Event Brings Fun for Kids, Welcome Relief for Parents

BY KIMBERLEE KRUESI

TWIN FALLS • Keeping antsy kids cooped on in a house on a snow day can get a little tricky.

Energy levels rise as activity ideas quickly begin to fall. It can take a certain amount of creativity to keep everyone entertained, but on Saturday morning parents finally got a little help.

It was the annual Cabin Fever Day in Twin Falls. Snowfall from the night before made roads risky to travel on but that didn't keep hundreds of families from emerging from their homes to partake in the free fun.

The Twin Falls' Bowladrome offered free bowling, while Curves for Women offered workouts and a zumba circuit for women of all ages.

For parents, the day was a welcome relief.

"It's a good way to get the kids to burn off some energy," said Stephanie Owens, mother of four who watched her kids play around the Nazzkart's bounce house.

Owens said she's been coming up with alternative games to keep her children active while cooped up inside. She's been leading inside treasure hunts and letting her kids paint the snow. However, finally letting them run around on Saturday was a welcome change, she said.

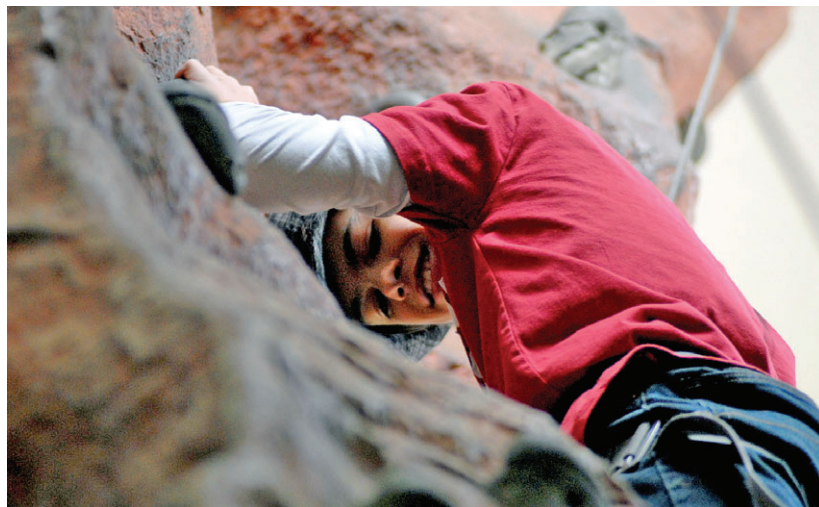

"We're going bowling next, then swimming and ending at the creative arts center," she said. "We're going to burn off some energy."

For Melanie Lewis, the snow was also a main reason why

STATE LEGISLATURE

Magic Valley's Freshmen Legislators Learn the Ropes

BY MELISSA DAVLIN

BOISE • After a House session ended on Wednesday, Rep. Lance Clow, R-Twin Falls, pulled up his calendar.

On his laptop screen, his meetings and commitments filled the time slots, booking him nearly solid for his first two weeks in Boise.

Juggling social obligations was one of the unexpected difficult parts of being a legislator, Clow said with a smile.

As week one of the 2013 Legislature came to an end, the Magic Valley's three freshmen representatives reflected on their introduction to law-making and life under the rotunda.

Rep. Steve Miller, R-Fairfield, spent much of his first week learning the jargon and rules for the Joint Finance-Appropriations Committee, on which he serves. JFAC, which sets the budget for the state, has a massive budget book to navigate and a set of terms committee members need to learn.

Already, the committee has started hearing agency budget requests. The hardest part is finding the agency's entry in the massive budget book during the fast-paced presentations,

REPORT

Teachers Feel Contributions Aren't Appreciated

BY JULIE WOOTTON

TWIN FALLS • A report released last week notes that Idaho teachers surveyed feel a "strong climate of despair" and that their contributions aren't fully appreciated.

The state's Office of Performance Evaluations put together the report, called "Workforce Issues Affecting Public School Teachers."

Based on survey results, the report indicated educators "seem to perceive a climate that disparages their efforts and belittles their contributions."

The workforce issues report is based partly on survey results from 2,486 teachers, 256 principals and 84 superintendents statewide.

The Power of Forgiveness

“It’s a choice you make to heal yourself. Decide not to allow anger and bitterness to poison your life.”

—Dr. Fred Luskin, psychology professor at Stanford University

Forgiveness is a skill we can develop and practice like any other. Learning to forgive makes us healthier and happier in all our relationships. Robert Fulghum said, “Acts, not words, are the ties that bind.” They enable us to persevere, have courage, and learn from our mistakes.

The pain of my father’s rejection ate at me a long time until I stopped blaming myself for his problem of alcoholism.

Sometimes we have to put our hurt into words. A man I knew from his teens called the other day to do that. As I listened, he dumped his stressful feelings. He decided not to give up. He would allow himself time to heal.

Our feelings come out in fear, betrayal, confusion, anger or shame before we confront them. We share them with someone we trust. This helps us fight the tendency to minimize or deny what we’re going through. It’s okay to admit we’re hurting. We will never be able to address a problem we won’t acknowledge.

My friend had to be specific about what hurt him. He still grieved the loss of a loved one he had taken care of for a number of years. He felt like his life ended with her death. Talking with me helped him begin to tie up the loose ends so he could start healing.

Sometimes we have to understand ourselves in a deeper, more healing way. The hurt is in the past. By remaining resentful, we keep re-inflicting the pain all over again.

Unless I change the thought channel to positive, I will keep missing the life affirmations all around me. I don’t want to let that happen when I can use the beauty of the world to conquer my hurt.

Becoming a forgiving person will take time and effort, but when accompanied with prayer, it will change things. Practicing forgiveness of others and myself allows me to experience the calming rest and assurance I need to redirect my thoughts in loving ways.

