Guardsmen's Aid Leads to State Award

BY ALISON GENE SMITH
alismith@magicvalley.com

"He's a really fantastic guy and Twin Falls should be proud to have him as a resident down there."

Col. Tim Marsano, spokesman for the Idaho National Guard

TWIN FALLS • A Twin Falls man will soon receive the Idaho Cross, the highest state award that can be presented to a member of the National Guard.

In late January, Idaho National Guard Sgt. Jesus "Jesse" Gonzalez was driving his daughters back home from a basketball game when he saw an SUV run several stop signs, then pass them on the wrong side of the road.

"I said, 'Look at this knucklehead,'" Gonzalez said. "I tried to speed up to catch them and finally we got to the last intersection and she was parked across the intersection, flashers on. There was a gentleman talking to her. I told my daughters, 'I hope everything's ok.'"

Gonzalez approached the Jeep Commander and inside was Shauna Coit, her body twisted in a seizure, helpless.

In April 2011, Coit, a Filer resident, had surgery to remove her thyroid gland. During the surgery, Coit's parathyroid glands were damaged.

Hundreds Give Thanks for Salvation Army's Meal

BY JULIE WOOTTON
jwootton@magicvalley.com

TWIN FALLS • As Veronica Sanchez sat around a table with her husband and three children, she fed a piece of turkey to her youngest daughter.

In the midst of difficult times, the family had an opportunity for a traditional Thanksgiving meal Wednesday at The Salvation Army.

"We didn't have money to buy food," Sanchez said, and her husband just started work again.

She said she's thankful that volunteers were willing to spend their time helping them out.

"They're giving and not receiving," she said.

It wasn't the first time Sanchez has turned to The Salvation Army. She came to the Twin Falls location to get assistance when she first moved to Idaho.

THE MARKET AT A GLANCE

Stocks Edge Up Ahead of Thanksgiving Break

NEW YORK (AP) • The stock market crept higher Wednesday ahead of the Thanksgiving holiday. Major market indexes got a slight lift after news broke of a cease-fire agreement between Israel and Hamas in the Gaza Strip.

The truce was announced by Egypt's foreign minister and confirmed by Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu. A week of fighting has killed more than 140 Palestinians and five Israelis.

The Standard & Poor's 500 index rose three points to 1,390. Bank stocks and utilities fell the most, while industrial companies rose the most, but no category moved more than 0.5 percent.

Police: Twin Falls Man Drove Drunk, Backed into Cop Car

BY ALISON GENE SMITH alismith@magicvalley.com

TWIN FALLS • A Twin Falls man has been charged with driving under the influence and resisting arrest after he allegedly backed into a Twin Falls police car, then was taken by officers.

On Monday at about 1:16 a.m., Twin Falls Police Officer Jaime Harper was driving in the 1700 block of Kimberly Road when she noticed a vehicle pull out of the parking lot of the Pressbox Sports Bar in Twin Falls.

According to a police report, officers saw the vehicle straddle the white dashed line of both westbound lanes, then veer to the far outside lane.

After two marked police cars began following the vehicle with their overhead lights on, the vehicle allegedly turned north on Locust Street and ran a red light. According to the report, the vehicle then pulled into the parking lot of the Twin Stop Chevron at 1509 Kimberly Road.

The two officers told the driver, later identified as Ryan Adam Bowman, 22, to show his hands, the report states. At that point, the report states, Bowman allegedly started the engine and backed into one of the police cars. He then allegedly ignored the two officers' commands to stop the car and the two attempted to break the side window of the vehicle to stop it from continuing backwards, the report states.

According to the report, Officer Timothy Arrandondo was able to break the window, reach in and remove the keys from the car. Arrandondo's hand was lacerated on the broken glass, the report states.

Bowman allegedly continued to refuse to get out of the vehicle. Harper physically removed him from the car and attempted to get him in handcuffs, but Bowman continued to struggle with Harper and resisted attempts to be put under arrest, the report states.

At that point, Arrandondo deployed his Taser, which incapacitated Bowman. According to the report, the officers could smell alcohol on Bowman's breath and his eyes were bloodshot and glassy. The report states Bowman was examined by paramedics, then taken to St. Luke's Magic Valley Medical Center for a blood draw, which he submitted to. According to the report, Bowman had minor abrasions which were cleaned and treated.

Bowman was transported to the Twin Falls County Jail and held on $2,500 bond. He pleaded not guilty to both charges in court on Wednesday. A pretrial conference is scheduled for Jan. 2.

Thanksgiving and Black Friday Forecast

Happy Thanksgiving. After three days of grey, dreary and occasionally rainy weather we will see a break just in time for the holiday.

High pressure settles in across southern Idaho for the end of the week. Quiet weather is expected today and Black Friday. I've also been asked, "When would it be a good day to put Christmas lights up?" I'd say Friday or Saturday.

Today it will be partly to mostly sunny and cooler than we've seen, with highs 10 degrees cooler as afternoon highs only reach the mid-40s. If you're planning on going out early for Black Friday shopping then dress warm. Temperatures overnight into early Friday morning will be cold. Temperatures will drop into the low to mid-20s. The good news is there won't be any snow or wind to really have to deal with, you'll just want to stay warm. By Friday afternoon, temperatures will be warmer — back into the low 50s — and we should have plenty of sunshine for the day.

Saturday starts off mostly sunny, but a few more clouds are likely by the afternoon with afternoon high temperatures back into the low 50s. There is a chance of showers on Sunday with a high in the upper 40s to near 50.

Hidden History

Harry Barry, center, is seen with the Buhl High School girls basketball team he coached to a state championship in 1926.

The Legacy of Harry Barry

BY MYCHEL MATTHEWS

Twin Falls County Historic Preservation Commission

TWIN FALLS • "Harry Barry" isn't just a clever name for a city park.

Harry Barry was a local businessman and civic leader whose life was cut short in a tragic auto accident some 60 years ago.

After the accident that took the lives of Barry and his wife Harriet, the remaining Barrys donated a portion of the family farm to the city of Twin Falls.

A monument in Harry Park now stands at the intersection of Borah Avenue West and Blake Street, in memory of Harry and Harriet.

Barry was born on a farm in Pennsylvania in 1887. After he graduated from school, Barry's father farmed him out to a neighbor, who paid the Barry family $30 per month for his labor. His father allowed him to keep $2 of the monthly wage for himself.

After three years of this arrangement, Barry decided he didn't want to spend the rest of his life "looking at the south end of a horse going north," according to a short biography written by his son David in 1988.

Barry put himself through Kansas State Teachers College, and in 1914 sent his resume to the Buhl School District. He was hired as a teacher at the high school and became the town's first football coach.

Twice in the late 1920s, Barry took the Buhl High School girls' basketball team all the way to the national championship, each time missing the win by just two points.

Barry's ambition wouldn't be contained at school, even during the Great Depression. He refused to give up after his first business failed and by the mid-1930s, he owned real estate and insurance businesses, an ice cream parlor and the Buhl Herald, all while continuing to teach.

In 1936, Barry decided to enter politics, much to the dismay of his college sweetheart and wife, Harriet.

His father had been a Republican, "so it was only natural that he should be a Democrat," says his biography.

Barry served in the Idaho State House of Representatives, then ran for lieutenant governor in 1940. If he failed to be elected, Barry promised Harriet that he would retire from politics.

Barry lost the election and, in 1941, moved his family to Twin Falls.

The following year, Barry bought a service station and hardware store on Addison Avenue West, and later bought a lumber company across the street. He also invested in a young block manufacturing plant in Jerome called Cinder Products Co.

Barry wrote his own advertising column in the Times-News, ending the column each week with his slogan "Harry Barry ain't mad at nobody!"

Eventually, Barry sold the service station and hardware store, but kept Harry Barry Lumber Co.

In November 1954, Harry and Harriet Barry traveled to Kansas to visit some old friends from college. While there, they decided to drive to Oklahoma to see the Will Rogers Memorial. The road was slick from rain, and an oncoming truck slid into the Barrys' car, killing all five in the car. The driver of the truck was also killed.

The Barrys are buried in the Buhl Cemetery.

After Barry's death, Harry Barry Lumber Co. merged with the block manufacturing company that he had invested in, forming Volco Inc.

Prosecutor: Theft was Motive in Monkey Killing

BOISE (AP) • Prosecutors said Wednesday that the man accused of killing a monkey at Boise's zoo hoped to steal the animal before he was bitten and clubbed it to death with a tree branch.

Michael J. Watkins, 22, entered Zoo Boise on Saturday morning, manipulated a lock to get into the primate enclosure and removed the patas monkey by wrapping it in his jacket, Ada County Deputy Prosecutor Fafa Alidjani told reporters after Watkins was arraigned in Boise's 4th District Court.

Watkins isn't scheduled to enter a plea on his felony burglary and grand theft charges until a preliminary hearing Dec. 5.

Rep. Pence Uninjured in One-vehicle Crash

BY MELISSA DAVLIN
mdavlin@magicvalley.com

BELLEVUE • Rep. Donna Pence, D-Gooding, says reaching down to grab a CD led her to crash her car into a power pole last week.

Pence

The District 26 legislator, just re-elected this fall to a fifth term, was cited for not staying in her lane of traffic in the accident.

According to the Associated Press, Blaine County Sheriff Gene Ramsey said Pence's 2010 Toyota Prius went off Idaho Highway 75 about five miles south of Bellevue on Nov. 15.

Ramsey told the Idaho Mountain Express the power pole was sheared off, causing $5,000 in damage. Two other vehicles struck the downed power lines and sustained about $1,000 in damage each.

In a Wednesday interview with the Times-News, Pence said she was reaching down for a CD she had dropped when she looked up and saw she had crossed over into the highway's other lane. Pence then hit the pole, totaling her car.

"I've learned a lesson," she said.

Pence said she was uninjured other than a small scratch on her neck.

"The good Lord was watching over me," she said.

Military

"What started as a small family project has turned into a worldwide project. I feel I am watching a child grow," said Tawny Archibald Campbell, a former Oakley resident who lives in Spessbach, Rheinland-Pfalz, Germany, with her deployed military husband, Sgt. Joseph Campbell.

The program is in its seventh year and was started by Campbell's younger brother, Ian Archibald, as an Eagle Scout project.

Dozens of organizations, churches and schools chip in each year making ornaments, donating candy, decorating paper bags and writing letters to the service members. The bags are shipped to Germany and handed out at airports, hospitals and sent downrange.

"We spend 12-16 hours a day from Dec. 3 to Jan. 5 at the airport in Ramstein so we can meet every flight heading downrange and those coming home," Campbell said. "It is an honor to be one of the last civilians they meet heading out, and one of the first they meet coming home."

"We meet them with a smile and a bag and as grateful as they are for the gift, we feel as though we are always getting the better end of the deal. It fills up your emotional cup for the rest of the year. You forget about the stress leading up to all this and just focus on the smiles. Not much can be better than that."

Back in Idaho, the volunteers share the same feelings. Makalia Hensen, a student at Burley Junior High School, said this was her first year helping assemble bags for the project.

"I like helping with this and I'm thankful for them allowing us to have freedom," she said.

"If it makes the difference to one service person it makes all this chaos worthwhile," said Erin Hansen, who helped with the assembly.

Ray Archibald, Tawny's father, said the goal is 15,000 bags this year.

"Over the seven years we've received donations from all 50 states and 14 countries," Archibald said.

During the first year of the project Archibald went to Germany to help hand out bags. There, he got to hear reactions to the surprise gifts.

"One soldier told me when they are deployed they expect to get letters and things from family and friends," Archibald said. "But, to get a letter from someone they don't know like this makes them know they are doing what they are supposed to be doing."

Coit's first seizure came three days after her surgery. After that, doctors put her on a combination of 39 pills a day. Some had to be crushed, some taken with food, and some taken in the middle of the night, Coit said.

Eventually she decided to join a fitness boot camp class to get back some of the strength she lost after surgery.

Sometimes during workouts, Coit said, she noticed her hands and feet would feel tingly. Still, doctors told her not to worry.

"It's so rare," she said. "The odds that all four (glands) were damaged are one in a million."

After a gym class the night of Jan. 24, Coit's hands and feet began to tingle as she drove. Still, she felt it couldn't be a seizure. Then her fingers began to curl in and she knew her calcium levels were dropping and a seizure was coming.

"I waited a little too long," she said. "My hands are the first thing to go."

Coit said she decided the best thing to do was to drive herself to the hospital.

"I just thought, 'Oh, I'm not stopping,'" she said.

Coit remembers passing a car near the intersection of Wendell Street and Falls Avenue. By the next intersection, her eyes had clamped shut and she couldn't see.

"I couldn't put the car in park. I couldn't even get out of the car," she said.

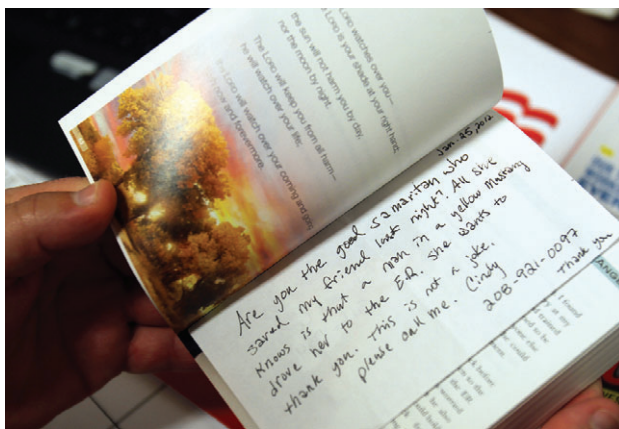

Coit hoped her car, which careened through the intersection, would catch someone's attention and they would call 911.

Before she knew what was happening, Gonzalez reached into her car, threw it in park, undid her seatbelt, picked her up and carried her to his car.

Gonzalez raced to St. Luke's Magic Valley Medical Center, parking near the emergency room entrance. At first, Gonzalez said he thought hospital staff didn't believe he had an emergency.

"Then I got her all taken out of the car. The nurse heard her screaming and they prioritized it," he said.

Coit was rushed in and received a calcium infusion

Sgt. Jesus Gonzalez shows the note he found on the car he was driving after saving Shaunna Coit's life back in January while at his office Wednesday in Twin Falls.

that saved her life.

"Within 15 minutes I was fine again," she said.

After she felt better, Coit asked the nurses who the man who brought her in was. No one knew.

Coit only knew the man had a daughter and dog and found out from hospital staff that he had a bright yellow Ford Mustang.

The next day, Coit posted the story on Facebook and asked people to be on the lookout for a yellow Mustang.

Within about a day, one of Coit's Facebook friends saw Gonzalez's car, followed it and put a note on it after he parked at the National Guard Armory.

"It's funny, I'm always try to be aware of my surroundings," Gonzalez said. "A lady came out and she was following me and I was like 'who in the heck is following me, I hope it's not someone trying to pick a fight!'"

Gonzalez found the note later in the day when he left work.

"She said, 'If you're the guy who saved my friends' life then give me a call,'" Gonzalez said.

Soon, the two got in touch and Coit arrived at Gonzalez's office.

"I didn't know how bad her situation was," he said. "She came into the office and talked for a while. She kind of made me cry a little but. That's when I thought, maybe I did do something?"

Since then, Coit said she's been careful about when she's alone. She now wears a medical identification bracelet that says if she needs calcium. She still takes about 20 pills a day and there's still no way to check if her calcium levels are dropping.

"I have to guess, does my calcium feel high or low," she said.

She carries liquid calcium, which can buy her some extra time in case of an emergency.

Looking back, Coit said she will always be thankful for Gonzalez's actions.

"It still blows my mind," she said. "There's not many people who would do that."

Coit's brother, a lieutenant colonel in the Air Force, got the ball rolling on the award for Gonzalez, she said. He looked up what kind of award a military member can get for helping someone in a civilian setting, she said.

Col. Tim Marsano, spokesman for the Idaho National Guard, said this week that he just learned Gonzalez would get the award.

"It's a great story and we're proud of him. In a nutshell, it's the highest Idaho award that can be presented to a member of the National Guard. It's usually for lifesaving actions. It's pretty rare that we give them out — maybe once every 18 months to two years," Marsano said. "He's a really fantastic guy and Twin Falls should be proud to have him as a resident down there."

no small task. About 40 people volunteered their time this week to help get ready.

On Wednesday, a long line of volunteers — including elementary-aged children — waited in the gymnasium to get plates to food to serve at each table.

Live music filled the gymnasium as an ensemble performed Christian music. Tables were covered with plastic tablecloths, each adorned with an orange candle and decorative centerpiece.

As she sat at a table, Desiri Wood said she was enjoying the beautiful music and came to escape the wind outside.

Wood said she was laid off from her job and everyone needs help on occasion.

The Volunteers

Josh Hannold, 22, was one of the volunteers in the kitchen Wednesday morning.

He has volunteered since February at The Salvation Army and at St. Edward's Catholic Church soup kitchen. By the end of the year, he will have logged 1,600 hours of community service.

This week, Hannold spent three or four hours a day helping out at The Salvation Army.

He's not into cooking,

"The need does not stop today."

Nicki Kroese, business manager

but said he gets involved in other ways such as mopping floors and washing down tables.

It was his grandmother's idea, he said, to do volunteer work before he gets married in April.

Although he has never been homeless, Hannold said he did go through hard times a while back.

Volunteering, he said, has been a humbling experience.

"I just recommend it for everyone," he said.

Brothers Aldo and Adair Tello and a few of their classmates volunteered through their newly formed Canyon Ridge High School group — Future Hispanic Leaders of America.

The student group held a canned food drive at the school and dropped off food Wednesday at The Salvation Army.

"We like to help others," Aldo said.

Between all the volunteers, preparing for the Thanksgiving meal was a process that stretched from 8 a.m.-8 p.m. each day this week.

One of the largest tasks: Cooking more than 80 turkeys.

Nearly all the food for the Thanksgiving meal was donated by community members and businesses. One of the only things left to buy was whipped cream.

"Our community is so absolutely good to us," Kroese said.

She said United Dairy-men of Idaho donated milk and butter, which was used for the meal and while making food.

Day-old pies were donated by WinCo and Fred Meyer. A local Girl Scout troop also brought over about 20 homemade pies.

Thanksgiving's Just the Start

Thanksgiving is a day of rest for Salvation Army workers. Then on Friday morning, they'll be back in full swing getting a "toy and joy shop" up and running.

Kroese said parents who meet financial guidelines will be assigned a personal shopper.

"They'll be able to pick out just the right item for their child," she said.

The Salvation Army is collecting items for the "toy and joy shop" through toy drives and angel trees in the area.

During the Christmas season, the organization also prepares food boxes for those in need.

And after today, there will still be people in need in the community. The Salvation Army is still seeking donations of turkeys and other food.

"The need does not stop today," Kroese said, adding there's no gift too small.

Cassia Regional Begins Facility Expansion

TIMES-NEWS

BURLEY • Cassia Regional Medical Center officials will add two modular buildings to their facility to relieve space constraints.

It's a prelude to a larger overhaul next year of the hospital's emergency and radiology departments, according to a news release.

Construction of the modular buildings has begun on the south side of Cassia Regional's campus. The buildings will add 4,200 square feet of extra administrative office space and room to house the Cassia Family Practice clinic.

The project is expected to be completed within the next six to eight weeks. The hospital views it as a cost-effective way to add space because the buildings were previously used at another facility within the Intermountain Healthcare system, according to the release.

The hospital will continue expanding later in 2013. Facility officials determined in 2011 that the emergency and radiology departments needed renovations due to increased patient volume. More information about that expansion will be released in 2013. However, an architectural and engineering firm has been hired to design the renovation project, according to the news release.

"We are excited about being able to address some key needs with the hospital building," Rod Barton, the hospital's administrator, said in a statement. "Our new facilities will enable us to provide extraordinary care with greater comfort and privacy for our patients and their families."

Red Cross Serves Thanksgiving to Sandy Victims

TIMES-NEWS

TWIN FALLS • Hurricane Sandy couldn't stop Thanksgiving in New York and New Jersey.

As residents of those states continue to recover from the storm's damage, the American Red Cross will provide about 35,000 hot Thanksgiving meals to people in need.

Nearly 5,100 Red Cross workers — including 13 from Idaho — are supporting shelters, providing meals and supplies at fixed sites, and driving through neighborhoods.

The nonprofit this week will deliver about 20,000 boxes in New York containing enough non-perishable food to feed a family of four for several days. Today, the Red Cross will also serve lunches featuring turkey, mashed potatoes and apple pie in New Jersey and New York, both at fixed feeding sites and from response vehicles traveling through neighborhoods.

Feeding America, the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints and the Southern Baptist Convention are also part of this week's efforts.

It's not too late to help the cause. Here are ways to assist:

American Red Cross: 1-800-RED-CROSS, Red-Cross.org or text RED-CROSS to 90999 to donate $10 which will appear on your phone bill.

Times-News Boys Cross Country RUNNER OF THE YEAR

Boys Cross Country

Runner of the Year: Jeremy Stark, Twin Falls

Team: Chase England, Wood River; Eliseo Garcia, Gooding; Gage Moore, Filer; Matthew Schenk, Twin Falls; Ethan Judd, Burley; Ketchum Wilt, Wood River; Jade Mendenhall, Burley.

“I just passed a couple of kids and I can remember people screaming at me. I felt really good actually, I just kept chucking on and finished.”

Jeremy Stark, Cross Country Runner of the Year

DREW NASH - TIMES-NEWS

JEREMY STARK, TWIN FALLS

NICK RULAND
nruland@magicvalley.com

Cross country athletes who follow conventional wisdom ease back on their daily running mileage in the weeks preceding their most important event, in this case the 4A state meet.

The Times-News Cross Country Runner of the Year, once a ranch-hand, is rawhide tough – he wasn't going for conventional or easy, he was going for the win.

Twin Falls' cross country runner Jeremy Stark was so displeased with his fourth-place finish in the 4A District IV meet in October, he opted to stay off the sofa, get on his feet and turn common sense on its head.

