Healing with Horse Power

Johnny Urrutia has combined his love of horses and desire to help youth into a program that helps youth through the power of equine therapy.

BY TETONA DUNLAP
tdunlap@magicvalley.com

GOODING • Jordan Oneida Orozco slowly approached the horse warming itself in the late afternoon sun, its head hung low, eyes draped by long lashes. He started to slip a purple rope halter over its nose, but the horse turned away and the rope went limp.

Jordan might not have known it, but this simple task revealed a great deal to trained observers. Did he ask for help? Do family members try to fix his problem? If so, what were the dynamics?

This was the first of his 16 sessions with Idaho Horse Therapy Inc.

Jordan smiled shyly and fiddled with the rope, not quite making sense of the loops, before equine specialist Johnny Urrutia stepped in to lend advice.

“He was really worried and scared,” Urrutia later noted. “He was afraid of making a mistake. He asked, ‘Is it going to hurt?’ He was already planning on getting hurt.”

On paper, the 13-year-old appeared to be a violent, troubled child: On probation a second time, now with three charges and one pending. Hospitalized twice and medicated since age 5. In counseling for years.

“I’ve literally tried everything,” said his mother, Lacey Oneida, from classes for parents with angry children and those with mental illnesses to reading “The Explosive Child.”

“I did everything that people suggested to me. I literally took everything from him, including his clothes, his bed ... he had to earn it back. Four months ago, he got (accused of) attempted arson, and I took everything away.”

Nothing worked until Jordan started weekly visits to Urrutia’s ranch between Gooding and Shoshone.

Equine therapy is the best thing that has happened to him, Oneida said, largely because he is with a positive male role model.

Kids Learn about Off-highway Vehicle Safety

BY JULIE WOOTTON

HANSEN • Dust flew up in the air as 10-year-old Cadee Kulm turned her ATV around small, orange cones.

Nearby, other children maneuvered around the dirt parking lot at Magic Mountain Resort as instructors yelled out directions.

“Eyes up, eyes up,” instructor Blair Geiger told the children.

During the first safety class

Saturday morning, she and another instructor, Scott Hildesheim, put out small logs and children practiced driving over them.

This weekend, children from around south-central Idaho are learning how to safely ride off-highway vehicles.

It’s the second year of the Magic Mountain OHV safety fair. There were classes Saturday in the Sawtooth National Forest Jerry Veenendaal stands in his vegetable garden in Hagerman.

The Man Who Grows and Gives away Gladioli

BY TETONA DUNLAP
tdunlap@magicvalley.com

When We Met

A wooden bear appeared to wave as I turned down a gravel road. In its other paw was a sign that read, “Veenendaal The Funny Farm.” Jerry Veenendaal, 83, is more than 6 feet tall, with a white fu manchu beard. He was born in Wendell before any dairies were there. After working as a Los Angeles firefighter for 27 years, he moved to Hagerman 28 years ago. “It was the greatest job in the world,” Jerry said. In his office hang old photos of his helicopter crew battling wildfires. A white hard hat with his name stenciled in red hangs next to a large axe with mirror-finished head. Jerry ended up in Southern California after joining the Navy in 1950. He met his wife, Sigrid, while stationed in San Diego. She was a friend of one of Veenendaal’s shipmates. Shortly after meeting Sigrid, Jerry told his buddy he was going to marry her. Sigrid had grown up in the Los Angeles area. When the couple moved to Idaho, friends and family joked that she wouldn’t last five months. “I’ve never missed a day,” Sigrid said. The Veenendaals have three children and several grandchildren and great-grandchildren. It was the grandchildren who named their Hagerman home “The Funny Farm.” That’s because at grandma and grandpa’s, “funny” things such as sheep, chickens and lambs roam the property. They all seem exotic to children growing up in big cities.

How You May Know Him

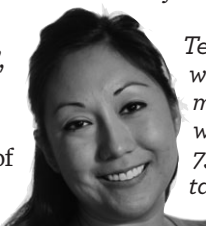

In his spare time, Jerry gardens. Every year he plants a large vegetable plot and several rows of his favorite flowers, gladioli and zinnias. This year he planted more than 1,000 gladiolus bulbs. When they bloom, Jerry gives bouquets to family and friends. The key to a his green thumb? Work, weed and water. Jerry is also an avid hunter. His shop is filled with antlers, and his half of the living room is decorated with mounted sport birds and animal pelts. Sigrid’s half displays her collection of antique dishes. In the mornings, Jerry likes to join other members of the “Temple of Truth,” as Sigrid said it is known, and talk politics while sipping coffee. The “Temple of Truth” is actually the inside of the local Chevron station where local men gather and keep their favorite mugs in a nearby cabinet. Sometimes Jerry makes two appearances a day. “If you can’t lie with a straight face, you’re not allowed,” Jerry said with a smile. “And about half of them can’t hear,” Sigrid added.

Jerry turned to me, a twinkle in his eye, “I can’t hear what she’s saying, so I can’t debate.”

What’s Next for Him

Yesterday Jerry went fishing at Anderson Dam. He caught a couple of bass. He’s looking forward to hunting season and has put in for his elk and deer tag. The couple recently bought tickets for Antique Roadshow, which will be in Boise on June 29. Sigrid was really excited about going. Jerry, not so much. “I’m not going, I gave my ticket up,” he said. Instead, he’ll probably work in his garden or mosey downtown, grab his mug from the cabinet and wait for the boys to gather.

Church Fires May Have Been Set to Hide Burglaries

BOISE (AP) • Court records indicate two men with extensive criminal records who police say set ablaze a pair of Emmett churches causing extensive damage did so to cover up burglaries.

The Idaho Statesman reports in a story on Saturday that authorities say a safe, computer equipment and other items were taken from Community Bible Church and First Baptist Church before the fires started sometime before 4:30 a.m. on April 27.

Forty-one-year-old Bradley Thomasson and 45-year-old William Dorahush Jr. in mid-May were each charged with two counts of arson as well as burglary and theft shortly after being arrested. Police believe the two met in prison in Idaho, where they lived in the same housing unit at least four times between 2001 and 2011.

Emmett Police Chief Steve Nebeker said the agency received up to 20 tips a day following the fires.

“Our detectives were running nonstop,” he said. One tip led to a residence in Gem County where Thomasson, Dorahush and Dorahush’s girlfriend, Tammy Hannan lived.

Along with stolen items, police say they discovered two marijuana plants at the residence. Hannan told police they belonged to Dorahush, but she said he had taken care of them. Hannan has been charged with felony manufacturing of a controlled substance.

Court records say Hannan told police that Dorahush said they set fire to the churches in an attempt to remove evidence linking them to the burglaries.

Thomasson was a 17-year-old high school senior when he shot Judith Ann Thomasson, 50, and Ray E. Thomasson, 57, on Sept. 22, 1989 at their Lewiston home. The teen initially told police he had argued with his parents over the use of the family’s car. He spent 22 years in the state prison system for the killings and was released on parole in January 2012.

Dorahush has previous convictions for arson, burglary, grand theft, escape and possession of a firearm.

“One question we’ve all been asking is, ‘Why did they end up here?’” said Bill Buttici, mayor of Emmett, which has a population of about 6,500 and is located about 30 miles northwest of Boise. “No one seems to know.”

The First Baptist Church was built a century ago and is listed on the National Register of Historic Places. The fire started in the basement, investigators said. The Community Bible Church fire also appears to have started in the basement, destroying offices and countless marriage, baptism, financial and other records.

Oregon Fish and Wildlife Endorses Wolf Settlement

GRANTS PASS, Ore. (AP) • The Oregon Fish and Wildlife Commission has adopted temporary rules putting in place terms of a settlement to a lawsuit that had barred state biologists from killing wolves that attack livestock.

The commission approved the rules at its regular meeting in Tigard. It will take up permanent rules later this year.

Conservation groups negotiated a settlement with the state and the Oregon

Cattlemen’s Association that makes killing wolves a last resort. Ranchers must first use non-lethal measures to protect their herds. And a pack must attack a herd four times before it can come under a kill order.

For the past year, Oregon has been the only state where wolves could not be killed for attacking livestock. During that time, livestock attacks went down while the wolf population went up.

BACKtalk

Headaches are the second most frequent symptoms in neck trauma patients. Neck trauma can occur as a result of blunt trauma, automobile accidents, falls, sports injuries, etc.

The cervical spine is unlike the rest of the axial skeleton, in that it exhibits greater range of motion. Stability is maintained by bony and ligamentous structures. Movements beyond normal range that occur during trauma damage ligaments. The result is neck pain, muscle spasms, aberrant motion, and reflex head pain from mechanical stress affecting the upper cervical spine.

Trauma can lead to changes that alter the normal function of the spine, and may lead to dis-ease.

south of Hansen and more sessions will be offered to-day.

Twin Falls County Sheriff's Lt. Daron Brown said the goal this weekend is to get 200 children through classes.

Brown said children learn basic skills such as shifting their weight, how to turn, stop and accelerate.

"These kids learn how to be safe riders," he said.

Agencies such as the Twin Falls County Sheriff's Office, Magic Valley Safe Kids and Idaho Department of Parks and Recreation - as well as a few businesses - were involved in this year's event.

Here in Idaho, children ages 16 and younger who don't have a driver's license must pass a course and get a permit in order to ride an OHV on U.S. Forest Service land.

"This is going to get these guys their permit," Brown said about the classes this weekend.

When the law went into effect three years ago, "there essentially was no training in this area," he said.

Brown said he got in touch with the Idaho Department of Parks and Recreation to help launch an annual safety fair with the help of other deputies and friends.

He became an instructor, too.

For beginning riders, a safety class takes about three hours to complete - including passing a skills test.

Experienced riders - those who have been riding for at least two years - just have to take the skills test, which is about 15 minutes long.

After she finished the class, Cadee sat on a red ATV wearing a helmet and safety goggles as her parents waited nearby.

She said she learned about how to get around obstacles, how to brake and how to go over bumps during the class.

Going over a log was the most challenging part.

"It was kind of hard," she said.

Cadee has been riding on ATVs for a couple of years, but always with her father.

There will be more classes today for children. Sign-ups aren't required, but interested participants should arrive at Magic Mountain Resort before noon.

Jail Inmate's Death Ruled Accidental Overdose

IDAHO FALLS (AP) • Investigators say the death of an inmate at an eastern Idaho jail was an accidental overdose.

The Post Register reports 47-year-old James DeWitt died Feb. 16 in his cell at the Bonneville County Jail. The Lemhi County Prosecutor's Office led the investigation and has determined that the Idaho Falls man died of drug toxicity combined with an enlarged heart. The prosecutor's office determined that neither jail officials nor DeWitt's fellow inmates were criminally liable in his death.

It's not clear what drug DeWitt overdosed on, but Bonneville County Sheriff's Sgt. Jeff Edwards says it wasn't any of the medicines distributed by the jail to ailing inmates.

DeWitt was booked into the jail around 5 p.m. the evening before his death. Jail staff found him unresponsive early the next morning.

Idaho Court Rules Man Can Face Felony Stalking Charge

BOISE (AP) • The Idaho Court of Appeals has ruled that allegedly violating a Washington-issued no-contact order is sufficient to elevate charges against an Idaho man to felony first-degree stalking.

The judges on Friday reversed a 2nd District Court decision that had reduced charges against Paul Carey Hartzell to second-degree stalking, a misdemeanor.

According to court documents, a counselor who lived in Washington but worked in Idaho sought a no-contact order preventing Hartzell from contacting her for a year.

That's after he allegedly made unwanted advances, including at her home.

Initially charged with first-degree stalking, a judge reduced the charges against Hartzell.

That didn't sit well with prosecutors.

The Appeals Court agreed, ruling unanimously the district court judge erred by concluding the Washington state order couldn't elevate the Idaho charge to first-degree stalking.

SW Idaho Man Faces Child Porn Charges

BOISE (AP) • A southwestern Idaho man who police say had child porn on his computer and was sharing illegal images over the Internet has been taken into custody on suspicion of sexual exploitation of a child.

The Ada County Sheriff's office says 26-year-old Brandon T. Thorne of Boise was taken into custody Friday and is being held in the Ada County Jail on a $200,000 bond.

Detectives with the Idaho Internet Crimes Against Children Task Force began investigating in January and seized a computer and other items in March.

On Thursday, Ada County Prosecutors issued an arrest warrant for Thorne on seven felony counts of sexual exploitation of a child.

Thorne's initial court appearance is scheduled for Monday.

Animal Cruelty Charges, Felony Drug Charge Dropped

CALDWELL (AP) • Thirty misdemeanor counts of animal cruelty as well as a felony marijuana trafficking charge have been dropped against a southwest Idaho man after a judge ruled evidence was obtained illegally.

The Idaho Press-Tribune reports that the animal cruelty charges were dropped Friday and the drug charge was dismissed Tuesday against 65-year-old Jerry Krebs of Caldwell.

Third District Judge Molly Huskey ruled search warrants that authorities say led to the discovery of 30 mal-nourished English pointers were based on illegally obtained evidence.

Huskey also ruled that statements made by Krebs were obtained in violation of his Fifth Amendment right against self-incrimination.

Those rulings resulted in physical evidence and statements by Krebs being banned from use in court.

Attempts to obtain money and property from Krebs in connection with the marijuana case have also been dropped.

Man Who Targeted Runaways Sentenced to Prison

CALDWELL (AP) • A 45-year-old Idaho man who targeted young runaways for sex will spend at least eight years behind bars.

Friday's sentence comes after James Kirk of Nampa was found guilty in April by a 3rd District Court jury of lewd conduct with a child and sexual battery of a minor child.

According to prosecutors, Kirk met two girls, aged 13 and 17, walking around Nampa last August.

They say he had sex with both in a hotel room, crimes witness by two other runaway girls.

State Judge Juneal C. Kerrick contends Kirk was a serious risk to reoffend, since he'd been convicted previously of six felonies.

Deputy Prosecuting Attorney Erica Kallin called Kirk a career felon who has demonstrated blatant disregard for laws and the rights and safety of vulnerable kids.

Therapy

Urrutia “treats him like a human, like a little man. He lets Jordan find the solution and doesn’t tell him, ‘That’s wrong.’”

When Jordan complained that his arm was tired from holding the rope, Urrutia had him do 10 pushups before each session to build his strength.

When the boy wouldn’t make eye contact while Urrutia was explaining something, Urrutia stopped talking until he did.

And for an hour or so each week over the past five months, Jordan not only learned how to work and care for a horse, but also got to interact with a good man and gain confidence in equine therapy and in himself.

• • •

In the arena, Jordan was quiet and timid, even when the horse wouldn’t back up because it had fallen asleep. It might have been because his trigger points hadn’t been pushed yet or because rather than being corrected, he was guided by Urrutia’s gentle voice.

“Where are you looking?” Urrutia asked, leaning against a green gate.

Jordan’s goal was to get the horse to walk backwards to the rear of the barn. He applied a little pressure to the halter, pushing forward slightly with his left leg, and the horse stepped back.

“There you go, you’re doing good, relaxing, keep it right there,” Urrutia said. “Nice you’re recognizing that he’s starting to move. Keep focused.”

Jordan said, “It’s easier to just turn a horse around.”

Urrutia grinned and replied, “Of course it is, but a horse can’t see behind them.”

The point was never to get the horse to the back of the barn. It was to get the horse to trust Jordan.

