Child abuse in South-Central Idaho worse than believed.

BY JOE CADOTTE
jcadotte@magicvalley.com

TWIN FALLS • About 525 children were abused or neglected so badly last year that they had to be removed from their homes in south-central Idaho.

That’s far too many for 67 trained volunteer advocates to adequately help, said Tahna Barton, director of the Court Appointed Special Advocates (CASA) program.

CASA is seeing about the same number of children this year, but many locals mistakenly think child abuse is “a big-city problem,” Barton said.

“One of our worst cases was a little guy who was put in a box and dirt (was) thrown on him for punishment. That sounds like something you’d hear of in New York or Florida, but that happened in downtown Twin Falls,” she said. “That little guy was kept in a cement room.”

When a home is deemed unsafe, children are placed in emergency foster homes or juvenile detention centers. A CASA seeks out these kids to comfort them and explain how everything is being done to protect them.

But CASA doesn’t have enough volunteers, and a child without an advocate easily slips through cracks in the system, Barton said.

“I have more than 100 kids that don’t have a CASA volunteer appointed to them right now. I have so many people that don’t think we need volunteers because we don’t have a lot of abuse going on. Really, what they need to know is that it does exist and there is a need.”

A CASA’s main role is to advocate for a child’s best interests in court. Without an advocate, children are more likely to be locked up or bounced from home to home, she said.

“A lot of people underestimate themselves. They don’t think they’re good enough or they’re smart enough or they have enough education,” Barton said. “We highly screen our volunteers, but what we need more than anything is sound-minded individuals that understand children and know what’s best for a child. And if you have that foundation, the training for everything else is there.”

When Jeannine Barneby retired from nonprofit work in 2001, she looked for a way to keep using her skills. First she volunteered with the Boys and Girls Club of the Magic Valley, but she wanted to work with kids more closely.

At first she refused an invitation to volunteer as a CASA, but later decided to give it a shot.

“I wasn’t exactly sure if I could do it, deal with some of the more emotional situations,” Barneby recalled. “Could I do that? Remain objective,

Nation’s Women Voting in Drove

BY BILLIE STANTON
bstanton@magicvalley.com

TWIN FALLS • The 19th Amendment took effect 93 years ago today, granting women across the nation the right to vote.

But many western women – including those in Idaho – already were exercising that right.

Wyoming was the first to explicitly grant voting rights to women, even before it became a state. Wyoming Territorial Gov. John Allen Campbell approved that law on Dec. 10, 1869.

Idaho was the fourth state to enfranchise women, in 1896. Women could not vote until two-thirds of Idaho men granted them that right. The vote was so close that the result was appealed to the Idaho Supreme Court. But the court’s three justices – all men – unanimously agreed that women had won.

The Gem State followed Colorado, which passed a suffrage referendum in 1893, and Utah, where the measure passed in the 1870s but was struck down by Congress in the 1880s, allegedly in an effort to combat Mormon

Coaching Parents through Common Core

Idaho’s new education standards promise to make homework a new experience for parents and children.

BY BILL ROBERTS

BOISE • Flash cards are gone from Christy Schwehr’s classroom at Amity Elementary School in Boise.

Those time-honored teaching devices used to drill math facts into young minds are replaced by “strategy cards”.

Instead of having the answer to a math problem on the back, strategy cards have student-written questions that Schwehr can ask to help coax kids toward the right answer.

The difference between flash cards and strategy cards is a microcosm of the switch to a new, rigorous curriculum that goes into classrooms throughout Idaho as schools get underway this fall.

Education isn’t about cramming facts into kids’ heads any more. It’s not “6 times 8 is 48. Now remember it.”

Students need to visualize numbers and understand those numbers in relationship to each other as they seek to discover the answer. So a strategy card hint for figuring out 6 times 8 may say, “you know what 6 times 5 is...”

“It’s kind of a question technique to get them to that answer,” said Schwehr, who teaches a third- and fourth-grade combination class.

Idaho’s new approach to teaching is based on Common Core State Standards, a nearly uniform list of what students should know and be able to do adopted by 45 states and Washington, D.C.

The basics are still there. Kids need to know the difference between a noun and a verb. They’ll have to know division. They must be able to solve equations such as 2x10. “We are still teaching good math,” said Cathy Maloney, a math teacher at Research associate Pamela Flores conducts a health assessment on a desert tortoise at the Desert Tortoise Conservation Center in Las Vegas last week. Federal funds are running out at the center.

Desert Tortoise Faces Threat From its Own Refuge

LAS VEGAS (AP) • For decades, the vulnerable desert tortoise has led a sheltered existence. Developers have taken pains to keep the animal safe. It's been protected from meddlesome hikers by the threat of prison time. And wildlife officials have set the species up on a sprawling conservation reserve outside Las Vegas. But the pampered desert dweller now faces a threat from the very people who have nurtured it. Federal funds are running out at the Desert Tortoise Conservation Center and officials plan to close the site and euthanize hundreds of the tortoises they've been caring for since the animals were added to the endangered species list in 1990. "It's the lesser of two evils, but it's still evil," said U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service desert tortoise recovery coordinator Roy Averill-Murray during a visit to the soon-to-be-shuttered reserve at the southern edge of the Las Vegas Valley last week. Biologists went about their work examining tortoises for signs of disease as Averill-Murray walked among the reptile pens. But the scrubby 220-acre refuge area will stop taking new animals in the coming months. Most that arrive in the fall will simply be put down, late-emerging victims of budget problems that came from the same housing bubble that put a neighborhood of McMansions at the edge of the once-remote site. The Bureau of Land Management has paid for the holding and research facility with fees imposed on developers who disturb tortoise habitat on public land. As the housing boom swept through southern Nevada in the 2000s, the tortoise budget swelled. But when the recession hit, the housing market contracted, and the bureau and its local government partners began struggling to meet the center's $1 million annual budget. Housing never fully recovered, and the federal mitigation fee that developers pay has brought in just $290,000 during the past 11 months. Local partners, which collect their own tortoise fees, have pulled out of the project. "With the money going down and more and more tortoises coming in, it never would have added up," said BLM spokeswoman Hillerie Patton. Back at the conservation center, a large refrigerator labeled "carcass freezer" hummed in the desert sun as scientists examined the facility's 1,400 inhabitants to find those hearty enough to release into the wild. Officials expect to euthanize more than half the animals in the coming months in preparation for closure at the end of 2014. The desert tortoise is a survivor that has toddled around the Southwest for 200 million years. But ecologists say the loss of the conservation center represents a harmful blow in southern Nevada for an animal that has held onto some unfortunate evolutionary quirks that impede its coexistence with strip malls, new homes and solar plants. Laws to protect the panicky plodders ban hikers from picking them up, since the animals are likely dehydrate themselves by voiding a year's worth of stored water when handled. When they're moved, they nearly always attempt to trudge back to their burrows, foiling attempts to keep them out of harm's way. They're also beset by respiratory infections and other illnesses.

Beaver Creek Fire 82 Percent Contained, 10-acre Fire Burning Near Fairfield

BY JOE CADOTTE
jcadotte@magicvalley.com

FAIRFIELD • The 173 square mile Beaver Creek blaze continued to wind down Sunday and fire officials decreased its rating from a Type 1 to a Type 2 priority, www.inciweb.org. A new team will be supported by air and ground resources to complete containment, rehabilitate fire lines and retrieve equipment that is no longer needed.

Around 70 firefighters from the Beaver Creek fire were sent to the Kelly Fire Saturday, a 10-acre wildfire 22 miles northwest of Fairfield, which broke out around 6:15 p.m. Saturday, said Lynn Pettingill, Bureau of Land Management fire information officer.

Four engines, one water tender and two air attack planes also responded to the Kelly Fire, she said.

No structures were threatened by the Kelly Fire as of press time Sunday. Containment and control times are unknown. The Kelly Fire was caused by lightning and is burning grass and shrubs, Pettingill said.

Crews are extinguishing remaining hot spots around the perimeter of the Beaver Creek Fire. It rained on some spots of the fire Saturday. There was another Red Flag fire weather warning in place Sunday because of a chance of gusty winds from thunderstorms.

Other fire tidbits around the area:

- Lightning also cause a half-acre wildfire near Atlanta Saturday and has low potential for any problems.
- Three engines responded to the Emery Creek fire south of Burley, the size of that fire was unknown Sunday night.
- Three engines put out a vehicle on fire in Cassia County Sunday afternoon near Hansen. Cassia County Sheriff's Office nor the Bureau of Land Management had further details.
- One fire engine responded to a one-acre fire in the Sawtooth National Forest near Ketchum Sunday night.

North Junior High School. But how classes are taught and how students are tested is about to undergo a change that will affect how parents help their kids with homework, how volunteers help teachers in the classroom and what students will be asked to do. The goal is for learning to go into subjects more deeply. Students will be asked to evaluate information they are learning by applying critical-thinking skills.

Common Core Hits Home

All of this is about to fall on parents like Jill Millward, who has students at Roosevelt Elementary and North Junior High in Boise. She considers herself an involved and informed parent but confesses, “I had not heard about Common Core until days before school was set to start.” She’s not alone. Two-thirds of the country has never heard of Common Core, according to a PDK-Gallup survey released last week, the Washington Post reported. Even parents who did know about it thought it would have little effect on students.

Millward likes what she’s heard so far about Idaho Core standards, the state’s version of Common Core. “I think it is going to raise the bar for everyone,” she said. “But I think a lot of kids will struggle.” She’s not worried about her second- or sixth-graders, who will be at Roosevelt when school opens today. But her seventh-grader, Ethan, who excels in reading and writing, finds math more challenging, she said. “I am going to need to try to find a way to be involved to know what he is studying in math and reinforce it at home,” she said.

Why? How?

Teachers are expecting lots of questions about Idaho Core Standards as students get back to school. Schwehr, Maloney and Emilie Eisenberger, a Whitter Elementary School

Common Core At Home

- Christy Schwehr’s 10 tips for supporting Common Core At home:
- These are tips to apply in everyday life and conversations, not just in helping with homework.
 - Ask why when children tell you they want something or want to do, or not do, something.
 - Use the word “because” after saying “No” or “Not tonight.”
 - Give reasons — you to your children, and them to you.
 - Encourage questions and explore answers, especially questions with answers that are not yes or no.
 - Explain and discuss issues or problems in your house, neighborhood and community. Brainstorm solutions.
 - Compare how things are alike and different, such as videos, movies and food.
 - Look for patterns.
 - Describe and categorize stuff; encourage your children to use higher-level words that might describe how they feel about something.
 - Tell your children what you value and why.
 - Encourage and celebrate opinions.

teacher, all piloted Common Core last year. One of the greatest changes they see — and expect parents will too — is continually asking kids how they do a task or why they think their answer is right. “It isn’t so much on the procedure of the math. It’s about thinking. How do I get this answer?” said Eisenberger, who teaches a second- and third-grade combo class. Students may follow different paths to answering a math problem. Parents, teachers say, should do the same. Don’t rush in with an answer. Don’t let kids think your way to solving a math problem in the only way. “One key thing parents can do is question your kids,” Eisenberger said. Ask them, “How did you come to this answer?”

“I think it is going to raise the bar for everyone. But I think a lot of kids will struggle.”

Jill Millward, who has students at Roosevelt Elementary and North Junior High in Boise

Kids may draw pictures to show you the answer. Or combine numbers in a way different than their parents learned. But teachers believe the approach will help them get a better sense of numbers that goes deeper than memorization.