“Losing districts, that motivated me,” Stark said. “I was running before school, after school, everything you aren't supposed to do. I wanted to show everybody that I was a better runner than I was at districts. (Wood River's District IV winner) Chase England has a target on his back; I really wanted to beat him.”

Stark beat England by less than a second, 16:31.50 to 16:32.20.

“I had Chase by 20 seconds in the first lap, and then came around the corner and Chase passed me in the second lap,” Stark said. “Going down the last quarter mile I just took off. I held nothing back at the end.”

The adrenaline surging through Stark's veins likely narrowed his focus, making the final leg an almost supernatural experience.

“I just passed a couple of kids and I can remember people screaming at me,” Stark said. “I felt really good actually, I just kept chucking on and finished.”

Stark's fourth-place photo-finish was 48 spots and almost a minute-and-a-half better than his 2011 showing at state.

But the miles he put in the two weeks before the state meet do not explain the huge gains he made from his sophomore to junior seasons.

Still a lot to be thankful for in sports

The bad stuff is easy. You read about it almost every day; hear it discussed endlessly by the talking heads on radio and television.

But if sports is a microcosm of society — and it is — then there's a lot of good going on, too. And, as we celebrate Thanksgiving, here are some things to be thankful for this year that have nothing to do with wins and losses, the World Series or the Super Bowl:

A COACH'S FIGHT: Circumstances. That's what Indianapolis Colts coach Chuck Pagano called his health problems when he came in the locker room after a win against Miami a few weeks ago and addressed his team for the first time since unexpectedly being hospitalized just as his first season as head coach was beginning. The circumstances are that Pagano has leukemia, an insidious disease that's difficult to beat no matter how hard you fight. In a moving speech that you have to watch to fully appreciate, Pagano vowed to dance at the weddings of both his daughters and to host more than one Super Bowl trophy before he's done fighting. "It's already beat. It's already beat," Pagano told his team.

DRUG BUSTERS: It would have been easy for Travis Tygart and his investigators at the U.S. Anti-Doping Agency to simply give up on nailing Lance Armstrong. Federal prosecutors already had, and if they couldn't build a case against Armstrong, hard to imagine the doping agency doing any better. But Tygart pressed on, eventually building a case that tore apart the facade Armstrong had created, detailing a widespread and systematic doping scheme on a level not seen before in organized sports. Yes, he took down an American sports hero and damaged his charitable work, but Tygart also sent a message that a level playing field is important. Sports will be a cleaner and better place because of it.

BROOKLYN REBORN: No, the Dodgers aren't returning. Suddenly, though, Brooklyn is a sports town again, thanks to a new, $1 billion arena and a Russian billionaire who parked his basketball team there. The New York Islanders will also be moving there in 2015, assuming, of course, that the NHL lockout is resolved by then.

BRITISH INVASION: Bradley Wiggins became the first Briton to win the Tour de France, while Andy Murray became the first British man to claim a tennis major in 76 years when he won the U.S. Open. Perennial also-rans, the British had a spectacular sporting summer the country will never forget, including a London Olympics that surpassed expectations at every turn.

VIN SCULLY: He would be a national treasure, but the people of Los Angeles like to claim him as their own. For more than 60 years, Scully has broadcast the Dodgers, and his gift to the new Dodger owners was the announcement that he will come back for at least one more year at the age of 85, calling games as he always does, solo in the announcer's booth. In the interests of full disclosures, I was one of those kids in LA who went to sleep at night with a transistor radio underneath my pillow, growing up listening to Vinny.

RORY TIME: For years, golf fans waited for a rival to the great Tiger Woods, Fans hold up a sign in support of Indianapolis Colts head coach Chuck Pagano, who is battling leukemia, during the second half of an NFL football game against the Jacksonville Jaguars in Jacksonville, Fla., Thursday.

only to be disappointed by every David Duval who came along. Rory McIlroy is the anti-Tiger, an accessible and grounded superstar from the town of Holywood in Northern Ireland who hits the ball incredible distances, all with an inner joy that Woods will never have. McIlroy has his own reason to be thankful, with tennis star Caroline Wozniacki as his constant companion.

BOXING: Even if you don't like the sport, you have to love the stories. Johnathon Banks learned everything he knew about boxing from Emanuel Steward, so much so that when Steward died a few weeks ago, Banks took over as trainer of heavyweight champion Wladimir Klitschko. He was in Klitschko's corner in Germany for his win over Mariusz Wach and then flew to Detroit for a memorial service for Steward. A few days later he was in Atlantic City, where he revived his own career with a shocking knockout win Saturday night over Seth Mitchell. That could put him in line for a title shot against, you guessed it, Klitschko, the man he trains. Only in boxing. "All I can think is how grateful I am for Emanuel Steward,"

Banks said.

LABOR PEACE: OK, the NHL is in lockout mode, and the prospect of another lost season is a gut check to hockey fans everywhere. But there will be no lost games in the NFL for much of the next decade, the NBA has a new long term deal and the only thing owners and players in baseball are worried about is how many zeroes the new contracts have. And, of course, there are decent referees on the field again in the NFL, even if they do happen to swear at times.

CONCUSSIONS: Good things are happening in the fight against the once silent epidemic of concussions on sports. Brains are being analyzed, millions of dollars are being poured into research, and there's an awareness about the danger of hits to the head that could save lives everywhere from your child's soccer field to the stadiums of the NFL. Unfortunately, it's too late for thousands of former players who are paying for the blows to their head every day of their lives — something the NFL refuses to own up to.

DEATH OF THE BCS: Our long national nightmare is almost over. The Bowl Championship Series is, for all intents and purposes, dead, killed off by a fan revolt at the age of 16. It will be replaced in 2014 by a four-team playoff that, while not perfect, will help legitimize the national championship game. Meanwhile, a possible Notre Dame against Alabama title game this season could be one of the biggest ever.

OPPORTUNITIES: Forty years ago this summer, Congress passed and President Nixon signed into law a bill that changed sports forever. Title IX opened up opportunities for women to play sports that were once unimaginable, and it's a gift that will keep on giving for generations to come. When Title IX was enacted, fewer than 30,000 female students participated in sports in colleges and universities, a number that has now increased nearly six-fold. Some 3 million girls participate in high school athletics today, 10 times the number who played sports in 1972. Women may never make big breakthroughs in professional sports, but the resources now devoted to female sports means your daughters and granddaughters can dream of doing things in sports they could never do before.

SPORTS EXTRA: You pay for it more than you realize, every time the cable or satellite bill is due. The Yankees cost you money, and so do the Knicks. There are so many new sports networks popping up that each want their share of the pie that the bill will keep going up until customers finally revolt. What you once got for free now costs a lot, but what a bargain it really is. The variety of sports on television is astonishing, even more so to the generations that grew up before ESPN, when watching sports meant a few football games and Saturday's baseball game of the week — and having to get up to turn the channel to watch it.

We're living in a world where the options for sports fans are greater than ever. We can watch basketball on the decks of aircraft carriers, hockey on the infield of old baseball parks, and the NFL from soccer stadiums in London. Instead of being parked in front of a TV we can feed our seemingly insatiable sports fix on laptops, tablets and even smartphones. If that's not enough it's easier than ever to have a little something riding on the game, whether in form of a wager or a fantasy team payout.

Still there's nothing like a Saturday morning spent watching the kids play soccer or, at my house, a Thanksgiving Day street football game with relatives of all ages. Even in an era of amazing technology, there's room at the local playground for a pickup game of hoops, and grass at the park to toss a baseball around.

So enjoy the turkey and the NFL on TV as well. Save room for the pumpkin pie, and yet another game to feast your eyes on. There's a lot to be thankful for.

REVENGE OF THE NERDS

ASSOCIATED PRESS

STANFORD, Calif. • During the football team's most recent "movie night" held before every game, Stanford coach David Shaw quieted his players to announce that the women's basketball team had beaten top-ranked Baylor. The room erupted in excitement, and Shaw shushed everybody again to make one more statement.

"I said, 'OK, now it's our turn,'" Shaw said. "It was just kind of like, 'OK, yeah.'"

The trend starting on the Hawaii hardwood, moved onto the football field in Eugene and finally floated all over Twitter, where Stanford players put the perfect label on an unforgettable weekend: Revenge of the Nerds.

Tara VanDerveer's team ended Brittney Griner and the Lady Bears' 42-game winning streak. Shaw and his players outsmarted No. 1 Oregon 17-14 in overtime Saturday to complete a dramatic double, and "Nerd Nation" — as athletes across all sports on this quant Silicon Valley campus call themselves — enjoyed a giant I-told-you-so celebration.

The victories went well beyond the Cardinal getting payback on the programs that ruined each team's national title hopes last season. Both showed that success can still be reached well after Andrew Luck and Nnemkadi Ogwumike — the No. 1 overall draft picks in each sport — have left The Farm.

"I think it was special," Shaw said Tuesday. "You could draw a parallel to say that the women's basketball team lost one of the best players in the country, but they want to prove that they're a good team. We can say that we fall into that category also, whereas we lost the best player in the country in our sport, and we also want to prove to ourselves as well as to other people that we're a good football team that can compete against anybody."

Consider it done. Along with losing Luck to the Indianapolis Colts, three other Stanford players were selected in the top 42 picks in April's NFL draft, and both starting safeties and wide receivers are also on NFL rosters or practice squads now. Taking down the previously undefeated Ducks at amped-up Autzen Stadium has surprisingly put the Cardinal (9-2, 7-1) in control to host the Pac-12 Conference championship game — something a Luck-led team never did — if they can beat No. 15 UCLA on Saturday.

VanDerveer is still learning how her team will play over the course of the season after losing Ogwumike to graduation and the WNBA's Los Angeles Sparks. The Hall of Fame coach has talked to her team since training camp about what the football program has been able to accomplish long after its leader left, citing examples of defense and unselfishness that go beyond any one player.

The women's team got even more pumped up when they were informed over the public address system during pregame warm-ups against Hawaii on Saturday that the football team had upset Oregon.

"When they did it, they could hear us cheering from Hawaii," said VanDerveer, whose Cardinal (5-0) beat Baylor 71-69 and eventually captured the Rainbow Wahine tournament in Honolulu to become the top-ranked team in the latest Associated Press poll. "When we won, we could hear them cheering from Oregon."

The rigorous academics, adjacent facilities and shared dining halls naturally bring Stanford athletes closer together. The football and women's basketball teams, however, have grown even tighter behind the rallying cry of Nerd Nation.

"It's sort of like a conspiracy" joked junior forward Chiney Ogwumike, the younger sister of Nnemkadi.

Football players first began to embrace the stereotype when former coach Jim Harbaugh brought a more physical, run-first style to the program and opponents often teased that a team full of future venture capitalists, engineers and even politicians couldn't be tough. The women's team took it a step further last season, when the Ogwumike sisters created a spoof video called "Nerd City Kids" that included football players. The video went viral all over YouTube and social media.

Ogwumike said she has even lobbied for a banner to be placed at the campus' entrance that reads: "Welcome to Nerd City."

"It's having a little chip on our shoulder, but also acknowledging that the culture around here for athletics is a little bit different and embracing that," Mohawk-wearing middle linebacker Shayne Skov said.

Players for each team said the departure of their transcendent teammate drove players to prove the program went beyond any one player — a sentiment both Luck and Nnemkadi Ogwumike used to share with anybody who would listen, though few often did.

Now more than ever, no longer can anybody — including coaches — be complacent. No longer can the team depend on its most dominating player to steal a victory, and nobody's talents — or flaws — can be covered up.

"Knowing that people are kind of like, what are you going to do without Neka? Everybody just kind of like comes together," forward Taylor Greenfield said. "We have so many more and so many different weapons this year and so many opportunities for other people to step up, so I think people are more excited."

Past failures also have pulled the programs together.

The Stanford women's basketball team has reached the Final Four the last five years — losing to Baylor in its latest appearance — and never won the title. VanDerveer — not one to mix words — said her team is showing stronger signs of progression in November than it did in recent seasons. For instance, she said none of the players even knew they were No. 1 until she told them.

The football team's only regular-season loss the previous two years had come against Oregon. Beating the seemingly unstoppable Ducks after two years of torment has made the victory even sweeter — perhaps especially for those no longer around.

"Great game by the Cardinal in Eugene," said former Stanford athletic director Bob Bowlsby, now the Big 12 Conference commissioner. "Sure fouled up the national championship picture."

Stark

The same explanations for Stark's massive improvements lead one to believe there's more to come.

Stark pushed himself in the off-season, spending 20 days in the mountains of Colorado, and training at altitude at an elite cross country camp. Naturally, his fitness and stamina improved, but so did his leg speed.

"He came in in fantastic shape and after that it's just maintenance," Twin Falls cross country and track coach Marty Grindstaff said. "It's all about the miles, and Stark put in the miles."

Learning from former Twin Falls second place cross country runner Erik Harris, now at BYU, Stark knew that in order to follow in his footsteps — which he did all too often at Bruins practices and meets — he'd have to outwork everyone.

"I trained with Eric, and he was always pushing for more," Stark said. "Do one more 400-meter, one more 800-meter, kick this last mile as hard as you can. He would do anything to make the team better."

And this year, it was teammate Matthew Schenk who made Stark better. Schenk, a junior who finished 17th in state, was faster than Stark in 2011. And while Stark overtook Schenk in 2012, in part because of injuries and illness Schenk suffered, he didn't give up his top spot without a fight — and that battle will go on into their senior years.

"Jeremy's work ethic is awesome, he never really takes a day off," Schenk said. "Eric never took a day off either and went after it. We push each other, but we're still friends."

Stark credits his father for inspiring his love for running, even though he wasn't a competitive runner himself. But it was the time Stark spent with his brother in Texas as a middle schooler that helped build Stark's work ethic — fence post by fence post, pulled weed by pulled weed. Stark helped his brother launch a hunting ranch when he was in eighth grade.

"It was fun, but I worked hard," Stark said. "It was every day after school. I still ran, too."

And don't expect that to change for Stark, who has a chance to build on his cross country success in track and go for state next fall. In fact, if the trendline of the past is any indication, he'll probably work harder.

"Running is pretty much my life, my hobby, pretty much consumes me," Stark said. "I love it, the competition; it pushes me to get to the top. I'd love to get a scholarship to go run somewhere."

Irish Trying to Turn USC Rivalry Their Way

ASSOCIATED PRESS

The Notre Dame-USC rivalry has been defined by dominance over the last four decades. Two of college football's most celebrated teams have alternated long runs of success in the series that have coincided with the ups and downs of the programs.

When the Fighting Irish and Trojans meet for the 84th time on Saturday in the Los Angeles Coliseum, Notre Dame will be playing for a spot in the national championship while USC will be trying to salvage a disappointing season.

The Irish appear primed to turn the rivalry back in their direction after a decade of USC ownership.

During Southern California's most recent dynasty, coach Pete Carroll's Trojans reeled off eight straight victories against the Irish from 2002-09, the longest winning streak by USC in the series.

In 2010, Brian Kelly's first season as Notre Dame coach, the Irish snapped that streak, 20-16, with the help of a memorable dropped pass that would have been a sure touchdown. USC came right back and won last season in South Bend, Ind., 31-17, to make it nine out of 10.

"Well, it's not a great rivalry right now," Kelly said this week. "We haven't won enough games. They've had the upper hand on this. We need to make this a rivalry."

From the mid-80s through the mid-90s, it was USC that was trying to make it a rivalry. As USC struggled to hold its place among the elite programs in college football, the Irish often contended for national titles under Lou Holtz and went 12-0-1 against the Trojans.

That number helps explain the relatively short tenures of coaches Ted Tollner (1983-86) and Larry Smith (1987-92) at USC.

Lane Kiffin is hoping his USC career is more like Carroll's than Smith's, but it has certainly been a tough season for the Trojans. They started the season, their first after a two-season, NCAA-imposed postseason ban, ranked No. 1, and with the presumptive Heisman Trophy front-runner in senior star quarterback Matt Barkley.

Maybe expectations were too high for a team that lacked depth and had some question marks on both lines. But few would have predicted that USC would head into its finale against Notre Dame 7-4 and unranked. Even more startling is that it's Notre Dame that will take the field Saturday as the unbeaten No. 1 team in the country, two victories from its first national championship since 1988.

The Fighting Irish started the season unranked. The last team to start out of the rankings and reach No. 1 was Missouri in 2007. The Tigers lost their final game before the bowls, falling to Oklahoma in the Big 12 title game, and lost a chance to play for the national title.

But maybe we shouldn't be so surprised about the Irish. Holtz, Dan Devine, Ara Parseghian and Frank Leahy all won national championships in their third season as Notre Dame coach, all beating USC along the way.

Forgotten Georgia in Thick of Championship Race

ASSOCIATED PRESS

ATHENS, Ga. • When Oregon and Kansas State both went down, Aaron Murray whooped it up as much as any Georgia fan.

He knew what that meant for the Bulldogs — a shot at the national championship.

"I've never screamed so much at the television and prayed so much in my life," Georgia's star quarterback said Tuesday. "It was definitely an exciting night. We were screaming, high-fiving, hugging, group hugs. It was a lot of fun."

Funny thing, though. Outside of this state, hardly anyone is talking about the Southeastern Conference's other title contender.

Instead, everyone is gushing about the possibility of two storied programs — Notre Dame and Alabama — playing for No. 1.

Georgia, it seems, is just an afterthought.

"We don't mind being the underdogs," Murray said. "We know what we have to do, and that's win games. If we do that, we'll be good to go."

Indeed, while it may appear the third-ranked Bulldogs are trying to sneak in the back door, they have exactly the same path to the championship as the top-ranked Fighting Irish and second-ranked Crimson Tide.

Win out. Win it all.

For Georgia, it starts with Saturday's regular-season finale against state rival Georgia Tech (6-5). The Bulldogs have won 10 of 11 in the series and are a two-touchdown favorite to extend that domination against the high-scoring Yellow Jackets. Still, coach Mark Richt is working hard to ensure his team doesn't get caught looking ahead to the SEC championship game against Alabama the following week.

Georgia head coach Mark Richt celebrates Nov. 3 after defeating Mississippi 37-10 in an NCAA college football game in Athens, Ga.

He's gone to some rather extreme measures to keep the one-game-at-a-time mentality. Richt refuses to even say whether he was watching last Saturday night when Kansas State got blown out by Baylor and Oregon lost in overtime to Stanford, allowing Georgia to jump to No. 3 in the BCS standings.

If anyone tries to bring up Alabama or the BCS, Richt won't even respond.

"I had to hang up on my mom," he said, only half-joking.

Richt insists there's been no discussion with his staff about what might happen beyond the Georgia Tech game, and he said there's no need to remind his players it's business as usual.

"We meet every day to talk about how we're going to handle the week: who we're playing next, what kind of challenges they bring, what we're going to do on a daily basis to get ready for them," Richt said. "That's all we do."

After Saturday, the picture could be even clearer.

Notre Dame (11-0) is favored by a touchdown against disappointing Southern Cal, which will be further hampered by the absence of star quarterback Matt Barkley. He won't play because of a sprained right shoulder, forcing the Trojans to give freshman Max Wittek his first career start. Alabama (10-1) opened as a 33-point pick over hapless Auburn, which is winless in the SEC and wrapping up its worst season in decades.

If all three favorites win, Notre Dame is assured of a spot in the Jan. 7 BCS championship game in Miami. The SEC title game between Alabama and Georgia (10-1) would essentially serve as a national semifinal.

Of course, nothing is assured in this sport.

Just ask Oregon and Kansas State.

"Not to get negative," said Georgia linebacker Christian Robinson, pondering the idea of losing to the Yellow Jackets with so much on the line, "but it could be horrible. It could be everything we didn't want this season to be about. People would pile on everything negative they could think about us."

"We have an opponent coming here that probably hates us more than any other opponent. And it's probably mutual."

It's stunning that Georgia (10-1) had clawed its way into this position considering what happened on Oct. 6.

The Bulldogs rolled into South Carolina for a crucial game between two unbeaten teams — and got blown out. They were behind 21-0 at the end of the first quarter and lost 35-7, scoring a meaningless touchdown in the closing minutes just to avoid a shutout.

According to STATS LLC, no team that has finished No. 1 in The Associated Press poll or claimed the Bowl Championship Series title with such a lopsided loss on its record. The worst defeat by a champion came in 1983, when Miami dropped its opener to Florida 28-3 but rebounded to win its last 11 games, including an upset of then-No. 1 Nebraska in the Orange Bowl.

Georgia dropped to No. 14 in the AP poll after the debacle in Columbia, which most thought was too far back to have any shot at No. 1. But the Bulldogs bounced back with five straight wins, most notably a 17-9 triumph over Florida, and kept climbing as one unbeaten team after another fell in defeat.

"After South Carolina, especially, we had to take a step back and realize that we can control our future," tight end Arthur Lynch said. "We haven't looked ahead."

Now, even though the Bulldogs are one of just three teams that controls its own destiny, they're not breaking from the philosophy that has served them well.

So this week, it's all about Georgia Tech.

"No matter what the records are, or what's happening, nothing changes the fact that if we lose to them, it's a living hell for the next 365 days," Lynch said. "It's what fuels me and gets me motivated. If you're not motivated for this game, you probably shouldn't come to Georgia. You always have to beat Tech."

Little Things Adding up for Notre Dame's Golson

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SOUTH BEND, Ind. • Notre Dame coach Brian Kelly believes Everett Golson is ready for what awaits him at Southern California.

He believes the 6-0, 185-pound sophomore quarterback who did not play as a freshman is ready. Ready for the pressure of leading the Fighting Irish (11-0) on the field ranked No. 1 for the first time in 19 years. Ready for a rivalry game that has been dominated over the past decade by USC (7-4). Ready to help Notre Dame advance to the BCS title game with a win.

Kelly said he bases that opinion by the maturity Golson has shown as he's improved throughout the season, playing in tough venues such as Michigan State and Oklahoma and rallying the Irish from a two-touchdown deficit in the fourth quarter against Pittsburgh to a triple-overtime victory.

