Asphalt Distribution Plant Opening in Twin Falls

Development surprise to mayor and chamber CEO.

BY JOE CADOTTE
jcadotte@magicvalley.com

TWIN FALLS • One of the largest asphalt producers in the Magic Valley is opening a distribution facility in Twin Falls, with 500 tons of the rocky sludge on hand to tackle “a project of any size,” the Times-News learned Wednesday.

Burley-based distributor Kloepper Inc. set its sights on Twin Falls because of increasing demand for asphalt, said co-owner John Kloepper.

“It’s a good time to do something like this,” he said. “We’ve always looked at the market. We just didn’t feel like there was room for a third player, but now changing conditions have opened up opportunities for us to move in.”

The third player, Gordon Paving in Twin Falls, was one of the largest asphalt distributors in the region. But it auctioned off millions of dollars in equipment last year, said city spokesman Josh Palmer. Before Gordon downsized, he said, the company’s front yard was full of equipment. Now it’s an empty field.

“Gordon Paving has downsized to the point where they’re no longer handling a lot of commercial or industrial projects,” Palmer said. “Within the city of Twin Falls, we expect to see an increase (in demand) with the canyon ciate,” Palmer said.

Mayor Greg Lanting and Shawn Barigar, president and CEO of the Chamber of Commerce, both said they didn’t know that Kloepper was opening a distribution facility here.

Idaho Sand and Gravel Co. in Jerome is the largest asphalt distributor in the area. When Kloepper opens June 18, it will be one of Idaho Sand’s greatest competitors.

“We’re closer to a lot of highway districts at this end of town,” said co-owner Larry Kloepper. “...Our motto is ‘When Performance Counts.’”

The availability of asphalt doesn’t mean the city will use it, said City Manager Travis Rothweiler.

“It’s really hard for us just to pick an asphalt company. Most of what we do is through a competitive bid process,” he said. “Certainly they’re a quality company. Being located in Twin Falls makes them an option. We still have to

Police Say Parolee Was Trafficking Meth

BY ALISON GENE SMITH
alismith@magicvalley.com

TWIN FALLS • A Twin Falls man on parole for a drug charge was trafficking methamphetamine out of his home, Twin Falls police say.

John E. Ash, 53, was arraigned on a charge of meth trafficking Tuesday in Twin Falls County District Court.

Police say Ash had more than an ounce of meth and $741 cash when he was apprehended Monday.

After receiving tips of meth sales at the High Desert Trailer Court, police began surveillance.

A blue Chevrolet truck with expired tags began to leave the trailer park about 9 p.m. Monday, police report. They stopped the truck and identified Ash and his passenger as parolees.

Parolees are not allowed to associate with one another.

The passenger, Shawn Bradshaw, was arrested on a felony probation violation.

“I learned Ash was on parole for possession of a controlled substance, and since they were leaving a location suspected for drug sales, I asked them if I could check them for illegal substances,” Officer Ken Rivers wrote.

Ash stepped out of the truck with a plastic bag of meth in his pocket, the report says, and another bag of meth was found inside a phone case in the truck’s center console.

Idaho Regatta Revives Parade, Gets Dive Team Support

BY LAURIE WELCH

BURLEY • The city of Burley will welcome the Idaho Regatta in style this year since Cassia County Sheriff Jay Heward has reinstated the event’s boat parade and given a nod to the sheriff’s dive team to participate with the race’s safety dive team.

The renowned regatta had received boat safety support from Cassia and Minidoka counties’ sheriff dive teams until 2009, when former Cassia County Sheriff Randy Kidd pulled his dive team from the event and canceled the popular boat parade. Kidd had said providing tax-funded security for a private enterprise was illegal, citing advisement from the county attorney. Minidoka County’s dive team continued to participate, though, because its county attorney, Lance Stevenson, interpreted the law differently.

“I can tell you it means a lot to

THE MARKET AT A GLANCE

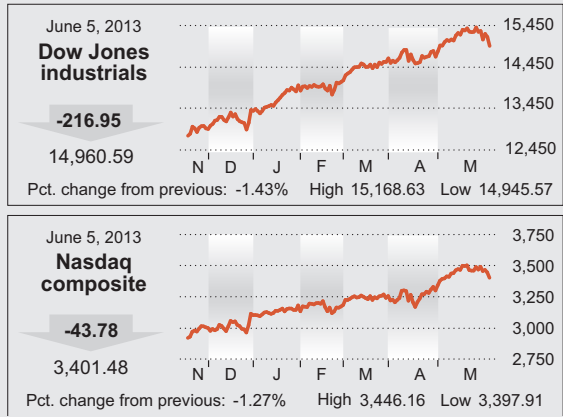

Weak Signals On the Economy Send Stocks Plunging

NEW YORK (AP) • A series of weak economic reports sent the stock market plunging to its lowest level in a month on Wednesday.

Companies like miners, banks and chemical makers, whose fortunes are most closely tied to the prospects for growth, led the market lower.

The troubling data included weak hiring at private companies, a plunge in mortgage applications and sluggish orders to U.S. factories.

The Dow Jones industrial average fell 217 points and finished at 14,960, a drop of 1.4 percent.

Hidden History

This segment of a drawing shows the short-lived plan to create a memorial park at Shoshone Falls, designed by California landscape architect Florence Yoch in 1919.

Shoshone Falls: An Unfulfilled Memorial

BY MYCHEL MATTHEWS

mmatthews@magicvalley.com

SHOSHONE FALLS • Before potatoes – and Evel Knievel – the Niagara of the West was this valley’s claim to fame.

“It is hard to imagine anything in nature more picturesque or sublime,” visitor Charles Nelson Teeter wrote in 1865.

In 1900, proponents tried to have Shoshone Falls designated as a national park. Congress opposed the move, but the falls captured the nation’s attention. That October, the Chicago Tribune devoted a full page to photos of Shoshone Falls, Twin Falls and Blue Lakes.

The scenic view of the falls begged for more recognition. At the end of World War I, a memorial park, dedicated to returning war heroes, was proposed for the falls on the south side of the Snake River Canyon. The Shoshone Falls Memorial Park Association was organized in 1919.

That summer, the association’s board hired young California landscape architect Florence Yoch to draft a plan for an elaborate park, complete with trees, benches and resting areas.

Yoch blazed a trail through a male-dominated profession and became nationally known for her architectural designs. She later designed the David O. Selznick estate in Beverly Hills, the Getty House gardens in Los Angeles, and various landscapes for film sets, including Tara in “Gone With the Wind.”

The canyon land south of the Snake River, however, was owned by various entities – private and public – making the park plan nearly impossible to implement. The Twin Falls County commissioners proposed a memorial bridge to span the Snake River Canyon at Shoshone Falls as an alternative to the park.

Neither project got past the drawing board at the time, but the land eventually was donated to the city of Twin Falls and developed into today’s park.

Idaho Resurrects Child Fatality Review Panel

BY JOHN MILLER
Associated Press

BOISE • Idaho is no longer the only state without a panel that reviews circumstances surrounding child deaths.

The 13-member Idaho Child Fatality Review Team was re-invigorated this year following an executive order from Gov. C.L. “Butch” Otter to focus on ways to prevent kids from dying. The team will meet in July to review cases of children who died in automobile accidents, in hopes of helping prevent future fatalities.

Idaho first had such a team in 1998. Then-Gov. Phil Batt created it after reports Idaho had a higher childhood death rate than the U.S. average. But it was disbanded after just three years.

Subsequent efforts to renew the panel failed in the Legislature, on lawmakers’ concerns it might be too intrusive for law enforcement or lead to criminal charges against parents.

Consequently, the new panel’s members say their aims are limited: To analyze circumstances under which children have died to help determine if they can be avoided in the future — without giving police, local coroners or even grieving moms and dads the feeling they’re breathing down their backs.

“We’re not here to second-guess people involved in these cases,” said Jerrilea Archer, a retired Ada County Sheriff’s Department child abuse investigator who coordinates the review team, on Monday. “We’re only here to protect children and make sure there isn’t a glaring ‘something’ that is continuously being done (in fatal instances) that hasn’t been addressed.”

Its members include state epidemiologist Christine Hahn, as well as private doctors, nurses, lawyers and Department of Health and Welfare employees.

Fifteen years ago, Batt created the state’s first child mortality review team. What emerged were recommendations that Idaho focus education on the proper use of child safety restraints, as well as tougher laws against seatbelt scofflaws.

But the group broke up after 2000. Among other things, some members worried they might be subpoenaed to testify in court cases involving deaths they reviewed.

That left Idaho as the only state without such a panel, though some counties had review boards of their own.

Efforts to re-establish a statewide group in the Idaho Legislature in 2008 and 2009 failed. In 2009, for instance, a measure passed in the House but was blocked in the Senate by foes who said they feared it would target individual parents whose kids had died in accidents.

To allay those worries, this latest group is careful to say that’s not part of its mission, as it seeks not to arouse suspicions in libertarian Idaho that it will meddle too deeply into family life.

“This child fatality review team is not an activist group, nor is it a lobbying group,” said Kirt Naylor, a child advocate lawyer and chairman of the Governor’s Task Force on Children at Risk, which chose the review team’s members.

Buhl Police: Strange Bulge Revealed Drug Paraphernalia

BY ALISON GENE SMITH
alismith@magicvalley.com

BUHL • A Buhl police officer’s observation of owl-like eyes and an “abnormal bulge” landed a New Mexico man in jail this week.

Officer Jeremy Engbaum was patrolling at Locust Street and Broadway Avenue North in Buhl when he stopped a speeding vehicle about 2 a.m. Sunday.

The driver told police she was in a hurry and didn’t realize how fast she was going, but Engbaum noticed that one passenger had extremely dilated eyes and white powder on his lips.

“When he looked at me, he just stared with wide open eyes (like an owl) and acted very nervous,” Engbaum wrote in a police report.

The officer asked the man, Jesus M. Castillo, 21, of Socorro, N.M., to get out of the car.

“As Jesus exited the vehicle, I noticed his pants were sagging and in the crotch of the pants was an abnormal bulge,” Engbaum wrote. “I noticed his belt was not secured correctly and looked as though there was something stuffed in his pants.”

Engbaum frisked Castillo and found a glass pipe in his pants, and Castillo admitted to having meth wrapped in a gum wrapper inside a sock, the report says.

After searching the car, Engbaum also reported finding a marijuana grinder and three more pipes with marijuana residue on them.

Castillo was arraigned Monday in Twin Falls County District Court on charges of possession of drugs and drug paraphernalia with intent to use. A preliminary hearing is set for June 14.

Woman Says Kimberly Man Attacked Her After Thinking He Was Poisoned

BY ALISON GENE SMITH

KIMBERLY • A Kimberly man struck a woman in the head with a skateboard, claiming she had poisoned him, police say.

Police responded to St. Luke’s Magic Valley Medical Center for a reported battery about 4 a.m. Tuesday.

The patient said she was awakened about 3:45 a.m. when William N. Scott, 34, hit her in the head with a skateboard and left the room, police reported.

She told police Scott had claimed earlier that she had poisoned him with Monday night’s dinner.

A witness told police she heard Scott saying someone had poisoned him, and he wanted to hit someone in the head with a skateboard. About five minutes later, the witness heard a bang.

Scott told police that other people were attacking him and trying to poison him, and he finally fought back, the report says.

Once at the Twin Falls County Jail, Scott asked to be drug tested to prove he was poisoned, police reported.

Scott was arraigned on a charge of battery in Twin Falls County District Court Tuesday and posted a $1,000 bond. A pretrial conference is set for July 16.

Coeur d’Alene Adopts Ordinance

COEUR D’ALENE (AP) • Coeur d’Alene has become the fifth city in Idaho to pass a law that bans discrimination against lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender people.

The City Council late

Tuesday approved an anti-discrimination law by a 5-1 vote.