Write Your Own Problems

Common Core is based on putting learning in a real-world setting, something that will engage kids’ interests. Teachers often will have kids write their own math problems. Teachers can see through student writing whether students understand the concepts instructors are trying to teach, Schwehr said. Student-written problems also tend to reflect students’ interests. An example of a student-written problem Eisenberger has seen: I have 18 erasers. I gave some to my friend Kyle and now I have nine left. How many did I give to Kyle? “If they connect to what they know, they will remember,” Schwehr said. Math homework won’t look the same, either. “We are not going to be sending home 30 problems,” Maloney said. There may only be two math problems, but they will ask the students to go into more depth by explaining how they get their answers and justifying their work. Critical thinking is a key component of teaching Common Core. Teachers are no longer purveyors of information, but rather facilitators, Eisenberger said. They will try to bring ideas out of kids’ minds, not just shove them in. Schwehr will be less interested in asking her students when George Washington was born than in asking about his leadership. “Was George Washington a good leader? Why would you consider him a good polygamy. Suffrage only became law there in January 1896, when Utah became a state. Women’s use of that right today likely would delight Elizabeth Cady Stanton and Lucretia Mott, who started the suffrage movement in 1848, and Susan B. Anthony, who also pushed the cause. Those women and many other women and men worked tirelessly to obtain voting rights for women. Yet all died more than a decade before the 19th Amendment was enacted. Today, American women are taking advantage of voting rights in greater numbers than men, according to the Center for American Women in Politics at Rutgers University.

Granted, women make up more than half of the U.S. population. But they also have cast 4 million to 7 million more votes than men in recent elections. Population counts aside, the proportion of women who voted has exceeded the proportion of men who voted in every presidential election since 1980. And the number of women voting has beat that of men in every presidential election since 1964, the Rutgers center notes. In 2004, a greater voting gender gap materialized than in any previous presidential election: 60.1 percent of women voters went to the polls, compared with 56.3 percent for men. And in every presidential election, the gap between male and female voters grows slightly larger. The advent of voting by women nearly a century ago has not resulted in great numbers of women in public office. That gender gap remains wide. In Idaho, for example, both U.S. senators, both U.S. representatives, the governor and all statewide elected executives are men. The Legislature is slightly more balanced, with five women among the 35 state senators and 21 women among the 70 state representatives. Still, Idaho sits in 21st place nationwide for its proportion of women legislators — 24.8 percent. We’ve come a long way, baby, indeed. But in gaining elected office, women still have a long way to go.

Fla. Gunman, Boss Were Close Prior to Shooting

LAKE BUTLER, Fla. (AP) • A longtime employee of a Florida trucking company was once very close with his former boss, even known as his right-hand man. But police say Hubert Allen Jr. drove around Saturday and shot former co-workers and his onetime boss, killing the ex-employer and another man before turning a gun on himself.

On Sunday, residents in this close-knit community near Jacksonville mourned and tried to piece together what happened. Police didn't release any new details or information on a possible motive.

"Mr. Hubert was a real quiet guy," said the Rev. Patrick Maxwell of the Victory Christian Center. "He wasn't the type who would go around and say I have a grudge against anyone."

Maxwell said he visited Allen's daughter and grandchildren after the shootings. The family was as surprised as the rest of the town and had no idea what sparked the shootings, Maxwell said.

Allen's wife died in the late 1990s and he lived alone. Maxwell said he had developed a serious heart disease and his church had prayed for him recently. Allen, 72, didn't attend the church, but his daughter and grandchildren did.

It wasn't yet clear why Allen stopped working for Pritchett Trucking Inc.

On Saturday, Allen drove to a location owned by his former boss, Marvin Pritchett. He shot and killed former co-worker Rolando Gonzalez-Delgado, 28, around 9 a.m., then went a short distance and killed Pritchett, 80, who founded the company in 1980.

A few minutes later, Allen pulled over where another former co-worker was driving a farm tractor, exchanged words with him and fired a shotgun, authorities said. The victim, 66-year-old Lewis Mabrey Jr., was in good condition Sunday, hospital spokeswoman Nickie Doria said.

Allen then went to the company's headquarters in Lake Butler and shot 44-year-old David Griffis in the stomach, the sheriff's office said. Griffis was in critical condition Sunday.

Allen killed himself at his nearby home.

It was clear to everyone in town that Allen and Pritchett had a good relationship at one point. "You had the assumption, no, the conviction, that they were close," Maxwell said.

Pritchett grew up in Union County and was constantly involved in businesses, from gas stations to truck companies to his beloved farm, Rolling Oaks. Residents said he was known around town as Mr. P, a generous man who gave to charitable groups and projects and treated his employees well.

Boy with Rare Brain Infection Remains on Ventilator

MIAMI (AP) • Family members of a 12-year-old boy who was infected by a rare and deadly amoeba say he's on a ventilator.

Zachary Reyna has fought the brain infection for weeks. Family members say he was infected while knee boarding with friends in a ditch near his family's La-Belle home on Aug. 3.

His uncle, Homer Villarreal, said doctors told family members on Saturday that the boy's brain isn't showing any activity.

"The doctors did all they could do. It's up to the good man upstairs," he said, adding that the family was praying. "I just wish a miracle would happen."

Last week, the family had reported on a Facebook page that antibiotics had defeated the infection and tests showed negative activity from the amoeba.

But on Sunday, Villarreal told The Associated Press that the infection had resulted in extensive brain damage. Barring any changes in the boy's condition, he said Reyna's parents plan to take him off the ventilator. A post on their Facebook page said they planned to donate Reyna's organs.

"Even though Zac has passed, he will still be saving many lives," the post read.

Family members and friends were visiting Reyna on Sunday at Miami Children's Hospital.

Villarreal said the family was still reeling from the sudden loss of a boy with boundless energy. He said Reyna played multiple sports and had challenged him to a basketball game just two days before he was admitted to the hospital.

"It's hard for me to believe that Zachary can be laying in bed when this kid would never run out of energy," Villarreal said. "It's hard for all of us to believe this is happening to him."

Youth Step Up for March Anniversary

Young people take their chance to lead while honoring work of civil rights activists.

WASHINGTON (AP) • Mary-Pat Hector of Atlanta was operating much like a 1960s civil rights activist as she laid plans for the 50th anniversary of the March on Washington. She was constantly on the phone as she confirmed event details, tweaked the draft of the speech she gave at Saturday's rally at the Lincoln Memorial and prepared for a presentation.

Mary-Pat is 15 years old.

Just as the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. led the Montgomery Bus Boycott at age 26, and Rep. John Lewis helped to lead freedom rides at 23, young Americans like Mary-Pat are not letting age get in the way as they seek more than a contributing role in the push for social reform.

Young people are eager to influence this year's March on Washington, says Jessica Brown, national coordinator for the Black Youth Vote coalition, which organized several youth events around Saturday's march to the Lincoln Memorial.

"Of course you have the seasoned people who are there, and they are always rightfully going to have their position," Brown said. "But you're starting to see the pickup of the youth saying, 'This is our time, this is our moment, this is the opportunity we have to show the world and the nation, that we're here and we're ready to work and organize to get things done."

In 1963, those "seasoned people" were A. Philip Randolph and Bayard Rustin, who birthed the idea of a Washington march to appeal for jobs and justice, and ultimately attracted 250,000 people. Today, the Rev. Al Sharpton and Martin Luther King III, who were 8 and 5 years old, respectively, in 1963, are the veterans who brought thousands to the Lincoln Memorial on Saturday. The King Center also has organized a ceremony on Wednesday, the actual march anniversary, when President Barack Obama will speak.

Friday night, students and young adults gathered at Howard University in Washington for a mass meeting and rally ahead of Saturday's march — activity patterned after the student rallies that were held before major demonstrations during the civil rights movement.

Anthony Miller, president of the Howard University Student Association, said students recognize the historical significance, and some are using this moment to express their continuing anger over the shooting death of black Florida teen Trayvon Martin.

Insurgent Attacks on Varied Targets in Iraq Kill at Least 41

ASSOCIATED PRESS

Relatives grieve for Mohammed Ali, 18, who was killed Friday when a suicide bomber attacked a park that was filled with people going to cafes and restaurants in Baghdad, Iraq.

Month-long wave of violence is aimed at destabilizing the country.

BAGHDAD (AP) • Insurgents bent on destabilizing Iraq killed at least 41 people in numerous attacks scattered around the country on Sunday, striking targets as varied as a coffee shop, a wedding party convoy and a carload of off-duty soldiers.

The attacks are part of a months-long wave of killing that is the country's worst spate of bloodshed since 2008. The violence is calling into question the security forces' ability to protect the country and raising fears that Iraq's sec-ularian and ethnic divisions are pushing it back toward the brink of civil war.

One of the day's boldest attacks happened near the northern Iraqi city of Mosul, where militants set up a fake security checkpoint, captured five soldiers and shot them dead, a police officer said. The soldiers were dressed in civilian clothes and returning to base in a taxi.

Inside Mosul, other gunmen in a speeding car shot and killed a grocer, he said, though the motive was not immediately clear. The grocer was a member of the Shabak ethnic group, which has its own distinct language and religious beliefs.

Mosul, a former insurgent stronghold, is about 220 miles northwest of Baghdad.

Another police officer said a car bomb exploded as a judge drove past in the northern town of Balad, killing three nurses and a man who had been walking nearby. Thirteen other people were wounded, including the judge, his brother and a driver, he added.

Syria Agrees to UN Probe of Purported Attacks

DAMASCUS, Syria (AP)

• Syria reached an agreement with the United Nations on Sunday to allow a team of international experts to visit the site of alleged chemical weapons attacks last week outside Damascus, state media and the U.N. said.

A statement on Syrian state television said Foreign Minister Walid al-Moallem and U.N. disarmament chief Angela Kane struck the deal during talks in Damascus, and that the two sides are working to finalize the date and time of the visit.

The world body said that a team of U.N. experts already in Syria has been instructed to focus on investigating the purported attack on Wednesday. The mission "is preparing to conduct on-site fact-finding activities" today, U.N. spokesman Martin Nesirky said in a statement.

Anti-government activists and Doctors Without Borders say that more than 300 people were killed in the alleged toxic gas attack on the eastern suburbs of the Syrian capital. Images purporting to show the aftermath of the attack are filled with people gasping for breath and dead children unmarked by any wounds.

The eastern Ghouta area where the attack took place is under opposition control, which makes arranging a trip across the front lines difficult. Rebels and the main Western-backed opposition group have said they would guarantee access and the safety of a U.N. team to facilitate an investigation.

Nesirky said the Syrian government "affirmed that it will provide the necessary cooperation, including the observance of the cessation of hostilities at the locations related to the incident."

investigate and not take everything to heart? I sure surprised myself. Righteous indignation comes out because you have to fight hard for these kids because who is going to do it?"

Jeannine's husband, Dave Barneby, volunteered too. They have advocated for more than 50 kids since becoming CASAs in 2005.

"We have some pretty wide-ranging investigative powers that the social workers don't have," said Dave Barneby. "We can go to the doctors that are involved. HIPAA does not bind them. We can talk to them. We have a judge's appointment that lets us get into some things that a social worker can't."

Because of their time with CASA, they're allowed to handle high-profile cases, which include sexual and physical abuse.

"We have seen families going on three, four generations of drug abuse or sex abuse. It's generational. That's what they know; they don't know any different," he said.

The Barnebys sometimes work 15 hours a day on cases, and the work has been eye-opening.

"Not that we lived in a bubble," Jeannine said. "I'm not saying that. ... Being face to face with it, it's a renewed appreciation for our own parents giving us the things that we had and the values that we had that we could give to our children. We see that these kids we are trying to help, they have not seen good things.

"There are problems in our community. And if you see them, speak up. Be more appreciative of what you have. Don't be critical of that child you see that maybe comes to school dirty?"

The Barnebys said they have helped several children break generational cycles of dysfunction. Some have climbed out of bleak socioeconomic roots, but others have wound up in prison.

"If I make a difference in one or two lives, I hang onto that," Jeannine said.

Despite a childhood of abuse and abandonment, one Twin Falls woman managed to rise above.

"My mom gave me and my brother up when we were small," said Natassia Lee, 21. "I grew up with my grandparents. She left us to go and do drugs and be all crazy. I really resented it when my mom left, because who was going to take me to school my first day? Who was going to do all those things with me?"

Abandonment issues manifested into behavioral problems and made it difficult for her grandmother to raise her. Lee moved back with her mom when she was 12. She acknowledges that her dysfunctional behavior didn't mix well with her mother's and stepfather's alcoholism. Fights erupted, with violence by all parties.

