Hurlock Blasted by Opponents

Senate committee will vote on Hurlock's Fish and Game Commission appointment at its Wednesday meeting.

BOISE • Joan Hurlock has fished all her life. She remembers accompanying her father on some of his outings as a California Fish and Game commissioner, and playing in the woods near her house with her dog. This fall, she took her son on an elk hunt.

But is that enough to qualify her to serve on the Idaho Fish and Game Commission?

On Monday, the Senate Resources and Conservation Committee held a confirmation hearing for Hurlock, whom Gov. C.L. "Butch" Otter appointed to the Fish and Game Commission. The hearing focused largely on Hurlock's qualifications and experience, with senators quizzing her on her beliefs and sportsmen testifying for and against her.

Hurlock is the second female Fish and Game Commission appointee in the state's history. A California native, Hurlock has lived in Buhl for 10 years. She is a lifetime member of the National Rifle Association and a former member of Ducks Unlimited and the Audubon Society.

Joan Hurlock listens to testimony before the Senate Resources and Environment Committee on Monday in Boise.

Hurlock has faced criticism for being a California native and for not getting a hunting license every year she has lived in Idaho.

"As children, we don't get to choose where we were born and where we were raised," she said during the confirmation hearing. But, she emphasized, as an adult she chose to live in Idaho, largely because of its outdoor opportunities.

Committee members grilled Hurlock on her views on wolves, ATVs, private property access and salmon. Sen. Michelle Stennett, D-Ketchum, pointed out that this type questioning wasn't normal for gubernatorial appointees.

Convicted Home Invader Gets 15 to Life in Prison

BY ALISON GENE SMITH

TWIN FALLS • Prison probably won't help 20-year-old Dylan Contreras. At least not in the eyes of Twin Falls County District Judge Randy Stoker, who sentenced Contreras to 15 years to life in prison Monday for an August home invasion robbery.

Stoker said he doubted prison time would change Contreras and didn't believe the sentence would deter anyone from committing a similar crime.

Still, Twin Falls County Deputy Prosecutor Rosemary Emory argued, society must be protected, and Contreras should be punished for his crime.

Stoker said Contreras, an apparent gang member, hasn't disavowed his gang membership and is likely to remain a gang member in prison for the rest of his life unless he dramatically changes his view of the world.

"If that's a decision you want to make, that's fine with me," Stoker said.

THE COLD REALITY OF HEATING BILLS

BY LAURIE WELCH

RUPERT • Residents across Mini-Cassia are reeling after opening heating cost bills for the cold, cold month of January.

An inversion that lasted for weeks thrust heating costs for the month of January into the stratosphere, leaving some residents worrying about how to meet the financial burden.

"I went into the (Rupert) city office this morning to ask about my bill and there were a lot of other people in there asking about the same thing," said LaMar Smith on

Curious Mind

Brian Olmstead, general manager of the Twin Falls Canal Co., explores in May 2008 one of the tunnels built to drain waterlogged farmland in the 1920s.

The Tunnels below Twin Falls

I have heard there are seepage tunnels under the city of Twin Falls. How big are they? Were they necessary? How do they work? Do they work? Who paid for them? Who engineered them? Is their location a secret? Can you see them? Does the county know where they are?

Kimberly Williams-Brackett

farm in 1913, he said, near where Lamb Weston is now. The drainage crisis climaxed in 1923 when U.S. Highway 30 flooded with seepage water three miles west of Buhl. Between 1926 and 1951, the canal company blasted 21.5 miles of drainage tunnels through the basalt rock.

It was the last of several attempted solutions. Seepage water began to cause problems in 1911, after seven years of irrigation on the Twin Falls tract. In a 1914 seepage report, engineer W.C. Sloan found the water table had risen at an average rate of 21.6 feet per year because the surrounding land could not drain the water as fast as new water trickled in. The desert became a swamp, ruining crops and rendering thousands of acres of land useless. Land values dropped rapidly. Hundreds of hand-dug trenches and miles of seep tile were installed to salvage the flooded land. This process was slow, expensive and had marginal results. In 1918, the canal company purchased four well-drilling rigs and drilled wells through layers of lava rock to a depth of at least 60 feet. Connecting these wells with seep tiles proved to be more effective. The well drills ran 24 hours a day, seven days a week. In the early 1920s, the company acquired two P&H shovels that allowed workers to dig deeper trenches in less time. Deeper drains helped, but a method to drain larger areas was still needed. This need spawned the tunnels.

The company blasted test holes in 1924 in the wall of Rock Creek Canyon where water was running out of crevices, causing 75 inches of water to gush out. By 1926, four tunnels were being drilled into lava rock. Workers drilled wells into the tunnels about 100 feet apart and about 50 feet deep. Those allowed each tunnel to intercept and drain water from both above and below its floor. Finally, an effective drainage method had been found. The company built a total of 51 tunnels, most measuring about 5 feet wide and 6 feet high. They range in length from 100 feet to more than a mile. As many as 10 tunnels were under construction at one time. The first tunnels were dug at $7.50 per foot; the last two tunnels cost $27.50 per foot. Seven men died building them between 1933-42, and the company spent more than $2 million on drainage work. “The canal company spent almost as much money building Milner Dam, Murtaugh Lake, and the entire tile and tunnel drainage system,” said Brian Olmstead, the current general manager. “It almost broke the company.” Pick and shovel workers dug drainage trenches, often forming work camps as large as 75 men. Today, all of the tunnels still run water and they remain almost exactly as they were made. All of the tunnels are on private property. None are marked and they are not accessible to the public. One funnels water from the South Park area to the College of Southern Idaho's Rock Creek fish hatchery. The reclaimed water is used for both agriculture and aquaculture, Olmstead said. History buffs can learn more about what Olmstead calls “the story that almost got lost” at a historical display at the canal company's Twin Falls office, 357 6th Ave. W. The display features two ore carts used to build the tunnels.

We had one weather-related holiday over the weekend with Groundhog Day. But did you know there is a second weather-related day that recognizes the men and women who collectively provide Americans with the best weather, water, and climate forecasts and warning services of any nation? This day is today, Feb. 5: National Weatherpersons Day. The day commemorates the 1744 birth of John Jeffries, who was one of America's first weather observers. Idaho's First News Weather Authority team is honored to provide southern Idaho with weather each and every day and we thank you all for your support. The weather forecast for the next few days looks to be fairly quiet and even a little mild. The weak inversion continues through today. This will keep morning fog and some low clouds around through the first half of the day. Like we said on Monday, by midday we will see more in the way of sunshine and could get temperatures to reach the low to mid-40s in the afternoon. A weak system passes by tonight into Wednesday. The valley stays mostly dry but a few snow showers are possible in the northern mountains. The weather remains quiet until Thursday night and Friday when a cold front will swing through, bringing a chance of snow for the end of the week and part of the weekend.

ALLEGED VICTIM IN SHOVEL ATTACK WAS PUT IN A COMA

alismsmith@magicvalley.com

TWIN FALLS • A man whom police say was severely injured after being attacked with a weight and a shovel was then placed in a medically induced coma for three days, according to a police report.

On Jan. 23, police responded to the 800 block of Arrow Wood Court in Twin Falls for a call about a battery. According to the report, officers arrived to find a man covered in a large amount of blood with large, open wounds on his face and head.

The man was able to communicate only that he was in a fight with another man who was involved in a domestic dispute, the report states.

Police described the scene as having blood spatter, a pool of blood and bloody footprints throughout the house.

The weight and shovel allegedly used in the attack were also covered in blood, the report states.

The man was taken to St. Luke's Magic Valley Medical Center, where doctors determined he had internal injuries from what appeared to be blunt force trauma. The man was taken for emergency surgery and kept in a medically induced coma until Jan. 26.

James Marquez, 37, was detained at the scene and was transported to St. Luke's for a cut on his hand, the report states.

After he was released, Marquez was taken to the Twin Falls Police Department and was interviewed. He was later arrested and charged with aggravated battery causing great bodily harm or disability.

In his version of events, Marquez told police he fought with the alleged victim but said the alleged victim threw the first punch, the report states.

In the report, Marquez told police the other man put him in a headlock, so Marquez picked up a small exercise weight and struck the man in the face to get him to let go. The police report states that Marquez said he hit the other man with a shovel because the other man continued to fight him.