"All of those things go into Saturday and all of those will be positives for him going in to the USC game," Kelly said.

Golson said he is feeling more comfortable because of all he's learned and he has learned to manage the clock better so he doesn't have to rush each play.

"I think I've progressed a lot," he said.

Golson keeps doing a lot more of the little things right and it's leading to more big plays for the Irish. He waited until the last second to pitch the ball to set up Cierre Wood's 68-yard touchdown run on the fourth play against Wake Forest. He had TD passes of 50 and 34 yards against Wake Forest, and the second came after a nice pump fake.

Slowly, Golson has turned what had been an at-best average offense into one that opponents are increasingly having trouble slowing down.

"He's a guy that makes explosive plays," Kelly said. "He's got the ability to throw it. He can run the football. He's elusive. I think we're seeing a guy that's growing each and every week."

Through Notre Dame's first five games, Golson was 67-of-111 passing for 827 yards with three touchdowns and three interceptions, with a pass efficiency rating of 126.46. He also had run for 40 yards on 27 carries.

In the last five games, after sitting out against BYU with a concussion, Golson is 84-of-145 passing for 1,091 yards with eight touchdowns and two interceptions, a pass efficiency rating completion rate of 136.58. He's also run for 202 yards on 53 carries — and that includes just one carry in the win over Wake Forest.

Notre Dame quarterback Everett Golson reacts Saturday after throwing for a touchdown against Wake Forest during the first half of an NCAA college football game in South Bend, Ind.

The Irish have improved during that span from 71st in the nation in total offense, averaging 398.4 yards a game, to 50th, averaging 419.7.

"He's definitely on the right path to providing us the offense that we need," Kelly said.

The coach admitted he hasn't run Golson as much as he'd like because he still needs to get stronger.

"He still needs another coat of armor on him. He needs another year in the weight room and he needs to get thicker. We want to be judicious when we run him," Kelly said. "We've got to run him. He's better when he runs, physically and mentally. He loves to run."

Golson is the fourth quarterback in Notre Dame history to start his career with nine straight victories. He would have 10 straight if he hadn't been benched the first three plays against Miami. The school record is 11 wins by Bob Williams during the national championship season of 1949.

Last week, the focus was working on footwork and communicating with teammates, calling plays and then checking into different plays. Kelly had Golson watching film of Peyton Manning and other quarterbacks.

"Manning is probably one of the great communicators, his ability to get into plays and check and do it efficiently," Kelly said. "We try to use some of the greats to show some things that could be helpful."

As for the pressure of playing at USC with Notre Dame eager to win its first national championship since 1988, Golson said he's taking the same attitude he's taken all year of focusing on the opponent and not worrying about the big picture.

"As far as I'm concerned, my head is down, my foot's on the gas, I'm never going to look up and lose focus," he said. "My thing is just keep your head down and keep pushing it."

Hat Trick: All Three Visitors to Win Today

Happy Thanksgiving. Welcome to our home. Feel free to take a victory with you when you leave.

That's how Pro Picks sees today's three holiday games: all wins for the visitors.

Nice hosts, those Lions, Cowboys and Jets.

Houston heads into Ford Field as a 3-point favorite, and after the Texans barely squeezed past Jacksonville last weekend, they will be firmly focused on the Lions.

"We were trying hard the whole game," defensive end J.J. Watt said of the 43-37 overtime win. "We just weren't having much success. You keep trying things and trying things and eventually, something starts to work."

Not much works for the Lions when they play a better team. Houston, ranked No. 1 in the AP Pro 32, is a much better team than Detroit (No. 19, AP Pro 32). TEXANS, 35-26

The NFL's other Texas team plays just as much up-and-down football as the Lions do. Dallas is weak running the ball, Washington quite strong in that area, particularly with creative rookie quarterback Robert Griffin III complementing another outstanding first-year player, Alfred Morris.

Whichever team controls the ball and the clock in this renewal of a bitter rivalry that has featured some memorable Thanksgiving meetings — Clint Longley, anyone? — should take charge. That will be the Redskins. REDSKINS, 24-20

NO. 7 NEW ENGLAND (MINUS 7) AT NO. 21 NEW YORK JETS

Anyone who believes the Jets revived their season with a win in St. Louis — even if it was, by far, their best performance in a month — will come away severely disappointed Thursday night. Another intense rivalry in which the guest will rudely treat the home team. PATRIOTS, 33-16

When War Comes Home

A decorated combat veteran, Staff Sgt. Dwight L. Smith Jr. seemed the perfect soldier. Until,

Nicholas Kristof
New York Times

that is, he visited his family in Delaware last Christmas and, as he later told the police, “clicked on.” Inexplicably one morning, while driving his bright red Hummer on a public street, he ran down a 65-year-old woman, Marsha Lee, as she walked her dog, according to police accounts. Then, as a witness watched, he got out and threw Lee, injured and screaming, into the back seat and drove off.

Lee’s body, naked except for socks, was found discarded in a wooded area half a mile away. Her head had been bashed in with a heavy, sharp object, perhaps a rock. The police later established that she had been raped.

Police officers searched frantically for the Hummer, and that evening they arrested Smith as he drove such a vehicle, still spattered with blood. A police affidavit says that Smith admitted to the slaying that night, explaining that he had decided that he “wanted to kill someone.”

Lee was much loved in the community, for she had devoted herself nearly full time to local causes like an animal shelter and a home for the elderly. Her funeral was one of the biggest anyone can remember in Delaware, and the town has honored her by giving her street a second name: Marsha Lee Way. Her husband, Scottie Lee, declined to speak to me at the request of prosecutors. But family friends see this as straightforward: a case of a young man committing an act of pure evil.

Smith, now 25, is in prison, and a trial is still more than a year off, but this may emerge as the pre-eminent American case exploring whether soldiers’ brain injuries and trauma overseas can lead to crimes committed later. The basic question is whether Lee, as she walked her dog on a quiet street here, became an indirect casualty of our foreign wars.

About half a million American soldiers have suffered from brain-rattling concussions in Afghanistan or Iraq, and one result is an epidemic of traumatic brain injuries and post-traumatic stress disorder. We’re seeing many more suicides among recent veterans than among earlier generations, probably because of repeated, extended deployments in combat, coupled with an increase in improvised explosive devices and concussions.

We still aren’t doing nearly enough to provide timely mental health services for these soldiers and veterans. The administration and members of Congress talk a good game about honoring young men and women who went to war, but they don’t allocate the resources necessary to care of them. A result is certainly disability and suicides. Could it also include brutal crimes like this one?

“I know my child,” said Smith’s father, Dwight Sr., a 49-year-old manager in the Philadelphia schools. “This isn’t my kid. He was a goofy kid. This isn’t the same man that I sent over.”

The father was sitting morosely in his dimly lit dining room, the curtains all drawn. In the corner of the room was the purple heart that Dwight Jr. earned in Afghanistan, and in the living room just beyond was his wedding photo and a military portrait. It’s impossible to reconcile that beaming young man in the photos with the one who murdered and raped Lee.

“This is a tragedy for two families,” Smith added. “I just don’t think my son was ready to come back in regular society.”

Smith thinks that his son’s mind became poisoned by war, and Dwight Jr. seems to think that as well. I couldn’t get access to him in prison, but in a recent handwritten letter to his father (which is posted with the online version of this column), he wrote:

“I am going to be honest with you dad. I have killed a lot of men and children. Some that didn’t even do anything for me to kill them. Also some that begged for mercy. I have a problem. I think I got addicted to killing people. I could kill someone go to sleep wake up and forget that it ever happened. It got normal for me to be that way. I never wanted to be this way. I just took my job way to serious. I took things to the extreme. Anyone can tell you that I changed. It is like being a completely different person.”

If Smith did indeed randomly kill civilians in Iraq or Afghanistan, I could find no record of that. What is clearer is that he was exposed to concussions while in combat, apparently at least two of them. One occurred when he was in Iraq and his Humvee was thrown into the air in an explosion. He was not visibly injured.

Then, in March 2011, a mortar shell landed near him in Afghanistan and blew him 15 feet in the air, shattering a ceramic plate in his body armor, according to his

As the season changes, so does the news. We survived a contentious national election, and the vicious rhetoric that made our nation seem more divided than united has thankfully subsided.

Now, as the leaves fall from trees and a cold wind threatens snow, our newspaper’s pages fill with a different kind of story. We begin to hear about those in need. Requests for donations pour in at a steady clip. And we get to read about the people in our community who rise to the challenge.

There is Ashlynn Carver, a 13-year-old student at Burley Junior High School whose quest to provide less fortunate families with a Thanksgiving turkey netted 220 birds.

There are the crews from Idaho Power who traveled across the country to ensure homes on Long Island have their lights on today.

And there are numerous volunteers who will spend their holiday serving free Thanksgiving meals throughout the region.

Divided? We don’t think so.

Yes, there are those who would like to rebrand this holiday as Black Friday Eve, but we’re guessing before they hit the stores in search of a bargain, they’ll surround themselves with loved ones and take a moment to reflect on the things that make them thankful.

Our reporters, editors and photographers took a moment to reflect, as well. Here are a few things for which we’re thankful:

The outdoors opportunities our region provides.

The organizations that work tirelessly to provide for the less fortunate.

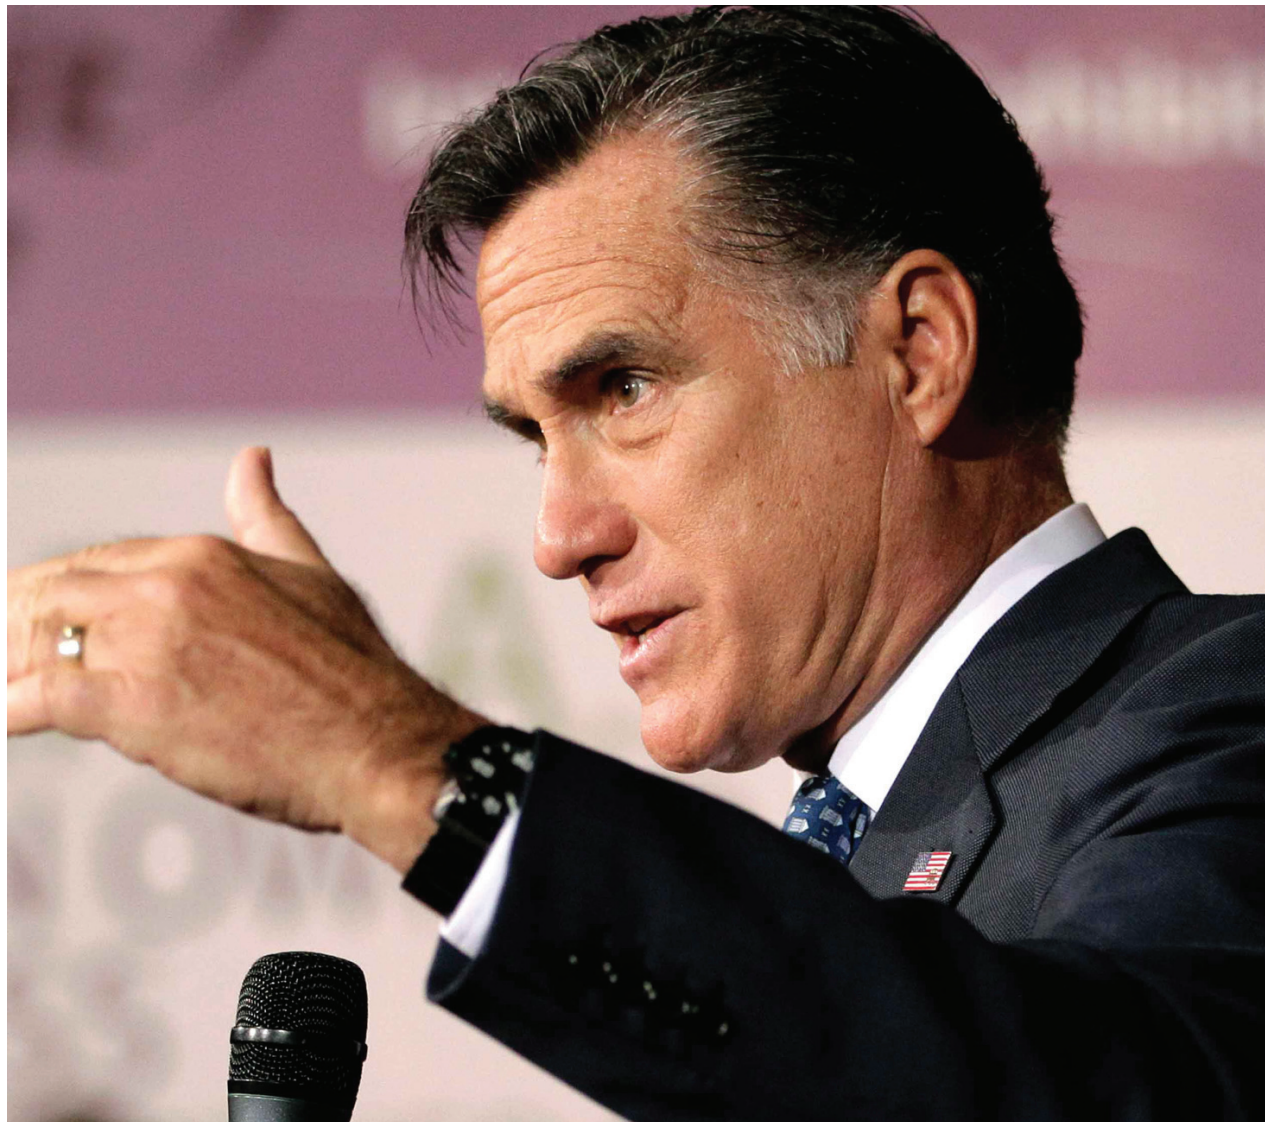

The people who dedicate themselves to educating our children.

The gorgeous canyon.

That there were no harvest-related casualties this year.

But mostly, we’re thankful to live and work in the Magic Valley.

In this May photo, Republican presidential candidate, former Massachusetts Gov. Mitt Romney speaks in Chantilly, Va.

Romney’s Take on Election Results Doesn’t Add Up

BY GLENN KESSLER
The Washington Post

“It’s a proven political strategy, which is, give a bunch of money from the government to a group and guess what? They vote for you.”

— Mitt Romney, speaking privately to donors, Nov. 14, 2012

We had thought we wouldn’t have to fact-check Mitt Romney again, or at least for a while. But his private remarks this week to a group of donors require some closer examination. The quote above makes it sound as though the Obama campaign was handing out “walking around money” to get out the vote.

Instead, Romney was speaking of what he called “gifts” to specific demographic groups, such as “forgiveness of college loan interest” to voters under the age of 29, “free health care” to African Americans, “amnesty” to the children of illegal immigrants (to lure Latinos) and “free contraceptives” for young, college-age women.

Republicans have quickly distanced themselves from Romney’s remarks, which struck many as tin-eared or sour grapes. (Latinos, for instance, also might have been turned off by Romney’s harsh rhetoric on immigration during the primaries.) It is also worth recalling that Romney in the presidential debates said the opposite about many of these so-called “gifts,” frequently suggesting he had virtually the same policies.

We will leave the political analysis to others, but we wondered: How do Romney’s assertions stand up to the facts revealed in the national exit polls?

Let’s compare how Barack Obama did in 2008 versus 2012 among the groups mentioned by Romney, using the exit polls from the two elections. The figures below show the percentage of votes that Obama received. (We used the data for non-married women because the sample size for single women ages 18-22 is too small to be useful.)

Voters ages 18-29 (percent of overall vote: 19 percent in 2012, 18 percent in 2008)

2012: 60 percent; 2008: 66 percent

African-Americans (percent of overall vote: 13 percent in 2012, 13 percent in 2008)

2012: 93 percent 2008: 95 percent

Hispanics (percent of overall vote: 10 percent in 2012, 9 percent in 2008)

2012: 71 percent; 2008: 67 percent

Non-married women (percent of overall vote: 23 percent in 2012, 20 percent in 2008)

2012: 67 percent; 2008: 70 percent

First of all, the data shows that Obama’s percentage of the vote declined for three of these groups — among young voters, African-Americans and non-married women. His share of the vote went up (marginally) for Hispanics.

There was not much difference in the percentage of the overall vote for these groups, either. You can see slight increases among the youth, Hispanics and unmarried women, but that is well within the margin of error for the poll — which is plus or more minus 3 percent.

Indeed, considering the margin of error, the only significant shift was the six-percentage-point drop in support for Obama among voters ages 18 to 29. As Romney noted, young voters “turned out in large numbers, a larger share in this election even than in 2008,” but their actual voting pattern completely undercuts Romney’s assertion. He managed to win a larger share of those voters than John McCain did in 2008.

In some critical battleground states, Obama did boost his share of the vote, such as a 14 percentage-point gain among Hispanics in Colorado and a five percentage-point gain among voters ages 18-29 in Florida. But that seems more a function of a superior get-out-the-vote operation.

Romney’s analysis of the election results is not borne out by the actual election data. In effect, Obama reassembled a slightly less robust version of the coalition that first elected him four years ago — and Romney failed to get enough votes to overcome that.

We don’t mean to knock a man when he’s down. But Romney’s comments suggest that his understanding of the election results needs some serious rethinking.

Candidates Beholden to Leaders for Money Undermines Representative Government

I agree with your editorial opinion that Scott Bedke should replace Lawrence Denney as speaker of the house, but I was disappointed with your tacit approval of the practice of politicians making campaign contributions to influence elections in legislative districts other than their own.

Your editorial praised Bedke for being a team player who doled out $10,000 in donations to help Republican incumbents get re-elected and criticized Lawrence Denney for contributions he made trying to defeat Republican incumbents he did not favor.

Having our state senators and representatives beholden to legislative leaders for money to get themselves elected undermines the concept of representative government. Your editorial indicates you believe the practice is fine as long as it is employed to the advantage of candidates with whom you agree.

Can't you do better?

Declo Students Deserve an Apology from Teacher

The Declo teacher surely meant no harm, but that day she unwittingly taught the brighter students how to be bullies and the slower learners that they can be victims and it's approved!

What all the students need to hear now from the teacher is an apology. The teacher and the principal, together, need to reassure the class that such behavior was wrong.

Mustard Seed is Providing Beds to Children In Need

During this season of giving thanks, the Idaho Department of Health and Welfare Navigation Unit would like to express its thanks to all of its community partners for their generosity and support as they join us in helping families in destitute situations.

One partner, Mustard Seed Ministries, stands out for taking the idea of providing new beds for children who did not have their own bed and presenting the idea to its sponsoring church, Twin Falls Reformed Church, which provided the funding to make that idea a reality. The Mustard Seed Thrift Store joined forces with Sleep Solutions to start Beds for Kids, furnishing beds for children returning home from foster care to a new beginning. Anyone interested in sponsoring a bed for a child should contact the Mustard Seed Thrift Store.

Reading Ability is Not a Measure of Parenting Skills

Reading ability as a measure of good parenting skills?

Ms. Christensen, I am disturbed by your comment in the article about Summer Larsen's class at Declo Elementary.

I have a daughter that has struggled in school. In 2005, I learned with help from her school that she is hard of hearing. That first year while I was struggling to learn about my daughter's condition, what I could do as her mother to help and how to best advocate for my child, I was blessed to have a wonderful support team built around my child. To Mrs. Gunnell, Ms. Johnson, Janice and my family, I will forever be grateful for your hard work and patience that year.

Today my daughter is a happy, confident, honest and compassionate teenager. These are the types of traits that I feel reflect upon my parenting skills, not her reading fluency. Does she read as quickly as other kids her age? Frankly, it doesn't matter to me. What does matter is that she does her personal best. Her teachers and I have continuously pushed her in a positive manner to strive for that goal. My daughter and I have been truly blessed to have thoughtful, caring and educated teachers as role models throughout the last eight years.

I am saddened by the thought that one rogue teacher can irreversibly damage a child's self-esteem and the reputation of so many wonderful teachers.

Keep Christmas Dollars Circulating in the Magic Valley

Local empowerment, control and sourcing are strong Idaho values. Yet, we tend to forget them when we begin Christmas shopping.

Gallup and The American Research Group estimate consumers will average $764 to $854 per person on Christmas spending. Much will be spent on imported merchandise, mostly from China. China is America's largest global competitor economically, our largest creditor and largest emerging military adversary. I invite readers of this letter to make a concerted effort this year to pursue a strategy of keeping dollars at home, to help our own community, our neighbors and our own interests.

As you plan your spending, consider supporting local artists and crafters. Give gift certificates to locally owned shops, delicatessens, barbers, beauticians, spas, health clubs, eateries and entertainment venues. Hire a carpenter, plumber, roofer, draper, cabinet maker, tiler, rug installer or painter to spruce up your home or grandma's or your kids' homes. When buying mass-produced merchandise, check the labels; buy American. If you're giving a pet, visit the animal shelter first.

Most books in stores are U.S. published. Because times are tough, consider gift certificates to local grocery stores, auto service centers or clothiers. There are 40,000 of us in Twin Falls, more than twice that across the Magic Valley. Imagine if we kept our 800 Christmas dollars circulating locally among our neighbors and locally owned small businesses. That would be a $32 million boost to Twin Falls alone and two to three times that for the entire valley. And you wouldn't be sending the money to chief executive officers in corporate headquarters in another state, or overseas, or to a country building a military largely focused against us. Does your Christmas tree really need another foreign-made gadget under it that will be forgotten by spring?

Buy Local. Buy American. Peace on Earth. Merry Christmas.

For This, We Give Thanks

Among the things for which Americans can, on this feast day, be thankful is Washington's resolve to temper severity with mercy: It will seriously — this time we really mean business, we are not going to be Greece, or worse, Illinois — restrain spending but will not balance the budget on the backs of popcorn eaters. Growers of this essential snack may yet retain their subsidy, lest the price of a tub of the stuff at the movies soar by a nickel, even a dime. Can't have that. Or this: "I," said Terry List, "would not recommend to my pupils to become a teacher in Michigan" because a proposed pension reform would delay her retirement past age 47. Under Michigan's mandatory evaluation system, all the teachers in Hazel Park School District were given the top rating — "highly qualified" — yet the high school was given an "F" for student achievement.