Lee said she was 15 when the adults reprimanded her for sneaking out to see a boy. "We got in this big blowout. They grounded me and said all kinds of things. They went to bed. Then I snuck out my window and ran away because I didn't want to deal with her screaming and saying I can't do anything right. My goal was to get as far away from them as I could, but that didn't work."

Police picked up Lee and took her to juvenile detention. She was an unlikely candidate for adoption because of her age.

A CASA represented her through four court hearings.

"It would have been super hard to tell the court what I wanted and needed or my case worker, you can't always give them a call. Your case worker works close with your CASA worker, and they do what's best for you."

After being institutionalized and stripped of privileges, Lee wanted to go home again. But her mom didn't want her and let the state terminate her parental rights when Lee was 17. It was the second time she was abandoned.

Lee spent the rest of her childhood in the Safe House, a strict facility. A few months before turning 18, she took a few courses on finances there.

She said she hadn't graduated from high school, and no one taught her how to find a job or apartment. But she was turned out a day after her 18th birthday.

That's one example of "slipping through the cracks," Lee noted, and it's one of the biggest problems facing CASA.

A foster child isn't allowed to get a driver's license, Barton noted, and services to help transition kids into adult life are nearly nonexistent.

"That's got to be tough — turning 18, not having parents, not having a driver's license, not having a job because you probably couldn't get to work and you don't have anybody to take you to work," Barton said.

With nowhere to go, Lee went back to her mom and stepdad. She said, "The fights just started right where they stopped. So I moved out."

Lee said she worked two jobs, tried to finish high school and "struggled to stay afloat." Then she discovered crystal methamphetamine. In January 2012, she was arrested on felony drug charges and spent two months in jail.

Most people who spend their childhoods in foster homes and facilities wind up in prison, on drugs or dead, Barton said. Lee appeared to be headed down that path.

"When I was in jail," Lee said, "I filled my time doing stuff that would help me because I wanted to learn how to never be in there again. That color is horrible on me. I hate orange. I will never look at orange the same ever again."

When she got out of jail, Lee completed drug treatment, found work and enrolled in the College of Southern Idaho. She's since helped other kids struggling in the CASA program and is working to start a foster care alumni group to help kids in the system transition into adulthood.

"I worked so hard to become a better person because once I graduate from probation, they're going to expunge my record. I've worked so hard to do well so it can be expunged."

Lee has done so well, Barton said, that she sometimes has her offer cautionary tales to at-risk youths who don't have families.

Despite all she's gone through, from abandonment to imprisonment, Lee said she looks at life differently now. She said she let go of regret and tries to demonstrate the power of forgiveness.

She said she owes her mother thanks, because her journey has opened her mind and allowed for personal growth.

Once her criminal record is expunged, Lee said, she wants to become a social worker and use her experience to help others.

OBITUARIES

Virginia Becker

April 23, 1924 - August 4, 2013

TWIN FALLS • Virginia Becker, born in Painesville, Ohio on April 23, 1924 to George and Veta Marie Sobera, has gone to be with her Savior on August 4, 2013. She had three brothers, Richard, Bernard and John; and one sister, Genevieve, who preceded her in death.

Virginia grew up in Selma, Alabama, married Ray Thornton in 1942 and gave birth to her daughter, Cheryl. She then moved to Fort Wayne, Indiana and gave birth to her other two daughters, Diane and Suzanne. Diane passed away at four months.

Virginia and Ray moved to Twin Falls in 1947, and Virginia worked for a construction company. She later divorced Ray and met Robert J. Becker, whom she married in 1950. They lived in Castleford and her two sons, Bob and Marty Becker, were born there. Virginia and Robert farmed in the Castleford area for the next 46 years until Robert's death in 1996. Their crops were always the envy of the community. In 1997, Virginia moved back to Twin Falls and built her little dream home. She always took great pride in her beautiful yard.

Virginia was a volunteer at Magic Valley Memorial Hospital and then St. Luke's for 26 years and was known as the "joke lady." Her risqué jokes would even make the doc-tors blush! She loved the patients and the volunteers, and they loved her back. She always had a wicked sense of humor and loved to make people laugh. She was kind to everyone she met and had a special place in her heart for the underdog. Her generosity is well known. She also served as president of the Auxiliary for five terms, was Volunteer of the Year in 2011, and was active and awesome in fund raising for the hospital.

Virginia loved her children, grandchildren and great grandchildren deeply, and they loved her just as much. She was so proud of all of them. There wasn't a card or board game that she didn't love to play. Virginia was a lifelong avid reader, who in her prime could devour a book a day. She had an amazing vocabulary.

She also had a special love for her dog, Sugar Babe, who brought her so much joy. It was hard for her to part with Sugar, but she found her a wonderful family, who faithfully brought Sugar to visit Virginia each week that she was in assisted living.

Mother was so lucky to have so many loyal wonderful friends who visited and cared for her until her death. She never wanted to leave them, because they meant so much to her.

Virginia is survived by her four children and their spouses: Cheryl and Ken Mindell, Coppell, Texas; Suzanne Lallis, El Mirage, Arizona; Bob and Lesa Becker, Meridian; and Marty and Teresa Becker, Bonners Ferry; nine grandchildren and 19 great grandchildren. Her love, generosity, kindness and humor will be missed by all of her friends and family.

At Virginia's request, there will be no funeral but instead a celebration of her life at the Twin Falls Reformed Church, 1631 Grandview Drive N. on August 31 at 2 p.m. Feel free to dress casually and come enjoy great stories, music, a slide show, mementos of Virginia's life, and hors d'oeuvres. In lieu of flowers, donations may be made in her name to the Twin Falls women's shelter, Valley House, The Mustard Seed or the Twin Falls Humane Society.

Services and arrangements are under the direction of the Parke's Magic Valley Funeral Home of Twin Falls.

Those wishing to share memories and condolences may do so at www.magic-valleyfuneralhome.com.

First Woman to be Member of the NYSE Siebert Dies at 80

NEW YORK (AP) • Muriel "Mickie" Siebert, the first woman to become a member of the New York Stock Exchange, has died of complications of cancer at age 80.

Siebert died Saturday of complications from cancer at Memorial Sloan-Kettering Cancer Center in New York. Her death was confirmed by Jane Macon, a director of Siebert Financial and a partner at the law firm Norton Rose Fulbright.

Siebert was founder and president of brokerage firm that bears her name, Muriel Siebert & Co. Inc. The company went public in 1996 as Siebert Financial Corp.

Macon said Siebert was "a fabulous woman, a trailblazer and a pioneer" who set a high standard for those who entered the financial world after her.

Siebert, who was born in Cleveland and moved to New York in 1954 at age 22, started her career as a trainee in research at Bache & Co. earning a $65 a week. She went on to become an industry specialist in airlines and aerospace and later became a partner at brokerages including Brimberg & Co.

She bought a seat on the New York Stock Exchange in December 1967 after months of struggling with the male-dominated business world that initially resisted her efforts to join. She established her investment firm the same year and transformed it into a discount brokerage house in 1975.

Siebert took a leave of absence from the company in 1977 and placed it in a blind trust to be run by the employees when she was appointed the first woman superintendent of banking for the State of New York by Gov. Hugh Carey. She served five years.

As interest rates climbed steeply and bank failures became common, Siebert launched protective measures to prevent banks from failing in New York. She re-organized troubled banks, forced bank mergers, and convinced the federal government to advance millions of dollars to make the new mergers viable. She persuaded stronger institutions to help weaker ones.

In 1982, Siebert resigned from the job to run for the Republican nomination for the U.S. Senate seat of Daniel Patrick Moynihan. She came in second to a state lawmaker, Florence Sullivan, who went on to lose to Moynihan in the November election.

Siebert returned to running her company.

To celebrate 30 years as member of the exchange, Siebert was invited to ring the closing bell on the NYSE. The ceremony was held on Jan. 5, 1998.

The next year, while president of the New York Women's Agenda — a coalition of over 100 women's organizations — Siebert developed a personal finance program to improve the financial literacy of young people.

Yosemite Fire ‘Poses Every Challenge There Can Be’

GROVELAND, Calif. (AP) • At Ike Bunney’s dude ranch near the Sierra community of Tuolumne City, all creatures have been evacuated as firefighters brace for an intense battle to keep a wildfire raging north of Yosemite National Park out of mountain communities.

“We’ve already evacuated the horses,” said Bunney, who was keeping an eye on his Slide Mountain Guest Ranch on Sunday. “I think they’re worried about the fire sparking over these hills.”

As fire leapfrogs across the vast, picturesque Sierra forests, moving from one treetop to the next, residents in the fire’s path are moving animals and children to safety.

The fire has moved northeast away from Groveland, where smoke gave away to blue skies Sunday. But at Tuolumne City’s Black Oak Casino in Tuolumne City, the slot machines were quiet as emergency workers took over nearly all of the resort’s 148 hotel rooms.

“The casino is empty,” said casino employee Jessie Dean, who left her four children at relatives’ homes in the Central Valley. “Technically, the casino is open, but there’s nobody there.”

Hundreds of firefighters were deployed Sunday to protect Tuolumne City and other communities in the path of the Rim Fire. Eight fire trucks and four bulldozers were deployed near Bunney’s ranch on the west side of Mount Baldy, where two years of drought have created tinder-dry conditions.

“Winds are increasing, so it’s going to be very challenging,” said Bjorn Frederickson, a spokesman for the U.S. Forest Service.

The fire continues burning in the remote wilderness area of Yosemite, but park spokesman Tom Medena said it’s edging closer to the Hetchy Firefighter A.J. Tevis watches the flames of the Rim Fire near Yosemite National Park, Calif., on Sunday.

Reservoir, the source of San Francisco’s famously pure drinking water.

Despite ash falling like snowflakes on the reservoir and a thick haze of smoke limiting visibility to 100 feet, the quality of the water piped to the city 150 miles away is still good, say officials with the San Francisco Public Utilities Commission.

The city’s hydroelectric power generated by the system has been interrupted by the fire, forcing the utility to spend $600,000 buying power on the open market.

Park employees are continuing their efforts to protect two groves of giant sequoias that are unique the region by cutting brush and setting sprinklers, Medena said.

The fire has consumed more than 209 square miles of picturesque forests. Officials estimate containment at just 7 percent.

Fire lines near Ponderosa Hills and Twain Hart are being cut miles ahead of the blaze in locations where fire officials hope they will help protect the communities should the fire jump containment lines.

“There is a huge focus in those areas in terms of air support and crews on the ground building fire lines to protect those communities. We’re facing difficult conditions and extremely challenging weather,” Frederickson said.

The high winds and movement of the fire from bone-dry brush on the ground to 100-foot oak and pine treetops have created dire conditions.

“A crown fire is much more difficult to fight,” said Daniel Berlant of the California Department of Forestry and Fire Protection. “Our firefighters are on the ground having to spray up.”

The blaze sweeping across steep, rugged river canyons quickly has become one of the biggest in California history, thanks in part to extremely dry conditions caused by a lack of snow and rainfall this year. Investigators are trying to determine how the fire started Aug. 17.

Police, DA Clash after Fatal Crash in Utah

KEARNS, Utah (AP) • A deadly single-vehicle crash in Kearns is prompting a squabble between Utah’s Fraternal Order of Police and Salt Lake County District Attorney Sim Gill. Fraternal Order of Police President Brent Jex told KUTV-TV that 43-year-old James Wilkes might be alive had not his drug case been dismissed by Gill. Wilkes, who was killed in the Friday wreck, was charged last December in 3rd District Court with felony drug distribution. But his case was among dozens linked to a West Valley City narcotics unit that were dismissed because of what prosecutors viewed as credibility issues.

Military Removes Nuclear Weapons Unit Commander

MALMSTROM AIR FORCE BASE, Mont. (AP) • The Air Force has removed the commander of a nuclear weapons unit at a Montana base following a failed safety and security inspection that marked the second major misstep this year for one of the military’s most sensitive missions.

