Struggling Charter School Pins Hopes on New Administrator, $700,000 Grant

BY JULIE WOOTTON
jwootton@magicvalley.com

TWIN FALLS • Administrators at Wings Charter Middle School hope that a $700,000 grant will help them turn the school around. For the past two years, the school has received a one-star rating from the Idaho State Department of Education, which is the lowest rating possible. There are only 22 schools in Idaho that received a one-star rating. Officials at the charter school – which opened in 2009 – found out about the grant from the Idaho State Department of Education in a letter dated July 29. “There’s a lot of opportunity with that grant to move our school forward in the direction we need to go,” administrator Kristy Oberg said. School officials requested $492,000 in grant funding, she said. But they’ll end up receiving a lot more, $703,349.55. In order to receive a school improvement grant “schools have shown over multiple years that

States Consider Regulation of Drones in US Skies

BY LISA CORNWELL
Associated Press

CINCINNATI • Thousands of civilian drones are expected in U.S. skies within a few years and concerns they could be used to spy on Americans are fueling legislative efforts in several states to regulate the unmanned aircraft. Varied legislation involving drones was introduced this year in more than 40 states. Many of those bills seek to regulate law enforcement’s use of information-gathering drones by requiring search warrants. Some bills have stalled or are still pending, but at least six states now require warrants, and Virginia has put a two-year moratorium on drone use by law enforcement to provide more time to develop guidelines. Domestic drones often resemble the small radio-controlled model airplanes and helicopters flown by hobbyists and can help monitor floods and other emergencies, survey crops and assist search-and-rescue operations. But privacy advocates are worried because the aircraft can also carry cameras and other equipment to capture images of people and property. “Right now police can’t come into your house without a search warrant,” said Ohio Rep. Rex Damschroder, who has proposed drone regulations. “But with drones, they can come right over your backyard and take pictures.” Since 2006, the Federal Aviation Administration has approved more than 1,400 requests for drone use from government agencies and public universities wanting to operate the unmanned aircraft for purposes including research and public safety. Since 2008, approval had been granted to at least 80 law enforcement agencies. But the FAA estimates that as many as 7,500 small commercial unmanned aircraft could be operating domestically within the next few years. A federal law enacted last year requires the FAA to develop a plan for safely integrating the aircraft into U.S. airspace by September 2015. Damschroder’s proposed bill

Twin Falls Council to Approve Tentative 2014 Budget

BY KIMBERLEE KRUESI
kkruesi@magicvalley.com

TWIN FALLS • The city’s proposed $52.9 million budget for fiscal year 2014 is its largest ever, but that doesn’t mean rates are poised to go sky high. In the draft budget, water, sanitation and sewer rates will increase slightly, but Twin Falls property taxes are expected to decrease for the average homeowner, said City Manager Travis Rothweiler. That means the overall cost to live in Twin Falls for most citizens will go up $4.84 per month if the budget is approved. Next year’s budget is a sign that the economy is improving but not completely recovered, Rothweiler said. The city is generating more revenue from building permits, for example, and the amount of taxable value has gone up. Yet city officials have received pleas from citizens to not raise their rates too high because they still are struggling, Rothweiler said. Keeping rate changes low was part of the city staff’s effort to help those who continue to feel the effects of the recession. Overall, the city’s proposed budget is balanced and uses resources responsibly, Rothweiler said. “The City of Twin Falls is financially sound,” he said. Here is a breakdown of key items in the proposed budget: Property taxes: For the first time in several years, the city’s residential property values have increased. So city officials are proposing a decrease in the property tax rate. The current tax is $7.71 per $1,000 of property value; the draft budget proposed a decrease to $7.41. What does this mean for you? The median home value in Twin Falls is $142,300, so if you qualify for the homeowner’s exemption, you’ll pay $1.86 less in taxes per month, or $22.34 less per year. So this year’s total property tax on the median home comes to $526.51. Water rate: Early budget proposals called for a 4 percent increase to the water rate. City officials decided to adjust the arsenic bond fee from $11.15 to $10.75, though, so the average customer will see only a 2.2 percent rate increase.

Tablets Become More Common at Construction Sites

BOISE (AP) • Boise State University professor Casey Cline isn't waiting any longer to make the students in his construction management class more technologically savvy and ready for the professional world.

Starting this fall, all freshman enrolled in his class will be required to use iPads. The devices are essential, he says, to the new way of managing projects on site without the traditional paper and pens, from uploading data reports and photos to accounting for changes in job specs and safety materials.

"We saw the wave coming and want our students to be prepared," Cline told The Idaho Business Review.

Professionals in the construction field have been relatively slow to adopt new communications technology such as iPads and other tablet-style computers. But many and the industry in Idaho have realized recently that using tablets at job sites saves money and time.

Dan Drinkward, operations manager for Hoffman Construction, a company involved in the $70 million Jack's Urban Meeting Place project in downtown Boise, said 15 years ago, using a handheld computer while on a construction site was unheard of. Now, Hoffman's crews and the project's team of subcontractors rely on them, he said.

"They are set up so our subcontractors and their staff can access a whole variety of information in the field without having to stop in the office," Drinkward said.

Some construction managers have been persuaded to adopt the new technology by iPad applications that are geared specifically to the construction industry. The apps are user-friendly and have changed the way work is conducted on the site, Cline said.

"Some construction firms I work with are going completely paperless. Crews can upload building information models right from the field. It's incredible," he said.

Boat Racing Legend Plans Return to Coeur d'Alene

BY SCOTT MABEN
The Spokesman-Review

COEUR D'ALENE (AP) • When the thunderboats return to Lake Coeur d'Alene this summer, a champion of the sport's piston-powered era will be back on the water, if not actually in the driver's seat.

Billy Schumacher, of Seattle, won an impressive string of Unlimited Class hydroplane races in the 1960s and '70s and claimed back-to-back national championships.

Now 70, he's on the race circuit again as a team owner with wife Jane. Their boat, Miss Beacon Plumbing, is headed to Coeur d'Alene for the long-awaited return of the Diamond Cup races over Labor Day weekend.

It will be something of a homecoming for Schumacher: He's the reigning Diamond Cup champion.

Growing up on the shore of Lake Washington, he began racing boats at age 9 with the encouragement of his father, a baker. As a teenager, "Billy the Kid" would make his way to the Lake City to watch the boats roar across the lake off Independence Point.

His first Unlimited Class race was the 1961 Diamond Cup, when he was just 18. The rookie was back in '64 in the $ Bill, a perennial tailender.

But in 1968, the 10th and final year of racing in Coeur d'Alene, Schumacher screamed to a first-place finish in the renowned Miss Bardahl, dubbed the "Checkerboard Comet" for its black-and-yellow paint scheme.

Even after 45 years, Schumacher recalls the win in sharp detail.

"That was an interesting race because in the final heat it actually started to get dark. I think when we came into the pits it was dark," Schumacher said. "The only thing that enabled us to see was the moon. While I was racing, it was really a pretty sight."

News accounts attributed the delay to strong winds that Sunday evening. Referees and course judges strained to identify the boats by their silhouettes.

"I got a really good start and on the second turn I turned around to look where everybody was, and I saw all the boats behind me," Schumacher said. "And because it was dusk, you could see the fire coming out of the exhaust on the boats and you could see the moonlit rooster tails."

Seven years earlier he piloted a much slower boat on Lake Coeur d'Alene.

"The Cutie Radio would only go about 110 mph, I think," he recalled. "But everybody had problems and I wound up with a third place. That was the very first Unlimited race I was ever in."

they've struggled academically," said Melissa McGrath, spokeswoman for the Idaho State Department of Education.

Grants are federally funded, but schools apply at the state level.

"Basically, in applying to the state, they have to show their plan for how they'll turn the school around," McGrath said.

Only Title I schools with a one-star rating from the state are eligible for grant funding.

Even though it's a three-year grant, schools only receive one year of funding at a time and are required to submit documentation every year.

The requirement is designed to make sure a school's plan is still working, McGrath said.

Eight Idaho schools — including Wings — received a school improvement grant within the last year.

Changes at the School

At Wings, part of the grant money will be used to purchase classroom sets of iPads, implement intervention curriculum and hire a part-time behavioral specialist.

During the upcoming school year, there will be a lot of changes with academic instruction, Oberg said.

The latest ratings announced Thursday are set to stay in place for two years as the state transitions to a new standardized test, which will replace the Idaho Standards Achievement Tests.