Ignoring William James' admonition that one should do an unpleasant duty every day just to stay in moral trim, millions of voters did not dutifully vote. In a burst of ennui, turnout declined for the first time in 16 years. Who says you cannot make a soufflé rise twice? Barack Obama was re-elected. Having spent four years making a sow's ear out of the silk purse of public support with which he began his presidency, he won by essentially vowing for his new term what an NBA player promised his new team: "We'll turn the program around 360 degrees." Joe Biden called his boss's decision to kill Osama bin Laden the most "audacious plan" in 500 years. Pick your counterexamples.

Tina Brown applied her editor's magic to Newsweek, R.I.P. If only she now could become editor of The New York Times. In a radio broadcast, a Times food columnist said government should "protect us from things from which we can't protect ourselves." He meant sugar. Michael Bloomberg, scourge of big sodas, undoubtedly agrees. Angela Prattis, the lunch lady of Chester Township, Pa., was threatened with a $600 fine for giving sandwiches to hungry children but was told she might get permission after a hearing that could cost her $1,000. Proco "Joe" Moreno, a Chicago alderman and ethicist — an unusual combination of vocations — vowed to block Chick-fil-A from building a second Chicago store because the company's president, like the laws of 37 states — and like the U.S. president until six months ago — defined marriage as between a man and a woman. A Brazilian notary recognized a "civil union" of two women and a man.

You can be queasy being green: A reusable grocery bag was blamed for an outbreak of norovirus-caused diarrhea and nausea. But lighten up, Kermit, it's lucrative being green. Al Gore (estimated net worth, $100 million) has invested in 14 renewable energy firms that have benefited from $2.5 billion in taxpayer benefits. For the seventh consecutive hurricane season, none hit Florida. After Katrina in 2005, climate-change prophets said major (Category

3 or higher) hurricanes would increase. None has hit the U.S. since that year, the longest period without one since reliable records began being kept in 1851. World corn prices surged 25 percent as America put 40 percent of its crop in gas tanks as ethanol. The Obama administration, claiming creation of 2.7 million "green jobs," said that category includes sellers of antiques — recycling, you see.

Big Teacher is watching: Some Orwellian school districts asked children to wear bracelets monitoring their physical activity and reporting it to a website. North Haven, Conn., ordered a family to stop keeping "livestock" — a pet rabbit — on its property.

Literature flourished this year as sales of the "Fifty Shades" trilogy passed 40 million. Hot for egalite, France's new socialist government proposed banning homework because it gives advantages to students from homes conducive to study. Congress found that Amtrak spends $16.15 to make a cheeseburger it sells for $9.50. Houston's new "pole tax" — $5 per customer at strip clubs — will fund rape investigations because the clubs promote unhealthy attitudes about women. Los Angeles County's $1 billion pornographic movie industry may decamp for more libertarian precincts now that voters passed a measure requiring performers to wear condoms.

Florence Green, the last World War I veteran anywhere, died in England two weeks shy of 111. Finally, at Bishop Hartley High School in Columbus, Ohio, Megan Ryan has Down syndrome and the title of Homecoming Queen, which by itself redeems 2012.

Don't Sweep Declo Incident Under the Rug

I was so angry when I heard about the fourth-grade teacher, Summer Larsen, in Declo. Yes, I put her name in because she deserves to have everyone know what she did. She has humiliated nine children, some of whom may never recover.

This incident can go with these children for the rest of their lives. She does not deserve to be in a classroom with our children. In Idaho, people are working hard to teach against bullying and here we have an adult showing how it can be done. Those children who did the drawing and all the other children at that school and on the buses who made fun of them all day long have just been taught that it is OK to bully and hurt other people.

I have heard that some parents say she is a good teacher and they will fight for her. My guess is that their children were not the ones who had their faces drawn on with permanent marker by their classmates because they didn't reach some goal for reading. Is this really the kind of teaching style our school boards want for our children?

Parents please protect your children from teachers like this and let your voices be heard by Superintendent of Schools Tim Luna, our governor and your local school board and principal. Don't let this be swept under the carpet.

The Best Tax Deduction to Chop

What's the least defensible special break in the U.S. tax code?

With so many distortions to choose from, it's hard to name just one. If forced to pick, I might say the deduction for state and local taxes, which cost $67 billion in fiscal 2011, according to the congressional Joint Committee on Taxation.

This one overwhelmingly benefits upper-income households in a handful of upper-income states, while rendering the entire nation's finances less transparent. It's also a potential source of friction in the "fiscal cliff" negotiations between President Obama and the Republicans (but we'll get to that in a moment).

Taxpayers have been allowed to deduct state and local income and property taxes since the federal income tax began in 1913. (Sales taxes have at times been deductible, too, but that's a relatively minor issue.) The theory is it's unfair to make people pay twice for the public services they receive. That's doubtful, though, since, despite some overlap, federal taxes support different services than state and local.

What the deduction does is enable higher-income states and localities to tax — and spend — more than they otherwise would, while shifting some of the cost to other states. It also encourages them to collect revenue in forms that are easier to deduct on federal returns.

Two states, California and New York, reaped almost 30 percent of the deduction's value in 2009, the latest year for which I could find Internal Revenue Service data. Other states that benefit disproportionately include Connecticut, New Jersey, Illinois, Massachusetts and Maryland.

In 2009, 73 percent of the deduction's benefits went to taxpayers with annual incomes above $100,000, according to the Congressional Budget Office; fully 20 percent of the benefits went to taxpayers with annual incomes above $1 million.

Starting to notice a pattern? Basically, what we have is a significant federal tax subsidy for "blue" state governments. These also happen to be the states having the most difficulty living within their means, what with their expensive urban school systems, bloated pension liabilities and all. Yet they have an incentive to close their budget gaps by raising income taxes rather than reining in spending, because the deduction helps them pass the tab to other states, most of them red.

California Gov. Jerry Brown addressed his budget woes through a referendum this year to boost the top income tax rate, just as Illinois Gov. Pat Quinn pushed an income tax rate increase through his legislature last year.

Now you're beginning to understand how this seemingly innocuous tax break distorts financial flows within and among the 50 states, as well as between the states on the one hand and Washington on the other.

As for negotiations over a "grand bargain" between President Obama and the Republican House, the state and local tax deduction complicates that process, too.

The main bone of contention is the federal income tax rate on top earners, currently 35 percent. Obama says it is going to be hard to raise enough revenue without returning that rate to 39.6 percent, the level during Bill Clinton's presidency.

Republicans insist that eliminating deductions and tax breaks could bring in more revenue without raising rates — while getting most of the money from the wealthy, just as the president wants to do.

In fact, the Tax Policy Center, a nonpartisan Washington think tank, has shown that eliminating all itemized deductions while cutting rates 20 percent across the board and eliminating the alternative minimum tax would raise $1.9 trillion over 10 years. That's $300 billion more than President Obama is seeking from Congress.

Of course, not even the Republicans are proposing such a sweeping reform, which would certainly make the tax code more efficient — but also wipe out breaks for charitable giving and mortgage interest that enjoy wide red-state support, too. And the president himself has suggested limiting deductions in combination with rate increases, perhaps by capping the rate at which deductions may be claimed.

But because its impact is so heavily concentrated in blue states, the state and local deduction creates an asymmetry: Democrats have an extra reason to insist on raising rates, and Republicans have an extra incentive to demand loophole-cutting. Perhaps it's just coincidence, but I have noticed that those most skeptical of the loophole-closing approach include Sen. Charles Schumer, D-N.Y., and House Minority Leader Nancy Pelosi, D-Calif.

So let's all say a Thanksgiving prayer for a successful negotiation — and remember that even a very grand bargain would still leave our state and federal tax and budget systems in need of major reform.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

Declo Teacher Humiliated Her Students

I have never been moved enough by a story to write to an editor before. Today, that changed.

I read on the Internet the story of the Declo, Idaho, fourth-graders who picked their own "incentive" for reaching reading goals and of the students who were given a punishment rather than an incentive.

My heart physically ached at the thought of the humiliation imposed upon students for not learning as fast as others. What type of teacher would allow this to happen? What type of teacher does not understand the difference between incentive and punishment? And would ask her students to pick an incentive and allow them to choose a punishment and not use that moment to teach between the two?

This teacher failed the students in one of the worst ways I can imagine. If I were a parent of any student in that class, I would immediately remove them from the teacher's influence. And if I were a parent of any student who was involved in the face painting, I would have them not only apologize in a written letter to the other students but also volunteer two hours a week for the rest of the school year to tutor the students who did not reach the reading goal.

Perhaps that way they could all learn not only about humiliation and incentives but about compassion, encouragement and, most importantly, character.

OBITUARIES

LaDonna Shelly Butler Bolton

June 9, 1939–Nov. 19, 2012

TWIN FALLS • LaDonna Shelly Butler Bolton, 73, passed away Monday, Nov. 19, 2012, at her home.

LaDonna was born June 9, 1939, in Twin Falls, Idaho, to Donald and Lucille Shelly. LaDonna lived in Kimberly and Twin Falls most of her life. She worked in the retail field and owned her own ceramic shop for a few years. She married Mack Butler in 1959. To this marriage, there were three children, Kirby, Lisa and Teresa. They later divorced. In 1984, she married Robert Bolton and remained married until his death in 2000.

During the last few years of LaDonna's retirement, she enjoyed traveling, fishing, camping and going south during the winter with her dear friend, Bill Pullin, to whom she remained close. LaDonna cherished spending time with her family, grandchildren and great-grandchildren.

She is survived by her mother, Lucille Sperle; her brother, Gene Shelly; her three children, Kirby (Marcia) Butler of Twin Falls, Lisa (Mike) Cameron of Twin Falls and Teresa (Doug) Newkirk of University Place, Wash.; seven grandchildren; seven great-grandchildren; and three nieces. She is preceded in death by her father, Donald Shelly; and second husband, Robert Bolton.

LaDonna will be truly missed by all who her knew and loved her.

The funeral will be held 10 a.m. Saturday, Nov. 24, at Parke's Magic Valley Funeral Home, 2551 Kimberly Road in Twin Falls. A private inurnment will follow at a later date at the Twin Falls Cemetery.

The family would like to thank St. Luke's Home Health, Dr. Victorija Lauceus, the staff at the Coumadin Clinic and the Orthopedics Spine and Plastic Surgery Clinic for all the special care given to our mother over the last few years. We are forever grateful.

Those who wish may share memories and condolences on LaDonna's memorial page at www.magicvalleyfuneralhome.com.

She was born May 22, 1921, in Washington to Masami and Etsu Semba.

She is preceded in death by her husband and survived by her son, Gary Kawamura of Pocatello, Idaho.

Her immediate family will host friends at a memorial luncheon at 1 p.m. Sunday, Nov. 25, at the Peking Restaurant, 824 Blue Lakes Blvd. N. in Twin Falls.

Services are under the direction of Lance Cox and the staff at White Mortuary "Chapel by the Park."

Eleanor Rose (Reichert) Rosenof

July 4, 1935–Nov. 17, 2012

TWIN FALLS • Eleanor Rose (Reichert) Rosenof passed away Saturday evening, Nov. 17, 2012, in the loving embrace of family members.

Eleanor was born July 4, 1935, in Twin Falls, Idaho, to Fred and Mildred Reichert. She was the family's fourth of July baby. She grew up on the family farm near Filer and attended Poplar Hill School and then Filer High School. Her parents were very special to her, as were her big sister and two big brothers. Eleanor and her sister, Doris, were the best of friends. They always shared a special bond and affection for each other. Mom cherished many wonderful memories of fun times with her big brothers whom she looked up to and admired. In high school, she was a member of the International Order of the Rainbow for Girls in addition to other school groups and clubs. After graduating from Filer High School, Eleanor attended college in Denver and later attended the Twin Falls Business College. This followed with work as a legal secretary for a local law firm.

She married Ernest McCollum in 1956, continuing to work as he finished school in Moscow. After their return to Twin Falls, Eleanor became a mom to Teri and to Lisa two years later. She and Ernie were later divorced. Eleanor married DuWayne Rosenof in 1966. The entire family welcomed new baby, Kay, later that year. Mom's children were very special to her. Her love and care for us was shown in many ways, from her ever-present worrying about our safety to her many hugs she loved to give us. Eleanor was a wonderful cook, faithfully providing delicious meals every evening. She always made sure her family was fed well and taken care of. Her fried chicken and potatoes and gravy on Sunday evenings when her kids were younger have been remembered as home cooking at its best. She always made sure her house was clean and tidy. Even when it was beyond clean, she never felt it was clean enough. To polish it all off, she maintained the yard and flowers with laborious care, presenting a very welcoming country abode.

Eleanor and DuWayne enjoyed camping, pinocle and weekend breakfasts with friends. They also loved having family over for holidays or simply for the fun of it. As the children spread out, vacations included travel to various destinations. Mom became an avid reader in her later years, always enjoying a good book. This led to more sharing of ideas and recommendations among her and her daughters.

Eleanor was a devoted daughter to her mom, as she visited her most every day. She took time out of every day to just sit and chat with her mom and do whatever she could to help her for many years. Additionally, Eleanor so enjoyed her grandchildren and great-grandchildren. They were her source of joy and their abundance of sunshine and happiness was reflected in her face whenever she was with them. She was dearly loved by all of them, now leaving a very sad void.

Eleanor was preceded in death by her parents; her brothers, Raymond Reichert and Elmer Reichert; and husband, DuWayne. She is survived by her sister, Doris Mogensen; daughters, Teri (Ron) Moody, Lisa (Rusty) Kennedy and Kay (Todd) Wright; grandchildren, Melissa Stone, Katrina Becker, Nate Moody, Malori Wright and Dan Moody; and five great-grandchildren, Josie, Brielle, Julia, Jackson and Bradley.

The family wishes to thank all of the caring staff at BridgeView Estates. Mom was cared for with kindness, professionalism and dignity up to her last breath and beyond.

The funeral will be held at 2 p.m. Saturday, Nov. 24, at White Mortuary; services are under the direction of Lance Cox and staff. Interment will follow at the Filer cemetery.

In lieu of flowers, the family suggests that tributes in Mom's name be made to the charity of choice. Friends may leave condolences by visiting www.whitemortuary.com.

Donald L. Rosen

Oct. 9, 1931–Nov. 16, 2012

HAGERMAN • Donald L. Rosen, 81, of Hagerman, died peacefully at his home Friday, Nov. 16, 2012, after a long battle with COPD.

Don was born Oct. 9, 1931, in Twin Falls, Idaho, to Esther and Smith (Smoke) Rosen. As a young child, Don contacted osteomyelitis, which resulted in numerous operations and prevented him from joining the Navy with his two brothers. As a young man, Don went to California and started a trade in the sawmill industry only to find out he was allergic to fir. He returned to Idaho, where he worked for Independent Meat and later United Oil Company.

He met and married Irene Stanger in 1955; from this union, three sons were born, Durk, Tim and Scott. In 1962, he established Rosen's Floor Covering Service and built a reputation for fine quality and honest work. When he was not flooring someone, he was very active in remodeling homes in the Twin Falls and Jerome area. Don had that special touch of turning a disaster into a beautiful home.

In 1983, Don left Idaho and went to Nome, Alaska, where he managed to continue his trade when he wasn't fishing or hunting, and that was when it was dark all day and 63 below. From Nome, Don went to Colorado, where he married Charlotte Bell in 1990. From this union, he acquired two stepdaughters and sons-in-law. Don and Charlotte moved to Montana, where they established Montana Goat Rescue and Don built his final new home; however, the three-car garage and work shop came first. At one point, he had 87 goats and had named every one of them. After a short stay in very HOT Arizona, Don asked Charlotte if she ever thought of living in Hagerman, to which she replied, "Give me three hours and we are out of here."

He is survived by his wife, Charlotte Rosen; sons, Durk and Tim Rosen; and stepdaughters, Laura Hill (Bart) and Linda Armstrong (Marty). He was preceded in death by his son, Scott; his mother and father; his brothers, Bruce and Gene Rosen; and numerous aunts, uncles and cousins.

A service of remembrance will be held at 10 a.m. Saturday, Dec. 1, at Parke's Magic Valley Funeral Home, 2551 Kimberly Road in Twin Falls. The family requests that, in lieu of flowers, please consider a donation to the Hagerman Public Library, P.O. Box 330, Hagerman, ID 83332. The funds will be used to purchase books in remembrance of Don.

Dennis Port

Dec. 17, 1929–Nov. 20, 2012

WENATCHEE, Wash. • Dennis Port died Tuesday, Nov. 20, 2012, at his home in Wenatchee, Wash.

Dennis spent his childhood working and playing on the family farm with his many brothers and sisters. He attended school in Oakley, Idaho. After high school, he loved traveling via motorcycle to shear sheep with his high school buddies, and he worked many years in the spud and beet fields. Dennis was drafted into the military in 1950 and fought in the Korean War for 18 months and was honorably discharged in December of 1952.

Dennis married Sally Jean Martin on March 30, 1953, and together they had seven children, Denise Port, Marty Port (deceased), Jon (Melissa) Port, Kayla (Randi) Crawford, Amy (Randy) Grams, Doug Port and Curt (Shannon) Port. Q. My husband and I will be alone at Thanksgiving this year. We would like to share our holiday with others who are less fortunate. Ideas?

A. Here are some ideas: Make a traditional dinner in your home and invite friends or acquaintances who live alone to be your dinner guests. Ask other couples to join you in making small fruit baskets to deliver on Thanksgiving to shut-ins and other people you think would enjoy them. Make edible treats (marked sugar and sugar-free) and deliver them to a local nursing home (check first to see if they can accept your goodies). Offer to help with the facility's Thanksgiving dinner or other festivities. Help serve a large public dinner on Thanksgiving. These are often organized through local churches. You should arrange to volunteer in advance through the church or organization that you select. They might not be able to use you if you weren't scheduled to participate. Happy Thanksgiving!

public defender, Bradley V. Manning. Smith was hospitalized, flown back to the United States, and given a diagnosis of a traumatic brain injury with post-traumatic stress disorder.

Jasmin Smith, a 29-year-old German woman who is now his wife, and was then his girlfriend, recalls seeing him in the hospital shortly after his return. "He was in a wheelchair," she said. "His hand was shaking. He looked pretty bad. He didn't say anything for 15 or 20 minutes. At the beginning, he didn't even recognize me."

She says they celebrated his apparent recovery by marrying two months later. But the recovery seemed fleeting, she says, for he began to abuse alcohol and prescription painkillers and would sometimes fly into violent rages.

"He was always angry about little things," Smith said. "He would throw laptops, punch holes in walls." Smith says that he did once choke her and, fearing for her safety, she flew back to Germany. "I didn't tell him I was leaving, because I was scared."

Dwight Sr. says his son called then, despondent. "Dad, I don't know what's wrong with me," the father quoted his son as telling him. "I just get mad. I can't help myself." Eventually, after he promised to control himself, Smith did return to his base at Fort Drum, N.Y., and they resumed married life. Two months later, on the day of the murder, they were at Dwight Sr.'s home for Christmas vacation. Jasmin says that her husband asked her to go jogging in the morning, but she declined. Then he left the house - and allegedly killed and raped Lee.

He seemed relatively normal when he returned, Jasmin Smith told me, and they went Christmas shopping that afternoon. After he was arrested that evening, she spoke briefly to her husband; she says that his only explanation for the crime was that he had become enraged while running that he wasn't physically fit enough. Sometimes since, she says, he has suggested that he blacked out and can't remember exactly what happened. He also says that he wants to apologize to Lee's family. Rape hasn't been part of the typical pattern of crimes committed by returning soldiers with TBI or PTSD. But Dr. Bennet Omalu, an expert on brain injuries who is also a clinical professor of pathology at University of California, Davis, told me that TBI could indeed lead to such sexual violence. Indeed, Omalu said he had recently performed an autopsy on an elderly woman who had been randomly raped and murdered by an Iraq war veteran.

Frankly, I hesitated to write this column. I feel strongly that we as a nation have let down our veterans, failing to provide the mental health services they need, and we owe them better. But I can't be sure that the murder of Lee is related to these failures. In the end, I decided to go ahead because here's a young man with no adult criminal record who was promoted rapidly within the military and then suffered brain injuries. And then on his return he allegedly committed a horrific rape and murder that do not make any sense - not to me, not to you, not to his family.

States' Health Exchanges: Too Much to Chew?

BY N.C. AIZENMAN AND SARAH KLIFF

The Washington Post

With a growing number of state leaders saying they will leave it to the federal government to handle a crucial element of President Barack Obama's health-care law, even supporters of the statute are wondering if the administration is up to the job.

So far, the administration has released few details about the complex computer systems needed to operate exchanges for states that don't want to run them. The exchanges - online marketplaces for consumers and small businesses to buy insurance - are supposed to be up and running by Oct. 1, 2013, for coverage that begins in January 2014.

Joel Ario, who until a year ago was the federal official overseeing development of the exchanges, said that while he is optimistic, he isn't certain that the federal government will be ready by October.

"Anybody who tells you for sure . . . is ill-informed, because this is still a work in progress," said Ario, who is now a health-care consultant.

But Michael Hash, director of the office of health reform at the Department of Health and Human Services, said, "We have the contractors in place, and we're on track to meet the deadlines that are necessary to make the exchanges operational."

Under the law, states have three options: They can set up the exchanges themselves, create them in partnership with the federal government or cede control to federal authorities.

The exchanges are fundamental to the law's goal of expanding insurance coverage. Millions of people who aren't covered by employer-sponsored health plans will get federal subsidies to buy insurance through their state's exchange. Those whose incomes aren't low enough for subsidies could still benefit from the competition among insurers that the exchanges are designed to foster.

States that decide to set up their own exchanges must inform the federal government by Friday. So far, about 14 have indicated definite interest, with six more likely to do so. States that decline to set up their own exchanges have until Feb. 15 to decide whether to pursue a federal partnership or have Washington take over the entire chore.

