19. Jose Calderon had 14 points and 11 assists, but the Raptors lost their third straight.

CELTICS 96, BUCKS 92

MILWAUKEE • Paul Pierce scored 25 points, Kevin Garnett added 18 and the Celtics rallied for the victory.

Boston (3-3) got even with the Bucks after Milwaukee knocked off the Celtics 99-88 in Boston on Nov. 2.

Monta Ellis led the Bucks with 32 points, while Samuel Dalembert added 14 points and eight rebounds. Rajon Rondo had 10 points and 10 assists for the Celtics, giving him 30 straight games with 10 or more assists, the third-longest streak in NBA history. Magic Johnson has the longest streak at 46 games from April 1983 to February 1984.

Kobe Doesn't Doubt the Zen Master

obody knows what might have happened had the Los Angeles Lakers been a bit more patient and allowed Kobe Bryant and his teammates some time to adjust to Mike Brown's new Princeton offense, no matter how ill-suited it seemed for their talents.

Not that it really matters, as long as Phil Jackson is ready and willing to bring his courtside throne out of retirement.

Kobe Bryant made that clear when asked whether the Lakers could switch gears and win quickly if Jackson returned with the triangle offense that made him arguably the greatest coach in NBA history.

"Are you doubting the Zen Master?" Bryant said.

No, and no one else should, either. Eleven NBA titles outstrips any misgivings about bringing the 67year-old Jackson back, no matter how ignominious his ending with the Lakers was last time he was on the bench with them.

It still bothers Bryant that Jackson retired after the Lakers suffered an embarrassing meltdown in being swept out of the playoffs by the Dallas Mavericks two seasons ago.

"He's too great of a coach to go out that way," Bryant said. "That's kind of my personal sentiment."

Around Staples Center, Bryant's personal sentiment goes a long way. Despite his protestations to the contrary, he clearly wasn't happy with Brown or his offense, as evidenced by the angry stare he gave the coach as the Lakers lost to the Utah Jazz last week.

Time is running out for Bryant to get the sixth ring that will forever cement his place next to Michael Jordan when talk turns to the best players ever. He knows his best chance to get that ring and maybe even more is with the coach who was with him for the first five.

Jerry Buss believes that, too, which is why he and team management wasted no time in dumping Brown, despite having to eat about $10 million in severance pay. It's a small price to pay when the Lakers are flush with new TV money and in desperate need of a contending team if Time Warner Cable is to be successful in getting DirecTV and others to pay up and carry the new channel built around the franchise.

Indeed, Brown was given the hook so quickly it's fair to speculate that perhaps there was some corporate pressure coming from the company that paid some $3 billion for a 20-year deal to broadcast the Lakers. The firing came hours before the Lakers were going to play the hapless Golden State Warriors, giving them an easy win to get the post-Brown era off to a good start.

That both the Lakers and their star player want that era to be led by Jackson became clear immediately after Brown was fired. Laker fans didn't take much longer to get on the bandwagon, bringing signs supporting Jackson to Friday night's blowout of the Warriors, and chanting "We Want Phil" in the second half.

"I can understand why;" interim coach Bernie Bickerstaff said. "The guy's got the rings."

Jackson appears to want to be back with the Lakers just as much. Multiple reports on Saturday were that he was contacting coaches to be his assistants, and that only contract details stood in the way of his rehiring.

As for Brown, well, that's what happens sometimes when you work on the big stage. Brown's biggest problem may have been that Bryant never warmed up to him, but his strange decision to implement an offense suited more for a team of journeymen than superstars undoubtedly helped speed up his demise.

A Princeton offense in a Showtime town? Not with Jack Nicholson and the rest of Hollywood's elite sitting courtside, you don't. Not when there are huge television deals, huge contracts, and huge luxury tax payments on the horizon.

This was a team built to win now, a team with aging stars in Bryant and Steve Nash that couldn't afford to wait to gel. Yes, Dwight Howard is still playing at about 50 percent of his ability as he works himself back into shape after back surgery, but the sum of this team was still far less than its parts.