Two women at the scene told police that Marquez and his wife, one of the women, had a domestic dispute, the report states. The women said the alleged victim intervened in the dispute and then the two women locked themselves in a bathroom in the home. The two said they didn't hear the fight.

After being taken out of the medically induced coma, the alleged victim told police that Marquez hit him after he intervened in the dispute. The man told police that Marquez talked about killing him, and he repeatedly pleaded with Marquez to stop while being struck with the weight.

The man told police he lost consciousness during the fight, the report states. When he regained consciousness he tried to get away through the garage, but the report states that Marquez allegedly began hitting him repeatedly with a shovel.

Police concluded that physical evidence at the scene lined up more with the alleged victim's story than Marquez's, according to the report.

Marquez's bond was set at $50,000. Online jail records show he bonded out Friday evening. A preliminary hearing is scheduled for Feb. 11.

LDS Missionaries Flock to Utah Clothing Stores

BY ANNIE KNOX
Associated Press

SALT LAKE CITY • David Steed favors eye-catching neck ties and strives to always plan in advance.

Both came in handy for the 18-year-old Steed on a Friday afternoon at Mr. Mac, a Utah store specializing in clothing for missionaries.

Steed is one of a growing number of young men and women contributing to a boom among Utah stores catering to young missionaries after The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints lowered the minimum age for missionaries in October from 21 to 19 for women and from 19 to 18 for men.

Steed and his parents spent the afternoon at the downtown Salt Lake City store picking out clothing for his two-year stint as a missionary in Tacoma, Wash.

"I feel like I just want to go right now," he said, eyeing a red silk paisley tie.

Applications for new missions are up two-fold since the announcement, with older missionaries and new, younger missionaries planning to go out at the same time. About half of all new applications to go on missions have been from women, the church says. Previously, only 15 percent of missionaries were women.

That change has hiked demand for conservative, knee-length dresses and skirts for young women missionaries, known as "sister missionaries." Sales remain brisk for the customary kit for men, too: two suits, a few pairs of slacks, a dozen shirts.

Since the church's October announcement about the lowered age for missionaries, sales at Mr. Mac's downtown store have risen by a quarter, said store owner Stuart Christensen. Online sales have hiked 40 percent. Sales for women's clothing have risen exponentially, he said, but constitute a small sliver of the store's total business.

He plans to bulk up the women's section to include more dresses, skirts and shoes, and has remodeled his stores with more women's fitting rooms.

Salespeople at The Limited and Anne Taylor stores in a downtown Salt Lake City mall said they have also seen a boost in the number of women shopping for missionary clothing.

Sales are at pre-recession levels at the Sister Missionary store in Orem, said owner Jenni Theobald. At the Missionary Mall, a store with men's missionary clothes she co-owns with her husband, business is up by nearly a third.

However, there is a downside to all these young Mormons heading out on missions: Three of Theobald's favorite employees are young women who will leave in March to serve missions in California, Texas and the Philippines.

Stores are altering their inventory, too, to accommodate younger men and more women. Brad Prebble, a salesman at the Mr. Mac in downtown Salt Lake City, said the store has placed more orders for smaller sized suits since the announcement in October.

"It's amazing," he said. "Some of those 18-year-olds are just little lads."

Mr. Mac stocks clothing for all climates year-round: wool jackets in summer, shorts in winter. Prebble said he expects sister missionaries will flood the store in spring. The women's section now includes a few dozen calf-length skirts and dresses, some tiered with hot-pink piping, others in earthier reds and browns.

In anticipation of a wave of women going on missions, Theobald said she will incorporate current trends like collar styles, pastels and floral patterns into the skirts and dresses Sister Missionary is producing for the spring.

"You can still be fashionable and be a missionary," she said.

Theobald said she would like to open more Sister Missionary stores in Utah and other states including Arizona and California, but will wait to determine if the influx in female shoppers will stay constant.

Steed, the 18-year-old shopper, opted for a few yellow ties instead of the red paisley one.

"I love paisley, but I've got to go with a more conservative tie," he said. "Of course, a mission's not about the fashion. A mission isn't about how good you look. It's the spirit that you bring to the hearts of the people."

"... a mission's not about the fashion. A mission isn't about how good you look. It's the spirit that you bring to the hearts of the people."

Reeder Flying Service Gets New Owners

BY ANDREW WEEKS
aweeks@magicvalley.com

TWIN FALLS • Before there was Joslin Field, Magic Valley Regional Airport, a Twin Falls family named Reeder used to operate aircraft on a ranch south of town.

For the next three generations, the family built their business into Reeder Flying Service. Now, that legacy will pass from the family to a new group of owners.

New Reeder owners Alan Anderson, Jack Hunsaker and David Price, all Magic Valley residents, will be welcomed by city, county and airport officials at an 11 a.m. celebration today at the airport.

"The previous owners built a great business and we appreciate the opportunity to take that over," said Price, a pilot who also is a partner in several local businesses.

"We are quite diversified," he said, noting that he and his two partners plan to build onto the legacy the Reeder family have established over the years.

"I can't but feel a bit nostalgic because three generations of the Reeder family have served our airport," said Bill Carberry, airport manager. "But I am excited for the new group, who seem to be cut from the same mold as the Reeder."

The Reeder family couldn't be reached for comment in time for this article.

Carberry said he expects the same type of service clients have become accustomed to over the years. And the new owners have kept all of Reeder's current employees.

"The owners bought the company but everyone stays employed," said Jared VanderKooi, general manager of fixed-base operations.

VanderKooi is new to Reeder. He said the company will retain a community-oriented focus and would eventually like to add to its services. Reeder currently offers car rentals, chartered helicopter flights and a heli-ski operation in Sun Valley. It helps with hotel bookings and recently added a fourth helicopter to its fleet, VanderKooi said.

"The big thing going on is that we're looking to grow, looking to expand operations," he said. A couple of goals are to further expand its fleet and establish an executive hangar.

"The airport is the gateway to the community," he said. "We're the first thing people see when they come here, so we want to make sure we're taking good care of them."

Beer Will Help Power Alaska Brewery

BY JOSHUA BERLINGER
Associated Press

JUNEAU, Alaska • The Alaskan Brewing Co. is going green, but instead of looking to solar and wind energy, it has turned to a very familiar source: beer.

The Juneau-based beer maker has installed a unique boiler system in order to cut its fuel costs. It purchased a $1.8 million furnace that burns the company's spent grain — the waste accumulated from the brewing process — into steam which powers the majority of the brewery's operations.

Company officials now joke they are now serving "beer-powered beer."

What to do with spent grain was seemingly solved decades ago by breweries operating in the Lower 48. Most send the used grain, a good source of protein, to nearby farms and ranches to be used as animal feed.

But there are only 37 farms in southeast Alaska and 680 in the entire state as of 2011, and the problem of what to do with the excess spent grain — made up of the residual malt and barley — became more problematic after the brewery expanded in 1995.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

Brandon Smith, the brewing operations and engineering manager, checks on the boiler on Jan. 23 at the Alaskan Brewing Co. in Juneau, Alaska.

The Alaskan Brewing Co. had to resort to shipping its spent grain to buyers in the Lower 48. Shipping costs for Juneau businesses are especially high because there are no roads leading in or out of the city; everything has to be flown or shipped in. However, the grain is a relatively wet byproduct of the brewing process, so it needs to be dried before it is shipped — another heat intensive and expensive process.

"We had to be a little more innovative just so that we could do what we love to do, but do it where we're located," Alaskan Brewing co-founder Geoff Larson said.

But the company was barely turning a profit by selling its spent grain. Alaskan Brewery gets $60 for every ton of it sent to farms in the Lower 48, but it costs them $30 to ship each ton.

So four years ago, officials at the Alaskan Brewing Co. started looking at whether it could use spent grain as an in-house, renewable energy source and reduce costs at the same time.

While breweries around the world use spent grain as a co-fuel in energy recovery systems, "nobody was burning spent grain as a sole fuel source for an energy recovery system, for a steam boiler," says Brandon Smith, the company's brewing operations and engineering manager.

It contracted with a North Dakota company to build the special boiler system after the project was awarded nearly $500,000 in a grant from the federal Rural Energy for America Program.

The craft brewery is expecting big savings once the system is fully operational in about a month's time. Smith estimates that the spent grain steam boiler will offset the company's yearly energy costs by 70 percent, which amounts to about $450,000 a year.