Military leaders say the decision to relieve Col. David Lynch of command at Malmstrom Air Force Base stems from a loss of confidence. They say it is not the result of the failed inspection this month first reported by The Associated Press on Aug. 13. Lynch will transition into retirement, base spokesman Sgt. Robert Biermann said Sunday. Lynch’s command included the 341st Missile Wing, which operates land-based nuclear missiles known as 450 Minuteman 3 intercontinental ballistic missiles. The unit failed a review of its adherence to rules that ensure the safety, security and control of its nuclear weapons.

This is the second time in recent months that an Air Force nuclear commander was replaced following a high-profile security problem.

Lt. Col. Randy Olson was relieved of duty at Minot Air Force Base, N.D., in June. The AP first reported an unprecedented sidelining of 17 launch officers there in May following an exceptionally poor review in the spring.

The 341st Security Forces Group, which Lynch had led since June 2012, has more than 1,200 personnel members and four squadrons. It provides security for the 341st Missile Wing, 15 launch control centers and 150 nuclear missile silos in a huge area of central Montana.

Utah Carriage Horse Owner Apologizes over Photograph

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — A business owner who provides horse-drawn carriage rides in Salt Lake City has apologized for sending out a misleading photo after one of her horses collapsed near Temple Square on Aug. 17.

Annette Overson of Carriage for Hire admits she publicly released a photo of a different horse last week and not of the 13-year-old horse named Jerry that collapsed while pulling a carriage.

Though the photo's release to The Salt Lake Tribune was designed to ease concerns over Jerry's condition, Overson said she now realizes sending the wrong picture was a "stupid mistake."

"It wasn't the right horse and I shouldn't have done it. It was wrong," she told KTVX-TV.

Overson insisted Jerry is alive and well after being treated for colic, an abdominal pain that can cause serious and sometimes deadly problems. But she declined to comment on where the animal is being housed, saying her company has been besieged by threats.

Overson's apology came a day after People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals activists raised questions about the photo and Jerry's condition. The animal-welfare organization also is offering a $1,000 reward for information leading to Jerry's whereabouts.

PETA spokesman Jeremy Beckham said he believes there's a possibility Jerry may have died and his group just wants to make sure he's OK.

"I hate to say it, but this company has demonstrated they can't really be trusted,"

he said. "They've owned up to the fact that they've lied to the media and I think they deserve a little extra scrutiny."

PETA is urging local animal control officials to inspect the stable where Jerry was housed and to subpoena veterinary records.

"We fear that Jerry may have become another victim of the cruel horse-carriage trade," Beckham said, adding he knew immediately that the photo the company released was not of Jerry.

Activists Keep Nev. Horses from Going to Slaughter

RENO, Nev. (AP) • Some 150 mustangs that had been set to be auctioned off for possible slaughter after their removal from the range in Nevada have been granted a reprieve.

With financial backing from Florida horse lover Victoria McCullough, activists acquired the animals Friday for $29,800, or $200 a head, from the Fort McDermitt Paiute-Shoshone Tribe in northern Nevada.

McCullough, who seeks a ban on the slaughter of horses for consumption and export to other countries, rescues the animals through her Wellington, Fla.-based Triumph Project. She also is chairwoman of the board of Chesapeake Petroleum, a leading oil distribution company in the Washington, D.C. area.

Plans call for the horses to be split up among rescue groups and to end up at homes in Nevada and California, said Ginger Kathrens, founder and executive director of Colorado-based horse advocacy group The Cloud Foundation.

The purchase was a joint effort by various horse defenders, including Madeleine Pickens of Saving America's Mustangs. At McCullough's request, Florida state Sen. Joseph Abruzzo negotiated with the tribe.

"What an incredible, collaborative effort by all involved," Kathrens said.

A federal judge cleared the way Wednesday for the tribe to sell the 150 mustangs over the objection of activists who claimed the unbranded animals are federally protected wild horses that should not be auctioned off for possible slaughter in Mexico or Canada.

Neb. Man Kills Self after Letting Abducted Wife Go

IMPERIAL, Neb. (AP) • A man who abducted his estranged wife from the Lincoln hair salon where she works killed himself, authorities said Sunday, hours after the wife emerged from a field in the area where the two were last seen.

A state police official said searchers found 37-year-old Dwayne Lawrence's body in a cornfield outside of Imperial Sunday night, The Imperial Republican reported. He had shot himself.

His estranged wife, 38-year-old Julie Hanes, could be seen walking and talking to people at the search staging area after before she was taken by ambulance to a hospital.

Police say Lawrence abducted Hanes from the salon where she works at around noon on Saturday. Her parents and some other family members live in Imperial, which is 260 miles west of Lincoln near Nebraska's borders with Colorado and Kansas.

Police say Dwayne Lawrence abducted Julie Hanes from the salon where she works at around noon on Saturday.

noon on Saturday from the salon where she works in Lincoln. Imperial is about 260 miles west of Lincoln near Nebraska's borders with Colorado and Kansas, and several of Hanes' family members, including her parents, live in Imperial.

Local, state and federal law enforcement officers began searching an eight-square-mile area west of Imperial on Sunday after an Imperial police officer spotted Lawrence's gold 1998 Chrysler Concorde before dawn. Lawrence sped off, and the car was later found abandoned in the rural area outside of the city.

A motorist reported seeing the couple later walking along a country road in the area, the newspaper reported.

Court records show that Hanes filed for divorce July 30, about two weeks after she got a protection order against Lawrence, who she married in 2001. She told a judge that Lawrence had threatened her several times, and he was facing several charges related to a July 8 incident.

Hanes told police that Lawrence fired a gunshot into their bedroom wall and threatened to kill himself in front of her in the hope that she would take her own life. She said in order to get him to lower the gun, she told her husband she would stay with him.

Lawrence had been charged with false imprisonment, making threats and using a weapon to commit crimes. When he posted $25,000 bond on July 16, he was ordered to stay away from Hanes and any firearms.

government reach into the marketplace, and one that every citizen and business in the state of Idaho paid for. Whether you live in Nampa, St. Maries or Sandpoint, you paid for Hoku's failure in Pocatello.

Strange that your politicians (city, county or state) aren't talking about it. Especially given that so many politicians were racing to discuss it just a few short years ago. They told us the Hoku's polysilicon plant was going to bring jobs, jobs, jobs. Officials from the city of Pocatello, the county of Bannock and the state of Idaho rolled out the red carpet. They issued statements and jumped for joy. And they doled out the dollars.

Gov. C.L. "Butch" Otter gave a shout-out to Hoku in his 2007 State of the State message: "I'm pleased to announce today that Hawaii-based Hoku Scientific has agreed to open a plant in Pocatello for manufacturing solar modules and polysilicon for the solar energy and integrated circuit markets," Otter told lawmakers. "The company is investing $250 million and will create over 200 jobs with a payroll of more than $10 million a year."

Pocatello gave the company a 67-acre plot of land for 99 years at a rate of $1 per year. The city had paid nearly $1 million for the land. The state of Idaho shelled out $870,000 in corporate subsidies, including money for public infrastructure to accommodate the plant, fencing and right-of-way acquisition. Most of the money went to workforce training funds for Hoku employees; the state had committed $950,000 for the worker training program, but spent closer to $651,000. Money for the training funds comes from a portion of payroll taxes paid by Idaho employers.

Hoku has since declared bankruptcy, owing creditors $1 billion. The plant is shuttered. No one knows what's going to happen next. It's possible the whole investment will be scrapped, or some other company will come in and utilize the property. Officials haven't done much defending of Hoku or the government's investment in it, mostly because the media haven't asked them to do so.

Every groundbreaking and ribbon-cutting brings out the politicians. The reverse isn't true for bankruptcies and project mothballings. Government bureaucrats and elected officials want to pose for pictures at the groundbreaking. They're nowhere to be found when the project collapses.

Taxpayers paid for a failed economic venture. Supporters of such economic meddling will argue that the investment in infrastructure and employees never goes away, and so nothing is lost. But there's no guarantee the infrastructure will ever be utilized, or that the workforce training paid for by taxpayers will ever yield a return on investment in the form of higher-paying jobs. Indeed, the workforce training program that Idaho utilizes is notoriously ineffective, and by the state Department of Labor's own account, yields verifiable results just 40 percent of the time.

Hoku is another example of why the government shouldn't be actively participating in the economy. The government shouldn't pick which companies to help and force the rest of us to pay the bill. The government should leave the marketplace alone, and let companies prosper or fail on their own merits.

And when the government strays into the marketplace, gambles with taxpayer money and loses, the politicians and bureaucrats who made the decisions should own the failures and explain themselves to us, the people who paid the bills.

Wayne Hoffman is president of the Idaho Freedom Foundation.

Wolves Deserve Better Treatment

I am writing as a neighbor and an advocate for the environment. I oppose the lethal management of wolves and their delisting in the other 48 states. Methods such as fladry, lights, noise and outriders are effective means of control.

Wolf hunting often is based on exaggerations.

The Idaho Department of Fish and Game reported wolves killed 92 out of 2.37 million cattle in Idaho in 2013. Wolves are not a threat.

The ranchers are compensated by taxpayers.

Elk are at record levels. Wolves have not decimated elk numbers but have caused behavior changes that may make hunting a challenge. They kill diseased elk and help prevent the spread of disease to cattle.

Two recent scientific papers published by Oregon and Washington state scientists document the value of wolves to the ecosystem. They prevent over-browsing, allowing trees and berry bushes to regenerate, feeding grizzlies, birds and small mammals. Their kills feed small mammals, birds and beetles. They contribute to carbon elimination due to regeneration of greenery and cool water for fish.

In our time of climate change and as our forests and grasslands burn, this is important. Wolves have never been "game" animals and when facts are presented, there is no reason to hunt them other than to serve politicians' and hunters' ego and hysterical antiquated attitudes.

Wolves deserve better treatment for their contributions to our environment. When Idahoans look at these facts, hopefully they can understand there is a reason for the term "balance of nature" and oppose the killing of this valuable predator. Thank you for providing a forum for facts.

Rep. Simpson is on Idaho's Side

As turmoil and negativity continues to mount in Congress, I'd like to shed some positive light for the residents in Idaho's 2nd Congressional District. We are very fortunate to have Rep. Mike Simpson representing our corner of the world in Washington.

As a dairyman in our nation's third largest dairy-producing state, I personally recognize the vital role agriculture has in the daily life of our state and district.

Rep. Simpson does, too. In recent years, our dairy industry has suffered devastating losses due to escalating feed costs and volatile milk prices.

To address the challenges faced by our state and nation's dairy farmers, Rep. Simpson co-sponsored the Dairy Security Act, which eliminates outdated and costly dairy programs and replaces them with programs that provide dairy farmers a measure of protection against catastrophic loss, keeps consumer prices stable and saves taxpayers money.

While it is disheartening to see the House's current version of the Farm Bill does not include this legislation, I have confidence Rep. Simpson will continue to urge for a Farm Bill that includes the much needed dairy revisions.

As the clock continues to wind down for Congress to pass a new Farm Bill, I know Rep. Simpson will continue to dedicate himself to ensuring Idaho's agriculture industry continues to thrive in the years to come.

Impact of Fires Will Persist in Idaho

If you've traveled much of the West, you've seen the aftermath of wildfire. It's easy to spot, even long after the ground has turned from black to brown and then sprouts new green.

Many of the effects are less obvious, and we could see some of those in the months and years ahead in the parts of Idaho hard hit by this season's fires.

The biggest — not the only — may be the Beaver Creek fire, around the Wood River Valley, an area where thousands of people were told to evacuate. Some may have snarked at the news reports of wealthy homeowners shouting bitterly at sheriff's deputies from their Lexuses, but the wealthy weren't the only people affected.

August is usually a busy time at the stores and restaurants of Ketchum and Hailey, but not last week. Many businesses remained open, but traffic was light at best. A public radio news report last week quoted Sarah Hedrick, owner of Iconoclast Books at

Randy Stapilus

Ridenbaugh.com

Ketchum, who said she hasn't yet paid off a large disaster loan from 2007, and now watches business drop.

She said, "If I lose my bookstores — and I don't mean to a fire, I felt very confident my store was going to be safe — I then lose my house, I then lose my livelihood, and I have four children to support. You know, the reality of a fire has a completely different impact."