At least 13 states have announced their intention to leave the job to the federal government. They include Alabama, where Gov. Robert Bentley, a Republican, became the latest to join those ranks Tuesday.

Experts say the federal government has an interest in persuading as many states as possible to agree, at minimum, to a partnership. That's because the aspects that the states would handle are labor intensive and customized to each state - making them more difficult for federal authorities to deal with. These tasks include deciding which health plans can be sold on the exchanges and monitoring plans' compliance, as well as providing outreach and assistance to consumers.

The latter will require setting up large call centers and walk-in offices, with staff members trained in the minutiae of insurance regulation.

Bruce Caswell, who runs the health-services segment of Maximus - a Reston, Va.-based firm that works on large government data systems and is bidding on a federal contract to assist the exchanges - suggested that the federal government may have to rely heavily on private contractors.

He recalled setting up a call center with hundreds of consumer-assistance staff members in Texas when that state moved 2 million people into different programs under Medicaid, the state-federal health insurance program for the poor and disabled.

"We had to find a facility, outfit it, recruit and train staff, take in all the work, and then shut it down six or seven months later," he said. "That's the kind of agility that would be difficult without a public-private partnership."

Ario, the former federal official, estimated that at most, the federal government could oversee consumer assistance and plan management for about half the states. If the number exceeded that, he said, "it would be an incredible resource drain."

Health and Human Services officials disputed that. They said the administration's reason for encouraging states to take charge of plan management and consumer assistance is to leverage their expertise and give them the largest possible role - not to relieve the federal government of a potential burden.

Meanwhile, experts say that one of the toughest jobs for the federal government in states where it operates the exchanges fully or in partnership will be building the system that figures out whether applicants are eligible for federal subsidies or Medicaid.

The system, for which the government has contracted with the health-care technology firm CGI, will have to be customized to seamlessly work with each state's existing Medicaid enrollment system.

Across the country, states have been using federal dollars to modernize those systems, but it's unclear how much they have progressed.

Lincoln, The Movie: An Idaho Review

Steven Spielberg's latest release is playing to strong and favorable audience reaction in movie houses throughout the Gem State. Opening night was packed at the Boise Edwards Theatre for the drama of Abraham Lincoln's January 1865 effort, using shady political tactics, to gain last minute votes in Congress. It plays out with Daniel Day Lewis as a unique and believable Lincoln. His reluctant ally is Tommy Lee Jones as an abolitionist Pennsylvania Congressman named Thaddeus Stevens. The movie animates a key, but now obscure, moment in American political history.

After a poignant opening detailing a fictional encounter between Lincoln and two black soldiers in the field, the movie slows down as characters must explain a bit too much detail about the political situation of the day. The Radical, Conservative and other political forces are arrayed to wrangle over the possible passage of the Thirteenth Amendment forever banning slavery. Lincoln wants action now, even though these same Congressmen had voted it down only months earlier. Can Lincoln and Secretary Seward, and group of hired henchmen threaten, buy, cajole, or nobly appeal for just a few more votes?

The drama in the Capitol hallways and on the floor of the House of Representatives is punctuated by several emotional side stories. We eavesdrop on Robert Todd Lincoln, who argues his right to enlist in the army with a reluctant father. Mary Lincoln torments her husband with her abject sorrows and fears. We see Lincoln tenderly stroking the head of his young son Tad. The tensions of the War Department and its communication center, the Telegraph Office, are somberly depicted for the first time in American cinematic history. The story takes place just two years after a much less aged and troubled Lincoln lobbied and signed the bill creating Idaho Territory in early 1863. The movie closes with a scene set in the Cabinet Room on the evening of April 14, 1865. Just three hours earlier, though not referred to in the film, Lincoln had invited Idaho Territory's Congressman William Wallace to attend Ford's Theatre with him that night. The Idahoan could not go. Mrs Wallace was ill.

Dave

Lincoln, the movie, is an important slice of history, well depicted and worth enjoying. It even has its own surprise ending, as Congressman Stevens is shown in his bedroom with the official tally sheet of the House vote just concluded. Though powerful scenes punctuate the story, it sometimes does not track smoothly as a cohesive whole. Day Lewis' Lincoln is a stooped, stressed figure, who resorts to humor at questionably appropriate times simply to stay sane. He barely survives the human devastation and political casualty of the Civil War. But Lincoln is also the master of both men and monumental events whom we see and hear deliver the powerful Second Inaugural Address on the Capitol steps, in the most realistic such scene ever filmed.

Dave Leroy was the Chairman of the Idaho Abraham Lincoln Bicentennial Commission. He is a Lincoln author, speaker and collector. The Idaho History Center in Boise will open a "Lincoln Legacy" museum gallery permanently displaying items donated from Leroy's collection in September 2013.

Bomb Blasts Tel Aviv Bus

BY ARIEL DAVID AND SARAH EL DEEB
Associated Press

TEL AVIV, Israel • A bomb exploded aboard an Israeli bus near the nation's military headquarters in Tel Aviv on Wednesday, wounding 27 people, delivering a major blow to diplomatic efforts to forge a truce to end a week of fighting between Israel and Gaza's militant Hamas rulers. Thousands of Palestinians fled their homes in Gaza fearing Israeli airstrikes.

Hours after the bus blast, U.S. Secretary of State Hillary Rodham Clinton, who is shuttling across the region in truce talks, arrived in Cairo and met with Egyptian President Mohammed Morsi, who is mediating between Israel and Hamas to end the fighting that has killed more than 140 Palestinians and five Israelis.

The blast, which left the bus charred and its windows blown out, was the first bombing in Tel Aviv since 2006. It appeared aimed at sparking Israeli fears of a return to the violence of the Palestinian uprising last decade, which killed more than 1,000 Israelis in bombings and shooting attacks and left more than 5,000 Palestinians dead as well. Hamas has carried out dozens of suicide bombings that have killed hundreds of Israelis.

While Hamas did not take responsibility for the attack, it praised the bombing.

"We consider it a natural response to the occupation crimes and the ongoing massacres against civilians in the Gaza

Russian Man Takes on Corrupt Officials

YARABAIKASY, Russia • When Eduard Mochalov tried to have the people who stole his cattle and pig farm brought to justice, he spent eight months in jail on charges he says were cooked up. He appealed to Vladimir Putin and even set himself on fire outside the Kremlin in protest, but still couldn't draw attention to his cause as his farm slowly fell into disrepair.

Now, Mochalov has found a new life as a crusading journalist investigating corruption in his native region, fueled by tips from disgruntled businessmen and government workers. Undeterred by a system where the law is selectively used to protect the powerful and crack down on critics, Mochalov has quickly earned cult status — not to mention the ire of countless local officials — throughout the small province of Chuvashia.

Roughly once a month, he publishes a free newspaper called Vzyatka, or The Bribe, which rails against what it calls "Chuvash kingpins" who steal from the province's budget. Headlines include "The governor of Chuvashia's family business" and "If nobody's been found guilty, that means they're already in power." The paper has proved so popular that with a print run of 20,000 he has trouble meeting demand.

While official corruption has been rife in Russia since czarist times, frustrations over such graft have skyrocketed under President Putin's rule.

Report: Wis. Temple Shooter Had no Drugs in System

BY DINESH RAMDE
Associated Press

MILWAUKEE • A white supremacist with a history of alcohol problems had no drugs in his system when he walked into a Sikh temple in suburban Milwaukee this summer and fatally shot six people before killing himself, according to a toxicology report released Wednesday.

There were small amounts of alcohol in Wade Michael Page's heart, but because there was none in his bloodstream the alcohol may have been produced after Page's body tissues began breaking down, a Milwaukee County pathologist said.

"It is impossible to tell if the ethyl alcohol level is due to alcohol ingestion or a product of decomposition," Agnieszka Rogalska said in an email.

Page's sister had told investigators that in the year preceding the rampage, her brother developed a bloated appearance that made her wonder if he'd been drinking recently. She also said Page seemed to grow more intense over the past year, as if he had lost his wit and sense of humor, according to an investigative report.

Page, 40, opened fire Aug. 5 before a service was to start at the Sikh Temple of Wisconsin in suburban Milwaukee. He killed six people and wounded four others before he was shot in the abdomen during a firefight with police. He died after he shot himself in the head.

The Milwaukee County medical examiner's office, which released the investigative report, officially ruled his death a suicide.

Page's sister told authorities her brother didn't use drugs but had a history of alcohol problems. He was cited several times over the years for his drunken behavior, and was convicted in Colorado of drunken driving in 1999 and in Texas in 2004 for drunkenly kicking holes in an El Paso bar's walls.

Page had gotten several tattoos associated with the white supremacy movement, including the number 14 on his left shoulder and the number 88 on his right one, according to an Aug. 6 autopsy report that had been kept under seal until the FBI completed its investigation Tuesday. In white-supremacist circles, "14" represents the 14 words in a popular skinhead mantra. The number "88" points to "H" as the eighth letter of the alphabet, and 88 is a reference to, "Heil Hitler."

He also had tattoos of skulls and crossbones on one forearm, flames on his lower leg and the words "Suffer" across his shoulders and "Pride" on his upper chest. He also had four letters that abbreviate a profane statement tattooed on the knuckles of his left hand.

Abortions Fall 5 Percent, Biggest Drop in a Decade

BY MIKE STOBBE
Associated Press

NEW YORK • U.S. abortions fell 5 percent during the Great Recession in the biggest one-year decrease in at least a decade, according to government figures released Wednesday.

The reason for the decline wasn't clear, but some experts said it may be because of better use of birth control during tough economic times. Their theory is that some women believe they can't afford to get pregnant.

"They stick to straight and narrow ... and they are more careful about birth control," said Elizabeth Ananat, a Duke University assistant professor of public policy and economics who has researched abortions.

While many states have aggressively restricted access to abortion, most of those laws were adopted in the past two years and are not believed to have played a role in the decline.

Abortions have been dropping slightly over much of the past decade. But before this latest report, they seemed to have leveled off.

Strip,” Hamas spokesman Fawzi Barhoum told The Associated Press.

Bassem Ezbid, a West Bank political analyst, said it was unlikely Hamas itself was behind the attack, since it would not want to risk losing any of the international support it gained in recent days.

“If Hamas wants to target civilians it would do so by firing rockets, but not by buses because such attacks left a negative record in the minds of people. Hamas doesn’t need this now,” he said.

On the other hand, Hamas may be interested in signaling to Israel that a renewed bombing campaign is possible, particularly as thousands of Israeli ground troops massed on the Gaza border awaiting a possible invasion should cease-fire talks fail.

A tiny militant group, the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine-General Command, claimed responsibility for the bus bombing but offered no evidence to back up the claim. The Damascus-based group has few followers in the West Bank and Palestinian groups often claim attacks they haven’t carried out.

The Tel Aviv bombing came after a night of more than 30 Israeli airstrikes over Gaza that hit government ministries, smuggling tunnels, a banker’s empty villa and a Hamas-linked media office.

Some 10,000 Palestinians sought shelter in 12 U.N.-run schools, after Israel dropped leaflets urging residents to vacate their homes in some areas of Gaza to avoid being hit by airstrikes, said Adnan Abu Hassna, the U.N. Relief and Works Agency spokesman.

The influx of displaced people came a day after the head of UNRWA, Filippo Grandi, warned that the agency urgently needed $12 million to continue distributing food to the neediest Gazans. The agency runs schools, shelters and food programs for hundreds of thousands of Palestinian refugees and their descendants in Gaza.

The bus attack took place around noon on one of the coastal city’s busiest arteries, near the Tel Aviv museum, the district courthouse and across from an entrance to Israel’s national defense headquarters.

The blast was from a device placed inside the bus by a man who then got off, said Yitzhak Aharonovich, Israel’s minister of internal security.

He said the explosion took place while the bus was moving. Blood splattered the sidewalk at the site of the explosion, with glass scattered around.

“I was sitting in the middle of the bus. We were about to pull into a station and suddenly there was a huge explosion,” said Yehuda Samarano, 59, from his hospital bed where he was being treated for shrapnel wounds to his chest and leg. “I flew from my seat. Everything became white and my ears are still ringing now.”

Police set up roadblocks across the city trying to apprehend the attacker.

“We strongly believe that this was a terror attack,” said police spokesman Micky Rosenfeld. He said three of the 27 wounded were moderately to seriously hurt.

In Gaza, the bombing was praised from mosque loudspeakers, while Hamas’ television station interviewed people praising the attack as a return of militants’ trademark tactics.

Clinton said the U.S. “strongly condemns” the bombing, which she called a “terrorist attack.”

Israel and Hamas had seemed on the brink of a truce deal Tuesday following a swirl of diplomatic activity also involving U.N. chief Ban Ki-moon and Egypt’s Morsi. But sticking points could not be resolved as talks — and violence — stretched into the night.

Clinton shuttled among the sides, meeting Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu in Jerusalem Tuesday night, then Palestinian President Mahmoud Abbas in the West Bank the next morning before heading to Cairo. After talks with Clinton, the Egyptian president met with Ban.

overall by about 6 percent and the abortion rate has fallen 7 percent, but the figures essentially leveled off for a few of those years.

By all accounts, contraception is playing a role in lowering the numbers.

Some cite a government study released earlier this year suggesting that about 60 percent of teenage girls who have sex use the most effective kinds of contraception, including the pill and patch. That’s up from the mid-1990s, when fewer than half were using the best kinds.

Experts also pointed to the growing use of IUDs. The IUD, or intrauterine device, is a T-shaped plastic sperm-killer that a doctor inserts into a woman’s uterus. A Guttmacher Institute study earlier this year showed that IUD use among sexually active women on birth control rose from under 3 percent in 2002 to more than 8 percent in 2009.

IUDs essentially prevent “user error,” said Rachel Jones, a Guttmacher researcher.

Ananat said another factor for the abortion decline may be the growing use of the morning-after pill, a form of emergency contraception that has been increasingly easier to get. It came onto the market in 1999 and in 2006 was approved for non-prescription sale to women 18 and older. In 2009 the age was lowered to 17.

Underlying all this may be the economy, which was in recession from December 2007 until June 2009. But well afterward, polls have shown most Americans remained worried about anemic hiring, a depressed housing market and other problems.

Jailed Amish Cannot Attend Ohio Wedding

BY THOMAS J. SHEERAN
Associated Press

CLEVELAND • Defendants convicted in beard-and hair-cutting attacks on fellow Amish lost a bid Wednesday to leave jail to attend a family wedding after prosecutors argued they might flee or commit similar attacks while on furlough.

U.S. District Court Judge Dan Polster, who presided at the trial of 16 Amish convicted in the attacks, ruled against requests by five of the nine locked-up Amish, who are awaiting sentencing on Feb. 8. Seven other defendants remain free pending sentencing.

The judge agreed with prosecutors that anyone released from jail might become a fugitive or pose a danger to others.

Those asking to attend the Thanksgiving Day wedding in Bergholz in eastern Ohio included two brothers and an uncle of the bride. Prosecutors say the bride and groom are “unindicted co-conspirators” in the case.

In September, a jury convicted the 16 of hate crimes in last year’s attacks, which prosecutors say stemmed from religious disputes among Amish. The convictions are being appealed.

The defendants seeking jail furloughs “participated in late-night violent assaults on unsuspecting victims, some of whom were family members,” the government said in opposing furloughs. “They have shown no remorse for their conduct and were even recorded talking about how they would have committed even more assaults had they known that they would be arrested.”

As for the bride and groom, “Lizzie Mullet and Ferdinand Miller are unindicted co-conspirators — they are not simply relatives of the defendants,” prosecutors said. The government said the bride joked about and discussed the possibility of more assaults in a phone conversation with her jailed brother. According to the government, another recorded conversation showed the groom suggesting to his father that more attacks be carried out.

“If we can get through this, then we can go get more beard hair,” Ferdinand Miller said, according to prosecutors.

A defense attorney said he accepted the ruling.

“It was certainly worth the effort to make the motion, but I do understand the judge’s concerns,” said J. Dean Carro, attorney for Lester Miller, the bride’s uncle.

The defense doesn’t deny that the hair-cuttings took place. But it contends that the Amish are bound by different rules guided by their religion and that the government shouldn’t get involved in what amounted to a family or church dispute.

Sam Mullet Sr., the leader of the group and among those locked up along with two sons who asked for jail furloughs, was convicted of orchestrating the cuttings in an attempt to shame mainstream members he believed were straying from their beliefs.

His followers were found guilty of carrying out the attacks, which terrorized the normally peaceful religious settlements.

Twenty-nine percent of Russians believe that civil servants only care about using public funds to enrich themselves, a more than nine-fold increase since Putin took power in 2000, according to the Levada Center, an independent polling agency.

Corruption was a key motivation behind the unprecedented series of huge protests against Putin in Moscow last winter and spring, and remains a key rallying point for the opposition. Recently, the Kremlin has attempted to siphon off popular anger by launching a major crackdown on corruption, which has cost several high-level officials their jobs.

In Chuvashia, a sleepy rural region 400 miles east of Moscow best known for its felt boots, Mochalov devotes all his energy to campaigning against local corruption. That makes him unusual in Russia, especially in the provinces, where few journalists seriously investigate officials and those who do frequently face violent reprisal.

Chuvashia is one of the three most corrupt regions in Russia, according to the country’s top investigative agency, but few cases make it to court. Officials in Chuvashia did not immediately respond to requests for comment on this story.

“If they brought charges based on my investigations, they’d have to arrest the entire provincial government,” said Mochalov, as what remained of his abandoned hog barn’s roof crumbled around him.

What started as an attempt to end the legal struggles over his farm has become an all-consuming mission. The newspaper’s high costs — each print run costs $3,150 — have essentially forced Mochalov to give up his farm: He sold all his livestock and equipment years ago, and rents out some of the buildings to local services like banks and post offices.

The rest lack heat and electricity, if they are still standing at all. One barn is filled with rotting bales of hay; a corrugated iron shed next to it has nearly collapsed.

The change was a dramatic one for Mochalov, who left school at 16 and now at 38 sports the thickly callused hands of a provincial farmer, fight corruption.”

He put his faith in Dmitry Medvedev, who served as president from 2004 to 2008 when Putin had to step aside because of term limits — but was soon disappointed.

“He promised to crack down on corruption when he was elected, and I believed him!” laughs Mochalov. “I’ve never considered myself a member of the opposition. It’s about sorting out what’s wrong with our country — it’s plagued by corruption.”

“I’ve never considered myself a member of the opposition. It’s about sorting out what’s wrong with our country — it’s plagued by corruption.”

Eduard Mochalov, editor of The Bribe newspaper and has a gap-toothed grin. He once employed 150 workers from 11 surrounding villages and ran a thriving concern trading in pigs, cows, sheep and horses.

But seven years ago, Mochalov says, he failed to pay a policeman as big a bribe as he wanted. Shortly afterward, men burst into his office with armed guards and presented tax papers supposedly showing that Mochalov had sold them the farm. When he filed a legal appeal, prosecutors filed charges against him instead, accusing him of having obtained credit illegally to buy the farm.

After spending eight months in jail awaiting trial, Mochalov was released on time served and later succeeded in restoring his legal ownership. By then, however, the farm had already fallen into disrepair.

Mochalov set about trying to bring the raiders to justice. First he tried the legal route, but to no avail. Appeals to Putin and the government also produced nothing. Then he staged protests, including the 2007 Kremlin fire stunt, which caused little physical harm aside from a few scars on his hands. The disused barn where he stores newspapers is full of banners left over from demonstrations imploring pro-Kremlin political parties to “help us Russia is considered to be one of the most corrupt countries in the world. Transparency International’s Corruption Perceptions Index ranks Russia 143rd out of 183 countries, level with Nigeria and below Pakistan.

The Levada survey that showed a dramatic jump in public perceptions of official greed polled 1,559 people in person over five days in June; it had a margin of error of plus or minus 3.4 percent.

Mochalov puts the newspaper together in a poky office smelling of stale varnish at the back of a truck repair shop. He prints it in a neighboring province, since no printer in Chuvashia will go near it. He has only two colleagues, a journalist and a village woman who helps hand the paper out at factories, and he writes many of the articles himself under pseudonyms.

To his frustration, however, no charges have been filed against the officials exposed in The Bribe. Russian officials frequently turn a blind eye to corruption stories in the press.

The Bribe has nonetheless struck a chord in Chuvashia, whose president earlier this year proposed creating a blacklist of print media “that write untruths.” Several officials mentioned in the newspaper have sued him for damaging their reputation. In court, Mochalov, who says he cannot afford a lawyer, defends himself by insisting proceedings be carried out in his native Chuvash language and storming out.

“All of the government knows about what he’s writing,” Alexei Glukhov, a local human rights activist, said. “So they try to make him look like a crazy village person who sets himself on fire, and Eduard favors the poetic aspect over the legal side. He has his own, idio-syncratic way of doing things.”

In a sense, Mochalov has always been something of a performer. He began his campaigned to get his farm back by blocking off a highway with tractors. Earlier this year he spent 15 days in jail for throwing eggs at government buildings at a protest.

That unusual style is earning him fans far and wide. Last month, he traveled to Moscow to meet Alexei Navalny, one of the main leaders of the opposition, who made his name through his own efforts to expose corruption in the government and state-owned companies. In messages posted on Twitter, Navalny described Mochalov and his journalist assistant as “incredibly cool people” and “real heroes,” and wondered how he has “managed not to get whacked yet.”

Mochalov says he is undeterred by any possible reprisal, legal or otherwise. Recently, prosecutors began to investigate a seemingly innocuous article about the Chuvash language for allegedly inciting racial hatred, although no charges have been filed. He also shrugs off the threat of physical violence. Russia is the ninth most dangerous country in the world to be a journalist, according to the Committee to Protect Journalists, a New York-based watchdog. Since the collapse of the Soviet Union, 53 journalists have been murdered.

Abortion

The new data from the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention found that both the number and rate of abortions fell 5 percent in 2009, the most recent statistics available from most states.