Oberg said she believes the school's rating will increase

"Most importantly, we want to instill a positive image of school for our students."

Kristy Oberg, administrator in a couple of years. And despite the low mark, she said a lot of great things are happening at Wings.

Curriculum at the school focuses on reading, writing, speaking and listening across all instructional areas, Oberg said.

There's already a lot of cross collaboration, she said. For example, students might work on one large research project in multiple classes.

In the past, some parents were concerned by the lack of a consistent student discipline policy, Oberg said, and with the lack of access to an administrator when concerns arose.

After Letha Blick stepped down as administrator after last school year, Oberg was hired and started July 1.

Oberg spent 10 years as a special education teacher in Kimberly, Jerome, Lewiston and Seattle.

She said she was attracted to Wing's mission when the school opened. She became a teacher at the school in 2009 — the school's first year.

As the school grew, Oberg served as an assistant administrator.

Oberg said she values transparency as an administrator and wants to have an open door policy.

In order to qualify for the school improvement grant, Wings is using the "turn-around model," which basically means they're restructuring staffing at the school.

Open teaching positions will be left vacant, Oberg said, and they want to get back to the school's roots as a small, close-knit environment.

In the future, an issue on the horizon at Wings is that the lease on the current school building on North College Road only lasts for another year.

A decision hasn't been made about whether to purchase or lease a new building, Oberg said.

What's Unique about Wings?

Wings Charter Middle School helps students who aren't successful in other school settings, Oberg said. The school draws students from around the Magic Valley.

About 70 students are currently enrolled, but Oberg said they hope to get numbers up to 110.

Wings isn't an alternative school or special education school, she said.

The school provides something different for students who need a fresh start, Oberg said.

Wings Charter Middle School focuses on supporting students academically, socially and emotionally, Oberg said.

"Most importantly, we want to instill a positive image of school for our students," she said.

Once students arrive, the purpose is to help redirect them to be prepared for high school, Oberg said.

When the school opened in 2009, there were four teachers and 65 students.

The next year, the enrollment nearly doubled and more teachers were hired.

Enrollment continued to grow in the school's third year, with 30-40 students transferring into Wings in the middle of the school year.

With a lot more students and new teachers, nothing was put into place to keep unity in the school, Oberg said, noting there was high tension.

Class sizes grew beyond what the school's initial plan, she said, which was problematic because students were coming for the tight-knit atmosphere.

Budget

What does this mean for you? The average household uses 18,000 gallons of water per month. That amount would cost $1.03 more a month.

Sewer and Sanitation: Voters passed a $38 million bond in May to improve and expand the city's wastewater treatment facility. This means sewer rates will increase 27 percent as the city works to pay back the debt. Sanitation is expected to go up 2.8 percent.

What does this mean for you? A household that produces 8,000 gallons of wastewater a month will pay $5.21 a month more for sewer service, or $62.52 extra annually. The sanitation increase would cost 46 cents a month, or $5.52 annually.

would prohibit law enforcement agencies from using drones to get evidence or other information without a search warrant. Exceptions would include credible risks of terrorist attacks or the need for swift action to prevent imminent harm to life or property or to prevent suspects from escaping or destroying evidence.

The Republican said he isn't against drones but worries they could threaten constitutional protections against unreasonable searches and seizures.

"I don't want the government just going up and down every street snooping," Damschroder said.

The Ohio House speaker's office says it's too soon to comment on the chances for passage. But similar legislation has been enacted in Florida, Tennessee, Idaho, Montana, Texas and Oregon.

The sponsor of Tennessee's bill said the law was necessary to ensure that residents can maintain their right to privacy.

"Abuses of privacy rights that we have been seeing from law enforcement recently show a need for this legislation," said Republican Sen. Mae Beavers.

Beavers and Damschroder modeled their bills after one signed into law this year by Florida Gov. Rick Scott, who said then that "we shouldn't have unwarranted surveillance."

But the industry's professional association says regulating law enforcement's use of unmanned aircraft is unnecessary and shortsighted. It wants guidelines covering manned aircraft applied to unmanned aircraft.

Sikh Temple Attack United Victim's Son, Ex-racist

BY DINESH RAMDE

Associated Press

OAK CREEK, Wis. • Six weeks after a white supremacist gunned down Pardeep Kaleka's father and five others at a Sikh temple last year, Kaleka was skeptical when a former skinhead reached out and invited him to dinner.

But Kaleka accepted, and he's grateful he did. Since then, the grieving son and repentant racist have formed an unlikely alliance, teaming up to preach a message of peace throughout Milwaukee. In fact, they've grown so close that they got matching tattoos on their palms — the numbers 8-5-12, the date the gunman opened fire at a Milwaukee-area Sikh temple before killing himself minutes later.

It wasn't easy for Kaleka to meet Arno Michaelis, a 42-year-old who admits he contributed so heavily to the white-power movement that he might have helped influence the shooter. Kaleka knows Michaelis' history — his lead singing in a white supremacist band, the white-power and swastika tattoos, the countless fights and more than a dozen arrests.

But he also saw the good work Michaelis has done since he quit the racist movement in the mid-1990s. Kaleka, 37, wanted his father's death to be a catalyst for peace, and he saw in Michaelis a partner whose story could reinforce the message that it's possible to turn hate into love.

"We were both hoping ... we could take something tragic and turn it into something positive — a learning experience for the entire community," Kaleka said. "We were both on that same mission, in our different ways."

Michaelis had written a book called "My Life After Hate," in which he describes how he lashed out at the world starting in kindergarten and how the birth of his daughter made him realize he needed to change. He also works with kids on community service projects.

Kaleka still has lingering fears that Michaelis might relapse and return to his old ways. But as he's gotten to know Michaelis, he says the boulder of doubt has become a pebble.

Michaelis, an information technology consultant, understands the skepticism. He knows he hurt so many people during his seven years in the white-supremacy movement that his sincerity will always be questioned, which is why he works even harder to regain people's trust.

The two men have teamed up to create Serve2Unite, a community group that works to counter violence with peace. Kaleka, Michaelis and others visit middle schools and high schools, where Kaleka describes how gunman Wade Michael Page walked into the Sikh Temple of Wisconsin last year and killed six people he didn't know. Then Michaelis describes how the gunman's white-supremacist background was nearly identical to his own.

Invariably, the children are riveted, Kaleka said. Afterward several will come up and ask how they can get involved.

Kaleka and Michaelis look nothing alike. Kaleka is a clean-cut Indian who teaches high school social studies. Michaelis, who's white, has both arms covered in tattoos that mask earlier racist messages. But as they sat together in the temple recently, just down the hallway from the bedroom where Kaleka's father was shot, they seemed like brothers, insulting each other good-naturedly and arguing over who was more handsome.

That brotherhood began at their first dinner. Sitting in his car outside the restaurant, Kaleka watched Michaelis walk inside and wondered if he was crazy to be meeting with a former skinhead. Still, he summoned the courage to do it.

Michaelis immediately asked about a bandage on Kaleka's eye, the temporary remnant of a mishap Kaleka suffered while bathing his daughter.

"There was no, 'Hi, how you doing?'" He went straight from seeing me to showing concern," Kaleka said. After Kaleka told him what happened, Michaelis admitted that he too was a klutz, and a friendship was born.

Michaelis doesn't shy away from discussing his past. He grew up in an alcoholic, emotionally cold household. He began to rebel as early as kindergarten, bullying other kids on the bus and picking fights on the playground. He eventually got into the white-power movement for the shock value, but the more he associated with haters, the more he began to hate.

But hating was exhausting. He couldn't watch Green Bay Packers games because black and white players were playing together. He couldn't watch TV because Hollywood was a Jewish conspiracy. He loved "Seinfeld" but he had to record it on a videotape labeled "Amber's second birthday party" so his white-power friends wouldn't know he thought a Jew was hilarious.

Eventually, the combination of his daughter's birth and a friend dying in a street fight was the catalyst for him to move on.

His past never really left him, though. When he heard that the gunman who killed six people at a Sikh temple was a white supremacist, he lay awake that night agonizing that the gunman might have been someone he'd recruited into the white-power movement or inspired as the lead singer of the hate band Centurion. It turns out he hadn't known Page but he still felt responsible for his actions.

"We were both white-power skinheads. We were both in white-power bands," Michaelis said. "In just about every sense, I used to be him."