And that's in the case of a fire stopped before it gets to town. Idaho hasn't for decades seen a wildfire actually destroy all or even a significant part of a town, but this season is showing it could happen. Some Beaver Creek firefighters said this is the first time they have seen a fire come so close to a substantial-sized community.

A year ago, the University of Oregon released a study from the Joint Fire Science Program finding that overall, the economic effect of wildfires is — surprise — mixed.

Cassandra Moseley, who worked on the project, said, "The increased spending on services related to fire suppression efforts certainly does not undo the social and economic damage caused by a wildfire. But that initial burst of money does offset some of the immediate economic damage. How the Forest Service spends its suppression money greatly influences how a community experiences a fire."

A summary also suggested that, "... employment and wages in a county tend to increase during large wildfires. But those same fires often lead to longer-term instability in local labor markets, by amplifying seasonal "ups and downs" in employment over the subsequent year.

Among the sectors most affected in the months following a fire are tourism and natural resources, which are often vital to the well-being of rural communities."

The report stated, "Local capture of suppression spending is important because it helps mediate labor market impacts. For every $1 million spent in the county, local employment increased 1 percent during the quarter of the fire."

The catch: Many counties, especially those small and rural, often lack the kinds of businesses that would "capture" the spending and cycle the money back into the local economy.

Of course, all of that is a separate issue from the loss of tourism in places that look not quite as pretty as they did before. Not to mention homes and businesses that are actually, you know, burned, or people injured or killed. All of which has to be factored in as Idaho plans ahead in a time of fire.

Randy Stapilus is a former Idaho newspaper reporter and editor, author of the Idaho Political Field Guide, edits the Idaho Weekly Briefing and blogs at www.ridenbaugh.com.

Private Lobbyists Get Public Pension

In at least 20 U.S. states, lobbyists who represent associations of cities, counties and school boards are entitled to public retirement benefits.

ALBANY, N.Y. (AP) • As a lobbyist in New York’s state-house, Stephen Acquario is doing pretty well. He pulls down $204,000 a year, more than the governor makes, gets a Ford Explorer as his company car and is afforded another special perk: Even though he’s not a government employee, he is entitled to a full state pension.

He’s among hundreds of lobbyists in at least 20 states — including Idaho — who get public pensions because they represent associations of counties, cities and school boards, an Associated Press review found. Legislatures granted them access decades ago on the premise that they serve governments and the public. In many cases, such access also includes state health care benefits.

But several states have started to question whether these organizations should qualify for such benefits, since they are private entities in most respects: They face no public oversight of their activities, can pay their top executives private-sector salaries and sometimes lobby for positions in conflict with taxpayers. New Jersey and Illinois are among the states considering legislation that would end their inclusion.

“It’s a question of, ‘Why are we providing government pensions to these private organizations?’ ” said Illinois Democratic Rep. Elaine Nekritz.

Acquario, executive director and general counsel of the New York State Association of Counties, argues that his group gives local government a voice in the state-house, and the perk of a state pension makes it easier to hire people with government expertise.

“We want the people that work in local governments to continue to be part of the solution,” he said. “We represent the same taxpayers.”

The debate is more about principle than big money, since the staffs of such organizations are relatively small and make barely a ripple in huge state retirement systems. The eight New York associations, for example, have fewer than 120 total employees out of 633,100 current workers in the state’s $158.7 billion pension system.

Still, the issue raises a public policy question as many states and taxpayers struggle to fund their pension obligations required by law.

“There is liability for taxpayers,” said Keith Brainard, research director of the National Association of State Retirement Administrators. “Providing a pension benefit involves some amount of risk for the state and when you provide access to employees of entities that are not in control of the state.”

Unlike state government, for example, these groups aren’t bound by salary restrictions — significant salary increases would result in increasing pension benefits.

New York Conference of Mayors Executive Director Peter Baynes, who makes $196,000 a year and gets a 2012 Jeep Grand Cherokee, argues that his and other associations have been at the fore of pushing to reduce taxpayers’ costs, including reducing the costs of the pension system they share.

New York lawmakers recently acted to reduce benefits for future government hires and are proposing 401(k) savings programs for employees instead of traditional pensions.

But such cuts won’t affect Baynes. Under the New York Constitution and that of most states, the benefits of those already in the pension system are protected from future cuts.

“It’s clear that there’s a big problem with hypocrisy when these lobbyists have been pushing austerity and benefit cuts for other government workers while they themselves enjoy solid state pensions,” said Michael Kink of the progressive group Strong Economy for All Coalition. “‘Do as I say, not as I do’ seems to be their approach on retirement cuts.” “Workers who have faced cuts in pay and pensioners have a right to be angry — as do voters,” Kink said.

In many states, lobbying groups for states and counties take positions that could conflict with taxpayer interests, such as advocating to weaken caps on property tax increases and boosting state school aid.

But associations of cities, counties and school boards argue that a plausible case can be made for allowing Acquario is among hundreds of lobbyists in at least 20 states who get public pensions because they represent associations of counties, cities and school boards, an Associated Press review found.

States That Allow Private Lobbyists in Pension

At least 20 states allow some private lobbying groups to tap into often lucrative and safe state pension systems, according to a review by Associated Press reporters across the nation. Legislatures granted such groups access decades ago on the premise that they serve governments and the public, but several states have started to question whether they should be included since they are private entities. States that allow at least one private lobbying group into the public pension:

- Alabama
- Arizona
- California
- Colorado
- Idaho
- Illinois
- Kansas
- Kentucky

- Maine
- Missouri
- Nevada
- New York
- New Jersey
- North Carolina

them to get state pensions. These quasi-government organizations operate mostly or solely on dues from their members — local governments or school boards typically — which are paid out of taxpayer-funded budgets. They argue they pool their resources to give a voice to government entities that serve taxpayers.

“It’s a technical truism that lobbying groups are not supposed to be in the system,” said Richard Brodsky, a former New York assemblyman. “But what they are doing is carrying out missions assigned to them by public officials in the public interest as they understand it.”

Which groups get the pension benefit vary widely across the nation.

In Colorado, the list includes the Colorado High School Activities Associations, which runs state sports tournaments. Alabama gives it to the state affiliate of the National Education Association teachers’ union. Washington state includes the Washington Apple Commission, which operates like a trade group. North Carolina’s state Athletic Coaches Association is included, as is Tennessee’s private Industry Council.

New York lawmakers decided years ago to bar any more lobbying and nonprofit groups in the pension system, grandfathering in eight groups.

New Jersey Gov. Chris Christie, who supports legislation to cut future hires from such groups out of his state’s pension, issued an executive order this month creating a Pension Fraud and Abuse Unit. Among its mandates is to look at “claims of improper participation in the retirement systems.”

Caretaker Kills Grizzly in E. Idaho

BOISE (AP) • Officials are investigating the killing of a young female grizzly bear by the caretaker of a private residence in eastern Idaho near Yellowstone National Park.

The caretaker shot the bear Friday evening in the Shotgun Valley area of Island Park, said Gregg Losinski of the Idaho Department of Fish and Game. No humans were injured. The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service is investigating because grizzlies are listed as a threatened species.

Losinski said the caretaker was carrying a rifle while performing chores because a bear had been at the property before and had torn down a birdfeeder.

The bear died only a few miles from the site of an Aug. 15 grizzly bear attack on two Bureau of Land Management contract workers. The bear charged after being startled, biting one worker on the thigh and backside. The other worker used pepper spray and was bitten on the hand before the bear ran off.

“The one thing we’re most interested in is if this is the same bear involved in the incident a week ago,” Losinski said Sunday.

He said DNA samples from the dead bear will be compared with DNA taken from the clothing of the workers who were attacked. He didn’t know when results would be available.

Grizzly attacks have become more common in Wyoming, Montana and Idaho as the region’s grizzly population has rebounded over the past 20 years. Losinski said the Yellowstone region now has slightly more than 600 grizzlies.

In a different incident that also occurred Aug. 15, a sow grizzly attacked two hikers in Yellowstone National Park on a trail near Canyon Village after the hikers came across a young cub. One hiker was treated at a hospital for bite and claw wounds. The other was treated at the scene. Officials decided not to pursue the grizzly.

DECLO NO. 1 IN PRESEASON 2A POLL

In the 1A-I ranks, Hagerman received the most first-place votes and checked in at No. 2.

BY DAVID BASHORE
dbashore@magicvalley.com

TWIN FALLS • Declo will begin the 2013 season the way it ended 2012: at the top.

The Hornets were voted the No. 1 team in the preseason 2A state football media poll, tabulated Sunday evening.

Declo received seven of eight first-place votes. The team it beat, Firth, got the other and is ranked No. 2. West Side, Salmon and Grangeville rounded out the 2A top five.

In the 1A-I ranks, Hagerman received the most first-place votes, with four, and checked in at No. 3. Kamiah was top the poll, followed by Butte County, Hagerman, Troy and Raft River.

Four reigning champions were atop their respective pre-season polls. In 3A, Shelley led Fruitland, Gooding, Snake River and Timberlake. In 1A-II, Salmon River led Lighthouse Christian, Dietrich, Garden Valley and Carey.

No 4A team from District IV was in the poll. Bishop Kelly was ranked No. 1, followed by Bonneville, which lost Saturday to Bingham (Utah) on national television. Blackfoot, Skyview and Middleton rounded out the 4A rankings.

The 5A teams ranked were Coeur d'Alene, Highland, Borah, Rocky Mountain, Capital and Eagle, the last two of whom tied for fifth.

Other local schools receiving votes but not making the top five included Jerome, Wendell, Shoshone and Castleford.

Big Things in Store for Jerome

Team that lost out on title bid last year may have good chance to clinch it in 2013.

TIMES-NEWS

JEROME • When last we saw Jerome's football team, the Tigers had been the unlucky losers of a three-way playoff for two state quarterfinal berths.

The Tigers left the Canyon Ridge High School field devastated at getting the short end of that battle with Minico and Twin Falls, but they were optimistic about the future.

Flash forward nine months, and the Great Basin Conference title they shared a year ago might be there for their outright taking in 2013.

While their two rivals in 2012 graduated virtually every impact player from their respective rosters, Jerome has returning talent aplenty. It starts with quarterback Zach Thibault, now a four-year starter. This year he's got his cousin Daniel, a big tight-end target who can also play linebacker.

The Tigers also have experience back with receiver

Jerome quarterback Zach Thibault hopes to lead the Tigers to an outright Great Basin Conference title this fall.

Ethan Bragg, running back Eduardo Vega and linebacker Zach Argyle.

For those who aren't as experienced, well, the schedule will take care of that in a hurry. Jerome opens Friday against Mountain Home, and then the slate gets significantly tougher for the next six games: at Shelley, at Bishop Kelly, Canyon Ridge, at Twin Falls, Century, Minico.

A lot of the Tigers' fortunes will revolve around their up-tempo offense. When it was going good this summer, Jerome was tough to stop. When it wasn't, the Tigers were fairly average.

Second-year coach Sid Gambles and his crew will be hoping the good offense shows up more often than not. If it does, Jerome could be the favorite to lay claim to the conference title again.

This time, they'll want to be more selfish with that trophy.

Pilots Looking to Bounce Back

After missing a year, Glenns Ferry hopes 2013 will bring a return trip to state playoffs.

TIMES-NEWS

GLENN'S FERRY • The recent past hasn't been kind to Glenns Ferry's football team.

The Pilots have receded from their back-to-back state playoff runs a few years ago. They hope 2013 could hold a return trip to the playoffs after missing out last season and exiting tepidly from those playoffs in previous years.

As Glenns Ferry builds for what could be its final year in 11-man football — the Pilots have been a 1A school for four years but used co-ops in the past to stay in 11-man ball, but talk is growing they may move down — it has experience in the right places: along the line.

Glenns Ferry will rely on a handful of returning starters, including linemen Chris Gastelum, Marco Ortiz and Jack Riggs, along with linebacker Jarrett Willis.

Where the Pilots lack that seasoning is at the skill positions. Enter the double-wing, which they'll employ to play ball control and shorten the game.