Some of my pet peeves include the driver who cuts me off in traffic, a rude sales clerk, or the co-worker who takes credit for something I did. They test my patience and require forgiveness. I’m becoming more patient and forgiving with practice. If I can handle the small stuff, when something more difficult occurs, I’ll have a better chance of success. I won’t be so likely to take it personally. It helps me keep in touch with what really matters.

We don’t have to be consumed by anger and lose our close, personal connection with God. With His empowerment we can choose instead to look for the wonder in other people’s lives, and experience and share God’s infinite love.

The power of forgiveness unchains a person’s life. We do need to forgive to continue growing into the beautiful people we are.

Utah Man Electrocuted Saturday in Gooding

BY PAUL DUNN
pdunn@magicvalley.com

GOODING • A Utah man is in critical condition after he was electrocuted Saturday afternoon on a power pole in Gooding.

According to Gooding Police Chief Jeff Perry, a 27-year-old man climbed to the top of an Idaho Power utility pole, grounded himself and was electrocuted. He then fell approximately 35 feet to the ground.

Gooding police are not releasing the name of the man until they gain more information about the incident.

“Only a few relatives have been notified — and that by phone — and we want to find out why he was here and what he was doing,” Perry said. Police happened to be in the area and witnessed the event after they received reports of the man acting suspicious. They immediately called for an ambulance and provided first aid.

The victim was taken to North Canyon Medical Center and then air lifted to the University of Utah Medical Center where he is listed in critical condition.

“Witnesses will be interviewed at the beginning of this coming week,” Perry said. “We should have this hampered down in the next couple of days, and then we will let people know what happened.”

her family came out to participate in Cabin Fever Day.

“We don’t normally do this,” she said. “But my kids needed to get out of the house.”

However, while the snow might have spurred families to get out of the house, it also may have prevented some families from attending the day’s event.

At Hands On, families could make a spin art postcard or paint ceramics, said Robin Dober, the store’s owner. Yet, instead of the high numbers she usually sees, fewer people showed up than expected.

“We had about 240 projects,” she said. “That’s a little lighter than usual. We heard people say it was because of the weather. Some people who might have come out couldn’t because it was snowing.”

City Council to Discuss Sexual Orientation Discrimination

BY ALISON GENE SMITH

alismith@magicvalley.com

TWIN FALLS • The Twin Falls City Council is scheduled to discuss tonight possible action on research city staff has completed on anti-discrimination policies.

Councilwoman Rebecca Mills-Sojka commented during a discussion of a new policy handbook in December that she would encourage the addition of sexual orientation to the anti-harassment and discrimination policy for city employees.

At the Jan. 7 meeting, City Manager Travis Rothweiler said city staff was nearly finished researching the topic.

Protecting sexual orientation under government anti-discrimination policies has made headlines in Idaho over the last year after a failed attempt to add the category on a state level at the Idaho Legislature. The cities of Sandpoint and Boise have added the phrase so far, and Pocatello’s city council has considered doing the same.

The council will also consider dissolving the city’s Citizen Finance and Planning Commission. The commission was formed by an ordinance in July 2010 and has been meeting monthly since then.

The original goal of the five-person group was to advise the city on financial matters, advocontrol process. And he said they produce independent, nonpartisan reports.

Here are some of the highlights of the report:

Teacher pay and years of experience

Idaho teachers have an average of 13 years of experience and make $43,000 per year.

Teachers in larger school districts are generally paid more than in smaller districts, according to the report.

About 11 percent of educators are at a pay level near the state’s minimum teacher salary — $30,500.

The minimum is for full-time teachers. But the report notes about 19 percent of educators don’t work full time.

Three administrators interviewed for the study commented about the starting salary for teachers and whether new hires are able to make a living.

About half of superintendents surveyed said retention is “somewhat of a concern.” And about 30 percent said it’s a “major concern.”

Class sizes

Dobbs said one thing that stood out to him in the report is the section about class sizes, with educators noticing increases.

“We’re seeing that in our district, which is not surprising,” he said.

This year, school districts received less state funding to pay for employee salaries and benefits. The state shifted 1.67 percent of those funds to pay for education reforms.

Dobbs said higher class sizes aren’t the case across the board in Twin Falls, but they’re higher than what’s ideal in some classrooms.

When there are 30 students in a classroom, for instance, he said it’s also more challenging to focus on individual he’ll learn with experience.

Rep. Clark Kauffman, R-Filer, said it’s been hard to keep up with the full schedule and be on time.

“You don’t want to disappoint somebody or not be where you’re supposed to be when you’re supposed to be there,” he said.

Staying organized presents problems, too.

“You get a lot of mail quite a few times a day,” Kauffman said. Already, he’s hearing from constituents on issues like personal property tax and snow machine registration.

But, he added, he’ll learn.

“I’ll get that figured out eventually,” he said.

cate for the city and its citizens, and recommend best-practice alternatives for the city.

The commission worked with the Rec Center Committee to create a plan for a proposed recreation center and other city planning issues.

During the latter part of 2012, the commission began to question whether their original goals had been met and whether or not they should continue meeting or disband. Now they’ve decided to disband and have asked the city to vote to dissolve them.

The city council will also vote on whether to change Fourth Avenue North to a one-way from Shoshone Street to Fairfield Street North at the request of First Federal Bank. First Federal is planning an expansion at their existing downtown site and say modifying the road will help its traffic.

Other items:

- Consideration of a request to appoint Margaret Peck to serve as a library trustee for a full term of office from January 2013 through December 2017.

- Consideration of a request to amend Twin Falls City Code by allowing limited outside display of merchandise for sale subject to conditions.