The ordinance protects people in areas of employment and public accommodations, such as restaurants and housing, by preventing discrimination solely based on “sexual orientation, gender identity and expression.”

Opponents contended the rule discriminates against those with religious beliefs by forcing them to go against their conscience for the benefit of a select few.

Boise, Sandpoint, Ketchum and Moscow have already adopted similar rules.

The rule does not apply to churches or religious organizations or people who are renting a room in their home.

Former Sheriff’s Office Worker Sentenced for Theft

MOSCOW (AP) • A former Latah County sheriff’s office employee has been sentenced to two to five years in prison for embezzling more than $56,000 from office funds from 2007 to 2011.

Second District Judge John Stegner sentenced Rhonda Bunney on Tuesday. She had earlier pleaded guilty to misuse of public funds. Court records say a restitution hearing is set for Friday.

Both the defense and prosecutor recommended a probationary sentence, but Stegner said the theft involved a large amount of money over a period of several years and a probationary sentence would do nothing to deter similar crimes.

Stegner retained jurisdiction and set a court appearance for Dec. 16 to review the case and consider whether to reduce Bunney’s sentence.

WEATHER

More on Southern Idaho’s Wind

No matter how long I have been a meteorologist, the weather always finds a way to amaze me. I enjoy experiencing how the winds, at or slightly after sunset, seem to dramatically decrease or stop. This is not true every day, but it happens frequently.

To understand why, you have to understand what causes wind. As noted in previous columns, we have wind because of pressure changes across the area or region. Wind wants to go from high pressure to low pressure, just as a ball atop a hill wants to roll to the lowest point. The steeper the hill, the faster the ball will roll down it. With wind, the greater the difference between high and low pressure over a short distance, the faster the winds will blow.

Another driving factor for wind and wind speed is a difference in temperatures. Across Southern Idaho, we can experience radical temperature changes from mountains to valley and even from Burley to Twin Falls. These temperature fluctuations also can cause pressure differences. In summer, for example, winds start calm and light in the morning. But as the day wears on and the sun provides significant heat, the winds increase. The air rises when it’s warmed, and other air rushes in to replace it. This creates low pressure, and winds begin to increase from calm to perhaps 10 to 15 mph. So when we lose daytime heating from the sun at sunset, the winds quickly die down as the air stabilizes and cools.

Weather remains quiet and warm over the next several days with little to no rain. Temperatures will rise into the 80s and even 90s as we head into the weekend. We’ll have possible breezy conditions Friday with our next real shot at rain not coming until Tuesday. Love to answer more of your weather questions. Feel free to ask.

Panel: Fertility Drugs, Nature Better Than Wild Horse Roundups

RENO, Nev. (AP) • A scathing independent scientific review of wild horse roundups in the West concludes the U.S. government would be better off investing in widespread fertility control of the mustangs and let nature cull any excess herds instead of spending millions to house them in overflowing holding pens.

A 14-member panel assembled by the National Science Academy's National Research Council, at the request of the Bureau of Land Management, concluded BLM's removal of nearly 100,000 horses from the Western range over the past decade is probably having the opposite effect of its intention to ease ecological damage and reduce overpopulated herds.

By stepping in prematurely when food and water supplies remain adequate, and with most natural predators long gone, the land management agency is producing artificial conditions that ultimately serve to perpetuate population growth, the committee said Wednesday in a 451-page report recommending more emphasis on the use of contraceptives and other methods of fertility control.

The research panel sympathized with BLM's struggle to find middle ground between horse advocates and ranchers who see the animals as unwelcome competitors for forage. It noted there's "little if any public support" for allowing harm to come to either the horses or the rangeland itself.

The report says the current method may work in the short term, but results in continually high population growth, exacerbating the long-term problem.

The American Wild Horse Preservation Fund, a national coalition of more than 50 advocacy groups, said the report makes a strong case for an immediate halt to the roundups that livestock ranchers say are necessary to protect the range and provide their sheep and cattle with a fair share of forage.

"This is a turning point for the decades-long fight to protect America's mustangs," said Neda DeMayo, president of the coalition's Return to Freedom.

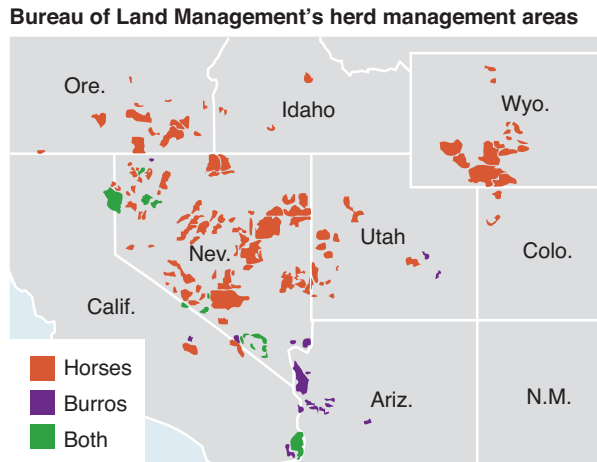

The National Cattlemen's Beef Association is among the livestock groups that have voiced support in the past for aggressive, increased use of fertility control but remain adamantly opposed to curtailing roundups. Horse advocates themselves are not united behind the idea of stepping up use of contraception on the range.

"We are grateful that the National Academy of Science recommends stopping cruel roundups, but we challenge their decision to control alleged overpopulation like a domestic herd with humans deciding who survives and breeds," said Anne Novak, executive director of Protect Mustangs in San Francisco.

Some of the hundreds of mustangs the U.S. Bureau of Land Management recently has removed from federal rangeland peer at visitors Wednesday at the BLM's Palomino Valley holding facility about 20 miles north of Reno.

An independent review of wild horse roundups concludes the U.S. government would be better off investing in widespread fertility control instead of spending millions to house them.

The conflict has raged for decades but has intensified in recent years for cash-strapped federal land managers with skyrocketing bills for food and corrals and no room for incoming animals.

"The business as usual practices are not going to be effective without additional resources," said Guy Palmer, a pathologist from Washington State University who chaired the research committee.

Rep. Raul Grijalva, D-Ariz., said the report should serve as a wakeup call to bring changes he and others in Congress have urged for years.

"These unsustainable practices are a waste of taxpayer money and jeopardize the health and safety of wild horses across the West," he said.

BLM officials said they welcomed the recommendations to help in their effort to make the program more cost-effective. Spokesman Tom Gorey said the agency "needs and wants to do a better job" managing horses, but said those advocating an end to all roundups are misguided.

"It appears that our critics want to use the report as a propaganda tool to stop gathers," which the BLM are required to do by law, Gorey said.

"Do the American people and does Congress support changing the law so that BLM would carry out a laissez-faire management policy that would subject horses and burros to mass starvation or dehydration by letting Mother Nature work her will?" he asked in an email to The Associated Press.

Panel members said they found little scientific basis for establishing what BLM considers to be appropriate, ecologically based caps on horse numbers and even less basis for estimating the overall population itself.

"It seems that the national statistics are the product of hundreds of subjective, probably independent, judgments and assumptions by range managers and administrators," the report said.

BLM's current population estimate likely is anywhere from 10 percent to 50 percent short of the true level, the report said.

The number of animals at holding facilities surpassed the estimated number on the range in 10 Western states earlier this year for the first time since President Richard Nixon signed the Free-Roaming Horses and Burros Act of 1971.

The agency averaged removing 8,000 horses from the range annually from 2002 to 2011. Last year, it spent 60 percent of its wild horse budget on holding facilities alone, more than $40 million, the committee said.

Palmer said the public traditionally adopted about 3,000 of the horses annually but that has fallen off in recent years.

"The goal would be to manage horses better on the range so that any numbers that would be taken off would be matched with the adoption demand, which is not the current case."

Woman Injured in Crash on Idaho 50 Near Eden

TIMES-NEWS

EDEN • An Almo woman was injured Wednesday when her pickup truck and a semitrailer collided on Idaho 50 near the Travelers Oasis Truck Plaza outside of Eden.

Mary Erickson, 32, was southbound on Highway 50 in a 2007 Dodge Ram 2500 pickup at about 11:30 a.m. Wednesday when the semitrailer driver turned left from the Travelers Oasis into the northbound lanes without yielding, an Idaho State Police release said.

Erickson's car crashed into the driver's side of the 2012 Western Star semitrailer driven by Raymond Broom, 46, of Columbia, Mo. A state police dispatcher declined to say whether Broom was cited.

Erickson was transported by ambulance to St. Luke's Magic Valley Medical Center in Twin Falls, where she was in good condition Wednesday afternoon.

All parties were wearing seat belts, the news release said. Highway 50 was blocked for about 2½ hours

Boise Police make Arrest Suspect in Parking Lot Attack

BOISE • Police in Boise have arrested a suspect in the attack on two women in a mall parking lot in which one woman was reportedly sexually assaulted and another was struck by his pickup.

Police on Wednesday said 31-year-old Gregory L. Macho was arrested early Wednesday on suspicion of aggravated battery and battery for the May 14 attack. Other charges are possible.

Officers say the suspect stopped his pickup behind a car, forced himself inside and began sexually assaulting a woman. A second woman who interrupted the attack was struck by a pickup truck as the suspect drove away.

Officers seized Macho's pickup.

The Idaho State Journal reports the woman who was hit spent two weeks in the hospital after suffering a broken leg and fractured hip and pelvis.

Officials: Homedale Woman Died of Natural Causes Before Fire

NAMPA • Canyon County officials say a Homedale woman whose body was found by crews responding to a house fire had died of natural causes before the fire started.

Coroner Vicki DeGeus-Morris told the Idaho Press Tribune Tuesday that 53-year-old Lorinda Waller died of lung disease.

The cause of the fire is still under investigation.

Prosecutor Says Two More Aryan Knights Sentenced

BOISE • U.S. Attorney Wendy Olson says two gang members are headed to federal prison after pleading guilty to separate drug charges.

Forty-seven-year-old Dennis James of San Pablo, Calif., received 10 years at his hearing in U.S. District Court Tuesday. And Jesse Ray Delgado of Boise, also 47, will go to prison for 14 years.

Olson says James conspired to sell methamphetamine in June 2012. He's getting a longer prison term than usual because of his felony drug crime conviction in 2006.

Meanwhile, Delgado acknowledged distributing meth around Boise, including a deal in February 2012 in which he sold one-half ounce to a confidential informant.

Some Casinos Ban Gamblers from Using Google Glass

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP) • Casinos in several states are forbidding gamblers from wearing Google Glass, the tiny eyeglasses-mounted device capable of shooting photos, filming video and surfing the Internet.

Regulators say the gadgets could be used to cheat at card games.

The New Jersey Division of Gaming Enforcement issued a directive on Monday ordering Atlantic City's 12 casinos to bar casino patrons from using the device. The directive was first reported by The Press of Atlantic City.

Similar bans are in place at casinos in Las Vegas, Pennsylvania and Ohio, among other places.

"If these eyeglasses were worn during a poker game, they could be used to broadcast a patron's hand to a confederate or otherwise be used in a collusive manner," David Rebeck, the division's director wrote in a memo to the casinos.

That type of use would constitute a crime in New Jersey. But it would be difficult to establish beyond a reasonable doubt that the glasses were actually being used to cheat, Rebeck wrote. For that and other reasons, he decided to ban the glasses on the casino floor and anywhere else gambling is taking place.

"Even if the glasses had not been used for cheating ... their presence at a gaming table would lead to the perception that something untoward could be occurring, thereby undermining public confidence in the integrity of gaming," he wrote in the directive.

In a statement issued Wednesday, Google said, "We are thinking very carefully about how we design Glass because new technology always raises new issues." It said its "Glass Explorer" pilot program "will ensure that our users become active participants in shaping the future of this technology."

OPINION

“I’m a born-free American woman. I’m telling my government, ‘You’ve forgotten your place.’”