Defensively, they'll look to shore up their pass defense, which was gashed regularly for big plays last season. Do that, and there could be good things in store.

Manning Not Hitting Panic Button

ASSOCIATED PRESS

DENVER• Peyton Manning isn't panicking.

His supporting cast hasn't looked nearly as good as he has this summer.

His offensive line has been a turnstile. His two young running backs can't hold onto the ball. His two trusted tight ends have combined for three catches and three injuries and the chemistry with his new slot receiver has been stalled by Wes Welker's sprained ankle.

A rash of injuries on defense. Special teams breakdowns. All-Pro linebacker Von Miller's six-game suspension that starts next week, which came on the heels of two executives getting suspended for drunken driving arrests.

It's enough to drive Broncos fans to regret putting money down on the Super Bowl favorites in Las Vegas.

Manning isn't sounding any alarms, however.

"I'd be a little concerned if we were a finished product and a finely oiled machine in the third preseason game," he said. "I want to be a well-oiled machine toward the end of the season and peak at that point."

The Broncos look a lot more like a creaky jalopy than a humming Ferrari right now.

Because they kick off the 2013 NFL season Sept. 5 against Super Bowl champion Baltimore, few starters figure to play much in the preseason finale Thursday night against Arizona, meaning Manning's preseason is over.

"I don't think you can get every question answered in the preseason," Manning said. "We have some young players, we have some first-year starters, potentially at tight end, and we're going to have a young running back. Montee Ball is going to play a lot. We have a first-year center, and a first-year slot receiver with the Denver Broncos. So, there is a lot of newness to this team."

In some ways, it's just like 2012, when Manning was getting used to just about everybody around him and needing the GPS to keep from getting lost on his way to and from work and home.

Denver Broncos quarterback Peyton Manning (18) calls an audible against the St. Louis Rams in a preseason game, Saturday in Denver.

"I think, similar to last year, our goal is to improve throughout the season," Manning said. "By no means should we be a well-oiled machine going into our opener against Baltimore. Hopefully, we can be hitting on enough cylinders where we can be effective."

Denver lost three of its first five games last season before Manning settled in and turned the Broncos back into a powerhouse, albeit one that lost its first playoff game to the Ravens, something he said left a scar on the team's psyche.

The only salve for that wound is a Super Bowl title this season.

Welker, Tom Brady's favorite target in New England, bolted to the Broncos in free agency, teaming with young receivers Demaryius Thomas and Eric Decker, who combined for 23 TD catches last season, to form a new "Three Amigos" in Denver and prompting John Elway to declare he's jealous of Manning's targets.

Manning returned for his second season in Denver with a clean bill of health, more punch to his passes and noticeably more muscle tone to his right arm.

Plus, he just looks more comfortable in Denver than he did a year ago when he was starting his comeback from a series of neck injuries and surgeries that affected a nerve that runs into his right triceps and forced him to miss his final season in Indianapolis.

Even so, Manning said this has been another summer of change for him.

He's trying to develop a rapport with Welker, young running backs Ball and Ronnie Hillman and promising tight end Julius Thomas, a 6-foot-5, 250-pound target.

Then, there's new center Manny Ramirez, who hasn't snapped in a regular season game yet but has taken most of the snaps during the off-season with J.D. Walton, Dan Koppen and Ryan Lilja all getting hurt.

"There have been some changes for me," Manning said. "All those new players affect me."

Despite the patchwork O-line and running back foibles, Manning was able to complete 38 of 54 passes for 410 yards with three TDs and one interception in the exhibitions.

"It's really hard to know where you should be when you have new players," Manning said. "I just don't know enough about certain guys, I'm learning every day. Manny Ramirez and I are learning about each other. Julius Thomas and I are learning about each other. Montee Ball is learning the system, and I'm learning about him. I don't think you ever stop learning"

So, Manning will leave it to fans to wonder if the Broncos are ahead or behind as the new season approaches.

"I didn't have a set goal of where we should be right now. We are where we are and we have to make the best out of the players that are going to play for us and the injuries we have to overcome," Manning said. "We don't use any excuses. It is about doing the best with what we have."

COMMUNITY SCHOOL 6, MCCALL-DONNELLY 0
McCALL • Bobby Corker registered his second hat trick in as many days against McCall-Donnelly, as the Cutthroats again cruised to a win.

John Blackburn, Jay Fitzgerald and Garrett Rawlings also scored for the Community School (2-0-0), which outscored the Vandals 17-1 over the two games.

Next up for the Cutthroats is a trip to Buhl on Tuesday.
CANYON RIDGE 2, ROCKY MOUNTAIN 1
TWIN FALLS • Josh Clark saved a second-half penalty kick to preserve the win in the Riverhawks' opening game of the season.

Ayoob Alaoodh redirected a free kick in the first half for the game's opening goal, and Jordan Shigihara doubled Canyon Ridge's advantage in the second half before Rocky Mountain pulled a goal back.

The Riverhawks are at Pocatello Tuesday.

MINICO 2, AMERICAN FALLS 1
AMERICAN FALLS • The Spartans won their season opener over American Falls after trailing 1-0 at halftime. Midfielder Eric Tapia and forward Geovanni Saldana scored goals in the second half to give Minico (1-0-0) the victory.

BURLEY 6, POCATELLO 0
POCATELLO • The Bobcats won their season opener, with three players scoring two goals apiece. Forwards Mitchell Rice, Adrian Mendez and Jonathan Rios all collected their first and second scores of the season. Burley played 24 of its 35 players in the contest.

The Bobcats will travel to Preston next Wednesday before preparing for its conference opener against Canyon Ridge.

FILER 3, JEROME 3
JEROME • It was a tale of two halves as Filer and Jerome battled to a high-scoring draw.

The Tigers took a 3-0 lead into halftime, courtesy of goals by Sarah Walker, Naomi Valdez and Sandy Andrade. But Filer's Darby Robertson countered with a hat trick in the second half, all three goals scored from outside the penalty area.

Jerome plays in a three-game tournament in Elko, Nev., this weekend.

Scott Wins at Barclays

JERSEY CITY, N.J. • Masters champion Adam Scott didn't think his good round was good enough Sunday at The Barclays.

His caddie had already packed his golf clubs into a travel case. He viewed his visit to the CBS Sports tower as nothing more than a courtesy. His only hope was that the other players still on the course — Tiger Woods and Justin Rose among them — might find it as difficult to close out a victory as Scott has over the years.

"I'm pretty shocked," Scott said after his 5-under 66 gave him a one-shot win at Liberty National. "There were so many guys out there with a chance and I really didn't think I had much of a chance. If you hang around the lead long enough, you're going to win some, you're going to lose some. And this one went my way."

Scott was watching from the locker room when Rose, who had a 25-foot putt for the outright lead, ran it 5 feet by the hole and three-putted for bogey. Clubs unpacked, Scott was on his way to the range when the groans from around the 18th green told him Woods narrowly missed his 25-foot birdie putt from off the back of the green to tie for the lead. Once on the range, a large video board showed Gary Woodland miss his third straight birdie putt from inside 10 feet.

"I guess it's different playing an hour-and-a-half in front of the leaders, the guys who have been under pressure all day than when you're out there," Scott said. "I know how they feel. When the pressure is on you to close out, it's much harder, and the holes become much harder and shots are far more crucial."

"I feel like I've been given a bit of a gift," he said. "But I'll take it."

Scott finished at 11-under 273 and moved to a career-best No. 2 in the world.

Japan Wins Little League Title

SOUTH WILLIAMSPORT, Pa. • Ryusei Hirooka lined a decisive two-run double in the bottom of the fifth inning, Shunpei Takagi hit two solo home runs, and Tokyo beat Chula Vista, Calif., 6-4 on Sunday to win the Little League World Series.

It was the 14th championship game for Japan, which was making its fourth straight appearance in the title game, and ninth title. California, making its 23rd championship game appearance, has won seven World Series titles. Giancarlo Cortez had a two-run single and Grant Holman an RBI single for Chula Vista.

Trailing 4-3 after Cortez's clutch single in the fourth, Japan tied it on Takagi's second homer and won it when Hirooka lined a 2-2 pitch down the left-field line for a double.

California beat Westport, Conn., 12-1 in the U.S. championship game Saturday, while Japan beat Mexico 3-2 for the international title.

FIFA Set to Move 2022 World Cup to Winter

ULRICHEN, Switzerland • FIFA President Sepp Blatter expects his executive committee to decide soon that the 2022 World Cup in Qatar will be switched from summer.

Blatter tells The Associated Press that an Oct. 3-4 meeting in Zurich should approve the change, and begin consultation on the best time for Qatar to host the tournament.

Blatter says he'd be "more than surprised if the ExCo will not accept the principle you cannot play in summer in Qatar."

The FIFA head says new dates "would be then decided later."

Blatter says this would involve consultations with leagues, clubs, national associations and players. Qatar's suitability in June and July was questioned even before FIFA's board chose it in December 2010.

Qatari officials have said they will change plans if FIFA formally requests it.

Tejay van Garderen Wins USA Pro Challenge

DENVER • American Tejay van Garderen won the USA Pro Challenge on Sunday, finishing in the main pack in the final stage to complete a sweep of the two biggest races in the United States.

Van Garderen, the 25-year-old BMC rider from Bozeman, Mont., led the race for the final four days, finishing 1 minute, 30 seconds ahead of Swiss Mathias Frank. The Tour of California winner in May, van Garderen was fifth last year in the Tour de France, then slipped to 45th this year.

American Tom Danielson of Garmin-Sharp was third overall, 1:42 behind van Garderen.

Slovakia's Peter Sagan won the final leg for his fourth stage victory of the week, completing the eight-lap, 72.4-mile circuit race in 2:27:15. Canada's Ryan Anderson of Optum-Kelly Benefit was second, a bike-length behind.

Nadal Surging, but Knee is a Question for Open

No. 2 seed offers complicated response to questions about troublesome injuries that have plagued his attempts at Open titles.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK • Ask Rafael Nadal how his famously troublesome left knee is feeling on the eve of the U.S. Open, and he'll balk a bit while formulating a response.

"I am ..." the 12-time major title winner began, haltingly, during an interview with The Associated Press.

"You know ..." he resumed, before smiling sheepishly and pausing again.

Eventually, Nadal offered something of a complicated answer.

"I have to say that I am very well, because the results have been amazing since I came back," he said. "If I say something else, (it) will sound strange."

That's because when the year's last Grand Slam tournament begins today, none of the players setting foot on the blue hard courts of Flushing Meadows possesses as much momentum — or is in as fine form — as the No. 2-seeded Nadal. He's won his past 10 matches heading into the first round against the 97th-ranked Ryan Harrison of the United States.

Another past U.S. Open champion on this afternoon's schedule is 2000-01 winner Venus Williams, a former No. 1 now ranked 60th who will be taking on recent Wimbledon semifinalist and 12th-seeded Kirsten Flipkens of Belgium. At night, Williams' younger sister Serena, the defending champion, plays 2010 French Open winner Francesca Schiavone of Italy, while 17-time major champion Roger Federer faces 62nd-ranked Grega Zemlja of Slovenia.

The biggest curiosity when it comes to Nadal these days is how his knees will hold up. They've presented recurring problems for him over the years, particularly the left one, which kept him out of action from late June 2012 until February 2013. He missed the London Olympics, last year's U.S. Open and this year's Australian Open.

"I feel more comfortable now than six months ago, that's for sure," Nadal said, then quickly added: "But I still have pain some days."

He was asked whether he thinks that might be the case for the rest of his career.

"Hopefully not," the 27-year-old Nadal said. "Hopefully not."

Hard courts could exacerbate the matter because of the pounding legs take on the unforgiving surface. Nadal himself maintains that there should be more tournaments played on other kinds of courts.

Yet he's been successful everywhere, winning the Australian Open and U.S. Open once each, along with Wimbledon twice, to go along with his record eight championships on the slower red clay of the French Open. Nadal is 15-0 on hard courts in 2013, with his current run of victories built en route to titles at Montreal and Cincinnati.