- Consideration of the next step in developing a local improvement district as requested by Chobani.

student needs.

Lawmakers, according to the report, should look at class sizes at the individual school or district level — not average statewide numbers — when making decisions.

Gibson said class sizes vary so much from school to school.

“I think there’s a lot of factors that go into that,” he said. “I do appreciate that the report made note of that.”

He said Twin Falls School District officials have done well keeping class sizes at the elementary school level relatively small.

More than 40 percent of principals surveyed statewide said class sizes are a “major concern,” while 38 percent said they’re “somewhat of a concern.”

Hard-to-fill positions

The report shows that some school administrators have trouble finding enough applicants for hard-to-fill positions.

The most difficult positions to fill are generally special education, math and science.

In Twin Falls, Dobbs said it’s difficult to find special education teachers, support services professionals such as speech language pathologists, math teachers, health occupational teachers and professional-technical educators.

When there’s a job opening, the district isn’t getting the applicant pool they’d like to see, he said.

New teachers

About 70 percent of superintendents and principals surveyed said they’re satisfied overall with their new teachers.

About 57 percent of superintendents said most new teachers are prepared to teach. Only 1.2 percent said most new teachers aren’t prepared.

The report outlines what some school administrators would like to see improved with new teacher hires.

Responses include multiple certifications and endorsements and the ability to integrate technology into classrooms.

The report also notes that classroom management can be a challenge.

“Those are things we’ve been trying to focus on,” McGrath said, noting that will continue in the future.

Egyptian Court Orders Mubarak Retrial

BY HAMZA HENDAWI

Associated Press

CAIRO • A Cairo appeals court on Sunday overturned Hosni Mubarak's life sentence and ordered a retrial of the former Egyptian president for failing to prevent the killing of hundreds of protesters during the 2011 uprising that toppled his regime.

The ruling put the spotlight back on the highly divisive issue of justice for the former leader — and his top security officers — in a country has been more focused on the political and economic turmoil that has engulfed the country for the past two years.

Mubarak, who is currently being held in a military hospital, will not walk free with Sunday's court decision — he will remain in custody while under investigation in an unrelated case. The 84-year-old ex-president was reported last year to have been close to death, but his current state of health is unknown.

A small crowd of Mubarak loyalists in the courtroom erupted with applause and cheers after the ruling was read out.

Mubarak

Holding portraits of the former president aloft, they broke into chants of "Long live justice." Another jubilant crowd later gathered outside the Nile-side hospital where Mubarak is being held in the Cairo district of Maadi, where they passed out candies to pedestrians and motorists.

The relatively small crowds paled in comparison to the immediate reaction to his conviction and sentencing in June, when thousands took to the streets, some in celebration and others in anger that he escaped the death penalty. Sunday's muted reaction could indicate that the fate of Egypt's ruler of nearly three decades may have in some ways been reduced to a political footnote in a country sagging under the weight of a crippling economic crisis and anxious over its future direction.

The court did not provide the reasoning for its ruling, but was expected to do so later.

er. No date has been set for the retrial.

The ruling in favor of the appeal, however, had been widely expected. When Mubarak was convicted and handed a life sentence in June, that trial's presiding judge criticized the prosecution's case, saying it lacked concrete evidence and that nothing that it presented to the court proved that the protesters were killed by the police.

Mubarak's defense lawyers had argued that the former president did not know of the killings or realize the extent of the street protests. But an Egyptian fact-finding mission recently determined that he watched the uprising against him unfold through a live TV feed at his palace.

The mission's report could hold both political opportunities and dangers for Mubarak's successor, President Mohammed Morsi of the fundamentalist Muslim Brotherhood. A new Mubarak trial would be popular, since many Egyptians were angered he was convicted for failing to stop the killings, rather than ordering the crackdown that killed nearly 900 people.

Does Onscreen Violence Breed Real-life Tragedies?

A scene is shown from the TV series, 'Sons of Anarchy.' Television executives who spoke to the media recently about the tragic shootings in Newtown, Conn., and Aurora, Colo., say the events bothered them, but none offered concrete examples of how it is changing what they put on the air.

A Disconnect Between Violence and Television

BY DAVID BAUDER

Associated Press

PASADENA, Calif. • If there's any soul-searching among top television executives about onscreen violence contributing to real-life tragedies like the Connecticut school shooting, it isn't readily apparent.

All say the horrors of Newtown and Aurora, Colo., rocked them. But during a series of meetings with reporters here over the last 10 days, none offered concrete examples of how it is changing what they put on the air, or if that is necessary.

"I'm not a psychologist, so I'm not sure you can make the leap (that) a show about serial killers has caused the sort of problems with violence in our country," said Robert Greenblatt, who put "Dexter" on the air when he ran Showtime and is now overseeing development of a series on the notorious creep Hannibal Lecter for NBC. "There are many, many other factors, from mental illness to guns."

All of those points are being considered by Vice President Joe Biden as he prepares to make recommendations Tuesday to President Obama on ways to curb violence. When entertainment executives met with Biden in Washington on Friday, makers of blood-splurting video games such as "Call of Duty" and "Mortal Kombat" dominated attention. In theaters, "Texas Chainsaw 3-D" dominated box office receipts during its first week.

Television's biggest influence is its omnipresence; the average American watches more than four hours of TV a day.

In recent days, only FX President John Landgraf said he was in favor of further study about any correlation between entertainment and real violence. Previous studies have been mixed.

Landgraf has sons aged 15, 12 and 9 and said he doesn't let them play video games in which the player is shooting.

Everything the entertainment industry does should be fair game in a discussion about violence, he said. But he pointed out that the zombie series "Walking Dead" and brutally violent "Sons of Anarchy" are both very popular in England and that country has far fewer gun murders than the United States. The availability of powerful assault weapons and ammunition are most responsible for the difference, he said.

