Dietrich Boy Recovering from Flesh-eating Bacteria Infection

BY MYCHEL MATTHEWS
mmatthews@magicvalley.com

DIETRICH • After a terrifying encounter with flesh-eating bacteria, eighth-grader Slade Dill is home safe and sound. Slade was playing tag at school Sept. 18 when he fell and cut his knee. “It was no big deal. We just cleaned it up,” said his father, Wayne Dill, a teacher and basketball coach at Dietrich School. But by Sept. 20 it had started to swell, and by Sept. 22, the swelling had spread and pain had set in. “My wife Dixie took him to the hospital in Gooding, and they gave him antibiotics,” Dill said.

About Necrotizing Fasciitis:

- The bacterial infection is most commonly carried by a cough or sneeze from someone carrying the group A Strep bacteria — the same bacteria that causes common strep throat — then transmitted to an open wound by touch.
- A person carrying a Strep A bacteria might not even show symptoms or become ill.
- The NF patient is not likely to be contagious.

— National Necrotizing Fasciitis Foundation

Doctors there advised Dixie — who is also a coach at Dietrich — to take Slade to St. Luke’s Magic Valley, where he stayed two days. The infection continued to worry doctors at St. Luke’s. On Sept. 24, Dr. Mark Wright ordered a CT scan and found infection and fluid in Slade’s abdomen and chest. He was flown by air ambulance to Primary Children’s Hospital in Salt Lake City, and emergency surgeries began as soon as

Safe — For Now: After Lazy J Rezone, Empty Spots and Rumors Persist

BY BRIAN SMITH

TWIN FALLS • John Miletich served in World War II and Korea. The Army veteran had his boots on the ground in Scotland, England, France, North Africa, Italy and Germany. “I’ll tell yah, we kicked a lot of — —. We took on two of the best, and we whipped (them)” But two years ago, the disabled Twin Falls man was frightened for the first time in a long time. He and other residents of the Lazy J Ranch trailer park feared they would be kicked out after the land they lived on was rezoned from residential to commercial. Many thought their quiet, safe neighborhood would be converted into retail outlets, and their low-income, elderly neighbors would be forced to search for a place to live in an area with scant vacancies. That, Miletich said, “scared the living daylights out of us.” “It’s a jungle out there. I’m 93 years old, and I’m a cripple. What would I do? I sure as hell ain’t going into a home.”

John Miletich, a World War II and Korean War veteran who served 26 years in the Army, sits for a portrait Tuesday, at his home in Lazy J Ranch in Twin Falls.

The council included a clause that prohibited the trailer park from being commercially developed for five years. “It was never our intention to close Lazy J,” said property manager Linda Wills. “... It seemed like no matter what we said to our

Cable ONE Spat with Turner Reflects ‘Broken’ TV Industry

BY JOE CADOTTE
jcadotte@magicvalley.com

TWIN FALLS • Google the word “spat” in front of any of the “Big Six” media giants that own the majority of American television and there are too many results to read in a single day. The most recent corporate tug-of-war hit more than 13,000 south-central Idaho homes last week when Cable ONE lost nine channels from Turner Broadcasting System including TBS, which broadcasts most of the ongoing Major League Baseball playoffs. Cable ONE claims Turner wanted to charge 50 percent more for programming that “was losing viewers.” Turner says the rates were mandatory and “Cable ONE doesn’t have the right to broadcast TBS, TNT and Cartoon Network.” Rachelle Savoia, spokeswoman with Turner, said Tuesday she couldn’t comment on Turner’s stance other than statements released on the company’s website last week. “...We are simply asking that Cable One pay the established and accepted rates already in the marketplace for our portfolio and remain willing to discuss a new agreement that recognizes the strength and value of our networks and the popular programming they offer,” So via said last week. Lawyers on both sides are discussing a resolution, said Trish Niemann, Cable ONE’s spokeswoman. Cable ONE has since replaced most of the lost channels with temporary programming but has lost a substantial amount of customers since Turner’s Oct. 1 decision, which discontinued CNN, HLN, Cartoon Network, TNT, TBS, TruTV, TBS, Boomerang and CNN en Espanol, said Niemann. “When you’re talking 50 percent, you’re talking millions upon millions of dollars, we’re talking about programming hikes across the board,” Niemann said. “This isn’t just restricted to just Cable ONE, if we experience a 50 percent hike on every channel that we offer, our customers wouldn’t be able to afford their bills.” Problems like the Cable ONE dilemma are on the rise, and is one of the biggest reasons the TV industry is losing viewers to Internet programming, Niemann said. “The cable business is broken and if we don’t fix it, it’s all going to be Internet streaming,” she said. “It’s not going to survive the way it’s going.” Despite TV having tremendously more viewers than Internet-based sites, the industry is dropping the ball, and is steering itself to lose increasingly more viewers to the web, said Matt Polka, president and CEO of the American Cable Association, a Washington-based lobbying firm. The ACA advocates for 849 cable companys in the U.S., including

St. Luke’s CEO Takes the Stand

BY AUDREY DUTTON
Idaho Statesman

It was during the Clinton administration, David Pate said, that he started thinking about how to fix the nation’s money-sucking health care system and make people healthier. He started thinking even harder in 2001, when he was diagnosed with cancer. Pate, then a primary-care doctor and hospital administrator in Houston, became a patient trying to navigate the health care marketplace. Pate came to Idaho four years ago to become CEO of St. Luke’s Health System, where he is trying to “transform health care,” he told a federal judge Tuesday. After two weeks of plaintiff testimony, Pate was the first person to testify in defense of St. Luke’s, the Boise-based hospital system that is being sued by two competitors, the state and the federal government over a buyout of a nearby medical practice. Saint Alphonsus Health System, Treasure Valley Hospital, the Federal Trade Commission and Idaho Attorney General Lawrence Wasden accuse St. Luke’s of breaking antitrust laws by buying Nampa-based Saltzer Medical Group last year. They say the buyout gives St. Luke’s a nearly 80 percent share of the primary-care market in Nampa. Pate told U.S. District Court Judge B. Lynn Winnmill that St. Luke’s decided to hire the doctors at Saltzer because it was the only way for both businesses to give patients lower-cost, higher-quality health care in

Judge: St. Luke’s Trial Can Stay Partly Closed to Public

BY AUDREY DUTTON
Idaho Statesman

BOISE • After hearing from attorneys for several Idaho news groups and for Idaho’s largest health-care businesses, U.S. District Judge B. Lynn Winnmill ruled Tuesday that testimony and documents can remain hidden from the public in a trial against St. Luke’s Health System. But attorneys must show a “compelling” reason for hiding that information. Charles Brown argued on behalf of news organizations the Idaho Statesman, the Times-News, Associated Press, Idaho Press-Tribune, Idaho Press Club, Moscow-Pullman Daily News and Lewiston Tribune that Winnmill should allow public and media access to everything presented in the lawsuit. “I agree with Mr. Brown, this is a [trial] of great interest to the public,” Winnmill said. “The problem in this case is also very unique,” he said, referring to the businesses’ request to protect trade secrets. “We can’t, I think, [protect trade secrets] with a broad ax. We can’t do it with a scalpel,” he said, characterizing his order as “something in between.”

THE MARKET AT A GLANCE

Stocks Fall as Investors Wait on Washington

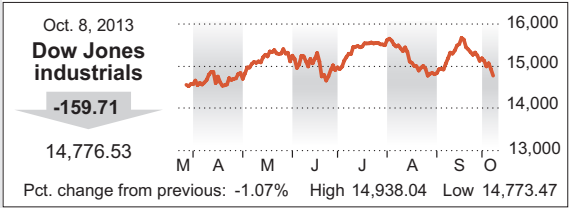

NEW YORK (AP) • The stock market’s slow bleed got a little worse Tuesday.

The decline is the result of squabbling in Washington over raising the nation’s debt limit and a government shutdown that has dragged on for more than a week. Moderate losses for the stock market in the first days of the shutdown have accelerated this week as the U.S. has moved closer to an Oct. 17 deadline for lifting the government’s borrowing authority.

Stocks opened flat, moved steadily lower and slumped in the final minutes of trading Tuesday. The loss added to a three-week decline that has knocked the Standard & Poor’s 500 index down 4 percent since hitting a record high on Sept. 18.

Swings in the market will likely increase the closer the U.S. gets to the debt deadline without a resolution, said Randy Frederick, Managing Director of Active Trading and Derivatives at the Schwab Center for Financial Research.

“Virtually everyone expects that there will some sort of a resolution,” Frederick said. “But I wouldn’t be surprised if it only came right before the last minute.”

Bank Embezzler Sentenced to Home Confinement

IDAHO STATESMAN

BOISE • Sandra Lowe-Miller, former lead teller at the Twin Falls branch of Wells Fargo Bank, was sentenced Monday to three months of home confinement.

Lowe-Miller, who worked at the bank from May 2002 until the thefts were discovered in January, admitted stealing $28,480. The thefts took place between July 1, 2012, and Jan. 17.

U.S. District Judge Edward J. Lodge ordered Lowe-Miller to wear a monitoring bracelet while she is confined at home. She can leave home only for work and other activities approved by her probation officer.

She won't be able to incur any new credit charges or open new lines of credit without permission. She also is banned from working in an area where she would handle money.

Lowe-Miller had faced up to 30 years in prison. She admitted to the thefts when confronted by bank officials in January, court documents say.

The thefts were concealed using fictitious change order slips and other false balance sheet entries.

Lowe-Miller used the stolen cash to pay her bills and to maintain her family's lifestyle, according to court records.

Cool Air Remains, but What about Rain?

Brian Neudorff
Meteorologist

Temperatures dropped late Monday night with the passing cold front.

This ushered in a pattern of below-average temperatures and the chance for some scattered to isolated showers. If you are looking for rain or snow from this particular system, I think you will be sadly disappointed.

Storm systems coming off the Pacific Ocean will come ashore around central California and move to the east through southern Nevada. It will then get caught by the jet stream and begin to work back to the northeast into Utah, Colorado and Wyoming. Given it's placement to the south, the threat of showers and even mountain snow is not very high. Most of today and even Thursday should be mostly dry with just a slight chance of a shower or two.

Forecast today will be partly to mostly cloudy, less wind than what we saw on Tuesday. Temperatures should remain near 60 degrees in the afternoon, with just a slight chance of a passing shower or sprinkle. Tonight into Thursday the clouds will linger and so will the threat of a shower or two. Like today, most of the area should remain dry and precipitation free but don't be surprised if you feel or see a few drops. Any chance of rain exits the region on Thursday, winds will increase and temperatures will once again be near 60 degrees. Friday and Saturday will feature mostly sunny and seasonal temperatures, before the next threat of rain arrives on Sunday.

Brian Neudorff is the chief meteorologist for KMVT-TV and KTTW FOX 14. Email at Brian-Neudorff@neuhoffmedia.com or call 208-733-1100, ext. 3047.

CSI to Provide Live Feed of Presidential Finalist Forums

Can't make it to the CSI presidential finalist forums? Here's how you can get involved www.csi.edu/PresidentialSearch. Online audience members will be invited to fill out and submit comment forms until 6 p.m.

Those who cannot attend the forum but would like to submit a question can do so at www.csi.edu/PresidentialSearch until 1 p.m. Oct. 15. The forum host will use those questions if there is a lull in the live audience feedback.

A recording of all three hours will be posted on the presidential search link on CSI's home page by noon Oct. 16, and the online comment link will be disabled.

Those who will attend will be encouraged to question each candidate. They also will be given cards and pens to note their observations about each candidate's strengths and weaknesses. Comment cards also will be provided at each CSI viewing location.