Dorothy also worked part time in the accounting office of the family business, Magic Valley Electric Supply, until retirement in 1980. Dorothy was a wonderful cook and loved to work in her manicured yard and garden. She was a prolific reader and a master of the crossword puzzle.

She was preceded in death by all her brothers; her son, Michael; and grandchild, Axel Makin. Dorothy is survived by her husband, Neil Makin; son, Mark (Tamara) Makin; and grandchildren, Stryder and Steeley Makin.

Following her wishes, no service will be held, but she would like to be remembered in the hearts of those that knew her as a fun-loving soul and hope that this might bring a smile into their lives.

In lieu of flowers, Dorothy would prefer a donation to the American Heart Association, 350 N. Ninth St., No. 404, Boise, ID 83702, in honor of her grandson, Axel; or to the Alzheimer's Research Fund, 225 N. Michigan Ave., Floor 17, Chicago, IL 60601, in honor of her husband, Neil.

David Alan Pember

Sept. 5, 1947-Feb. 2, 2013

GLENNS FERRY • With the geese having flown, David Alan Pember followed their lead and, with wings spread wide, passed on Saturday, Feb. 2, 2013.

David was born Sept. 5, 1947, to Walt and Marylou Pember. He was raised on a farm in Buhl, Idaho, with three sisters and a brother, where he learned to love the great outdoors and the purpose of hard work. After graduating from Buhl High School, he attended Idaho State University and joined the Idaho National Guard in 1965, where he served his country for six years. In August 1968, he married Suzie, his wife of 44 years. They eventually settled in Glenns Ferry, Idaho, and raised three daughters. This remained his permanent home until his passing.

He received his degree in crop and soil technology and, after years of hard work, he achieved his dream of owning his own business, "Dave's Lawn and Garden." He took pride in the services he provided for his friends, neighbors and community. He was always very active in sports. In his younger years, he loved playing fast-pitch baseball but settled for softball as he got older. He enjoyed cheering on his girls in high school and college, as well as coaching the Pony League baseball team.

David had a love for hunting, fishing, music, dancing and community service. He served on the Glenns Ferry Planning and Zoning Committee and also on the city council.

He is preceded in death by his parents; a sister; and his favorite dog, "Chancy." He is greatly missed and survived by his wife, Suzie; daughters, Marcee; Pamela and Jeannie; three grandchildren; and a large extended family.

His family wanted to extend a special thanks to all his doctors, providers and caregivers. He received excellent care throughout.

A service will be held at 2 p.m. Saturday, Feb. 9, at the Glenns Ferry School in Glenns Ferry.

In lieu of flowers, the family requests donations be made to Mountain States Tumor Institute, Health Foundation, 190 E. Bannock, Boise, ID 83712.

Arrangements are under the direction of Rost Funeral Home, McMurtrey Chapel in Mountain Home.

SENIOR

Q. I'm thinking about retiring from my job, but I'm not quite ready. I've always heard that it is best to "retire to" something. Ideas?

A. Experts suggest that people think about retirement long before they actually do it. Retirement is a major life transition that is about much more than money. Retirement is about leaving one phase of life and moving into another. You may literally retire overnight; or you may reduce the time you spend working and increase the time you spend doing other things. Attitude and self-awareness are keys to your ability to effectively manage your retirement. Consider what you'd like to do when you stop working. Can you put some of "it" in your life while you are still working? For example, given more free time, would you expand existing hobbies and sports activities, or begin new ones? Would you volunteer more time to an organization or your church? Why not start now on a small scale? Make this transition time an opportunity to explore and grow. Enjoy!

AT A GLANCE

Experts Find Remains of Richard III

LEICESTER, England (AP) • He was king of England, but for centuries he lay without shroud or coffin in an un-known grave, and his name became a byword for villainy.

On Monday, scientists announced they had rescued the remains of Richard III from anonymity — and the monarch's fans hope a revival of his reputation will soon follow.

Lead archaeologist Richard Butler said that a battery of tests proved “beyond reasonable doubt” that the remains were the king's.

Lin Foxhall, head of the university's school of archaeology, said the discovery “could end up rewriting a little bit of history in a big way.”

Few monarchs have seen their reputations decline as much after death as Richard III. He ruled England between 1483 and 1485, during the decades-long battle over the throne known as the Wars of the Roses, which pitted two wings of the ruling Plantagenet dynasty - York and Lancaster - against one another.

His brief reign saw liberal reforms, including the introduction of the right to bail and the lifting of restrictions on books and printing presses.

Monkey Business? U.S. Uncertain about Iran’s Space Claims

WASHINGTON (AP) • The United States expressed doubt on Monday about Iran's claim that it safely returned a monkey from space, saying it is questionable that the monkey survived — or if the flight happened at all.

State Department spokeswoman Victoria Nuland said a lot of questions remained “about whether the monkey that they reportedly sent up into space and reportedly came down was actually the same monkey, whether he survived.”

“The Iranians said they sent a monkey, but the monkey that they showed later seemed to have different facial features,” Nuland told reporters. “He was missing a little wart.”

Obama Presses for Gun Control in Minnesota

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) • With his gun proposals dividing Congress, President Barack Obama took his case for universal background checks and for banning some military-style weapons to the upper Midwest on Monday, looking to build public support for his measures and to apply pressure on lawmakers.

Obama argued that there's bipartisan support for a system to undertake criminal checks on gun buyers and for gun trafficking laws but, acknowledging the political challenges he faces, would only say that the assault weapons ban deserves a vote in Congress.

“We don't have to agree on everything to agree it's time to do something,” he said.

An Ozark, Ala., ambulance carries the boy named Ethan out of the area where a gunman held him hostage since last Tuesday.

AUTHORITIES STORM ALABAMA BUNKER, RESCUE YOUNG BOY

MIDLAND CITY, Ala. (AP) • Authorities stormed an underground bunker Monday in Alabama, freeing a 5-year-old boy and leaving his increasingly agitated captor dead after a week of fruitless negotiations that left authorities convinced the child was in imminent danger.

Jimmy Lee Dykes, 65, had taken the child off a school bus after fatally shooting the driver. He was known by neighbors for his anti-government rants and for patrolling his property with a gun, ready to shoot trespassers. He had stayed for several days in the tiny bunker before.

“He always said he'd never be taken alive. I knew he'd never come out of there,” said an acquaintance, Roger Arnold.

Dykes was seen with a gun, and officers concluded the boy was in imminent danger, said Steve Richardson of the FBI's office in Mobile. It was not immediately clear how authorities determined the man had a gun, or exactly how Dykes died.

Late Monday, officers were sweeping the property to make sure Dykes had not set up any bombs that could detonate. Full details of the bunker raid had not yet emerged. However, neighbors described hearing what sounded like gunshots around the time officials said they entered the shelter.

Michael Senn, pastor of a church near where reporters camped out since the standoff began, said he was relieved the child was taken to safety. However, he also recalled the bus driver, Charles Albert Poland Jr., who had been hailed as a hero for protecting nearly two dozen other children on the bus before being shot by Dykes.

“As we rejoice tonight for (the boy) and his family, we still have a great emptiness in our community because a great man was lost in this whole ordeal,” Senn said.

The rescue capped a long drama that drew national attention to this town of 2,400 people nestled amid peanut farms and cotton fields that has long relied on a strong Christian faith, a policy of “love thy neighbor” and the power of group prayer. The child's plight prompted nightly candle-light vigils.

Throughout the ordeal, authorities had been speaking with Dykes though a plastic pipe that went into the shelter. They also sent food, medicine and other items into the bunker, which apparently had running water, heat and cable television but no toilet. It was about 4 feet underground, with about 50 square feet of floor space.

Authorities said the kindergartner appeared unharmed. He was taken to a hospital in nearby Dothan. Officials have said he has Asperger's syndrome and attention deficit hyperactivity disorder.

Melissa Knighton, city clerk in Midland City, said a woman had been praying in the town center Monday afternoon. Not long after, the mayor called with news that Dykes was dead and that the boy was safe.

“She must have had a direct line to God because shortly after she left, they heard the news,” Knighton said.

Neighbors described Dykes as a menacing, unpredictable man who once beat a dog to death with a lead pipe. Government records indicate he served in the Navy from 1964 to 1969, earning several awards, including the Vietnam Service Medal and the Good Conduct Medal.