Becky Gerritson, president of the Wetumpka Tea Party of Alabama, to lawmakers investigating the IRS’s targeting of conservative groups.

Seeking Sense on Sentencing

Libertarians believe government should have a compelling reason before it restricts an individual’s liberty. Today’s liberals believe almost any reason will do, because liberty is less important than equality, fraternity, fighting obesity and many other aspirations. Now, however, one of the more senior and liberal U.S. senators and one of the more junior and libertarian have a proposal that could slow and even repair some of the fraying of society.

Seven-term Democrat Pat Leahy’s 38 Senate years have made him Judiciary Committee chairman. Republican Rand Paul is in his third Senate year. They hope to reduce the cruelty, irrationality and cost of the current regime of mandatory minimum sentences for federal crimes.

Such crimes are multiplying at a rate of more than 500 a decade, even though the Constitution explicitly authorizes Congress to criminalize only a few activities that are national in nature (e.g., counterfeiting, treason, crimes on the high seas). The federal government, having failed at core functions, such as fairly administering a rational revenue system, acts like a sheriff with attention-deficit disorder, haphazardly criminalizing this and that behavior in order to express righteous alarm about various wrongs that excite attention.

Approximately 80,000 persons are sentenced in federal courts each year. There are an estimated 4,500 federal criminal statutes, and tens of thousands of regulations backed by criminal penalties, including incarceration. There can be felony penalties for violating arcane regulations that do not give clear notice of behavior that is prescribed or proscribed. This violates the mens rea requirement — people deserve criminal punishment only if they intentionally engage in conduct that is inherently wrong or that they know to be illegal. No wonder the federal prison population — currently approximately 219,000, about half serving drug sentences — has expanded 51 percent since 2000 and federal prisons are at 138 percent of their supposed capacity.

The Leahy-Paul measure would expand to all federal crimes the discretion federal judges have in many drug cases to impose sentences less than the mandatory minimums. This would, as Leahy says, allow judges — most of whom oppose mandatory minimums — to judge. Paul says mandatory minimum sentences, in the context of the proliferation of federal crimes, undermine federalism, the separation of powers and “the bedrock principle that people should be treated as individuals.”

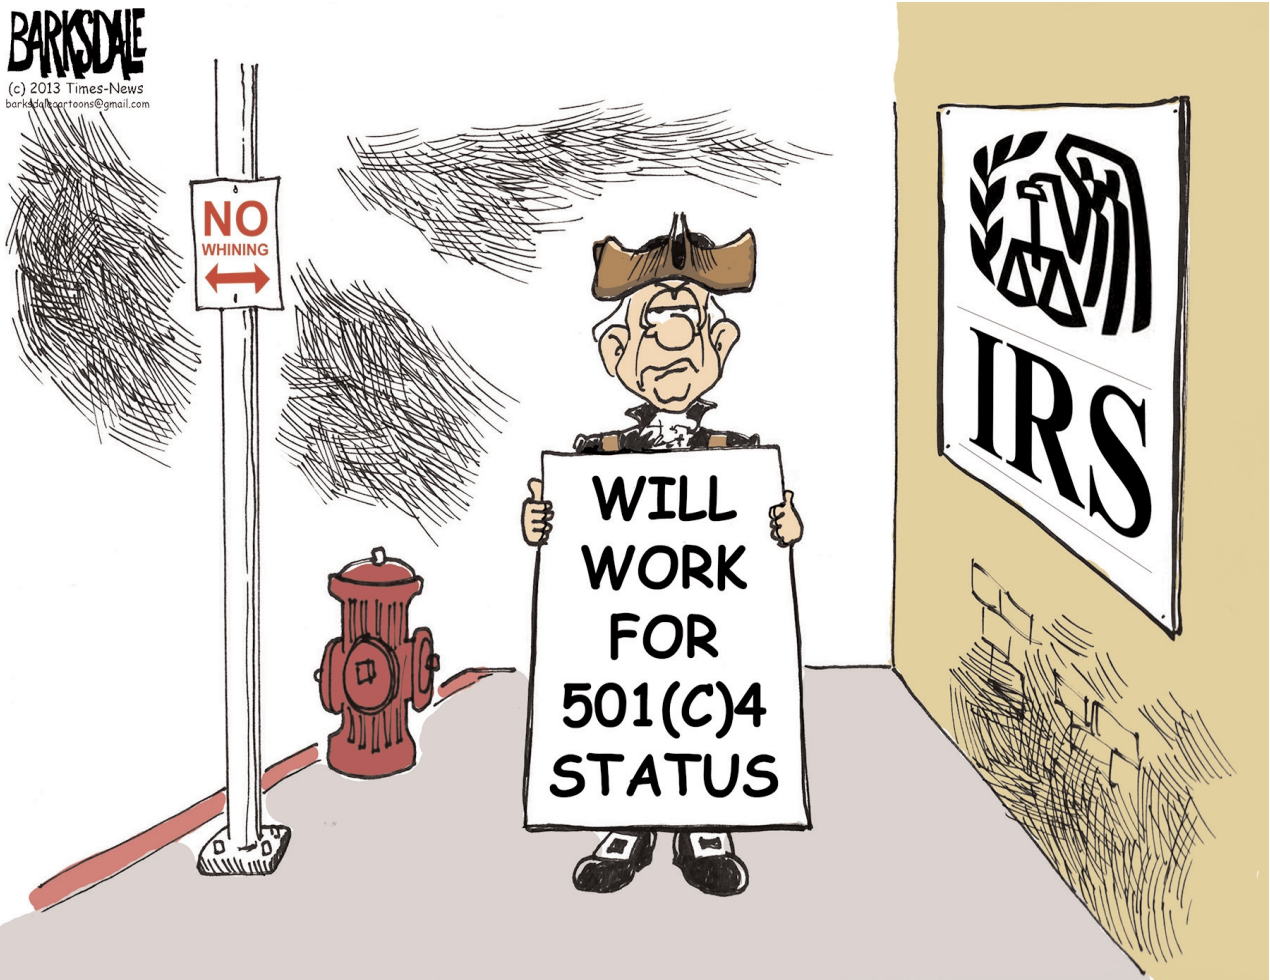

Almost everyone who enters the desensitizing world of American prisons is going to return to society, and many will have been socially handicapped by the experience. Until the 1970s, about 100 per 100,000 Americans were in prison. Today 700 per 100,000 are. America has nearly 5 percent of the world’s population but almost 25 percent of its prisoners. African-Americans are 13 percent of the nation’s population but 37 percent of the prison population, and one in three African-American men may spend time incarcerated. All this takes a staggering toll on shattered families and disordered neighborhoods.

The House Judiciary Committee has created an Over-Criminalization Task Force. Its members should read “Three Felonies a Day: How the Feds Target the Innocent,” by Harvey Silverglate, a libertarian lawyer whose book argues that prosecutors could indict most of us for three felonies a day. And the task force should read the short essay “Ham Sandwich Nation: Due Process When Everything Is a Crime,” by Glenn Harlan Reynolds, professor of law at the University of Tennessee. Given the axiom that a competent prosecutor can persuade a grand jury to indict a ham sandwich, and given the reality of prosecutorial abuse — particularly, compelling plea bargains by overcharging with “kitchen sink” indictments — Reynolds believes “the decision to charge a person criminally should itself undergo some degree of due process scrutiny.” He also suggests banning plea bargains:

“An understanding that every criminal charge filed would have to be either backed up in open court or ignominiously dropped would significantly reduce the incentive to overcharge. ... Our criminal justice system, as presently practiced, is basically a plea-bargain system with actual trials of guilt or innocence a bit of showy froth floating on top.”

U.S. prosecutors win more than 90 percent of their cases, 97 percent of those without complete trials. British and Canadian prosecutors win significantly less, and for many offenses, the sentences in those nations are less severe.

Making mandatory minimums less severe would lessen the power of prosecutors to pressure defendants by overcharging them in order to expose them to draconian penalties. The Leahy-Paul measure is a way to begin reforming a criminal justice system in which justice is a diminishing component.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Ask Your Representative to Get US out of the UN

The last thing we need at this time is to lose our national sovereignty to a United Nations world government. This would mean losing our national independence and personal freedoms.

Thankfully, we have a bill in Congress, H.R. 75, the “American Sovereignty Restoration Act of 2013,” that would end the membership of the United States in the United Nations in both the House and Senate. Among other reasons for withdrawing our nation’s membership in the United Nations are three very important ones as of 2013: Agenda 21, the UN Arms Trade Treaty and the Law of the Sea Treaty.

Getting out of the UN would help curtail U.S. involvement in the implementation of the UN’s Agenda 21, which in turn would help preserve our individual rights, especially private property rights, as well as our form of limited government under the Constitution. In fact, Section 8 of H.R. 75 would repeal the United Nations Environment Program Participation Act of 1973, thus freeing us from participation in UN environmental programs.

Regarding the Law of the Sea Treaty, Section 10 of H.R. 75 would “end any and all participation in any and all conventions and agreements with the United Nations and any organ, specialized agency, commission, or other formally affiliated body of the United Nations.” Thus passage of H.R. 75 would prevent the Senate from ratifying the UN Arms Trade Treaty and the LOST, or if ATT and LOST would be ratified before the passage of H.R. 75, then Section 10 would guarantee that we would end all participation in ATT and LOST.

Please contact Rep. Mike Simpson and ask him to support H.R. 75 to get the United States out of the United Nations. Our national independence and personal freedoms depend on it.

Why Did Times-News Assign Alison Smith to Self Defense Story?

I find it difficult to understand why it would be necessary to assign the in-your-face front-page article about self-defense to Times-News writer Alison Gene Smith. The article included a “full disclaimer,” which nullified the stigma of nepotism by revealing one of the persons involved in the story as Smith’s cousin.

The Times-News possesses a full roster of competent writers. Why should this story be assigned to a relative of one of the persons confronted by a gun-toting citizen? The accusation of a violation of journalistic ethics is defended by the disclaimer. But why should such a defense be necessary in the first place?

SARAH M. BLASIUS
Burley

Editor’s note: This decision was debated in the newsroom, and in the end it was decided that Smith’s knowledge of the case and her knowledge of the law made her the best reporter to write this story. Her distant relation to one of the people in the case did not result in bias, but we wanted to be transparent about that relationship, in case readers felt otherwise.

Filer Graduation Speaker Used the Podium for Personal Politics

On Friday night, May 25, we attended our grandson’s graduation from Filer High School. We were enjoying hearing the speeches that go along with the ceremony until the keynote speaker’s turn.

We were shocked and offended when Dr. Righetti turned her speech into a political forum for her own political view. This night was not about her; it was about young adults entering the future looking forward to bigger and better things. We heard others commenting about what poor taste she showed in her choice of a topic. The lack of a resounding applause from the crowd should have told her something.

Thank you for the opportunity to express our opinion.

Cancer Survivors Night was Informative, Enjoyable

Thank you St. Luke’s for a very informative evening, “Magic Valley Cancer Survivors Night.”

We were entertained by Matt Pond who is an example to all of us. He started with the song, “If You’re Happy and You Know it Clap Your Hands.” He told us he has good days and better days, but no bad days. Dr. Jonathan Myers gave vital information: “Thriving in Survivorship.”

A discussion panel was provided to answer questions about life during or after cancer. We are indeed blessed with a team of professionals who are here to help and care. They are planning another Survivor Night on Thursday after next Memorial Day.

Federal Government Helps Protect Wilderness

I am writing to express my views on HCR 21 and HCR 22 passed this spring by the Idaho Legislature.

The first resolution appoints a study committee to ascertain the process for the state to acquire title to and control of public lands now and since statehood controlled by the federal government. The second demands that the federal government immediately transfer title to all public lands in Idaho to the state.