Indian Police Arrest 7 Men in Gang Rape in Punjab

RAMA LAKSHMI

The Washington Post

NEW DELHI • Police in the northern Indian state of Punjab said Sunday that they have arrested seven men accused of the gang rape of a 29-year-old woman who was traveling alone on a bus, less than four weeks after the brutal rape and killing of a woman on a New Delhi bus created a national outcry about the safety of women in public places.

In the latest incident, police said a woman was taking a bus home to her village at around 5 p.m. Friday. She was the lone passenger on the bus for about 30 minutes. Police said the bus driver did not heed her request to stop at her village and instead stopped at a desolate spot farther away.

"When the woman got down from the bus, she was carried away by the bus driver and conductor on a motorcycle to another spot and were joined by five other men," said Raj Jeet Singh, the senior superintendent of police in Gurdaspur in Punjab. She was dropped off the next morning near her village. "She came with her family to report rape on Saturday."

Friday's attack bore similarities to the high-profile case of a 23-year-old woman who was gang-raped and beaten inside a moving bus last month in New Delhi, and thrown out onto the street to die, along with a male friend who had tried to protect her. Jyoti Singh died of her injuries two weeks later at a Singapore hospital.

Her case sparked unprecedented protests against rape across India and galvanized the media and police to focus on the rising incidents of rape and sexual harassment in the country. Sexual assaults have made headline news here almost daily since then, a marked change from the time when such cases were mentioned only briefly in the inside pages of newspapers and were rarely reported by television news channels.

"The increased media reporting and the protests have created an awakening among women, and they are now coming forward like never before to report rape and want to fight for justice," said Hardeep Dhillon, a senior police spokesman in Chandigarh, the capital of Punjab state.

Russians Protest Against U.S. Adoption Ban

JAKE RUDNITSKY

AND STEPHEN BIERMAN

Bloomberg News

MOSCOW • Thousands of protesters defied freezing weather to march through central Moscow on Sunday as a law banning the adoption of Russian children by U.S. citizens reinvigorated the opposition movement.

The rally, called the "March Against Scum," follows a year of protests against President Vladimir Putin that began after disputed parliamentary elections in December 2011. More than 50,000 people joined the march, opposition leaders Sergei Udaltsov and Ilya Yashin said in postings on Twitter. The Moscow police

These kids are a living tragedy, and it's outrageous to use them for a political end."

Liza Kulkova, 71, a pensioner from Klin, Russia, who volunteers at an orphanage estimated as many as 9,500 people had participated before dispersing at about 4 p.m., according to their website.

Russia passed legislation last month barring U.S. adoptions in retaliation for American sanctions over the death of lawyer Sergei Magnitsky, who'd sought to expose corruption among Interior Ministry officers. Putin signed it into law on Dec. 28. Protesters called for Russia's parliament to be disbanded.

"Nobody cares for these children, and no one needs them," said Liza Kulkova, 71, a pensioner from Klin, Russia, who volunteers at an orphanage. "This is my first protest and I don't think it will make a difference, but I came anyway. These kids are a living tragedy, and it's outrageous to use them for a political end."

Protesters filled the stretch from Strastnoy Boulevard to Trubnaya Square, which runs about a kilometer, according to photographs and accounts posted by attendees on Twitter and Facebook Inc. pages. Police removed one person dressed as a bear from the march.

People carried posters with the word "Shame" written across photographs of politicians who supported the ban, while a large banner urged the dismissal of the State Duma, the lower house of parliament.

Dmitry Peskov, Putin's spokesman, said the president is aware of the protest. Russia is streamlining procedures for its own citizens to adopt children and passing laws to improve orphans' lives, the news service said, citing Peskov.

A protester holds a toy inside a glass jar with a sticker reading 'I'm against Putin,' during a protest rally in St. Petersburg, Russia, Sunday. Thousands of people gathered in central St. Petersburg for a protest against Russia's new law banning Americans from adopting Russian children.

Legislators Shouldn’t Take Ethics Discussion Personally

As Idaho legislators come into session with, for the first time, a review on the table of how legislative ethics are managed, they needn’t re-invent the wheel: They could grab one lying on the ground nearby, and modify to Gem State purposes.

Most of the 50 states have gone much further than Idaho in setting up some form of standard approach for overseeing legislator ethics, and they’ve tended not to be as controversial as you might think.

Among Idaho legislators, the whole subject often is taken personally: Of course, I can be trusted. Arguments for ethical oversight usually are taken as personally insulting. They shouldn’t be. Taken as a whole, and over time, Idaho’s legislature has been generally clean, serious ethical breaches usually ranking low among its various faults.

But no group of people is perfect, which is why Idaho has, for example, a process for reviewing performance and possible ethical problems on the part of judges, a group that mostly holds itself to strong standards but now and again will find a less-than-worthy member in its ranks.

The National Conference of State Legislatures, the professional organization that tracks legislative activities around the country, notes that all state legislatures have some means for internally reviewing legislator problems (or, problem legislators?), but that 41 states also have ethics commissions. Idaho is one of the few without one. Wyoming is the only other state in the region that has none.

Washington state has the State Legislative Ethics Board, which meets monthly and hears concerns about legislators. Oregon has the Government Ethics Commission, which reviews the legislature among other agencies. Nevada has two agencies that oversee the legislature from different angles, the Commission on Ethics and the Nevada Legislative Counsel Bureau. Utah has the Independent Legislative Ethics Commission. In Montana, there’s the Commissioner of Political Practices.