"He's on a great streak right now. He's playing fantastic tennis. He's playing as well as anyone in the world right now," said the 21-year-old Harrison, who will be making his Arthur Ashe Stadium debut against the tournament's 2010 champion. "So I'm going to have to bring a really high level out."

Nadal's rivals at the top of the game have taken note, too, of course.

Summed up defending champion Andy Murray: "He's going to be very difficult to beat here."

Top-seeded Novak Djokovic, who won the 2011 U.S. Open, said: "Nadal is definitely back, and he's playing maybe the best tennis that he ever has played on hard courts. ... He seems like he changed a little bit the game. He stepped in a little bit more. He knows that now he has to be a bit more aggressive than he usually is because of, I guess, his knees and everything and because hard court is not clay. It's not his favorite surface; it's faster. I'm sure he worked on that."

Nadal agreed with that assessment: He is making an effort to hit balls earlier than he used to. He is trying to be more aggressive.

"I'm clearly very impressed, especially seeing him play really well on the quicker hard courts. ... He's someone to be reckoned with. There were a lot of question marks when he came back. Especially, people thought he was just going to play on the clay courts, or most of it, and just some hard courts," said Federer, the champion in New York every year from 2004-08.

"He's playing a full schedule," Federer said, "and he's had an incredible season so far."

All told, Nadal is 53-3 with a tour-leading nine titles, more than twice as many as any other man. He reached the final at 11 of the 12 tournaments he entered.

A year ago, when Murray beat Djokovic in five sets in the U.S. Open final, Nadal was at home on the Spanish island of Mallorca, watching the tournament on television.

Nadal wasn't particularly concerned about missing this particular tour stop, he said, as much as he fretted about when — and, really, whether — he would get back to playing his best.

"I was worried about the recovery, not about being here," he said. "I was more worried about when I will have the chance to be back, how will the knee improve. ... Emotionally, there were ups and downs. It is hard when you are working every day and you don't see the improvement on the injury. That is the hardest moment, the toughest moment."

The last time he was seen in Grand Slam action, at Wimbledon in June, Nadal was being beaten by 135th-ranked Steve Darcis, the only first-round loss of his career at a major tournament. That also was Nadal's only defeat in his past 33 matches.

If he and Federer both win four times at the U.S. Open, they will meet in the quarterfinals. They own a combined 29 Grand Slam titles, have faced each other 31 times (Nadal leads 21-10), including in eight major finals (Nadal leads 6-2) — and have never been on opposite sides of the net at Flushing Meadows.

Israel Pushes Baseball into the Big Time

‘Baseball for Beginners’ just part of the newly formed Israel Association of Baseball’s effort to move the sport from childhood curiosity to national popularity.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

HASHMONAIM, West Bank • Nate Fish is excited. Things are off to a good start at this “Baseball for Beginners” practice, where 11 young Israeli boys are putting on mitts and pulling baseball caps over knitted yarmulkes.

“All right, now we’ve got everybody in the dugout like a real team!” he yells. Then he turns around to look at the diamond that his players have helped set up, and his voice drops. “Home plate is backwards, guys,” he says.

In sports-mad Israel, where basketball and soccer are hugely popular, baseball is still mostly a curiosity for kids like these. Fish, a former minor leaguer who played alongside with Yankees third baseman Kevin Youkilis in college, is trying to change that.

On Aug. 1, he became the first paid full-time national director of the Israel Association of Baseball, which is making a major new push to expand the reach of the sport beyond its base of American expats and their children.

“We have to change the identity of baseball in Israel a little bit,” Fish said. “We have to make it cool and we have to make it exciting and athletic.”

Fish, a youthful 33-year-old third baseman from Shaker Heights, Ohio, fits the part.

In his blog, part travelogue and part absurdist comedy, he styles himself the “King of All Jewish Baseball.” He arrives at the practice in workout gear and runs around the field like a high school coach, yelling instructions and keeping the kids moving from drill to drill. He wants them active, engaged and, in the brutal summer heat, sweating.

“The misconception is that baseball is slow and that baseball is boring. Baseball is fast,” Fish said. “For anyone who thinks baseball is boring, put them in the batter’s box and zip a 95 mph fastball past them and see if they’re still bored.”

Fish’s recent clinic, held in this Jewish settlement outside of Jerusalem, showed just how far he has to go. Misthrown balls flew around the unmowed field, whose track is ringed with a concrete barrier that’s more health hazard than warning. One boy who thought he’d hit an inside-the-park home run — thanks to several fielding errors — celebrated until Fish delivered some bad news: He was out, having missed every base.

The baseball association, the sport’s governing body in the Jewish state, estimates there are 1,000 baseball players at most among Israel’s almost 8 million residents.

Fish’s arrival is the third major push to promote baseball in Israel over the past decade. In 2007, a group of American supporters launched the Israel Baseball League, a professional league comprised almost entirely of foreign players that folded after one season. Last year, Israel fielded a team for the World Baseball Classic. The team, managed by former major leaguer Brad Ausmus, was eliminated in a qualifying round.

Fish was involved in both of those efforts, playing for the IBL’s Tel Aviv Lightning and last year’s World Baseball Classic squad. Earlier this summer, he coached the American junior team in the Maccabiah Games, a sort of Olympics for Jewish athletes held in Israel every four years.

With his American experience and Israeli connections, Fish seems like a perfect fit for the task of growing baseball in Israel. “I believe in the project and I like the people and I think it’s a cool opportunity,” Fish said. “How often to you get to be in charge of baseball in a country?”

But the obstacles are large at all levels, from funding concerns and lack of facilities to the most basic details.

The “Baseball for Beginners” sessions are designed to introduce young kids to the fundamentals of the game. But while Fish, who does not speak Hebrew, tried to work slowly, he often lapses into rapid-fire instructions that sail over the heads of his players along with their errant throws. To help, Efraim Keren and his 15-year-old son, Nadav, walk the field translating and correcting mechanics.

“We haven’t been successful in reaching the rest of Israeli society,” acknowledged Keren, a New Jersey native who is a past national director of the baseball association. “And it’s quite a challenge to bring an American guy who speaks no Hebrew to reach out to the Israeli public.”

Kenseth Soaring into Chase after win

ASSOCIATED PRESS

BRISTOL, Tenn. • Matt Kenseth had old tires, a sputtering gas tank and Kasey Kahne in his rearview mirror in the closing laps of a race for the third time this season.

The result was the same as it was in Las Vegas, same as it was in Kansas.

Kenseth won again.

He held off Kahne on Saturday night at Bristol Motor Speedway — the third time this season the two have gone 1-2 — to reclaim some of the momentum that had escaped Kenseth of late. A strong start to the season had given Kenseth three wins in his first 11 races with Joe Gibbs Racing, and win number four came six weeks later. But he’d been in a slump of sorts heading into Bristol, with four finishes in the last six weeks of 15th or worse.

The strong start followed by a mini-slump has made the year feel very choppy for Kenseth, who now has a Sprint Cup Series best five victories.

“I think if you look at the beginning of the season, I think it was better than I ever could have dreamed of,” Kenseth said. “We were qualifying up front every week, we were leading tons of laps in position to win races. Sitting here in August, it feels like the year has been two years long with all the different things we’ve had happen to our race team.

“The last month and a half, two months has been, I hate to say reality check because I hope this is reality all the time, but we’ve struggled just a little bit more, haven’t quite had the speed. It’s been a little bit more of a struggle.”

It didn’t seem like a struggle Saturday night as Kenseth led a race-high 149 laps then held off Kahne over a white-knuckled push to the checkered flag.

Kahne first chased down Juan Pablo Montoya for second place, passing him with 17 laps to go before setting his sights on Kenseth. Although Kahne, winner of the spring race at Bristol, has two wins on the season, his place in the 12-driver Chase for the Sprint Cup championship field isn’t a lock and a win Saturday night would have cemented his berth.

So he stalked Kenseth, who inadvertently wrecked him at Watkins Glen earlier this month to send Kahne over the edge. It was the fourth time this season a JGR driver had wrecked Kahne — Kyle Busch was the villain three previous times — and Kahne posted on Twitter he was headed to JGR headquarters to speak to whomever would come out-side.

Now with a chance to right all those wrongs in front of him, he stalked Kenseth for at least a dozen laps around Bristol.

Whatever happened was out of Kenseth’s control.

“It was all about the windshield. I never even looked back,” he said. “The thing is, you can’t race any different. If someone decides to run into the back of you or whatever, it’s going to happen. There wasn’t really anything I could do differ-ently to guard against anything or change my line or take his away because there was only one lane where my car ran good, so I just really had to look out the windshield and try to hit the marks the best I could.

“There wasn’t a lot of extra room there, it was an intense race. Kasey has got a great reputation. He’s a really hard racer, really talented, and he’s also a really fair racer, as well. I was expecting it to be about like it was, but I really thought he was going to pass me. I thought he had a good enough car to get around me there and we had just enough to hang on.”

In the end, Kahne raced by the book, did nothing dirty and wound up second. He wasn’t very happy with himself, either.

“I was trying to get there,” said Kahne. “I would have wrecked probably both of us. It would have just been a wreck. I just tried to pass him as clean as I could, and race him as hard as I could. I thought I had him at one point. I had a good run. I tried to slide across him, but he just kept position. We were rubbing all the way down turn four. I just didn’t clear him. I just didn’t get it done and I’m upset with myself for not figuring out how to win because I clearly had a better car at the end of the race.”

It was Kenseth who got the win, plus the bonus points for Chase seeding, and as it stands now he’d be the top seed over five-time champion Jimmie Johnson when the Chase begins Sept. 15 at Chicago. Even if Kahne had pulled out the win, Kenseth still would have felt pretty good about his championship chances based on his Bristol performance.

“I’m not always a huge believer in momentum as far as just looking at paper and looking at finishes, but I am a believer in momentum as far as performance,” he said. “I think this weekend was huge for us. Even if we would have ran second and got beat at the end, I think it would have been a very encouraging weekend. It would have been a shot in our arm, like man, we had all our speed back. We led some laps. The next 12 weeks are the most important 12 weeks of the season.”

A-Rod, Yankees Feud brings back memories of 1970s

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK • Daily threats. Blaring headlines. Charges and counter-charges.

The New York Yankees have been there before.

And Alex Rodriguez vs. Pinstripes is nothing like the bad ol’ days of Reggie Jackson vs. Billy Martin vs. George Steinbrenner.

“I don’t even know where to start with you. It was just a different social time with my issues of speaking out,” Jackson said this week. “So to pick up the phone and compare it to the Bronx Zoo where it was when I played is such a lack of understanding.”

Mr. October is correct. For long-running soap opera, Rodriguez has a ways to go to match the Yankees of four decades ago, a tempest that prompted this observation from Graig Nettles: “When I was a little boy I wanted to be a ballplayer and join the circus. With the Yankees I’ve accomplished both.”

But for a two-month summer miniseries, A-Rod has made a quick impact — and even helped boost ESPN’s baseball coverage and the Yankees’ YES Network to their highest ratings this season. One could even call it “Real Ballplayers of the Bronx.”

Thirteen other players accepted their drug suspensions quietly and are serving the penalties. Rodriguez appealed his 211-game ban, then appealed to fans in a public-relations battle against the Yankees and Major League Baseball.

The sniping began June 25, when Rodriguez tweeted that his surgeon, Dr. Brian Kelly, gave him the go-ahead to play injury rehabilitation games. Feeling the third baseman was challenging the team’s authority to set the schedule for his return, general manager Brian Cashman told ESPN “Alex should just shut up,” underlining his comment with a profanity.

That was just the start.

Two months later, Cashman and Rodriguez won’t even have a substantive conversation without lawyers.

Rodriguez challenged the team’s diagnosis of his quadriceps injury, retaining a doctor to say he wasn’t hurt — even though the physician never examined him and gave his opinion solely on the basis of a scan. He twice went on WFAN radio, intimated that Yankees President Randy Levine and Major League Baseball were in cahoots to keep him off the field and hired a blustery attorney to go on national television and accuse the team physician of misdiagnosing his hip injury.

Makes the conflicts of 1970s seem downright pedestrian.