“The horse is doing all the work,” said Urrutia’s wife, fellow equine specialist Karla Davis. “Our role is, as facilitators for the horse, to teach them. The horse is going to treat Jordan how Jordan treats the horse. The horse only exists in this moment. Everything Jordan does, they are going to react to it. Our role is to watch the horse and the horse’s reaction and hope learning follows.”

• • •

Clinician Melody Kerner still remembers the first time she considered using horses as therapy. A depressed girl sat slumped in the rocking chair by her desk, struggling with memories of sexual abuse. She suddenly perked up as images of horses flashed across Kerner’s computer screen. It didn’t take Kerner long to find Urrutia.

Urrutia doesn’t remember a time when he wasn’t on the back of a horse.

After graduating from Shoshone High School in 1971, he attended Idaho State University on a track scholarship.

He got a math degree and became a high school teacher. But other skills and talents took him from Idaho for many years.

“My favorite part of teaching was the counseling,” Urrutia said. “I didn’t leave teaching because I didn’t like it. I loved it.”

While teaching, Urrutia competed in local rodeos and eventually hit the professional rodeo circuit.

Then, in 1983, he started a country music career, producing 10 albums and six top-10 songs in Europe. For 15 years, Urrutia toured the nation 300 days a year. Finally he decided to come home and combine his love of horses and desire to help youth.

Urrutia is a Level II equine specialist certified through Equine Assisted Growth and Learning Association (EAGALA), an equine-assisted psychotherapy service founded in 1999.

“It’s not what we obtain in life, it’s what we become doing so,” he said. “And if I ever got back into teaching, counseling, I’d have more to offer because of EAGALA.”

with Urrutia and Idaho Horse Therapy in March 2012. She works with children from Twin Falls and Blaine counties and is known as the local clinician who prescribes equine therapy.

“Some kids don’t want to sit across and talk to a therapist,” Kerner said. “I’ve rode horses all my life. When I’ve had a very stressful day at work, I like spending time with my horse. And that’s what I see happening with the kids.”

An hour-long equine therapy session costs $60 per child. Participants are on probation and have had a mental health assessment. The probation officer for the girl or boy applies for the program through the Department of Juvenile Corrections, which pays for the service.

“All of us have kids on our caseload, and we are always coming up with ideas, things in the community that can help them,” Kerner said. “We have a lot of kids on probation. And though court has them in required therapy, equine therapy ... puts them in a whole different realm and opens them up to new types of learning.”

A child who hasn’t been around horses has an advantage because the idea is to get him out of his comfort zone and improve self-esteem.

“A horse has the power to go forward and backwards, but not to go sideways. When he wiggles his head, when you let go, you reward him,” Urrutia told an equine therapy youth group April 20 at the Twin Falls Country Fairgrounds.

Urrutia then explained the underlying lesson.

He asked a boy his usual response when asked to mow the lawn. Did he whine and pout? Sometimes.

“Same thing with the horse. If the horse disrespects you and you let it, then it learns how to whine and pout to get what it wants.”

How do you get people or the horse to listen?

“Any association you have with people, if you do it out of respect, it will last a lot longer. If you do it using fear, one day when your back is turned, he’ll get you,” Urrutia said. “Hold your ground, breathe, good energy. They (horses) sense fear or anger better than you.”

Lars Langdon, 18, brought a camera to that group session. He “graduated” from the program last year but came to take photographs for his senior project at Filer High School. His project is about the equine therapy program.

“It’s really different,” Langdon said, “and it helps more than people think. It’s a really good metaphor for relating to life.”

Before the program, he said, he was reserved and introverted. Now he is outgoing and vocal. He liked the program so much, he even bought a horse.

Brandon Davidson, 16, of Filer, has been on probation since he was 9. A court ordered him into equine therapy more than a year ago. Brandon isn’t required to attend now, but he still does because, he said, it’s the only thing that has helped him.

“I’ve sat through thousands of hours with counselors. It’s not like you’re sitting with a counselor. You are working with a horse that has problems just like you do,” he said. “It benefits your spiritual side and thinking. I take pride in it.”

The horse-human partnership was important, Brandon said, but so was his close relationship with Urrutia.

“He’s the best person I’ve met. He’s not out for the money or like counselors waiting for the next client. He’s very down-to-earth.”

Brandon said he also returns each month to serve as a role model for younger participants. “When I help another person, it helps me too,” he said.

Before equine therapy, he said, he used and sold drugs. Now he has a new purpose in life.

“Have a lot of bridges to rebuild in Filer and Twin Falls. I want people to know Brandon has made a stand and he’s doing something. I’m doing the right things for the right reasons.”

DREW NASH • TIMES-NEWS

Equine specialist Johnny Urrutia with Idaho Horse Therapy works with youth at the Twin Falls County Fairgrounds on March 16 in Filer.

Rules: Hug often, respect others, do your best and never give up.

In four days, Jordan would learn whether he would be approved for more horse therapy after his 16 sessions. Even if he isn't, Urrutia wants him to keep coming. He has decided to make Jordan a mentor at the group sessions.

"He knows the basics. He's really calm and has such a knack for it," Urrutia said.

Jordan's math skills have progressed along with his horse skills. Each week, Urrutia incorporated a little math lesson, having Jordan learn and recite the multiples of twos, threes and fours.

"There was a time he couldn't count by twos," Urrutia said.

But Jordan learned them all, and his reward was getting to ride the horse. That isn't part of the EAGALA model, but it was something Jordan wanted to do. And when he finally was able to ride the horse, his smile was wide.

"He was just tickled he had some success," Urrutia said. "I don't think he's gotten to think about being successful much."

Jordan recently was named student of the week at his alternative school and can transition into regular public school if he completes summer classes.

"I've gotten a lot of compliments from people in the community," Oneida said, "that they saw Jordan on the street and he was polite and talked to them. Before, he gave them the cold shoulder. He's a good kid and has a good personality. He's just misunderstood."

"I'm more mature I guess," Jordan said, looking up and smiling. "I just like the horses and stuff."

When he learned that his sessions were finished, he said, he was "bummed out and not very happy."

Besides the horses, he has built a relationship with Urrutia. "He's just really nice and knows how to work with me."

His goals always have included joining the Air Force, and today that goal seemed a little closer.

"They pay good, they pay for college and I want to fly," he said.

As for his relationship with his mother? They are working on it. They still have disagreements. He recently said something really hurtful, and Oneida couldn't talk to him for three days. She acknowledged that in the past, Jordan sometimes became so difficult that Oneida said she hated him. But no matter what, she never gave up on him. And at every one-on-one session Jordan attended, Oneida was right there beside him.

"If we had more parents like Lacey, that could really take the program to a whole other level," Urrutia said.

And though she sat on the sidelines — quiet and non-participatory most of the time — Oneida said she learned a great deal as well.

"Ninety percent of these kids have issues at school, but it starts at home," she said. "The parents see it in the first five sessions. I realized I was a big guard. I'm always to the rescue. The parents can't jump in and tell them how to do it. I had to keep my mouth shut."

She also learned that a child, like a horse, can't be forced to do something. "You can ask, but you can't force."

As the two rode somewhere recently, Oneida said, Jordan turned to her and said: "If you died, I'd probably go crazy or be in jail."

It was the first time he'd ever said something like that to her.

Oneida said Urrutia and Davis should open a boys ranch to keep children busy during summers.

"This area needs a lot more people helping. It needs a lot of more Johnnys and Karlas," Oneida said.

And a few days later, Jordan found out he was approved for more sessions.

Romney Hosts Retreat of Political, Business Elite

PARK CITY, Utah (AP) • Mitt Romney urged a gathering of political and business leaders to set aside partisan bickering and to seek solutions to the nation's most pressing issues.

The private Experts and Enthusiasts conference he hosted Thursday and Friday in Park City featured policy discussions about education, the economy, immigration and foreign policy.

Speakers included three potential Republican presidential candidates for 2016:

New Jersey Gov. Chris Christie, Rep. Paul Ryan of Wisconsin and Sen. Rand Paul of Kentucky.

Other speakers were Democrats David Axelrod, a longtime adviser to President Barack Obama, and Erskine Bowles, former Clinton White House chief of staff.

Some 200 major donors to Romney's 2012 presidential bid attended the retreat at the posh Stein Eriksen Lodge. Many also are investors in Solamere Capital, a private equity firm founded by Romney's son, Tagg. Each paid $5,000 to attend.

Josh Romney told The Salt Lake Tribune that his father wasn't trying to score political points, but was trying to influence the national dialogue. He said he did not hear Obama's name mentioned once at the retreat.

"It's not a Democrat problem, not a Republican problem. It's a Washington problem," Josh Romney said.

The event, which was closed to the news media, featured a solid discussion of how Republicans and Democrats could find compromise, he added.

"One of the great things that came from the conference is that there are so many issues where we agree," he told The Tribune.

"The goal of the conference is really to influence those certain issues and how to move those forward."

On immigration, Josh Romney said his father and Hewlett-Packard President and CEO Meg Whitman spoke of the need for more visas for foreign workers with specialized technical skills. But he said there was no talk of how to boost the GOP's appeal to Hispanic voters.

"We didn't really talk about the party or how the party's going to improve," he told the Deseret News. "It's really a focus on the country, what we need to do as a country to remain competitive and strong."

There was confusion about the exact purpose of the retreat.

"What are Mitt's plans?" was the major question coming out of the event, former Sen. Bob Bennett, R-Utah, told The Washington Post. "There doesn't seem to be an answer coming out of this."

Romney held a similar retreat in Park City a year ago for some 700 donors. It drew Republicans such as strategist Karl Rove, former Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice and former Florida Gov. Jeb Bush.

N. Idaho Man Shot in Leg While Driving

WAHA (AP) • Northern Idaho officials say an 18-year-old Lewiston man was shot in the leg while driving when his .22-caliber pistol in the passenger seat discharged.

The Nez Perce County Sheriff's Office tells the Lewiston Tribune that Stone R. Andersen told officials he was alone in the car on Friday and forgot to put the safety on when he finished shooting the pistol.

Authorities say Andersen was taken to St. Joseph Regional Medical Center where he was treated and released.

Northern Idaho Hospital Cutting Staff

LEWISTON (AP) • St. Joseph Regional Medical Center in northern Idaho is cutting 47 full- and part-time jobs from a staff of about 1,000 to help save about $3.7 million annually.

Human Resources Vice President Brenda Forge tells the Lewiston Tribune that four full-time and three part-time certified nursing assistants are losing their jobs due to a reconfiguration of the intensive care unit.

She says other jobs being cut include 15 full-time and nine part-time employees.

Man Pleads Guilty in University of Utah Gropings

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) • A 32-year-old man has pleaded guilty to charges stemming from the groping of women on the University of Utah campus.

Gary Fotheringham entered the pleas Friday in 3rd District Court to three third-degree felony counts of attempted forcible sexual abuse.

In exchange for his pleas, two misdemeanor counts of voyeurism were dropped.

The charges stem from events around the university campus on Nov. 4, 2011, which began when he watched women change in a locker room at the Marriott School of Dance.

Fotheringham also was accused of holding a hand on the breasts of another student as she was picking up her backpack, and of groping another student as she tried to get inside her car.

He awaits sentencing Aug. 2.

In 2010, University of Utah police arrested him for lewdness in a women's restroom.

Utah Mom Arrested after Daughter Was Found Drunk

MARRIOTT-SLATERVILLE, Utah (AP) • A 31-year-old woman has been arrested after her 3-year-old daughter was found drunk and unresponsive in their home.

Raquel Borce of Marriott-Slaterville was booked Wednesday into the Weber County Jail for investigation of second-degree felony child abuse.

KUTV-TV reports Borce is accused of forcing her daughter to ingest alcohol until she passed out. The girl has cerebral palsy, and is unable to walk or talk.

Paramedics responded to a Townhouse Estates apartment on April 11 on a report that a girl was unresponsive.

The girl, who is now 4, was taken to the hospital, where it was determined she had a large amount of alcohol in her system.

Sheriff's investigators told the Deseret News that she has recovered from alcohol poisoning and is being cared for by her father.

They say it's a miracle she recovered considering the amount of alcohol in her system.

Utah Lawmaker Plans Murder Suspect Custody Law

BY MICHELLE L. PRICE
Associated Press

SALT LAKE CITY • A Utah lawmaker is working on legislation to allow judges to consider removing a child from a parent's custody if that parent is a suspect in their spouse's murder.

Sen. Todd Weiler, R-Woods Cross, said he was asked to run the bill by the family of a Salt Lake City pediatrician charged with killing his ex-wife.

John Brickman Wall was not named a suspect in the murder of his ex-wife, Uta Von Schwedler, until a year and one-half after her body was found, but his three youngest children remained in his custody during that time.

Weiler's proposal is similar to legislation pending in Washington state, which was drafted in response to the case of missing Utah mother Susan Powell.

Josh Powell was the subject of an investigation into his wife's disappearance last year and locked in a custody battle with her parents when he killed himself and the couple's two young boys.

Von Schwedler's family asked Weiler to work on the legislation when he met with them back in March, about a month before Wall was arrested, the senator said.

"They actually handed me a copy of the Washington legislation and said, 'We'd like you to consider doing something like this in Utah' and it just seemed like a good idea," Weiler said Friday.

Von Schwedler, a 49-

in this state that have to sleep with weapons under their pillows," Weiler told lawmakers during an interim meeting in May. "I believe our justice system is failing them."

Pelle Wall said he was happy to see Weiler's proposal and called it an "important and courageous" effort.

"Had such legal provisions been in place at the ing or there's a suspicious death.

"My concern is that, particularly in the two instances that Sen. Weiler raised, it was a year to two-year investigation of the surviving spouse, and there wasn't sufficient evidence to meet the probable cause standard for making an arrest," Greene told The Associated Press on Friday. "I just think that it's unwise

Washington goes too far because it requires the custody issue to be considered, rather than leaving it up to a judge to decide.

The Washington proposal was approved by the state Senate, but the House has not yet considered the measure. Washington lawmakers are approaching the end of their special legislative session.

Susan's parents, Chuck and Judy Cox, told Washington lawmakers in February that had the legislation been in place, police may have officially named Josh Powell as a suspect in order to protect the Cox's grandchildren.

Utah police never publicly identified Josh Powell as a suspect but privately he was the focus of their investigation.

Chuck Cox said Friday that it was possible he and his wife might testify before Utah lawmakers because he wanted to do what he could to support Weiler's proposal.

"We're trying to make it so it takes away the advantage, the incentive," he said. "Then, without cooperating with police, you wouldn't be able to make your spouse disappear and get custody of the kids."

“To me, it’s ludicrous that right now we have children in this state that have to sleep with weapons under their pillows. I believe our justice system is failing them.”

Utah Sen. Todd Weiler, R-Woods

year-old University of Utah biologist, was found in 2011 in an overflowing bathtub with a knife stuck in her.

Before Wall was arrested in April, the couple's 19-year-old son Pelle Wall petitioned a court to have his younger siblings removed from his father's home.

According to court documents filed last year, Pelle Wall said that when he lived with his father he slept with a pellet gun and a knife because he feared the man.

"To me, it's ludicrous that right now we have children time of my mother's death, I would have been saved great heartache, time, and effort, not to mention I would not have had to spend my inheritance my mother left me protecting my younger siblings from our father," Wall said in a statement Friday.