Much of what they do isn’t in the realm of specifically passing judgment on cases. The Washington board, for example, regularly considers not only “complaint opinions,” when someone has a problem with a legislator, but also “advisory opinions,” in which legislators (or sometimes others) can inquire about whether doing a particular thing is unethical or not. Call it a reality check.

In none of them is the amount of traffic massively high, and only occasionally do they pop up into news reports; many of the issues they deal with are handled quietly — not under the table, but in negotiation. Sometimes it happens that a legislator wasn’t aware of what the rules are. (Idaho recently made a good move in correcting that, for the first time ever during this cycle, by holding an ethics seminar in advance of the session.) Sometimes a stubborn legislator just needed a little persuading. Sometimes a legislator has moved, maybe unawares, into a gray area, and needs a little nudging. These agencies probably do a lot of good turns for legislators who might have headed off a legal cliff, but were stopped, or at least slowed, before they got there.

To Idaho legislators who take some offense at the idea of needing some kind of external ethics oversight, the simplest response might be: We can all use some good counsel now and then.

To a Family in Iraq, I Owe a Debt I Cannot Repay

I wired $1,000 to a woman in Iraq on New Year’s Eve. I sent it to repay part of a debt that I, and my country, will always owe. As I looked down at the $100 bills, stacked in two piles on the counter of a Western Union in McLean, Va., I was overwhelmed by my inability to do more for this woman. There is no amount of money that can compensate a mother for the loss of her oldest son.

His name was Mohammed; we called him Roy to protect his identity while he accompanied my platoon of scouts and snipers on combat patrols in Baghdad from December 2006 to September 2007. Roy, a mere teenager at the time, was our interpreter and a highly skilled one. He questioned insurgent leaders we had captured; he served as my eyes and ears among the local population; he was like a younger brother to me and the scout team leader responsible for him. Roy died in a house bombing in Diyala province in January of 2008 along with six American soldiers from the platoon that replaced mine in Iraq. I cry every time I write that sentence, just like I cried the first time I spoke with his mom.

It wasn’t easy to find her. After I first wrote about Roy in August 2010, I contacted several general officers, commanding officers from the unit that replaced us, the State Department, even an Army public affairs official in Baghdad, giving them Roy’s name and the date of his death in the hope that someone might find a record with the family’s contact information. It was all to no avail. I felt responsible to tell his mother how important Roy was to us; I wanted to tell her I was sorry.

After three months and no leads, I began to lose hope. But then a retired colonel, who contacted me after my essay “Remembering Roy” ran, was able to connect the dots. He knew a retired three-star general who had led the contracting firm that employed Roy as an interpreter while he served with my unit. On an early January morning nearly three years to the day since Roy was killed, I received an email containing the telephone number of Roy’s mother.

Blake Hall

Special To The Washington Post

I didn’t even know if the number would work. The contracting company had made it clear that the phone number was the only information it would release to me, so I had only one chance left.

I hesitated before calling. Would Roy’s mom hate me? I could understand why she might, but I knew it would hurt me if she said it. I took a shower to gather my thoughts, but when I finished I still didn’t know what I would say. I just dialed the number.

An Arabic song played for several seconds on the line, then static, and then through a slightly garbled connection, I could make out a woman’s voice greeting me in Arabic.

“My name is Blake Hall,” I said in English. “I was a soldier once, and I served with your son Mohammed.”

There was a pause, and when she responded I could hear the stress in her voice. “Mohammed. My son Mohammed? You know Mohammed?”

She asked why I had called her. I told her that I was Naqib (Captain) Hall and that I had worked with her son and had gotten to know and love him. I thanked her for allowing me the privilege of getting to know such a wonderful young man.

She started to cry. She said, “He was a good boy.”

“The best,” I replied, and I began to cry with her. Then I told her, “I’d like to bring you and your family to America.”

I felt compelled to try to obtain asylum for Roy’s family; I knew they were in danger. The unusual circumstances of Roy’s death and his previous prolonged absences while serving with us had brought attention to the family, both from Sunni militias and the Shiite-dominated government security forces. When I told Roy’s mother that my country owed her family a chance for a better life, she called me “her angel.” She said she knew the transition would be difficult for her and her husband, but they wanted Roy’s siblings to have a chance at a better future in the United States.

I’ve talked with her many times since that day on the phone and through instant message. She told me Roy loved me, and that calmed my fear that she would hate me.

I contacted Morrison Foerster, a San Francisco Bay Area law firm recommended to me by the Iraqi Refugee Assistance Project, and it agreed to take on the case pro bono. Two third-year law students from the University of California at Berkeley volunteered to prepare the family’s visa packet. I obtained letters of recommendation from senior officers, including my old battalion commander, now a brigade commander in Afghanistan, and the company commander for the unit that replaced mine.

Over the next few months, I learned about the injustices the family had endured after Roy’s death. They told me that American forces initially refused to allow them onto the base to claim Roy’s remains. They couldn’t wash his body and bury him according to the customs of their religion.

Roy’s body was eventually restored to his family, but the injustices kept mounting. Iraqi security forces at first refused to issue a death certificate – a prerequisite to bury someone in Iraq – because Roy had been killed by a bomb under unclear circumstances. In the eyes of the Iraqi authorities, particularly the Shiite security forces, the manner of his death made it likely that he was a terrorist or a collaborator with the Americans. Thanks to the influence of a U.S. military unit, Roy’s family finally obtained the proper documents.

Congress created a “special immigrant visa” program as part of the Refugee Crisis in Iraq Act of 2008, aimed to relocate tens of thousands of Iraqis – including former interpreters and embassy workers and their families – who helped us during the war. Though a few thousand visas had been issued as of early last year, the process has been painstakingly slow for many, in part because of security concerns in the United States. Now, 10 years after the conflict in Iraq began and more than a year after our last troops departed the country, it’s inexcusable that any of those who risked so much are still waiting.