Bryant went on Facebook to claim he had a good relationship with Brown and to wish him his best. But his biggest statement may have come on the court against the Warriors, where he dominated as if to declare the Brown era was over and a new one was beginning.

The Lakers can only hope this coaching change turns out as well as another early season firing did for the team 31 years ago. Paul Westhead was the coach then, but Magic Johnson was unhappy with his offensive system and asked to be traded early in the season, and Westhead was fired with the Lakers just 7-4 on the year.

His replacement was an assistant named Pat Riley, who took the team to the NBA title that year and ended up coaching three more championships in LA.

A content Kobe playing for the coach he admires most isn't going to make that happen by himself. He can still take over individual games, but for the seasonlong grind he'll need Nash to return from injury, Howard to keep improving, and Pau Gasol to play as hard as Bryant likes him to.

The Lakers will also need to figure out a way to play defense, something they refused to do much of under Brown, who built his reputation as a defensive coach.

It won't be an easy task, even if they get Jackson. There are no guarantees, especially when the road to any title goes through LeBron James and the Miami Heat.

But if Bryant doesn't doubt the Zen Master, Laker fans shouldn't either.

Learning the Words

thought I was anonymous. I thought no one would notice. I was wrong. I stood there in a group as they sang the Idaho state song and tried to jump in when I remembered a word, but mostly I stood there perfectly still, like my vocal cords.

It reminded me of arriving in Texas where people say a pledge to the Texas flag on a regular basis. I pretended to mumble the words while staring intently at the flag with that big Texas star. I stood there last week among the voices singing,

"And here we have Idaho / Winning her way to fame. / Silver and gold in the sunlight blaze, / and romance lies in her name." Despite the song's rather non-committal, almost apathetic title, "Here We Have Idaho," I could sense the bond the people felt to this state and to each other the bond that comes from the shared memories and experiences created by geography. A map maker more than a century ago drew a straight line across the Teton Pass and separated my home state from Idaho. Over time, that pencil line became a chasm, a cultural divide made up of words and songs and place names. As I tried to be invisible, the song never seemed to end, "There's truly one state in this great land of ours /

Where ideals can be realized. / The pioneers made it so for you and me, / A legacy we'll always prize."
I felt like the new kid in school who didn't do the assigned reading. When the song was over, I sat down relieved. But someone leaned over to me and said, "You've lived here long enough. You should know the song." And they weren't the only one who noticed. For days, I ran into people who said, "I saw you. You've got to learn the song. I soothed myself by thinking that I had my own state song. But what was it? For years, I always thought it was the cowboy song, "Git Along Little Dogies" or maybe "Home on the Range" (actually the state song of Kansas). Turns out it's called "Wyoming" and it also mentions wildflowers and mountains, but I've never heard it sung. If they sing it in Wyoming somewhere, few people know the words and no one's face is beaming with pride like they were that day last

I went back to the newsroom, told them what had happened and a couple people broke into, "... winning her way to fame. Silver and gold in the sunlight blaze ..." Really?!

When I got home, my husband found a Youtube video of two Idahoans exiled in New York. They said they learned "Here We Have Idaho" in fourth grade, but first they broke into a song that listed all 44 counties in alphabetical order, "Ada, Adams, Bannock, Bear

Please don't ask me to learn that one.

Let Students Decide For Themselves

hat? You don't believe in Evolution? It realdoesn't matter! The purpose of our schools is to educate! To stimulate young minds to acquire volumetrically as much as their brain is capable of assimilating. They should be given the opportunity to learn as much as they can in every single area of science that we can offer them.

Evolution has been proven by many extremely well educated individuals who have verifiable proof on their postulations. Our universe is approximately 13.75 billion years old and it is still expanding. Our earth itself has been occupied by life forms only the past 3.7 billion years; then cleansed severely during that time period of all, or most, life forms; but fossil remains of them were left behind.

We have scientists who spend a lifetime finding and classifying the fossil remains of former forms/species that once walked the "They [stu-dents] should be given the opportunity to learn as much as they can in every single area of science that we can offer them."

surface of our earth, or existed in the depths of our oceans. Early Greek philosophers Socrates and Aristotle gave the subject some thought, but not a lot was proven until both Darwin's and Huxley's studies, which were not accepted until the middle of the 19th century. They do not state that we descended from apes, but only that we share a common ancestry with them.