Rep. Brian Greene, R-Pleasant Grove, told Weiler at the May meeting that he wasn't sure he could support such a measure because police often consider family members suspects when one parent goes miss-for government to allow the children to be removed from the parent for something less than a probable-cause standard."

For his proposed legislation, Weiler said he's considering having a juvenile court judge hear the custody issues, since those cases are usually closed to the public. That would allow prosecutors to present evidence they might otherwise be reluctant to air before the murder case goes to trial.

Weiler said he thinks the legislation proposed in

 Fowler Mohrlang

Aug. 2, 1923-June 6, 2013

BURLEY • Maxine LaFay Fowler Mohrlang, age 89, of Burley, passed away Thursday, June 6, 2013, at the Countryside Care and Rehabilitation Center in Rupert.

Maxine was born Aug. 2, 1923, in Everton, Boone County, Ark., the daughter of Fred James and Isabelle Nichols Trammell. She received and completed her education in Arkansas. She married Orice Vern “Blacky” Fowler on June 9, 1941, in Elko, Nev. Together, they had three children, Colleen, Jerry Dean and Ronald Kent. They made their home in Burley, where they farmed south of Burley for many years. When Orice’s health declined, they moved into town and Maxine started a new career as a waitress. She worked at various locations but will be remembered most at Nelson’s Cafe, the National Hotel, the Copper Room and the Ponderosa Inn. Orice passed away in 1979.

Following his death, she married a wonderful gentleman, Warren Mohrlang. They spent many cherished years together and created long-lasting friends. Maxine and Warren enjoyed entertaining their countless friends and used their cooking skills in making each event an enjoyable and memorable experience. Additionally, they spent many hours and days canning and especially enjoyed making pickles and jams.

Maxine was exceptionally gifted in crocheting (making literally hundreds of afghans), embroidery work and in creating beautiful floral pieces for the different organizations for which she was involved. She was a lifetime member of the Ruth Rebekah Lodge of Burley, was a member of the Burley Elks Ladies Auxiliary (Does), and she and Orice were very active in the Clairmont Grange for many years. She was also a member of the Burley United Methodist Church.

She is survived by her children, Colleen Maricle of Soldotna, Alaska, and Ronald Kent (Jackie) Fowler of Great Falls, Mont.; her daughter-in-law, Carol Fowler of Burley; two sons that joined the family from her marriage to Warren, Tom Mohrlang and Brian Mohrlang, both of Burley; 12 grandchildren; 29 great-grandchildren; 13 great-grandchildren; and two sisters, Alma Lloyd and Barbara Burnette. Maxine was preceded in death by her parents; her husbands, Orice and Warren; a son, Jerry Fowler; a granddaughter, Alicia May Fowler; and three sisters, Louise Allen, Juanita Hurt and Gloria Sisson.

A memorial service will be held at 10 a.m. Saturday, June 15, at the Burley United Methodist Church, 450 E. 27th St., with the Rev. Kathy Abend officiating. Burial will follow at the Pleasant View Cemetery.

The family expresses their sincere appreciation to Countryside Care and Rehabilitation Center in Rupert for the outstanding and tender care given to Maxine. We especially thank Juanita Kerbs, Diane Adamson and Arlyne Giles for the extra loving attention shown to our mother.

Arrangements have been entrusted to the care of the Rasmussen Funeral Home of Burley.

Former Mass. Governor,
 Ambassador Cellucci Dies

BOSTON (AP) • Former Massachusetts Gov. Argeo Paul Cellucci (sel-LOO’-chee) has died of complications from ALS, also known as Lou Gehrig’s disease. He was 65.

His death was announced Saturday on behalf of his family by Dr. Michael F. Collins, chancellor of the University of Massachusetts Medical School, where Cellucci was involved in raising funds for ALS research.

Cellucci was elected lieutenant governor in 1990 and was elevated to acting governor in 1997 when his predecessor, William Weld, resigned to pursue an ambassadorship. Cellucci won election as governor in his own right in 1998.

He later served as U.S. ambassador to Canada.

Cellucci was considered a moderate cast in the mold of New England Republicans — fiscally conservative yet middle of the road on many social issues.

SENIOR

Q. What are some safety tips for seniors who are planning to take a trip outside the United States.
A. As you select a travel destination, consider the altitude and climate and how these factors might affect you. Older adults may find that it is harder to recover from jet lag and motion sickness, so plan accordingly. It is sobering to know that injury, not infection, is the most common cause of preventable death among travelers. To make your journey pleasant and safe, follow some simple guidelines. Always wear a seatbelt. Don't ride in cars after dark in developing countries. Avoid small, local planes. Don't travel at night in questionable areas. Wear sturdy walking shoes. Choose brightly colored clothing for evening activities. When crossing streets be aware of traffic patterns that may be different from those you know. Stay mindful of your own limitations. Avoid physical activities that would make you feel uncomfortable or unsafe at home. Be careful, relax, and enjoy your travels.

Arfons, Drag-race Champion and Race-car Designer, Dies at 96

THE WASHINGTON POST

Walt Arfons, a self-taught mechanical engineer and champion drag racer who built the first jet-engine dragster, conceived of innovations that helped save lives on the raceway, and whose car held the land-speed record at 413 mph until his estranged half-brother bested it three days later, died June 4 at a hospital in Akron, Ohio. He was 96.

The cause was pneumonia, his son-in-law Richard Stiff said.

Arfons and his younger sibling Art, both irrepressible daredevils and showmen, were among the best-known drivers during drag racing's infancy in the 1950s and its propulsion into mainstream news coverage in the 1960s. Along with Craig Breedlove, they were leaders in fierce battles to attain ever-increasing land-speed records at the Bonneville Salt Flats in western Utah.

Art Arfons, who died in 2007, held three land-speed records and was inducted into racing halls of fame, at times overshadowing his more self-effacing brother. Nevertheless, it was Walt who is credited by many experts with taking motor sports into the jet age and finding ways to make the sports safer.

Louise Ann Noeth, a driver and automotive journalist who has written about the Bonneville competitions, noted that in addition to being the first to apply jet engines to race cars, Walt Arfons is also credited with being at the forefront of adapting parachute technology to motor sports.

"No high-speed car today can stop safely without one," Noeth wrote in an email. "Walt Arfons spawned an entire safety industry in motorsports. . . . Every time something went wrong with a race car mechanically, aerodynamically or due to driver brain fade, the parachute is the single best friend a race car driver has north of 300 miles per hour."

Police: Philly Equipment Operator Was High on Drugs

BY MARYCLAIRE DALE,
MICHAEL RUBINKAM
AND KATHY MATHESON
Associated Press

PHILADELPHIA • A heavy equipment operator with a lengthy rap sheet who is accused of being high on marijuana when a downtown building collapsed onto a thrift store, killing six people, surrendered Saturday to face charges in the deaths, police said.

Sean Benschop faces six counts of involuntary manslaughter, 13 counts of recklessly endangering another person and one count of risking a catastrophe. A warrant had been issued for his arrest and police had been searching for him.

Authorities believe the 42-year-old Benschop had been using an excavator Wednesday when the remains of the four-story building under demolition gave way and toppled onto an attached Salvation Army thrift store, killing two employees and four customers and injuring 13 others.

Deputy Mayor Everett Gillison said a toxicology report showed evidence that Benschop was high on marijuana. That finding, combined with witness statements and evidence from the scene, led to the decision Friday to raid his North Philadelphia home and later seek an arrest warrant, he said.

Benschop's attorney, Daine Grey, said his client was not at fault.

"This was an accident, but Mr. Benschop is not responsible," Grey said Saturday. "And we believe that, in time, the facts will show that he is not responsible."

Benschop was wearing a bandage on his right arm when he turned himself in. Grey said he had been injured at a worksite, but he declined to say where or when.

Grey said Benschop was able to operate heavy equipment.

"He was completely able to operate a backhoe," Grey said. "... He operated it safely, as he always does, and he did not violate the law in any capacity.

"He has been doing this for more than 13 years. He is very experienced. He has worked for a number of contractors throughout the region. All of the contractors have found him professional and found that he did his work with the highest regard for the safety of those around him."

Mayor Michael Nutter, in a statement Saturday night, called for harsh charges and punishment for Benschop.

"It is my hope that the harshest level of charges are brought against Sean Benschop and he is punished accordingly," Nutter said. "We must also seek answers from property owners Richard Basciano and Griffin T.

Campbell who hired Benschop to do the significant job of operating heavy equipment. These three individuals bear the ultimate and sole responsibility for this tragedy. Justice will only be served if Sean Benschop receives a sentence that buries him in a jailhouse forever, just like his victims were buried on Wednesday"

Monsanto Plans New Idaho Tech Center for Wheat

BOISE (AP) • Seed and herbicide maker Monsanto Co. plans to hire 24 people at a new center in southern Idaho where its scientists will study ways to boost wheat production. The Capital Press reports St. Louis-based Monsanto has gotten the go-ahead from the Idaho Wheat Commission for the Wheat Technology Center in Filer.

Monsanto told Idaho officials in an e-mail this represents a “compelling opportunity... to apply our technology expertise in a global crop that can benefit from innovation.”

Monsanto’s work with wheat has been the topic of discussion recently.

That’s after discovery in Oregon of genetically-modified wheat that was the same strain as one designed by Monsanto to be herbicide-resistant but which was never approved.

Since that discovery, Japan suspended some imports and one Kansas wheat farmer filed a lawsuit.

TWIN FALLS • Recent reports cite Greek yogurt’s whey byproduct as a potential environmental hazard, but the key is in the disposal method, scientists and Chobani Inc. officials say. Chobani, which opened one of the world’s largest yogurt-processing plants last year in Twin Falls, typically returns its whey to farmers, said spokeswoman Melissa Stagnaro.

“In Idaho, roughly two-thirds of those farmers use it as a supplement to their livestock feed,” she said. “Approximately one-third is used as a natural, land-applied fertilizer, but only on farms that have the proper nutrient management plans and permits in place with the IDEQ and Idaho Department of Agriculture.” Spreading acid whey on alkaline soil actually can beneficially lower the soil’s pH to a more neutral range, said Dave Anderson, local engineering manager for the Idaho Department of Environmental Quality (IDEQ). Dumping acid whey into surface water can create major problems, though, including fish kills, Anderson said. “We do not, nor have we ever, ‘dumped’ our whey in a way that is harmful to the environment,” Stagnaro said by email. The manufacture of Greek yogurt leaves a watery mix called “acid whey,” named for the byproduct’s low pH.

It has about the same acidity as orange juice, Modern Farmer reported May 22, so its beneficial uses are limited. The New York Post deemed the $2 billion Greek yogurt industry’s problem “a waste disposal nightmare.” Anderson said the IDEQ has received complaints about disposal of acid whey near Hollister. “We have had some concerned citizens calling about Sweet’s (Septic Service) hauling whey out there,” he said. “People didn’t know what they were hauling, and they were concerned about the number of trucks.” Rick Dunn, planning and zoning administrator for Twin Falls County, said his office received “lots of calls about a month ago.” Chobani officials from New York visited the area to address the complaints, which “seem to have stopped now,” Dunn said. “Chobani is committed to being a good community partner,” Stagnaro said. “That extends to the responsible use of whey...”

ONLINE: Why Wind Is a Big Deal to an Idaho Farmer

Community blogger Larry Hollifield farms in Hansen and writes about ag life on “The Central Pivot.” An excerpt from his latest post:

“This spring here in the Magic Valley has been a breezy one. Personally, I can handle all types of weather other than wind. It just zaps the energy right out of you. By noon on a windy day I feel like I’ve worked two days straight. ...

“I’ve really had to keep talking to my irrigators this spring about how they move their wheel and hand lines. Wind skips have really been a challenge this spring. Wind skips are the dry areas in a field that don’t wet from the lines because wind moves the water from the intended location. ... “Wind also really puts a hold on the pesticide application on farms. State law says we are not allowed to spray in a wind greater than 10 mph. Well all of us who have lived here in the Magic Valley for some time know, those days are few and far between. I am always watching the weather on different apps on my phone to plan ahead for days to apply. ...”

Idahoans Warned To Watch for Whitetop Weed

TIMES-NEWS

MERIDIAN • If you have what appears to be an outgrowth of pretty white flowers that look like attractive ground cover vegetation growing on your property, you might want to think again. State noxious weed officials say chances are way better than average that what you are actually seeing is an infestation of a particularly bad invasive noxious weed known as Hoary Cress, which goes by its common name of Whitetop. “Whitetop is generally the first noxious weed that we attack in the spring. The plant has spreading roots that get into lawns, pastures, roadways, and garden areas. Because it develops very thick canopies and absorbs a lot of water and nutrients, it does a great job of choking out native vegetation,” said Roger Batt, Idaho Weed Awareness Campaign coordinator. ho, typically grows up to 2 feet tall. Multiple branches grow off of the root system with white flowers at the end of each branch. The weed not only can produce by seed, but has an integrated root system that allows it to creep vertically and laterally into unwanted places. The leaves of this invasive plant are light green with a distinctive white midvein. “Depending upon which control method is used, controlling and eradicating Whitetop can be very simple or very discouraging. Mechanical control such as disking or plowing is not very effective. Most folks find that the weed simply comes back with a vengeance in a few weeks. Hand pulling small patches of this weed can be effective, but a majority of the roots need to be pulled with the plant and placed into a garbage bag. The best control method for Whitetop is to employ certain herbicides. These herbicide recommendations can be found on our website at www.idahoweedawareness.com under “Weed Control.” It is important to note that when using an herbicide, always follow the label and safety instructions on that herbicide label,” Batt added. REAL Seal revitalized

The National Milk Producers Federation is taking steps to revitalize the REAL® Seal during June Dairy Month. A new campaign is being launched that allows consumers to learn more about the benefits of real, American-made dairy products and foods made with them, using a new Facebook page, blogger outreach and digital advertising.

The Real Seal Facebook page is intended to engage target audiences, especially moms and heads of households, encouraging them to buy dairy products and foods containing dairy products. The page's content includes interactive updates, multimedia presentations, contests, polls, and quizzes. One of the elements of the launch later in the month will be a "Name the Character" contest for a new, animated REAL Seal cartoon character.

Dairy Month Brings Good News

The U.S. Department of Agriculture's latest dairy products report was mostly bullish and helped push milk prices off a three-month low.

BY CINDY SNYDER

For the Times-News

TWIN FALLS • Dairy producers got bits of good news to start June, the month dedicated to all things dairy.

The U.S. Department of Agriculture's latest dairy products report was considered mostly bullish and helped push milk prices off a three-month low. Feed prices, however, remain a mixed bag.

More cheese was produced in April, the latest month that data is available for, than analysts expected. According to the USDA, total cheese production rose by 3.2 percent to 928.2 million pounds. Most of that increase came from Italian-style cheeses, which were up 2.6 percent from a year ago. Mozzarella cheese production totaled 306.5 million pounds, up 1.4 percent compared to April 2012.

Butter production in April was down 3.8 percent compared to March. While this is still well above the five-year average, it is less than some analysts were expecting. Dave Kurzawski, with FC Stone, expects the decline to underpin what has been a weak butter trade so far in June.

Dry whey production was also down in April and that should be good news. Manufacturers' stocks showed a decline for the first time since the fall of 2012. Human dry whey stocks were down 10 percent from last month but are still nearly 40 percent above last year. Despite the sharp reduction, stocks remain burdensome overall, Kurzawski said.