Never mind the inconsistent timing of them or their probable unconstitutionality, I am against both of the resolutions for personal reasons. All of my life, I have been fond and taken advantage of our national parks and other public lands to climb their mountains, hike their trails and fish their rivers. I even maintained their trails and served as a fire lookout for the Forest Service one summer as a young man.

My wife and I have been coming to south-central Idaho most of our lives to ski, hike, fish and enjoy river rafting on the Middle Fork of the Salmon. We have elected to retire in the Wood River Valley and 17 years ago built a house in a valley on a lot bounded on two sides by Bureau of Land Management-managed land. Each year we enjoy seeing herds of elk and deer, the occasional grey wolf, foxes, coyotes and many species of birds in or above our yard which is planted in native grasses, flowers and sage. There is access to all of this BLM property, even near our home, for skiers, hikers and sheep herders who pass by on the hill above us each early summer.

But whether, like my wife and I, one lives in or on the edge of wilderness, it is important to all of us. As Wallace Stegner so brilliantly ended his 1960s Wilderness Letter:

“We simply need that wild country available to us, even if we never do more than drive to its edge and look in. For it can be a means of reassuring ourselves of our sanity as creatures, a part of the geography of hope.” One of the things the federal government does well is protect and preserve the parks and wilderness for all of us. All of this property in Idaho is a treasure and shouldn’t be acquired by the state, potentially to be sold off to the highest bidder, today, tomorrow or in a century.

Staff Sgt. Robert Bales Pleads Guilty to Afghan Killings

JOINT BASE LEWIS-MCCHORD, Wash. (AP) • The American soldier charged with killing 16 Afghan civilians during nighttime raids on two villages last year pleaded guilty Wednesday then described shooting each victim, telling a military judge there is “not a good reason in this world” for what he did.

To avoid the death penalty, Staff Sgt. Robert Bales pleaded guilty to multiple counts of murder at the hearing at Joint Base Lewis-McChord south of Seattle. He then read from a statement in a clear and steady voice, describing his actions for each killing in the same terms.

Bales, 39, said he left the remote base where he was posted in southern Afghanistan in March 2012, and went to the nearby villages of mud-walled compounds. Once inside, he said he “formed the intent” of killing the victims, then shot each one.

“This act was without legal justification, sir,” Bales told the judge while seated at a defense table, his hands folded in front of him.

Most of the victims were women and children, and some of the bodies were burned. Relatives have told the Associated Press they are irate at the notion Bales will escape execution for one of the worst atrocities of the Afghanistan war.

The judge, Col. Jeffery Nance, still must decide whether to accept Bales’ plea. Lt. Col. Jay Morse, one of the prosecutors, raised concerns during the hearing that the soldier’s testimony contradicted what he earlier acknowledged in a signed “stipulation of facts” from that night.

Morse noted Bales testified that he made the decision to kill each victim when he raised his gun and pointed it at them.

Emergency personnel respond to a building collapse in downtown Philadelphia, where the city fire commissioner says as many as eight to 10 people are believed trapped in the rubble on Wednesday.

1 DEAD IN PHILADELPHIA BUILDING COLLAPSE

PHILADELPHIA (AP) • A building that was being torn down collapsed with a thunderous boom Wednesday, raining bricks on a neighboring thrift store, killing a woman and injuring at least 13 other people in an accident that witnesses said was bound to happen.

The woman who died was 35 years old, the mayor said, but no other information about her was released.

Rescuers pulled another woman, trapped amid the rubble of a Salvation Army thrift store, after they heard her voice, city fire Commissioner Lloyd Ayers said, and the search for survivors continued hours after the 10:45 a.m. collapse on the edge of downtown.

Rescuers used buckets and their bare hands to move bricks and rubble.

“We do not know how many people were actually in the thrift store this morning when the wall collapsed on the building,” Mayor Michael Nutter said late Wednesday afternoon.

Survivors were taken to hospitals with minor injuries, Ayers said.

The collapse involved an empty building that once housed a first-floor sandwich shop and apartments above. The thrift shop was on one side. The other side was an adult bookstore and theater that had been taken down within the last few months.

Several witnesses said they had been casting a wary eye on the demolition site and questioned how the workers were tackling the job. That raised questions about how closely the highly visible spot on Market Street — one of Philadelphia’s signature boulevards — was being monitored.

Roofer Patrick Glynn said he had been watching workers take down the doomed building over the past few weeks, and said he suspected a collapse was inevitable because of the methods the workers were using.

“For weeks they’ve been standing on the edge, knocking bricks off,” he said. “You could just see it was ready to go at any time. I knew it was going to happen.”

Glynn and Anthony Soli were working on a roof atop a nearby building when they heard what sounded like two loud bangs or explosions. They immediately ran down the scaffolding and helped pull out two women and a man.

Steve Cramer, who has been working as a window washer across the street for several days, said the demolition crew left 30 feet of a dividing wall up with no braces and it compromised the integrity of the building.

“We’ve been calling it for the past week — it’s going to fall, it’s going to fall,” his co-worker Dan Gillis said.

There were no existing violations on the building and the demolition company had proper permits for the work they were doing, according to Carlton Williams of the city’s Department of Licenses and Inspections.

Copters Pluck Families from Raging European Floods

DRESDEN (AP) • Desperate families were plucked from rooftops by helicopters, cars were swept away by raging torrents and levees failed without warning Wednesday as central Europe staggered under an inland ocean of flooding. Tens of thousands of people had to be evacuated in Germany and the Czech Republic and chemical plants along the mighty Danube and Elbe rivers were hastily shut down. City officials, federal troops and emergency workers across a vast region either raced to prepare or struggled to cope as flood crests roared downstream.

Near the southeastern German town of Deggendorf, two levees broke along the Danube and Isar rivers and their raging waters engulfed nearby houses. A southern German highway disappeared under the muddy floodwaters, cars were swept away and only the top of a few trucks peeked out above the waters.

Families scrambled to their rooftops and were airlifted to safety.

“This is an absolutely life-threatening situation,” local firefighter Alois Schraufstetter said. “Houses are covered up to 10 feet deep in water.”

Four farmers were rescued at the last minute by a helicopter airlift as floods submerged their tractor, he said. About 2,000 people were evacuated. “We would have risked our lives had we stayed at home,” resident Hans Loeffmann said, adding that he and his wife had to leave all their valuables behind.

NJ’s Gov. Chris Christie Bashed for Election Move

TRENTON (AP) • Seven months after he stood shoulder-to-shoulder with President Barack Obama in what was celebrated by many in storm-battered New Jersey as a selfless display of bipartisanship, Republican Gov. Chris Christie finds himself accused of hypocrisy and nakedly political self-dealing.

The reason: On Tuesday, the day after Sen. Frank Lautenberg’s death, Christie announced a special election to fill the seat. But instead of holding it in November, when Christie is on the ballot for re-election, the budget-slashing governor scheduled it for Oct. 16, at an expected cost to the state of $12 million.

The move was at odds with Christie’s reputation for frugality and the politics-bet-damned stand he took last fall, and it infuriated Democrats and some Republicans as well.

Some said Christie clearly doesn’t want to be on the same ballot with a strong Democrat for Senate — say, Newark Mayor Cory Booker, a rising star in the party — for fear that that could boost black and Democratic turnout and deny Christie the blowout victory that could make him a strong candidate for the White House in 2016.

Former Rep. Dick Armey, a tea party leader from Texas who was once GOP House majority leader, called the October special election “debilitating stupidity.”

In an interview with ABC, he predicted it would backfire with Republicans because Christie was stressing fiscal responsibility as governor, yet willing to waste millions on special elections.

The Star-Ledger, New Jersey’s largest newspaper, called it “a shameless move that will waste at least $12 million and risk the integrity of the vote.”

The sharp criticism from so many directions is unusual for Christie, whose often combative style and quick wit have made him popular in New Jersey, an attraction as a fundraiser for Republicans across the country and a frequent guest on TV talk shows.

Last year, he worked closely with Obama in the aftermath of Superstorm Sandy and hugged the president when he visited storm-devastated parts of New Jersey. That drew criticism from some Republicans, who said he was too cozy with the president days before Obama was re-elected. But the blowback this time is more widespread.

When he unveiled the plan Tuesday, Christie portrayed it as a nonpolitical move designed to uphold democratic principles by giving voters a say in their representation as quickly as possible under state law.

Christie also scheduled a Senate primary election for Aug. 13, saying the candidates should be chosen by the people and not party bosses. That will cost the state another $12 million, and set up three elections in a span of less than three months.

“It’s as if he gave the residents of this state the finger,” Democratic state Sen. Richard Codey said.

Allegations of Sex, Drugs Roil Baltimore Jail

BALTIMORE (AP) • Inmates often complain of idleness, but Tavon White apparently had no trouble keeping busy behind bars.

Investigators say the man nicknamed “Bulldog” impregnated four female corrections officers at the Baltimore jail while running a sophisticated criminal organization that smuggled in drugs and cell phones and employed guards as gang associates. A federal indictment charging White and two-dozen others in a contraband-smuggling conspiracy has offered an embarrassing glimpse into a jail where inmates stand accused of controlling the very officers hired to guard them.

Effects of the scandal have been widely felt, and state lawmakers plan to hold a hearing Thursday to discuss problems at the state-run jail.

The state prisons director has moved his office into the jail to offer closer oversight, the jail’s security director has been dismissed and top administrators there have undergone polygraph tests to determine what they knew about the criminal activity. Gov. Martin O’Malley, a potential Democratic presidential contender in 2016, announced a task force last week to fight corruption at the jail but has also been criticized by Republican lawmakers about the detention center’s conditions.

The indictment alleges widespread dysfunction at the Baltimore City Detention Center, a downtown jail that holds thousands of defendants awaiting trial or serving short sentences.

Prosecutors say the man at the center was White, a 36-year-old with a long rap sheet who was being held on an attempted murder charge. He ascended to a gang leadership position — acquiring the title of “Bushman” — soon after arriving several years ago, investigators say. He impregnated four female guards, one twice.

Corrections department spokesman Rick Binetti said that although the indictment “reads like a Hollywood script,” the number of correctional officers implicated represents a small fraction of the workforce. He said the department proactively requested the investigation to help root out corruption and has made progress in efforts to seize contraband cellphones and disrupt gangs.

TURKS ACROSS THE SOCIAL SPECTRUM UNITE IN ISTANBUL

ISTANBUL (AP) • Office workers in business suits chant anti-government slogans alongside pious women wearing Muslim headscarves. Schoolchildren and bearded anarchists rub shoulders with football fans, well-heeled women in designer sunglasses and elderly couples donating food.

These disparate groups are united by alarm at what they consider unwarranted meddling and increasingly autocratic behavior by Recep Tayyip Erdogan, Turkey’s most popular prime minister in decades. Even some of his supporters are joining the protests sweeping Turkey.

On Wednesday, thousands thronged Istanbul’s central Taksim Square for a sixth straight day. Violent clashes broke out in the capital, Ankara, where riot police used tear gas and water cannon to subdue protesters. Nearly 1,000 people have been injured and more than 3,300 people detained since Friday, according to the Ankara-based Human Rights Association.

What started as an environmental outcry against plans to rip up trees in one of central Istanbul’s last green spaces to make way for a shopping mall has burgeoned into the most widespread unrest Turkey has seen in decades. “For the first time, it’s everyone,” said Beste Yurekli, an 18-year-old student helping to clean up garbage in Taksim Square’s Gezi Park.

Arab-American Scholar Dies at 93

McLEAN, Va. (AP) • Alixa Naff, an early and pioneering historian who documented the lives of the first wave of Arab-American immigrants a century ago, has died after a brief illness. She was 93.

Naff died Saturday at her home in Mitchellville, Md., according to two of her friends who were with her that day.

Naff, who immigrated from what is now Lebanon when she was a toddler, is perhaps best known for a collection of oral histories and artifacts that she donated to the Smithsonian and which is still available for scholarly research at the National Museum of American History.