OBITUARIES

Audrey Davis

April 27, 1940-Jan. 31, 2013

PASCO, Wash. • Audrey peacefully returned to her Heavenly Father on Thursday, Jan. 31, 2013, after a long, hard-fought battle with cancer. She will be greatly missed by her family members and friends as she was always a pillar of love and strength.

Audrey was born April 27, 1940, in Ainsworth, Neb., to Emma Darline (Runyan) and Victor Simon Dutton. She was the second child with older (Jerline) and younger (Sharon) sisters. The three sisters were lifelong friends. Growing up on a farm enabled the sisters to be outside and play together. Audrey enjoyed helping her father with the calves and occasionally driving the tractor. Audrey attended school in Buhl, Idaho, where she was a cheerleader, participated in band playing the clarinet and met her future husband, David (Chandler) Davis.

The couple lived in Pocatello, Idaho, while David was attending Idaho State University. In 1960, they packed up with their two children, Tim and Shawna, and moved to Connell, Wash., in the Columbia Basin. They worked with Dave's father, pioneer farmer BC Davis. Dave and Audrey were original members of the Connell LDS Ward. In 1964 to 1965, the family moved (including Karin and Dan) to the family dairy farm north of Castleford, Idaho. A special highlight was the family being sealed in the Logan Utah Temple on May 20, 1964, for time and all eternity.

In 1972, the family (now with an addition of Megan) moved to Block 15 north of Pasco, Wash. The Davis family was very involved in the LDS Columbia Basin Ward from 1972 to 1986, then as the children left home, Dave and Audrey moved to Pasco for the remainder of their life together. Audrey was hired as an instructional assistant at Edwin Markham Elementary, where she worked for 35 years. Generations of families and children will remember Mrs. Davis' kindness on the playground and in the classroom. After retiring, Audrey became even more active in crafts, decorating a new home and spending time with her grandchildren. Sister Davis was an active member in the LDS Church. She served in many callings. One of her favorite callings was working with the Young Women. Audrey served as camp director for several years.

Audrey is survived by her eternal companion, David, whom she was married to for more than 56 years. She is also survived by her two sisters, Jerline Hawkins (Jerry) and Sharon Theener (Gerry); also, her children, Tim Davis (Konni) of Coeur d'Alene, Idaho, Shawna Funk (Gordon) of West Jordan, Utah, Karin Smith (Cliff) of Moses Lake, Wash., Dan Davis (Lisa) of Othello, Wash., and Megan Nieforth (Trevor) of Pasco, Wash.; 13 grandsons; three granddaughters; 10 great-grandsons; and three great-granddaughters. She was preceded in death by her parents.

The funeral will be held at 10 a.m. Tuesday, Feb. 5, at The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints (Pasco LDS Stake Center), 2004 Road 24 in Pasco, Wash.

In lieu of flowers, donations can be made on behalf of the Audrey Davis/Edwin Markham Memorial account at Sterling Savings, 1204 N. 20th Ave, Pasco, WA 99301.

The Virtual Middle Class Rises

Encountered something on this trip to India that I had never met before: a whole new political community — India’s “virtual middle class.” Its emergence explains a lot about the rise of social protests here, as well as in places like China and Egypt. It is one of the most exciting things happening on the planet. Historically, we have associated democratic revolutions with rising middle classes achieving certain levels of per capita annual income — say, $10,000 — so people can worry less about basic food and housing and more about being treated as citizens with rights and with a voice in their own futures. But here’s what’s fascinating: The massive diffusion of powerful, cheap computing power via cell-phones and tablets over the last decade has dramatically lowered the costs of connectivity and education — so much so that many more people in India, China and Egypt, even though they’re still just earning a few dollars a day, now have access to the kind of technologies and learning previously associated solely with the middle class.

That’s why India today has a 300-million-person middle class and another 300-million-person virtual middle class, who, though still very poor, are increasingly demanding the rights, roads, electricity, uncorrupted police and good governance normally associated with rising middle classes. This is putting more pressure than ever on India’s elected politicians to get their governance act together.

“Thanks to technology and the spread of education, more and more people are being empowered at lower and lower levels of income than ever before, so they think and act as if they were in the middle class, demanding human security and dignity and citizens’ rights,” explained Khalid Malik, the director of the U.N.’s Human Development Report Office and author of the book, “Why Has China Grown So Fast for So Long?”

“This is a tectonic shift. The Industrial Revolution was a 10-million-person story. This is a couple-of-billion-person story.”

And it’s not just driven by the 900 million cellphones in use in India today or the 400 million bloggers in China. The U.S. Agency for International Development office here in New Delhi connected me with a group of Indian social entrepreneurs the U.S. is supporting, and the power of the tools they are putting in the hands of India’s virtual middle class at low prices is jaw-dropping. Gram Power is creating smart microgrids and smart meters to provide reliable, scalable power for Indian rural areas, where 600 million Indians do not have regular (or any) electricity with which to work, read and learn. For 20 cents a day, Gram Power offers villagers a prepaid electricity card that can power all their home appliances. Healthpoint Services is providing safe drinking water for a family of six for 5 cents a day and telemedicine consultations for 20 cents a visit. VisionSpring is now distributing examinations and eyeglasses to India’s poor for $2 to $3 each. The Institute for Reproductive Health is alerting women of their fertile days each month with text messages, indicating when unprotected sex should be avoided to prevent unwanted pregnancies. And Digital Green is providing low-cost communications systems for Indian farmers and women’s groups to show each their best practices through digital films projected on a dirt floor.

These technologies still need scale, but they are on their way. And they are enabling millions more Indians to at least feel as if they are middle class and the political empowerment that goes with that, says Nayan Chanda, who runs the YaleGlobal Online Magazine and is co-editor of “A World Connected: Globalization in the 21st Century.”

In December, a 23-year-old Indian woman — whose father worked double shifts as an airport baggage handler, making about $200 a month so his daughter could go to school to become a physiotherapist — was gang-raped on a bus after she and a male friend had gone to movie. She later died from injuries sustained in the rape.

She was a high-aspiring member of this new virtual Indian middle class, and her brutal rape and subsequent death triggered nationwide protests for better governance.

“It is one of those turning points in history when a citizenry, so far pleased with economic gain, wants more than material comfort,” said Chanda. “They want recognition of their rights; they want quality of life and, most importantly, the good governance they have come to expect by watching the world.”