So why not let each student make a decision themselves after having been taught the theories and facts of biological studies by experts?

Don't Teach Religion in Public Schools

belief in a Creator can only be based on faith. The difference is that most believers freely admit to faith-based belief, whereas atheists usually pretend they have some science or other information to support their non-belief (what science; what information?). The bit of logic applicable to the issue strongly favors a Creator. Non-believers are stuck with the theory that a single point of energy expanded with the "Big Bang" into the universe we observe, creating all matter as well as space and time. Why? Well, it just happened! (Happened only once, or are there billions of universes? Might we have another big bang in our universe? Has any event since that time happened without a fundamental cause?)

I was in grammar school when President Eisenhower mandated two minutes of silent prayer in public schools. My teacher had served in the Army during World War II, and I always thought of him as the bravest and finest man I had ever known; but he clearly objected to prayer in school. He announced that he was "required" to observe the prayer, and then held up his watch and counted off the seconds. That was the first time I met anyone who (apparently) did not believe in prayer.

Have you ever met a REAL fundamentalist Christian who wanted a public school teacher to have some influence on their child's religious training? Can you guess why they would oppose that? The argument on teaching "Intelligent Design" and prayer, or any other religious training in public schools, is between television preachers and atheists. Why don't we tell both to SHUT UP? I also object to teaching evolution in K-12 public schools. Most K-12 teachers are not prepared (or expected to be prepared) to teach evolution, and most students would not have the slightest notion of what they were talking about. I also object to the teaching nuclear physics, brain surgery, etc., in K-12 schools.

Scientists do not "believe in" evolution. It is not a faithbased belief. Evolution is based on solid scientific evidence, and it has nothing to do with belief or disbelief in a Creator (as if the Creator of the universe could not have devised evolution so He wouldn't have to come back down here every time environmental conditions changed to rework His creation).

Post-election: Starting All Over Again

Nothing's impossible I have found,

For when my chin is on the ground,

I pick myself up, Dust myself off, Start all over again - From the 1936 movie "Swing

WASHINGTON • Conservatives should jauntily sing as Fred Astaire George Will and Ginger Rogers did in a year in which the country's chin was on the ground. Conservatives are hardly starting from scratch in their continuing courtship of an electorate half of which embraced their message more warmly than it did this year's messenger. The election's outcome was foreshadowed by Mitt Romney struggling as long as he did to surmount a notably weak field of Republican rivals. His salient deficiency was not of character but of chemistry, that indefinable something suggested by the term empathy. Many voters who thought he lacked this did not trust him to employ on their behalf what he does not lack, economic understanding.

On Feb. 11, 2011, the person who should have been the Republican nominee laconically warned conservatives about a prerequisite for persuading people to make painful adjustments to a rickety entitlement state. Said Indiana's Gov. Mitch Daniels: "A more affirmative, 'better angels' approach to voters is really less an aesthetic than a practical one. With apologies for the banality, I submit that, as we ask Americans to join us on such a boldly different course, it would help if they liked us, just a bit." Romney was a diligent warrior. Next time, Republicans need a more likable one.

Let's Not Celebrate More Women in the Senate

WASHINGTON • Years ago, as a novice representative from California, Nancy Pelosi sat quietly at many a caucus meet- Carlson ing while her colleagues discussed how they were going to bring peace to the Middle East and a chicken to every pot. At one such conference, talk turned to family leave — and as a mother of five, she expected she would finally get asked her opinion. No such luck. Many meetings later, Pelosi would become speaker of the House, and by that time her gender was noted but largely immaterial. She was a powerful speaker because she ruled with an iron hand and did what previous powerful male speakers had done - only backward in high heels and an Armani suit, to paraphrase Ginger Rogers.