After brief introductions, each candidate will make an opening statement and will then field questions from the audience without help from a moderator.

Monty Arrossa, CSI's director of Human Services, will be on the stage to ensure the questions are legal and appropriate and the process is fair and equitable.

After the forum, CSI Board of Trustees members will receive the audience feedback and will conduct their own private interviews of each candidate. The president will be chosen in a public board meeting that has yet to be scheduled.

The finalists are: D. Ryan Carstens, associate provost for Education and Community Partnerships at Salt Lake Community College, who will appear from 2 to 2:50 p.m.; Jeff Fox, CSI's executive vice president and chief academic officer, who will take the stage from 3 to 3:50 p.m.; and Daniel J. Conservation Agencies to Buy Large Blaine County Ranch

kkruesi@magicvalley.com

HAILEY • One of the largest private properties in Blaine County soon will be sold to protect the area’s undeveloped landscape and preserve its wildlife, clean water and recreation.

The Wood River Land Trust and The Nature Conservancy submitted a proposal to the county for funds to help acquire Rock Creek Ranch, a working ranch just southwest of Hailey along the Rock Creek drainage.

The goal is to turn the property into a wildlife management area overseen by the Idaho Department of Fish and Game.

With its sagebrush-steppe habitat, aspen forest and miles of crystal clear river, the property’s pristine conditions should be permanently protected, said Scott Boettger, executive director of the Wood River Land Trust.

The ranch’s landscape boasts summer and winter habitat for elk and mule deer along with mule deer migration.

Ranching and grazing will continue on the property, but development will be prohibited. Furthermore, hunting access won’t change, Boettger said.

“Ideally, no one will notice a difference in access,” he said. “We’re keeping it mostly the same.”

Converting the land into a wildlife management area also will help preserve sage grouse habitat. Rock Creek Ranch has been identified by federal and state officials as important for sage hens, which are currently at risk of being listed under the Endangered Species Act.

“By saving this special place, we are preserving vital wildlife habitat and recreational opportunities that support public health and enjoyment,” Boettger said.

The ranch owners, the Rinker family, are selling the property considerably below its previously listed $12.5 million price.

“The Rinker family had an opportunity to give back to the community and at the same time honor our father,

The Wood River Land Trust and The Nature Conservancy submitted a proposal to the county for funds to help acquire Rock Creek Ranch.

Harry Rinker, who had the vision to acquire this asset some 20 years ago,” Bart Rinker said in a statement.

The agencies have proposed using federal, state and private money to buy the ranch. Most recently, they submitted an application to the Blaine County Land, Water and Wildlife Program asking for $1.1 million.

The county program was established in 2008 after voters passed a $3.4 million levy to fund conservation projects in the county.

The levy advisory board will review the request

Oct. 17, said Clare Swanger, project coordinator for the program.

“This is the largest request to date,” Swanger said.

Government Shutdown Closes Regional VA Offices

TIMES-NEWS

TWIN FALLS • Regional Veterans Administration benefits offices were closed Tuesday as the government shutdown forced 7,000 of the department’s employees to be furloughed.

The regional offices, including one in Boise, were closed to the public and no one was answering phone calls.

More Online

For more information, go to VA.gov.

All VA medical centers and clinics, such as the Twin Falls Outpatient Clinic, will remain fully operational, including: Inpatient care, outpatient care, prescriptions, surgeries, dental treatment, extended care, mental health care, nursing home care, special health care services for women veterans and vet centers.

VA health care appointments will not be affected.

The VA said that it is continuing to process payments that provide compensation for disabilities and pensions, but if the shutdown continues past late October, payments could cease as available funding runs out.

Most phone lines for veterans remain open at this time, including the Veterans Crisis Line and the VA National Call Center. The Education Benefits line and the Consumer Affairs line, among others, have been suspended.

After it was stolen from Bliss sometime Monday

Kip Thompson Has Earned Another Term in Kimberly

‘Throw the bums out.’ It’s the anthem of a populace in discontent. Too bad it’s a flawed foundation for a political system and applying it in the upcoming Kimberly elections would be a mistake.

For years we heard the calls for term limits in Congress and accusations that elected officials, ranging from federal to local, have to be regularly culled in order to keep government pure and honest.

It’s funny how people want their physicians or auto mechanics to be seasoned, but their politicians must be green in order to pass muster with many.

And this is why we’re enthusiastically endorsing Kip Thompson’s bid for his first, full term on the Kimberly City Council. Thompson, a Kimberly resident for the past eight years, was appointed to the seat last year after the post was vacated.

The manufactured-home builder and business owner offered us a reasoned, clear vision of the issues facing Kimberly — a city under growing construction pressure — and how to deal with the issues presented by the coming growth. Reasonable zoning and planning is needed for a city that’s growing outward.

Kimberly’s future is largely pre-defined by its infrastructure. It’s sewer lines, which lead to Twin Falls’ treatment plant, aren’t big enough to handle industrial development. But positioned just four miles from the Chobani plant and sporting an above-average school district, Kimberly’s place as a swelling, family friendly community is a sure bet.

A cluster of local organizations are pushing a downtown revitalization project, one aimed at discouraging people from making the short drive to Twin Falls to shop and eat. Thompson honestly acknowledged that he and his wife typically go to Twin Falls for their date nights. But new sidewalks, bike paths and a lively downtown could accomplish that goal, he argued. A budgetary surplus means the city can pay down its debts, opening up cash that Thompson would like to see used for a recreational center, one that would give Kimberly’s youth something to do.

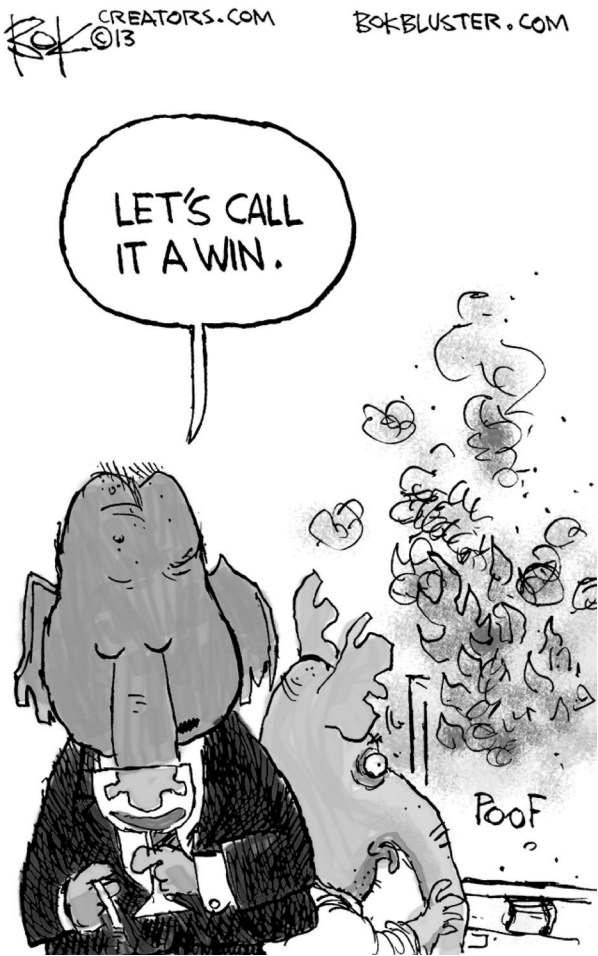

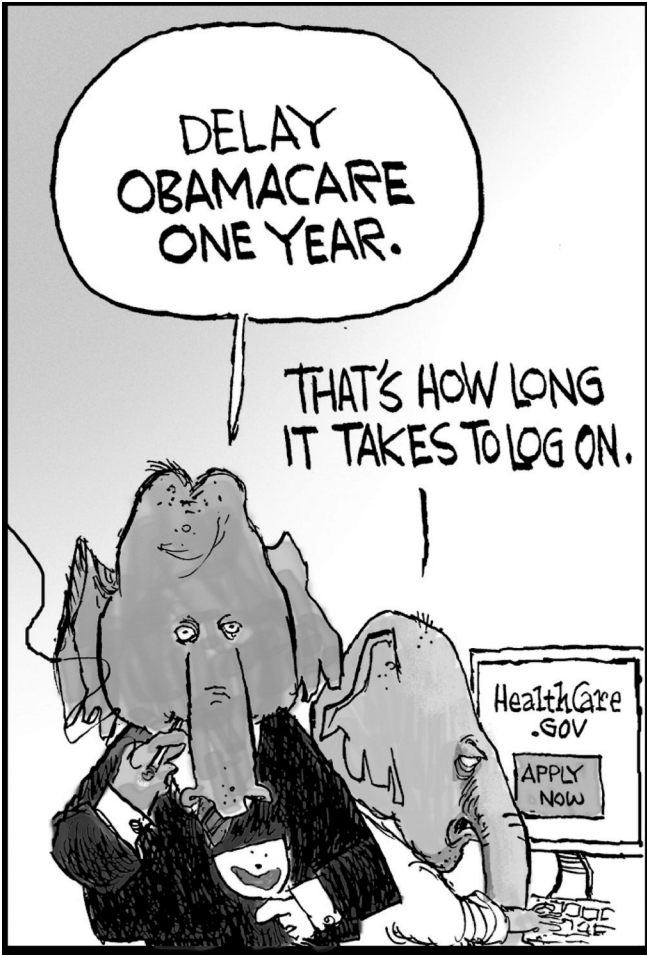

Thompson’s ideas were clear and attainable. Three other candidates are seeking the two seats up for grabs this year. Burke Richman, the other incumbent, had to cancel his meeting with the editorial board for a personal matter. Our repeated attempts to reschedule didn’t pan out. Vicky Remaley, well, we even left a note in her mailbox and didn’t get a call back.

Nancy Duncan, a recently retired Hospice administrator, is a respected women with budgeting and administration experience. But we found her responses vague, even as her enthusiasm was infectious. We’re confident Duncan will be an asset to her community no matter what capacity she ends up serving.

Only two years ago, Kimberly was a land of political upheaval, and turnover among the police chief and administrator in the past 12 months have helped the tensions persist.

But things are righting themselves in Kimberly, under the guidance of Mayor Tracy Armstrong and a dedicated city council.

There’s no need for change in Kimberly. The “bums” are doing just fine.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Opinion Photo was in Horrible Taste

You can’t be serious, Times-News! That was my first reaction after opening the paper and viewing the prominent photo of the quintessential “redneck” displayed on the Opinion page.

The readers’ comments printed there represented the spectrum of reactions to the ongoing dog-and-pony show being played out in Washington, D.C. My initial reaction to this ill-chosen display of Idaho’s worst nightmare completely obliterated my positive reaction to the fairness of the selection of comments.

Please refrain from ever demonstrating such terrible bad taste again, or we won’t refrain from canceling our subscription. Opinion sections give latitude to their editors in choosing what is printed on them. You have violated that latitude.

Cutting out the coupon on the preceding page gave us considerable satisfaction!

Green Movement Damages Public Lands

As another wildfire season draws to a close, we should consider why some blame drought, some climate change and some politics. I believe we are reaping the consequences of the past 35 or 40 years of radical environmental activism.

They have influenced the management of our public lands, often going against best management practices proven in university studies with threats or lawsuits or legal action. They’ve infiltrated the ranks of every agency responsible for the management of our public lands, crippling the effective management of our resources.

Often the authority to manage is placed in the hands of whatever administration is currently in office, rather than the capable, qualified individuals with the education and knowledge to do the job.