That's why his message now is one of peace. He tells kids they're not being tough when they counter aggression — what takes real strength is walking away. He acknowledges that his younger self would have ignored that message, but he still hopes to make a difference with a new generation.

Connecting with children became so much easier after he and Kaleka teamed up. When kids hear from someone who used to be a violent hater, and then from someone whose father fell victim to that very hatred, the message is sobering.

"We realized the reason this (temple shooting) happens is that we magnify the differences between people. We don't magnify the similarities," Kaleka said. "So one of our main goals is to magnify those similarities and say, 'Hey, I'm not so different from you. So let's come together in a common cause.'"

1953-2013

Charles (Chuck) Kendall who was born on June 16, 1953 to Clyde and Verna Kendall in Ontario, Oregon passed away August 1, 2013 at Intermountain Medical Center in Murray, Utah. He had fought a long battle with congestive heart failure.

Chuck came to Rupert with his parents in 1956. He then attended school in Paul and Minico.

With an unprecedented love for horses Chuck left home for the Cowboy Lifestyle. He was taught how to shoe horses from age 14 which became his profession leading him through his accomplished life. He worked on ranches until his early 20’s. He was a very gifted Saddle Bronc rider. He then became a member of the PRCA competing in Team Roping. To add to his healthy habit of horses, he became a noteworthy judge.

When Chuck returned from his rodeo adventures, he decided to take after his father to farm and race horses. His passion was chariot racing, a sport in which he was exceptionally skilled at. He became the President of the Chariot Racing Association at both the district and state level. He was helpful at reviving the Magic Valley Chariot Racing Association. He qualified for the State and World Divisions numerous times; he won the World (division 2) with his favored team in 2002. He will be remembered for his gate starting abilities.

Later in life, Chuck followed his best friend (hunting and fishing partner), Karen Ferguson, around while she coached teams and taught at Minico. He watched almost every game or competition at Minico while Karen took score.

Kendall also supported his nieces and nephews devotedly by attending rodeos. Chuck was a witty prankster who always teased his relatives and friends. You could never do one up on him or say the wrong thing without him catching on and replying with a smart remark.

Chuck had two children; Celeste and Tell (Shannon) Kendall. He is survived by his six grandchildren, who he loved to be with, and his best friend/love of his life, Karen Ferguson. He is also survived by his parents and six brothers and sisters: Clyde and Verna Kendall, Jerry Kendall, Gayle (Jerry) Gorrel, Stan (Connie) Kendall, Rod (Julie) Kendall, Polly (Paul) Carney and

Family Survived Flash Flood in Montana Ghost Town

HAMILTON, Mont. (AP) • A survivor of a flash flood that destroyed part of a Montana ghost town last month says she and her family are lucky to be alive.

The Ravalli Republic reports Christi Skelton of Corvallis, Mont., was vacationing with family in Bannack State Park on July 17 when a torrent of muddy, icy water came hurtling through the historic ghost town.

She says she was holding on to a fencepost with her 9-year-old cousin when a building collapsed and came toward them. She let go of the fence post, rather than be struck by the building. In the ordeal, she suffered severe cuts on her knees.

Skelton says it was an entire building coming toward her and she had the choice of getting caught underneath it or casting her fate with the current. She chose the latter — and survived.

“I did not want to get stuck underneath it because I knew we wouldn’t get up,” Skelton said. “I didn’t want it to knock us out because then the worst could happen. And so I just told him, ‘Ok, you hold on to me, and I’ll hold on to you, because we’re going down.’ I didn’t know if he could hear me, because it was so loud, like a raging river. And then we did. We let go, and let the water take us down.”

After the flood, the popular tourist destination will be closed for several more weeks, at least, Montana parks officials have said. The park’s historic Assay

Office was destroyed, boardwalks were torn out and other buildings damaged. Clean-up and repair operations have begun.

Skelton says the day started warm, though dark clouds were building in the sky.

“A lot of family was in town from California visiting,” she recalls. “We go hunting and camping at Bannack several times a year, every year, so we wanted to take them to the ghost town.”

It began raining, then hailing. At least three-quarters of an inch of rain fell in a half hour, and the normally dry gullies that drain into the town were beginning to swell with water. Shrugging off what she thought was just a summer shower, Skelton and her four kids, along with her sister, aunt and three other cousins, decided to brave the rain.

The group barely had time to start sprinting before the waist-high wall of churning brown water caught up with them.

“It was so immediate, so fast,” Skelton said. “It was terrifying. One of my daughters and a cousin got the farthest up, and the water knocked them down but they were able to get back up. They didn’t get swept down. My son and another cousin were right behind them, and they did get swept down. They were swept off the street and down to one of the buildings below.”

Eventually, however, everybody made it out of the water.

Hall of Fame DT Art Donovan Dead at 89

BY DAVID GINSBURG

AP Sports Writer

BALTIMORE • Art Donovan, the lineman whose hilarious stories about his football career enabled him to maintain his popularity long after his election into the Pro Football Hall of Fame, died Sunday night. He was 89.

Donovan died at 7:20 p.m. at Stella Maris Hospice in Baltimore, according to Kevin Byrne, senior vice president of public and community relations for the Baltimore Ravens.

Donovan made a name for himself as a feisty defensive tackle for the Baltimore Colts, helping the team to world championships in 1958 and 1959. He also spent single seasons with the New York Yanks and Dallas Texans in a career that lasted from 1950 through 1961.

“We lost a friend, one of the finest men and one of the greatest characters we were fortunate to meet in this community and in this business,” Ravens owner Steve Bisciotti said. “Baltimore is now without one of its best and someone who was a foundation for the tremendous popularity of football in our area. The world is not as bright tonight because we lost someone who could make us all smile.”

Voted into the Hall of Fame in 1968, Donovan was an outstanding lineman and an even better storyteller. Long after his career was over, Donovan made a living on the talk-show circuit, weaving yarns about the NFL’s good old days — as he put it, “When men were, well, men.”

Donovan was much like Bob Uecker, who also became popular on late-night talk shows through his stories about sports. But Uecker’s game was baseball, and his schtick dealt with his limited abilities. Donovan performed on the football field as well as anyone at his position, even though he once said the only weight he ever lifted was a beer can.

“Some of the greatest football ever played by a defensive tackle was played by Art Donovan,” said Hall of Fame center Jim Ringo, who died in 2007. “He was one of the greatest people I played against all my life.”

Donovan played in the 1958 championship game between the Colts and New York Giants, a contest that was decided in overtime and ultimately tabbed by some football historians as “The Greatest Game Ever Played.” The winner’s share was $4,700; the most Donovan ever earned in one season was $22,000.

But Donovan got a million dollars’ worth of memories and more than enough material for storytelling. Once, he filled a hotel shower stall with water and went for a dip. Things went swimmingly until the shower door burst open, flooding his room and the one below it.

Donovan had a thousand more stories like that, many of which were chronicled in his autobiography, appropriately titled, “Fatso.” Donovan liked to say he was a light eater — “When it got light, I started eating.”

He was hardly particular about what he ate (or drank), which could explain why he spent much of his life hovering around 300 pounds, although the playing weight of the 6-foot-3 Donovan was listed at 265.

“I’ve never been a gourmet eater,” he wrote. “Kosher hot dogs, cheeseburgers, pizza, baloney, and a couple of cases of Schlitz are all I’d need on a desert isle.”

Donovan’s father was Arthur J. Donovan Sr., arguably the most famous fight referee of all time. The elder Donovan was the third man in the ring at 19 of Joe Louis’ title fights and some 150 championship bouts in all.

When the younger Donovan grew up and left the tough New York neighborhood of his youth, he fought in World War II and played college football at Notre Dame and Boston College. While he was on the football field, he would just as soon step on a guy’s hand than shake it.

Off the field, however, he was nothing more than a big teddy bear.

The late John Steadman, a sportswriter for The (Baltimore) Sun who covered the Colts in their glory years, once said, “Art is a tremendous example for everyone, a wonderful Santa Claus-type individual.”

Indeed, Donovan often played the role of Saint Nick at the team’s annual Christmas party. His good cheer was no act.

“Wherever Artie goes, people always crowd around him and he makes them laugh,” former Colt Dick Syzmanski once said. “Isn’t that a gift?”

Donovan broke into professional football in 1950 with the Colts, who folded after his rookie season. He played with the Yanks in 1951 and Texans in 1952 before the Dallas franchise moved to Baltimore and became the second version of the Colts.