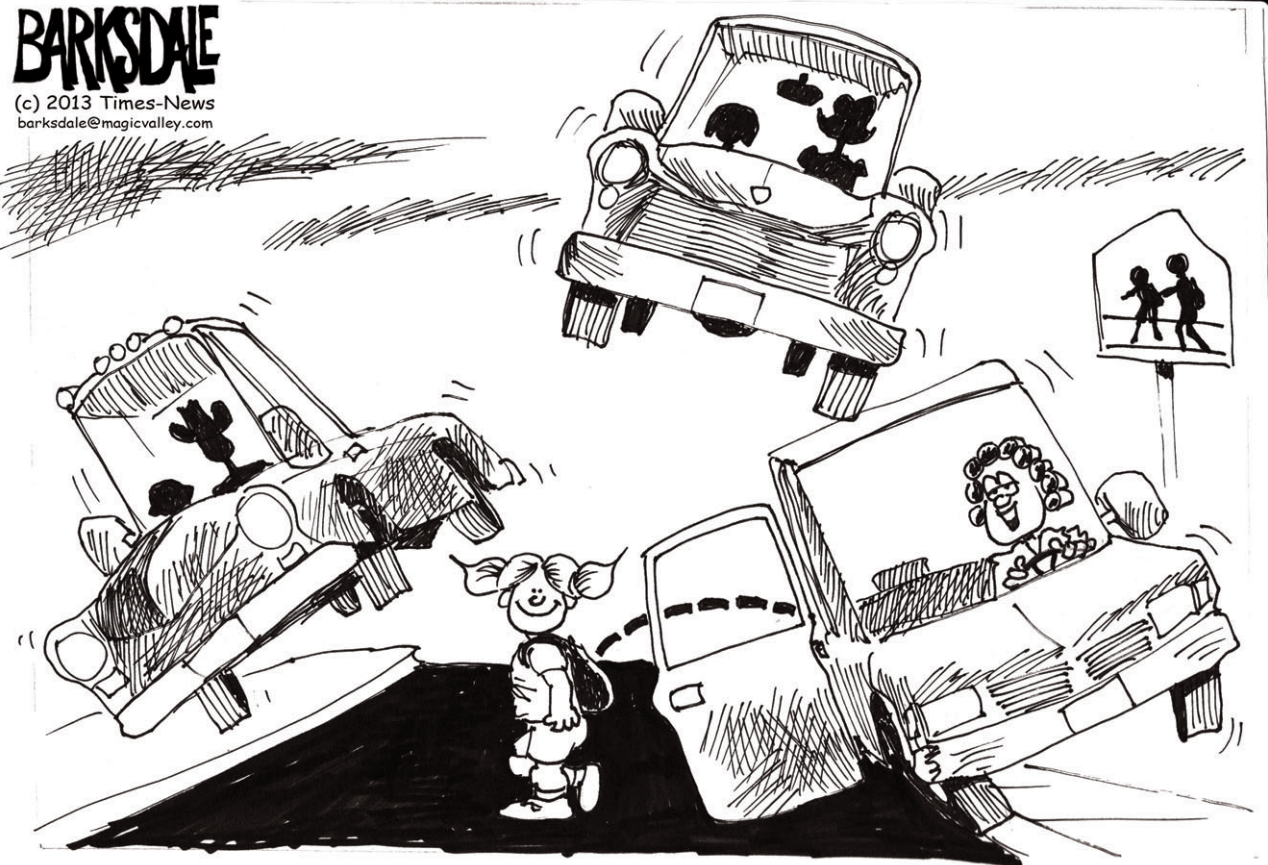

Ditto China. In December, noted Chanda, “when a Chinese censor in Guangzhou committed the unprecedented intrusion by physically entering the premises of Southern Weekend paper and rewriting their New Year editorial — turning a critical one into a panegyric of the Communist Party — Chinese journalists exploded. For the first time in history, they publicly demanded the resignation of the censor and China’s Twitter, Weibo, lit up with anger.”

And, of course, the Arab Awakening was triggered, not by middle-class college students, but by an aspiring-to-be-in-the-middle-class Tunisian vegetable seller who was abused by corrupt police. Leaders beware: Your people don’t need to be in the middle class anymore, in economic terms, to have the education, tools and mindset of the middle class — to feel entitled to a two-way conversation and to be treated like citizens with real rights and decent governance.

“So we had to spend 30 minutes in the dark? That was just more time for fans to refill their drinks.”

BY AUTUMN AGAR

The Magic Valley artist who prefers simply to be called “Barksdale” joins the team of the Times-News and Magic-valley.com today as an editorial cartoonist. He moved to Twin Falls recently and immediately ended up on our radar.

He will bring his sharp and irreverent pen to our Opinion pages several times a week, commenting on local and national issues.

“I love drawing on local issues,” Barksdale said. “Another editorial cartoonist put it this way, ‘When you draw on national issues, it’s like 200 goldfish nipping at your heels. When you draw on local issues, it’s like a shark attack. They know where it’s coming from.’”

“I thoroughly enjoy taking complex issues, researching them, finding the humor in the situation, and then breaking those complex issues down into easily digestible visual chunks that

On “Your Mileage May Vary ...”, Times-News cartoonist Barksdale blogs about his art, his opinions and his take on life in the Magic Valley.

“I realize that I’m a transplant from the East and probably not used to the subtle nuances of Twin Falls social etiquette, but seriously, folks... you need to get a grip on your “dropping-off-kids-at-school” routine... it’s unbelievable. I’ve seen cage matches that involved chain saws that were less dangerous.

Barksdale started cartooning in 1990 for the (Provo) Utah Daily Herald (and off and on for the BYU Daily Universe), then moved to California and drew for the Modesto Bee and the Santa Cruz County Sentinel. He was nationally syndicated between 1990 and 1993, and was featured in Best Editorial Cartoons of 1999 for a cartoon he drew on the Monica Lewinski scandal.

His mentors include his good friend Michael Ramirez at the Investors Daily News, the late great Jeff MacNelly of the Chicago Tribune, and Mort Drucker, the longest-running cartoonist and caricaturist at MAD magazine.

“I initially started drawing for my local paper when I worked for a large software company about 23 years ago, and found that it was a great way to alleviate stress,” Barksdale said. “My co-workers would walk by my office when I was jotting down an idea and wonder what was so funny. I think some of them probably thought I’d lost my marbles.”

Personal Property Tax Repeal Would Benefit Few, Harm Us All

Donna Yule

Idaho Public Employees Association

but to slash vital services and shift taxes to home and small business property taxes. Some hard-hit areas would need to double property taxes to maintain their services. This makes housing more expensive for regular Idahoans and is especially hard on those with fixed incomes. It will mean even deeper cuts to our schools and it will put our communities at risk due to cutting police officers, firefighters, ambulances, and other services we count on to be there when we need them.

Fortunately, there is a common-sense middle ground. This issue was debated during the 2008 legislative session. Our Legislature had the wisdom to reject a complete repeal and enact a law that would exempt the first $100,000 of business equipment from the tax once state revenues grew enough to replace these funds.

If we were to exempt small businesses from this tax today, 90 percent of all Idaho businesses would be off the hook. But at the same time we would protect this critical revenue source for the communities that need it. We would forego just $18 million, instead of $140 million.

The 10 percent of business that would continue paying this tax would be large corporations, many with headquarters outside of Idaho. These companies pay the lion’s share of the business personal property tax. Some of these are out-of-state corporations that pay nothing or little in state income taxes, even when they have billions of dollars in profits. So, property taxes are the way these businesses contribute to Idaho and the public services that help their businesses thrive.

If we repeal the tax, those out-of-state corporations will get a giant tax break. Would those dollars stay in Idaho or be invested in our communities? We can’t have the things our communities need unless everyone is willing to pay their fair share, and that includes big corporations.

Our legislators are under a lot of pressure from big business and their lobbyists. They need to hear from you that we can’t make any more cuts to these vital services, and that a tax shift onto Idaho residents is not fair.

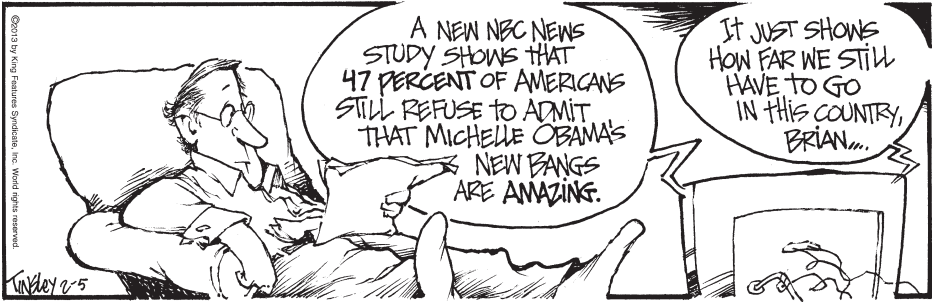

You may follow the news articles concerning the attempt to repeal the business equipment tax, you can “like” the Facebook page “Save Our Services, Boise ID”.

Scouts Council Says Stand Is Gaining Support

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) • Boy Scout leaders in Utah urging the organization's national board to take more time before reversing its no-gays membership policy say they have the support of more than three dozen other scouting groups across the nation.

The Great Salt Lake Council has sent a new letter to the national board of directors cautioning it against making a decision that cannot be undone. Thirty-two scouting groups representing nearly 540,000 youth scouts from across the U.S. are joining the Utah group in its opposition, said Kay Godfrey, a spokesman for Boy Scouts in the Great Salt Lake Council.

But Godfrey declined to divulge where the other councils are located, saying only that 23 are in the West and the 10 others around the country. He said he didn't have permission to name the other councils.

The Boy Scouts of America's national executive board is expected to discuss a policy that would let troop sponsors make their own decisions about gay troop leaders and youth members this week during meetings in the Dallas area.

The letter sent by Utah's Boy Scouts asks the board to wait for accurate polling about how Boy Scouts across the country feel before a decision is made.

"This is a decision which cannot be undone," the letter says. "Adages about 'measuring twice and cutting once' exist for a reason. There is no compelling reason to accelerate this decision ahead of a full analysis."

Godfrey said the Great Salt Lake Council is one of the largest in the country. A spokesman with the Boy Scouts of America didn't immediately return emails.

Godfrey says the future of Boy Scouts in Utah could be in jeopardy depending on what happens because so many religious organizations sponsor their troops.