That's also true for non-fat dry milk stocks, which were also down significantly compared to a year ago. However, stocks remain well above the five-year average and Kurzawski has heard talk that stocks are growing again now.

Stripe Rust Appears in Magic Valley

BY CINDY SNYDER

For the Times-News

TWIN FALLS • A grain disease associated with wet, cool springs has blown into the Magic Valley.

Grain producers in northern Idaho battle stripe rust most years so it wasn't a surprise when the fungal disease was reported on the University of Idaho's research farm in Moscow. The disease appeared on the soft white winter variety 'Brundage,' which is known to be susceptible to stripe rust.

But it was noteworthy when the disease was confirmed in the Filer area and then the Declo area early last week. By the end of the week, stripe rust was still being reported from Rupert and Hazelton through the Twin Falls area in fields planted to both Brundage and WB 470. Stripe rust is also being reported in the Aberdeen, American Falls and Pocatello area.

Juliet Marshall, University of Idaho cereals pathologist, wasn't really surprised to see stripe rust show up in southern Idaho given the flow of wind from the southwest. Stripe rust is a perennial issue in California and it could have blown in from there.

She encourages growers that have planted a susceptible variety to scout and spray with fungicides as needed. However, she reminds growers to follow label directions when applying fungicides. Many fungicides are not labeled for application beyond Feekes 10.5, a growth stage that equates roughly to 50 percent flowering.

And just because a resistant variety was planted, growers should not assume the field won't be infected with stripe rust. Changes can and do occur in the race structure of the stripe rust fungi and that can cause a previously resistant variety to become susceptible.

Marshall also cautions that even if a preventative fungicide was applied, the disease still may be present in a field. Stripe rust has been reported in the Shelley area in a field of Brundage that was sprayed with fungicides at herbicide application and then was sprayed again the first week of June.

Warmer weather this weekend should slow down the rate of growth and spread of the fungus. The higher temperatures should also initiate High Temperature Adult Plant Resistance (HTAP), Marshall said in a disease alert. However, cool nights are still conducive for infection even when daytime temperatures reach into the 80s or beyond.

While growers in southern Idaho are watching for signs of grain diseases and other pests, growers in the nation's Wheat Belt would just like to finish planting their spring wheat. After last year's drought, growers can't buy a dry day to finish planting. According to the latest estimate from the U.S. Department of Agriculture, just 80 percent of the nation's spring wheat was planted on June 1 compared to the five-year average of 92 percent. North Dakota, the leading spring wheat producer, had planted just 64 percent of its wheat acres.

Wheat markets continue to be choppy. Concerns about too much rain in spring wheat country and not enough rain in winter wheat country have created some supply concerns. However, continued export uncertainties following the discovery of genetically modified wheat growing in a field in Oregon are weighing on the market.

Still, the April dairy products report was overall bullish. While California and Idaho are baking under a hot forecast, the Upper Midwest and Northeast are experiencing cooler than normal conditions. That juxtaposition is raising questions about both the milk and cheese supply in July, and that pushed milk futures contract prices higher. Contracts between July and December are now trading near $18.60. Technically, the futures market may have put in a bottom, Kurzawski said.

But despite the uptick in prices, dairy producers continue to cull their herds. According to USDA inspectors, year-to-date slaughter levels are 4 percent higher than 2012 levels.

Feed a Mixed Bag

After last year's drought, spring rains were welcome but not so much any more.

As of June 2, a record 8.76 million acres of corn were still unplanted. Some analysts are now projecting that growers will give up planting between 1 and 1.5 million acres and that the wet weather will reduce the yield for acres that have been planted.

That's pushing new crop futures contract prices higher, but not anywhere close to the record highs set last August. At the same time, relatively weaker corn prices have increased ethanol production boosting the availability of dried distillers grains. Dairies can substitute DDGs for soybean meal in rations. With the price of DDGs down by about $40 per ton and soybean meal futures contract prices back in the $440 to $465 per ton range, that's a swap some dairies are making.

However, if the wet weather does force more growers to switch from corn to soybeans, soybean meal could be significantly cheaper by fall. Strong soybean prices now may also entice some soft red winter wheat growers to plant soybeans as a double crop, putting additional pressure on soy meal prices.

Onion Farmers: New E. coli Water Rules Too Strict

NYSSA, Ore. (AP) • Farmers in the nation's largest onion-growing region who depend on shared public irrigation systems worry that proposed new federal rules governing the cleanliness of water will threaten their livelihood.

The Idaho-Eastern Oregon onion growing region is the nation's largest in terms of volume, with more than 20,000 acres of big bulb onions grown annually. The region supplies about 25 percent of the nation's total onion consumption.

The rules proposed by the U.S. Food and Drug Administration focus on the amount of E. coli bacteria allowed in water that directly contacts with produce during or after harvest.

Growers say almost none of the surface water will meet the new standards.

into contact with produce during or after harvest and allows no detectable amounts of E. coli.

The other standard applies to irrigation water and requires E. coli levels to be under 235 "colony forming units" of generic E. coli per 100 milliliters for any single water sample. The standard also requires five consecutive samples to have a mean of under 126 colony forming units.

Growers who irrigate with surface water would be required to test weekly during the irrigation season under the new rules, at a cost of about $40 a test. If they fail a test, the only option is to quit using the water.

The FDA determined that five main commodity groups carry the risk of food-borne illnesses: herbs, leafy greens, melons, sprouts and tomatoes.

"However, because food-borne illness outbreaks have regularly been associated with commodities that have previously not been linked to outbreaks, this approach carries the risk of failing to prevent future outbreaks."

Shelly Burgess, FDA

"Most of the surface water in this area will never meet those standards," said Riley, chairman of a National Onion Association ad hoc committee that is studying the issue.

Idaho's two Republican U.S. Senators, Mike Crapo and Jim Risch, and Michigan Rep. Dan Benishek, have introduced legislation that seeks to defund the proposed fresh produce rule, The Capital Press reported.

"If (growers) are not concerned, they should be," Oregon onion grower Reid Saito said. "It's a pretty critical issue in terms of our ability to produce vegetables, in our case onions."

The proposed rules come as part of the Food Safety Modernization Act, passed in December 2010. They include two numerical standards on the amount of generic E. coli bacteria that can be present in agricultural water.

One standard applies to water that directly comes

It categorizes more than 200 other commodities as "other," including onions.

Onion growers say the "other" designation unjustly lumps them in with hot peppers and green onions from Mexico, two commodities associated with food-borne illnesses.

"We believe that the commodity group 'other,' with hot peppers and green onions excluded, is safe and should not be regulated," according to a letter to the FDA from the National Onion Association.

Shelly Burgess of the FDA said some commodities have little or no history of links to food-borne illness and exempting them from coverage could reduce costs to farmers.

"However, because food-borne illness outbreaks have regularly been associated with commodities that have previously not been linked to outbreaks," she said, "this approach carries the risk of failing to prevent future outbreaks."

acres of Idaho's lands and pose a serious threat to Idaho's economy, ecology and agriculture, causing an estimated $300 million annually in direct damages. State and private landowners annually spend upwards of $30 million to combat noxious weeds. But even with that level of effort, thousands of acres of land are compromised every day by one or more of the 66 varieties of noxious weeds known to have infested the state.

A vast collection about how to identify Idaho's 66 noxious weeds plus details about the best strategies to get rid of them is available on the Idaho Weed Awareness Campaign's website at: www.idahoweedawareness.com.

Idahoans can also contact their County Weed Superintendent or a private applicator for technical assistance in dealing with noxious weeds.

USDA Announces CRP Sign-up Deadlines

TIMES-NEWS

WASHINGTON • The general sign-up deadline for the Conservation Reserve Program (CRP) is June 14.

“As always, we expect strong competition to enroll acres into CRP, and we urge interested producers to maximize their environmental benefits and to make cost-effective offers,” said U.S. Secretary of Agriculture Tom Vilsack.

The CRP is an important program for protecting environmentally sensitive lands from erosion and sedimentation, and for ensuring the sustainability of ground water, lakes, rivers, ponds and streams.

Sign-up for continuous CRP, including the Conservation Reserve Enhancement Program, State Acres for Wildlife Enhancement Initiative, the Highly Erodible Land Initiative, the Pollinator Habitat Initiative and other related initiatives, continues through Sept. 30.

ANDY CROSS, THE DENVER POST • ASSOCIATED PRESS

Burl Scherler, of Scherler Farms, walks through a failed winter wheat crop on May 30 on his farm in Sheridan Lake, Colo. Scherler has had only a 20 percent success rate on this year's winter wheat crops due to the drought. Some farmers in southeast Colorado say they won't have a wheat crop this year because of an ongoing drought, while areas of the western slope are swimming in water.

Drought Takes Toll on Southeastern Colorado

KIOWA, Colo. (AP) • Some farmers in southeast Colorado say they won't have a wheat crop this year because of an ongoing drought, while areas of the western slope are swimming in water.

In Kiowa County about 50 miles east of Denver, farmer Chris Tallman says the entire county is full of dead wheat fields.

“It's the worst I've ever seen,” said Kiowa County farmer Chris Tallman. “We are at zero. We will have absolutely no wheat crop. The entire county is full of dead wheat fields.”

The situation is different on Colorado's Western Slope, where the northern half is deluged with above-average runoff, while an anemic snowpack in the southern San Juan Mountains this past winter is going to leave Southwest Colorado and the Upper Rio Grande basin to the east with stream flows well below average, the Natural Resources Conservation Service reported.

Eagle County is still in a moderate drought, according to David Simeral with the Western Regional Climate Center.

Drought has been a constant issue for much of the past decade. But wheat growers suffered an additional blow in April when a series of freezes damaged the already weakened wheat crop.

“The freeze was just the death knell,” said farmer Burl Scherler, who grows wheat near the Kansas border. “I've never in my 40 years here had a wheat stand just die like this.”

According to the Denver Post, parched fields are losing their topsoil and causing dust storms reminiscent of the 1930s Dust Bowl.

It's a different story in northeastern Colorado, where drought has not been as pervasive as in the southeast. A decent crop in the northeast could help bring the statewide harvest to near-normal totals.

Colorado was the nation's sixth-largest winter wheat producer in 2012 with a harvest valued at $594 million. That makes wheat the state's No. 3 crop behind corn at $947 million last year and hay at $863 million.

Farmers with a decent harvest will collect good prices. Market analysts say 2013 estimates are $6.80 per bushel, second-best behind last year's record high of $8.05.

About 80 percent of Colorado's wheat is exported to Europe and Asia. Most of the remaining 20 percent goes to wheat mills in Commerce City and Platteville.

According to the Durango Herald, Colorado reservoirs have also suffered from scant snowpack.

U.S. Defines ‘Rural’ at Least 15 Ways

BY DAVID A. FAHRENTHOLD
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON • Lenoir is a small town in western North Carolina. It has 18,000 people, a Wal-Mart, a Waffle House and an annual parade famous for people carrying pans of blackberry cobbler. Is it a rural place? The U.S. government has an answer: Yes.

No.
Yes. Yes. No. No. No. Yes. No. No. No. No.

The problem is that the U.S. government has at least 15 official definitions of the word “rural,” two of which apply only to Puerto Rico and parts of Hawaii.

All of these definitions matter; they’re used by various agencies to parcel out $37 billion-plus in federal money for “rural development.” And each one is different.

In one program, for instance, “rural” is defined as any place with fewer than 50,000 residents. So Lenoir is rural, and eligible for money. But in another, only towns smaller than 2,500 residents are “rural.” So Lenoir isn’t, and isn’t.

And so on. There are 11 definitions of “rural” in use within the U.S. Department of Agriculture alone.

“Sometimes we’re in. Sometimes we’re out,” said Lane Bailey, the city manager in Lenoir. “We always have to check what our definition is for different grants. ‘What are we this day?’”

These varying definitions have become a baroque example of redundancy and duplication in Washington. They mean extra costs for taxpayers — and extra hassle for small-town officials — as separate offices ask them the same question in up to 15 different ways.

“If you were starting from a blank slate, providing one definition would be optimal,” said Doug O’Brien, the USDA official in charge of rural development programs.

But optimal is not happening. This week, as soon as Monday, the Senate is expected to pass a bill that would pare down the list of definitions. Not down to one, however.

Down to nine.

Every year, there are billions available to fund projects in rural communities. Money for housing. Community centers. Sewer plants. Broadband connections.

But what, exactly, is a rural area? Is there a single definition that could take in a Kansas wheat farm, a West Virginia coal town, a Vermont dairy and a Hawaii cattle ranch?

“It’s like, if I said to you, ‘Give me a definition of love,’” said Gary Hart, the director of the Center for Rural Health at the University of North Dakota. “You wouldn’t give me one definition. You’d give me 20.”

The list has grown in the way government duplication often does: one good intention at a time. Frequently, a new set of legislators or bureaucrats has set up a program to help rural communities, and has come up with its own definition of what “rural” ought to mean.

But nobody bothers to erase the other definitions already on the books.

Then, repeat. Repeat. Repeat. Today, the government’s official definitions of “rural” include one written in 1936: an area with fewer than 10,000 people. That one is still used to parcel out rural telecommunications grants. Another definition was written in 1949: any place with fewer than 2,500 people. It is used for housing-aid programs.

These exist alongside other, different definitions: One sets the population limit for “rural” areas at 20,000. Another, at 25,000. Another, at 50,000.

The result, for people in rural areas, is a government with multiple personalities, living in multiple realities at once.

For instance: By Washington’s strictest definition of rural — any place with fewer than 2,500 residents — there are 59 million rural Americans. By its most expansive definition — any place with less than 50,000 residents — there are about 190 million, more than three times more.

“Oh, my God. This doesn’t — this just doesn’t make sense,” said Kevin Sanchez, who runs a nonprofit food bank in northern California’s Yolo County. Sanchez had a confusing run-in with the government’s thicket of definitions.

He wanted a grant for a refrigerated truck to deliver food to people in outlying areas of the county. But there was a problem: At the end of the workday, Sanchez planned to park the truck at the food bank’s office in the county seat, Woodland — population 56,000.

By this grant program’s definitions, the truck couldn’t be considered a rural project.

“I said, ‘Yolo County’s rural. Period.’” Sanchez said. “They said ‘Well, gee. You know, the town is more than 20,000, so you really don’t qualify. Would you consider relocating the truck?’”

If the truck were outside city limits, they explained, the definition wouldn’t be a problem. Sanchez didn’t apply for the money.

“You go park a truck outside the town, and it ain’t gonna be there the next morning,” he said.

In small-town Shelby, N.C., there was another problem with definitions. The operators of a proposed charter school wanted to apply for a rural-aid grant. Shelby has 20,300 people, which would make it “rural” under many federal definitions. But not, unfortunately, the one that mattered.

The definitions had to be satisfied. But they couldn’t move the school.

So they moved the town instead. Shelby “de-annexed” that plot of land, pulling back the city border so the school would be outside it. And officially rural.

“Does it seem right, or fair?” asked Shelby Mayor O. Stanhope Anthony III. “You know, probably not.”

Now, the U.S. Senate is considering a farm bill that would knock six definitions off the list by settling on a single population cap for “rural” areas. The Senate bill decrees that any place that has fewer than 50,000 residents, and isn’t adjacent to a big city, should be counted as rural.

That’s simpler. The USDA supports the idea. But in the House, both Republicans and Democrats have said the population cap is too high and the bill’s vision of “rural” is too expensive.