San Diego Mayor Begins Two-week Absence for Therapy

BY ELLIOT SPAGAT AND JULIE WATSON

Associated Press

SAN DIEGO • Therapists say admitting one has a problem is the first step toward recovery. For San Diego Mayor Bob Filner that could be tricky.

The first-term mayor and former congressman starts two weeks of intensive therapy Monday while facing a sexual harassment lawsuit and calls for his resignation amid a flurry of allegations that he groped women for years.

Even as he undergoes treatment, Filner is set to be grilled by lawyers under oath this week in a lawsuit brought by his former communications director that claims he asked her to work without panties, told her he wanted to see her naked and dragged her around in a headlock while whispering in her ear.

Neither Filner nor his office has released details about his therapy or its location. Filner is picking up the tab for the treatment.

Filner’s accusers, his one-time supporters and voters have expressed skepticism that any two-week program is an appropriate remedy for what Filner himself has described as years of inappropriate behavior toward women. Longtime therapists also questioned how much progress could be made.

“It is pie-in-the-sky to think that in two weeks anyone could be a new man,” said Helen Friedman, a St. Louis psychologist who has treated compulsive sexual behavior for 30 years, though she said it was a good start.

Success will depend on how far the 70-year-old Filner goes in acknowledging his problems, experts said.

“Typically in the first few sessions you have to find someone you really trust,” said Lilli Friedland, a Beverly Hills psychologist who advises business executives on sexual harassment. “Can I open up with all my dirty laundry, and is this person expert enough?” It takes a number of sessions and visits to establish that trust.”

Ohio Killer Set for Execution Found Hanged in Cell

BY THOMAS J. SHEERAN

Associated Press

CLEVELAND • A man condemned to death for fatally stabbing a neighbor during a Cleveland burglary was found hanged in his cell Sunday just days before his Wednesday execution.

Billy Slagle, 44, was found at about 5 a.m. at the Chillicothe Correctional Institution south of Columbus and was declared dead within the hour, prison spokeswoman JoEllen Smith said. “He was in his cell alone. No other inmates suspected to be involved,” Smith said in an email. “It does appear to be a suicide.”

Under regular prison policy, he was scheduled to be placed under pre-execution watch Sunday morning but “was not yet placed under constant watch,” Smith said.

Slagle’s defense team was shocked and saddened at the news and had no clue he might commit suicide, attorney Vicki Werneke said.

“We were still litigating in court and had hoped that the execution would have been stopped. There was oral argument scheduled for Monday afternoon,” she told The Associated Press in an email.

An autopsy will be conducted Monday, according to Mike Ratliff, chief investigator for the Ross County coroner. He said the case was under investigation and no initial findings could be provided.

Slagle was sentenced in 1988 to die for the stabbing of Mari Anne Pope, who was killed while two young children she was watching were in the house.

In a rare move, the prosecutor in Cleveland asked the Ohio Parole Board to spare Slagle. Cuyahoga County Prosecutor Tim McGinty said jurors today, with the option of life without parole, would be unlikely to sentence Slagle to death.

The parole board and Gov. John Kasich both rejected mercy for Slagle.

McGinty declined comment through a spokesman.

Last week, Slagle’s attorney argued that a jury never got the chance to hear the full details of his troubled childhood.

The attorneys, arguing for a new trial and to delay his execution, said that information met requirements for asking for a new trial, which normally must happen within four months of a conviction.

Slagle was “unavoidably prevented” from filing his request because his original attorneys didn’t develop and present the evidence, the filing said.

McGinty and Slagle’s attorneys had cited his age — at 18, he was barely old enough for execution in Ohio — and his history of alcohol and drug addiction.

US Posts in Muslim World will Remain Closed

BY ALICIA A. CALDWELL

Associated Press

WASHINGTON • U.S. diplomatic posts in 19 cities in the Muslim world will be closed at least through the end of this week, the State Department said Sunday, citing “an abundance of caution.”

State Department spokeswoman Jen Psaki said the decision to keep the embassies and consulates closed is “not an indication of a new threat.”

She said the continued closures are “merely an indication of our commitment to exercise caution and take appropriate steps to protect our employees, including local employees, and visitors to our facilities.”

Diplomatic facilities will remain closed in Egypt, Jordan, Libya, Yemen, Saudi Arabia and Kuwait, among other countries, through Saturday, Aug. 10. The State Department announcement Sunday added closures of four African sites, in Madagascar, Burundi, Rwanda and Mauritius.

The U.S. has also decided to reopen some posts on Monday, including those in Kabul, Afghanistan, and Baghdad.

The Obama administration announced Friday that the posts would be closed over the weekend and the State Department announced a global travel alert, warning that al-Qaida or its allies might target either U.S. government or private American interests.

The weekend closure of nearly two dozen U.S. diplomatic posts resulted from the gravest terrorist threat seen in years, the top Republican on the Senate Intelligence Committee said Sunday.

Sen. Saxby Chambliss said “the chatter” intercepted by U.S. intelligence agencies led the Obama administration to shutter the embassies and consulates and issue a global travel warning to Americans.

“Chatter means conversation among terrorists about the planning that’s going on — very reminiscent of what we saw pre-9/11,” Chambliss, R-Ga., told NBC’s “Meet the Press.”

“This is the most serious threat that I’ve seen in the last several years,” he said.

Rep. C.A. Dutch Ruppersberger of Maryland, the top Democrat on the House Intelligence Committee, told ABC’s “This Week” that the threat intercepted from “high-level people in al-Qaida in the Arabian Peninsula” was about a “major attack.”

Yemen is home to al-Qaida’s most dangerous affiliate, blamed for several notable terrorist plots on the United States. They include the foiled

Christmas Day 2009 effort to bomb an airliner over Detroit and the explosives-laden parcels intercepted the following year aboard cargo flights.

Rep. Peter King, who leads the House Homeland Security subcommittee on counterterrorism and intelligence, said the threat included dates but not locations of possible attacks.

“The threat was specific as to how enormous it was going to be and also that certain dates were given,” King, R-N.Y., said on ABC.

Rep. Adam Schiff, a House Intelligence Committee member, said the “breadth” of the closures suggests U.S. authorities are concerned about a potential repeat of last year’s riots and attacks at multiple embassies, including the deadly assault in Benghazi, Libya, where the U.S. ambassador and three other Americans were killed.

Syria’s War Splits Nation into 3 Distinct Regions

BY ZEINA KARAM

Associated Press

BEIRUT • More than two years into Syria’s civil war, the once highly-centralized authoritarian state has effectively split into three distinct parts, each boasting its own flags, security agencies and judicial system.

In each area, religious, ideological and turf power struggles are under way and battle lines tend to ebb and flow, making it impossible to predict exactly what Syria could look like once the combatants lay down their arms. But the longer the bloody conflict drags on, analysts says, the more difficult it will be to piece together a coherent Syrian state from the wreckage.

“There is no doubt that as a distinct single entity, Syria has ceased to exist,” said Charles Lister, an analyst at IHS Jane’s Terrorism and Insurgency Center. “Considering the sheer scale of its territorial losses in some areas of the country, Syria no longer functions as a single all-encompassing unitarily-governed state.”

The geographic dividing lines that have emerged over the past two years and effectively cleft the nation in three remain fluid, but the general outlines can be traced on a map.

The regime holds a firm grip on a corridor running from the southern border with Jordan, through the capital Damascus and up to the Mediterranean coast, where a large portion of the population belongs to President Bashar Assad’s Alawite sect. The rebels, who are primarily drawn from Syria’s Sunni Muslim majority, control a chunk of territory that spans parts of Idlib and

In this Dec. 15, 2012 file photo, Free Syrian Army fighters react after an explosion during heavy clashes with government forces at a military academy besieged by the rebels north of Aleppo, Syria.

Aleppo provinces in the north and stretches along the Euphrates river to the porous Iraqi border in the east. Tucked into the far northeastern corner, meanwhile, Syria’s Kurdish minority enjoys semi-autonomy.

Those contours provide the big picture view. The view from the ground, however, is slightly muddled.

While Sunni rebels control large swathes of Syria’s rural regions in the north, the government still controls provincial capitals there, with the exception of Raqqa city and parts of Aleppo city. The regime also still retains some military bases and checkpoints in the overwhelmingly rebel-held countryside, but those are besieged and isolated and supplies for troops are air-dropped by helicopters or planes.