It has been almost two years since we filed a visa to bring Roy’s family to the United States. I’ve called the FBI; I’ve called the State Department; I’ve called the embassy in Baghdad; I’ve called members of Congress, who have contacted the FBI on our behalf; and Morrison-Foerster and the Iraqi Refugee Assistance Project have made multiple inquiries – yet nothing has happened.

I worry about what might befall Roy’s family. I worry, too, that they will lose hope and feel increasing bitterness toward the nation that asked them for the life of their son, yet gave them nothing in return. So I am left with my monthly visits to Western Union – enabled by the wonderful generosity of strangers – where I wire money to a family who has given this country its most precious gift.

It’s not enough.

Golden Eagles Allowed Fewest Points in 4 Years in Loss to NIC

BY NICK RULAND
nruland@magicvalley.com

TWIN FALLS • Head coach Steve Gosar looked and sounded disappointed after his team's loss to North Idaho College, but not to the extent you'd expect for a man heading a program with expectations of a championship. The Golden Eagles fell to 1-4 in the Scenic West Athletic Conference with their lowest point total in at least four years, 47 after a late flurry. Collectively, CSI believes its compass still points due north even as its point production trends due south. But until point guard Montigo Alford and his offensive pole-shifting talent return from injury, the team is being forced to recalibrate what success means in the short term. Right now it's about getting better for March. "I thought our guys really improved this week," Gosar said. "We had a lot of bright spots, Juwan Newman was great, our defense was great. We really guarded and guys played hard, executed the game plan well. I'm very happy, but we just missed shots. We have to keep getting better." And maybe, in some paradoxical way, Alford's absence winds up making CSI better in the end.

"We have to keep grinding and playing hard, playing for each other. It's a marathon, not a sprint, we have to just keep fighting with each other and stick this out."

Coach Steve Gosar

Without the ability to score easily, CSI had just six assists Saturday night, the Golden Eagles have to do everything else well just to stay competitive. Somehow, despite shooting below 33 percent, missing seven free-throws and turning the ball over 17 times, CSI did just that. North Idaho had its lowest scoring output of the year by 13 points, shooting 32.8 percent. The Golden Eagles did what they've done intermittently all season — pressure the ball and contest shots, expect this time they did it all game. Juwan Newman helped keep the uber-athletic Cardinals from completely dominating the glass and paint — though they did have 15 offensive rebounds — by collecting 16 boards. Billy Reader swatted four shots and CSI had eight blocks overall. It was the fewest points CSI has allowed in any game in at least four years. "We have to keep grinding and playing hard, playing for each other," Gosar. "It's a marathon, not a sprint, we have to just keep fighting with each other and stick this out." If the Golden Eagles start eking out conference games without Alford, they'll likely do it by using their defense to create transition points. CSI didn't score many Saturday night, but Juwan Newman's steal, layup and foul that would have tied the game late had he made his free-throw could set an example of how it's done — how Jon Pulsifer did it before his season-ending injury. "We gotta make the extra pass and play for each other and run," Newman said. "We have to make sure we get transition baskets to make it easier."

MATT BRYANT'S LATE FG LIFTS FALCONS OVER SEATTLE, 30-28

ASSOCIATED PRESS

ATLANTA • Matt Bryant pumped his fist and celebrated atop the Falcons logo in the middle of the field. Tony Gonzalez broke down in tears. Matt Ryan relished the thought of not having to answer a familiar question.

The Atlanta Falcons finally showed they could win a playoff game.

And, wow, what a game it was!

After a meltdown in the fourth quarter, the Falcons pulled off a comeback that will long be remembered in championship-starved Atlanta. Ryan completed two long passes and Bryant kicked a 49-yard field goal with 8 seconds remaining, lifting the NFC's top seed to a stunning 30-28 victory over Russell Wilson and the gummy Seattle Seahawks in a divisional game Sunday.

"Wow!" said Falcons coach Mike Smith, summing up this classic as well as anyone could.

Atlanta (14-3) squandered a 20-point lead in the fourth quarter, falling behind for the first time all day when Marshawn Lynch scored on a 2-yard run with 31 seconds left and Ryan Longwell knocked through the extra point for a 28-27 lead.

No team has ever won a playoff game when facing such a daunting deficit in the final period.

The Falcons, thanks to a pair of Matty Ices — Ryan and Bryant — didn't become the first.

Ryan, shaking off his struggles in three previous playoff losses and two interceptions against the Seahawks, hooked up with Harry Douglas on a 29-yard pass in front of the Falcons bench, and Smith quickly signaled a timeout. Then, Ryan went down the middle to his favorite target Gonzalez, a Hall of Famer-to-be playing what could've been his final game.

Gonzalez hauled in the 19-yard throw, and Smith called his final timeout with 13 seconds remaining. Instead of risking another play and having the clock run out, he sent Bryant in for the field goal try.

The Seahawks called time just before the ball was snapped, and Bryant's kick sailed right of the upright. That turned out to be nothing more than practice. The next one was right down the middle as Bryant took off in the other direction, pumping his fist before he was mobbed by his teammates.

"Our quarterback is a special player," Smith said. "They call him Matty Ice, but I feel like we've got two Matty Ices. There's Matty Ice Ryan and Matty Ice Bryant."

PATRIOTS 41, RAVENS 28 FOXBOROUGH, Mass. • Tom Brady is so good at this playoff thing he seems to be going for a championship every year.

He gets another chance to lead the Patriots to the Super Bowl after earning his record 17th postseason victory in New England's 41-28 victory over Houston Sunday. Brady even outdid his childhood hero, Joe Montana, and a fourth NFL championship would equal Montana's haul.