“Through her research, Alixa Naff greatly contributed to the understanding of the early Arab immigrant experience in the United States from 1880 through the 1950s,” the Smithsonian said in a statement Wednesday.

The collection, named for her parents Faris and Yamna Naff, contains more than 2,000 photos, 450 oral histories and 500 artifacts such as personal and household goods.

Naff traveled the country in a blue Volkswagen Beetle nicknamed “the camel,” to collect the histories, and used her powers of persuasion to convince people to give up treasured family items to be included in the collection, said friend and colleague Rosemarie Esber.

Items in the collection include musical instruments, clothing and even a kibbe pounder, a large stone used to make a traditional Middle Eastern dish, Esber said.

“Her greatest legacy is saving all this material for all the others who came after her,” Esber said.

Her work documented the diversity in a community that was often overlooked by scholars, focusing on the first wave of Arab immigrants, mostly Christian, who came to America in the years surrounding the turn of the century.

“Her ability to tell their story was important in understanding the diversity of the Arab American experience,” said Helen Samhan, a friend and former executive director of the Arab American Institute in Washington. “Even in scholarly circles, the history of the Arab-American experience was often skewed in favor of hot political issues.”

Naff grew up in Spring Valley, Ill.; Fort Wayne, Ind.; and Detroit. Before moving to Mitchellville, she lived for a number of years in Falls Church, Va.

Civil Rights Leader Will Campbell Dead at Age 88

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) • The Rev. Will Campbell, a white minister who drew acclaim for his involvement in the civil rights movement, has died at the age of 88.

John Egerton, a close friend of Campbell's for nearly 50 years, told The Associated Press on Tuesday that Campbell died Monday night from complications following a stroke he had about two years ago. Egerton said he was contacted by Campbell's son, who was at the minister's bedside in Nashville when he died.

“He never really recovered from it,”

Egerton said of the stroke.

The Tennessean quotes former President Jimmy Carter as saying of Campbell, “He used the force of his words and the witness of his deeds to convey a healing message of reconciliation to any and all who heard him.”

Campbell was born in 1924 in Amite County, Miss.

After a stint in the military, he attended Yale, where he earned a divinity degree in 1952 and then headed to Taylor, La., to preach at Taylor Southern Baptist Church.

He later came to Nashville, where he was described as a staunch leader for civil rights, and was well respected by others in the movement.

Campbell was the Nashville representative of a pro-integration operation called the National Council of Churches. Because he was white, he was allowed entry into rooms unapproachable by some of those at the forefront of the movement.

“When we had the sit-ins, Will would show up,” Bernard Lafayette, a civil rights leader in Nashville and close friend of Campbell's, told The Tennessean.

Morning After Pills Allowed over the Counter

NEW YORK (AP) • Generic versions of emergency contraception can be sold without a prescription or age restrictions while the federal government appeals a judge’s ruling allowing the sales, an appeals court said Wednesday.

The brief order issued by the 2nd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Manhattan permitted two-pill versions of emergency contraception to immediately be sold without restrictions, but the court refused to allow unrestricted sales of Plan B One-Step until it decides the merits of the government’s appeal.

It did not specify why the two-pill versions were being allowed now, though it said the government failed to meet the requirements necessary to block the lower-court decision.

The order was welcomed by the Center for Reproductive Rights, where President Nancy Northup called it a “historic day for women’s health.”

“Finally, after more than a decade of politically motivated delays, women will no longer have to endure intrusive, onerous and medically unnecessary restrictions to get emergency contraception,” she said in a statement.

Ancient Primate Fossil Discovered

WASHINGTON (AP) • New fossil evidence of the earliest complete skeleton of an ancient primate suggests it was a hyperactive, wide-eyed creature so small you could hold a couple of them in your hand — if only they would stay still long enough.

The 55 million-year-old fossil dug up in central China is one of the first primates. This tiny monkey-like creature weighed an ounce or less.

Primate is the order of life that includes humans along with apes, monkeys and lemurs. Humans are set apart from other mammals because of our grasping five fingers and toes, nails and forward-facing eyes. And this new species called Archicebus achilles fits right in, said Christopher Beard, curator at the Carnegie Museum of Natural History in Pittsburgh.

Among primates there are three suborders: anthropoids which include apes, monkeys and us; and two other suborders that include lemurs and the lesser known tarsiers. This new species is in the same grouping as tarsiers. The fossil includes anthropoid-like features.

ridiculously little,” Beard said. “That’s one of the more important scientific aspects of the whole story.”

With a trunk only 2.8 inches long, the furry creature was about as small as you can get and still be a mammal, Beard said. Just like elephants and horses, the farther back in time you get for some of today’s bigger mammals, the smaller they get, Beard said.

Because it was so small and warm-blooded, it had to eat bugs and move constantly to keep from losing internal heat, Beard said.

That means, Beard said, they were “very frenetic creatures, anxious, highly caffeinated animals running around looking for their next meal.” They lived in a tree-lined area near a Chinese lake, swinging around trees in a hotter climate, Beard said.

Outside experts praised the study as significant. Rick Potts, director of the human origins program at the Smithsonian Institution, said this fossil’s mix of different features illustrate the fascinating and crucial changes that occur around major evolutionary branch points in our family tree.

Vet Recommends Medical Marijuana for Pets in Pain

LOS ANGELES (AP) • Until she introduced “magic cheese” to her sick and aging bulldog, Laura Bugni-Daniel watched him suffer for two years. He’d spend his days lying down or throwing up.

Today, at age 12, he plays like a puppy through the day, his fur is soft and he sleeps at night, soothed not by magic, but by the dose of marijuana in that cheese.

Bugni-Daniel is part of a growing movement to give medical marijuana to pets in pain. Many urge caution until there’s better science behind it. But stories abound about changes in sick and dying pets after they’ve been given cannabis — although it isn’t a proven pain killer for man or mutt, and it’s an illicit drug under federal law despite being legal for people in 19 states and the District of Columbia.

Leading the charge is Los Angeles veterinarian Doug Kramer, 36, known as the “Vet Guru,” who felt it was his duty to speak out while he has no family that would feel a verbal or financial backlash.

“I grew tired of euthanizing pets when I wasn’t doing everything I could to make their lives better,” he said. “I felt like I was letting them down.”

Pot eased his Siberian husky’s pain during her final weeks, after she had surgery to remove tumors. Not only did Nikita stop whimpering while using cannabis, but she started eating, gaining weight and meeting him at the door again.

It gave him six extra weeks with his dog before he had to euthanize her, he says. It wasn’t a cure, but he thinks it freed her of pain and improved her last days.

Some other vets contacted said they share Kramer’s view on pot, but they wouldn’t talk on the record for fear of arrest or retaliation.

Kramer hasn’t lost any clients over his view, but he was asked not to return to some of the clinics where he volunteered or relieved other vets because of concerns over the negative image his advocacy creates, he said.

Dr. Duncan Lascelles, a professor of surgery and pain management at North Carolina State University College of Veterinary Medicine, thought about studying marijuana a decade ago. He didn’t, not for lack of interest, but because the timing was wrong.

“I have been considering looking at that field again because I think it does have a lot of potential,” he said.

BIG MAKO SHARK COULD BE RECORD

HUNTINGTON BEACH, Calif. (AP) • A huge mako shark caught off the coast of Southern California could set a record, but a critic said it should have been released because sharks are threatened worldwide.

Jason Johnston of Texas caught the 1,323-pound shark off Huntington Beach on Monday after a 2-and-a-half hour battle, the Orange County Register reported.

“I’ve hunted lions and brown bears, but I’ve never experienced anything like this,” Johnston told the newspaper. “It felt like I had a one-ton diesel truck at the end of the line, and it wasn’t budging.”

If the catch is confirmed and meets conditions, it would exceed the 1,221-pound record mako catch made in July 2001 off the coast of Chatham, Mass., said Jack Vitek, world records coordinator for the Florida-based International Game Fish Association.

It takes about two months for the association to verify domestic catches, he told the Los Angeles Times.

The shark should have been released, argued David McGuire, director of the California-based protection advocacy group Shark Stewards.

“I’m a little shocked by it,” he said of the catch.

“People should be viewing these sharks as wonderful animals that are important to the ocean and admiring how beautiful they are” rather than “spilling their blood and guts,” McGuire told the Times.

RUNNER’S PAIN ISN’T A PULLED MUSCLE; IT’S A BABY

DULUTH, Minn. (AP) • An aspiring half-marathon runner in Minnesota attributed her unbearable back pain to a two-hour training session. A day later, she was cradling a newborn.

Trish Staine, 33, says she had no idea she was pregnant before Monday’s surprise birth. The Duluth mother of three said she hadn’t gained any weight or felt fetal movement in the months before. And besides, her husband had a vasectomy.

“I said ‘no, no, that’s impossible,’” Staine said Wednesday from her Duluth hospital room.

“I definitely thought I was done having kids,” she joked. Staine and her husband, John, have a daughter, 7, and a son, 11. She’s also stepmother to John’s three boys, ages 17, 19 and 20.

Staine said she ran for about two hours Sunday in preparation for the Garry Bjorklund half-marathon on June 22.

“I had a sore back Sunday evening. I had taken a hot shower and was dealing with it,” Staine said. “Monday morning, I woke up and had more back pain, and as the day went on it got worse. I thought

I should go to the ER. I thought I ruptured a disc or pulled a muscle.”

But she soldiered on, watching her husband play basketball at noon and going to her daughter’s short play. When Staine got home, she thought a bath might help her pain.

As she talked to her husband on the phone, Staine said her pain was becoming unbearable. Her husband called an ambulance.

“I felt like I was dying. I didn’t know what was going on,” she said.

CONN. GOV. SIGNS BILL RESTRICTING NEWTOWN PHOTOS

HARTFORD, Conn. (AP) • Gov. Dannel P. Malloy signed legislation into law Wednesday that prevents the public release of crime scene photos and video evidence from the Connecticut school shootings that took the lives of 20 first graders and six school employees.

The new law, a result of efforts to balance private and public interests, creates an exemption to the state’s Freedom of Information Act and applies to homicides in Connecticut.

The law prevents the release of photographs, film, video and other images depicting a homicide victim if those records “could reasonably be expected to constitute an unwarranted invasion of the personal privacy of the victim or the victim’s surviving family members.”

Malloy signed the bill hours after the General Assembly approved the eleventh-hour compromise during the early morning hours of the final day of the state legislative session.

Malloy said he believes “a parent of a deceased child should have the right to remember that child” as they wish and not because they were “caught up in some tragic and unbelievable circumstances.”

FLORIDA WOMAN, 84, CLAIMS $590M POWERBALL JACKPOT

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (AP) • An 84-year-old Florida widow who bought her Powerball ticket after another customer let her get ahead in line came forward Wednesday to claim the biggest undivided lottery jackpot in history: $590 million.

Gloria C. MacKenzie, a retiree from Maine and a mother of four who lives in a modest, tin-roof house in Zephyrhills, where the lone winning ticket in the May 18 drawing was sold, took her prize in a lump sum of just over $370 million. After federal taxes, she is getting about $270 million, lottery officials said.

She did not speak to a crowd of reporters outside lottery headquarters, leaving quickly in a silver Ford Focus with her son and family friends. She was accompanied at the lottery offices by two unidentified attorneys.

MacKenzie bought the winning ticket at a Publix supermarket in the town of about 13,300 people 30 miles northeast of Tampa. It is best known for the bottled spring water that bears its name — and now, for one of the biggest lottery winners of all time.

The $590 million was the second-largest lottery jackpot in history, behind a $656 million Mega Millions prize in March 2012, but that sum was split, with three winning tickets.

In a statement read by lottery officials, MacKenzie said she purchased the ticket after another buyer “was kind enough to let me go ahead in line.” MacKenzie let the lottery computers generate the numbers at random. She said she also bought four other tickets for the drawing.