"There would be councils that would be severely impacted should these religious organizations decide they no longer want to affiliate themselves with Boy Scouts," Godfrey said. "We need to stand up and make sure that national knows that we want to be engaged."

In Utah, nearly all scouting troops are sponsored by the Mormon church, which teaches that marriage is between a man and a woman and that same-sex relationships are sinful.

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints sponsors 99 percent of the 5,000 Scout troops in the Salt Lake City area, Godfrey said. Nationally, the Mormon church has more Boy Scouts than any other denomination, with 37,000 troops and 420,000 youth members, according to figures from the Boy Scouts of America.

Officials at the Mormon church's headquarters in Salt Lake City have declined to weigh in on the proposal, opting to wait until it becomes official.

FEWER JUVENILES ARRESTED SINCE 10 YEARS AGO

BOISE (AP) • Idaho's juvenile corrections administrators report the state arrested 5,000 fewer juveniles last year than it did 10 years ago.

Idaho Department of Juvenile Corrections officials told legislative budget writers Monday that prevention efforts and community partnerships are the reasons for the decline.

The Spokesman-Review reports that agency officials are seeking a 5 percent budget boost for 2014. But Gov. C.L. "Butch" Otter is recommending in his 2014 budget a 2 percent increase in state funds. Otter is also backing the addition of seven new positions at the juvenile center in St. Anthony — half of the new posts sought by the agency.

Juvenile Corrections Director Sharon Harrigfeld says efforts to work with counties have led to a strong system that keeps kids in the community and has reduced recidivism.

Delegation Optimistic about Immigration Reforms

BOISE (AP) • Idaho's congressional leaders say they are optimistic that progress can be made this year on reforming the nation's immigration system.

U.S. Rep. Raul Labrador spoke about immigration reform last week during a town hall meeting in Meridian, telling the crowd lawmakers must do something about the 12 million people now living in the country illegally. Labrador says the current system is broken.

Pilot Felix Baumgartner jumps out of the capsule in 2012 during the final manned flight for Red Bull Stratos.

Skydiver Fell Faster Than Thought

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) • Supersonic skydiver Felix Baumgartner was faster than he or anyone else thought when he jumped from 24 miles up.

The Austrian parachutist known as "Fearless Felix" reached 843.6 mph, according to the official numbers released Monday. That's equivalent to Mach 1.25, or 1.25 times the speed of sound.

His top speed initially was estimated last October at 834 mph, or Mach 1.24.

Either way, he became the first human to break the sound barrier with only his body. He wore a pressurized suit and jumped from a capsule hoisted by a giant helium balloon over New Mexico.

Baumgartner was supersonic for a half-minute — "quite remarkable," according to Brian Utley, the official record-keeping official who was present for the Oct. 14 feat. His heart rate remained below 185 beats a minute, and his breathing was fairly steady.

The leap was from an altitude of 127,852 feet. That's 248 feet lower than original estimates.

"He jumped from a little bit lower, but he actually went a little bit faster, which was pretty exciting," said Art Thompson, technical project director for the Red Bull-sponsored project.

"It's fun for us to see reaching Mach speeds and proving out a lot of the safety systems," Thompson said in a phone interview from his aerospace company in Lancaster, Calif.

Thompson said everything pretty much unfolded as anticipated, with no surprises in the final report. The updated records were provided by Utley, official observer for the National Aeronautic Association's contest and records board. Utley was in Roswell, N.M., for Baumgartner's grand finale jump.

In the foreword of the 71-page report, Baumgartner said he never imagined how many people would share in his dream to make a supersonic free fall from so high.

Some 52 million people watched YouTube's live stream of the exploit.

The scientific and engineering experts who helped bring him back alive "broke boundaries in their own fields just as surely as I broke the sound barrier," Baumgartner wrote.

people in front of us,” she said. “I appreciate your time and patience with this.”

Accusations, Criticisms of Process

Members of the public came to testify for and against Hurlock, including supporter Billee Dinges of Castleford.

“I felt that when there was literature being passed around that was negative and underhanded, it was time to get involved,” Dinges said, referring to a flier distributed to lawmakers that reads Hurlock “should have never passed as one being remotely qualified for the position.”

Sportsmen Chantelle and Jevon Benson of Jerome testified against the appointment, saying they didn’t feel she was qualified to be a commissioner.

“I know that many feel that this is men versus women, but it’s really not,” Chantelle Benson said. Doug Palmer of Twin Falls agreed, saying her appointment was “a great injustice.”

“She doesn’t understand the issues and we don’t have time to train her, so she would not be fit for appointment,” Palmer said.

Barbs weren’t reserved for Hurlock.

Jack Oyler, who served on the selection committee that considered candidates, accused the governor’s staff of withholding recommendation letters for other candidates and ordering members of the interview committee to recommend Joan Hurlock to the governor. Bonnie Butler, senior special assistant to the governor, shook her head at the accusations and mouthed “No” from the audience. (Later, she explained one late-arriving letter didn’t get into the binders, but was distributed to committee members. She also emphasized that no one was ordered to recommend Hurlock.)

Dyke Nally, chairman of the selection committee, defended the process and pointed out that all candidates went through a rigorous interview process.

“The process is more sophisticated now and more structured than it ever has been,” Nally said.

The Senate committee will vote on the appointment at its Wednesday meeting. Regardless of how the committee votes, the appointment will go to the Senate floor for the body as a whole to consider. While the Senate committee can’t vote down an appointment, they can pass on the confirmation with no recommendation.

After the Monday meeting, Hurlock said she is glad to have the opportunity to rebut the information being spread about her.

“I just wanted to be heard and given a fair shot at it,” she said.

coming in for energy assistance is definitely up,” said Minerva Espino, of South Central Community Action Partnership.

People most at risk of having utilities shut off due to inability to pay cross a wide spectrum, including the elderly, people with young families and those living on Social Security or disability income and those who have lost jobs, she said.

“People who are seasonal workers who weren’t expecting such a hard winter can also be caught off guard,” Espino said.

If someone has received a shut-off notice for heating and they meet federal household and income requirements they could qualify for emergency assistance through the agency’s Low Income Home Energy Assistance Program (LIHEAP), Espino said.

The person’s income and number of family members has to fall within 150 percent of federal poverty level guidelines to qualify.

Applicants also have to provide other required documents.

Espino said the applicant should call the office before coming in to obtain the list of needed documents.

LIHEAP does not pay water, sewer or garbage bills.

If a person does not have a shut-off notice for heating but still needs help meeting utility costs, they can make an appointment for an interview with SC-CAP to see if they qualify for other assistance.

The agency also offers assistance paying utility bills, including heating, water, sewer and garbage through the Project Share Program.

Project Share operates by collecting donations from customers of participating cities and utility companies. Participating Mini-Cassia cities include Heyburn, Burley and Rupert and there are various participating utility companies.

The money is sent to the Salvation Army in Boise and administered through SCCAP.

“I think these bills are the highest they’ve been during the time I’ve been here,” said Deb Hopkins, Heyburn city clerk. “It was painful to send them out.”

Hopkins has worked for the city for 17 years.

Usually energy assistance funds will last for more than one month, said Hopkins.

“I’m really concerned that it’s all going to be used up by this one bill and next month it will be all gone,” Hopkins said.

Doris Garcia, 96, said she does all she can to keep heating costs down, including keeping the thermostat turned down and wearing “flannels under my jeans.”

“It was so cold last month my fingertips were hurting,” Garcia said. “I haven’t got my bill yet though; it’s probably in the mailbox.”

Golden Heritage Senior Center Manager Linda Reyes said many senior citizens have small Social Security incomes and often have to choose between things like medicines, groceries or turning the thermostat up to a comfortable level.

“It’s so sad. I’ve went into many homes where I’ve seen people wrapped up in three or four jackets. They just don’t turn up the thermostat because they can’t afford to pay for it,” said Reyes.

Reyes said it was so cold in December the senior center sent out extra blankets to homebound seniors.

“We hear a lot of sad stories,” said Espino. “But, our job is to get qualified people help and if we can’t help them we try to refer them to other sources who might be able to help,” said Espino.

Online: A Hazing for Freshman Senators

“Hazing isn’t just for college campuses.

“On Friday, Sen. Cherie Buckner-Webb, D-Boise, presented a bill on the Senate floor. The bill struck me as largely non-controversial — it changed the way vehicle salvage certificates are handled — and I didn’t pay much attention until half the senators started voting nay. ...