These radicals have been instrumental in the implementation of ridiculous regulation against the mining, timber and livestock industries. Even those of us who enjoy our public lands recreationally are affected by their road closures and limited access to places we’ve historically been able to enjoy, locking up more and more land with their restrictions. They’ve used every cause imaginable, from the spotted owl, wolves, the Bruneau snail ... to further their agenda.

Grazing and logging should be managed responsibly and sustainably to control and prevent the wildfires that have become an annual occurrence. We need to stop this cycle of insanity that we are currently experiencing.

Think how we might benefit personally and as a state if suddenly, because of less regulation, it became profitable to harvest timber or mine gold or a third-generation ranching family was able to stay in business. Quit believing the rot and propaganda put out by these radical, liberal environmental organizations. We need to open our eyes and use the minds God gave us to make good decisions. I think Idaho should manage Idaho, not a bunch of bureaucrats from somewhere else.

READER COMMENT

Idaho’s Schools: A New Legacy of Poor Funding

Kudos to Governor Otter for his courageous embrace of his education task force’s recommendations. With an estimated price tag of approximately $350 million, those recommendations will go a long way toward restoring cuts that have been made to Idaho’s public schools over the past decade and a half.

During the 1970s, 80s and 90s, Idaho spent approximately 4.4 percent of Idahoan’s total personal income each year on public schools. The yearly numbers varied a bit (ranging between 4.2-4.7 percent), but the overall funding trend was remarkably steady. However, since 2000, the level of funding for Idaho public schools (as a share of our total personal income) has fallen steadily from 4.4 percent to a new low of 3.5 percent in the fiscal year 2014 public school budget. That’s a 20 percent reduction.

To see the dollar magnitude of this reduced funding effort consider that in 2013 Idaho’s total personal income is estimated to be $55 billion. The nine-tenths of a percentage point reduction is equivalent to $495 million in 2013 terms. That’s right, if Idaho was spending the same share of its personal income on public schools today as it did in the three decades preceding the millennium, those schools would receive almost one-half billion dollars more in funding than they actually do today.

Michael Ferguson

Idaho Center for Fiscal Policy

So the task force’s recommendations (now embraced by the governor) would restore about two-thirds of the public school funding that has been cut since 2000. And as the governor points out, it may not be possible to fulfill the task force’s recommendations in one year, or even two, but it should be possible to implement them in four or five years. That’s not an unreasonable time frame considering the loss of funding took place over more than a dozen years.

Now that the governor has clearly and unequivocally embraced restoring a significant amount of public school funding, he needs to produce a clear roadmap showing how he intends to achieve that outcome. He needs to produce a long-range Idaho budget scenario that shows the public realistic projections of not only public school spending over the next five years, but all major categories of state spending — such as higher education, health and human services, adult and juvenile corrections, and all the rest of state government programs.

Why does a complete long-range budget projection need to be produced? Quite simply, it’s the only way we’ll know if the governor is serious in his commitment to his task force’s recommendations. A complete budget projection will reveal the likely path of other important elements of Idaho’s budget. For example, health care related expenses are changing significantly as a result of Obamacare, and corrections related expenses are being impacted by judicial rulings, incarceration rates, etc.

Revenue forecasts must be extended as well, to show whether Idaho’s current revenue structure can meet the demands associated with providing a complete spectrum of public services, including the education enhancements the governor now embraces. Only by presenting a credible, complete budget scenario covering the full period of the phase-in will the public be in a position to assess the veracity of the governor’s commitment to Idaho’s public schools.

As an added bonus, Idaho is long overdue to extend its budgeting time horizon beyond a single year. Lack of long-range budget planning in general is considered a weakness in any state’s fiscal management practices. Idaho has increasingly adopted policies that either delay or phase-in major policy initiatives, and without a sufficient time horizon it is difficult, if not impossible, to fully assess the consequences of delayed or phased-in implementations.

Michael Ferguson is the director of the Idaho Center for Fiscal Policy. He previously served as chief economist for the last six governors of Idaho.

Police Tase Twin Falls Man

BY ALISON GENE SMITH
alismith@magicvalley.com

TWIN FALLS • Twin Falls police used a stun gun Friday on a man with an arrest warrant who ran from them.

Robert Henry Swett, 30, was arraigned Monday on numerous charges: felony charges of unlawful possession of a firearm, possession of a controlled substance and concealing evidence, and misdemeanor charges of resisting arrest, petit theft, failure to appear, and failure to purchase a driver's license.

Swett was cited for the petit theft in August when he allegedly tried to steal a BB gun from Sportsman's Warehouse in Twin Falls.

Police gave this report: Officer Dusty Solomon arrived at the store Aug. 13 to find that security guards had detained Swett, who wouldn't let them remove the BB gun that he had placed down the front of his pants.

Security handcuffed Swett and searched him, finding an unloaded .45 caliber Derringer handgun in his pocket. Earlier, the guard told Solomon, Swett had approached a checkout counter with a box of ammunition but told the cashier he had to go to his car to get his money.

Solomon recognized Swett from an incident the day before, when the officer was called to Alta Drive to help investigate a possible officer impersonation.

A person called police saying Swett, dressed as a police officer, had handcuffed a woman, brought her outside and told her not to move.

Officers found Swett wearing a tan uniform-style shirt with Hailey Police Department patches on both shoulders and navy uniform-type pants. He also had handcuffs and a radio.

"The woman shared with us that they were just goofing around," Solomon wrote in the report.

Another officer said Swett had been hiding a Colt Defender air soft gun and the Derringer handgun in a van at the scene.

Officers cited and released Swett from Sportsman's Warehouse for petit theft but later found he was a felon not allowed to possess a firearm.

Last Friday, Officer Clint

Doerr went to Swett's house with an arrest warrant for unlawful possession of a firearm.

As Doerr approached, he saw Swett, wearing a hooded sweatshirt and baseball cap, pushing a bicycle out his apartment door into an alley in the 400 block of Second Avenue North.

Doerr turned on his patrol car emergency lights as Swett got on his bike.

After Doerr told Swett of the warrant and ordered him to the ground at gunpoint, Swett laid down as Doerr radioed for backup.

Then Swett jumped to his feet and ran toward Eden Street North. Doerr began to chase Swett, failing to activate his audio recorder because the situation was unfolding so quickly.

As Swett ran, he threw down his cap and sweatshirt.

Doerr then pulled out his stun gun and told Swett he would Tase him if he didn't stop. Swett looked back over his shoulder but didn't stop, so Doerr fired the stun gun.

"Mr. Swett screamed out and fell onto the ground," Doerr wrote.

Swett was handcuffed by another officer and was medically cleared by paramedics before being taken to the Twin Falls County Jail.

Officers searched Swett's discarded sweatshirt and found a spoon wrapped in plastic and covered with white residue along with a used syringe.

When police searched Swett, they also found a small amount of white substance in a baggie along with another spoon wrapped in plastic hidden in his right sock.

A woman back at his apartment consented to a search, and police found another spoon with residue. The woman told officers she had surgery and was prescribed 90 Oxycodone 30-mg pills. She said she only had 10 left, indicating that Swett must have taken about 70 of them.

Oxycodone often is abused and injected, police said.

As Swett was booked into jail, he gave police two Oxycodone pills he still had in a pocket.

Swett is scheduled for a preliminary hearing Oct. 18.

he landed.

Doctors in Salt Lake diagnosed Slade with Necrotizing Fasciitis — flesh-eating bacteria.

Slade had emergency surgery at midnight and four more surgeries in the few days after.

The doctors in Salt Lake are calling Slade's recovery a miracle.

Normally, surgeons would have taken Slade's leg to stop the disease, but the doctors didn't amputate because they didn't expect him to live, said Dixie.

Twin Falls dermatologist Chris Scholes — who did not see or treat Slade — said he has seen the condition only twice in his career.

"The disease is easy to misdiagnose. It may start with a red spot on the skin," Scholes said.

"The infection goes deeper beneath the skin and can move relatively quickly and get serious fast."

The infection invades flat layers of a membrane known as the fascia, connective bands of tissue that surround muscles, nerves, fat and blood vessels. Rapid surgical removal of dead tissue — in addition to antibiotics — is critical to stopping the infection, he said.

The disease is rare and usually strikes people with weakened immune systems, Scholes said.

But Slade is a healthy, active young man — and that is probably what saved him, said Slade's mother.

Wells Fargo Bank has set up an account to benefit the Dill family.

Slade came home Monday. He'll be taking antibiotics every day, and he'll get his stitches out in two or three weeks.

"Whatever they say, we are going to do it and be thankful," Dixie said.

Common sense and good wound care are the best ways to prevent a bacterial skin infection:

- Keep draining or open wounds covered with clean, dry bandages until healed.
- Don't delay first aid of even minor, non-infected wounds such as blisters, scrapes or any break in the skin.
- If you have an open wound or active infection, avoid common-use sites such as whirlpools, hot tubs and swimming pools until infections are healed.
- Wash hands often with soap and water or use an alcohol-based hand rub if washing is not possible.

residents, it wasn't going to fly." Since the hubbub, not much has changed for the property or residents. Many said they were reassured by Wills they would not be forced out, and time has eased some concerns. But there are reminders of the rezoning: Several empty spots remain in the park, and some have been filled with RVs. Wills said she did not know the park's vacancy rate. It was about 20 percent in 2011, according to Times-News archives. Other developments have sprung up along Pole Line, and construction is ongoing nearby. Louise Bowles, who once was panicked, said daily life at Lazy J has returned to normal. Occasionally she hears rumors but tries not to pay them any attention. "It's scary. You see all this construction up here," the 83-year-old said, watering her bushes Monday. "You wonder if it is going to last. But I've made up my mind that I'm going to stay. I can't afford to move." Bowles, who has lived at Lazy J since 1991, said she plans to "just go with the flow." "If push comes to shove, I've got six kids, and any of them would take me in." The land hasn't elicited much interest since the rezoning, said Gerald Martens, developer and engineer. Martens said he plans to submit a preliminary plat for the property's undeveloped section, but that plat would not include any Lazy J land. He'd like the 35 acres between Lazy J and Washington Street to accommodate commercial users, including large retail or hospitality services. But development has been impeded by market forces and sewer space — not by the five-year restriction on developing Lazy J, he said. The property was rezoned with the idea that after the undeveloped property is developed in a decade or so, Wills would re-examine Lazy J. Those plans are 15 to 20 years down the road, however, she said. "If it is not doing anything then, we'll have to develop it," she said. "It has just been a battle because our residents believe that they are just going to have to move." Mitch Humble, the city's community development director, said he expects the trailer park to be around a long time despite "dramatic" increases in Twin Falls commercial development. Commercial property permits in 2013 were up 50 percent from last year, he said. "We have a lot of commercially developed property in town," Humble said. "There is some development happening again, but not enough to use up all of the land. I think they are aware of that and are just waiting for the time to be right." Residential use of a commercial property has no consequences, he said. Non-conforming uses are more common than people realize. "Yeah, it shouldn't be there, but it was there before the zoning changed," he said. But nothing prohibits a trailer park owner from giving residents the required notice and forcing them off the land, he said. "Whether we changed the zoning or not, that could have happened anytime," he said. "In fact, if those property owners didn't care about the feelings of the people, and they wanted an easier time of getting their zoning approved, what they could have done is kicked them off and then asked for the zoning change." Humble said the Lazy J property ultimately will be part of a commercial corridor. "The future land use plan is, 'If we could wipe the slate clean, how would you want our city to look?' ... (Lazy J) was one of those places where (the council and community) said commercial should happen there." Whatever the fate short- or long-term, Miletich said he doesn't worry. He has a letter from Wills explaining that the closure was a rumor. If they try it again, he said, he'll "just go get me a lawyer." "It's a nice place in spite of the fact that they scared us," the Nampa area. Attorneys for St. Luke's opponents suggested the system's desires weren't that altruistic. Pate's Plan When Saltzer asked to join the system, St. Luke's patients had been driving from their homes in Canyon County to Meridian to see doctors and have surgeries. "We are running out of capacity at our St. Luke's Meridian Medical Center," Pate said. With 30 percent of Meridian patients coming from the western Treasure Valley, St. Luke's faced a choice: build a new hospital in Nampa or add on to the Meridian hospital, Pate said. St. Luke's leaders decided it would be best to build a hospital. Having Saltzer on board would be "tremendously impactful" to reaching patients in Nampa, he said. Pate also discussed St. Luke's new partnership with Utah-based insurer SelectHealth. St. Luke's is insuring its own workers through SelectHealth and encouraging patients to choose SelectHealth instead of other insurers. He said the partnership allows St. Luke's to keep 90 cents of each dollar of policyholders' premiums, compared with the usual 80 cents from Idaho's dominant insurers, Blue Cross of Idaho and Regence BlueShield of Idaho. That furthers St. Luke's eventual goal of rewarding doctors for doing efficient work instead of paying them for each service they perform, he said. The extra money "allows us to invest in health and allows us to [make] physicians whole" as the system makes that transition, he said.