“We are grateful with this blessing of winning the Florida Lottery Powerball jackpot,” the statement said. “We hope that everyone would give us the opportunity to maintain our privacy for our family’s benefit.”

Cheerios Stands By Ad with Mixed-race Family

NEW YORK (AP) • A mom sits at her kitchen table when her grade schooler saunters up with a big box of Cheerios.

“Mom,” says the girl. “Dad told me Cheerios is good for your heart. Is that true?”

Cut to dad waking from a nap on the living room couch with a pile of Cheerios on his chest (where his heart is) crunchily cascading to the floor.

The message is in line with the company’s Heart Healthy campaign, except this 30-second ad features a black dad, white mom and biracial child and produced enough vitriol on YouTube last week that Cheerios requested the comments section be turned off.

This week, the company is standing by the fictitious family, which reflects a black-white racial mix uncommon in commercials today, especially in ads on TV, at a time when interracial and interethnic couples are on the rise in real life, according to 2010 U.S. Census data, brand strategists and marketing consultants.

“The reality is that in general most big companies don’t want to take a lot of risks,” said Laura Ries, who has written five books on marketing and brand strategy and consults for companies large, small and in between.

“The ability for nameless, faceless people to get on the Internet is out there, and companies don’t like it when people yell at them,” she said.

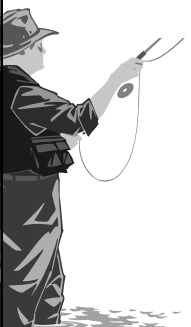

Camille Gibson, vice president of marketing for Cheerios, said it’s the first time the ad campaign that focuses on family moments has featured an interracial couple, with General Mills Inc. casting the actors to reflect the changing U.S. population.

“We felt like we were reflecting an American family,” Gibson said.

As a large company, Minneapolis-based General Mills is used to getting some degree of negative feedback and wasn’t surprised by the comments on YouTube, she said, but it was the first time the company requested the site turn the comments section off because of the vitriol.

Another site, Reddit, filtered out negative comments on a thread started with a comment in support of the ad. The site left Cheerios defenders’ remarks online.

The national ad will continue running as scheduled for several more months, and Cheerios isn’t planning any changes.

Angler Nick Anderson of Bellevue walks through Silver Creek Preserve as the sun rises on May 25, the opening day of fishing season.

Fly fishermen Rod Smith, right, of Tempe, Ariz., and son Chris Smith of Mountain Home begin to float through Silver Creek Preserve's famous S turns.

Anglers from all over the West flock to these waters on opening day each spring.

PICABO • His fingers are cold, and he hasn't landed any trout.

But Nick Anderson is celebrating his 31st birthday exactly as he wanted: standing thigh-deep in Silver Creek's Sullivan Lake before dawn on opening day. Alone.

Anderson

"I closed the season out right there last fall," Nick says, pointing to the lake's outlet. "I love it. It's a very special place we have here."

Lupine blooms along the trail to Sullivan Lake, a pink sky heralds the sunrise, and 6 a.m. is crazy noisy with birdsong.

It's May 25, the opening day of fishing season on the Silver Creek Preserve, and these waters will be congested with fly fishers within a few hours. But Nick beat the rush.

He also beat the creek's famed hatches. So the Bellevue man — a Bureau of Land Management firefighter who hopes to become a fly-fishing guide — instead is targeting big, aggressive brown trout with a "militant" fly of his own creation. He's seen lots of big browns since 4:30 a.m.

"They come flying out of the water. I don't know why I can't hook them this morning," Nick says.

Success is elusive on this catch-and-release creek. This is the graduate school of fly fishing, and anglers are fond of saying that the trout have Ph.D's in entomology. They've seen it all before.

That's the appeal of opening day: chasing those Silver Creek trout when they've had months to forget what an artificial fly looks like.

Before this day is over, close to 150 anglers will sign the visitor log-book at the preserve, owned by the nonprofit The Nature Conservancy. Some plan annual vacations around this day. Others endure a weekend of crowds and comfort themselves with the prospect of a more solitary season ahead.

Idaho Anglers Are Never Going to Live This Down

BY VIRGINIA HUTCHINS
vhutchins@magicvalley.com

PICABO • What fly fishing guide John Huber described was irresistible to a journalist: anglers who arrive at midnight to be the season's first to wade into the famous waters of Silver Creek.

It sounded a little too good to be true, but Dayna Gross, Silver Creek Preserve watershed manager for The Nature Conservancy, backed it up. She told me about people who take pride in being the first to sign the logbook at the preserve's visitor center in the first minutes of opening day each spring.

So I talked photographer Ashley Smith into giving up part of his holiday weekend, enlisted my husband as an unpaid camping outfitter and packed my toothbrush.

In the Hayspur Fish Hatchery campground on Friday evening, May 24, I interviewed anglers around their campfires while Ashley and his camera worked with the light of a full moon.

I met Adam Kimball of Boise standing apart from the fires to use his smartphone. Would he be fishing Silver Creek at midnight?

"I totally understand it. I've done it before," he said. "But not tonight."

What's the point of midnight fishing? It's those wise, experienced trout that swim in the catch-and-release creek.

"They haven't seen anything fake since November," Kimball said. "Later in the year, they get really suspicious."

He and a lot of other people can't catch anything in Silver Creek after the first few weeks, he said. "That's no joke. That's real."

A few minutes later, my conversation with Tim Mansell, owner of a Boise fly fishing shop, gave me more evidence of midnight activity at Silver Creek Preserve on opening day: "I've signed in at 11:59 before," he said.

After most of the campground crowd tucked themselves into RVs for the night, Ashley and I geared up for phase two of our assignment. We chose a spot to position Ashley's SUV — where he planned to sleep — so that it separated my tent from the generator noise of the nearest RV. Well before midnight, Ashley and I left my husband there, trying to fix the hole in our air mattress, and headed for the preserve.

I was prepared with extra pen, headlamp, fingerless gloves. Ashley had his tripod for long night exposures.

If nobody's there, we'll never let Idaho anglers live this down, Ashley said as we crossed Kilpatrick Road Bridge. Moonlight illuminated the lovely contours of Kilpatrick Pond, and Ashley wondered aloud how anglers' flashlights would look in a long exposure.

We drove to the visitor center, which sits on a hill overlooking a long stretch of Silver Creek. Anyone who visits the preserve is supposed to sign in, so this would be the first stop for any midnight anglers.

I checked the logbook. Three people had signed in, listing "fishing 5/25/13" as the purpose of their visit. But someone had noted below those three names that they'd actually signed in on May 24.

I hoped it meant we'd find three anglers already in position to wade in at midnight.

But a drive to the other end of the preserve turned up no vehicles parked along the road. Just quiet darkness. And back on the visitor center's porch, we watched headlights pass along U.S. Highway 20. None of them turned in at the preserve entrance (except my husband's).

When my phone clicked over to 12:00, I was the only person signing the logbook. Ashley and I took photos of each other to document the moment, waited another 15 or so philosophical minutes and headed back to the Hayspur campground for a little sleep. We'd be back five hours later, fueled by coffee from my husband's propane burner.

Some of the anglers I met on opening day laughed at my midnight tale. Hook, line and sinker, they said.

So was I a sucker? No, Gross assured me later.

One man who habitually tries to write the first signature on the opening-day log was at The Nature Conservancy's barbecue lunch later that day, she said. He told Gross this was the first time in eight years that he didn't fish Silver Creek at midnight.

"What are the chances?" Gross wrote to me in an email. "You should have brought your fly rod and you could have been the first to fish Silver Creek in 2013!"

Humph.

night. So they won't be interested in flies tomorrow.

But her husband disagrees. Trout eat all the time, Marty Downey says. Those insects are tiny.

Later in the night, Tim Mansell of Boise and his family join the group around Mike's campfire.

"He has a fire ring and we don't. So you make friends real quick," Janet says.

Tim has fished Silver Creek's opening day for close to 20 years — usually because water levels are too high elsewhere in the state during the holiday weekend. Not this year.

"You can pretty much fish anywhere you want this year," Tim says. But he's back anyway. "It's just tradition."

• • •

By 7:30 the next morning, three hours after Nick Anderson's first cast, parked vehicles spill out of the small lot at the preserve's visitor center. Beside tailgates or open SUV hatches, anglers pull on their boots and assemble their fly rods.

Some avoid eye contact with anyone carrying a notebook or camera, but Travis Swartz of Boise welcomes attention. He's a YouTube filmmaker whose comedy fly-fishing character, "Hank Patterson," has earned Travis speaking engagements with Trout Unlimited, the Orvis Guide Rendezvous and the Simms ICE OUT Guide Event.

"The Hank thing, over the past year it's just exploded," says Paul Peterson of Boise, Travis' cousin.

"It sucks for people who are really good at fishing to watch someone who's an idiot getting all that attention," Travis says.

Still, there's a serious side to this two-man fishing trip, a tradition rooted in their childhoods. "My dad has brought me up here since I was an infant," Paul says.

And Travis' patter slows down when they're in the water making long casts, their lines flashing in the morning light.

Back at the visitor center, Mike O'Harra of Carey is signing in after a night of feeding sick calves. His friendliness is of the small-town Idaho variety, so he's not making jokes for the journalists.

"I've been fishing out here all of my life," Mike says. With an ankle hurting too much to wade, he intends to float the S curves today. That's where he watched a family of foxes hunt mice for half an hour on opening day in 2012.

First, he scrubs his boots in a watering trough at the parking lot, to avoid transferring snails from one water to another. Everyone should do it, he says.

Nearby, David Lupien's

foursome is gearing up.

"Our plan is to get our egos put in place so we can spend the rest of the year building them back up again," the Meridian man says.

But he clearly expects to enjoy this humility.

"I've been hoarding some Cubans for this weekend," David says, opening his waterproof humidor to show off the cigars.

By 8:25 a.m., parked SUVs line the dirt road through the preserve.

Carrying float tubes, a father and son hike from the road to the head of the S turns. They're longtime fishing buddies, but this is dad Rod Smith's first time floating. The Tempe, Ariz., man timed his visit to son Chris Smith of Mountain Home for the same reason that brought other anglers out today: "As soon as the season starts, the fish get a little smarter every day," Chris says.

They plan to float through the S turns and walk back on the road four or five times.

Do they have supplies to keep them happy for a few hours? Yes, Rod answers. But he means flies. The food is back in the truck.

At the water's edge, Rod pulls on more layers of clothing while Chris searches through the pouches of his fishing vest for his reading glasses.

"I'm sure it's nice and chilly in there," Rod says.

For now, Chris strings a dry fly (a blue-winged olive) and a wet fly (a midge). Later, he'll dip a net and see what insects are in the water.

A float tuber with a full white beard appears on the opposite bank, sips from a mug, pops in earphones, drops a lanyard of tools around his neck, then sits on his tube to wait for Chris and Rod to pass. As Chris floats by, he and the man with the white beard exchange a one-word greeting: "Mornin'."

• • •

In a scene of SUVs and trucks, the BMW on its way to Kilpatrick Road Bridge at 9:05 a.m. is an anomaly. Somehow, Peter Crow of Ketchum stuffed a fully inflated tube in there.

"I always fish opening weekend here," Peter says as he steps into waders beside the car. He expects to run into people he knows on the creek, at The Nature Conservancy's barbecue and at the Picabo Angler shop. "It's very social, which is nice."

Peter — who's wearing two pairs of sunglasses on his head and one around his neck — is general manager of Smith Fishing, a division of Smith Optics. "So I'm here product testing is what I'm really doing," he says with irony in his voice.

The polarized sunglasses manager has already made the acquaintance of the father and son gearing up at the vehicle parked in front of the BMW.

"We're all fishaholics. We fish everywhere in the world that we can," Peter says, gesturing toward Rod MacKinnon of Boise and son John MacKinnon of Portland, Ore.

"Have you been for the taimen in Mongolia yet?" Rod asks Peter.