With five new women elected to the Senate this week, bringing the chamber's total to 20, we are supposed to be all agog about the Year of the Woman (how many of those have we had?). Pardon me if I decline to celebrate. Not so much because winning an election isn't a real achievement, but because the election was to the Senate – possibly the dullest, most provincial institution in a city full of them.

There will be 16 Democratic and four Republican women in the Senate next year, and at least 77 women (57 Democrats and 20 Republicans) in the House. In New Hampshire, there is now an all-girl band: a female governor, two female senators and two female members of the House.

As voters, too, women have come a long way from the day when they were thought to cast a ballot to match their husbands? As a voting bloc, women are wielding power and narrowing the gender gap: Sen.-elect Elizabeth Warren of Massachusetts beat Sen. Scott Brown with a 20-point lead among women. Sen.-elect Tammy Baldwin of Wisconsin defeated former governor Tommy Thompson resoundingly among women. Sen. Amy Klobuchar of Minnesota crushed Kurt Bills across the board, especially among women.

Yet there is something about the Senate that crushes women when they arrive. If you think Augusta National is a bastion of green jackets and male-only grill rooms, visit the Senate. There are still spittoons, more men's than women's rooms, and unequal gym facilities. Seniority, stentorian oratory and meaningless courtesies abound. All the male senators see themselves as starring in a remake of "Advise and Consent," with themselves as lions.

Women, by contrast, come in as lambs, anxious to get along, and they do. The women have a bipartisan supper club of sorts where they get together and get to know one another. Then-Sen, Hillary Clinton of New York, a Democrat, had a shower for Sen. Kay Bailey Hutchison of Texas, a Republican, when she adopted twins. Klobuchar, a Democrat, helped to throw a party for Republican Sen. Susan Collins of Maine before she got married last summer.

But while they've re-created the feeling of a bygone era, when senators lived in Washington and got to know one another, it hasn't translated into significant policy making. Think of the signature legislation of the last few decades, referred to in shorthand by its sponsors' names: Gramm-Rudman, McCain-Feingold, Nunn-Lugar. They are men, all.

There are few more respected senators than Maine's Olympia Snowe, but she was never so important to the men as when she announced she would be leaving them. Republicans were furious - understandably - because she opened up a safe seat. It was won by an independent, Angus King, who is almost certain to caucus with Democrats.

The most powerful woman to serve in the Senate may have been Clinton, but that is as much because she had been first lady as because of her expertise on milk price supports. She was a rock star from the moment her heels clicked on the marble floors. Even rock-ribbed conservative and well-documented lech Strom Thurmond wanted to get on her good side: Moments after she was sworn in, he stepped into the aisle and asked for a hug.

Still, Clinton had to shrink to make herself small enough for the Senate, proving herself a workhorse, wooing men who had voted to convict her husband, and playing well with colleagues in her own party. Before she arrived, she was put on notice not to be too full of herself — with Sen. Trent Lott of Mississippi, then the Republican leader, wistfully (and jokingly?) hoping that perhaps lightning might strike her before she arrived. Lott eventually came around, joining forces with Clinton on legislation he cared about.

The one new woman who could prove to be bigger than the institution itself, like Clinton or Barack Obama, is Warren. She has already tried to work with powerful men in Washington — to reform the banks after they did their best to destroy the economy — and for her trouble, she was drummed out of town: One of the few bipartisan accomplishments in Washington of the last year was her expulsion from the Capitol by a coalition of men on both sides of the aisle, including a few in the White House.

You go, senator. One of the sweetest sights this January will be seeing her sworn in, hug or no. If she becomes a power center, it won't be because she's walking arm-in-arm with Mitch McConnell or Harry Reid.

In the meantime, I await the day when we celebrate not the Year of the Woman but the Year of the Man, because their numbers are so depleted that 20 of them in the same chamber is a miracle to behold. That's the day we'll know women have real power.

November Is National Hospice and Palliative Care Month

No one likes to think about death and dying, but it's something everyone has to face eventually. There's an incredible resource in our community that provides comfort, care and love to those coping with a serious or life-limiting illness. It's Hospice Visions Inc.