By the Senate’s definition, for instance, the label “rural” would apply equally to Harrisburg, Neb., population 100, and Harrisburg, Pa., a busy state capital with a population of 49,279. The Senate bill would still give smaller places priority treatment.

Even if Congress does knock six definitions off the list, in January a federal agency is planning to add a new one.

The Consumer Financial Protection Bureau will begin using its own definition of “rural.” It’s based on a complicated measurement of urbanization and commuting patterns.

So then, the question of whether Lenoir is rural would have yet another answer: Yes. No. Yes. Yes. No. No. No. Yes. No. No. No. No. No. And...no.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Local Law Enforcement Provides Help

With all the bad press one sees on the Internet, I'd like to share a story about our local police that is a more positive note.

I live across the street from a local park. I work evenings, so I'm up late. I heard a young lady sobbing at the park. I decided to offer help in the form of calling the local authorities. The young lady was from out of state, seven months pregnant and had no place to stay while her family arranged transportation to Arizona.

The police dispatched Officer Jaime Harper. She was courteous, kind and respectful of the young woman's situation. Within minutes, Officer Harper arranged shelter for her and transported her to a motel. On a side note, the girl was also very polite and respectful.

I hope if my children ever need it that they encounter helpful people like Ms. Harper. I'd like to think that the vast majority of our police are of her caliber. Certainly in my dealings with local law enforcement, I have always been treaty fairly.

Arab Spring Is Trouble

Anyone notice the recent turmoil in Turkey — looks like more "Arab Spring"?

The "Arab Spring" (in reality aka Islamic Extremism Crusade) continues to progress and many of our brain-dead leaders still fail to grasp the reality and enormous scope of the movement which is relentlessly unfolding. The movement is being orchestrated by the "merchants of venom" in Iran through their surrogates such as Hezbollah and any other terrorist/extremist organizations they can manipulate or recruit. And, Iran's fostering of mayhem tends to cause a gullible world to lose focus on the nuclear weapons development which it (Iran) is pursuing and Syria's use of chemical warfare.

Some of the aforementioned extremist elements have now been imported to South America, and our porous southern border will present no appreciable obstacle as they proceed to consolidate here and commence hatching their sinister plans. Of course, they will reap the benefit (along with the multitude of illegal immigrants) of being subsidized by our Social Security, tax money and free medical care.

Meanwhile, due to absurd immigration policies, it is very possible that some of those same elements of extremism are "legally" entering through Atlanta and dispersing mostly into the southeastern United States.

Our immigration policies have us on a road to disaster! The recent tragic beheading in Britain and the Boston bombing should serve as a wake-up call to the grim realities! And will you now take comfort in knowing that all the hard work of Obama, Hillary Clinton, Susan Rice and John Kerry to sell us out to a corrupt United Nations could become a reality? (International Small Arms Treaty, International Criminal Court, Law of the Sea).

Obama plans to sign the International Small Arms Treaty. Any U.S. senator who votes in favor of ratifying any of the aforementioned

Show the Flag Respect

I am a longtime resident of Twin Falls, as well as a veteran of the U.S. Army. I am appalled at the state of American flags and state of Idaho flags in our town. I see torn, dirty, worn-out flags everywhere I go. I see them at the post office, the college, and I have seen them at the National Guard post. These flags are supposed to be flown with pride, not just thrown up and let go.

If you are going to fly the flags, take the time to look at them and replace them when they need it! If you can't afford to replace flags when they are torn and worn out, don't fly them!

Rupert Cemetery Is Well-groomed

Good work, Rupert Cemetery! I visit the Rupert Cemetery two or three times a year. In the past, I would carry an array of shovels, buckets, clippers and cleaning supplies to spruce up (uncover) the Kenagy, De-Mary and nearby neglected plots.

However, the past few times I've been out there, I haven't had to lift a finger. Each in-ground headstone appears to have been trimmed or weed-whacked to perfection. The Rupert Cemetery is truly a beautiful and peaceful place high on a hill overlooking the countryside. If you are ever in the area and have some time on your hands, I recommend a visit. Two thumbs up for the maintenance staff.

READER COMMENT

The Power Act Swims Upstream

In the Monday, June 3, Opinion section of the Times-News, Randy Stapilus writes on a method for dissolution of the Northwest Power and Conservation Council as being a "Little Secret Few People Realize." The article, in referencing publication of a soon-to-be-released book, minimizes responsibilities of the council.

Idaho Sen. James McClure played a large part in establishing the council under provisions of the 1980 Power Act. The act was primarily directed toward state involvement in hydropower delivery from dams located within the Federal Columbia Power System. A council composed of two representatives appointed by governors from each of the states of Idaho, Washington, Oregon and Montana was constituted by Congress through an interstate compact organization established by the state legislatures. Under the act, Bonneville Power Administration actions were to be "consistent" with a council-developed power plan. In no way was "salmon run preservation," per se, a key reason for the act or for creation of the council. The act does stipulate as a purpose the "... protection, mitigation and enhancement of fish and wildlife."

In its planning role, the council does not just "... deliver occasional reports and recommendations." Anyone can access the council at www.nwccouncil.org and see that the planning function of the council extends over a wide range of regional power and conservation issues including BPA power development, conservation acquisition, transmission, fish and wildlife mitigation, and tribal interests.

Jim Kempton
Retired Member of the Idaho House of Representatives

A five-year plan is constantly reviewed and refined as energy resources compete for cost efficiency and availability. The planning and forecasting capabilities of council staff are also utilized by outside energy and conservation organizations such as the Northwest Energy Efficiency Alliance, independent power companies and state public utility commissions.

Power and fish and wildlife interests of Idaho, Washington, Oregon and Montana are constantly debated in open forums that ultimately become policy recommendations for BPA expenditure of millions of dollars for power and transmission development, fish and wildlife mitigation, and hydro operations that also benefit fish passage through the dams.

Ultimately, the interface between council members appointed by their respective governors has an impact on upstream and downstream interests of the individual states. In southern Idaho, the issue is most often protection of upstream water rights and the rejection of increased river flow and river flushes. In northern Idaho, it has been additional funding for sock-eye salmon and sturgeon hatcheries to accommodate recovery of both species. In short, the council acts as a planning fulcrum in balancing competing interests of regional states, tribes, Forest Service, Bureau of Land Management and public utilities that use BPA power.

It is true Section 839b(b)(5)(A) of the 1980 Power Act states that "... the Council established pursuant to this subsection shall be terminated by the Secretary 90 days after the Governors of three of the states referred to in this subsection jointly provide for any reason ... a written request for termination." However, if three governors were to take this position, there couldn't be an interstate compact council consisting of a single state anyway.

One of many reasons the governors have always elected to resolve differences rather than bolt from the Council Interstate Compact is Section 839b(b)(5)(B) of the act. This section states: "Upon termination of the Council ... shall be transferred to, and continue to be funded and carried out, jointly, by the Administrator (BPA), the Secretary of the Interior and the Administrator of the National Marine Fisheries Service." There is no provision for any other regional interface with BPA if governors were to take such action. The suggestion of some kind of regional BPA board is simply a non-starter.

politics themselves are our true "viperous worm." The unrelenting nastiness of our parties toward each other, egged on by well-paid partisans on the sidelines, is the scandal that truly "gnaws at the bowels" of our republic. If we don't repair that one, we'll never really be able to fix the others.

In a Turkish Town Where 10,000 Died, Only She Remains

A woman I met last month in south-western Turkey is going to die, probably sometime soon. Asiya’s death will not be covered by any news service, and for all but a few people in her small village of Chunkush, she will not be missed. Even the relatives who love her will probably think to themselves, well, she was 98 years old. Or 99. Or, if she survives until 2015, somewhere in the neighborhood of a century. She will have lived a long life.

When I met Asiya in May, her daughter brought me strong Kurdish tea and fresh strawberries from their yard, and when I return to her village someday and find that she has indeed passed away, I suspect I’m going to weep.

Chris Bohjalian

Special the Washington Post

Why cry for a woman I met but once, who lived a long life and who couldn’t understand a word I said? Who spoke only Turkish, a language in which I know how to say only “please” and “thank you”?

Because Asiya is what some people call a hidden Armenian, and she is the last surviving Armenian in Chunkush.

I met her when I was traveling with six Armenian American friends through a part of Turkey that many Armenians (including me) refer to as Historic Armenia. We were in a region that today is largely Kurdish but as recently as 98 years ago was a mixture of Kurds, Turks, Assyrians and Armenians. We were making a pilgrimage to view the ruins of Armenian churches and monasteries, the remnants of a culture obliterated from this corner of the Earth in the Armenian genocide. During the First World War, (LEFT) Activists of an Armenian youth group gather at the French Embassy in Yerevan to express their gratitude to France’s parliament for passing a bill that outlaws denial of Armenian genocide, in Yerevan, Armenia, Tuesday, Jan. 24, 2012. France’s parliament voted Monday to make it a crime to deny that the killings of Armenians by Ottoman Turks nearly a century ago constituted a genocide, risking more sanctions from Turkey and complicating an already delicate relationship with the rising power. (RIGHT) Archbishop Mesrob Ashjian, prelate of the Armenian Apostolic Church of New York, consecrates a memorial statue outside of St. Vartanantz Church in Ridgefield, N.J., Sunday, April 20, 1997, on the 82nd anniversary of the massacre of 1.5 million Armenians by Ottoman Turks during WWI. Flanking the archbishop are, Souren Papazian, 90, left, a survivor of the genocide, and Mrs. Keghanoush Kinossian, the wife of a survivor, who donated the statue. The 12-foot, 3 1/2 ton statue of rose marble and brass, sculpted in Armenia, depicts a dove of peace.

1.5 million Armenians were systematically annihilated three out of every four living in the Ottoman Empire.

On our fifth day, we visited Chunkush, where until 1915 there was a thriving community of 10,000 Armenians. The ruins of the church loom over you. The town was almost entirely Armenian. Over a few nightmarish days that summer, Turkish gendarmes and Kurdish chetes killing parties descended on the village and marched almost every Armenian two hours away to a ravine called Dudan, where they shot, bayoneted or simply threw them into a chasm of several hundred feet.

One of the gendarmes pulled Asiya’s mother from the line at the edge of the ravine, however, because he thought she was pretty. He decided he’d marry her. And so she was spared one of the very few Armenians who were saved that summer day in 1915.

My companions and I hadn’t expected to find

Asiya when we journeyed to Chunkush. We simply wanted to see the ruins of the church. Most of the villagers acknowledged that once upon a time Armenians had lived in Chunkush, but they were quick to add whenever we asked what had happened to them that at some point they had all “moved away.”

The truth was, they were still there, whatever remained of their bones deteriorating at the bottom of the Dudan chasm. We didn’t think there were any living Armenians in the town.

But as we were leaving, a thin fellow in his 60s, with a deeply weathered face and a ball cap, raced up to our van and banged on the door. We had been there an hour, and word had spread that Americans were in town. We had to meet his mother-in-law, he said.

Our Kurdish driver worried that this was the beginning of a nasty international incident: Seven Americans kidnapped or killed. But the fellow was desperate, so we agreed to come meet Asiya. My friend Khatchig Mouradian, editor of the Armenian Weekly in the United States, speaks Turkish and translated.

I have met survivors of the Armenian genocide before, including my grandparents. But meeting Asiya was different. She wasn’t in Washington or Paris or Beirut. She wasn’t a part of the Armenian diaspora, where we usually find the few remaining survivors of the genocide. Here was someone whose mother had been at the edge of the gorge and who was still living where, more than likely, her grandparents and her father had been executed. Where her ancestral culture had been exterminated.

After the massacre, the town of 10,000 Armenians was reinvented as a town of 10,000 Kurds. Here was someone whose mother had heard the endless gunshots. The crash of the bodies on the rocks. The wails of the children.

She and her mother had grown up and grown old, aware of who and what they were Armenian but forced to conform and remain silent. That was the price of survival in the days after the genocide, and it’s a custom that, in small villages such as Chunkush, endures today. That is, perhaps, the very definition of a hidden Armenian.

Whenever we asked Asiya about being Armenian, she would shake her head ruefully and grow silent. One time her daughter chimed in: “No. We can’t talk about that.”

Whenever we asked what her mother had told her of the chasm, she would look down and murmur: “I was too young. I don’t remember.” Sometimes she would begin a sentence, “My mother said . . .” but then her voice would trail off.

At one of those moments when she paused, I took her hand. It was a reflex, and I had no idea if this was a cultural faux pas. But she wrapped my fingers in hers; her grip was powerful. She looked at me from beneath her headdress with eyes that were at once among the saddest and the strongest I’ve ever seen. I understood instantly why her son-in-law, a very good man, wanted us to meet her: It was because she wanted to meet us. She wanted to meet other Armenians.

Today there are but a handful of living survivors of the Armenian genocide. When the centennial arrives in 2015, there will be fewer still. I hope that Asiya will be with us, because I plan to return to Chunkush that year.

No one from the village is going to commemorate the 10,000 who died in that chasm, so it will be up to people like me to make that effort and, yes, to embrace the Asiyas of the world who were there.

Five Myths about Legalizing Marijuana

With 16 states having decriminalized or legalized cannabis for non-medical use and eight more heading toward some kind of legalization, federal prohibition’s days seem numbered. You might wonder what America will look like when marijuana is in the corner store and at the farmers market. In three years spent researching that question, I found some ideas about the plant that just don’t hold up.

Doug Fine

use with interest. As it is for most fathers, the well-being of my family is the most important thing in my life. Whether you like the plant or not, as with alcohol, only adults should be allowed to partake of intoxicating substances. But youth cannabis use is near its highest level ever in the United States. When I spoke at a California high school recently and asked, “Who thinks cannabis is easier to obtain than alcohol?” nearly every hand shot up.

As for adult use, the numbers are mixed. A 2011 University of California at Berkeley study, for example, showed a slight increase in adult use with de facto legalization in the Netherlands (though the rate was still lower than in the United States). Yet that study and one in 2009 found Dutch rates to be slightly lower than the European average. When the United States’ 40-year-long war on marijuana ends, the country is not going to turn into a Cheech and Chong movie. It is, however, going to see the transfer of as much as 50 percent of cartel profits to the taxable economy.

2. Law enforcement officials oppose legalization.

It is true that many law enforcement lobby groups don’t want to end America’s most expensive war (which has cost $1 trillion and counting), but that’s because they’re the reason it’s so expensive. In 2010, two-thirds of federal spending on the drug war, $10 billion, went toward law enforcement and interdiction.

But law enforcement rank and file know the truth about the drug war’s profligate and ineffective spending, says former Los Angeles deputy police chief Stephen Downing, one of 5,000 public safety professionals who make up the group Law Enforcement Against Prohibition. “Most law enforcers find it difficult not to recognize the many harms caused by our current drug laws,” he wrote to me in an e-mail. Those harms include marijuana-possession arrests that are skewed heavily toward minorities.

Since marijuana prohibition drives the drug war, these huge costs would end when federal cannabis law changed. Sheriff Tom Allman in Mendocino County, Calif., helped permit, inspect and protect local cannabis farmers in 2010 and 2011. When I asked him why, he said: “This county has problems: domestic violence, meth, poverty. Marijuana isn’t even in the top 10. I want it off the front pages so I can deal with the real issues.”

3. Getting high would be the top revenue generator for the cannabis plant.

I called both of my U.S. senators’ offices to support inserting a provision into this year’s farm bill to legalize hemp for domestic cultivation. Based on my research on industrial cannabis, commonly called hemp, I’m staggered by the potential of this plant, which is not the variety you smoke.