No, that's still on Peter's list. But so are a lot of fish.

Today, the MacKinnons are clients of fishing guide Brett Drummond of Silver Creek Outfitters.

"Even a professional golfer takes golf lessons," Rod explains. He and his son book part of every Silver Creek opening weekend with Brett. "He teaches us new tricks every year."

Brett stocks all three tubes with water bottles and advises John to nymph the current just downstream of Kilpatrick Road Bridge. John gets a bite immediately.

Then a man walking by on the bridge makes a surprising comment: "That kind of fishing should be illegal here," Mark Klingerman says quietly.

Crow

It's a purist's preference, not an ethical judgment.

"I just don't do that. I don't fish that way," Mark elaborates a few minutes later. The guide's young client is using both a strike indicator and a wet fly, and he's hooking too many small trout to count.

"Bobber fishing," Mark calls it. "Dragging the bottom," Ken Bennett of Hailey says.

"You can call me a snobby dry-fly fisherman. And I'm happy to be called that," says Mark, a tall, white-haired Ketchum man who's fished here for more than 40 years. He likes to choose his trout. "You've got to get just the right bug in the right place at the right time, with a light leader, and maybe he'll eat it — if you're lucky."

Mark and Ken hang out around Kilpatrick Road Bridge, waiting for evidence of an insect hatch beginning on the creek's surface. They speak with some scorn of the strike indicators just downstream, and of the opening day crowds.

"I bet I could walk down the S turns without getting wet, from one tube to another," Mark tells Ken.

Crowding is relative, of course. Only two float tubes are visible upstream and four downstream.

By 10 a.m., a few more dry-fly locals have joined Mark and Ken on the bridge, watching and pondering, and it'll be another half-hour before these two make their move. Why get there before the insects they'll mimic?

The strongest hatches appear later in the season, says Ed Grimes of Ketchum, a man whose hearty laugh follows every sentence. And they'll vary with air and water temperatures and the weather.

"Every year's a mystery," Ed says. "That's why it's interesting."

Climb a volcano, explore a lava tube or join a Junior Ranger activity or evening presentation in the campground. Look for a detailed schedule at www.nps.gov/crmo/planyourvisit/events.htm

Star Party: 9:30 p.m. Friday, June 7, and Saturday, June 8.

Join experts from the Idaho Falls Astronomical Society and experience the universe under the park's dark skies. Enjoy a presentation about the night sky and Craters of the Moon's "unearthly" connections both nights in the campground amphitheater at 9:30 p.m. Then head to the Caves Area parking lot for telescope viewing of the skies. Call 208-527-1335 for information.

Wildflower Walks: 10 a.m.-1 p.m. Saturdays, June 8 and June 15.

June is the peak of the wildflower season at Craters. Join a ranger on this guided three-mile walk that will cover a variety of habitats and a number of plant species. Pack a lunch to be eaten in the field, wear sturdy shoes and bring water. Reservations are required (call 208-527-1335), and walks will be limited to 30 people. Meet at the Tree Molds parking lot.

Nature Photography Presentation and Teacher's Workshop: Presentation on Friday, June 14; workshop on Saturday-Sunday, June 15-16.

In the spring of 2000, longtime conservation advocate Mike Medberry suffered a stroke in the remote wilderness of Craters. He was rescued after lying for hours alone and contemplating death in the harsh yet beautiful landscape. Medberry's recovery from this stroke and his struggle to protect Craters of the Moon is a story of renewal and of finding compromises to difficult problems. Meet the author as he shares some passages from his new book.

Full Moon Hike: 7-10 p.m., Saturday, June 22.

June 8 is Free Fishing Day in Idaho

Idaho Department of Fish and Game release said. Free Fishing Day includes salmon; anglers don’t need a license or salmon permit, but they are still subject to bag and possession limits.

Lack of fishing experience? No problem.

At three south-central Idaho locations, equipment will be available for use, and fishing experts will be on hand to help novice anglers learn the ins and outs. These locations will be stocked with hatchery rainbow trout before June 8.

Campsite Changes in Howell Canyon

BURLEY • The Sawtooth National Forest’s Minidoka Ranger District is working on campground improvements in Howell Canyon.

Howell Canyon is one of the most popular camping areas on the Minidoka district. Campsites are almost always full during the summer, and finding a parking spot for a day of fishing or sightseeing at Lake Cleveland can be difficult.

So a couple of changes are proposed.

First, as many as 12 new individual campsites are proposed at Thompson Flats Campground as well as redesign of the existing group sites to make them more user-friendly, a Forest Service press release said. Second, site No. 1 at Lake Cleveland Campground would be converted to day-use parking.

Parking in the Lake Cleveland area is congested, especially on busy weekends. The large trees that shaded site No. 1 recently died and were removed, making the site less desirable for camping.

But it will accommodate several vehicles and is just a short walk from the lake.

Information: visit the Sawtooth National Forest Schedule of Proposed Actions website (<http://www.fs.fed.us/sopa/forest-level.php?110414>), or call David Ashby at the Minidoka district, 208-677-8304.

App Identifies Craters of the Moon Plants

IDAHO FALLS (AP) • Officials with Craters of the Moon National Monument and Preserve have a new tool to help visitors: a smartphone app that identifies 100 of the most common plants and wildflowers found at the Idaho park.

Ted Stout with the monument’s outreach program told the Post Register that this summer is the first time the park has made the technology available to visitors. Visitors can download the free app to their Apple or Android devices and use it to search for plants by color, shape and other characteristics.

A variety of flowers already are blooming on the park’s sagebrush-covered slopes and up through cracks in the lava, with the most blooms usually showing up on the cinder slopes in mid-June and early July, Stout said.

Dwarf monkey flower, dwarf buckwheat and silver-leaf phacelia make up the bulk of the display on the cinder cones, but the varied habitats of the park support more than 700 different types of plants.

Guided walks and evening programs at the park begin this Friday.

New App: Idaho’s Fishing Rules and Information Available on Smartphones

JEROME • The Idaho Department of Fish and Game has a new mobile-friendly “Fishing Planner/Fishing Rules” app now available to the public.

This version allows anglers to find waters by name, lets them search for where to find certain fish species, shows maps of selected waters, and lets anglers search for waters within five, 10 or 25 miles of a selected town or to search by region, county or drainage.

The app also gives the rules and bag limits for the water selected, species present and current and historic fish-stocking records.

To get there, Google “Idaho fishing” and click on Fishing Planner. To use it, you’ll have to be within cellphone range because the information won’t reside permanently on the mobile device.

Chat Live with Fish and Game about Fishing in Idaho

JEROME • Anglers may join an online chat with the Idaho Department of Fish and Game to ask questions, give feedback and learn more about fishing in the Gem State.

Anglers can chat live with fisheries and hatchery staff, along with enforcement officers, from 6 to 8 p.m. Wednesday, June 12. They’ll answer questions about the status of the salmon fisheries; family fishing opportunities; outlooks for steelhead, kokanee, stream, reservoir and mountain lake fishing; and related topics during the live, two-hour chat.

Participants may also respond to fisheries-related polls and surveys and see the results in real time.

“The summer fishing season is here, and we hope this chat helps anglers with their questions in a new and interactive way,” Dave Parrish, sport fishing program coordinator, said in a press release.

Non-Profit Business Spotlight

El Korah Shriners received its dispensation in 1891, and was chartered in 1898 in Boise, Idaho. El Korah is the fifth oldest Shriners established in the Pacific Northwest.

El Korah's jurisdiction includes all of Idaho, south of the 45th parallel of latitude, which is basically everything south of the Salmon River. Membership in El Korah Shrine offers many rewards, including the opportunity to join one of the fifteen units and fifteen clubs. Most units are formed to participate in parades and ceremonies or assist in social and fundraising functions. The oldest unit is the Black Light Patrol that was chartered in 1909. They are one of the most active units in El Korah with their drill performances at our ceremonies, as well as carrying the colors in parades and circuses. The clubs of El Korah have increased in size as more and more members develop common interests. One of the clubs is the Gold Rush Shrine Club. They hold four meetings a year in Idaho City, a short drive from Boise. Idaho City was known as one of America's largest producers of gold in the early years of the "Gold Rush". The Gold Rush Shrine club has many members at large, one being former President Gerald Ford.

When you ask a Shriner why they became a Shriner, their answer often includes a statement about "having fun, helping kids." What they are referring to is their philanthropic efforts supporting Shriners Hospitals for Children. Shriners Hospitals for Children is an international health care system of 22 hospitals dedicated to improving the lives of children by providing specialty pediatric care, innovative research and outstanding teaching programs. Every year, the 22 hospitals provide care for thousands of kids with orthopedic conditions, burns, spinal cord injuries, and cleft lip and palate, in a family centered environment regardless of the patients' ability to pay.

Nineteen Shriners Hospitals provide care for congenital and acquired orthopedic conditions, four hospitals provide acute and rehabilitative care for burn injuries, three hospitals provide rehabilitative care for children with spinal cord injuries, and the cleft lip and palate program is expanding to multiple Shriners Hospitals. Some Shriners Hospitals offer care in more than one care specialty.

Shriners Hospitals for Children is dedicated to conducting innovative research to provide answers to complex medical difficulties affecting children. Shriners Hospitals' contributions to the medical community not only benefit our patients, but contribute to the overall body of medical knowledge for the care and treatment for a wide range of pediatric and adult conditions worldwide.

Shriners Hospitals for Children is proud of its role in medical education. In the past 20 years, more than 8,000 physicians have received residency education or postgraduate fellowship at Shriners Hospitals. By maintaining relationships with more than 60 medical teaching facilities worldwide, Shriners Hospitals for Children fosters an academic environment committed to providing high-quality medical care to all patients.

El Korah Shriners invite you and your family to come and enjoy the 63rd annual Shrine Circus, Wednesday, June 19 at the Twin Falls Filer Fairgrounds. For show times and ticket locations see the ad on this page today.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE®

Bobby Wolff

"Real stupidity beats artificial intelligence every time."
— Terry Pratchett

The humiliation of losing to a machine would never befall a top-class bridge player, would it? Playing bridge had previously seemed to be an insurmountable task for artificial intelligence. Until a decade ago, no program had proved capable of offering more than mediocre opposition to a decent player. But things may be about to change.

Onno Eskes of the Netherlands has written in IMP magazine about how, in the right circumstances, computers can defeat humans. Over the next few months, I will be running some deals that reflect their strengths.

In seven diamonds (reached after West had shown the majors and a weak hand), two expert Dutch declarers went wrong. They won the spade lead and led a diamond to the ace, West discarding a spade. With hearts not breaking, declarer could not take advantage of the favorable lie of the clubs and went one down — for a flat board.

Eskes decided to present the hand to GIB, a bridge program developed by Matt Ginsberg, which can process the information about West's hand plus the opening lead.

After 30 seconds it produced the spade ace, then, after a pause, it played the club ace. The computer discarded the spade queen and ruffed a small club in hand. Next came the diamond ace (discovering the bad trump split), a diamond to the queen, the two top clubs and the master club six. East ruffed, South overruffed, and he could now draw the last trump and ruff his last heart in dummy.

ANSWER: You are worth a second call, but the danger of bidding three clubs is obvious; no one likes playing in a 5-1 fit. The way to get spades into play would be to double. By contrast, a call of two no-trump is not natural but shows minors, with longer clubs of course. Your sequence suggests this precise pattern, plus extras.

IF JUNE 6 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY: Take advantage of rewarding business or career experiences in the next six weeks, then take a vacation and indulge your taste for the finer things in life in late July. Your attention to the rules and ability to shoulder responsibilities is something you can be proud of in November. Manage your time wisely, as a passion to succeed throws your ambitions into high gear. In December and January, you'll be somewhat wiser than usual. You're able to make smart choices and long-range plans that will be beneficial on many levels. Any offers or opportunities that appear could be heaven sent.