“What was that? I asked Sen. Jim Patrick, R-Twin Falls, after the Senate adjourned. That was Sen. Buckner-Webb’s initiation, he said. He pointed out it was the first bill she had sponsored in the Senate, and this light teasing was standard for freshman members. ...”

More Visits Contribute to T.F. City Pool Revenue

BY KIMBERLEE KRUESI

kkruesi@magicvalley.com

TWIN FALLS • With more than 59,200 visitors eager for a dip, the Twin Falls city pool saw more than $450,000 in revenue last year, according to an annual report.

The report was presented to the Twin Falls City Council at its Monday meeting. The pool’s revenue included daily admissions, annual and seasonal pool passes and a portion of overall Y memberships attributable to the city pool.

There were more than 1,100 swim participants, including close to 80 in the Water Baby program and nearly 30 enrolled in Junior Lifeguard Camp, said Gary Ettenger, chief executive officer of the Y in Twin Falls.

In the past, the city and the Y struggled to come up with an accurate formula to determine how much pool revenue was coming from full Y membership fees. The Y offers memberships for all three of its facilities and memberships for just the pool.

This year, both parties agreed that future city pool revenue attribution should be determined by using the highest city pool admission, $4, and multiplying that by the total number of full membership visits.

“The hope is that these are the new apples to compare apples to next year,” said Councilman Shawn Barigar.

Ettenger said $1 million in repairs are needed to the facility. The facility is currently looking to start a capital campaign to help raise funding for the repairs.

Upgrades would include fixing the plumbing in the locker rooms to prevent flooding and expanding some of the pool features, like adding a water slide.

“We want to give back to the city,” he said.

boy were all arrested on charges relating to the Aug. 6, 2012, robbery at Leo and Judy Ray’s Buhl home. The Rays own Fish Processors of Idaho.

Contreras was originally charged with two counts of second-degree kidnapping and robbery. One of the kidnapping counts and an aggravated battery charge — the latter stemming from a separate case where Contreras was accused of breaking a man’s jaw — were dropped as part of a plea deal.

Contreras pleaded guilty to robbery and one count of second-degree kidnapping.

During the hearing, Stoker said he couldn’t imagine what the Rays went through, having guns to their heads and thinking they could be killed during the robbery.

Contreras’ defense attorney, George Essma, said the combination of Contreras’ young age and drug use fueled the events of Aug. 6. Essma said he doubted the robbery would have occurred if it weren’t for Contreras’ addiction to methamphetamine.

Essma argued that Contreras should spend a minimum of 10 years in prison while Emory asked that Contreras be sentenced to 15 to 30 years in prison. Because Stoker’s sentence was longer than the state’s recommendation, Contreras has the right to appeal.

Leo Ray spoke at the sentencing hearings for Contreras and Sotelo, which were both on Monday afternoon.

As soon as he realized what was happening, Leo Ray said, he believed his chances of survival were minimal.

“It became apparent that the challenge for me was to keep them from shooting us,” he said.

Leo Ray said he believed he or his wife could have been shot at any time by any of the three men in his home.

“We were fortunate to have lived through it,” he said.

Sotelo, who served as a lookout at the bottom of the Rays’ driveway during the robbery, was sentenced Monday to four to 22 years in prison for one count of robbery.

Sotelo’s defense attorney, Mark Guerri, called the sentence appropriate and fair.

Guerri said Sotelo will likely be deported to Mexico after he serves his prison sentence, and Sotelo’s application for permanent residence is in the process of being denied, now that he’s a convicted felon. Sotelo hasn’t lived in Mexico since he was 2, Guerri said.

Valenciano was sentenced in early January to 15 to 30 years in prison.

A jury trial is scheduled for the 16-year-old boy on Feb. 12, with a pretrial conference on Feb. 6.

The Vikings had just finished their 34-28 win over Declo in the Class 2A District IV girls basketball tournament championship game, and the junior forward paused between congratulatory hugs and pictures to say what it feels like to take Valley back to state for the first time since 2009.

TWIN FALLS • His arm is loose but his head?

Screwed on tight. Twin Falls baseball player Michael Garcia signed a letter of intent with Treasure Valley Community College on Monday. Garcia comes off an undefeated season on the mound last year for the Bruins.

“He was just getting comfortable last year and he’s always had that competitive spirit on the mound,” said five-year Twin Falls head coach Tim Stadelmeir. “His arm action is really loose. College people look at that as someone who has projectability. He has grown, too.”

Garcia played on Twin Falls Cowboys American Legion team where he caught the eye of Chukars head coach Aaron Sutton.

“We’ve seen him throw the last couple of years and he came in and worked out here and there is a lot of upside,” Sutton said. “With his loose, quick arm, we think he can add velocity. In a couple of years he could be a power sinker guy. He also fits in from a character standpoint. We really like who he is as a person.”

Sutton and Stadelmeir both believe that Garcia improved over the summer for the Cowboys and in the fall for the Idaho Cubs, a junior baseball subsidiary of the Chicago Cubs, which attracts some of the top talent in the state.

“He held his own,” Sutton said.

Garcia said he was impressed by his official and unofficial trips to Ontario, Ore., where he’ll be playing next spring. But he’s focused on the upcoming baseball season, where he’s primed for a big senior year.

“Playing college has always been one of big goals,” Garcia said. “I’ve been trying to prove people wrong. I made some mechanical changes last year, but mainly (my improvements) were about feeling more comfortable with myself and teammates.”

Stadelmeir said that Garcia, who led the team with 55 strikeouts and seven wins last year despite only starting to pitch his freshman year, is a contender to head the Bruins’ rotation this spring.

CSI Hoops Teams Sweep Treasure Valley

TIMES-NEWS

ONTARIO, ORE. • The College of Southern Idaho women’s basketball team was undaunted by a 2-0 deficit.

After giving up the first basket of the game against one-win Treasure Valley Community College, CSI nearly quadrupled the Chukars output the rest of the contest, winning 80-24.

“I was pretty upset at halftime because I thought we gave up a bunch of good shots, they just didn’t make them,” head coach Randy Rogers said on 102.9 FM. “I thought our second unit gave us a big lift. Now we have to get ourselves focused for Colorado Northwestern (Community College).”

The Golden Eagles allowed five points in the first half, in which the Chukars shot under 10 percent. They shot 16 percent in the game.

Cassidy Skidmore scored 19 points and nailed five 3-pointers. Brittany Wirth had nine points and 12 rebounds, while Patrice Toston scored 12 points and dished out five assists.

Having defeated North Idaho on Saturday to gain a share of the Scenic West Athletic Conference lead, CSI will resume conference play Thursday at 5:30 p.m. when it hosts CNCC.

Joe Flacco Begins Collecting Awards as Super Bowl MVP

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW ORLEANS • Working on 90 minutes of sleep, Joe Flacco wore a day-old beard and a weary smile that wouldn't go away.

Super Bowl tradition deems that the game's MVP appear at a ceremony the following morning to shake hands with the commissioner of the NFL, accept the shiny trophy, pose for pictures and receive the keys to a new car. And so, after celebrating the Baltimore Ravens' 34-31 victory over the San Francisco 49ers into the early hours of Monday morning, Flacco dutifully fulfilled his obligation.

The quarterback's immediate reward for throwing three touchdown passes on Sunday night was a 2014 Corvette. In the months ahead, Flacco is almost assured of receiving a lucrative, long-term contract befitting his incredible performance during Baltimore's run to the NFL championship.

In the playoffs, Flacco had 11 TD passes and no interceptions, a feat NFL Commissioner Roger Goodell called "extraordinary."

"He was unflappable and brought his team to a Super Bowl level," Goodell said. "His play represented that all the way through."

Less than 12 hours after hoisting the Lombardi Trophy over his head amid a shower of purple confetti, Flacco still couldn't come to grips with what he and the Ravens had accomplished.

After throwing for three scores in the first half to stake the Ravens to a 21-6 lead, Flacco directed two scoring drives in the fourth quarter to help fend off a 49ers comeback. He was 22 for 33 for 287 yards.

"I'm pretty tired right now, and it hasn't sunken in," he said. "It's just a surreal moment."

With a parade scheduled for the team on Tuesday, Flacco planned to visit Disney World in Florida on Monday afternoon before heading home.