In Canada, where 90 percent of the crop is bought by U.S. consumers, the government researches the best varieties for its hemp farmers, rather than refusing to issue them permits, as the United States tends to do. In a research facility in Manitoba, I saw a tractor whose body was made entirely of hemp fiber and binding. BMW and Dodge use hemp fibers in their door panels, and homes whose insulation and wall paneling are made partially of hemp represent a fast-growing trend in the European construction industry.

Jack Noel, who co-authored a 2012 industrial hemp task force report for the New Mexico Department of Agriculture, says that “within 10 years of the end of the war on drugs, we’ll see a $50 billion domestic hemp industry.” That’s bigger than the $40 billion some economists predict smoked cannabis would bring in.

4. Big Tobacco and Big Alcohol would control the legal cannabis industry.

In 1978, the Carter administration changed alcohol regulations to allow for microbreweries. Today the craft-beer market is worth $10.2 billion annually. The top-shelf cannabis farmers in California’s Emerald Triangle realize this potential. “We’re creating an international brand, like champagne and Parmigiano cheese,” says Tomas Balogh, co-founder of the Emerald Growers Association in Humboldt, Calif. Get ready for the bud and breakfast.

5. In the heartland, legalization is a political nonstarter.

President Obama, in an interview last December, for the first time took seriously a question about the legalization of cannabis. He said that he didn’t yet support it but that he had “bigger fish to fry” than harassing Colorado and Washington.

In Arizona, a pretty conservative and silver state, 56 percent of those in a poll last month supported regulating cannabis for personal use.

Maybe fiscal conservatives know about the $35 billion in annual nationwide tax savings that ending prohibition would bring. In Illinois, 63 percent of voters support medicinal marijuana, and they’re likely to get it. Even 60 percent of Kentuckians favor medical cannabis.

In this May 24 photo, garment factory workers Mosammat Shabana Begum and her husband, Asad, sit in their room in Ashulia, Bangladesh, an industrial suburb of Dhaka. The two left Tekani in far northwestern Bangladesh in search of the one thing their village could not provide: jobs.

Disasters Inject Fear into Bangladesh Factory Life

BY CHRIS BLAKE
Associated Press

TEKANI, Bangladesh • Twice a year, buses filled with garment workers come rumbling into Tekani, shaking the houses made of mud and tin, and alerting villagers that their loved ones are home for the holidays.

Wearing new outfits bought specially for the Muslim Eid festival, and boasting of a regular income, they cut a striking image of success in a village where most own no land, have no steady jobs and are among the poorest people in one of the poorest regions of one of the world's poorest countries.

Three days later, the buses begin the nine-hour ride back to suburban Dhaka, creeping along the same narrow road covered with drying rice husks and juttied with pot-holes. The workers are invariably joined by hundreds of fresh recruits from Tekani and its sister villages who will work alongside them in factories making clothing worn around the globe. They are the fuel that powers a $20 billion garment industry that is the world's third-largest.

Mosammat Almuna Begum once dreamed of sending her 21-year-old daughter on one of those buses. No longer.

"It's better to stay hungry here," she said. "There is no safety there?"

Pushed by poverty and pulled by the hope of a better life, Tekani people have for almost a decade been making the trip south to Dhaka. But with neighbors and relatives killed and maimed in the Tazreen factory fire in November, and the collapse of the Rana Plaza factory building in April, terror has overtaken this village of about 1,800 people in far northwestern Bangladesh. Many question whether the industry's shaky promise is worth the sacrifice.

Before the disasters, which together claimed 1,241 lives, five to 10 people from Tekani would leave every month for the garment factories. Now, villagers say they know of no person planning to make the trip soon, and many who had left want to come back.

"They're scared of staying there now," said Mohammad Ashraful. The market vendor was on a trip home from Dhaka, where he lives with his wife, a garment worker who wanted to leave the industry. He was urging her to stick it out. "Maybe it will pass," he said. "I'm not sure."

Tekani's green and amber fields stretch to each horizon, a lush inland sea of rice, corn and other crops ripening under the tropical sun. The small, raised road that cuts through the paddies leads to shady orchards, branches weighed down with mangoes and jackfruit.

Despite this bounty, Tekani has never been able to offer its people what they want most: jobs. When global garment manufacturers turned to Bangladesh for cheap labor and factories started springing up around Dhaka, Tekani residents finally had an alternative to staying in a village that doesn't even have electricity.

Now 4,000 of the roughly 25,000 people who live in Tekani and nine other nearby villages have left for garment work, said Nur Alom, the area's elected chairman. Sixty percent are women.

"This is 100 percent for economic reasons, and this is positive," he said. "Many people have no land and it is difficult to get by here."

The attraction is clear: Factory work is easy to get and requires no skills; the factories will hire and train almost anyone. In turn, manufacturers get to draw on the massively underutilized workforce in this densely populated nation of 160 million, one willing to toil for a minimum wage that even today is equivalent to just $38 a month.

NICARAGUAN CANAL FAST-TRACKED WITH BOOST FROM CHINA

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) • For centuries, tycoons and adventurers alike have dreamed of building a canal through Nicaragua between the Pacific and Atlantic oceans and riding a boom in international trade to new riches. Up until now, however, all comers were forced to admit defeat when faced with the sheer challenge of building a man-made river through dense, hilly jungle. Now, the old dream is attracting a new hopeful, and this time from the other side of the world.

The Chinese company, HK Nicaragua Canal Development Investment Co. Ltd., is working with the Nicaraguan government on a massive canal project experts say could take 11 years to finish, cost $40 billion and require digging about 130 miles of waterway.

Canal proponents say the waterway could create 40,000 construction jobs and essentially double the per-capita gross domestic product of Nicaragua, one of the poorest countries in Latin America. The government plans to grant the Chinese company a concession for 100 years.

That's sparked hopes of an economic gold rush in Nicaragua, and President Daniel Ortega has pushed approval of the canal through the country's congress. Ortega presented the canal proposal Tuesday and hopes to submit it to at least an initial vote on Monday, with final approval planned by next Thursday.

Local Gang Suspected in Mexico City Mass Kidnapping Case

MEXICO CITY (AP) • The mysterious disappearance of 12 people from a Mexico City after-hours bar nearly two weeks ago was the work of a local gang, authorities said, with the possible motive being a dispute between rival groups over drug dealing.

There has been no word of the 12 since they vanished in broad daylight on May 26 just a block from Mexico City's leafy Paseo de Reforma. City Prosecutor Rodolfo Rios showed a surveillance videotape to reporters late Friday that disputes witness accounts that the missing people were taken by masked commandos with large guns and SUVs.

The videotape shows several compact cars pulling up, and people being herded in just a couple at a time. The men taking them are in civilian clothes, and there are no signs of weapons or force, explaining why so many people could disappear without detection in the middle of a busy Sunday. There was both a mass bike ride and 3.1 mile foot race less than a block away when they were seen leaving the bar about 11 a.m.

Rios said the abduction involved at least 17 people in eight vehicles. He said so far authorities can only place eight of the 12 at the after-hours bar known as Heaven, which was located on a small side street in an upscale business district of towering high-rises. Four people have been detained so far in the crime, including an owner of the bar and two employees.

The missing all lived in Tepito, one of Mexico City's most dangerous neighborhood's and home to its largest black market.

Four people were gunned down in a gym late Thursday night in the same neighborhood, raising fears that a wave of cartel-style violence was hitting the city. Two men were detained but later let go, Rios said.

Mexico City authorities spent all day Friday assuring residents that the two crimes were not related and that the incidents are not signs of large-scale drug violence seen in other parts of Mexico.

The crime in the gym, an assassination targeted at two brothers, is not related to the disappearance of the young, he added.

"I don't have any indication of any cartel in Mexico City," Mayor Miguel Angel Mancera told the Televisa television network. "It's not a cartel. What we have in Tepito is an upswing in violence, and an upswing in some gangs."

A witness to the alleged kidnapping told authorities that it was the result of a dispute between two rival groups of drug dealers operating in Tepito, Rios said, but added that it's just one line of investigation.

Tepito is the main clearing-house for millions of dollars of contraband, from guns and drugs to counterfeit handbags that come through Mexico City.

Mancera said authorities were investigating whether the alleged mass kidnapping might have been related to the execution on May 24 of a low-level drug dealer outside a bar in the trendy Condesa neighborhood. A public security official who was not authorized to be quoted by name had said that the killing of the dealer outside the "Black Bar" was related to the disappearances two days later, and that both may have been part of a turf battle between drug gangs.

"The Heaven bar and the Black bar have some threads in common, which prosecutors are investigating," Mancera said. "These two events could lead us to the conclusion that they are related." But he said "we have found nothing to connect" the Thursday gym shootings with the bar case.

Swedish Princess Madeleine Weds New York Banker

STOCKHOLM (AP) • Swedish Princess Madeleine fell in love in the Big Apple. Now she has said “yes” to New York banker Christopher O’Neill in a lavish and emotional wedding ceremony in Stockholm.

Madeleine, 30, was wearing a stunning silk organza dress with a lace top and 13-foot trail, designed by Valentino Garavani, when she tied the knot with British-American O’Neill on Saturday. Around 470 European royals, top New York socialites and celebrities were in attendance.

The 38-year-old O’Neill fought back tears as the princess walked down the aisle with her father, King Carl XVI Gustaf, to a traditional Swedish wedding march performed by a children’s choir. The bride and groom were visibly moved as the ceremony proceeded with hymns in both Swedish and English, and performances by Roxette singer Marie Fredriksson and Broadway’s “Phantom of the Opera” star Peter Joback.

With a smile on her face, Madeleine read out the wedding vows in Swedish while O’Neill read his in English in the Royal Chapel, decorated with typical Swedish summer flowers. After the wedding, the couple kissed on the steps of the palace in front of a cheering crowd of several thousand who had gathered in the sunshine waving Swedish flags.

“We hope she will be very happy in the future, the princess Madeleine,” Julia Huelmsman, who had traveled from Munich, Germany, for the occasion, said.

Later, the newlyweds travelled in a procession through the crowded streets of the capital in a special horse and carriage. They then sailed to the royal residence and UNESCO World Heritage site Drottningholm Palace, 6 miles west of the city center, where a private wedding reception will be held.

Madeleine is the youngest of Carl XVI Gustaf and Queen Silvia’s three children and fourth in line to the throne. She became known as Sweden’s party princess in her early 20s, when she was frequently spotted at Stockholm’s high-end nightclubs, and has attracted widespread attention for her stylish clothes.

But her life hasn’t always been a fairytale. Madeleine’s extravagant lifestyle has often been criticized by Swedes, who prefer the down-to-earth attitude of her sister, Crown Princess Victoria, who married a commoner. And in 2010, she fled to New York after breaking off her first engagement to Swedish attorney Jonas Bergstrom amid media reports that he had cheated on her.

Since then, Madeleine has held a lower profile, working for the nonprofit World Childhood Foundation in New York, where she met O’Neill through mutual friends. The couple was first spotted together having lunch at the Central Park Boathouse in January 2011 and they announced their engagement in October 2012.

O’Neill was born into a wealthy family. His late father, Paul O’Neill, set up the European head office of Oppenheimer & Co. in London in the 1960s and his mother, Eva Maria O’Neill, is involved in several charities. He studied at a boarding school in St. Gallen, Switzerland, and holds a bachelor’s degree in international relations from Boston University and a master’s degree from Columbia Business School in New York.

O’Neill, who holds dual American and British citizenship, has declined a royal rank in Sweden, which would have required him to become a Swedish citizen. He has chosen to continue working and the newlyweds are expected to move back to their apartment in Manhattan.

Guests at the wedding included the U.K.’s Earl and Countess of Wessex, Prince Edward and Sophie; Princess Takamado of Japan and princes and princesses from Norway, Denmark, Greece, Luxembourg and Monaco.

O’Neill had also invited many of his super-rich friends, such as Opel heir Georg von Opel, Cadbury chocolate heir Joel Cadbury, Colombian billionaire Alejandro Santo Domingo, and Aidan and Fizzy Barclay. Other well-known invitees were Duran Duran band member John Taylor, the CEO of fashion retailer H&M, Karl-Johan Persson, and golfer Jesper Parnevik.

The marriage is the latest in a series of glamorous royal weddings that have mesmerized Europe in the past few years. In June 2010, Madeleine’s older sister Crown Princess Victoria wed her personal trainer Daniel Westling in a grand ceremony in Stockholm and the year after, Britain’s Prince William and Kate Middleton tied the knot in extravagant fashion in front of an estimated 2 billion television viewers. Also in 2011, Prince Albert II of Monaco wed Charlene Lynette Wittstock and in 2012, Prince Guillaume of Luxembourg united with Belgian Countess Stephanie de Lannoy.

Trip Through Time: Myanmar, a Turning Point for a Rebel

YANGON, Myanmar • Walking down a narrow stairway from a traffic-congested street in Myanmar's largest city, I came across Hpaya Lan Station. Inside the station, the arrival of rundown coaches takes visitors back to the old days of when the station had an English name, Pagoda Road, and the city was called Rangoon, the capital of the nation also known as Burma.

Kazuo Nagata
The Yomiuri Shimbun

One day in 1924, some students were in the station teasing each other when one bumped into a tall British man. The Briton burst into a fit of anger and appeared ready to swing his cane at the student's head, but poked his back instead.

One of the students, Tin Aung, who later became the president of Rangoon University, wrote about the incident before he died in 1978.

After the encounter, the students followed him onto a train as they continued to protest the man's actions. But as Tin Aung recalled in his writings, witnessing the man trying to patiently speak to the outraged students instilled in him a sense of sympathy and understanding.

Tin Aung was told by a Burmese police officer that the man's name was Eric Blair, who later adopted the nom de plume George Orwell. Orwell wrote an essay about his life as a police officer in Myanmar. In his essay "Shooting an Elephant," he wrote that the longer he stayed in the country, the more strongly he felt that imperialism was evil. His sympathy toward the Burmese people had deepened, he wrote.

One day during that time, he received a report that an elephant had gone on a rampage in a village. He went to the village carrying a weapon, but found himself surrounded by a crowd of curious onlookers. He did not want to kill the elephant. But if he did not shoot the animal, he thought, the Burmese people would regard him — and all Britons — as cowards.

Khin Maung Nyunt, 84, professor emeritus of Mandalay University, said Orwell sensed the emptiness behind the sense of superiority that many Britons harbored toward Asians. He said the period Orwell spent in Myanmar was a turning point for him.

After rejecting the illusions of imperialism, Orwell denounced totalitarianism for its lies and repression of truth and conscience in such works as "Animal Farm" and "1984." After Orwell left the country, Myanmar gained independence. But the government's military regime was oppressive, and many people were incarcerated as political prisoners.

In central Yangon, the Independence Monument stands tall near a former red-brick Supreme Court building constructed by the former colonial masters. Carved on the monument is a slogan declaring that the rights of citizens be shared by all. I saw a Muslim man, a member of a religious minority, examine the words closely.

Recent advances in democratization in Myanmar have brought about the easing of sanctions by the international community and expectations of economic development. However, concerns remain over how to eliminate conflicts among religious and ethnic groups. The Muslim man's presence prompted me to remember an ironic quote from "Animal Farm": "All animals are equal. But some animals are more equal than others."