Industry

Cable ONE. The TV industry as a whole could easily edge out their digital competition if companies like Turner worked with, instead of against, cable providers, Polka said, but greed rather than long-term sustainability is driving increasing rates. "Media giants don't have in mind the future of the TV industry, right now they have the gravy train and their riding that until its gone," Polka said. "It's very short sighted. It's heavy handed for Turner to treat customers the way they are. Consumers aren't dumb." Corporate greed and increasing rates for sports programming is weakening cable and satellite providers, the ACA contends. Turner would get paid regardless of Cable ONE's decision to swallow increased rates, at potential a per-customer cost of $4,000 to $5,000. Bundling channels has long been the backbone of television, he said, but the model is being used in a way that's hurting the industry, and things will probably get worse, he said. Companies bundle unpopular with popular channels to maximize profits instead of satisfy customer needs, he said. Loyalty from customers is the only thing that could keep the TV business afloat in the long run, said Niemann. "Stand with us, help us fight this," she said. "We're setting an example that cable customers aren't going to stand for rate hikes."

Karen Morris, a loan analyst on furlough from the U.S. Department of Education, protests the shutdown outside the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, Tuesday, in Atlanta.

Government Shutdown, Americans Get Shut Out

Govt Health and Safety Efforts Slowed or Halted

The government shutdown has slowed or halted federal efforts to protect Americans' health and safety, from probes into the cause of transportation and workplace accidents to tracking foodborne illness. The latest example: an outbreak of salmonella in chicken that has sickened people in 18 states.

The federal Centers for Disease Control and Prevention said Tuesday that it was recalling some of its furloughed staff to deal with the outbreak, which has sickened more than 270 people. Before then, the CDC had only a handful of scientists working on outbreak detection, severely hampering its ability to track potentially deadly illnesses.

With federal workers on leave, the states have had to pick up much of the slack.

In the case of food safety, state labs are investigating foodborne illnesses and communicating with each other — without the help of federal authorities, in many cases — to figure out whether outbreaks have spread.

Dr. Christopher Braden, head of the CDC division that investigates foodborne illness, said the agency will be able to better monitor the salmonella outbreak with the recalled federal staff. But the agency is monitoring more than 30 outbreaks, and gaps still exist as the federal bureaucracy limps through a shutdown beginning its second week.

"There's a backlog, and the team is going to have to work diligently and long hours to try and overcome that," Braden said. "It's possible we may find something we've missed, and when that's the case it's harder to start investigations later than earlier."

With staff furloughed last week, the CDC stopped monitoring for some foodborne pathogens, including shigella and campylobacter. The agency is now watching for those again, but Braden said some investigations are still on the back burner, including an ongoing outbreak of salmonella from handling live poultry that has sickened more than 300.

House GOP Dismisses Default Warnings as More Hype

Hard-line House Republicans are dismissing dire warnings that a government default would wreck U.S. and world economies as another case of hyperbole from an Obama administration that cried wolf about the likely impacts of automatic spending cuts and partially shutting down the government.

House Speaker John Boehner of Ohio speaks about the ongoing budget battle, outside his office on Capitol Hill in Washington, Tuesday.

Egged on by the GOP, Democrats have agreed to so many exemptions to the shutdown — from letting most Defense Department employees return to work to supporting full back pay for furloughed workers — they've mitigated much of the pain. Some conservative activists gleefully say they have shown that Americans can live without agencies Republicans like the least, such as the Environmental Protection Agency and the Internal Revenue Service.

In the House, conservatives now are challenging Treasury Secretary Jack Lew's insistence that on Oct. 17 the United States will no longer be able to borrow, making a first-ever government default imminent.

"I don't think we're ever going to default," said Rep. Dennis Ross, R-Fla. "We'll always service our sovereign debt."

Not true, says Lew. He says there is no option to prevent default "if we don't have enough cash to pay our bills."

While Treasury expects to have $30 billion of cash on hand Oct. 17, that money will be quickly exhausted in paying incoming bills, given that the government's payments can amount to $60 billion on a single day, Lew said.

A sober analysis from Goldman Sachs, the banking, securities and investment firm, said Treasury's cash balance could be depleted on any day after about Oct. 25. "At that point, it is possible that the Treasury would need to cease making payments in order to conserve the little remaining cash they would still have on hand," the analysis said.

Some of the more conservative Republican House members don't buy it.

"There's no way to default," Rep. Justin Amash, R-Mich., said Tuesday. "There's enough money coming into the Treasury to pay interest and to roll over principal."

A default might delay Social Security checks, benefits for military veterans and Medicare reimbursement to doctors. The last time congressional inaction posed the threat of default, in summer 2011, Treasury officials considered delaying payments due a particular day until enough incoming revenue was on hand to cover all of them for that day.

Shutdown Heads South; Antarctic Stations Freeze

The federal government shutdown is reaching all the way down to the South Pole.

The National Science

Foundation announced Tuesday that it is putting its three Antarctic scientific stations in deep freeze just as scientists are starting to arrive for the start of a new research season.

The NSF runs three stations in Antarctica spending just under $400 million a year there. It often takes weeks for some 1200 researchers who spend Antarctic spring and summer there to get to the southern continent by boat or plane.

"This is absurd, just absurd," said Alan Leshner, chief executive officer of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, the nation's largest science organization. "It's a very big logistical enterprise and this could jeopardize the entire research season for hundreds of important projects."

Researchers study astronomy, particle physics, climate change, and biology in the pristine continent, usually starting in October when the weather warms in the southern spring. The largest station is McMurdo but there are also stations at the South Pole and the Antarctic peninsula.

In a terse statement on its website, the NSF announced that "all field and research activities not essential to human safety and preservation of property will be suspended" because the agency runs out of money to operate the stations as of Oct. 14.

2 WIN PHYSICS NOBEL FOR HIGGS THEORY

Higgs, Englert win Nobel Prize for 'the God particle'

BY JOEL ACHENBACH
The Washington Post

The entire physics community anticipated Tuesday that Swedish Royal Academy of Sciences would bestow a Nobel Prize in physics for the discovery of the Higgs boson, the elusive subatomic particle that plays a crucial role in the fabric of the universe. But who, exactly, would get the honor? The aging theorists who dreamed it up back in 1964? Or the mostly younger experimentalists who last year said they'd found it?

The academy went with the theorists two of them, at least. The new Nobel laureates are 84-year-old Englishman Peter Higgs, after whom the particle is named, and Francois Englert, 80, of Belgium. That left out in the cold several other theorists who could plausibly claim to have deserved the honor as well.

Englert materialized by voice Tuesday morning in a teleconference after the announcement in Stockholm and did not sound particularly surprised as he answered a few questions about enduring unknowns in physics (dark energy, dark matter, quantum gravity). But a Nobel committee official said no one had been able to reach Higgs, despite multiple phone calls. The committee had also emailed him the news.

"I am overwhelmed to receive this award," Higgs said in a statement released by the University of Edinburgh. "I hope this recognition of fundamental science will help raise awareness of the value of blue-sky research."

The Higgs boson, once dubbed by scientist Leon Lederman as "the God particle," is associated with an invisible field that is part of the basic infrastructure of the cosmos. The mass of particles is determined by how they interact with this field.

The Nobel committee said it gave the prize to Englert and Higgs "for the theoretical discovery of a mechanism that contributes to our understanding of the origin of mass of subatomic particles, and which recently was confirmed through the discovery of the predicted fundamental particle, by the ATLAS and CMS experiments at CERN's Large Hadron Collider?"

Rarely has a Nobel Prize

announcement arrived with so much hype and anticipation. Everyone in the physics community knew that the prize could go to someone in-involved with the Higgs particle. It was as if the prize would be the final validation of the discovery, which was announced on July 4, 2012.

"This is great for physics. It's great for science. The story is fantastic," said Michael Turner, president of the American Physical Society.

AL-LIBI INTERROGATED ON U.S. NAVY WARSHIP

WASHINGTON (AP) • Aboard a Navy warship, U.S. investigators are likely playing good cop/bad cop, shouting and banging their hands on a table to get suspected al-Qaida operative Abu Anas al-Libi to give up key intelligence. That's what they're allowed to do, anyway. What interrogators shouldn't be doing is putting a hood over al-Libi's head, waterboarding him or depriving him of food.

The Obama administration would only say that al-Libi was being treated "humanely" as he is held on the USS San Antonio after he was captured in a raid in Libya over the weekend. A team of U.S. investigators from the military, intelligence agencies and the Justice Department has been sent to question him, two law enforcement officials told The Associated Press, speaking on condition of anonymity because they weren't authorized to discuss the ongoing operation.

"We know that al-Libi planned and helped execute plots that killed hundreds of people," Obama told a news conference Tuesday. "We have strong evidence of that, and he will be brought to justice."

While the U.S. once held people in secret prisons, questioned them over long periods of time, put duct tape over their eyes or forced them to strip naked, the Obama administration has swapped the secret "black sites" for battleships, acknowledged the capture and detention of a wanted terrorist and promised to stick to approved interrogation tactics like making sure the detainee has four hours of continuous sleep in a 24-hour period.

Al-Libi is being detained in military custody under the law of war, which means he can be captured and held indefinitely as an enemy combatant. He has long been sought for his role in the 1998 bombings of U.S. embassies in Africa and has been under indictment since 2000.

REDSKINS CONTROVERSY INTENSIFIES, BUT NO IMMEDIATE CHANGE AT HAND

BY MARK MASKE
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON • The controversy surrounding the Washington Redskins' name appears to have intensified in recent days, but several people familiar with the league's inner workings said late Monday and early Tuesday they sense no immediate change in stance by either the NFL or the Redskins on the issue.

One person familiar with the league's position on the matter said Redskins owner Daniel Snyder has remained adamant that he has no plans to change the team's name. That person said he continues to see little or no sentiment among other owners or top league officials to take forceful measures in the foreseeable future to try to convince Snyder to make a change.

The likelihood of a change would increase, the person said, if the Redskins and the NFL were to feel economic pressure to take action and, at least for now, that isn't the case, according to that person. The current feeling is that the Redskins would be likely to suffer economic harm if they make a name change, said the person, who spoke on the condition of anonymity because of the sensitivity of the topic.