November is National Hospice and Palliative Care Month, a time to reach out to our community to raise awareness about the compassionate care Hospice Visions Inc. offers you and your loved ones. One of the most important messages to help people understand is that hospice care helps patients and families focus on living.

Receiving hospice care does not mean giving up hope or that death is imminent. The earlier an individual does receive hospice care, the more opportunity there is to stabilize your medical condition and address other needs. Hospice care usually takes place in the comfort of your home but can be provided in any environment in which you live, including nursing homes and assisted living facilities. Hospice care is a Medicare and Medicaid benefit. Most private insurers also cover hospice care as well. Hospice Visions Inc. is the only freestanding operated, 501(c)(3) hospice in the Magic Valley. Hospice Visions Inc. is committed to helping ease the pain, reduce isolation and calm the fears of these patients and their families, all the while ensuring everyone receives compassionate, quality end-of-life care.

Our hospice team provides expert medical care to keep patients comfortable and able to enjoy time with loved ones. Our hospice team answers questions, offers advice on what to expect and helps families with the duties of being a caregiver. Our team also provides emotional and spiritual support for the entire family. Hospice care is available to people of all ages with any life limiting illness. Hospice Visions Inc. and our trained volunteers will ask you what's important and listen to what you say. We make your wishes a priority.

If you or a loved one is facing a serious or life-limiting illness, the time to find out more about hospice care is right now.

laissez-faire conservatism. Most voters already favor less punitive immigration policies than the ones angrily advocated by clenchedfist Republicans unwilling to acknowledge that immigrating - risking uncertainty for personal and family betterment - is an entrepreneurial act. The speed with which civil unions and same-sex marriage have become debatable topics and even mainstream policies is astonishing. As is conservatives' failure to recognize this: They need not endorse such policies but neither need they despise those, such as young people, who favor them. And it is strange for conservatives to turn a stony face toward any reconsideration of drug policies, particularly concerning marijuana, which confirm conservatism's warnings about government persistence in the teeth of evidence.

With much work - the most painful sort: thinking to be done, conservatives should squander no energy on recriminations. Romney ran a gallant campaign. Imitation is the sincerest form of politics, and Republicans should emulate Democrats' tactics for locating and energizing their voters. Liberals have an inherent but not insuperable advantage: As enthusiasts of government, to which many of them are related as employees or clients, they are more motivated for political activity than are conservatives, who prefer private spaces. Never mind. Conservatives have a commensurate advantage: Americans still find congenial conservatism's vocabulary of skepticism about statism. And events — ongoing economic anemia; the regulatory state's metabolic urge to bully – will deepen this vocabulary's resonance.

It is frequently said and probably true that many people are more informed when picking a refrigerator than when picking a president. This may, however, be rational ignorance because the probability of any individual's vote mattering to an election's outcome is negligible compared to the effort required to acquire information and vote. (Elections are run by governments, so it is unwise to expect them to be run well, but really: Are hours-long waits at polling places inevitable?) Fortunately, the electoral vote system, by requiring 51 presidential elections, multiplies the chances of competitive contests and of votes with magnified importance.

As the stakes of politics increase with government's size, so does voter engagement. And 2012 redundantly proved what 2010 demonstrated. The 2010 elections, the first after the Supreme Court's excellent Citizens United decision liberalized the rules about funding political advocacy, were especially competitive. Social science confirms what common sense suggests: More spending on political advocacy means more voter information and interest. The approximately $2 billion spent in support of this year's presidential candidates — only about twothirds as much as Procter & Gamble spent on U.S. advertising last year — surely contributed to the high turnout in targeted states.

Media and other "nonpartisan" — please, no chortling — dismay about "too much money in politics" waned as seven of the 10 highest-spending political entities supported Democrats and outspent the three supporting Republicans, according to the Wall Street Journal.

The advocacy infrastructure that is being developed by both sides in the post-Citizens United world will, over time, favor the most plausible side, which conservatives know is theirs.

Thank You to Vietnam Veterans for Your Service

I read with astonishment the stories of a young pilot who was rescued from the battle zone in Bosnia.

He downplayed any heroism on his part and gave the glory to God where it belongs. But evidently, reporters can't be satisfied with the truth.