Nearly all states report abortion numbers to the federal government, but it’s voluntary. A few states — including California, which has the largest population and largest number of abortion providers — don’t send in data. Experts believe there are more than 1 million abortions performed nationwide each year, but because of the incomplete reporting, the CDC had reports of about 785,000 in 2009.

For the sake of consistency, the CDC focused on the numbers from 43 states and two cities — those that have been sending in data without interruption for at least 10 years. The researchers found that abortions per 1,000 women of child-bearing age fell from about 16 in 2008 to roughly 15 in 2009. That translates to nearly 38,000 fewer abortions in one year.

Mississippi had the lowest abortion rate, at 4 per 1,000 women of child-bearing age. The state also had only a couple of abortion providers, and has the nation’s highest teen birth rate. New York was highest, with abortion rates roughly eight times higher than Mississippi’s. New York is second only to California in number of abortion providers.

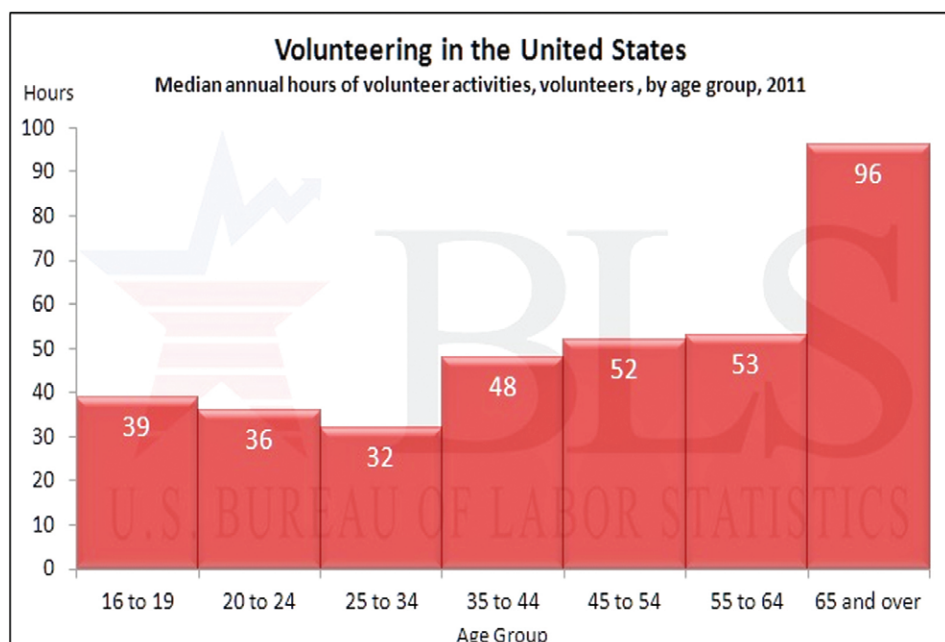

Nationally since 2000, the number of reported abortions has dropped

NY Judge Rejects 9/11 Suit Against United Airlines

BY LARRY NEUMEISTER
Associated Press

NEW YORK • United Airlines cannot be held responsible for the hijacking of an American Airlines flight and the collapse of a third World Trade Center building after the twin towers fell in the Sept. 11 attacks, a federal judge ruled Wednesday.

The airline was not responsible for the collapse of 7 World Trade Center because it had no connection to American Airlines Flight 11 or its hijackers, except that it had shared responsibility for a security checkpoint in Portland, Maine, that screened two of the terrorists, U.S. District Judge Alvin Hellerstein said. Regardless of their air carrier, all passengers at the time passed through the checkpoint.

Terrorists flew two commercial jets into the trade center towers on 9/11. Among them were Mohamed Atta and Abdul Aziz al Omari, who had passed through the Portland airport on their way to Boston, where they boarded Flight 11. Some debris from that jet's crash into the north tower pierced the facade of 7 World Trade Center, starting fires that caused the 47-story building, erected in 1987, to fall seven hours later.

The corporation that owns 7 World Trade Center sued various aviation defendants, including United, saying their negligence led to the building's destruction.

The judge said United could not have foreseen the chain of events that led to the building's collapse and bore no responsibility for ticketing, passenger check-in and boarding for the flight Atta and al Omari took to Boston, much less responsibility for the operation of the flight itself.

Other than shared authority for the lone security screening checkpoint at Portland International Jetport, "United had no connection to Flight 11 or its hijackers," the judge said.

He said it was "not within United's range of apprehension that terrorists would slip through" the Maine checkpoint, fly to Boston, proceed through another airline's security screening, board that air carrier's flight, hijack it and crash it into a skyscraper, causing another building to collapse.

Bud Perrone, a spokesman for Silverstein Properties, said the plaintiffs were disappointed by the ruling but looked forward to their prospects in a different lawsuit against United over security lapses that led terrorists to hijack United Flight 175.

"We are determined and look forward to presenting the facts before a jury, which will decide whether the defendants' insurance companies should finally be forced to pay up in order to finish the rebuilding of the World Trade Center," he said.

A message left with a lawyer for United Airlines was not immediately returned.

In dismissing a similar claim against Consolidated Edison Co. a year ago, the judge said it was unreasonable to think Con Ed could foresee the "strange, improbable, and attenuated chain of events that led to 7 World Trade Center's collapse."

A 52-story building now stands in place of 7 World Trade Center.

Girl Shot on Bus Was 'Loving, Helpful'

BY SUZETTE LABOY
Associated Press

MIAMI • The mother of a 13-year-old girl who was shot and killed while riding a school bus with her younger sister says the child was “fun loving, helpful, a happy girl,” according to a statement released by the family.

A 15-year-old boy was in juvenile detention Wednesday charged with manslaughter after police say he took the gun out of a backpack and showed it to other students during the ride to school. Investigators say he fired it once in an apparent accident, striking Police investigators stand outside a school bus after a child was shot early Tuesday in Homestead, Fla.

Lourdes Guzman.

Guzman, known as Jina to her family and friends, died later died at a Miami hospital.

“Feels like just yesterday I saw her running around in her Pamper, dancing and modeling for the camera,” mother Ady Guzman said. “Times and moments spent with Jina are memories I will cherish and keep in my heart forever.”

The boy was also charged with carrying a concealed weapon. He waived his right to appear in court Wednesday morning and will remain in a juvenile detention center. He is not being identified by The Associated Press because of his age.

Messages left with juvenile division officials and the alleged shooter’s mother Wednesday were not immediately returned.

Police have not released further information about the shooting. Miami-Dade Police spokeswoman Aida Fina-Milan said based on the charges “it appears to have been an accident.”

Eight other children, including Guzman’s 7-year-old sister, were on the bus but were not harmed. Authorities took the children and the bus driver to a police station to be interviewed.

Guzman attended the charter middle school Palm Glades Preparatory Academy. Her sister went to nearby Summerville Advantage Academy.

The teen suspect attended Somerset Academy.

M23 Rebels Vow to Take Congo

BY MELANIE GOUBY
Associated Press

GOMA, Congo • The M23 rebels pressed ahead with their seizure of territory and towns in eastern Congo on Wednesday and said they intend to topple the government of President Joseph Kabila.

The rebels took control of the eastern Congo town of Sake in a bid to move toward the provincial capital of Bukavu.

“Kabila has to go. We want our country back,” said M23 Col. Vianney Kazarama to cheers from thousands gathered at the stadium in Goma, which was seized by the rebels on Tuesday. “We are now going to Kinshasa. No one will divide this country.”

Nearly 3,000 Congolese army soldiers and police defected to the rebels in Goma on Wednesday and turned in their weapons at the stadium rally.

Even as the rebels consolidated their gains, the presidents of Congo, Rwanda and Uganda called on them to give up the territory they now control.

The M23 is made up of hundreds of officers who deserted the Congo army in April this year. Neighboring Rwanda has supplied trained soldiers and weapons, according to a report by United Nations experts to be published Friday.

The speed with which the M23 has seized Goma and the surrounding countryside, rich in minerals, exposes the weakness of President Joseph Kabila’s government, 978 miles to the west in Kinshasa, say experts.

“It’s a setback for Kabila. He wasn’t even capable of reforming the army and the fall of Goma demonstrated that,” said Felix Bafillemba. “It marks the beginning of the end for Kabila’s regime.”

Strewn with bodies, burned out vehicles and abandoned tanks, the road between Goma and Sake showed evidence of Tuesday’s fighting.

M23 soldiers in vehicles patrolled the streets of Sake, 17 miles south of Goma. As in Goma, most residents accepted the rebels’ presence.

“We only want peace,” said Innocent Rumabo in Sake.

Other resident complained of rapes carried out Tuesday night.

“I know two women who were raped, there are more in the area,” said one Goma resident who insisted on anonymity for fear of retaliation.

In neighboring Uganda, the presidents of Uganda, Rwanda and Congo resolved to put pressure on the M23 rebels to give up territory they have captured, according to a statement released at the end of the emergency talks.

“Even if there are legitimate grievances by the mutineering group known as M23, they cannot accept the expansion of this war or entertain the idea of overthrowing the legitimate government of (Congo) or undermining its authority,” said presidents Joseph Kabila of Congo, Paul Kagame of Rwanda and Yoweri Museveni of Uganda, in a statement issued late Wednesday.

“Therefore the M23 must immediately stop this offensive and pull out of Goma,” said the presidents’ statement issued in Kampala. This resolution was to be immediately communicated to the M23 leadership, the statement said.

Kabila said he was willing to negotiate directly with the M23 rebels, a reversal from his previous refusal to talk with the rebels.

FOOD STAMP CHALLENGE

ASSOCIATED PRESS

Newark Mayor Cory Booker, right, speaks during a news conference Oct. 29 at the Office of Emergency Management in Newark, N.J. Booker says he plans to honor a Twitter challenge and live on food stamps for at least a week. In a Twitter exchange Sunday Booker and a user named TwitWit discussed government funding for school meals. Booker suggested they both try living on food stamps for a week or month.

NJ Mayor to Honor Twitter Promise

BY KATIE ZEZIMA
Associated Press

NEWARK, N.J. • Newark Mayor Cory Booker said he and a Twitter follower will try living on food stamps for at least a week.

The idea stemmed from a back-and-forth conversation between Booker and a woman who goes by the name TwitWit and uses the handle @MWadeNC. They began talking about the idea Sunday night while discussing the role the government should play in funding school breakfast and lunch programs.

Booker said Tuesday he intends to follow through with the plan. TwitWit said it is “great idea” but wants more information on how it will be carried out.

During their Twitter exchange, TwitWit wrote, “nutrition is not the responsibility of the government.”

The conversation soon changed to food stamps.

“why is there a family today that is “too poor to afford breakfast”? are they not already receiving food stamps?” TwitWit wrote.

“Lets you and I try to live on food stamps in New Jersey (high cost of living) and feed a family for a week or month. U game?” Booker responded. “sure, Mayor, I’m game,” TwitWit wrote back.

“Great. Lets do this. I hope you live in New Jersey. Lets film it and see how we do,” Booker responded. He later wrote, “We will have to get a referee — DM me your number so we can see if we can work out details.”

Booker, a prolific Twitter user who has 1.2 million followers, said Tuesday evening he is committed to living on the equivalent of food stamps, but could not say how he will approximate the benefits, execute the idea or how long it will last.

The average monthly food stamp benefit was $133.26 per person in New Jersey in fiscal year 2011, according to the U.S. Department of Agriculture.

“We’re going to set up the rules,” Booker told reporters. “And that’s what we’re researching right now. This will not be a gimmick or a stunt.”

Booker said he wants the challenge to be a chance “for us to grow in compassion and understanding” and dispel stereotypes.

In an interview with The Associated Press Tuesday night, TwitWit said she is a 39-year-old married mother of two from North Carolina. She spoke to the AP on condition of anonymity because she said she has received threats since her Twitter discussion about food stamps.

She said she is willing to participate in the challenge but wants to know the ground rules before committing. She has not heard from Booker’s office and is upset she has not been included in the research process.

“To hear he’s planning and setting things up, it makes me feel like I’m a little bit of a prop in the game,” she said.

She thinks she and Booker should approximate living on food stamps for a month.

TwitWit said she does not oppose food stamps. But if more taxpayer money is allocated for food stamps, she believes, more people will require them.

“There is going to be a lot more of us needing those food stamps if it doesn’t stop,” she said.

She thinks many people are mischaracterizing her conversation with Booker, which initially centered on funding school meals.

“I don’t have a vendetta,” she said, and urged people to work together. “I’m looking at things from a different angle.”

TwitWit, who describes herself on Twitter as an Army veteran who is “fighting against any and all forms of socialism/communism,” said her own family is barely getting by and is “six months away from being in debt and on welfare ourselves.” She is between jobs and said her husband is in the computer field.

“Most of us are in the same boat,” she said. “Some of us just aren’t getting the assistance.”

This is not her first TwitWit interaction with Booker. She said Booker started following her in 2007. She had never heard of him before.

Mom: Movie Attack Plot Suspect 'Born Different'

BY HEATHER HOLLINGSWORTH
Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. • The mother who reported her son to police after he amassed what she feared were weapons to attack a southwest Missouri movie theater during a “Twilight” showing said he had recently asked her if he was a failure.

Tricia Lammers made her first public statements Tuesday since the arrest last week of her 20-year-old son, Blaec. Authorities said he admitted that he was planning to attack the theater in Bolivar and then a nearby Walmart store, where he’d been Investigators determined he recently purchased two assault rifles and 400 rounds of ammunition.

Lammers

During a news conference at the National Alliance for Mental Illness in Springfield, Tricia Lammers said her son had undergone inpatient treatment. She said her son has shown signs of Asperger’s syndrome, borderline personality disorder and other conditions.

“He didn’t ask to be born different. He grew up his whole life in (his sister) Kristyn’s shadow. He wanted to be successful and be somebody,” she said, KOLR-TV reported. “Just two weeks ago he asked me — both my kids still call me mommy — he said, ‘Mommy, do you think I’m a failure?’ I said, ‘No, Blaec, I don’t.’”

She added that she loves her son, but that she loves her community just as much.

According to the arrest report from the 2009 incident, which was released earlier Tuesday, Blaec Lammers went to the Walmart store with a knife and a rubber mask looking for an “easy victim” after watching the horror film “Halloween.” Lammers, then 17, said watching the main character killing people “got him to thinking,” the arrest report said.

Lammers told authorities he watched a store clerk for more than two hours. He said he was planning to follow the clerk into a storage room and kill him when he heard his name over the public address system and his father calling out to him, according to the report. No charges were filed in that case.

Lammers was arrested Nov. 15 after his mother contacted police, telling them she was concerned that her son “may have intentions of shooting people” during the opening weekend of the final installment of the popular “Twilight” series.

According to a police, Lammers’ mother said she believed he had amassed weapons similar to those used by the gunman who attacked a theater in Aurora, Colo., in July during a showing of the latest Batman movie. That attack killed 12 people.

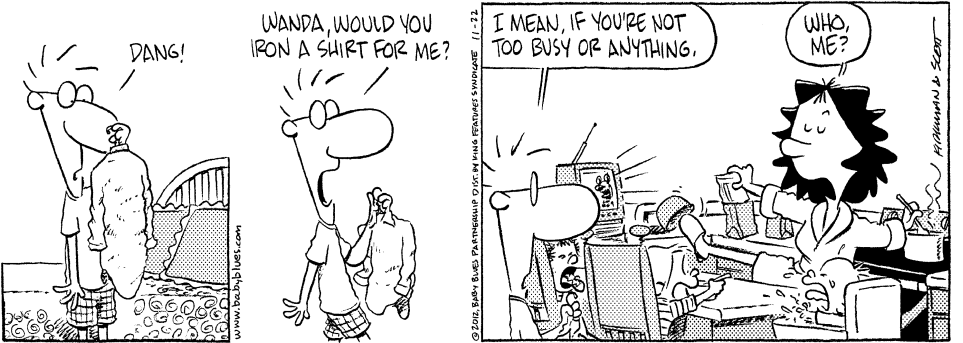

Lammers was questioned Nov. 15 and authorities say he told them he bought tickets to a Sunday “Twilight” screening in Bolivar and planned to shoot people there.

TEN ADVENTURES

... for a southern Idaho winter

1 Fat Bikes

A new way to ride the snow: a bicycle perched on monster fat tires.

At nearly 4 inches wide, these tires are four times the width of road bike tires. And with just 10 to 30 pounds of pressure in each tire, they allow rider Mark Carnes to float on top of powder that regular mountain bikes would sink in.

"I rode to the top of Quigley Canyon the other day and it was like riding a monster truck — it blew through everything. Even as big as they are, they have all-aluminum frames so they only weigh about 30 pounds," he said last winter.

Fat bikes, as they're called, are somewhat new to Idaho. But they're thriving in Alaska, where mountain bikers tinkered to come up with the ultimate bike to ride the 1,049-mile Iditarod sled dog race course from Anchorage to Nome.

Want to try a fat bike? Backwoods Mountain Sports, at the corner of Main Street and Warm Springs Road in Ketchum, offers demos; 726-8818. Or in Twin Falls, stop by the Spoke & Wheel; 734-6033.

When Old Man Winter delivers snow, southern Idahoans know how to make the most of it.

Snowmobile and cross-country ski trails abound. Four ski resorts vie for the downhill crowd in south-central Idaho. And snow sports aren't what they used to be: Snowkiting and fat bikes have added to the diversity, and ski resorts are building new features to boost the fun factor for snowboarders.

Please, let it snow.

2 Snowtube

At Magic Mountain, expect five lanes of tubing fun — more than 600 feet in each. It also boasts the area's only full-service lift for tubing: Simply hand your tube's strap to the lift operator and sit back and enjoy the ride to the top.

At Sun Valley Resort this season, the tubing park was moved from Dollar Mountain to Lower River Run on Bald Mountain.

Other tubing hills to consider:

- A hill between Gooding and Fairfield on Idaho Highway 46 is easy to locate — when the road is open. The trick to this hill is in the timing. At least two to three feet of snow must have fallen to provide enough of a blanket to cover the brush and provide a good run, but if too much snow falls or drifts, the roadway may be closed south of the hill. Drive 18 miles north of Gooding on Highway 46 and look for the parking area.

- In the 1950s, military maneuvers used to be practiced on a plot across from Balanced Rock east of Castleford. Today, Tank Hill is a great place for tubing. As long as the hill is covered in plenty of the white stuff, the terrain is steep and easily accessible. The area also is used by dirt bikers, so be on the lookout for wheel ruts in your tubing path. From Buhl, take Main Street west and turn right on Burley Avenue, then follow the signs for about 15 miles.

- Several trails, restroom facilities, a warming lodge and picnic tables make Diamondfield Jack Snowplay Area widely used for tubing. From Hansen, turn south on Rock Creek Road and continue a mile past Magic Mountain Resort to the large parking lot on your right.

2 Snowshoe

People snowshoe in the South Hills near Magic Mountain in 2011.

Can you walk? Then you can snowshoe.

"It's growing in popularity, especially with the older crowd," said Ivana Radlova, director of the Sun Valley Nordic and Snowshoe Center. "They are discovering that snowshoeing is great recreation and exercise while offering a unique, fun way to get out and enjoy the outdoors."

A few places to try:

- Blaine County Recreation District maintains more than 100 miles of Nordic trails, and many are open to snowshoers. Although a pass is required (one-day adult snowshoe passes are $5; www.bcrd.org), purchasing one gives you access to some of the finest trails in the state.

For instance, the North Valley Trails cover almost 115 kilometers of terrain north of Ketchum and Sun Valley.

- An easy-to-manuever one-mile loop behind Magic Mountain, south of Hansen, provides a great landscape for trying snowshoes. The loops have tree-lined flat stretches and only two short but steep ascents. The High Desert Nordic Club maintains these trails and others in the area; skihdna.org.

- In winter, Craters of the Moon National Monument waives its $8 entrance fee and turns its loop drive into trails for both skiing and snowshoeing. Reserve your spot in an adventure snowshoe program on Saturdays in January and February — or, school groups can sign up for a winter ecology and snowshoeing program at the monument; 208-527-1335.

- At City of Rocks National Reserve, snowshoers can explore more than 22 miles in City of Rocks and 12 miles in Castle Rocks; parksandrecreation.idaho.gov/parks/castle-rocks, www.nps.gov/ciro/index.htm, or 824-5901.

And mark your calendar for two special events at City of Rocks and Castle Rocks: A valentine excursion Feb. 14-15 will package snowshoe adventure with food and lodging. And Feb. 18 is a winter day camp activity for children younger than 12. Details on both: 208-824-5916.

3 Snowkite

Snowkiting or kite skiing — where riders harness themselves to a giant kite, letting it pull them over the snow and through the air — is one of the fastest growing extreme sports. The kite can take a rider up a mountain or across a snow-covered plain, harnessing the power of the wind.

Those who kite ski usually start with a small kite, steering it by a bar where two strings are attached. As they progress, they advance to larger kites, some up to 275 square feet.

Popular places for kite skiing include the flat alfalfa fields south of Bellevue, open mountain meadows north of Ketchum or the Snowmobile Park at milepost 131 along U.S. Highway 20 west of Fairfield.

The Camas Prairie provides the perfect setting for the sport. James Kreyssig said in 2010: "Wind, rolling hills and a spacious area void of trees and power lines are major components of this sport. I understand people as far away as Europe have heard of Camas County."

Snowboard

Snowboarding gained popularity in the 1960s and entered the mainstream after becoming an Olympic sport in 1998. Snowboarders, however, have a culture all their own.

"They're cooler, definitely cooler than skiers," teen James Port said at Pomerelle last winter; he also snowboards at Sun Valley's Dollar Mountain.

Looking laid back but getting attention at the same time is an art. Some snow-boarders can do that by meandering lazily down the hill in a bright green get-up.

"It's cool to look cool," Michael Curtis of Twin Falls said last winter. Even better: Do it while riding a rail, flipping a 180 or making mad hits.

Curtis likes the terrain parks at Pomerelle and Sun Valley. "They aren't for every snowboarder but there are more of us using the parks, so I like that more resorts are developing them."