Moreover, the opposition movement itself is far from monolithic, and there have been increasing outbursts of infighting between al-Qaida affiliated extremists and moderate rebel groups, as well as between Kurds and rebels of a radical Islamic bent. That violence holds the potential to escalate into a full-blown war among armed opposition factions.

The Assad regime has made headway in recent months in the strategic heartland of Homs, clawing back territory long-held by rebel fighters. Those gains have helped the government secure its grip on Damascus and the pathway to the coast. They also have reinforced opposition accusations that Assad’s military is driving out local Sunni communities to try to carve out a breakaway Alawite enclave that could become a refuge for the community if the regime falls.

For now, Assad’s overstretched and war-weary troops appear unable to regain the vast territories they have lost to rebels and jihadists who now control oil wells and other key resources such as dams and electricity plants in the north and east. Black al-Qaida flags that carry the Muslim declaration of the faith now fly over many areas there, as a way to mark their turf distinctly from the three-starred green, black and white flag flown by the various rebel brigades that make up the loose-knit, Western-backed Free Syrian Army.

In the north, fighter brigades have set up judicial councils known as Shariah courts that dispense their own version of justice based on Islamic law, including in some cases, executions of captured regime soldiers and supporters.

Leaks and Democracy

The following editorial appeared in Friday's Washington Post:

Col. Denise Lind, the U.S. Army judge who heard the charges against Pfc. Bradley Manning for the leak of tens of thousands of secret documents to WikiLeaks, offered a ruling that will echo long after the sentencing of the 25-year-old private. She acquitted Pfc. Manning of a charge that leaking the secrets was “aiding the enemy,” or the highest form of treason, while convicting him of lesser charges that may still bring a long prison term.

Col. Lind did not explain her decision, which goes to the heart of a debate that has been raging with multiple prosecutions underway of leakers and disclosures by Pfc. Manning and Edward Snowden of classified materials. In effect, Col. Lind declared that leaking is not necessarily tantamount to treason.

Certainly, traitors have betrayed the country before and will do so again, but it is an important distinction that not every leak of a government secret rises to the level of treason, and leaks can often play a vital role in shaping public opinion.

As a newspaper, The Washington Post thrives on revelatory journalism and often benefits from leaks, sometimes inspired by dissent and other times by spin. The Web site WikiLeaks, which published the raw material provided by Mr. Manning as well as other secrets, differs from journalism in methods if not goals. The Post and many others in print and broadcast journalism sift and check information and take care not to reveal sources and methods or to endanger lives in bringing secrets to light. WikiLeaks and Pfc. Manning showed less care. They spilled classified government data into the open, in some cases endangering individuals who were identified in diplomatic cables. Pfc. Manning had taken an oath to protect secrets, which he broke. No system of secrecy can function if people ignore the rules with impunity; it is reasonable that Pfc. Manning be punished in some way for breaking those rules.

However, the Manning verdict casts light once again on the fact that far too much information is classified. The Public Interest Declassification Board concluded last year that classification practices are “outmoded, unustainable and keep too much information from the public.” Too many people can slap “top secret” on a document with too little justification for doing so. Steven Aftergood of the Federation of American Scientists, writing in the Harvard Civil Rights-Civil Liberties Law Review, concludes that existing principles for determining what should be secret are far too broad, especially in national security, giving officials “all but unlimited discretion” to classify as they see fit.

When too much is routinely classified, it undermines the credibility of the system, including the protection of vital secrets, and erodes public trust. This administration’s pursuit of leakers has outstripped any previous administration. What’s desperately needed is more restraint — and an overhaul of the classification system to preserve the proper use of secrecy in an open democracy.

READER COMMENT

Idaho Should Control Federal Lands Within Its Border

The other day, Idaho Statesman columnist/reporter/press secretary to the political establishment, Dan Popkey, smacked GOP congressional challenger Bryan Smith for berating a federal welfare program known as Payments In Lieu of Taxes (PILT).

The program is a congressional creation (read: dubious), but Western communities have come to depend on PILT funding, such as it is. PILT provides a revenue stream to counties that have no ability to generate tax income because much of the land in the county belongs to the national government.

The program, noted Popkey in his words, means “Idaho’s 44 counties will receive $26.3 million from PILT to compensate for 32.6 million acres in federal ownership.”

Wrote Popkey, “Smith dismissed the program as ‘begging for crumbs’ and said he would focus on convincing Congress to ‘give back’ federal land to Idaho and other states.”

Wayne Hoffman
Idaho Freedom Foundation

Smith dismissed the federal handout, so Popkey decided to dismiss Smith: “Smith, making his first race for public office, may be unfamiliar with the broad influence of county elected officials who provide everyday services across Idaho.”

But Smith is right, and if you’ve done the math already, you know that PILT rewards counties with a measly 80 cents per acre. In return, counties are rewarded with a system that limits the use of public lands, resulting in gross mismanagement of public lands, devastating wildfires, a lack of jobs and slim opportunities. With fewer and fewer jobs and lacking real opportunity, grown children leave rural Idaho for greener pastures. But hey, we have our 80 cents per acre. Thanks, Uncle Sam!

Furthermore, this is not how things were meant to be. At statehood, Idaho and other western states were promised that the federal government, at some point in the future, would dispose of its land holdings in our states. Such lands, with vast repositories of natural resources, were to be put to productive use, resulting in revenue generation not only for Idaho’s rural communities, but for the schools necessary to educate the masses.

Congress unilaterally abandoned the policy of land disposal in the 1970s, and since then, the federal government has worked to bring federal land holdings under national monument and park designations. Smith argues, accurately, that states are left with a pittance. PILT is a western welfare program. And since reporters, columnists and editorial writers beat up on any politician who questions the sanity of PILT, it’s a form of hush money.

Popkey wants you to believe that Smith should be embarrassed for suggesting an end to the PILT entitlement. I’d disagree. One thing the federal government is good at is using the treasury and wads of cash to create sustained poverty and dependence.

Left in the wake of the government’s charity are broken families, ramshackle tenements, the absence of both good-paying jobs and the promise that children will have the same financial insecurity of their parents.

Just as many American inner cities, Appalachia, New Orleans and Detroit have become financially and emotionally vacuous at the hands of federal government subsistence, such could be Idaho’s fate. Idaho and its rural communities should get to enjoy the full breadth of prosperity and opportunity that this country has to offer.

But that will never happen as long as Congress, and leftist political writers who explain away congressional policies, defend government welfare as a quality substitute for productivity.

Where Will Survivalism Take Idaho Politics?

Idaho and Montana, said Chuck Baldwin, co-author of the book “To Keep or Not to Keep: Why Christians Should Not Give Up Their Guns” are “the tip of the spear of the freedom fight” because that is where you find lots of “liberty loving, constitutionally oriented people.”

Quite a few self-described conservatives would be nodding their heads to that. Where, in Baldwin’s half-hour discussion following that statement, they might stop nodding and start shaking their heads, is a matter for serious consideration and could be a story of things to come in Idaho.

Baldwin is a Montana minister, chaplain of the group called Oathkeepers, and he was a main speaker at last week’s “Self Reliance” rally sponsored by that organization, held at Farragut State Park in northern Idaho. The event reasonably could be called a survivalist gathering, and it attracted a significant number of people, hundreds at least or possibly several thousand, depending on whose numbers you accept. They are more than a tiny fringe as measured by the elected officials present, including Idaho state Representative Vito Barbieri (one of the speakers).

Much of the weekend was basic survivalist fare, talk of stocking up food and ammunition for the coming apocalypse, self-defense, and such favorite topics as the long-discredited Agenda 21 conspiracy. And there were the usual frequent references to “patriots” and “supporters of the constitution,” both of which were meant to include, of course, only people who agree with the speakers’ interpretations. (They didn’t quite go so far as to call everyone else “traitors,” but the implication seemed in the air.)

Baldwin’s speech, available on YouTube, exemplified some of this, but it also featured a challenge aimed more at other stripes of conservative than at liberals.

“It’ll come as a shock to many of you,” he said, that “government is not God.” Lots and lots of people maintain that it is, he said. (Specifics, naturally, were lacking.) That point in place, he then took aim at fellow pastors, a whole lot of whom, he argued, may be well-meaning but tell their congregations that government should be strictly obeyed “no matter what.” (Again, no names were specified.) He told the audience they need to “find a patriot pastor who will tell you the truth.” He helpfully pointed to an online list.