The usual media hype has turned this incident unto the same circus-like fantasy as the O.J. Simpson nontrial

All the fanfare over one serviceman has left me wondering about the values of this nation. Not that his life is not valuable, nor his rescue miraculous, but he is just one. Look at the many veterans of the Vietnam War if you want to see real heroes.

Where were the reporters, the photographers, the television cameras, the government, the nation when the Vietnam survivors landed at stateside airports?

These heroes, who fought in an unpopular war because they were called on by their country, were castigated, not celebrated; persecuted, not praised.

Yes, they are the unsung heroes of the 20th century who should have been honored just as the returnees from Desert Storm and all the other "little foreign" wars in which their nation has engaged were honored.

Though their nation has chosen to ignore their many sacrifices, most of us know the truth.

As a Korean veteran who was not denied proper respect, I offer this toast to all Vietnam survivors: "May you at last receive all the respect you deserve. You earned that and more. You are the best. Thank you for all you did for us."

Question Not If but When We Will Collapse Financially

How dismal it must be in the White House these

The victory has changed the entire landscape. The president doesn't have any plan or mandate to stop this country from going over the financial cliff except to continue to tax, borrow, spend and print more money. The question is not "if" but "when" we will collapse financially.

The differences now are that he won't have Bush to blame or Romney to demonize. He can't go into campaign mode like he did for the last four years.

Why would he appease the GOP when he isn't worried about re-election? When we collapse financially, the weight of whose fault it is will fall squarely on the president. But, when the going gets tough, the tough go golfing!

Today is Sunday, Nov. 11, the 316th day of 2012. There are 50 days left in the year. This is Veterans Day in the U.S., Remembrance Day in Canada.

Today's Highlight:

On Nov. 11, 1918, fighting in World War I came to an end with the signing of an armistice between the Allies and Germany.

TODAY IN HISTORY

On this date:

In 1620, 41 Pilgrims aboard the Mayflower, anchored off Massachusetts, signed a compact calling for a "body politick."

In 1831, former slave Nat Turner, who'd led a violent insurrection, was executed in Jerusalem, Va.

In 1889, Washington became the 42nd state.

In 1909, President William Howard Taft accepted the recommendation of a joint Army-Navy board that Pearl Harbor in the Hawaiian Islands be made the principal U.S. naval station in the Pacific.

In 1921, the remains of an unidentified American service member were interred in a Tomb of the Unknown Soldier at Arlington National Cemetery in a ceremony presided over by President Warren G. Harding.

In 1932, a new tomb to house the remains of the Unknown Soldier was dedicated at Arlington National Cemetery.

In 1942, during World War II. Germany completed its occupation of France.

In 1960, South Vietnamese President Ngo Dinh Diem survived a coup attempt by army rebels. (However, he was overthrown and killed in 1963.)

In 1966, Gemini 12 blasted off from Cape Kennedy with astronauts James A. Lovell and Edwin "Buzz" Aldrin Jr. aboard.

In 1972, the U.S. Army turned over its base at Long Binh to the South Vietnamese, symbolizing the end of direct U.S. military involvement in the Vietnam

In 1987, following the failure of two Supreme Court nominations, President Ronald Reagan announced his choice of Judge Anthony M. Kennedy, who went on to win confirmation.

In 1992, the Church of England voted to ordain women as priests.

Ten years ago: Iraqi lawmakers denounced a tough, new U.N. resolution on weapons inspections as dishonest, provocative and worthy of rejection. But the Iraqi parliament said it ultimately would trust whatever President Saddam Hussein decided.

Five years ago: President Gen. Pervez Musharraf said Pakistan would stick to its January schedule for parliamentary elections, but set no time limit on emergency rule. Marking his fifth Veterans Day since the invasion of Iraq, President George W. Bush honored U.S. troops past and present at a tearful ceremony in Texas.