"I love playing, I love competing, I love being a part of this organization," said Brady, who threw for three touchdowns and 344 yards. "I think I've just been fortunate to play on some great teams over the years. I never take it for granted."

SATURDAY'S LATE GAME 49ERS 45, PACKERS 31 SAN FRANCISCO • The unproven kid thoroughly beat the former Super Bowl champion and reigning MVP.

With a strong arm that allowed him to pick the Packers apart from the pocket and speedy legs that helped him break free for big gains, Colin Kaepernick did a little bit of everything in a record-setting, sensational playoff debut — and Aaron Rodgers just couldn't keep up.

Kaepernick passed for 263 yards and ran the San Francisco 49ers right back to the NFC championship game with a 45-31 win over Green Bay in an NFC divisional game Saturday night.

Kaepernick rushed for 181 yards and two touchdowns and threw two scoring passes to Michael Crabtree. Next up for the Niners: a game on Jan. 20 for a spot in the Super Bowl, against the winner of Sunday's game between the Seattle Seahawks and Falcons at Atlanta.

"It feels good. We're one step closer to where we want to be," Kaepernick said. "I feel like I had a lot to prove. A lot of people doubted my ability to lead this team."

CAREGIVER

I do in-home private care. I have 18 yrs exp. I will care for all your personal needs. I am dependable, trustworthy, CNA & med certified. I live in the Burley area but will travel to Twin Falls for full-time position. Pam 438-4616 or 431-4494

IF JANUARY 14 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY: It is easy to be overly innocent and naive during the next several weeks. It may help you to remember that most people don't give anything away for free without expecting something in return. Ignore enticing temptations that might waste your time or entangle your heart during the next four to six weeks. By late May, you will be in a position to call your own shots. Not only will you be able to make valuable connections during May and June, but your vision of the future and your judgment will be at their zenith, too. That is a good time to launch your favorite projects, connect with people who can help you succeed, or make key business decisions.

HOROSCOPE

Jeraldine Saunders

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You may be the big fish in your local pond — or vice versa. In either case, you will be happiest when mingling with like-minded people who share the same beliefs or work together to promote popular causes.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Step up to bat. Be prepared to take charge of financial situations that seem to slide out of control. You shouldn't make crucial changes at the moment, but you can get organized and make friends.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Beware of telling half-truths since someone might grab the wrong half. To earn someone's high regard and mend fences, you must be sincere. Earn gold stars for being polite and using good judgment.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): The large dog wagging its tail halfheartedly may be more helpful and supportive than the small dog wagging its tail off in joy. Don't be put off by those who seem overly businesslike and unapproachable.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Kindness and generosity are gender neutral. You may meet someone of either sex who supports your goals and offers encouragement. Use your command of sincere and encouraging words to bring others closer.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Develop expertise and creativity. Use diplomacy to overcome minor controversies. Co-workers may offer constructive criticisms — or at least provide a testing ground so that you can improve a project.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Sprinkle plenty of "please" and "thank you" everywhere you go and like Hansel and Gretel, you will easily find your way out of a forest of trouble. This could be a good day to make amends or earn respect.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Extricate yourself from a rut. If you have been sitting at a desk all day, every day, get exercise even if it's just a walk at the mall. If you have been on your feet too long, pull up the easy chair and rest.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Live and learn. Take time to be thankful for beauty and harmony in your life. Sometimes when you are busy looking for a pot of gold, you may fail to appreciate the splendor of the rainbow.

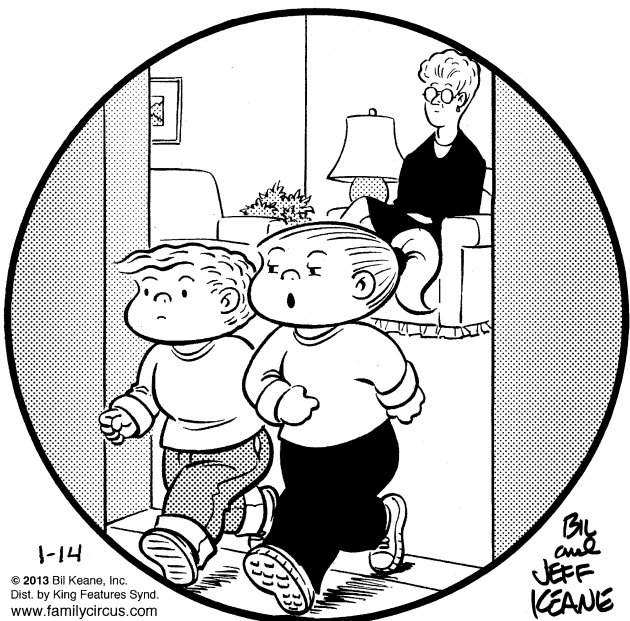

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Do well whatever you do best. Do only what makes you happy and you will find it easy to excel. Be discriminating; choose to ally yourself with co-workers and family members whom you are proud to know.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Wrap yourself in a security blanket. Your financial prospects will take a step in the right direction as soon as you feel fulfilled and secure. Frequent changes of direction can cause setbacks.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): The humble bee flits from flower to flower to fill itself with nectar. In the same way, you could be dissatisfied with one subject and flit from one idea to the next, gathering fuel for future use.

ANSWER: There are two approaches here. You can go for what might be described as the “instant gratification” approach of leading the spade king. Typically this either works and sets the hand or costs your side a critical trick. The passive approach of leading a club is the other way to go. I’d choose the club lead myself.

DEAR ABBY
Jeanne Phillips

DEAR ABBY: My son “Timmy” has a playmate from down the street I’ll call “Bobby.” I’m happy that Timmy has someone to play with, but Bobby’s parents haven’t taught him good manners. Even though Bobby is only 6, he does not have a curfew. He has stayed at our house as late as 10:30 at night without his parents coming after him or calling to ask me to send him home.