Another person familiar with the league's view on the matter also expressed the view that nothing had changed at this point and added that there is no current movement by the Redskins or the NFL toward a name change. That person added, however, that some within the league do wish the Redskins would be more receptive toward listening to opposing views on the matter and considering the concerns of those who express such opposing views.

League officials do appear intent upon listening to opposing views and giving opponents of the Redskins name a chance to voice their concerns directly to the NFL.

President Obama said in an interview with the Associated Press late last week that he would consider a name change if he owned the franchise.

NFL officials have scheduled a meeting for next month with a Native American group that opposes the Redskins' name. That meeting with the Oneida Indian Nation is scheduled for Nov. 22 in New York, but could take place sooner. Adolpho Birch, the NFL's senior vice president of labor policy and government affairs, wrote Friday to Peter Carmen, the COO of Oneida Nation Homelands. Birch wrote that league officials would be unable to attend Monday's event in Washington at which the group voiced its objections to the Redskins' name but suggested a meeting sooner than Nov. 22, either in New York or in Verona, N.Y., where the Oneida Nation is based.

The NFL expressed a willingness to engage in constructive and meaningful dialogue with the Oneida Nation.

Snyder and Redskins General Manager Bruce Allen were in attendance Tuesday as the owners held a one-day meeting in Washington. The owners are not expected to discuss the Redskins' name issue, according to several people familiar with the deliberations.

AT A GLANCE

Parents of Malnourished Boys Make Court Appearance

DENVER • A Denver couple accused of starving their four young sons and keeping them in a filthy apartment strewn with cat feces, urine and flies made their first court appearance Tuesday and were advised of the felony child abuse charges against them.

The boys — 2, 4, 5 and 6 — have been placed in protective care and have undergone hospital exams that found they are malnourished, not toilet trained and can only communicate in grunts. Lorinda Bailey, 35, who is free on bond, appeared in court dressed in a black pant suit. Her husband, 66-year-old Wayne Sperling, is in custody and sat with defendants in other cases behind a glass barrier.

Bailey and Sperling did not enter pleas. However, both have previously pleaded guilty to child abuse.

Police said officers had been called in April 2012 after children were seen hanging from a window at the couple's apartment building. Officers reported there was food in the home and children appeared well-fed. The home was "messy and crowded," according to a police report.

Police followed up after learning Bailey and Sperling had both pleaded guilty to one count of child abuse in 2009.

The latest charges came after an investigation that began on Sept. 29, when Bailey took her youngest son to St. Joseph's Children's Hospital for a cut on his forehead that she said happened after a fall.

Denver police Officer N. Rocco-McKeel accompanied the case worker to the apartment and reported finding five cats and feces on the floor throughout the apartment and the "strong odor of a decomposing animal." The officer noted that flies covered every surface in one room and that he couldn't determine any age or developmental differences between the three oldest children.

Family: Man Who Set Self on Fire Was Mentally Ill

MOUNT LAUREL, N.J. • The death of a New Jersey man who set himself on fire on the National Mall was the result of his long fight with mental illness, not a political statement, his family said.

John Constantino, 64, of Mount Laurel, N.J., poured the contents of a canister of gasoline on himself in the center portion of the mall Friday afternoon, police said. He then set himself ablaze, with passing joggers taking off their shirts to help put out the flames. Police had said Constantino was conscious and breathing at the scene, but he died later that night at a Washington hospital.

"John Constantino was a loving father and husband. His death was not a political act or statement, but the result of his long battle with mental illness," his family said in a statement issued through lawyer Jeffrey Cox.

Lawyers: 19 Sandusky Victims Settle with Penn St.

HARRISBURG, Pa. • At least 19 young men have settled with Penn State over assertions of abuse by former assistant football coach Jerry Sandusky, according to lawyers for the claimants. Many, if not all of them, have received checks from the university, the attorneys said over the past two days. The school has set aside some $60 million to pay claims, though several lawyers say the settlements prevent them from disclosing details, including the amounts their clients were paid.

"They're getting the resources they need to navigate hurdles which have been thrown in front of them," said Harrisburg lawyer Ben Andreozzi, part of a group of four lawyers who have resolved nine claims. They have three other cases, including two that have not been presented to Penn State.

What if Car Boss Mulally Took Over at Microsoft?

Back when Microsoft was the biggest name in technology, CEO Bill Gates leveled an attack on the auto industry: If carmakers were as innovative as computer companies, he said, a car would cost just $27.

That was 16 years ago.

Today, PC sales are falling as consumers show a preference for mobile devices, and Microsoft is struggling. Meanwhile, U.S. car companies are resurgent. General Motors, the world's No. 2 carmaker, is gaining ground on No. 1 Toyota. And Ford, after 16 quarters in the black, expects to see $8 billion-plus in profit this year. It's a testament to the changing times that Microsoft is reportedly considering Ford Motor Co. chief Alan Mulally as CEO Steve Ballmer's replacement when he steps down in less than a year.

Mulally says he's made no changes to his plan to stay at Ford through the end of 2014. But he hasn't denied rumors that Microsoft Corp. is courting him. Ford's board of directors will gather in Dearborn, Mich., starting Wednesday. One of the items on the agenda will be a discussion of Mulally's future at the company.

American Adults Score Poorly on Global Test

WASHINGTON • It's long been known that America's school kids haven't measured well compared with international peers. Now, there's a new twist: Adults don't either.

In math, reading and problem-solving using technology — all skills considered critical for global competitiveness and economic strength — American adults scored below the international average on a global test, according to results released Tuesday.

Adults in Japan, Canada, Australia, Finland and multiple other countries scored significantly higher than the United States in all three areas on the test. Beyond basic reading and math, respondents were tested on activities such as calculating mileage reimbursement due to a salesman, sorting email and comparing food expiration dates on grocery store tags.

Not only did Americans score poorly compared to many international competitors, the findings reinforced just how large the gap is between the nation's highland low-skilled workers and how hard it is to move ahead when your parents haven't. In both reading and math, for exam-

The study, called the Program for the International Assessment of Adult Competencies, found that it was easier on average to overcome this and other barriers to literacy overseas than in the United States.

Egypt's Capital Scarred by Years of Turmoil

CAIRO • Egypt's capital has long been proud of its nickname, "Mother of the World" — a metropolis of 18 million throbbing with the vitality and fun of other great cities, even if at times it seemed unmanageable and chaotic.

But Cairo's spirit has been deeply scarred by 32 months of turmoil and bloodshed from two "revolutions," constant protests and crackdowns, and a military coup. Residents talk of an unfamiliar edginess. People are more suspicious of each other, whether because of increased crime or constant media warnings of conspiracies and terrorism.

Families are split by bitter ideological differences. Fights are sparked by a word or a gesture seen as supporting either the military or the Islamists who were ousted from power by the armed forces.

The mood goes beyond ideology. With police battered by the upheaval and rarely enforcing regulations, many people flout laws with no thought of the consequences — whether it's the cafes that take over sidewalks or thugs who seize plots of land.

A curfew in place for nearly two months has put a damper on Cairo's nightlife. It has been eased to start at midnight, but that was usually the hour when streets and parties were just getting lively.

Political violence has killed more than 2,000 people in the city and wounded many others, starting with the Jan. 25, 2011, revolution that ousted autocrat Hosni Mubarak. That was followed by demonstrations against the military rulers who replaced Mubarak, the protests during President Mohammed Morsi's year in office, and the June 30 "revolution" that prompted the July 3 coup against the president.

City landmarks now more famous for one of the violent incidents of the past 2 1/2 years include:

- Rabaah el-Adawiya, the mosque where hundreds of Islamists were killed in August when police cracked down on a sit-in demanding Morsi's reinstatement.

- A historic bridge over the Nile, once a favored romantic spot for couples, that was the site of a battle between police and anti-Mubarak protesters.

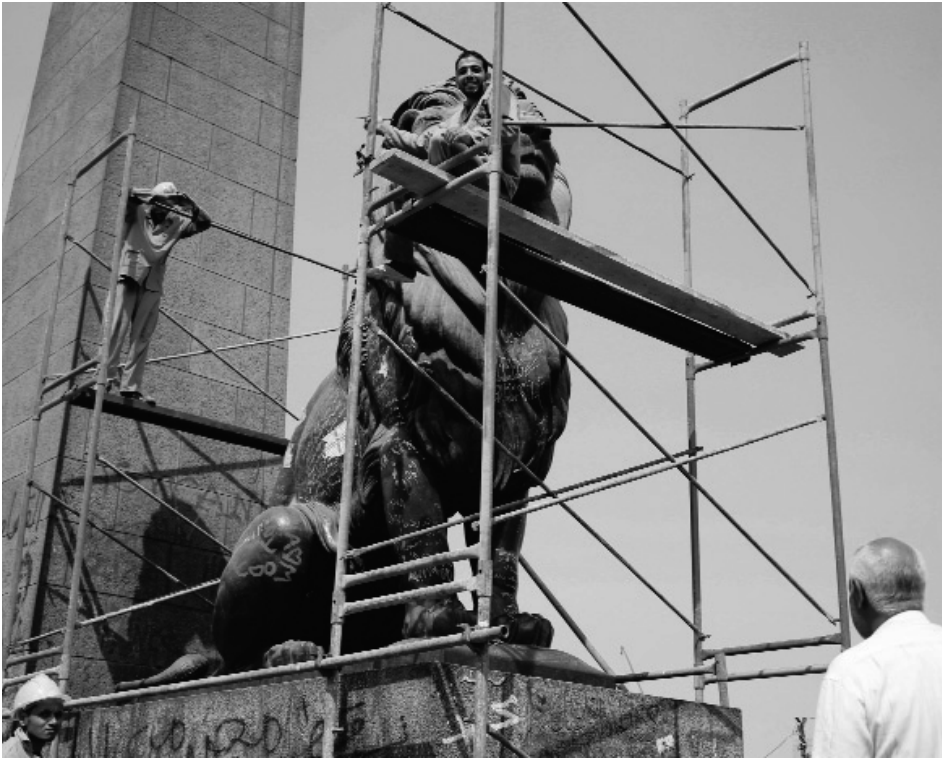

- The towering Nile-side state TV headquarters nicknamed "Maspero," now known for the army's killing of over 25 Christian protesters.

- Moqattam, once simply the rocky plateau overlooking the city where couples went to steal kisses, now remembered for a bloody street fight between Muslim Brotherhood supporters and opponents.

New neighborhoods joined the list Sunday, when Morsi supporters and police clashed, killing at least 40 people. With more streets strewn with debris and blackened by fires, Cairenes fear the city is turning into a Baghdad or a Beirut at their most violent.

"Blood is everywhere," said Belal Fadl, a popular satirical columnist and scriptwriter. "It is good that life goes on after every episode of bloodshed, but it is terrible from a human perspective," he said.

July 14, 1938-Oct. 5, 2013

BURLEY • Merrell Max Bingham, after a year of showing strong will and faith, was called home to his Heavenly Father on Saturday, Oct. 5, 2013. Merrell is a devout servant of our Heavenly Father and a very loving and devoted husband, father, grandfather and great-grandfather.

Merrell was born July 14, 1938, in Burley, Idaho, to Spencer and Myrtle Craner Bingham. He is the oldest of six children: Carol (Vern) Jolley of Meridian, Gay (Leland) Thompson of California, Joyce (the late Darrell Hope) of Gooding, Hal (Karma) Bingham of Carey and Shaina (Brian) Harper of Utah. He was raised on a farm in the Pella area and graduated from Burley High School in 1956.