“This is uncharted territory. That was baseball. Whether you liked it or not, it was all about winning and what it took to win,” longtime Yankees broadcaster Suzyn Waldman said. “George and Billy fought because Billy didn’t win — or Billy did win. Or Reggie and Billy fought. It was always baseball. Nobody signed up for this.”

Lou Piniella says his 1970s Yankees didn’t have this kind of prolonged quarrel between a star and management.

“I’ve never heard of a situation where a player is playing on the field and the team he’s playing with, they’re bickering back and forth,” said Piniella, now a team broadcaster. “We had some problems here and there, but no, this is a totally different story.”

Martin and Jackson nearly brawled at Boston’s Fenway Park in June 1977 when the outfielder didn’t hustle after Jim Rice’s bloop that became a double, and Martin replaced him immediately with Paul Blair. When Jackson got back to the dugout, the two jawed at each other, and coaches Yogi Berra, Elston Howard and Dick Howser were needed to separate them.

YOU ARE NOTIFIED THAT:

A Petition, a copy of which is attached, has been filed in the above-entitled matter in the Magistrate's Division of the District Court of Twin Falls County, Idaho, by the Prosecuting Attorney, alleging the above-named child comes within the Court's jurisdiction under the Child Protective Act.

You are hereby directed to appear personally for a Case Plan Hearing at the Twin Falls County Courthouse, 425 Shoshone Street, Twin Falls, Idaho on September 19, 2013 at 9:30 AM.

You are notified that service of the attached Petition upon you, as the parent(s), guardian, or custodian of these children, confers personal jurisdiction of the Court upon you and subjects you to the provisions of the Child Protective Act.

You are notified that if you fail to appear without reasonable cause, the Court may proceed in your absence or you may be proceeded against for contempt of Court.

You are notified that the parent(s), guardian, or a custodian may be financially liable for the support and/or treatment of the child.

You are further notified that the child and parent(s), guardian, or custodian have the right to be represented by an attorney of your choosing, or if financially unable to pay, have the right to have an attorney appointed by the Court to represent the children or the parent(s), guardian, or custodian at county expense. If you request to have an attorney appointed at county expense, you must appear before the date of the hearing given above, at which time the Court shall consider appointment of an attorney for the children and inquire whether the parent(s), guardian, or custodian require the separate appointment of an attorney.

You are further notified that there shall be a rebuttable presumption that if a child is placed in the custody of the IDHW and was also placed in care out of the home for a period not less than fifteen (15) out of the last twenty-two (22) months from the date of Adjudication, the IDHW shall initiate a Petition for Termination of Parental Rights. This presumption may be rebutted by a finding by the Court that the filing of a Petition for Termination of Parental Rights would not be in the best interest of the children and their family, or that the children are placed permanently with a relative.

WITNESS MY HAND AND SEAL of said Magistrate Court this 21st day of August, 2013.

Today is Monday, Aug. 26, the 238th day of 2013. There are 127 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight:
On Aug. 26, 1920, the 19th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution, guaranteeing American women's right to vote, was certified in effect by Secretary of State Bainbridge Colby.

TODAY IN HISTORY

On this date:
In 1883, the island volcano Krakatoa began cataclysmic eruptions, leading to a massive explosion the following day.

In 1913, the newly completed Keokuk Dam in Iowa was dedicated.

In 1936, the Anglo-Egyptian Treaty, calling for most British troops to leave Egypt, was signed in Montreux, Switzerland. (It was abrogated by Egypt in 1951.)

In 1958, Alaskans went to the polls to overwhelmingly vote in favor of statehood.

In 1961, the original Hockey Hall of Fame was opened in Toronto.

In 1964, President Lyndon B. Johnson was nominated for a term of office in his own right at the Democratic National Convention in Atlantic City, N.J.

In 1968, the Democratic National Convention opened in Chicago.

In 1971, New Jersey Gov. William T. Cahill announced that the New York Giants football team had agreed to leave Yankee Stadium for a new sports complex to be built in East Rutherford.

In 1972, the summer Olympics games opened in Munich, West Germany.

In 1978, Cardinal Albino Luciani of Venice was elected pope following the death of Paul VI. The new pontiff took the name Pope John Paul I. (However, he died just over a month later.)

In 1986, in the so-called preppie murder case, 18-year-old Jennifer Levin was found strangled in New York's Central Park; Robert Chambers later pleaded guilty to manslaughter and served 15 years in prison.

In 1993, Dorothea Puente was convicted in Monterey, Calif., of murdering three of her boardinghouse tenants; she was later sentenced to life without parole. (Puente died in prison in 2011, at age 82.)

Ten years ago: In the face of criticism, President George W. Bush defended his handling of the war and reconstruction of Iraq, telling an American Legion conference in St. Louis the fight was essential to the U.S. campaign against terrorism. Investigators concluded that NASA's overconfident management and inattention to safety doomed the space shuttle Columbia as much as damage to the craft when it burned up on reentry in February 2003.

Five years ago: Hillary Rodham Clinton closed the book on her 2008 presidential bid by telling the Democratic National Convention in Denver the election wasn't about her and declaring herself a "proud supporter of Barack Obama." Russia recognized the independence claims of two Georgian breakaway regions, Abkhazia and South Ossetia. Hurricane Gustav struck Haiti, causing widespread flooding and landslides; the storm went on to kill at least 78 people in the Caribbean. Major League Baseball announced umpires would be allowed to check video on home run "boundary calls" starting August 27.

One year ago: In the face of approaching Tropical Storm Isaac, Republicans pushed back the start of their national convention in Tampa, Fla., by a day. Lydia Ko, a 15-year-old South Korean-born New Zealander, won the Canadian Women's Open to become the youngest winner in LPGA Tour history and only the fifth amateur champion. Japan limited Tennessee's potent lineup to two hits in a 12-2 victory in the Little League World Series title game.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE® Bobby Wolff

"The true way goes over a rope which is not stretched at any great height but just above the ground. It seems more designed to make people stumble than to be walked upon."

— Franz Kafka

In today's deal, South should make the jump rebid of three spades over his partner's response of one no-trump. He may have only a 15-count, but with 100 honors in spades and great controls, he should take the high road. With the same hand but the singleton diamond king instead of the ace, a simple rebid in spades would be equally clear.

Now it is up to you as declarer to make your game when West leads the heart jack against four spades. You try dummy's queen, but East wins the king and returns a heart. What should you do next?

You should thank your partner for providing the spade nine to turn a contract hinging on a finesse into nearly a sure thing! You win dummy's heart ace, play a diamond to your ace, then lead a spade to dummy's nine. Now you play the diamond queen, discarding a heart. West will make his king and try to cash a heart, but you can ruff his return and cross to dummy with the spade king to discard a club on the diamond jack. You end up scoring six spades, two diamonds and two aces for 10 tricks.

Just for the record, had dummy's spade nine been the eight, your best play for the contract would have been to unblock the diamond ace, then lead a spade to the eight, hoping to find West with the spade nine. That finesse would give you the entry to dummy to set up diamonds.

ANSWER: It feels right to lead a major here, and while a spade is more likely to set up tricks for your side, it is also far more likely to cost your side a trick. So I would lead a heart, and to my mind the heart nine is the least deceptive card here. If you lead a low heart, partner is likely to play you for more length or strength in the suit than this.

DEAR ABBY: I am a divorced woman in my mid-40s. I started dating again about two years ago, and shortly after, I met “Jed.” He is someone I’d love to spend the rest of my life with. We have been seeing each other for more than a year, and I’d like some sort of commitment. I have tried talking to him about it. All he’ll say is, “We’re committed and monogamous and that’s enough, so don’t start with me.”

We spend Thursday through Sunday together.

DEAR ABBY
Jeanne Phillips

Jed says Monday through Wednesday is his time to be alone. We don’t talk or see each other during that time. We may email or text, but I’m not allowed to go to his house or call him. I have told him I don’t want to still be packing for weekend trips to his house — it’s 10 minutes away — when I’m 80.

I also never know how Jed feels about me. He never tells me he loves me, and if I say it, he’ll say it back very quickly like it’s an inconvenience. He doesn’t compliment me or act like I’m important to him at all.

I’m financially stable but would have a better lifestyle if I could share the bills with someone. Marriage is not important, and I have explained that to him, but I want a full-time commitment. Am I wasting my time?

— TIME’S A-WASTIN’
IN GEORGIA

DEAR TIME’S A-WASTIN’: Do you realize that not once in your letter did you mention anything POSITIVE Jed does for you? He has told you directly that this is as committed as he’s willing to get. Men who “love” women don’t forbid them from coming to their home or calling; in fact, they WELCOME them. Jed doesn’t say “I love you” unless he is cornered because it appears he DOESN’T love you.

Yes, you’re wasting your time. If you want someone to share living expenses so you can enjoy a better lifestyle, find yourself a roommate.

DEAR ABBY: I have been married for 29 years and I’m having concerns about my husband. I’m not sure what to make of the fact that he is becoming effeminate.

For many years he has shaved his underarms, legs, etc., to the point that he is completely hairless. He recently lost some weight and is joining a gym. He wears women’s stretch tights and a girdle to work out, because he says it helps him sweat around his middle. He is also very concerned about exfoliating the bottom of his feet and putting lotion on his legs.

He says these things shouldn’t bother me, but they do. I don’t know what to make of it, and when I try to talk to him about my concerns, he blows me off. Do other men do this kind of stuff? I’ve only been with him, so I don’t know. Can you give me another perspective?

— A LITTLE WORRIED IN WISCONSIN

DEAR WORRIED: These days some men wax, shave, moisturize and exfoliate their bodies. Your husband may wear tights at the gym because he looks around and sees younger men with sleeker physiques and he’s self-conscious about his own. If he’s not getting strange looks from others working out there, his attire may not be that unusual.

It’s important that couples, particularly those who have been married as long as you two have, be able to talk to each other. Because some of this is a recent change in your husband’s behavior, you deserve an explanation.

IF AUGUST 26 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY: Go ahead and wish upon a shooting star. Focus on worldly success, financial security and your job, career, or business during the next four to eight weeks. You may wish for a permanent romantic relationship, but be sure you're not acting on mere imagination. Be sure anyone one close to you is rock solid because you're more romantic-minded than usual and could become less discriminating about your dating life. By February, the cosmic conditions are more promising and any matter that depends upon trust and commitment, such as a new job or relationship, will thrive. Your outlook and what you think is most important to your happiness may change and alter as February and March go by. But whatever you put into motion has a high likelihood of success and will not be abandoned.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You may be in a hurry and forget to say please and thank you, or otherwise step on someone's toes. A well-intentioned flirtation could easily be taken the wrong way.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): All shook up. Someone may be bored by "business as usual" and try to shake things up. Some situations may be exciting, but you're challenged to keep up when the rules change.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): You might think that muses belong in the museum. Although you appreciate inspiration and idealism, you could be in a hurry to conquer the world and ignore the fine points.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): You meet challenges head on, so may bump your head. It is possible that due to a desire to get things done quickly you're too aggressive. It's better to politely wait your turn.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): You may meet those who refuse to rely on the tried and true and prefer the excitement of experimentation with up-and-coming technologies. You may be challenged to keep up with cutting edge ideas.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): This isn't the best time to make major changes or impulsive purchases. Your partners may be somewhat vague, but could give you excellent advice if you listen closely.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Those who have a cause of ten act like rebels. You may prefer to follow your beliefs regardless of public opinion. Family members might surprise you or involve you in a controversy.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): A new hook up wants to play the field when you're hoping for white picket fences and two cats in the yard. A brief upset in your love life might result in a better understanding.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Don't break open a piggy bank just because the plug is stuck. You could be too anxious to spend money. Your significant other might surprise you with sound ideas.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Things can get scattered when they're outside the box. Yielding to impulse or experimenting with new ideas could put you at odds with someone who prefers conventional methods.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): You may feel cast adrift or as though you've been left on your own. Take charge of a situation without depending upon outside help. Put the pursuit of a romantic interest on the back burner.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): You could be overly anxious to please others or imagine there's more than meets the eye, so you waiver about making crucial decisions. Don't make a key commitment yet.