One year ago: Heralding the end of one war and the drawdown of another, President Barack Obama observed Veterans Day at Arlington National Cemetery by urging Americans to hire the thousands of servicemen and women coming home from Iraq and Afghanistan. In the evening, President Obama and his wife, Michelle, watched from midcourt as No. 1 North Carolina beat Michigan State 67-55 in the Carrier Classic on the flight deck of the USS Carl Vinson, anchored off the coast of San Diego. A gunman armed with an assault rifle fired a series of shots at the White House from long range; suspect Oscar Ramiro Ortega-Hernandez is charged with the attempted assassination of Sudoku is a number-placing puzzle based on a 9x9 grid with several given numbers. The object is to place the numbers 1 to 9 in the empty squares so that each row, each column and each 3x3 box contains the same number only once. The difficulty level of the Conceptis Sudoku increases from Monday to Sunday.

Trying to find a good used

about a relationship. HOROSCOPE Jeraldine Saunders

ARIES (Mar 21-April 19): Let's get physical. The more energy you expend, the more you have. Take big strides on the jogging path of life this week. You might find out that someone doesn't trust you as much as you think.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): First impressions can be faulty. A misconception may make you overly cautious or too trusting in a social situation. Diplomacy may be taken to extremes early in the week and camouflage the facts.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): You are sharper than cheddar cheese. Since you can easily step back to maintain a broad view of future consequences you will be able to avoid problems and misunderstandings in the early part of the week.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Grease the gears of necessity. By acting the part of the consummate professional, you can overcome obstacles. Avoid making new investments or major purchases in the early part of the week ahead.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Make your point crystal clear. Do not leave your motives open to interpretation in the week to come. Explain vourself completely and leave nothing to chance. Avoid romantic digressions in the first half of the week.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): When it rains, it pours. You may encounter a sticky mechanism in your emotional metabolism early in the week. Hold off on making crucial financial decisions and avoid disputes with loved ones.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Use powers of observation. Some people see more in a walk around the block than others see in a trip around the world. Avoid making financial decisions or commitments in the first half of the week to come. SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Chill out. Decisions about love and relationships can wait a little longer. There could be a temporary period early this week when you think the worst of others or they may not reveal true feelings. SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Develop dynamic ideas. You might not be able to persuade others in the early half of the week. Keep notes and start putting them into motion late in the week to demonstrate clear leadership abilities. CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Waiting is wise. Gathering helpful information in advance will make it easier to choose optimum timing. Don't accept or make promises in the first half of the week, as they may be difficult to honor. AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Mull it over. In the first half of the week, seek advice from wiser and more experienced heads before you rush headlong into a new course of action. Expert guidance

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Intuitions can trip you up. When in retrograde, Mercury usually doesn't cause real problems - but nevertheless you would be wise to watch paperwork and communications carefully during the first half of this week. Abbreviations can lead to

Bobby Wolff

DEAR ABBY: A friend's daughter was married several years ago. I attended the shower and her wedding, and gave gifts for both.

DEAR  ${f A}{f B}{f B}{f Y}$ Jeanne Phillips

Two months after the wedding, I received a thankyou note in which a form letter was enclosed that read, "By the way, we are now separated and getting a divorce"! I was shocked not only by the news, but even more that my gifts were not returned with the divorce announcement.

This young lady is now being married again to a different man. If I attend the shower/wedding, am I obligated to give her another set of gifts? Or should I skip the shower and go to the wedding without giving another gift? What is proper in this case?

- CONFUSED IN MASSACHUSETTS

DEAR CONFUSED: The rule of etiquette regarding disposition of wedding gifts when a couple divorces after a short time is that any UN-USED items (preferably in their original packaging) go back to the givers. However, to return cookware, linens, china, glassware, etc., that have been used is impractical, so please don't hold a grudge.

If you decide to attend the shower and/or wedding for your friend's daughter, it is customary to give a gift.

DEAR ABBY: I recently began a new job, and although I love what I do, I have only one problem. My boss, "Harold," does not like eating lunch by himself. Every day, he asks me what I'm doing for lunch. If I say I brought my lunch, he wants me to eat it in his office with him. If I tell him I'm going out, he wants us to go out together.

I don't think he's attracted to me; I just think he hates being alone. He's entirely too clingy, and I feel my lunch break is supposed to be a time to do whatever I want to do.