Ice Fishing

Whoever said fishing was for warm weather obviously hasn't tried ice fishing — an exciting, albeit cold, angling experience.

Idaho offers a number of places to ice fish, and one of the region's most popular is Magic Reservoir. If you're in Twin Falls, try something closer to home: Dierkes Lakes, inside the Snake River Canyon near Shoshone Falls. Wherever you go, check first with the Idaho Department of Fish and Game (fishandgame.idaho.gov/public/fish/) for fishing reports and a guide to ice fishing on lakes and reservoirs.

Remember:

- Check for thickness before venturing onto the ice at any lake. Don't walk onto ice less than 4 inches thick; some prefer 6 inches.
- Stay away from milky-colored ice; clear ice is strongest.
- Drill as you go, checking for thickness.
- Bring ice picks and rope.
- Be cautious of weather patterns.

9 Nordic

Magic Mountain south of Hansen has excellent trails for cross-country skiing.

The High Desert Nordic Association regularly skis several trails within the South Hills Cross Country Ski Trails system there. A major perk: Day use is free. For a detailed trail map, visit the group's Web site at skihdna.org.

Another popular place to cross-country ski is the Blaine County Recreation District's series of Nordic trails three miles north of Ketchum. There is a day fee, but trails are suitable for novice to expert.

An underutilized gem is the seven-mile main-road-turned-ski-loop in winter at Craters of the Moon National Monument and Preserve, where skiers can watch for signs of wildlife along the trail. To the side of the groomed trails, you may see rabbit, fox, coyote and red squirrel tracks. The monument, southwest of Arco, waives its $8-per-vehicle entry fee during winter.

10 Bike

Try snow biking and you'll be going downhill on a bike that has skis instead of tires.

But don't worry. An instructor at Magic Mountain Resort, which rents snow bikes for the day, will teach you how to maneuver before you head up the slope. Instruction is mandatory, said Suzette Miller, co-owner of Magic Mountain.

"We get a lot of couples up here," she said. "What's more romantic than sitting by a fire together, breathing the fresh air, being in the lodge?" Nothing, except maybe riding the ski lift together, snow bikes in tow.

You can rent a snow bike for $35 a day; one-hour instruction included. Contact: Gary or Suzette Miller at 736-7669, or magicmountainresort.com.

8 Ski

This fall, Hollywood actor Bruce Willis donated Soldier Mountain Ski Area to a recently formed nonprofit organization, which is doing repairs and renovations to prepare for the season. Will Varin, one of the group's five board members, said they're also working on implementing cat skiing in the backcountry to give people access to ungroomed and more advanced terrain powder.

"We are really focusing on getting the ski school and ski programs back on the mountain," Varin said.

Soldier Mountain's target opening date is Dec. 20 but depends on snowfall. It's 10 miles north of Fairfield on Soldier Creek Road.

Daily lift tickets are $35 (tax included) for adults; $19 for youth (ages 7-17) and seniors (62-69); and free for children (6 and younger) and seniors (70 and older). A single lift ride is $10, and there is a military and college discount of $5 off any regular ticket. Also available are season passes (for example, $289 for an adult if purchased before Nov. 30, and $349 after that date) and four- or eight-day punch cards for skiing and snowboarding.

Information: soldiermountain.com or 208-764-2526.

It's not quite your own private Idaho, but it's close.

Remember when skiing was skiing? We do. Skiing isn't pricey equipment, crowded slopes or $20 lodge burgers. Skiing is having the space to be free. Skiing is hitting the glades & bowls in your jeans. It's taking a cat to the freshest powder, tailgating in the parking lot and s'mores by the fire. It's the natural beauty of Idaho in winter. Skiing... real skiing... is Soldier Mountain.

DOLLAR MOUNTAIN HAS ITS DAY

BY KAREN BOSSICK
For the Times-News

Sun Valley Details

SUN VALLEY • Dollar Mountain has become the Coney Island of skiing in Idaho.

The smaller mountain lay in the shadows of its bigger sister — the world-famous Bald Mountain — for years. But last year it became the go-to playground as Sun Valley Resort endowed it with a super pipe and added terrain park rails and jibs to those it had built the year before.

This year the ski hill gets even more attractions as Sun Valley expands the super pipe, adds a dozen more terrain park features and builds a skier/boarder cross course designed with family fun in mind.

The super pipe will be expanded from 18 feet to 22 feet to meet Olympic specifications for Sun Valley athletes training for the 2014 Winter Olympics in Sochi, Russia, said Jack Sibbach, director of marketing for Sun Valley. The pipe also attracts freestyle competitors from Bogus Basin in Boise, Twin Falls and even out of state.

The pipe is one of only a few pipes in the country that meet Olympic standards, said Mike Bettera, marketing director for Snow Park Technologies, which designs pipes and rail features for ski resorts throughout North America.

The terrain park also features two dozen new rails, bringing the total number of play features to 76. One new feature resembles a roller coaster on rails, said Mike Fitzpatrick, assistant director of marketing for Sun Valley.

And the skier/boarder cross course will be extended and designed to make it more family-friendly.

Children and adults can learn to ski or board the new features through special lessons, including Dollar Mountain's Sunday in Sun Valley plans to kick off its 77th winter season on Thanksgiving Day, weather permitting. The resort hopes to have limited terrain open on Baldy and Dollar Mountain and will open additional terrain as fast as possible.

Early: Passes for Bald Mountain will be discounted through Dec. 16: $66 for adults, $50 for seniors 65 and older, $48 for military and $38 for children 12 and younger. Dollar Mountain passes are $39 for adults, $35 for seniors, $32 for children and $30 for military. Children 4 and younger ski for free on Dollar Mountain with a paying adult.

Regular: During the regular season through March 31, Bald Mountain passes are $95 for adults, $66 for seniors, $60 for military and $54 for children. Dollar passes are $54 for adults, $45 for seniors, $40 for military and $39 for children. Late-season discounts kick back in again April 1.

Discounts: There are discounts for half-day tickets and for those who have season passes at other resorts. Sun Valley also participates in the 5th Grade Ski or Ride Free Program. And Magic Valley residents can buy cards entitling them to discounts on lift passes.

Information: Check sunvalley.com for lodging and pass specials and specials for college students. Or call 800-786-8259.

the Park.

Those who prefer to watch the high-flying hijinks will enjoy the Rev Tour competition in March. The competition ranks just below the popular X Games, Sibbach said. And collegiate championships will be held on Dollar Mountain, March 4-9.

A powder day on Baldy.

The tubing park, meanwhile, will be moved from Dollar Mountain to Lower River Run on Bald Mountain to allow for the extension of the family cross.

The old half pipe on Lower Warm Springs has been filled in, which will allow skiers and boarders to make turns below Race Arena again.

Two new Adventures Trails have been added to those that were created last year: The Pine Marten Plunge will weed its way through the woods below Seattle Ridge Lodge as skiers make their way to Broadway Avenue. The Deer Hollow Trail will veer off Gun Tower Lane, which ferries skiers to Seattle Ridge.

The Red-Headed Woodpecker Trail on Seattle Ridge, the Huckleberry Bear Trail off Olympic Ridge and the Flume in Frenchman's Gulch were designed last year with children and teens in mind. But the narrow trails with lots of dips and twists and turns proved yee haw fun — and challenge — for adults, as well.

Skiers and non-skiers alike can enter weekly drawings to ride The Beast — Sun Valley's snow groomer.

Dennis Harper, a longtime Burley farmer, will lead free snow-making tours for skiers and boarders, likely on Saturday mornings.

New this year: Ski Patrol 101. Skiers and boarders of intermediate level or above are invited to enter a drawing, with the winner and a friend getting the opportunity to join the Ski Patrol at its Friday-morning safety meeting. The guests will get to watch the sun come up from the top of Bald Mountain and make first tracks with patrollers as they set up safety fencing and do other tasks necessary to get the mountain open.

"We're not looking for candidates for ski patrol because it takes so much medical training. But it is an exciting opportunity to be around the avalanche dogs and ski patrol," said Ski Patrol supervisor Mike Lloyd.

Also new this year: The opportunity to ride the chairlifts up Bald Mountain to ski the backcountry with guides from Sawtooth Mountain Guides.

Trips will be offered off Seattle Ridge down into the Greenhorn Gulch area a few miles south of Ketchum, said Ketchum District ranger Kurt Nelson. The guides are also permitted to take paying guests off the Warm Springs side just to the south and west of The Burn, an area burned during the 2007 Castle Rock Fire.

The backcountry tours are out of bounds and therefore not under the control of Sun Valley Resort and its ski patrol, cautioned Lloyd. "If you get hurt back there, you will have to get out of there yourself or rely on Blaine County Search and Rescue to come get you, as our patrollers are busy assuring safety in-bounds."

Experience Idaho Powder on a Snowmobile

TIMES-NEWS

Want to explore Idaho's backcountry on a snowmobile? Try these trails on for size:

- Diamondfield Jack Snow Play Area in the South Hills groomed more than 200 miles of groomed and marked trails on Sawtooth National Forest and Bureau of Land Management land. Two 85-car parking lots provide access to the trails. From Twin Falls, take U.S. Highway 30 east to Hansen. Turn south on Rock Creek Road and drive about 28 miles.

Information: 208-737-3200.

- Howell Canyon and Mount Harrison near Albion provide a number of opportunities for snowmobiling.

From Burley, follow Idaho Highway 81 east to Declo; drive south on Idaho Highway 77 past Albion and turn right on Howell Canyon Road.

Information and maps: 208-678-0430.

- City of Rocks National Reserve provides snowmobiling on roads when weather permits. City of Rocks encompasses 14,407 acres renowned for scenic, geologic and historic significance. In November through April 15, the visitor center is open weekdays (except holidays).

Information and directions: 208-824-5901 or www.nps.gov/ciro.

- Gooding County Snow Park, located at the Gooding-Camas county line, is 20 miles north of town and includes 150 square miles of BLM and private land. There are plenty of riding opportunities here. It's used primarily for sledding, and there are no groomed snowmobile trails.

Information and directions: 208-732-7200.

- Fairfield's snowmobile trails comprise 220 miles in Camas County. Snowmobilers can warm up at the shelter north of Wells Summit. The area provides quality groomed trails and plenty of open play areas.

Information and directions: 208-764-3202.

- Lowman Area Snowmobile Trails are a little different, a little more ... lonely. A scenic ride, yes, but it's through isolated areas, so make sure you have plenty of fuel and provisions to make it from Lowman to Stanley.

Before visiting, contact the Lowman Ranger District for information and to check whether the trails have been groomed; (208) 259-3361.

Planetary Alignments Are Nothing To Get Worried About

It was inevitable. With a mere month remaining before the bally-hooed cataclysm/cosmic consciousness shift/what-have-you precipitated by the “end” of the Mayan calendar on Dec. 21, e-mails are making the rounds purporting to provide evidence of impending events.

Sky Calendar through Dec. 12

Planets
One hour after sunset:
• Mars: SW, very low
One hour before sunrise:
• Mercury: ESE, very low
• Venus: SE, very low
• Saturn: SE, low
• Jupiter: WNW, very low
Moon: Full moon 11/28, 7:46 a.m. (smallest of 2012); very close to Jupiter 11/28 (p.m.); last quarter 12/6, 8:31 a.m.
Other data: Deep penumbral lunar eclipse 11/28, pre-dawn: upper right edge of moon will appear slightly darker (greatest

One particularly silly e-mail depicts Mercury, Venus and Saturn in a perfect line above the Great Pyramids in Giza, one hour before sunrise on Dec. 3. It further states that such an alignment occurs only every 2,737 years.

Planetary alignment is a staple of the apocalypse prophecy business. An alignment on May 5, 2000, (within the same year as Y2K!) was supposed to produce a variety of geologic upheavals. Before that, the “Jupiter Effect” was supposed to induce the San Andreas Fault to cut loose on March 10, 1982, when all the planets lay on the same side of the sun.

The fact that both dates passed without incident seems not to have fazed the doomsayers.

In fact, Mercury, Venus and Saturn will be visible in the pre-dawn sky of Dec. 3. Unlike the e-mail’s graphic, they won’t appear equally bright and won’t lie in a perfect, near-horizontal line (from either Giza or Idaho). Looking east-southeast around 5:30 a.m., Venus will be the first thing you notice, brilliant white. To the upper right of Venus is Saturn; to the lower left is Mercury. Mercury, dimmer than Venus, will slightly outshine Saturn. In both Egypt and Idaho, they’ll lie in a slightly doglegged, near-vertical line.

There was indeed a similarly tight grouping of these three planets 2,737 years ago, with Mars in their midst to boot. But that was hardly the last time Mercury, Venus and Saturn lay near one another: On Oct. 4, 2011, they spanned only 9 degrees.

Next column: Keeping count of astronomical cycles.

WINTER WEATHER OUTLOOK

The big players for this winter are going to be El Niño or the lack thereof. It’s going to be what we call a more neutral winter out in the Pacific. That means neither an El Niño nor a La Niña.

One of the key factors forecasters look at in determining long-range weather outlooks are the temperatures off the coast of Peru in the Pacific. Those temperatures are important in determining the upcoming weather pattern.

Unlike the summer, where we had a large area of high pressure over the Western part of the United States, we should see that high pressure shift up into Alaska, and that would allow for colder temperatures.

Because of those factors your KMVT Weather Authority forecast team is predicting cooler than average temperatures across the Pacific Northwest. The eastern half of the country should see warmer than normal temperatures. As far as rain and snow goes, we think we will see a normal year with an increased risk of storms impacting southern Idaho during November and December.

Keep in mind: This is a forecast. Just because we’re calling for colder than average temperatures this winter and even average precipitation, doesn’t mean we’re not going to see those periods where temperatures could be a little bit above average and we could have a few dry streaks throughout the winter.

Brian Neudorff is chief meteorologist for KMVT-TV and KTWT Fox 14. He can be reached at BrianNeudorff@neuhoffmedia.com or 208-733-1100, ext. 3047.

Skiers Will Glide Down Pomerelle This Winter

A skier makes her way down a run at Pomerelle Mountain Resort near Albion in 2011. This year the resort has expanded its snow-making capability, but temperatures need to drop below 26 degrees to use it.

BY TETONA DUNLAP
tdunlap@magicvalley.com

Pomerelle Details

ALBION • Soon the snowy landscape of Pomerelle Mountain Resort, nestled in the Sawtooth National Forest, will be teeming with skiers and snowboarders.

For months the employees here have prepared for opening day, which is usually mid-November, depending on how cold the weather gets.

Because if Mother Nature does not brew up a snowstorm, the resort on Mount Harrison has machinery that can.

Jody Burrows, Pomerelle spokeswoman, said this year the resort has expanded its snow-making capability, but in order to use it the temperatures need to drop below 26 degrees.

Burrows said Pomerelle has also purchased new snow-grooming equipment for this season. The grooming allows skiers and snowboarders to turn with ease.

Another draw to the mountain is the Magic Carpet — a conveyer belt ski lift that takes beginners uphill.

"It's got to be the greatest invention," Burrows said. "You stand on it, and it's easier for the little kids."

But if you need instruction on how to glide and fly over those flakes, there will be new faces on the mountain ready to teach you how to stay upright on your skis and board.

Snow Sport School director Barry Whiting has been recruiting new instructors for the ski and snowboard schools. Ideally, Whiting said, he would like to recruit 10 to 12 new instructors each for skiing and snowboarding.

Pomerelle Mountain Resort season passes are $450 for the first family member; $410 for the second family member; $370 for the third family member; and $330 for the fourth family member and each one after. Children 6 and younger can receive a complimentary season pass when accompanied by a parent season pass.

Teach: If you want to be a ski or snowboard instructor in the Snow Sport School, call Barry Whiting at 208-431-1592.

Learn: On Dec. 15 will be a free Learn to Ski or Snowboard Day; call 208-673-5599 to register.

Information: For more about lift rates, programs and events, go to www.pomerelle.com.

"We are considered a big teaching mountain," Burrows said. "We teach lots of children, adults and schools a lifetime sport."

Connor Young, 18, of Burley learned how to ski at Pomerelle during a fourth-grade field trip.

Young has been skiing with family and friends at Pomerelle for the past seven years.

"It's close and it has a good family feel," Young said. "The mountain is not very steep, but there's good terrain there."

Young honed his skiing skills when he first started out by enrolling in lessons at the ski school. Young said his instructor, Sheryl Whiting, was really good and her guidance hooked him on the sport.

"At first it was challenging, but I fell in love with the sport," Young said.

Plan Ahead for Your Holiday Drive

TIMES-NEWS

TWIN FALLS • Whether you're on your way to see family today or preparing for a Christmas trip next month, holiday travel in Idaho means traversing winter weather. Here are a few suggestions from the Idaho Transportation Department to stay safe and be prepared.

Be smart about that drink: ITD is partnering with Idaho law enforcement agencies to fight impaired driving with both education campaigns and high-visibility enforcement patrols through Sunday. Last year, impaired driving contributed to 1,456 crashes and 66 fatalities on Idaho highways, according to the department. Partygoers should plan their ride home ahead of time — designating a sober driver or arranging a safe ride home with someone else. Drivers and motorcycle riders are advised to wear their seatbelts and helmets to protect against impaired drivers. "If you know someone who is about to drive while impaired, take his or her keys and help make other safe travel arrangements," Kevin Bechen with ITD said in a statement. Check the road ahead: ITD has added yet another way to receive road condition updates through its 511 program. Simply register through 511.idaho.gov, and you can receive reports on your preferred travel routes through email, text messaging or Twitter. The Twitter option is new. The department tested the reports starting this March and has now opened the tool up for public use.

(Of course, you will need to have a Twitter account to use it.) "Improvements to the system allow direct delivery of information, based on what drivers need, when they need it, and how they need it," Tony Ernest, manager of the system, said in a statement. "At the same time, we remind drivers that Idaho has enacted a new texting law." According to ITD, only Minnesota and Iowa offer similar automated Twitter feeds as part of their 511 services. ITD urges motorists using the 511 site or phone system on the road to check it before operating their vehicle or ask a passenger to do it. It is unsafe to check mobile devices while driving, and Idaho lawmakers banned texting and similar communications while driving this year. Prepare yourself and your car: Winter conditions increase the importance of a well-maintained vehicle. Hunting Holiday Spirit

Cutting your own Christmas tree means hard work, but the rewards are many, as one Times-News reporter learned.

BY KIMBERLEE KRUESI

Editor's note: This story was first published on Nov. 23, 2011.

HANSEN • With snow tickling down my back and my fingers turning red, I quickly realized I wasn't coming home with a small tree. It was the first time I had ever gone out to the woods to cut down a Christmas tree. I had a guide, a handsaw and a reporter's notebook to get me through the event. Unfortunately, I foolishly forgot to bring a pair of gloves. The U.S. Forest Service has begun

Tree Permits Are on Sale

The Sawtooth National Forest has begun selling Christmas tree permits through its offices for those who would like to cut down their own tree this season. Permits cost $5 to cut a tree no more than 10 feet high, or $10 for trees 11 to 20 feet high. Families and organizations are limited to one tree. The permits are sold at the following locations. While most locations are open Monday through Friday, hours may vary between offices and stores:
Burley: Minidoka Ranger District Office, 678-0430.
Fairfield: Fairfield Ranger District Office, 764-3202; Camas Creek Country Store, 764-2211.
Hailey: LL Green's Hardware, 788-9359.
Hansen: Rock Creek General Store, 423-5659.
Ketchum: Ketchum Ranger District Office, 622-5371; Sawtooth NRA Headquarters Office, 727-5000.
Stanley: Stanley Ranger Station, 774-3000.
Twin Falls: Forest Supervisor's Office, 737-3200.

Turkey, Pie and Politics? T-Day Family Friction

BY JOCELYN NOVECK
Associated Press

Ah, Thanksgiving. A little turkey, some cranberry mold, maybe apple pie with ice cream, some football on TV. Getting together with the cousins. Catching up beside the fire. Togetherness. On second thought: Scratch that. What were we thinking? This was an election year. "The Thanksgiving table will be a battleground," says Andrew Marshall, 34, of Quincy, Mass. Like many extended families across the country, Marshall's includes Democrats and Republicans, conservatives, liberals and independents. And so, like many families that count both red and blue voters in their ranks, they're expecting fireworks. Things had already gotten so bad on Facebook, the family had to ban political banter. "It was getting brutal," says Marshall. Please see POLITICS, H2

The Forest Service sells tree-cutting permits for $5 for trees under 10 feet tall and $10 for trees less than 20 feet tall. Even if you factor in the gas for the trip, the overall price is usually cheaper than buying a pre-cut tree. Depending on height, a Douglas fir sold from a grocery store parking lot can easily range from $25-$50.

But trekking up to the Sawtooth National Forest isn't for the faint of heart. Cold and icy weather can make driving on the windy roads dangerous. You also need to bring a sharp saw and have a vehicle capable of carrying the tree back to your home.

My Christmas tree guide, Karl Fuelling, graciously agreed to help me throughout the process. Fuelling has been a forester for the Forest Service for more than 20 years. As I tried to keep up with his long strides in the deep snow near Magic Mountain Resort, Fuelling pointed out the various kinds of trees I could cut down.

If you know where to look, he said, you can have your pick of lodgepole pine, known for its excellent needle retention and candle-like shape. There are a few Douglas firs sprinkled throughout the national forest, but due to their popularity, they're harder to find. I wasn't committed to finding any particular tree and after 20 minutes of climbing in the snow, I was ready to cut down just about anything — which is why I was thankful Fuelling finally pointed to a lone subalpine fir.

"It's a little taller than 10 feet but that's OK," Fuelling said with a smile. I think he wanted to see if I could actually carry the thing back to the truck by myself.

Sawing the tree down was easy. Lugging it back to the truck was another story. I sheepishly accepted a pair of gloves and carried the tree through the freshly blazed trail. Branches flicked in my face and the notebook I had stuffed in my back pocket fell out without me even noticing.