All this sounded like the setup for a larger point: “What we have in America today, instead of prophets and watchmen in the pulpits, we have CEOs over corporations. We have people that are looking at their churches as a corporation. They are dealing with their churches as if it is a corporation. It’s all about success. It all about money and buildings and popularity and image and prestige. Its all about building a corporate church within the political structure of whatever the community is in which they live. And they don’t want to upset that, they don’t want to create division within that. And they will do anything and everything to not offend the political and religious hierarchy in which they are involved.”

So who is he talking about here?

Once again, no names were mentioned, but we can say this much: The survivalist offshoot of northern Idaho conservatism is political in part not just because politicians show up at the events but because it infuses the politics. And you have to ask: Where will this take Idaho politics? Is it a dead end, or is it continuing its push to the extremes?

The Oathkeeper’s page on which the Baldwin video is embedded contains this comment on the video: “Excellent Speech/Sermon Pastor Baldwin. So refreshing to hear a Pastor speak as a free man and Patriot. Thank you for your service. PS- ‘58 Remington’s go very well with sermons.”

Raising the question: What percentage of self-described Idaho conservatives, and self-described constitutionalists, would agree?

Idaho Airman Murdered in Austria Gets Memorial

POCATELLO (AP) — The name of an Idaho airman murdered by Austrian Nazis in 1944 is remembered on a memorial to victims of the National Socialists in that country.

The Idaho State Journal reports Sgt. William James McCurdy's name is on a memorial in Austria's Drau Valley. McCurdy, from Pocatello, was shot by Austrian militia members after parachuting from a damaged B-17 bomber in November 1944. According to reports, he was approaching the two Austrians with hands raised in surrender when he was gunned down.

Idaho State University philosophy teacher William "Bill" James McCurdy, the dead airman's nephew and namesake, recently received a phone call from an Austrian historian, one of the most emotional phone conversations of his life, about the memorial and his uncle's prominent place on it.

"It was like a ghost from the past," Bill McCurdy told the newspaper.

Sgt. William James McCurdy, a flight engineer stationed with a crew at a base on Italy's Adriatic Coast, had once played bass violin for his high school and a local band, Gene Burton's Big Band. According to the family's story, passed down from generation to generation, he was just a couple flights shy of reaching the magic 50-mission mark that would have allowed him to be removed from front-line action.

But on Nov. 16, 1944, as his plane flew southward following a raid on Munich just over the border in Germany, the entire seven-member crew was forced to bail out. Six survived the war as prisoners; the story of what happened to McCurdy is contained in the 2012 book, "From Memory into Remembrance," by the Austrian historians Anita Profunser and Peter Pirker.

Two Austrian militia members, Anton Taurer and Franz Wilker, had been ordered "whatever had fallen out of the heavens should be returned to the heavens." They shot McCurdy in the stomach just as he'd been bundling up his parachute. He died minutes later.

Transcripts from the war crimes trial of Taurer and Wilker spell out that bleak moment on the wintry field in Austria.

"At the time of the shot, the American was facing the accused with is arms raised in surrender," the trial record states of the proceedings in which the two men were convicted of murder and sentenced to life in prison. Only a few years later, the sentence was reduced and the men were freed, according to the book.

"My grandmother grieved pretty hard," Bill McCurdy recalls. "She had already lost two sons — one was stillborn and the other died at nine months."

McCurdy's body was originally buried in the Drau Valley, near where he was killed. He would be listed as missing in action until 1946 when his father and mother received word his remains had been recovered and buried at a U.S. military cemetery in France.

Now, Bill McCurdy is hoping to make a trip to the Drau Valley, possibly next year, to visit the memorial, which includes small drawers for visitors to leave items of remembrance.

He plans to deposit these lines from a funeral speech given by Pericles, the Athenian leader, following the first battles of the Peloponnesian war:

"For heroes have the whole earth for their tomb; and in lands far from their own, where the column with its epitaph declares it, there is enshrined in every breast a record unwritten with no tablet to preserve it, except that of the heart."

Woman Killed, 2 Men Hurt in Snake River Accident

IDAHO FALLS (AP) • A woman was killed and two men were injured in a Saturday night boating accident on the South Fork of the Snake River.

The Bonneville County Sheriff's Office reports a 33-year-old woman died, while a 41-year-old man and 34-year-old man were hurt.

The Idaho Falls Post Register reports all are from the Idaho Falls area.

Sheriff's Capt. Sam Hulse says first responders reported a boat completely out of the water when they arrived at the accident site about 2 miles from the Conant Boat Ramp.

Hulse described the boat as a small, motorized aluminum watercraft.

The men injured in the crash were transported to Eastern Idaho Regional Medical Center in Idaho Falls, where they were undergoing treatment.

The extent of their injuries was not known.

Crime Victims in Idaho Benefit from Visa Program

BOISE (AP) • Some people in Idaho who entered the United States illegally are benefiting from an obscure visa program designed to help the victims of crimes.

The Idaho Statesman reports one such man, Marcas Zurita, entered the U.S. 18 years ago, crossing the border from Mexico at Tijuana. Though he was in the country without proper documentation, he developed a relationship with a woman and had two children, now 15 and 12 years old.

His former girlfriend reported him, however, resulting in his deportation. In immigration jail he was assaulted.

As a result of his cooperation in that crime, Zurita, now a Nampa resident, was allowed to return to the United States on a so-called "U visa" program. Zurita says that for much of his 18 years in the country, he feared the consequences of courts and police, but that's changed, thanks to the visa program.

"I had to trust in the law," said Zurita, 37.

Visas are available to selected crime victims who cooperate with police and prosecutors. Congress has authorized the Department of Homeland Security to grant up to 10,000 U visas annually for residents who crossed the border illegally or overstayed their visas. After passing a background check and other hurdles, U visa holders may remain up to four years and have the chance to apply for permanent residency after three years.

In the mid-1990s, Zurita crossed into the United States, he says aiming to save enough money to return to Mexico City, build a house and open a neighborhood market. Then he met the woman who would become his girlfriend. They had the two kids and he stayed.

"Plans don't always work out like one thinks they will," he said.

By 2009, the relationship was over and his ex-girlfriend made good on a threat to report his illegal status. Three months into an eight-month stay awaiting deportation at the Canyon County Jail, Zurita was punched in the face by another inmate facing drug charges.

Zurita's jaw was dislocated, teeth chipped and vision blurred. For a month he was on a liquid diet.

He was deported in 2010. But because of his cooperation with authorities in the assault case, Canyon County Prosecutor Bryan Taylor signed the certification in 2011 that allowed him to return to the U.S. In November, Zurita was permitted to re-enter the country.

Taylor, an elected official, has certified 123 U visa applications since 2010.

"These are victims of crimes," he said. "I don't think anybody in this grand world deserves to be abused, battered or harmed in any way. It's a fundamental tenet."

In Boise, Police Chief Mike Masterson has certified 27 of 35 applications for the visas. Other Idaho law enforcement departments, however, have been reluctant to use the program.

In Meridian, Deputy Chief Tracy Basterrechea said the police department shies from using the program.

"Immigration is the federal government's job," he said. "As a general rule, we just don't sign those. We're reluctant to get involved in this whole thing"

Ada County Sheriff Gary Raney said he's had only three or four requests and hasn't certified any.

"I think it needs to be used judiciously," he said. "In some of our cases, it appears information wasn't accurate."

Wendy Olson, the U.S. attorney in Idaho, said she strongly supports the law as a way to encourage cooperation with law enforcement. Olson has had two requests to certify U visas, both of which she denied because the applicants had been convicted of gun or gang-related offenses.

"They just didn't fit our criteria," she said.

Mountain Man Wins Longest Beard Competition

PIERCE (AP) • An Idaho man again bested all rivals in a small town's "Longest Beard" competition — though his pride and joy was an inch shorter than last year.

The Lewiston Tribune reports Bob Canup is the four-time champion of Pierce's annual competition, held at the mining town's 1860 Days commemorating the discovery of gold nearby.

Beard and all, Canup fits the part, a modern-day prospector who dredges for gold up in Rhodes Creek, hunts for rare crystals and cuts firewood six months of the year to pay bills.

Canup says his secret to life is simple: He doesn't have anybody but himself and his dog to worry about.

He does what he does, when he wants to do it.

And that includes growing, and rarely trimming, his championship facial hair.