Merrell then served an honorable mission, which was one of his greatest experiences in life, for the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in the Southern States Mission and then served in the United States Army. He also attended college at the University of Idaho and Ricks College, where he met and married his sweetheart, Janet Stoddard of Rupert. They were sealed for time and all eternity 50 years ago Feb. 21, 1963, in the Idaho Falls LDS Temple.

Merrell is survived by his wife, Janet (Stoddard) Bingham; and children, Becky (Dale) Grimm, Scott (Mindy Andersen) Bingham, Jeanna (Samuel) Garner and Monica (the late Jay Hamilton), all of Rupert, Idaho. Merrell and Janet have 25 grandchildren and 10 great-grandchildren.

Merrell loved the outdoors, especially being with his family camping, fishing, hunting and riding horses. He loved his horses and loved to share them with his children and grandchildren.

He was a Scouter in every sense of the word, always prepared, and the Scouts loved him as much as he loved to be with them. He helped many achieve their Eagle Scout awards. When it came to sports, if he wasn't playing the game himself, he was there cheering on his grandchildren. He was their biggest fan. Merrell has always been a hard worker and has been a dependable employee of the LDS Church for the past 25 years. He always gave of himself whether it be of his means, wisdom, sense of humor or simply time to sit and visit. He was a kind, gentle peacemaker that we will greatly miss in our presence.

The funeral will be held 11 a.m. Friday, Oct. 11, at the Rupert 3rd Ward Chapel, 526 S. F St. in Rupert, with Bishop Tom Haynes officiating. Viewing for family and friends will be held from 6 to 8 p.m. Thursday, Oct. 10, and 9:30 to 10:30 a.m. prior to the funeral, all at the church.

Services will conclude with burial in the Riverside Cemetery with military graveside rites under the direction of Joel Heward Hansen Mortuary.

Helen Marie Burnell Mauzey

Oct. 10, 1925-Oct. 6, 2013

BURLEY • On Oct. 10, 1925, Helen Marie Burnell was born at the family home in Kalispell, Mont., to Herbert E and Gladys Carnahan Burnell. She was a "country kid" being raised on a farm just outside of town. She graduated from Flathead County High School in 1943 and eventually went to work as a bookkeeper for Pacific Fruit and Produce, where she met her future husband, Gene Mauzey. They married on June 19, 1949, and were married for 60 years until Gene's death in 2011. Helen continued to work at intervals for Pacific Fruit even after she and Gene moved to Woods Bay to care for Gene's Dad.

Helen was an accomplished seamstress and sewed many of her family's clothes. She also enjoyed cooking (a family heritage), and the Mauzey home was known as a place for good food and fun. She thought nothing of hosting parties for large groups and was equally open to us kids bringing anyone home for dinner (even after working all day). Whatever house we lived in, she would think of something that would make it "better," and she kept Dad busy tearing down, tearing out, building up, etc.

Helen was a lifelong member of the American Legion Auxiliary, where she served as post president. She also belonged to Toast-mistresses and enjoyed honing her love for witty banter and playful arguing. She was a member of the First Bible Presbyterian Church in Kalispell and the most important thing in her life was her relationship with her God. She loved studying the Bible for herself and spent many years enjoying sweet fellowship with her Bible study ladies.

After Gene retired, they purchased a fifth-wheel and spent several winters snow-birding. They found ministries in need of help and devoted many hours to helping on construction projects, cooking, making quilts — whatever was needed, they were willing to do their best. Their traveling companions during this time were Gene's cousin and his wife, and they covered much of the southern United States together.

Helen shed her worn out "tent" and entered real life Sunday, Oct. 6, 2013, at the Warren House Assisted Living in Burley, Idaho.

She is survived by her children, Shirley (John) Ramey of Burley, Idaho, John (Tina) Mauzey of Kalispell, Mont., and Steve (Linda) Mauzey of Oregon City, Ore.; six grandchildren; 10 great-grandchildren; one brother, Fred (Pat) Burnell of Stevensville, Mont.; one sister, Evelyn Shepard of Kalispell, Mont.; two nephews; and one niece.

A service in Helen's memory will be held at 11 a.m. Saturday, Oct. 12, at the Calvary Baptist Church, 515 W. 27th St. in Burley.

The family expresses their sincere appreciation to the staff at the Warren House for the excellent care they provided for Mom during the last year and a half of her life.

Arrangements have been entrusted to the care of the Rasmussen Funeral Home of Burley.

David Kent Oneida

Oct. 7, 1942-Oct. 5, 2013

JEROME • David Kent Oneida, age 70, unexpectedly went to live with our Heavenly Father on Saturday, Oct. 5, 2013.

Dave was born Oct. 7, 1942, in Gooding, Idaho, to Martine Oneida from Shoshone, Idaho, and Garnet Atwood Oneida from White River, S.D. Dave grew up on his family sheep farm in Shoshone, Idaho, where he believed that he had the best life growing up.

Dave graduated from Shoshone High School in 1961, in which he was a member of the high school football team. Dave was a member of the Fort Ord, Calif., U.S. Army Reserves, 2nd Battalion, and more recently was an active member of the Snake River Elks Lodge located in Jerome, Idaho.

Dave spent most of his working years as an outfitter guide up in the Loon Creek area and a dispatcher and cement bulker driver for Idaho Concrete Company (October 1988 to March 2009). Dave was devoted to his companion of 40 years, Rhett Hughes, and was deeply loved by his family, friends and relatives near and far.

Dave was an avid hunter and fisherman, an awesome cook and a dedicated horse lover; he rode shot-gun with his buddies often. Everyone that knew Dave knew that he made the best Dutch oven bread in southern Idaho, and it was devoured at every social event he attended. Dave loved to take the grandchildren and great-grandchildren in Kermit, his dune buggy, where they would travel out to the desert and the timber. Dave was a big teddy bear with a heart of gold. Dave's most favorite sayings was, "Well, I don't know about that!"

Dave was preceded in death by his father, Martine Oneida; and his mother, Garnet Oneida, who passed away shortly after Dave on the same day. Dave is survived by his companion, Rhett Hughes; three siblings, Greg (Kelley) Oneida, Pat (Shanda) Hughes and Nikki (Lance) Kober; his two sisters, Renie (Bill) Bozzuto and Carmen Maestas; as well as his six grandchildren, Lacey, Trent, Riley, TJ, Seth, Wyatt and Waylon; and his great-grandchildren, Mekilla, Jordan and Tripton. Dave will be missed deeply by family, friends and everyone else he shared his life with.

It was Dave's wish that he not be grieved for in a funeral of death but rather celebrated in a remembrance of life. The time of this celebration will be 4 p.m. Friday, Oct. 11, at the Snake River Elks Lodge, 412 E. 200 S. in Jerome, with reception to follow. Dave's family suggests in lieu of flowers, memorials be made in his name to the Snake River Elks Lodge, 412 E. 200 S., Jerome, ID 83338.

Arrangements are under the care of Farnsworth Mortuary of Jerome.

OBITUARIES

Lois Ghan

April 8, 1931-Oct. 3, 2013

IONE, Calif. • Lois Ghan passed away Thursday, Oct. 3, 2013, from breast cancer.

Lois was an amazing friend, mother and grandmother. Everyone who knew Lois would say that she was dedicated to her health, to her Faith, to being a hard-headed Republican and to her family. She was also a “soccer mom” to her two grandchildren and packed their lunches every day from preschool to high school graduation. Lois was very active in the community and was dedicated to everything she took part in. She was undeniably selfless and never hesitated or complained when helping someone. Lois was energetic and always had a sparkle in her eyes to match the smile she always wore.

Please join us in celebrating her very special life at 2 p.m. Wednesday, Oct. 9, at the Cornerstone Church in Ione, Calif., followed by appetizers and refreshments at Evelyn Bishop Hall at Howard Park in Ione.

She was preceded in death by her husband, Red Ghan; and her son, Charlie Ghan; and survived by her two remaining children, Jeffrey Ghan of Florida and Christina Schob of Ione; and her two grandchildren, Joshua and Jessica Schob of Ione.

In lieu of flowers, we encourage donations to the Lois Ghan’s National Breast Cancer Foundation Fund, in care of American River Bank.

At the family’s request, there will be no service. Burial will be at Sunset Memorial Park in Twin Falls, Idaho. Condolences may be sent to the family by visiting www.danerimortuary.com and signing the guestbook.

Cyd Denise Dillon

Sept. 22, 1953-Oct. 3, 2013

TWIN FALLS • Cyd Denise Dillon, 60, of Twin Falls passed away Thursday afternoon, Oct. 3, 2013, at St. Luke’s Magic Valley Medical Center in Twin Falls.

Cyd was born Sept. 22, 1953, in Truckee, Calif., the only child born to Robert and Pearl Lorraine Moore. She grew up and attended schools at Lake Tahoe, Reno, Carson City and Elko, Nev.; graduating from Elko High School in 1971. Cyd married Mike Dillon on July 10, 1975. Together they raised two children, Jeremy and Heather.

They made their home in the Buhl and Filer area, where Cyd worked for Green Giant. They then moved to Twin Falls, where she worked as a multi-county specialist for the South Central Community Action Agency. Cyd enjoyed her work helping countless families in the Magic Valley. Mike and Cyd became members of the Church of Christ on Filer Avenue in 1978. Cyd taught Bible classes, wrote some curriculum, and impacted many lives through her years of teaching.

During her time at SCCAA, Cyd and Mike began working with the local Toys for Tots program and coordinated the program, “Santa’s Helpers.” They provided Christmas baskets of food and toys to families who otherwise would not have had Christmas. Cyd found great joy in organizing the families and workers and overseeing the huge task of providing for each family according to their needs. The final year they oversaw Santa’s Helpers, there were close to 400 families who received boxes of goods that had all been lovingly coordinated on Cyd’s 3-by-5 notecards. Cyd and Mike also opened a balloon and gift basket store called “All Ways for Fun.” Cyd loved being able to create gift baskets for birthdays, holidays and baby births. She also received great satisfaction in helping create Mike’s clown costume, painting faces and bringing joy to everyone she came in contact with.

In 1996, Cyd removed herself from most of her community work and took up the job of full-time grandma. She loved being able to help her son raising his first two children. Being home led to her becoming a Stampin’ Up consultant and many new friendships in the community. She also enjoyed scrapbooking,

SENIOR

Q. I think it would be a fine public service for you to explain what neighbors can do if they believe an elderly person is being abused. I know this happens even in small communities.

A. You are absolutely right. Elder abuse and neglect can happen anywhere. If unreported, cases of elder abuse can go on for months and years. For every case of elder abuse or neglect reported, as many as five cases go unreported. The Idaho Commission on Aging (<http://www.idahoaging.com/protection/elder.html>) investigates allegations of abuse, neglect, and exploitation involving vulnerable adults and takes remedial actions to protect older adults. You can dial 2-1-1, or 1-800-926-2588, to report your suspicions to them. Of course, if a senior citizen—or someone of any age—is in immediate danger dial 911. Reporting a suspected case of elder abuse or neglect is a serious matter, but responsible reporting can save lives.

All Can Agree on Beauty of Fall Colors

The one topic on which even Democrats and Republicans can agree is the beauty of fall leaves. If our elected officials took a field trip together through a grove of golden “quakies,” they might forget to be so contentious.

The ephemeral nature of the color change is part of the appeal, a reminder to enjoy the moment because it is fleeting. Foliage color in the garden can be the grand finale to summer.