Also, Abby, I did not invite Bobby to my 4-year-old daughter’s birthday party because it was for her and her little friends. Well, Bobby, his older sister and a friend of hers showed up anyway! I didn’t have enough favors for the extra children. I was able to stretch the food, but I was aggravated that his parents didn’t have enough respect for me to stop their children from crashing my daughter’s birthday.

I was brought up to leave my friends’ homes when it was dinnertime, but these children don’t want to go home even when I ask them to leave so we can have our dinner. They beg to stay and eat with us.

How can parents be so inconsiderate as to allow their children to come over any-time and stay as long as they like? I want it to stop, but I don’t want to cause hard feelings. How do I handle this?

— IMPOSED UPON
IN OKLAHOMA

DEAR IMPOSED UPON: There is usually a good reason why children don’t want to go home. Has it occurred to you that Bobby’s parent(s) may be drunk, stoned or absent?

If a parent is reachable, explain to him or her that at your house you have a regular dinner hour and that it is family time. Guests must go home then, unless they have been specifically invited to stay. Also, after-dinner play-time is over at 8:30 p.m. and guests must go home by then — but not walk alone after dark.

It may turn out that your son’s playmate is a latchkey kid or being neglected. If the latter is true, then Child Protective Services should be notified.

DEAR ABBY: I am a woman who is more than 50 pounds overweight. It didn’t happen overnight, and I completely understand that I am the only person to blame for it. I gained the weight because of years of unhealthy eating, lack of exercise and the birth of my two daughters over a period of six years.

Recently I decided to do something about it. I took the initiative, adopted a sensible diet and have started walking two to three miles a day with my friend, “Shannon.”

Abby, on almost every occasion, Shannon and I are made fun of as we walk. It’s embarrassing and extremely discouraging. We realize we are overweight. We don’t need people calling attention to us or making fun of the “fat girls.” Won’t you please let your readers know that struggling with weight loss is hard enough without adding the fear and anxiety of being made a laughingstock while exercising?

— LOSING SLOWLY IN OHIO

DEAR LOSING SLOWLY: I applaud you for recognizing you had a challenge and rising (literally) to meet it. When I see someone who’s carrying extra weight walking or working out at a gym, what comes to mind is, “There’s a person who is doing something positive about his or her problem.”

Because a jackass brays doesn’t mean you have to take it to heart. The individuals making those unkind remarks are trying to make themselves feel superior by putting you down. Please don’t let it discourage you. You’re on the right track.

Dear Abby is written by Abigail Van Buren, also known as Jeanne Phillips, and was founded by her mother, Pauline Phillips. Write Dear Abby at www.DearAbby.com or P.O. Box 69440, Los Angeles, CA 90069.

Today is Monday, Jan. 14, the 14th day of 2013. There are 351 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight:
On Jan. 14, 1963, George C. Wallace was sworn in as governor of Alabama; his inaugural address included the ringing declaration, "Segregation today, segregation to-morrow, segregation forever!" — a view Wallace came to repudiate in later years.

TODAY IN HISTORY

On this date:
In 1784, the United States ratified a peace treaty with England, ending the Revolutionary War.

In 1858, Napoleon III, Emperor of the French, and his wife, Empress Eugenie, escaped an assassination attempt led by Italian revolutionary Felice Orsini, who was later captured and executed.

In 1900, Puccini's opera "Tosca" had its world premiere in Rome.

In 1943, President Franklin D. Roosevelt, British Prime Minister Winston Churchill and French General Charles de Gaulle opened a wartime conference in Casablanca.

In 1952, NBC's "Today" show premiered, with Dave Garroway as the host, or "communicator."

In 1953, Josip Broz Tito was elected president of Yugoslavia by the country's Parliament.

In 1963, Sylvia Plath's semi-autobiographical novel "The Bell Jar" was published in London under the pen name "Victoria Lucas," less than a month before Plath committed suicide.

In 1968, the Green Bay Packers of the NFL defeated the AFL's Oakland Raiders, 33-14, in Super Bowl II.

In 1969, 27 people aboard the aircraft carrier USS Enterprise, off Hawaii, were killed when a rocket warhead exploded, setting off a fire and additional explosions.

In 1973, the Miami Dolphins of the AFC defeated the Washington Redskins of the NFC 14-7 to win Super Bowl VII. (This game featured the notorious "Garof Gaffe" by Dolphins kicker Garo Yepremian that resulted in a Redskins touchdown.)

In 1989, President Ronald Reagan delivered his 331st and final weekly White House radio address, telling listeners, "Believe me, Saturdays will never seem the same. I'll miss you."

In 1993, TV talk show host David Letterman announced he was moving from NBC to CBS.

Ten years ago: Kmart Corp. announced its biggest round of cutbacks yet, saying it would close 326 more stores and eliminate 37,000 more jobs in hopes of getting out of bankruptcy by the end of April 2003. (Kmart emerged from Chapter 11 protection in May 2003.) Thousands of General Electric Co. employees across the country began a two-day strike to protest higher health insurance costs.

Five years ago: Republican Bobby Jindal, the first elected Indian-American governor in the United States, took office in Louisiana. Alvaro Colom was sworn in as Guatemala's first leftist president in more than 50 years.

One year ago: Rescue workers scrambled aboard the stricken Costa Concordia cruise liner, seeking to help some 4,200 passengers the day after the ship ran aground and tipped over off Italy's Tuscan coast; the death toll from the tragedy eventually reached 25 with seven missing and presumed dead. Miss Wisconsin Laura Kaeppler won the Miss America pageant in Las Vegas.