Rescuers Find Body of Mt. Hood Snowboarder

MOUNT HOOD, Ore. (AP) • A dozen rescuers armed with chain saws and other tools chipped away at tons of ice and snow Sunday to the recover the body of a 25-year-old snowboarder killed when an ice tunnel collapsed on Oregon’s Mount Hood.

The snowboarder, Collin Backowski, of Colorado, was traveling with five companions when the collapse hit Saturday afternoon. The others tried to dig him out but could not break through the ice and snow, which an official described as being as thick as concrete.

Rescuers quickly responded but halted efforts about 11 p.m. Saturday, then resumed early Sunday morning.

Hood River Sheriff’s Office spokeswoman Tiffany Peterson said that after removing tons of debris by hand, searchers found Backowski where he had been buried by 8 to 10 feet of snow and ice.

None of the searchers or other snowboarders was injured, Peterson said.

The ice tunnel was on the White River Glacier, which begins about 6,000 feet up the south side of the mountain.

An airplane was dispatched to survey the area, along with crews from local sheriff’s offices.

Seven rescuers, including five members of an all-volunteer group called the CragRats, were on the mountain on Saturday night.

Companions took pictures of the area just before the tunnel collapsed, giving searchers a better idea of where to look.

Warm temperatures made snow on the mountain slushier and more easily sloughed off the surface, adding to the challenge of attempting to reach the snowboarder.

Photos of Marilyn Monroe’s Last Sitting for Sale

BY JOANN LOVIGLIO
Associated Press

PHILADELPHIA • A rare portfolio of photographs from Marilyn Monroe’s last sitting is up for grabs to the highest bidder.

Freeman’s auction house in Philadelphia estimates the limited-edition portfolio of 10 photos, made from fashion photographer Bert Stern’s original negatives from his June 1962 assignment for Vogue, could fetch $10,000 to $15,000 when it goes on the block Sept. 10.

The photos will be on view to the public starting Sept. 6, said Aimee Pflieger, head of the century-old auction house’s photography division.

Stern, who died in June at age 83, took more than 2,500 photos of the Hollywood icon over three days at the Hotel Bel-Air in Los Angeles. The 20-by-20-inch portfolio photos are from the first day, when Stern and Monroe were alone before the arrival of a cadre of Vogue staffers, and project a feeling of spontaneity and playfulness that stands out from the others.

“He brought a turntable and speakers and three cases of champagne,” Pflieger said. “The feeling you get from the photos is they’re having a great time.”

Six weeks after her session with Stern, the 36-year-old screen siren was found dead in her home Aug. 5 of an apparent drug overdose. A half-century later, she remains one of the 20th-century’s most enduring sex symbols.

Stern’s photos were a sensation, partly because they were taken right before Monroe’s death and partly because they included the first nude photos of Monroe since 1949. Many of the nudes show the star posing with diaphanous scarves, paper flowers and pearls in bright but diffuse natural light that gives the photos a dreamlike quality.

“She was beautiful and untouched,” Stern said. “It was as though she were just beginning.”

Hit-and-run Driver Accelerated onto California Boardwalk

BY TAMI ABDOLLAH
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES • The driver parked outside a hotel and surveyed the leisurely summer scene at the Venice Beach boardwalk: Hundreds of people were sitting at cafes, walking along the seashore or shopping at vendors selling jewelry or art.

Then, according to surveillance video, the man got into a large black car, steered around a vehicle barrier and accelerated mercilessly through the crowd, hitting one person after another as bystanders tried desperately to get out of the way.

Saturday’s hit-and-run killed an Italian woman on her honeymoon and hurt 11 others who only a moment earlier had been enjoying an afternoon near the beach at the height of vacation season.

A couple of hours later, authorities arrested a man on suspicion of murder after he walked into a police station in neighboring Santa Monica and said he was involved.

Nathan Louis Campbell, 38, of Los Angeles, remained jailed Sunday on $1 million bail.

Police declined to discuss a motive but Deputy Chief Kirk Albanese said there was no indication that the attack was a terrorist act or that anyone else was involved.

By the time it was over, the driver had covered about a quarter of a mile along the boardwalk before fleeing. The entire incident was over in minutes.

Witnesses reported a horrifying aftermath.

People were “stumbling around, blood dripping down their legs, looking confused not knowing what had happened, people screaming,” said Louisa Hodge, who described “blocks and blocks of people just strewn across the sidewalk.”

The Italian woman was identified as Alice Gruppioni, 32. Her family in Bologna told the Italian news agency LaPresse that she had been on her honeymoon after a July 20 wedding.

Gruppioni worked as a manager for the family business Sira group, which makes radiators. Her father, Valerio Gruppioni, runs the company and was formerly president of the Bologna soccer team, according to LaPresse.

The family declined to speak to The Associated Press on Sunday.

Another person was critically injured. Two others were taken to hospitals in serious condition. Eight suffered less serious injuries, police said.

According to security video and witness accounts, the driver parked next to the Cadillac Hotel and twice walked out to the boardwalk before getting into the Dodge Avenger. He carefully maneuvered between a storefront and metal poles that had been erected to prevent anyone from driving onto the boardwalk.

Then he stepped on the accelerator and plunged into the crowd.

“I heard a big ‘boom, boom,’ like the sound of someone going up and down the curb, it was super loud,” said Alex Hagan, who was working the desk at the hotel.

The driver knocked over two mannequins and an ATM and started hitting people, swerving from side to side and often running straight into victims. Video showed the car struck at least three vendors — a fortune teller, a couple selling jewelry and a woman who does tattooing.

Two women who appeared to be in their 60s were also hit. Many people ran after the car, screaming and cursing as it sped away, Hagan said.

Golestan Alipour was bartending at Candle Cafe & Grill when the menacing vehicle drew near.

“The restaurant was full. Everybody ran,” Alipour said.

It was not immediately clear how fast the car was going.

The driver eventually turned up a side street and headed away from the ocean. The car was later found abandoned less than two miles away, police said.

At the scene, detectives searched for evidence across the boardwalk, which is in a part of Los Angeles known for eccentricities. The 1.5-mile ribbon of asphalt — which runs along the sand a few hundred yards from the ocean — is home to galleries, restaurants, tattoo shops, skateboard parks and the famous outdoor weight room known as Muscle Beach. It can draw as many as 150,000 people on summer weekends.

BYU Prof: Sand Dunes Engulfing ‘Star Wars’ Set

PROVO, Utah (AP) • Time may be running short for hardcore “Star Wars” fans to see the real-life set used to portray Anakin Skywalker’s childhood home of Mos Espa on the planet Tatooine.

Brigham Young University planetary scientist Jani Radebaugh said new research shows a fast-moving sand dune is spilling onto streets of the set in the Tunisian desert and will eventually bury buildings.

The dune was measured at 20 feet tall and 300 feet wide in 2009, and it’s been moving toward the set about 50 feet per year since 2002, she said. Research by her and two colleagues was recently published in the journal Geomorphology.

“In terms of geologic time scales, it’s one of the fastest things we see happen, aside from lava flows and landslides,” Radebaugh said. “You can compare it to some glaciers, but even most glaciers tend to move slower.”

The set began attracting tourists in 1999 following release of “Episode 1: The Phantom Menace.” Before that, fans had visited some of the 1970s-era sets of later episodes, which have since been overrun by dunes.

The set, a fictional spaceport left behind after filming at the request of Tunisian tourist officials, draws about 100,000 visitors annually.

Radebaugh said bulldozing the dune to save the set isn’t an option because a larger dune follows behind. The most feasible plan to save the site would require moving everything 650 feet to the south, she added.

But it may be too late for a rescue because one dwelling and a pair of other structures already are partially buried.

“Sometimes we just have to move out of the way,” Radebaugh said. “The sand people in Star Wars are nomads, right? Maybe they are nomads because the sand moves.”

Ironically, she credits the Star Wars films for sparking her interest in planetary science. Radebaugh, an associate professor of geological sciences, usually teams up with NASA to study moons of Saturn and Jupiter. But a visit to Tunisia with other planetary scientists prompted the dune research.

“It’s so fun to see geology in action,” she said. “We live on a dynamic planet.”

Sizing Up the Mountain West

BY RYAN HOWE
rhowe@magicvalley.com

College football's fall camps are here. For the next three weeks, teams will find out what their identity will be, and which players made the most strides over the summer.