Trees, shrubs and perennials all have their autumn color superstars. But first why do leaves change color this time of year? I could go into the biology of the process, the technical details, but that always makes my head hurt. And besides, I don’t really know.

Basically, two environmental causes, day length and temperature, bring the color. Short days and long nights are what really pull the trigger for leaves to lose their chlorophyll and show their hidden colors. The cooling weather that accompanies the change in daylight hours is an additional incentive.

The intensity of color also can be influenced by the conditions preceding the color change, such as whether the plant received adequate water and food during the summer.

But in the end, genetics trump environmental conditions. No amount of water, fertilizer or perfect temperature will make a Honey Locust’s leaves turn red.

Some trees to consider for their autumn colors are Locust (Gleditsia), Hawthorne (Crataegus), Ash (Fraxinus) and Maple (Acer). Many deciduous shrubs have great autumn color as well. A common but still worthy shrub is Burning Bush (Euonymus alatus). The color can vary, but typically they will develop into a red or even pink-red.

Sumac (Rhus) could be categorized as a tree or large shrub, depending on the species and how it is grown. It has great fall color. Smokebush (Cotinus) is another large shrub/small tree with interesting foliage varying from yellow to red based on variety. Many perennials also develop changing foliage colors as the temperatures drop. If we are not in too big of a hurry to cut them back, we will see yellows, purples and reds that often are overshadowed by their louder, taller neighbors.

Be quick in your enjoyment of autumnal colors, because they are short-lived. Sadly, contentious politics are not.

Magic Valley ATV

FILER • Several family potato recipes were brought out of retirement Saturday for a good cause.

When Linda Stimpson heard that the Twin Falls County Fair Foundation was holding an “Anything Potato” Cook-off, she remembered potato candy her father used to make. Stimpson thought it would be something unusual that other vendors wouldn’t bring. Unfortunately, her father took the recipe to his grave, so Stimpson did some sleuthing on the Internet and found a recipe that tasted similar. Then she started experimenting to make a chocolate mint version as well.

The Kimberly woman and fellow ATV rider Dixie Best worked to make enough candy for the cookoff. Their melt-in-your-mouth confection was voted the best potato dish at the Cookoff, as evidenced by the number of repeat customers and the number of paper votes.

Their effort was on behalf of the Magic Valley ATV Riders. “We decided about 10 days ago to do this because it benefits the community,” Best said. “The ATV Club likes to be involved in community activities.”

Dwight Moore was the youngest vendor to enter the “Anything Potato” Cook-off. He took second prize for his tater tot casserole. The cook-off was sponsored by the Twin Falls County Fair Foundation to raise money toward building an event center.

The money raised will go to gauge the feasibility of building an event center at the Twin Falls Fairground in Filer. Backers envision a multi-use center that could accommodate year-round livestock events, trade shows, concerts and other entertainment. A 60,000-square-foot center could cost $12 million to $16 million.

Voters turned down a 2006 proposal to build the center. Supporters hope that this time, they can use private money instead.

Leslie Preston, of Twin Falls, was one of 100 or so people who turned out for the first-ever “Anything Potato” Cookoff. “We have needed an event center for a long time,” he said.

With the growth in Twin Falls and Filer since the proposal was narrowly defeated, he said, it’s time to try again. His only complaint was that he had only one ticket to vote for his favorite potato dish.

Potato salads, potato doughnuts, scalloped potatoes, baked potatoes, potato candy, potato chowder and potato ice cream all were served.

Jessica Minor, of Jerome, came to support the Magic Valley ATV Riders and the idea of an event center. An indoor event center with a concrete floor would improve the experience of events and trade shows already occurring in the Magic Valley, she said.

Last spring, for example, she and her husband attended the camper show in Twin Falls and went to a similar show in Boise the following weekend. The experiences were completely different. Boise’s camper show was in a new heated facility with concrete floors in contrast to the dirt floor at the CSI Expo Center.

The Boise facility was also larger, which allowed companies to display more campers. “Because of that, we bought our camper in Boise,” she said. “The camper we wanted was there, and it was a much nicer experience.”

A nice event center would bring more business to the Twin Falls area, Minor said.

Stan Mai, a member of the fair foundation, hopes more people will agree.

“It appears that the people of the Magic Valley want this, but the money is always the question,” Mai said. Last weekend’s cookoff was the first baby step. He hopes the Cookoff returns next year with more vendors and eaters.

But at least one vendor was happy the crowd wasn’t larger.

Dwight Moore had decided to focus on culinary arts for his senior project at Buhl High School. The plan called for finding a mentor, job shadowing and eventually cooking something.

Instead, Moore was intrigued when the “Anything Potato” event was discussed at a 4-H meeting. He decided to fast-forward his project by entering a dish.

“I just wanted to come here and have fun,” he said, still somewhat dazed by his second-place finish. He brought a pan of tater tot casserole, one of the go-to meals at his home when no one has other dinner plans. Moore said his family hadn’t ever heard of tater tot casserole until he brought a book home five or six years ago that contained the recipe. It quickly became a family favorite.

In addition to the casserole, Moore also called his grandmother to get her recipe for spud nuts (potato doughnut holes). He made it for the first time ever the night before the Cookoff and was quite pleased with the result.

“Grandma hadn’t made spud nuts for 30 years,” he said. “She emailed the recipe to me. It turned out pretty good.”

Minidoka 4-H Brings Kids into the Kitchen

BY CINDY SNYDER

Special to the Times-News

RUPERT • For Garrett Ryan, 4-H means time spent in the kitchen, not in the barn.

Because his family had no animals when he joined 4-H as a second-grader, the Minico High School junior got his start with miscellaneous projects. His mother and grandmother quickly began suggesting that he try this cooking project or that cooking project.

"I've done at least one cooking project every year I've been in 4-H," Ryan said.

Although he hopes to parlay those experiences into a career as a nutritionist or dietician, he also would like to work in a bakery. While he doesn't cook often, he does bake pies, French bread and cake. So much cake, in fact, that he can't even begin to eat a small percentage of it.

Once family members saw what he had learned through a cake decorating project, they began asking him to make cakes for birthdays and other special events, including two weddings.

While Ryan is modest about his cake decorating skills, noting that he could take a couple of more 4-H courses, Donna Gillespie says he does amazing things with cakes. Gillespie, a University of Idaho extension educator in Minidoka County, specializes in youth development and 4-H.

After seeing declines in participation, food projects are on the rise again. That's in part because club members can do a food project during a meeting with the bonus of snacking on the project at the end. Or members can demonstrate what they have learned through a food project at a meeting and bring a sample to share as a snack.

Rhea Lanting, UI extension educator in Twin Falls County, calls the upswing in food projects a success story in 4-H. Many projects have been revamped to focus on science principles and healthy living, while encouraging parents and grandparents to learn along with their 4-H member. "It's more practical and hands-on learning," she said. "We are targeting life skills."

One example is the updated food preservation manuals. Lanting worked with extension educators across the Magic Valley to rewrite the canning, drying and freezing projects. "The curriculum is almost going back to the early years of extension, when researchers found that if they went through youth, the youth would train their parents about the new ways to do things."

Anybody can dry or freeze foods, Lanting said, but if you haven't done it, the process may seem more time-consuming or difficult than it actually is. Even something as simple as learning the basics of cutting and blanching vegetables gives new cooks a strong start.

Food preservation depends on scientific principles, which are explained as club leaders discuss the importance of following a USDA-approved recipe rather than one found on the Internet and why adjusting altitude is critical. Members also learn why it's OK to can tomatoes in a water bath, but green beans need to be processed in a pressure cooker.

"We see more people going back to canning. They have their own gardens, and they don't know what to do with all that produce," Lanting said. One new curriculum focuses on eating from the garden and walks 4-H members through the process of growing a garden and then preserving that produce.

Pie-making and sewing on buttons are other skills that have been nearly lost, but mastering those skills can give kids confidence that they can do things that even adults think are difficult. Safe Sitters is another life skills project that helps members learn to safely care for younger children.

Sometimes those life skills turn into career paths. Ryan admits he never would have considered becoming a nutritionist or baker without the encouragement of his 4-H leaders, mother and grandmother. But even if he ends up working in an entirely different area, he said, his time in the kitchen has been valuable.

"Cooking is something everyone should learn to do, at least a few things," Ryan said.

The "Let's Make Trail Mix Project" is an example of how 4-H members can learn to dry food.

Members select what fruits to dry in a dehydrator or conventional oven. Then they add other ingredients, such as cereal or nuts, to make their own special mix. Properly storing the trail mix so it can be enjoyed later or traded with friends is another key component.

Idaho Beef Council Gets in The Game with Beef as BSU Sponsor

TIMES-NEWS

BOISE • That’s right, fans, when it comes to Boise State football tailgating, the Idaho Beef Council and Beef Chili will be front and center at the Oct. 19 game against the Nevada Wolf Pack, council Director Traci Bracco told the Times-News in an email. The council is the official game day sponsor and will give out samples of Bronco Beef Chili, as well as a year’s supply of beef to one lucky Broncos fan, Bracco said. Stop by the Idaho Beef Council tailgating tent and register to win. You do not have to be present to win. Just as the weather is turning colder, and you need a warm, filling and easy tailgating dish, chili is always your best game plan. After all, October is National Chili Month, Bracco said. For more information, call 208-376-6004 or see BenefitsWhatsForDinner.com

Fluffbuffs Celebrate Sugary Concoction in Mass

BY DENISE LAVOIE
Associated Press

LYNN, Mass. (AP) — Just mention Fluff to people who grew up in New England, and you’ll get lots of smiles and enthusiastic nods.

The gooey, sugary marshmallow treat invented almost a century ago is still enormously popular, despite concerns about childhood obesity. Last year, the company that makes Marshmallow Fluff sold about 8 million pounds of the white creme, and a bill to make the Fluffernutter — peanut butter and Fluff on bread — the official state sandwich has been reintroduced in the Legislature.

Outside New England, Fluff is not nearly as well-known. Grocery stores in other parts of the country usually place Fluff in the baking aisle because it is used in recipes for fudge and other desserts, or in the ice cream section because it is sometimes used as a topping. But in New England, Fluff is in the bread aisle — right next to the peanut butter.

In Somerville, where the concoction was invented, the eighth annual “What the Fluff?” festival drew about 11,000 people last weekend. Enthusiasts ate Fluff-inspired food and participated in a Fluff “Lick-Off” contest, Fluff bowling and Sticky Musical Chairs.

“I love Fluff!” said Nicole Salvati, 41, of Saugus, a gym instructor who attended the festival.

“It just brings you back to your childhood. It was one of those comfort foods that you always went back to, you know, peanut butter and Fluff for school lunch. ...It’s like a big hug.”

Mimi Graney, one of the festival organizers, said she came up with the idea about nine years ago to try to promote economic development in Somerville’s Union Square.

“Marshmallow Fluff was invented here back in 1917, and whenever I would mention it to anyone, their eyes would just light up,” Graney said.

Fluff was concocted by a Somerville man named Archibald Query, who made it in his kitchen and then began selling it door to door.

In this Sept. 27 2013 photo, a jar of Marshmallow Fluff and a Fluffernutter sandwich are displayed in North Andover, Mass. Last year, the company that makes Marshmallow Fluff sold about 8 million pounds of the white creme, and a bill to make the Fluffernutter — peanut butter and Fluff on bread — the official state sandwich has been reintroduced in the state legislature.

By 1920, two Swampscott men bought the recipe from Query for $500. H. Allen Durkee and Fred Mower had been making hard candies together but began mixing Fluff at night.