What surprised me was how easily my measurements were skewed in the forest. The tree I cut down was miniscule compared to the others around it. However, the minute I tried dragging the tree into the newsroom, I realized I had about three feet of excess tree.

According to Fuelling, cutting down a tree isn't supposed to be easy. The experience will leave you tired, cold and spackled in tree sap. But it will also leave you with a smile, a few silly memories and even jump-start your holiday cheer a little earlier than normal.

At the very least, it'll teach you the value of carrying an extra pair of gloves.

Arkansas Farm Stuffed with Lucky Pet Turkeys

BY RYAN SAYLOR
Paragould Daily Press

PARAGOULD, Ark. • A gaggle of Greene County turkeys don't know how lucky they are, regardless of the approaching holiday.

No, they have not received a pardon from the governor or the president. Instead, they have been raised as pets by Lisa Gipson on her farm outside of Paragould.

"(My sister) brought two turkeys for pets," Gipson said. "I just thought they were so pretty."

But finding a breed that was unique was a challenge, she said.

"I looked on the Internet and just couldn't find (royal palm) turkeys," Gipson said, explaining that the turkeys were white-feathered turkeys with black tips that nearly became extinct in the 1920s. "So I ordered them from a hatchery in Missouri."

Gipson said she had originally ordered 16 turkeys to raise as pets, though four of them died of known causes.

"At 6 months old, I still have 12," Gipson said.

David Gipson, Lisa's husband, said he gave the turkeys unique names associated with various American holidays, including Thanksgiving and Christmas.

"We've named them Presidents Day, Martin Luther King Day, Fourth of July, all (holiday) names pretty much," David said. "I've got them all named."

Gipson said while she was raising the turkeys as pets, not all would necessarily receive amnesty. Some of the bird would be sold and their fates unknown.

"I had a guy insist on buying one Saturday," Gipson said. "So I sold it for $30. A full-grown turkey normally sells for $40."

Three other turkeys would be sold, as well, Gipson told the Paragould Daily Press (<http://is.gd/nrC3er>).

"I'm going to take three to the Ward Livestock auction because they're fighting," she said, adding that many times the male turkeys to be sold were attempting to show their dominance and were becoming a nuisance to the other animals.

David said while four turkeys were set to be sold, if the other turkeys misbehaved, they have been warned of the consequences.

"That's my threat, (to eat them)," David said with a chuckle.

Gipson's husband said normally the turkeys were not bought for food consumption at $40 per turkey, though.

"Walmart is cheaper and closer," David said.

Should turkeys be slaughtered or die of other causes, Gipson said she had found a way to actually make money from the traditionally holiday bird.

"There is a market for their feathers with Native Americans," she said. "One site online will buy their feathers for $39.99 per dozen."

Politics

And now, it will all play out in person. In this family, the older generation is more liberal, the younger more conservative. So Andrew, a conservative, particularly expects friction with his aunt, Anne Brennan, 57. "She firmly believes in what she believes in, and we'll go head to head with it," he says.

As for Brennan, she's looking on the bright side: the wine they'll drink. "You always bring a good bottle," she told Andrew at a family dinner a few days ago — perhaps softening him up for the holiday. No dice. "What are you talking about?" Andrew replied. "The wine just amplifies it."

But the Marshalls seem to be relishing the occasion. Not so the Davidson family in Alabama.

In fact, things have gotten so tense over politics between Brian Davidson, a 40-year-old attorney in Helena, and his father, 130 miles away in Russellville, that they've changed plans, forgoing their usual gathering.

"We're not even going," says Brian, who voted for Barack Obama, and describes his father as "a little to the right of Glenn Beck." Better to skip this one, he says, than suffer "a non-recoverable blowup."

Davidson, a Boy Scout leader and the father of two school-age sons, once was firmly conservative, even serving as an officer in the Young Republicans Club at the University of North Alabama. His parents — particularly Dad — always taught him and his brother to think for themselves, he says.

ready for the extra demands of winter. Visit a mechanic and ensure car battery and fluid levels are sufficient and heating units are working properly.

Wear a seatbelt — and make sure children are secured in safety seats appropriate to their age and weight. If carrying a cell phone, make sure it is fully charged and has a list of emergency phone numbers. And, let a family member or friend know where you're going — including estimates of when you'll depart and arrive, and the route you plan to follow.

Store emergency supplies in your car, including flashlights, extra batteries, first aid kit, pocket knife, blanket or sleeping bag, extra clothing, a small sack of sand or cat litter for generating traction under vehicle wheels, small shovel, bottled water, booster cables, rope, energy bars or other food, brightly colored scarf to attract attention in case of an emergency, waterproof matches or cigarette lighter, and a map of the area.

Drive wisely: ITD has installed digital message signs on many high-traffic routes to advise motorists of winter hazards. Those are in addition to the usual array of roadside signs, including wind and visibility advisories, speed limits, sharp curves and potentially icy bridges.

It is just fine to take a little extra time getting to your destination in winter. Leave a few minutes early, but not before your windshield has time to defrost. The alternative is putting yourself and others at risk through your driving.

Did we mention it's winter? Watch for icy conditions, including black ice, and slow down if you need to. Put a little extra space between your car and the car ahead of you. And keep an eye on other motorists around you to anticipate their actions, including those behind you.

Snowplows are dangerous, though their work is vital. ITD advises that you drive at least two car lengths behind a snowplow for every 10 mph you're traveling. Do not pass a snowplow unless absolutely necessary, and even then only when you have a clear view of the highway ahead. Never drive through the snow being ejected from a plow; its force can throw a car out of control.

Some Mass. Pantries Hand Out Thanksgiving Chickens

BOSTON (AP) • Some Massachusetts charities and food pantries are giving needy families chickens instead of more expensive Thanksgiving turkeys this year, a move lamented by some, but which they say is necessary to ensure as many people as possible get to enjoy a holiday meal.

The American Farm Bureau Federation says the average price of a 16-pound turkey has jumped from $18 to more than $22 in two years. Joyce Lonergan, director of the Franciscan Food Center at St. Anthony's Shrine in downtown Boston, says her mission is to provide as many people as possible with food, and if that means chicken instead of turkey, then so be it. People picking up food at the shrine tell The Boston Globe that they would prefer turkey, but they understand the decision.

Why Are Thanksgiving Songs All Turkeys?

The latest worst song ever has entered the zeitgeist. In "It's Thanksgiving," 12-year-old Nicole Westbrook warbles into a glistening turkey leg, and — attempting a vague facsimile of rap — insists that we "can't be hateful, gotta be grateful; gotta be grateful, can't be hateful." The real crime here is not the exploitation of an underage, untalented tween. (Westbrook is a protégé of Patrice Wilson, the diabolical producer who previously inflicted Rebecca Black on an ill-prepared America.) It's that, with so few Thanksgiving-themed songs out there to choose from, this abomination automatically enters the canon.

The ongoing dearth of good Thanksgiving-themed pop bewilders me. We've been gifted with enough catchy jingle bell rock to overflow our stockings many seasons over. Yet somehow Thanksgiving-lovers always get the short end of the wishbone. Why hasn't this rich cultural tradition inspired any moments of musical genius? Where, I ask, is the Turkey Day equivalent of "2000 Miles"? Or even "Christmas in Hollis"?

Thanksgiving is not a religious holiday, which means a

Seth Stevenson

Slate

Thanksgiving song can appeal to a broader, non-denominational audience. (Though I grant the international charts might be tougher to conquer.) And, like Christmas, Thanksgiving boasts a bounty of established thematic elements — any lyricist worth her gravy should have no trouble throwing together a few on-topic verses. Note, for example, that "pumpkin pie" rhymes with "wonder why." That's evocative! You're halfway there!

Westbrook and Wilson are not the first popentrepreneurs to spot this unfilled market niche. Most famously, Adam Sandler made a naked bid to rule the late-November airwaves with "The Thanksgiving Song." Given couplets like "Love to eat the turkey at the table; I once saw a movie with Betty Grable," I deem this skimpy stuffing. Mary Chapin Carpenter's "Thanksgiving Song" is even worse: a treacly tryptophan snore.

The leftovers struggle to even qualify as Thanksgiving numbers. There are songs that hint at the theme but don't directly address it (the Beastie Boys' "Gratitude"); songs that don't even have lyrics (Theolonious Monk's "Stuffy Turkey"); and songs that are barely songs at all (Johnny Cash speak-singing an epic heartland soliloquy).

In the end the blame must fall upon our songwriters. You can't tell me I haven't tried. I was in a terrible band in college and, one fall semester, having identified this gaping void, I tried my hand at composing a Thanksgiving song of my own. As I recall, "Plymouth Rock" was played but once — on the stage of a subterranean campus bar. It was not well received.

Until the Thanksgiving hit of our dreams comes along, our best option just might be The National's new cover of a weird, jumbled ditty from the animated show Bob's Burgers. It's a comic dirge — not a sincere, joyous ode to the greatest holiday ever invented. But it'll do for now. Happy Thanksgiving, everyone. I hope you'll join me when I sing, "Kill, kill, kill. Kill the turkey."

Stevenson is the author of "Grounded: A Down to Earth Journey Around the World."

Gifts of Love Brings Christmas to Care Centers

TWIN FALLS • The Gifts Of Love Christmas Care Center program, a non-profit organization, is in its 15th year of helping to make Christmas special for residents of area care centers. This year the group will bring family gifts to five care centers in the Magic Valley.

Events include the following:
Dec. 3: 2 p.m. at Oak Creek Rehabilitation Center, 500 Polk St. E., Kimberly; and 7 p.m. at River Ridge Care and Rehabilitation Center, 640 Filer Ave. W., Twin Falls.
Dec. 4: 2 p.m. at Desert View Care Center, 820 Sprague Ave., Buhl; and 7 p.m. at BridgeView Estates, 1828

Bridgeview Blvd., Twin Falls.
Dec. 5: 7 p.m. at Twin Falls Care Center, 674 Eastland Drive.

The Gifts of Love program lets the residents choose presents to give to their loved ones. The group helps with gift selection, wrapping and tagging of items, and the party includes entertainment. The public can participate by donating new, unwrapped gifts for any age group; a monetary donation (tax-deductible); or by volunteering at one of the parties.
 Information: Cherrell Jacobsen, 944-4407 or 404-8825, or Nadine Adams, 733-4924.

Buhl Library Hosts E-book Talk

BUHL • The Buhl Public Library will be hosting a program about e-books and the various e-book readers from 7-9 p.m. Nov. 27.

E-books are one of the hottest new technologies affecting the reading public. There are a number of factors to consider when getting an e-book reader.

The library will bring together a panel of experts who own different types of e-book readers. They will share information about their e-book readers and have the readers available to look at. Joan Holloway, retired librarian from Filer and Buhl, has done a lot of research on e-books and has had a Sony e-reader for a couple of years along with a Nook Simple Touch. She will lead the discussion and share her research on e-books.

Jennifer Okelberry also owns a Nook. She will share her experiences with her Nook and why she likes it. Ellen Asay received a Kindle as a gift and will share her experiences with her e-reader. Sue Ambrose is very familiar with the iPad 2 and will demonstrate and discuss the use of this device. They will discuss the features they like, the ease of use, where they get their e-books and other goodies, what they cost, and what made them select the e-reader they have. Cynthia Toppen will share the latest information on e-books in libraries.

The library is at 215 Broadway North in Buhl. Information: 543-6500.

Thank You.

I appreciate you taking the time to read the Times-News today and every day. Although our Thanksgiving Day paper is traditionally our largest of the year in terms of page count, your choice to read the Times-News and magicvalley.com every other day of the year demonstrates your commitment to being in touch with the latest local news and information that affect your life and that of your neighbors.

I also appreciate you doing business with our advertisers – whether buying an item through our classifieds, purchasing a Today's Deal on magicvalley.com or flipping through pages of retail ads and inserts to best plot out tomorrow's midnight assault on holiday shopping.

Speaking of our advertisers, I thank all of you for your continued investment in promoting your business in our print and online products. We're pleased to have helped you through what I hope was the worst of our economy's malaise, and now look forward to helping you grow your customer base and market share.

Finally, thank you to our employees. You've done a wonderful job this past year of connecting readers with our communities, our advertisers and with one another. I enjoy the chance I have to work with you every single day.

To all; have a great, safe and relaxing Thanksgiving Day!

THE ACES ON BRIDGE®

Bobby Wolff

"Men are not hanged for stealing horses, but that horses may not be stolen."

— George Savile

John Armstrong, aged 56, died of a brain hemorrhage just days after returning from representing England in the 2008 European Championships. He and his partner, John Holland, finished in second place in the Butler rankings (for average IMPs won) — quite an achievement for a pair from a team that finished in 12th place.

Armstrong was on the team that won the Silver Medal in the 1987 Bermuda Bowl World Championships — Britain's best performance since taking Gold in 1955. And he was also on the teams that produced Britain's most recent best Open results in European Championships — runner-up in 1987 and winner in 1991. (The British Open Team's previous win was back in 1963.) Today's hand is from that 1991 victory.

Armstrong, the declarer in three no-trump, could see eight tricks — he must come to at least two in hearts — but where to go for the ninth? Britain was on Vugraph at the time and the commentators made an assortment of erudite suggestions. But John's solution was simple: He won the club lead and continued with ace and another spade. East won with the king and returned a club. John now ran the heart jack, which East could not afford to win. When the heart jack held, declarer played a third spade. West took the queen, but with the heart ace still in dummy, John could not be denied access to his established spade jack. Contract made.

ANSWER: Partner's action does not guarantee a great hand. With short hearts he is obliged to balance, even though he is not technically in balancing seat. To double for penalties, you would need the heart jack instead of the two, and you might still not beat it! Pass, and rely on your partner to bid again with a real hand.

DEAR ABBY: My daughter thinks if people are busy they should not answer the phone. I believe it's better to answer and tell the person you're busy and that you will return their call. Sometimes she doesn't call me back for nine hours or even the next day. Then I find out she was watching a movie or walking her dog, and didn't think my call was "important" enough to respond promptly. As her mother, if I don't hear back, I start to worry, even though she's in her 20s and married with a family.

When she calls me and I say I'm busy and will call her back, she gets mad and says I shouldn't have answered at all. Will you please tell us what you think?

— KARI IN MONTANA

DEAR ABBY
Jeanne Phillips

DEAR KARI: OK. I think that for your daughter to keep you waiting nine hours for a return call if she can answer more promptly shows a lack of respect for your feelings. And for you to obsess that something awful might have happened is a waste of your time because, trust me, bad news travels fast. It's also possible that you may be calling too often. But only you can answer that.

DEAR ABBY: Some members of my family continually ask me for money. I feel obligated because they are family and they helped me in the past. But since then, I have turned my life around.

I have a great job, a home and I'm in a serious relationship. This isn't the first time they have asked. I have tried refusing, but they persist and after a while I feel guilty.

This is creating a rift between my girlfriend and me. She feels these family members need to take responsibility for their own problems and make choices to better themselves rather than rely on others to enable their bad habits. How do I put an end to this annoyance?

— CASHED OUT

DEAR CASHED OUT: There is a difference between giving people money to enable them to continue making poor choices, and giving them money if they are really in need. Because your relatives helped you when you needed money to tide you over, there is a moral obligation for you to reciprocate if they are truly in need.

DEAR ABBY: When I met my husband he was married. I told him at first that I was not interested. But as time went on he ended up divorcing his wife. We have been together for 11 years, married for three.

The problem is his kids. They are all adults. His youngest was 15 when he left. The daughter is angry and blames me for his leaving. This was not the first time he had left her mother. He had a child from another relationship who was conceived during one of his absences.

I am getting tired of the drama and I'm about ready to divorce him for my peace of mind. During the time we have been together he has never strayed and has always been there for me. Should we divorce?

— SECOND WIFE IN CALIFORNIA

DEAR SECOND WIFE: Heck, no! If you love your husband, stick with him. Because your husband's daughter is creating drama, he should set her straight. She may feel that he didn't love HER enough to stay, when the truth is that his marriage to her mother had been on the rocks for years. He should also make sure she understands that if she wants him in her life, she will need to make an attitude adjustment.

Dear Abby is written by Abigail Van Buren, also known as Jeanne Phillips, and was founded by her mother, Pauline Phillips. Write Dear Abby at www.DearAbby.com or P.O. Box 69440, Los Angeles, CA 90069.

Today is Thursday, Nov. 22, the 327th day of 2012. There are 39 days left in the year. This is Thanksgiving Day.

Today's Highlight: On Nov. 22, 1963, President John F. Kennedy was shot to death during a motorcade in Dallas; Texas Gov. John B. Connally, in the same open car as the president, was seriously wounded. A suspect, Lee Harvey Oswald, was arrested.

TODAY IN HISTORY

On this date: In 1718, English pirate Edward Teach — better known as "Blackbeard" — was killed during a battle off present-day North Carolina.

In 1862, Giuseppe Verdi's opera "La Forza del Destino" had its world premiere in St. Petersburg, Russia.

In 1928, "Bolero" by Maurice Ravel was first performed, in Paris.

In 1930, listeners of the British Broadcasting Corp. heard, for the first time, radio coverage of an American college football game as Harvard defeated Yale, 13-0.

In 1935, a flying boat, the China Clipper, took off from Alameda, Calif., carrying more than 100,000 pieces of mail on the first trans-Pacific airmail flight.

In 1943, President Franklin D. Roosevelt, British Prime Minister Winston Churchill and Chinese leader Chiang Kai-shek met in Cairo to discuss measures for defeating Japan. Lyricist Lorenz Hart died in New York at age 48.

In 1954, the Humane Society of the United States was incorporated as the National Humane Society.

In 1965, the musical "Man of La Mancha" opened on Broadway.

In 1967, the U.N. Security Council approved Resolution 242, which called for Israel to withdraw from territories it had captured the previous June, and implicitly called on adversaries to recognize Israel's right to exist.

In 1975, Juan Carlos was proclaimed King of Spain.

In 1986, Elzire Dionne, who gave birth to twins in 1934, died at a hospital in North Bay, Ontario, Canada, at age 77.

In 1990, British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, having failed to win re-election of the Conservative Party leadership on the first ballot, announced her resignation.

Ten years ago: At the NATO summit in Prague, Russian President Vladimir Putin told President George W. Bush the United States should not wage war alone against Iraq, and questioned whether Pakistan and Saudi Arabia were doing enough to fight terrorism. The Bush administration eased clean air rules to allow utilities, refineries and manufacturers to avoid having to install new anti-pollution equipment when they modernized their plants.

Five years ago: Retailers lured shoppers to stores and online on Thanksgiving Day ahead of the traditional Black Friday kick-off. A gunman shot and killed his ex-wife, their three children, ages 12, 10 and 6, and himself in a park in Laytonsville, Md. French rail workers who'd staged a nine-day-old strike voted to return to the job.

One year ago: Baseball players and owners signed an agreement for a new labor contract, a deal making baseball the first North American professional major league to start blood testing on human growth hormone and expanding the playoffs to 10 teams by 2013. Ryan Braun was voted the NL MVP after helping the Milwaukee Brewers win their first division title in nearly 30 years. Death claimed France's former first lady Danielle Mitterrand at age 87 and Svetlana Alliluyeva, daughter of Soviet dictator Josef Stalin, at age 85. Soldier-turned-soap opera star J.R. Martinez and his professional partner, Karina Smirnoff, were named champions of season 13 of ABC's "Dancing with the Stars."

IF NOVEMBER 22 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY: You are very likely to experience uplifting and encouraging times before the end of the year. You might be unsure of what you want, or ambitions may briefly flag, but your business skills are in top shape so your judgment about investments, career and business is sound. Your energy will return to normal after the first of the year, and you can put plans on the drawing board. Aim to launch key projects, plans and in June when people are willing to perform favors and it is easier than usual to gain cooperation. You will be a bit wiser, too, and have a better grasp of far-reaching details so that is an excellent time to plan for the future.

HOROSCOPE

Jeraldine Saunders

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Steady that steering wheel. Odd outbursts and a thirst for adventure could upset someone else's plans. Tame your wild impulses and spend some time doing the conventional things that are expected.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Take commitments to heart. Be hardheaded when it comes to money and responsibility. It might be a holiday in parts of the world, but you won't enjoy celebrations unless you meet obligations.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Delusions of grandeur could cause you to over-reach. Promises made now may founder due to a lack of accurate data. People in general could be picky or touchy about minor errors and mistakes.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): The best poker players say you shouldn't bluff with an empty hand. At family gatherings, keep confidential business information under lock and key. Remain skeptical of sweeping statements.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Avoid taking criticism personally. Here and there along the way, someone could say something that rubs you the wrong way. Be forgiving and magnanimous if someone says or does something that annoys you.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Aim for what you really want. Don't be sidetracked by minor scuffles and disagreements or bothered by family eccentricities. Concentrate on creative ideas, hobbies, or holiday entertaining.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): If you get a chance to wrestle someone for the wishbone, you might win the big end. However, if you risk large sums of money on the results of a sporting event, or make other bets, you might lose.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): People may appreciate your businesslike manner, even if you can only demonstrate it by carving a turkey. Flattery may get you anywhere, but you won't be content to end up just anywhere.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Handle extra tasks and responsibilities with good grace. With a holiday weekend on the calendar you might feel like the "go-fer" at everyone's beck and call. Remember, it's all for a good cause.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Be nice as pie and share it, too. A refusal to follow the rules and giving in to an urge to challenge authority can cause misunderstandings. Even though hostility might not erupt on the surface, it may smolder.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Relaxation and restful hours are in the stars, but you won't be happy unless you have something physical to do. Invite a special someone along on a walk or lend a helping hand at a family dinner.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Things go better in pairs. You receive the most support from your closest friend as part of a couple. New places, unusual ideas and novel entertainments will give the greatest pleasure this weekend.

SUDOKU

Sudoku is a number-placing puzzle based on a 9x9 grid with several given numbers. The object is to place the numbers 1 to 9 in the empty squares so that each row, each column and each 3x3 box contains the same number only once. The difficulty level of the Conceptis Sudoku increases from Monday to Sunday.