• • •

George Orwell was born in British India in 1903. After graduating from Eton College in England, he worked in Burma from 1922 to 1927. He fought in the Spanish Civil War, which began in 1936. Orwell died of tuberculosis at 46.

ASK POLICEMAN DAN

I have a question that has been bothering me for years; about two years ago I was stopped on the freeway for leaves blowing out of my pickup bed and was given a verbal warning. I have seen trucks hauling hay, straw & manure losing it on the freeway. Can you tell me why I was stopped and not the trucks? -John

I would say it would have depended on whether you had hit a tree and were dragging it down the road causing the leaves to blow off (sound of a rim shot here).

I was asked several years ago about semi-trucks not securing loads and having material fall from them. I was told then by a state patrolman that there was no law for debris flying out of vehicle. I could find no law this time either but that does not mean I didn't miss something (I have been wrong before, big shocker I know).

I believe that if you were stopped primarily for the reason you have questioned then the stop might have been a mistake.

The only reason I could see that you could be in violation would be if you had somebody in the back of the pickup throwing leaves out which would be littering. Littering must be done maliciously and not by accident.

I had to get new plates for my car this year. Can I just throw the old plates in the trash? -Marie

Yes or you can make items with them such as a bird house or siding for a building or any other novelty item(s) you would like to make.

If you do throw them away I would go ahead and mangle them up a little so that somebody could not pull them out of the trash and try to use them on a vehicle. You would not get into trouble if they did but might get a visit from the police if they were used for something illegal. Some people even like to bend them back and forth until they break in half. Personally I hang them inside my garage just for conversation.

Officer Down:

Please put these officers, killed in the line of duty, and their families in your prayers. God bless these heroes:

- Sheriff Cody Carpenter, Scott County Sheriff, Arkansas
- Wildlife Officer Joel Campora, Arkansas Game and Fish Commission
- Trooper Sean O'Connell, Washington State Patrol

They fought the good fight, now may they rest in peace.

Weakened Andrea Breaks Northeast Rainfall Records

NEW YORK (AP) • The first named storm of the Atlantic hurricane season smashed rainfall totals across the Northeast and pushed some streams and creeks over their banks but sped up the Eastern Seaboard without causing major damage.

A weakened Andrea shifted away from New England on Saturday morning with winds gusting up to 45 mph. The storm was expected to reach Canadian waters by Sunday.

After bringing rain, strong winds and tornadoes to Florida, Andrea lost most of its tropical characteristics late Friday into Saturday. But it brought record rainfall for the date of June 7 for many cities and towns in the Northeast.

Andrea dumped 6.64 inches of rain on Gales Ferry, Conn. The 4.16 inches that fell on New York City's Central Park was more than double the previous record for the date, set in 1918. The 3.5 inches of rain that fell at Philadelphia International Airport doubled the 1.79 inches that fell in 1904. Newark, N.J., saw 3.71 inches, breaking the previous mark of 1.11 inches set in 1931.

Elsewhere, cars were submerged in floodwaters on Long Island, and about 50 residents were displaced by a rising stream in Chester, Pa. A retaining wall collapsed early Saturday in Manhattan's Washington Heights neighborhood, sending an avalanche of rubble sliding into an apartment building and leaving three families homeless. The storm was blamed for one traffic-related death in Virginia.

Late Friday, the National Hurricane Center in Miami discontinued all tropical storm warnings but cautioned about possible coastal and localized flooding from New Jersey to New England.

Officials in the Mid-Atlantic region and Northeast had prepared for it Friday night. New York City activated its flash flooding plan, and heavy rainfall resulted in flash floods, causing some sections of roadways to be closed throughout Long Island.

A number of roads were flooded in the Boston area. A flight that left Boston on Friday night headed to Palm Beach, Fla., was diverted to Newark Liberty International Airport after being struck by lightning. No one was injured.

The weather service reported that small streams and creeks in southeastern Pennsylvania were going over their banks Friday night. New York City's airports experienced flight delays, and Connecticut reported numerous lane closures on highway as cars spun out amid heavy rain.

The rainy weather washed out events such as NASCAR's Sprint Cup qualifying in Pennsylvania's Poconos and MLB games in Washington, New York and Boston.

Minico, Burley Go 1-3 at RBI Tourney

BY RYAN HOWE
rhowe@magicvalley.com

RUPERT • The Minico Sage and the Burley Green Sox each lost Saturday and finished 1-3 at this weekend’s annual RBI Tournament, an American Legion wood bat event hosted at Minico High School.

Pocatello won the tournament championship, going 4-0.

MADISON 12, MINICO 3
Six Minico errors led to four unearned runs and the Sage left eight base runners stranded in a 12-3 loss to Madison.

Tanner Harper went 3-for-4, including a broken-bat single and two doubles.

Needing a Little Help

Filer volleyball player selected to national team, needs community help.

BY NICK RULAND
nruland@magicvalley.com

TWIN FALLS • The power of the Internet could lead to an experience of a lifetime for Filer’s Joely Roe.

But she’ll have to rely on old fashioned community support to make it to Europe.

Roe was discovered by the 2013 Global Challenge U.S. squad, Team Nfinity, who found Filer’s middle backer via a Youtube highlight video — a tryout by proxy.

Joely Roe Filer Volleyball Camp
Filer’s Joely Roe is trying to fund a trip to Europe, where she was selected among nine others to compete in the 2013 volleyball Global Challenge. A 7th through 9th grade camp will be held from 9 a.m. to 12 p.m. and then 1 p.m. to 3 p.m., June 29th at Filer high school. Cost is $25 per person.

Information: Joely Roe
256-960-2901, 208-490-1516

Discovery is not the same as selection.

That was the power of Roe’s game.

“The person who did the recruiting said she loved how I played,” Roe said.

Roe was one of two players selected from a state west of the Mississippi.

The U.S. team consists of ten high school players from across the country, from New York to Arizona, who will travel to Italy and Croatia in July to compete and train against teams from across the world. They’ll work under two-time Olympian and Volleyball Hall of Fame player and coach Debbie Green, who will mentor each player.

The team will train together and go on sightseeing trips in Rome and Venice.

Roe, who was prodded by her sister, who played college volleyball, to try out, has never been outside the United States.

“I told her I’d just do my best and we’d see what would happen. For me to make it from such a small town?” Roe said, rhetorically.

It’s a big deal.

But the deal isn’t complete.

Roe needs funding to be able to pay for an expensive plane ticket and the costs of joining the team.

She’ll take handouts, but she’s trying to work for it.

Roe hosted the first of two volleyball camps Saturday.

Only four showed up.

“We had a small group, but they were a lot of fun,” Roe said. “I had two kids who had never played before saying, ‘wow, I think I want to play volleyball.’”

Roe is hoping to get 30 or more participants at $25 to come to her next camp, June 29 at Filer high school.

“I’m just so excited to see Europe and learn about volleyball,” Roe said. “It’ll be a long trip but I think I can handle it”

Schenk Breaks Own Record at Relay

TIMES-NEWS

KETCHUM • Alice Schenk did it again.

On Saturday at the 22nd annual Sawtooth Relay, Schenk, a Rupert resident, broke the women’s solo record, a mark she set in 2012.

Schenk, 55, finished the 62-mile course from Stanley to Ketchum in 11 hours, 9 minutes, 21 seconds — more than an hour and 40 minutes faster than last year.

“With experience, you imagine you can go faster the second time. I really (wanted) to see if I could go faster,” Schenk said. “You never know what you’re capable of.”

She clocked the faster time despite a foot injury that she sustained while training.

“The foot was doable. The last 20 (miles) it was pretty sore, then the last four it really hurt,” Schenk said. “I sang a lot of praise hymns, prayed a lot, and I know who went before me; my guardian angels helped me out.”

The Sawtooth Relay is organized to be just that — a relay. Each year, about 300 teams comprising six runners divide the race into 12 legs, using a van to tote runners to their next exchange zone.

“I love cruising through the exchange zones where they call your number down and (the volunteers) say ‘There is no 319 here!’ And I say, ‘I know. I’m it,’” she said.

Schenk was among just five solo participants — and the only female soloist — on Saturday. Her support crew consisted of her daughter Sarah Schenk and a friend, Shawna Adams.

“It was beautiful weather,” according to Schenk; it was 57 degrees at the starting line when she began at 1:30 a.m. Temperatures dropped to as low as 37 degrees, and topped out at 76 as she climbed and descended Galena Summit.

“I love challenges; I love adventure,” Schenk said.

MLB ROUNDUP

Davis Lifts Blue Jays over Rangers

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TORONTO • Rajai Davis’ RBI single in the 18th inning lifted the Toronto Blue Jays to a 4-3 win over the Texas Rangers on Saturday in a game that matched the longest in club history for both teams.

Texas equaled a season high with its third straight loss.

Emilio Bonifacio hit a one-out single in the 18th and took third with two outs on a wild pickoff throw by Ross Wolf (1-1).

Davis followed with a bouncing single down the third base line, sending the Blue Jays streaming out of their dugout in celebration and ending a game that started under sunny skies but finished with the stadium lights on.

Wolf was Texas’ fifth pitcher and worked 6 2-3 innings, almost as many as starter Yu Darvish, who went seven.

Aaron Loup (3-3), the ninth Toronto pitcher, went one inning for the win.

YANKEES 3, MARINERS 1
SEATTLE • Andy Pettitte allowed three hits over 7 1-3 innings to earn his 250th career victory to lead the Yankees past the Mariners.

It was Pettitte’s 213th victory as Yankee, putting him third on the franchise’s career list behind Whitey Ford (236) and Red Ruffing (231).

Pettitte (5-3) had six strikeouts and no walks in his 85-pitch effort. He has 1,940 strikeouts as a Yankee, 16 behind all-time leader Ford.

ANGELS 9, RED SOX 5, 1ST GAME
RED SOX 7, ANGELS 2, 2ND GAME

BOSTON • David Ortiz rebounded from a rough first game with a long two-run homer and drove in three runs to help Clay Buchholz improve to 9-0, earning the Boston Red Sox a split of a day-night doubleheader.

The victory snapped Boston’s nine-game losing streak against Los Angeles.

Buchholz gave up two runs on six hits, striking out four and walking one over 6 2-3 innings to match Arizona’s Patrick Corbin (9-0) as the majors’ only unbeaten pitcher with at least nine wins, but he left in the seventh with what the team called “neck tightness.”

The Red Sox jumped ahead 2-0 against C.J. Wilson (4-5) with two runs in the first on consecutive RBI doubles by Jonny Gomes and Pedroia. Ortiz’s RBI double made it 3-0 in the second.

In the first game, Mark Trumbo and Erick Aybar each drove in two runs as the Angels beat the Red Sox 9-5 for their team-record sixth straight win at Fenway Park.

Mike Trout added a pair of doubles high off the Green Monster and collected three hits for the Angels. Tommy Hanson (3-2) allowed two runs in five innings for the win.

Ortiz went 0 for 5, struck out twice and stranded six runners, and Felix Doubront (4-3) gave up three runs and six hits over six innings.

WHITE SOX 4, ATHLETICS 1

CHICAGO • John Danks pitched three-hit ball over eight innings for his first victory in more than a year, and the White Sox won for just the second time in 12 games.

drove in the go-ahead run, and the White Sox handed the Athletics just their fourth loss in 22 games.

Dunn connected leading off the second to tie the score at 1-all, and it stayed that way until the eighth.

RAYS 8, ORIOLES 0
ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. • Jeremy Hellickson pitched six scoreless innings and six different Tampa Bay players drove in runs.

Taking up where they left off in allowing just two hits in a 2-1 victory in the opener of a three-game series at Tropicana Field, Rays pitchers limited the Orioles to four singles to beat their AL East rivals for the fifth straight time.

Hellickson (4-2) worked through a fifth-inning jam before watching the Rays break it open with five runs in the bottom half of the inning, three on Luke Scott’s bases-loaded double. The Tampa Bay starter and three relievers combined to retire the last 15 batters to finish the combined four-hitter.

Evan Longoria, Ben Zobrist, Yunel Escobar, James Loney and Jose Lobaton also drove in runs for the Rays, who roughed up rookie Kevin Gausman (0-3) in his fourth major league start.

TIGERS 6, INDIANS 4
DETROIT • Prince Fielder hit a bases-clearing double in the second inning and Detroit held on to beat Cleveland.

The AL Central-leading Tigers have won the first two games of the series to build a season-high 4 1/2-game lead over the Indians.

ROYALS 7, ASTROS 2
KANSAS CITY, Mo. • Ervin Santana pitched seven snappy innings and Kansas City finally backed him up with some offense.

Santana (4-5) entered the game with the worst run support among qualifying pitchers in the American League, a big reason why he already had six fruitless tries to win his 100th career game.

He finally reached the milestone thanks to a seemingly endless series of singles and doubles off Astros starter Erik Bedard (1-3), who failed to make it through the fifth inning.

NATIONAL LEAGUE

MARLINS 2, METS 1

NEW YORK • In the longest major league game in more than three years, Adeiny Hechavarria hit an RBI single in the 20th inning and the Miami Marlins outlasted the New York Mets 2-1 on Saturday, well after Matt Harvey left with lower back tightness following another stingy start.

Steve Cishek retired Daniel Murphy on a fly ball to the left-field warning track for the final out of a game that took 6 hours, 25 minutes. It started 5 1/2 hours before the Belmont Stakes about 13 miles away — and still ended around an hour after winner Palace Malice crossed the finish line.

The last big league game to last as long also involved the Mets, according to STATS. It came when they beat St. Louis 2-1 in 20 innings on April 17, 2010.

It was the longest game by far in the history of Citi Field, which opened in 2009, and it matched the longest in Marlins history — a 7-6 loss to the Cardinals in 20 innings on April 27, 2003.

Harvey and Miami’s prized rookie, Jose Fernandez, hooked up in a pitchers’ duel early. And when neither punchless lineup could break a 1-all tie, the only savior for both teams was that neither had played since Wednesday, so they had fresh arms in the bullpen.

By the 13th inning, the game had been turned over to a pair of starters: Miami’s Kevin Slowey and Shaun Marcum for the Mets. Both were originally scheduled to start Saturday before getting skipped when Friday night’s game was rained out.

REDS 4, CARDINALS 2
CINCINNATI • Mat Latos turned in seven solid innings and the Cincinnati Reds broke out of their slump.

Devin Mesoraco homered and drove in two runs, and Jay Bruce also homered as the Reds snapped a three-game losing streak and scored more than two runs against St. Louis for the first time in the last seven games between the teams.

Latos (6-0), who got the decision in Cincinnati’s last win over St. Louis on April 29, allowed eight hits and two runs with no walks and five strikeouts against a Cardinals team that went into the game leading the National League in hitting.

The Reds, who’d lost five of their last six games against St. Louis, scored four against St. Louis rookie left-hander Tyler Lyons (2-2). He gave up six hits and a walk with two strikeouts in 5 1-3 innings before a sellout crowd of 40,740 at Great American Ball Park.

Jonathan Broxton pitched a scoreless eighth and Aroldis Chapman allowed one hit and hit a batter in the ninth while earning his 16th save.

TWINS 4, NATIONALS 3, 11 INNINGS
WASHINGTON • Ryan

Doumit singled in the go-ahead run, and Joe Mauer homered, doubled and singled.

Josh Roenicke (2-1) pitched a scoreless 10th inning for the win and Glen Perkins retired Washington in the 11th for his 13th save.