In Sunday's Times-News and magicvalley.com, we presented Boise State's fall camp outlook. Now here's a look at the other 11 Mountain West Conference teams, and what their top concerns will be heading into fall camp.

UTAH STATE

Sure, the Aggies return most key pieces from last year's 11-2 season, but after winning the WAC in 2012, Utah State moves into a deeper, tougher Mountain West while facing a coaching change.

First-year coach Matt Wells was promoted from offensive coordinator, but even he admits it was the Aggies' defense that was responsible for the most successful season in school history last year.

Despite returning 16 starters, USU has some holes to fill. The Aggies have had three running backs selected in the past two NFL drafts. Will junior Joe Hill be the next guy? They'll also need to fill some gaps in the defensive secondary.

"We're going to be youthful in spots that aren't household names," said Wells. "Hopefully those are reloading spots."

Season opener: at Utah, Aug. 29

COLORADO STATE

There's a battle for the starting quarterback position as CSU begins fall camp. Junior Garrett Grayson and sophomore Connor Smith are the leading candidates.

Jim McElwain, in his second season in Fort Collins, is beginning to change the culture of Rams football, which hasn't been to a bowl game since 2008. McElwain came to CSU after assistant coaching stints with Alabama, Michigan State and the Oakland Raiders.

"It's taking a piece of all that (experience) and making it your own," McElwain said.

His first year at CSU was a whirlwind of change and the Rams went 4-8. Now it's a matter of building on that foundation, and that all starts in fall camp.

Season opener: vs. Colorado, Sept. 1.

SAN JOSE STATE

Along with Utah State, the Spartans are the other Mountain West newcomer. Making the jump from the WAC (in which San Jose finished second in 2012 and finished 11-2) to the MW will be a key motivator in fall camp.

And, just like Utah State, the Spartans will make the jump with a new coach at the helm. Ron Caragher moves up from University of San Diego as SJSU rebuilt its entire coaching staff, including new offensive coordinator Jimmie Dougherty.

How quickly can the Spartans adapt to the new coaches this fall? The good news for SJSU is it has talented players to work with, led by big-time quarterback David Fales (4,193 yards and 33 TDs, 72.5 percent completions in 2012).

Season opener: vs. Sacramento State, Aug. 29.

FRESNO STATE

The team most preseason prognosticators have winning the conference's West division has high hopes heading into fall camp. And why not? The Bulldogs return senior quarterback Derek Carr, whom some say could vie for the Heisman.

To

buoy Fresno's explosive offense, it has eight starters returning on the defensive side. You'd have to be nitpicky to find any major concerns with Fresno heading into fall camp,

DEAR ABBY: My mother and I were close growing up. However, when I was in college she abandoned the family (my siblings were in high school and elementary school) for her much younger boyfriend.

DEAR ABBY
Jeanne Phillips

Since then, our relationship has been strained, particularly since I learned she used to tell her then-husband she was visiting me when she was carrying on her affair. After that, I learned about additional lies she had told me throughout my childhood.

I'm married now and have two young children. Until a year ago we lived in the same city. Mom never came around much because she was preoccupied with finding new boyfriends to support her. She has since moved out of state and stalks me on Facebook, harassing me to get Skype so she can talk to my children.

My mother has never apologized for her actions to anyone and thinks we should just "get over it." Because so much has come out about her, I want to protect my children from being hurt by her the way I was.

I can't tell her outright that I don't want much to do with her for fear it will send her into an "episode," and I don't want my kids caught in the crossfire. If I try to sugar-coat what needs to be said, she won't get it. What should I do?

—FRUSTRATED DAUGHTER

DEAR DAUGHTER: Frankly, you'll save yourself a lot of grief if you just tell your mother you're not getting Skype and the reason why, and let her have her "episode." As a parent, you have every right to insulate your children from anyone you feel might be a negative influence — and that includes their grandmother.

DEAR ABBY: I have been dating my boyfriend for more than a year and we are considering marriage. I am 23 and have never been dissatisfied with the way I look.

The other day he told my friend that when we get married and become financially stable, he would pay for a boob job for me. I'm offended, mostly because I don't want one and don't think I need one. Do you think this speaks to his character (or lack thereof)?

—NOT GOING UNDER IN LOUISIANA

DEAR NOT GOING UNDER: No, I think it speaks to the degree he assumes he can control or make choices for you. That he would say something like that to one of your friends without having discussed it with you is rather disconcerting. I don't blame you for being offended.

DEAR ABBY: I operate a small Internet radio station out of my house in Texas. I play music 24/7, except on Saturday nights when I usually do a live talk show. A topic I raise every year coincides with my birthday. I announce to all who are listening that I have designated this day as Mind Your Own Business Day.

On this day, my listeners are reminded that if they disapprove of someone's choice of mate, clothing, religion, favorite music, pets — and anything else that may be personal and nobody's business — to keep it to themselves.

Would you be willing to mention this in your column and help me spread the word that while everyone has a right to an opinion, it doesn't mean everyone should be forced to listen to it? Thanks in advance.

—JIM IN TEXAS

DEAR JIM: Not only is your message succinct, your idea has merit. If more people followed your philosophy, it could eliminate a lot of conflicts, not to mention headaches.

Dear Abby is written by Abigail Van Buren, also known as Jeanne Phillips, and was founded by her mother, Pauline Phillips. Write Dear Abby at www.DearAbby.com or P.O. Box 69440, Los Angeles, CA 90069.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE®

Bobby Wolff

“Every advantage in the past is judged in the light of the final issue.”

— Demosthenes

One of the most heartbreaking boards in the 1995 Marlboro Bermuda Bowl in Beijing occurred right at the end of the quarterfinal match between France and China. The Chinese had led narrowly throughout their match, until the penultimate hand came up.

In the closed room for the French, Philippe Cronier had raised a 16-18 no-trump to game, and on a spade lead Michel Lebel had wrapped up 10 tricks with the aid of the favorable club split, for plus 430.

By contrast, in our featured room, Shao for China opened a 15-17 no-trump and rejected his partner's invitation because of his sterile distribution. The largely Chinese audience gasped, but realized that on any normal lead declarer would finish up with 10 tricks. The loss would be only 6 IMPs, and the home team would still lead by 1 IMP.

However, that was not the way it worked out. Michel Perron for France led a devilish heart jack, and Shao won his king and considered his alternatives. If he took the club finesse and it lost, then the defense would certainly have at least six winners to cash. It looked much better to play on spades. All that was needed was an original 4-3 split in hearts.

Accordingly, declarer gave up a spade, and the defense cashed their four heart and two spade winners for one down, and a 10 IMP swing to France, who won the match by 3 IMPs. If the heart suit had divided evenly, the match would have been tied and would have gone to extra boards.

ANSWER: The lead of the heart queen may cost your side a trick in hearts, but when faced with a hand where there is no good practical alternative, settle for the simple choice. Bear in mind declarer may have a strong hand with a doubleton heart king and what he hopes for is a running minor — in which case he is about to be sorely disappointed.

In 1884, the cornerstone for the Statue of Liberty's pedestal was laid on Bedloe's Island in New York Harbor.

Ten years ago: Episcopal leaders in Minneapolis voted to approve the election of the Reverend V. Gene Robinson, an openly gay clergyman, as bishop of the Diocese of New Hampshire. A car bombing at the Marriott hotel in Jakarta, Indonesia, killed 12 people.

Five years ago: President George W. Bush arrived in South Korea to begin a three-country Asia tour. Seven firefighters and two pilots were killed when their helicopter crashed on takeoff while ferrying the crew members from fire lines in the Shasta-Trinity National Forest in Northern California. Jose Medellin, a Mexican-born condemned killer, was executed by the state of Texas for his part in the gang rape and murder of two teenage girls, Elizabeth Pena and Jennifer Ertman, in 1993.

One year ago: A gunman opened fire and killed six people at a Sikh temple near Milwaukee before he was killed in an exchange of gunfire with one of the first officers to respond. The robotic explorer Curiosity blazed through the pink skies of Mars, steering itself to a gentle landing inside a giant crater. Jamaica's Usain Bolt pulled away from the pack and crossed the finish line to claim consecutive gold medals in the marathon track and field event at the Summer Games in London. Britain's Andy Murray cruised past Roger Federer 6-2, 6-1, 6-4 in the men's tennis singles final. Serena and Venus Williams won the women's doubles title, beating Andrea Hlavackova and Lucie Hradecka of the Czech Republic 6-4, 6-4.