I don't believe the last lady who worked for him had a problem with this, but I do. How do I tell him "no" without offending him or hurting his feelings?

- LUNCH BUDDY IN SOUTH CAROLINA

DEAR LUNCH BUDDY: Tell your boss politely but firmly that you need your lunch hour to perform personal tasks — go shopping, make personal phone call catch up on some reading. You are entitled to that break time, and that is what it should be used for.

DEAR ABBY: A family member has six cats and wants to have the Thanksgiving meal at her house. Every time I eat there, I find cat hair on the table, on the plates and in the food. I don't want to cause hard feelings, but how do I handle this? I'm allergic to cats.

- HOLD THE FUR IN AMARILLO, TEXAS DEAR HOLD THE FUR:

Your health must come first. Arrange to celebrate Thanksgiving elsewhere and curtail your visit. If the relative attempts to "guilt" you into changing plans, explain that you cannot because you have become allergic to cat hair and dander and your doctor has instructed you to avoid

DEAR READERS: Today is Veterans Day, and I would like to take this opportunity to thank not only our veterans, but also those men and women who are still on active duty for their service to our country. - ABBY

THE ACES ON BRIDGE®

Dear Mr. Wolff:

If you play weak jump overcalls, what would you be showing if you overcall and later bid that suit again? For example, I held A A-Q-9-8-3-2, ♥ J-4, ♦ K-3, ♣ Q-6-2. I overcalled one spade over one diamond, then, when my LHO doubled and my RHO bid two diamonds, I did not know if I was right to bid two spades.

Come Again, Winston-Salem, N.C.

ANSWER: An overcall followed by a second free bid suggests a decent six-card suit and about 13-16. That is less than you would need for a double and a new suit, but still shows a good hand. In your example hand, with the spade jack instead of the two, no one would criticize bidding two spades. And if the opponents had found a fit, you would be more inclined to bid again with your actual hand.

Dear Mr. Wolff:

My LHO opened five diamonds and my partner bid six diamonds. He immediately apologized and said "sorry, six clubs," but my opponent said the call could not be changed. Please clarify the rules

Lapsus Linguae, Fort Walton Beach, Fla.

ANSWER: The rule about changing bids is that normally you would be permitted to do so if it was done in the same breath. In most friendly games you would be allowed to change without penalty! Using bidding boxes, by the way, you get to correct inadvertent errors of this sort until it is your partner's turn to speak.

Dear Mr. Wolff:

What is the right way to play Q-10-8-6-2 in hand facing K-4-3? And should your strategy change if you lead low to the king and ace with the nine appearing on your left?

Underpinnings, Torrance, Calif.

er, when the nine pops up on the first round, you may need to form an opinion about the strength of your LHO. Against anyone less than a real expert (or a dedicated signaler of distribution), you might well play him for the J-9 doubleton — and if he has falsecarded from a doubleton nine, congratulate him.

Dear Mr. Wolff:

I've taken to heart your advice about not overcalling at the twolevel on bad suits. But say you have opening values with four spades and five clubs, plus two cards in each red suit. If the opponents open one diamond or one heart, what can you do if you don't bid two clubs?

Rags to Riches, Doylestown. Pa.

ANSWER: If the opponents open one heart, it would not be absurd to double, hoping that if partner bids diamonds, he might have enough of them to be able to tolerate your shortage. If they open one diamond, you are probably best advised to pass and wait for the opponents to bid and raise hearts so that you can double. Otherwise, you may be forced to pass throughout — not necessarily a bad thing!

Dear Mr. Wolff:

Yesterday my wife said she wanted to learn bridge. Do you have any suggestions on how to proceed other than very carefully and with patience?

In Big Trouble, Hoboken, N.J.

ANSWER: You are a brave man! My first suggestion is to get her Sheinwold's "Five Weeks to Winning Bridge" and then the Audrey Grant Series. Teaching your wife will not be easy; the normal rules of politeness between spouses seem to get suspended over bridge. But when the roles of teacher and learner are firmly established, there is a slim chance that you will survive without bloodshed.