HOROSCOPE
Jeraldine Saunders

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Exercise keeps you healthy, even if you only exercise your authority. Avoid disputes over shared resources or debts. Solve problems early before they grow any bigger by doing what you promised.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Have faith that things will work out for the best. A frustrating financial situation might make you feel like you're stuck between a rock and hard place. Hold off on key financial decisions until tomorrow.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Remember the song about the ant and the rubber tree. You, too, can handle things much bigger than you are. However, this doesn't mean it's a good time to borrow money or get involved in confrontations.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): You might be fooling yourself, but you can't fool others. That hearty pat on the back you think you deserve might not be warranted. Don't expect praise before the job is done.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): It's much better to repair than to reproach. Avoid getting bogged down in disputes about past misunderstandings that may needlessly complicate the present. Extend forgiveness and mend broken fences.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): For a short period, you may feel dissatisfied with the most important people in your life. Just keep your unhappiness under wraps because later tonight, or even tomorrow, you'll see things differently.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): The grass is only greener on the other side of the fence because it's fertilized with good intentions. You might have a new romantic prospect in mind, but the people you already love need your attention more.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Sleep on it. When something grabs your attention, you may be impatient and want to buy it immediately. Instant gratification won't necessarily bring lasting satisfaction. Wait for tomorrow.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You're not helpless since you're actually getting plenty of help. Your finances may seem to be completely in the hands of someone else. Perhaps the boss, a spouse, or a partner controls the purse strings.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Move forward slowly with an essential project because one pesky drawback will fall away if you simply wait and don't make unnecessary moves. Sign no contracts or paperwork.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Money matters matter. Something you save up to buy may be worth waiting for. An impulsive purchase could prove costly if you pressure someone into sharing the expense or stretch your budget out of whack.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): We all have doubts at one time or another. Like stray dogs, they can follow you home and track mud all over your clean kitchen floor if you let them. Remain trusting.

WWW.MAGIC VALLEY.COM/ CLASSIFIEDS

DEAR ABBY: It is easy to watch or read the news and think people are awful and this world is going nowhere fast. At New Year's I made a resolution to try and DO something about how I view society. I decided I'd do 30 random acts of service for strangers.

DEAR ABBY
Jeanne Phillips

I know it may seem small and insignificant, but at least I can say I'm trying to make this a better place to live. I'm hoping it will spread a message of love and caring in a world with too much hurt and violence. Ideally, one or two people will notice and pay it forward.

It's spring, and so far I have volunteered as a math tutor at a local school and shoveled the snow off a neighbor's sidewalk. But I'm already falling behind, and I'm struggling to come up with some good ideas. I know you and your readers often have creative suggestions. Can you suggest more acts of service I can do for strangers?

— TRYING TO

DEAR TRYING TO BE NICE: You could volunteer at a local food pantry. Or find an organization that delivers food to shut-ins and take meals to the clients they serve a couple of days a month.

You could bring a garbage bag with you when you take walks in the morning or evening and pick up paper cups, plastic bags, cigarette butts and candy wrappers that litter our streets and beaches. Or simply acknowledge the presence of others by smiling and saying, "good morning," "good afternoon" and "good evening" to people you encounter.

Readers, if you'd like to chime in, I'd be interested in your ideas.

DEAR ABBY: Two years ago, when I was a senior in high school, a guy became overly attached to me. He shared many very private feelings with me about his lack of friends and severe depression. After trying to help him, first by myself and later with a school guidance counselor and even involving his parents, I decided his problems were too much for me to handle and ended the friendship. I know I hurt him, but I saw no other alternative. After high school we didn't speak for about a year.

We are now in the same college and he's trying to force himself back into my life and be friends again. Abby, he hasn't changed at all. I feel bad, but I have no interest in becoming his friend.

What should I do? I have a hard time saying no because he is so persistent and I feel guilty.

— FEELING PITY
IN NEW JERSEY

DEAR FEELING PITY: Tell him the truth. Say, "I can't be your friend because your problems overwhelm me. But YOU can do something about them by going to the student health center and asking for counseling, and by joining some clubs and activities so you can interact with new people."

DEAR ABBY: Why are brownies called brownies if they are black?

— JUST WONDERING
IN HOUSTON

DEAR JUST WONDERING: I took your question to Lachlan Sands, executive chef at Le Cordon Bleu College of Culinary Arts, Los Angeles, who says, "The first mention of 'brownies' is in a Fanny Farmer cookbook published in 1906. They are not called brownies because of the color, but were named after Celtic pixies."

P.S. If your brownies are turning out black, you may be baking them too long.

Dear Abby is written by Abigail Van Buren, also known as Jeanne Phillips, and was founded by her mother, Pauline Phillips. Write Dear Abby at www.DearAbby.com or P.O. Box 69440, Los Angeles, CA 90069.

Minico’s RBI Tournament This Weekend

Burley-Minico Rivalry Game at 9 p.m. Thursday

TIMES-NEWS

RUPERT • The annual RBI Baseball Tournament will begin today at Minico High School’s Wartburton Field. This year will see some subtle changes. Instead of eight or more teams that have competed at the tourney in past years, only six teams are on the schedule this season. The three-day aluminum bat tournament features Minico, Burley, Caldwell, Pocatello, Madison and Helper (Utah). Rather than divide into pods and seed according to tournament record for Saturday’s games and championship, this year’s tournament will be a true round-robin and the team with the best record will be crowned champion. Games begin Thursday at noon. On Friday game starts run from 10 a.m. to 10 p.m. The tournament wraps up Saturday, with games going from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m.

Questions, Answers About MLB Drug Investigation

ASSOCIATED PRESS

Major League Baseball is checking into links between players and performance-enhancing drugs, centering on a now-closed clinic in the Miami area. A look at the expected lineup and possible penalties:

Q: What makes this MLB investigation different than past probes?

A: The scope. Perhaps 20 or more players could eventually be disciplined, including some pretty big names.

Q: Like who?

A: MVPs, All-Stars, a Cy Young Award winner. Alex Rodriguez, Ryan Braun, Melky Cabrera, Nelson Cruz and Bartolo Colon are among those who have been tied to Biogenesis of America.

Q: What is that?

A: An anti-aging clinic in the Miami area that closed late last year. MLB wants to know whether it supplied banned drugs to players.

Q: How will MLB find out?

A: By talking to the clinic's founder, Anthony Bosch. After months of pressure and a lawsuit, he has agreed to cooperate with the investigation. What he tells MLB and the records he turns over could be enough to lead to penalties.

Q: What kind of penalties?

A: Suspensions. There's been a lot of speculation that players could be tossed for 50 games or even 100 games, costing them millions of dollars in salary.

Q: Is that likely?

A: The players' union could file grievances over each one, and it would take a while to sort them out. Even if penalties were announced next month around the All-Star game, the appeal process might keep them from taking effect until next season.

Q: Are the players talking?

A: Well, MLB has been interviewing them — what they're saying is uncertain. For about three weeks, they've been summoned and have been showing up with their lawyers.

Q: How serious is MLB about penalizing some of its stars?

A: Very. Commissioner Bud Selig and his team appear determined to catch the cheaters. They were livid when Braun's 50-game suspension was overturned by an arbitrator in early 2012, and seem eager to nail the offenders.

Q: Haven't we been through all of this before?

A: Yes. Baseball is still recovering from the Steroids Era, a time in the late 1990s well into the 2000s when oversized sluggers and pumped-up pitchers ruled. MLB has imposed tougher testing and stiffer penalties in recent years, but that hasn't deterred every player from trying to find an easier way to get better.

Q: Will the drug cloud ever go away?

A: Hard to say. Fans, players, managers and executives hope so, but scandals keep popping up. There may come a day when every 430-foot home run isn't followed by whispers of "is he juicing?" — we're not there yet, though.

Nadal, Djokovic to Meet in French Open Semifinals

ASSOCIATED PRESS

PARIS • The ease with which Rafael Nadal and Novak Djokovic swept aside their quarterfinal opponents at the French Open was remarkably similar.

Both men won in straight sets Wednesday, hardly challenged. Both earned 12 break points, Nadal converting seven, Djokovic five. Nadal's serve was broken only once, Djokovic's twice.

In what amounted to heavy-duty practice sessions for the real test that lies ahead, Nadal needed 1 hour, 56 minutes to beat No. 9-seeded Stanislas Wawrinka 6-2, 6-3, 6-1 in Court Philippe Chatrier, while a short walk away, Djokovic's 6-3, 7-6 (5), 7-5 victory over No. 12 Tommy Haas in Court Suzanne Lenglen lasted just 17 minutes longer.

Now comes the show-down everyone's been anticipating since the field was set nearly two weeks ago: A Djokovic vs. Nadal semifinal Friday that will have the feel of a final, and not only because they met for the championship at Roland Garros a year ago.

"A lot of people in the tennis world are looking to the matchup coming up with Rafa and Novak," said Haas, who at 35 was the oldest French Open quarterfinalist since 1971. "I'll definitely be watching."

Who wouldn't?

Djokovic, ranked and seeded No. 1, against Nadal, owner of a record seven Spain's Rafael Nadal returns the ball against Switzerland's Stanislas Wawrinka, defeating him in three sets 6-2, 6-3, 6-1, in their quarterfinal match at the French Open tennis tournament, at Roland Garros stadium in Paris, Wednesday.

French Open titles, including three in a row.

Djokovic, trying to become the eighth man to complete a career Grand Slam, against Nadal, trying to become the only man to win eight trophies at one major tournament.

Djokovic owns six major titles, Nadal 11.

"I would prefer an easier opponent," Nadal said.

Djokovic is 33-4 this season and reached his 12th consecutive major semifinal, the second-longest streak in history.

Nadal is 41-2 since returning in February after missing seven months because of a left knee injury he declined to discuss Wednesday.

That absence is why Nadal's ranking slid and he was seeded No. 3, so was drawn to play Djokovic in the semifinals; their previous 11 matchups came in tournament finals.

"He never gives up. I mean, that's an impressive virtue that he has. Over the years, he's been so consistent and so dominant, on this surface especially," Djokovic said. "He's struggled with injuries, came back, and lost only a few matches since he came back. You've got to respect that."

It's all enough to render Friday's other semifinal something of an afterthought, even if local fans have a rooting interest when No. 6 Jo-Wilfried Tsonga of France faces No. 4 David Ferrer of Spain. Tsonga, who beat Roger Federer in the quarterfinals, wants to give France its first male champion at Roland Garros since Yannick Noah 30 years ago.

The women's semifinals Thursday are No. 1 Serena Williams against No. 5 Sara Errani, and No. 2 Maria Sharapova against No. 4 Victoria Azarenka. Sharapova, the defending champion, and Azarenka advanced Wednesday; Williams and Errani won their quarterfinals Tuesday.

McLemore, Oladipo among those Working Out for Suns

BY BOB BAUM
AP Sports Writer

PHOENIX • Some of the biggest names in this year's NBA draft – including guards Ben McLemore of Kansas and Victor Oladipo of Indiana – headed a group of prospects who worked out for the new regime of the Phoenix Suns on Wednesday.

Small forward Shabazz Muhammad of UCLA, forward-center Cody Zeller of Indiana and 7-foot-2 French-

McLemore worked out privately for new general manager Ryan McDonough and new coach Jeff Hornacek. The other six — including Wisconsin center Jared Berggren and Oregon small forward E.J. Singler – worked out in a group setting.

Maryland center Alex Len also was on hand but did not work out because he is recovering from ankle surgery.

The Suns have the fifth overall pick, as well as the 30th — and final pick — in the June 27 draft.

It's entirely possible that five, maybe six, of those in attendance could go in the top 10.

"This was a really talented group," McDonough said. "We had a bunch of guys in the gym who I think will end up in the lottery."

McLemore is the least likely of the group to be available when Phoenix makes its pick.