The Twins, who were playing their first game in Washington since 1971, have won eight of 11.

Jayson Werth homered and former Twin Denard Span added three hits for Washington, which has lost two straight and six of eight.

Pinch hitter Chris Herrmann drew a walk off Craig Stammen (3-2) to open the 10th. Jamey Carroll bunted him to second and Mauer was intentionally walked. Doumit then hit a soft line drive to short center, scoring Hermann.

Trailing 3-2, the Nationals tied it against Twins starter Kevin Correia in the seventh.

PADRES 4, ROCKIES 2
DENVER • Kyle Blanks hit a two-run homer and Eric Stults tossed seven solid innings.

Everth Cabrera had three hits and stole two more bases, running his season total to a major league-leading 28.

Jeff Francis (2-4) struggled in his first start since coming off the disabled list with a strained left groin. He allowed four runs and six hits in four innings.

Stults (5-5) never really ran into trouble against his former team, giving up seven hits and two runs (one earned) for his first win in four starts.

PIRATES 6, CUBS 2
CHICAGO • A.J. Burnett pitched into the ninth inning and Pedro Alvarez and Russell Martin homered to lead the Pittsburgh Pirates to a 6-2 win over the Chicago Cubs on Saturday.

Burnett (4-6) gave up four hits and three walks with five strikeouts in 8 1-3 innings to improve to 5-0 in his career at Wrigley Field. He had a shutout until Alfonso Soriano’s two-run home run to left with one out in the ninth ended a string of 18 straight scoreless innings by Pirates pitchers.

BREWERS 4, PHILLIES 3
MILWAUKEE • Jean Segura homered and Jonathan Lucroy hit a tiebreaking RBI double in the sixth inning.

Domonic Brown hit his NL-leading 19th home run, and had a two-run double in the eighth to account for all of the Phillies’ runs.

NBA FINALS

Down 1-0 to Spurs, Heat Seek Some NBA Finals Fun

MIAMI (AP) • The NBA Finals. Just being here can be memorable — and miserable.

And surprise, it’s those supposedly stoic Spurs who are having more fun, while the South Beach bunch is a little grumpy and grouchy.

The Miami Heat may be on top of the basketball world, but there’s no joy unless they stay there.

“Playoffs ain’t fun, man. I’m sorry to bust anyone on the outside’s bubble,” Dwyane Wade said. “As a player in the playoffs, you have no joy until it’s over and you won. If you don’t win, you have no joy for a while.”

Down 1-0 after a record regular season that goes for naught without another title, the Heat can turn their moods around with a victory over San Antonio on Sunday night in Game 2.

Back in the finals for a third straight year, the Heat have lost some of the ability to enjoy the ride. With exorbitant expectations, all that matters is the destination.

But San Antonio, absent from this stage for six years, is soaking up what could be its last shot for Tim Duncan, Tony Parker and Manu Ginobili.

After all, Duncan is pretty ancient — at least, according to those wise-cracking Spurs.

“Older than dirt,” coach Gregg Popovich called him this week.

Parker listed him at age 50 — Duncan is actually 37 — and the repeated ribbing appears almost out of character for a franchise that was often considered the definition of basketball blandness.

“My friends and everybody on the team, we get like the funny Instagram doctored-up photos or jokes where they’re making fun of how old some of the people on our team are who shall remain nameless,” reserve Matt Bonner said. “And we get a kick out of that.”

Despite the notion they’re old, the Spurs are actually overall the younger, less-experienced team in these finals. Miami has nine players in their 30s to the six on the Spurs, and their Big Three and Bonner are the only Spurs to have played in the NBA Finals.

That makes it easier for the Spurs to enjoy this trip more than when they were the team expected to be here every year.

“We definitely are having fun,” Parker said. “I think we appreciate every moment. We don’t take anything for granted, because it’s been a long time. It’s been six years. Felt like forever. After the Memphis series, there was a lot of emotion.”

Heat veteran Shane Battier wasn’t exactly sold on the notion of this Spurs transformation into a happy-go-lucky group.

“Don’t believe them, first of all,” he said. “They are extreme competitors and they have a level of self-deprecation I think that is part of them, but don’t buy it for one second. Those guys are killers. They’re cut-throat and they will stomp on you if need be, and we’re the same way.”

“We appreciate the opportunity to play in the finals. Difficult to get here. Hardest thing you’ll do in this game is to try and win a championship, so we appreciate the opportunity and we want to make the most of it,” he said.

But he agreed with Wade that the playoffs aren’t fun.

“No, they’re not,” he said.

“They’re stimulating. You feel alive. I wouldn’t say fun, but there’s no other place I’d rather be. It’s kind of a misery you enjoy. You’re cranky, especially after a loss. You don’t like the other team. You’re just a general grouch, but it’s the time you feel most alive as a basketball player and there’s nothing like it. Once you taste it, you don’t want to live without it.”

It’s a grind, though, for a team that will be playing its 100th game of the season Sunday. Wade has battled a painful right knee for a while, Chris Bosh is in a shooting slump, and the minutes are adding up for LeBron James, who has played deep into June the last three years and then competed in the Olympics last year.

“It’s a toll for myself to go through what I’ve been through the last 2 1/2 years. But I’ve been blessed, I’ve been blessed to be able to be in three finals, I’ve been blessed to be a part of a great Olympic team and to play basketball, the game that I love,” James said.

the first inning, on an RBI single by Zack Terry, who later plated on a double steal play.

“We didn’t play like we wanted to, or like we can, obviously,” said Minico coach Jared Price. “But we learned a lot and saw a lot. I think the guys figured out a lot. Wood bats are different for us... It was a challenge for them, but I saw a lot of good things and we had some progress.”

Minico travels to the Poky Tournament next Thursday through Saturday.

HELPER 16, BURLEY 2
Playing without three of their regular starters, the Burley Green Sox tripped up in a six-inning run-rule loss to Helper, Utah.

Leadoff hitter RJ Nevarez scored both Burley runs and finished 2-for-3 with a double. Jalen Ovalle had a base hit and an RBI.

The Green Sox host the Pocatello Rebels on Tuesday.

Palace Malice Scores Upset in Belmont Stakes

NEW YORK (AP) • The two Hall of Fame jockeys were just about nose to nose as their horses hit the middle of the final turn of the Belmont Stakes.

Gary Stevens, aboard Preakness winner Oxbow, was going to relinquish the lead to the hard-charging Palace Malice, and he knew it. He glanced over to his right and looked at good friend Mike Smith and told him: “You go on with him big boy, you’re moving better than me.”

Was he ever.

Palace Malice seized the lead with a quarter-mile to go Saturday in the final leg of the Triple Crown and ran off to a 3 1/4-length victory over Oxbow at Belmont Park, with Kentucky Derby winner Orb another 1 3/4 lengths back in third.

“Mike rode a superb race,” Stevens said. “Midway around the turn, I said, ‘Well maybe! But I have ridden long enough to know that he (Oxbow) was going to walk home. To finish second, I am really surprised.”

Palace Malice, who came into the race with only one win in seven starts, vindicated trainer Todd Pletcher’s support of the 3-year-old colt despite a 12th place finish in the Derby.

“It’s huge. It’s huge,” Pletcher said about his second

Belmont win. “We always felt like he had a big one in him. We were just waiting for it to finally develop. I told (owner) Mr. (Cot) Campbell this horse is training unbelievable. I know he’s got a big run, we just need to put it all together.”

The Belmont concludes a Triple Crown season in which hopes were high that Orb could break the 35-year drought without a sweep of the classics.

IF JUNE 9 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY: You have your ducks all lined up in a row n July when you're capable of making sound decisions about finances, career and business. In August, life takes a turn for the better and although you may have a tendency to go to extravagant lengths to please others, you might make an improvement in your overall situation. This is the best time to launch important plans or ask for favors. Watch your p's and q's in November and December, when it will be difficult to charm your way out of difficulties and ambitions hamper your ability to bounce back from challenges.

HOROSCOPE

Jeraldine Saunders

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Affirm your positive attitude through affirmations. Instead of allowing worry to flourish, focus on ways to maintain a state of health and abundance. Avoid making waves on the financial front this week.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Grab a tennis racket, a Frisbee or a friend for a refreshing day in the great outdoors. You may have more energy than usual to tackle cleaning or physical endeavors during the upcoming week.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Dreams can come true, it can happen to you. It might be a good time to gain the ear of an ally or supporter at work. Listen to friendly advice and embrace opportunities that come your way in the week ahead.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Fleeting moments that involve fun or kindness can add up to a treasure trove of good will that will last long after this week is done. You may be aware of power struggles but helpless to counteract them.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Adventure stokes ardor. A romantic partner may need reassurances this week, so hold hands as you wade through a stream or visit new spots. Loved ones are looking for encouragement to explore unique places.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Keep on trucking. Energy levels remain high during the week ahead. Complete innovative projects and pursue personal educational objectives. Don't sign a new contract or engage in new investments.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You aren't weak when you are wise. If you made a blueprint for action ahead of time, there was probably a very good reason, so follow through on those plans in the upcoming week. Stick to your guns.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Learn the secret of success. Use traditional methods as long as feasible and reach for the new when it is a better option. Don't give in to the urge to spend more than you have in the week ahead.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Your heart is in the right place, even if others don't always appreciate your easygoing outlook. Go plant a few flowers or groom the dog in your spare time. Avoid making new investments this week.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Life may give you the experience you need to achieve your ambitions in the week ahead. You could be wiser than usual about money, but still subject to minor jealousies or power struggles in a relationship.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Wish upon a star. Some of your dreams can become reality in the week ahead, especially if you take advantage of opportunities. Benevolent supporters will be willing to assist you in achieving a worthy objective.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Speak what's on your mind and in your heart. There is no reason to screen your calls, as anyone who speaks with you will be pleased by what you say. Make presentations in the early part of the week.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE®

Bobby Wolff

Dear Mr. Wolff:
What is the range for responding one no-trump to a simple overcall in a major? Should it be forcing, showing 6-12 points (like the response to an opening major-suit bid), or is it more tightly defined?

Closing In, Dover, Del.

ANSWER: The call is traditionally played as nonforcing but mildly constructive, say 8-12 points without a fit. Overcaller will generally correct to his suit with six and will invite game with a decent 14 and up in high cards. New suits by opener are natural, jumps are invitational, and a cue-bid is forcing for one round.

Dear Mr. Wolff:

Where do you stand on leading aggressively from four or five cards to one honor, as opposed to passively from weaker or shorter holdings when faced with a blind auction, such as one heart - three hearts - four hearts?

Marking Time, Naples, Fla.

ANSWER: Assuming that you have decided not to play for ruffs, I always start out by looking for a sequence to lead from. When in doubt, I will generally lead from honors unless I know dummy is weak and declarer strong. On the given auction, there is a case for going passive, leading from three or four small cards if you had no obvious alternative, but I'm aggressive by instinct.

Dear Mr. Wolff:

I know about New Minor Forcing in response to a rebid of one no-trump as a way to discover our partnership's degree of major-suit fit. Can something similar be used after a jump rebid of two no-trump, or in two-over-one auctions?

Digging for Treasure, Phoenix, Ariz.

ANSWER: The two auctions you mention cannot be considered in parallel. In a two-over-one sequence everything is natural. But many experts these days play that responder's rebid of the new minor after opener's jump to two no-trump can indeed be used artificially. It searches for a fit in the unbid major or for three-card support for the bid major. You can find out more on Richard Pavlicek's website at rbridge.net/7g19.htm#17

Dear Mr. Wolff:

Should I consider raising partner after his opening bid is doubled via some artificial responses? Is this necessary, or sensible — and if so, what should I bid?

Artificial Sweetener, Woodland Hills, Calif.

ANSWER: When your partner's major-suit opening is doubled, a response of two no-trump should show a limit raise or better in partner's suit, while a jump to three of partner's suit is more preemptive than strong. This convention has no downside — so long as you remember it! When you are happy with that, you might go one step further: Play a two-club response as artificial (7-9 with three trumps) and a direct raise as 4-6. Think of it as mini-Drury!

Dear Mr. Wolff:

I was playing with a relatively new partner and held ♠ K-Q, ♥ Q-6, ♦ A-K-J-9-7-4, ♣ A-8-4. My partner opened one diamond and I produced an inverted raise. She passed the first hurdle by not passing, but over her two-no-trump call, what should I have done next?

Poor Little Rich Girl, Little Rock, Ark.

ANSWER: When partner has shown a minimum balanced hand, then after the inverted raise, I like to play that responder can sign off in three of the trump suit, show shortage in a major by bidding it, or make an artificial call of the other minor to show slam interest, even facing 12-14 balanced. Now if partner signs off in three no-trump, I'd make one more effort with a quantitative call of four no-trump. Frankly, though, this hand is nearly worth a drive to slam facing a one-diamond opening.

DEAR ABBY: I host all of the holiday parties and dinner parties for my family. Whenever I have my parents over, my father insists on helping himself to the top layer of every casserole. He'll scrape all the cheese off the potatoes, the crunchy onion topping off the green bean casserole, etc., leaving just the bare vegetables for everyone else.

I have asked Dad not to do it because it is inconsiderate of the other guests. I can see people are bothered by it, so now they make a beeline to the buffet so they can beat him to it.

Dad got offended when I talked to him about it, but he continues to do it. Mom refuses to get involved, and I have said all I can say. What to do?

— BURNED UP IN ILLINOIS

DEAR BURNED UP: A guest who grabs all the goodies at a dinner party is a hog. Because your father refuses to change his behavior, I will offer a few suggestions: The first is to alter your menu to avoid serving casserole dishes. If that's not possible, make your father his own separate casserole with his name on it, so he can have it all to himself. Or plate the food in the kitchen and stop serving it buffet-style.

DEAR ABBY: Over the past few years, as social media has become more popular, I have noticed a trend among many people. They now favor that form of communication over personal human interaction. This is especially true of my girlfriend of five years.

We have the normal relationship problems I feel could be addressed, but from the moment she gets home from work she's in front of the computer playing Facebook games, posting status updates or messaging "friends." She sits there for hours, lost in her virtual world. We rarely talk anymore, and when we do it turns into an argument because I'm trying to discuss what I see as a serious problem.

The Internet and social media are great tools for bringing worlds together, if they are not abused. But for many people, I think, social media is doing more harm than good. It has depersonalized human contact and has the potential to destroy relationships and isolate individuals.

I'm interested in your opinion and any advice you can give me on helping my girlfriend understand my concerns.

— ALONE IN THE REAL WORLD

DEAR ALONE: People cannot be two places at once. When relationships aren't nurtured, they wither. If this has been going on for an extended period, then it's time you give your girlfriend a wake-up call: You feel abandoned. By spending more time in the virtual world than in the real one, she is neglecting her relationship with you.

Ask her if she would be willing to work on a compromise so that she spends time with you. If she can't do that, and the Internet is giving her everything she needs, then you should find a lady who is willing to give you more of what YOU need, which is undivided attention.

DEAR ABBY: If a person compliments me on my hair, am I obliged to reveal that it isn't my natural color? I am a henna redhead, and it looks very natural, but my friend who is a natural redhead says I have to fess up. She will even tell people "for me" that my color is "fake." What should I do?

— HENNA REDHEAD IN NEW YORK

DEAR HENNA REDHEAD: Start spending more time with blondes and brunettes than with a redhead who doesn't know when to keep her mouth shut. She is jealous of the attention you're getting.