"I anticipate not getting very much sleep, but it's for all good reasons, man," he said. "Unbelievable game. It was just awesome to be a part of it."

CSI 95, TREASURE VALLEY 78

ONTARIO, ORE. • The College of Southern Idaho men's basketball team bounced back from a loss to North Idaho by beating Treasure Valley 95-78. CSI shot 49 percent from the field and were 12-for-18 from behind the 3-point line. Billy Reader had nine rebounds, Montigo Alford scored 10 points, while Juwan Newman added eight points and Jaysean Paige hit five 3-pointers and scored 19 points.

Cause of Super Bowl Power Outage Remains Unclear

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW ORLEANS • Who turned out the lights?

The day after the 34-minute blackout at the Super Bowl, the exact cause — and who's to blame — were unclear, though a couple of potential culprits had been ruled out.

It wasn't Beyonce's electrifying halftime performance, according to Doug Thornton, manager of the state-owned Superdome, since the singer had her own generator. And it apparently wasn't a case of too much demand for power. Meters showed the 76,000-seat stadium was drawing no more electricity than it does during a typical New Orleans Saints game, Thornton said.

The lights-out game Sunday proved an embarrassment for the Big Easy just when it was hoping to show the rest of the world how far it has come since Hurricane Katrina in 2005. But many fans and residents were forgiving, and officials expressed confidence that the episode wouldn't hurt the city's hopes of hosting the championship again.

To New Orleans' great relief, NFL Commissioner Roger Goodell said the city did a "terrific" job hosting its first pro football championship in the post-Katrina era, and added: "I fully expect that we will be back here for Super Bowls."

Fans watching from their living rooms weren't deterred, either. An estimated 108.4 million people saw the Baltimore Ravens beat the San Francisco 49ers 34-31, making it the third most-viewed program in television history. Both the 2010 and 2011 games hit the 111 million mark.

gone to waste. Everything we've worked for all these years has come together," Elorrieta said.

Despite the loss, Declo (10-12) still has a chance to make the state tournament, but it will have to win two games to do so. The Hornets will face District V runner-up Malad on Thursday at American Falls. If they win that game, they'll face the District VI runner-up on Saturday, with the winner advancing to state.

"They got to the free throw line and we didn't," said Declo coach Dennie Smyer, pointing to Valley's 17 free throw attempts to his team's six. "We missed shots down the stretch when we had wide open looks. ... Just didn't get it done. Give it to (Valley). They earned it."

Monday's contest was the defensive struggle that has been a trademark of Declo-Valley games in recent years. The Vikings led for nearly the entire game, until Garrity Searle's driving layup capped a 7-0 spurt that gave Declo a 25-24 lead with 4:57 remaining.

But Valley immediately answered on the other end to stave off the momentum shift.

"I'm proud of my whole team. We all worked hard and we earned it," said Valley senior guard Monica Banuelos. "It was a tough season... It was pretty rocky but we got through it."

Perhaps the biggest adversity came in early January when starting guard Marlee Mussmann suffered a season-ending knee injury.

"Even during the Buhl game when Marlee got hurt, Lizzy (Henry) and I looked at each other and said 'We've got to do this for Marlee.' After that, it didn't matter who we were up against, we were going to do it for ourselves and do it for Marlee," said Elorrieta.

Henry scored eight points and took over Mussmann's role as floor leader. Mussmann was one of the first players to do the honors of cutting down the nets.

"In a way I think Marlee's injury was a way for us to rally together and realize we all had to step up. Losing Marlee took a toll on a lot of us. Lizzy stepped up a huge amount," Elorrieta said.

Tragic Week on Snowmobiles Forces Reexamination

ASSOCIATED PRESS

DENVER • For more than a decade, daredevils in snowsuits climbed atop their quarter-ton snowmobiles, sped them up icy ramps and flipped them head over heels into the frosty night air. Fans of action sports cheered while others, less enthralled with the event, wondered whether the sport was a good idea. It's a question that's getting a much more serious look after last month's Winter X Games, where things went wrong in a serious and tragic way. One rider, with very little experience on snowmobiles, flew off his vehicle and the machine went careening into the fence, dangerously close to spectators. Another wrecked and separated his pelvis. That rider's brother, 25-year-old Caleb Moore, lost control, landed on his head and, four days later, died from injuries related to the accident. The tragedy left everyone involved — snowmobilers, other action sports stars, the people who issue the permits and the programmers at ESPN, which sanctions and televises the X Games — re-examining a niche event in an action-sports world that has, for decades, lured its audience by thumbing its nose at danger. "That's something we'll all have to deal with," said Levi LaVallee, whose two gold medals in snowmobiling this year were afterthoughts in the wake of Moore's death.

"Unfortunately, the crashes that happened, they're serious ones. You can only pray that that stuff won't happen in future — look at how it happened and see how we can prevent that in the future. It's a tough one for a guy that's passionate about the sport."

— Cole Porter

In today's deal, North-South need to be able to judge the presence or absence of the two black jacks in order to see the level at which they should play. If they had both of those cards, a grand slam would be the target, while with one of them, 12 tricks would be a cakewalk. However, with neither of them, some careful play is required for declarer to give himself every opportunity to bring home 12 tricks.

So how are you going to make six spades after the diamond-queen lead? Presumably, you start by drawing trump. When West shows out on the second round, the focus shifts to trying to avoid losing a club and a trump if neither suit behaves.

Since East has trump length, he rates to be short in clubs, if anyone is. (If he is long in both suits, it will be easy to play to ruff a club on the board.)

You need to protect yourself against both 4-2 and 5-1 club breaks. You cannot afford to have a club honor ruffed away, so play a club to the ace and a club toward your hand. It does not help East to trump in, since he would be ruffing a loser. Now cross back to dummy with the heart king and lead another club toward your hand. Again, it doesn't help East to ruff, so he discards again. Now you can ruff a club in dummy. East can overruff, but that will be his only trick.

ANSWER: A jump to three hearts would be more about shape than high cards, and I would advocate this call if your heart 10 and diamond king were switched. Here, though, you have decent defense (in context), so I would simply bid two hearts, perhaps intending to compete to three hearts over three clubs.

IF FEBRUARY 5 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY: New friends might brighten your life during the next four to six weeks. You might be so wrapped up in group activities or the duties required by an organization or club that you earn recognition or are rewarded by your peers. The progress made in April due to wise decisions and lucky breaks can brighten your future. That is an excellent time to initiate cherished plans for the best success. You could meet someone who becomes a lifelong companion or may become prominent within your own circle. Put your affairs in order this spring so you can avoid making significant financial changes or taking on additional responsibilities in July.

Jeraldine Saunders

ARIES (March 21-April 19): In a results-driven world, you can't just say what you hope to do, but must show what you can do. This is a good day to mend fences with rivals and turn business competitors into supporters and allies.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Face inflexible facts. Relationships may be important to you but you must work hard to maintain them. You may become aware that someone pressures you into acting in a certain way for your own good.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): You can live in the moment, but don't forget that it is just a moment. You might be exceedingly charming and likable, but when push comes to shove you must demonstrate solid accomplishment.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Money is like water, and must be spread around to do the most good. Share the pennies in your piggy bank with others. The stars smile on financial strategies and facilitate pleasant business transactions.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Prosper through professionalism. The gap between the amateur and the professional widens. Develop polished presentations that impress others. Use your sharp mind and business skills to score points.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Keep your ears to the ground. A casual conversation could reveal insights into matters related to your work or business. This could allow you to better overcome obstacles that have been in your way.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Speak your mind, but mind your speech. Keep the lines of communication open and offer sincere apologies when needed. Remain generous and tolerant — even when others won't meet you halfway.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Prove your sincerity by honoring commitments. You could be focused on receiving attention and proof of personal allegiance when everyone else wants to see that you can put forth solid effort.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Learn to listen without interrupting. Someone may have a very important message or instructions that you must hear. Social banter may make work pleasant, but it doesn't get the job done.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You enjoy the feel of the reins of power, but must spare the whip. You have the ability to guide the outcome, so you must be concerned about the welfare of others. Don't let power go to your head.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Busy bees probably have a business plan to ensure they make the most honey. If you don't have the heart or the grit to complete a project or pursue a dream, it probably wasn't worth it in the first place.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Embrace contentment in any circumstance. A boat rides out quiet waters as well as big waves without falling apart. You, too, can remain upright and steady no matter what the provocation or conditions.