Housewives spread the word about the marshmallow mixture, and eventually, Fluff was sold in local grocery stores. Sales kept increasing, and by 1930, Durkee and Mower — Durkee-Mower Inc. — had the largest distribution of marshmallow creme in New England.

In 1920, a gallon of Fluff cost $1. Today, a 16-ounce container goes for about $2.

Not much else has changed about Fluff.

It’s still made with just four ingredients — corn syrup, sugar syrup, dried egg whites and artificial vanilla flavoring — and it’s still made in a small manufacturing plant in Lynn.

The sugar content of Fluff — about 6 grams in 2 tablespoons — has caused controversy in recent years as people worry about increased obesity rates, especially among children.

In 2006, a state senator in Massachusetts proposed limiting Fluff’s availability in school lunchrooms, but another lawmaker fought back by proposing the Fluffernutter as the official state sandwich. Both proposals failed to gain traction, but the Fluffernutter bill is up for consideration again this year.

Jonathan Durkee, the grandson of Allen Durkee and treasurer of the company, can’t quite understand the attempt to link Fluff to childhood obesity.

“I don’t think Fluff contributes to that at all,” he said. “Fluff is not something you eat on a daily basis. Eat your fruits and vegetables, and you can have your Fluffernutter. I don’t think it’s a big problem.”

The privately held company does not release its financial information, but Durkee said sales have increased from a decade ago, although they have remained flat over the past couple of years.

ONLINE: Friday Flight of Beer News

Community blogger Steve Koonce writes about craft beer at “Idaho on Tap.” An excerpt from his latest post:

“Well, I think we can officially stick a fork in to summer, as it is done. The weather has turned cold, and so we toss out (most of) the wheat beers and bring on the malty Oktoberfests, porters and stouts. Luckily for us, there’s never an off season for beer; what a great world!

“...As many of you know, I love Stone Brewing Co. I am an unabashed supporter of that brewery whose bottles are adorned with gargoyles and stream-of-consciousness stories for the liquid as much as the thought and process behind the company...”

A Seafood Stew That Can Be Ladeled up in 30 Minutes

BY J.M. HIRSCH
AP Food Editor

When fall weather has us hankering for a bowl of warmth, we tend to think of chili and beef stew.

The trouble with both of those delicious options is time. The best versions of each tend to require long simmers to really develop the great and comforting flavors we're looking for. That's fine for a weekend spent in the apple orchard, but hard to squeeze in during the week when kids and errands are competing for our time at the stove.

And that was the inspiration for this delicious seafood stew. It is every bit as rich and flavorful as a good chili or meat-based stew, but cooks up in no time. Unlike beef, which needs a long, low simmer to become tender, seafood prefers to be cooked quickly (otherwise it can toughen up).

There aren't a whole lot of rules for a recipe such as this. Add or subtract ingredients as you see fit. But do cook the seasonings with the oil and onion first, as described in the recipe. This helps them quickly develop the sort of deep flavors you'd normally get from a much longer cooking time.

And don't be put off by the "spicy" in the recipe title. The heat is mild and is there mostly to highlight the other flavors in the dish.

 - 1/4 teaspoon fennel seeds, lightly crushed (use the back of a spoon)
 - 2 stalks celery, chopped
 - 15-ounce can diced tomatoes

Add the shrimp and haddock and increase the heat slightly to maintain a simmer. Cook for 4 to 5 minutes, or just until the shrimp are pink and the haddock flakes easily. Stir in the parsley, dill and lemon juice, then season with salt and pepper.

Big Money Shapes GMO Labeling Fight in Wash.

BY PHUONG LE
Associated Press

SEATTLE (AP) • The debate over labeling genetically modified foods has shaped up to be one of the costliest initiative fights ever in Washington state, with most of the dollars coming from out of state.

Five corporations and a trade group representing food manufacturers have largely financed efforts to defeat Initiative 522, raising $17.2 million so far, according to the latest campaign finance reports. Supporters including Dr. Bronner's Magic Soaps and natural food companies have raised $4.7 million.

On Nov. 5, voters will decide whether to approve I-522, which requires genetically engineered foods offered for retail sale to be labeled as such. Products would have to carry a label on the front of the package disclosing that they contain GE ingredients.

Supporters say consumers have a right to know whether foods they buy contain such ingredients and a GE label is no different from other food labels. Opponents say it would cost farmers and food processors, and such a label implies the food is somehow less safe.

Genetically modified foods have been controversial for years, but the issue has gained renewed attention as states consider bills mandating labels for foods that contain genetically modified organisms, or GMOs.

Pisco: A Liquor Hot Enough to Have Ambassadors?

BY MICHELLE LOCKE
Associated Press

The Peruvian government believes it has a diplomatic solution to a spirited problem.

The problem? Not enough Americans are familiar with pisco, a Peruvian liquor that has been riding a popular wave of trendy South American cuisines to become an up-and-comer on the cocktail scene. The solution? Appoint 10 U.S. bartenders to serve as official pisco ambassadors for the grape brandy.

"Crazy, right?" says Todd Thrasher, of Restaurant Eve, PX Bar and TNT Bar in Alexandria, Va., and one of the 10 pisco plenipotentiaries. "When I started my job, my parents were like, 'What? You're going to be a bartender?'" Then all of a sudden you're a Peruvian pisco ambassador.

Admittedly, a total promotional stunt. But perhaps a clever one. In the spirit world, it isn't easy being the new kid in town. And it's not enough to be cool. To catch on, you also have to be tasted. And what better way to make that happen than to teach the folks who shake your drink?

Once obscure — and still so in much of the country — pisco is showing up in a growing number of bars and liquor stores. It is made in Peru and Chile, and both countries claim pisco as their national spirit, spurring intense debate on who had it first.

Either way, its clean taste and faintly fruity aroma makes pisco an easy partner for the sorts of citrusy cocktails Americans love. Pisco is a grape spirit that has not been aged in wood, leaving it clear.

The new world of pisco goes well beyond the classic pisco sour and pisco punch cocktails. At the PISCO Latin Lounge in San Francisco, which opened five years ago and is believed to be the first modern U.S. bar devoted to pisco, guests get an authentic version of pisco punch, which was invented in 1880s San Francisco. But folks also can try flights of pisco intended to demonstrate the nuances the spirit can have depending on the grapes used to make it.

PISCO owner James Schenk has watched as pisco has gone from little-known to a spirit that most serious bars carry at least one brand of, and maybe two or three. Meanwhile, pisco has been featured at major events, including a headliner event at last year's South Beach Wine & Food Festival.

"The great thing about it is that five years ago, no one had pisco," says Schenk. "Now, there's an insurgence of people beginning to really introduce and explain to all these bars and restaurants — you can have one, you can have two or three."

In Peru, the government has imposed several strict production standards, including a prohibition on adding anything to the distilled spirit, not even water, as well as mandating that the spirit rest for three months in a neutral container — never a wooden barrel.

Officials also are working on promoting Peruvian pisco — after all, there is a rivalry going on — hence the bartender "ambassadors." Those U.S. mixologists got a trip to Peru to learn more about pisco and come up with cocktail recipes.

Melanie Asher, master distiller and blender for La Diablada, says this year seemed the perfect time to partner with PromPeru, the government's promotional arm. That's because it happens to be the 400th anniversary of the first historical evidence of pisco production in Peru — a 1613 will bequeathing quantities of the spirit to the heirs of a man called Pedro Emmanuel.

Asher, who was born in Peru but grew up in the United States, is CEO of Macchu Pisco, producers of Macchu Pisco and the limited-edition La Diablada brands. She founded the company in 2004 with her family, including her 98-year-old grandmother who pitches in with advice on the La Diablada blend.

While pisco punch hails from San Francisco, the classic pisco sour also has an American tie-in. It was created by Victor Morris, an American bartender who worked in Peru in the early 20th century.

Pisco is, says Asher, a "perfect union of an American-Peruvian partnership."

Arkansas Serves Up Cheese Dip

BY JEANNIE NUSS
Associated Press

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) • Memphis and Texas have barbecue. Mississippi has fried chicken. Louisiana has, gosh, what doesn't Louisiana have when it comes to food?

But Arkansas, surrounded by these Southern foodie hot spots, has long been overshadowed by its neighbors. So, in an assertion of culinary pride, the state has tried to stake its claim as the home of a somewhat unlikely dish: cheese dip.

That queso you've eaten in a kitschy, Mexican-ish restaurant? Arkansas says it started here when a restaurant called Little Mexico opened in 1935 and introduced the dish.

Some Texans take issue with that claim, but whether Arkansas really gave rise to cheese dip seems beside the point. The snack has carved out its own place in Arkansas' culinary scene, somewhere near purple hull peas and pulled pork. The state hosts the World Cheese Dip Championship (though it's on hiatus this year) and boasts a cheese dip trail for tourists and locals seeking to sink tortilla chips into bowls of gooey, melted cheese.

Cheese dip, unlike its kirschwasser-infused cousin, fondue, is far from highbrow. But over the years, it has evolved into something a bit fancier than a bowl or crock-pot of congealed cheese schlepped out during football season.

"It's gone way beyond the Velveeta-Rotel combination," said John McClure, the World Cheese Dip Championship's festival director.

Since the championship's inception in 2010, the festival has seen cheese dips featuring lobster, blackened crawfish, even vegan cheese.

Across Arkansas, the dish no longer is confined to Mexican restaurants. It's appetizer fodder for fancy burger joints and quirky cafes.

Bringing Soccer to the Fore

Ten seniors from Twin Falls and Canyon Ridge have played together for years in the spring and now have brought the high school teams to state tournament contention.

BY DAVID BASHORE

TWIN FALLS • The very second the referee blew his whistle to bring Monday's match to a close, members of the Twin Falls and Canyon Ridge boys soccer teams began high-fiving and patting each other on the back.

Not their teammates — their opponents.

That's what happens when so many players on both teams have grown up alongside their counterparts across town. Ten seniors, in fact, have played on the same spring club team for most of the last decade — five per school.

So when Canyon Ridge's Josh Clark, Oscar DeLaTorre, Erick Ramirez, Efrain Venegas and Uriel Arroyo lined up against Taylor Haman, David Geske, Reed McKenzie, Michael Ruiz, and Tanner Rawson of Twin Falls on Monday, there wasn't the usual feistiness and aggression associated with a "derby" (soccer jargon for rivalry game). Some of them even carpooled to Monday's match together.

"From when the whistle starts the match to when it ends, we're getting after each other," said Haman, a hybrid midfielder/forward for the Bruins. "But once it's over, we go back to being friends. It makes those matches easier, because they're all your friends."

DeLaTorre, a defender/midfielder for Canyon Ridge, said playing against his childhood friends makes things more difficult emotionally. But there's little doubt that physically and tactically it's an advantage.

"You definitely get to know their tendencies, and that helps out a lot," said Geske, who's played forward for the Bruins but deputized in defense on Monday. "Like I know Oscar's going to move the ball inside onto his right foot, and you might know what spot Josh might be a little weaker at."

Haman and Clark, the Riverhawks' goalkeeper, have been best friends for most of their lives. Haman scored a penalty against Clark earlier in the season, but on Monday Clark foiled him when he was through on goal.

"I'll get some (grief) for that," Haman quipped.

The grief only lasts as long as the play, though, because these 10 rely on each other when they play in the spring for the Twin Falls Rapids club team. Each of the last three seasons the unit has finished fourth or better at the Idaho Youth Soccer Association's State Cup, and last season they lost by one goal in a regional tournament to the team that eventually took nationals.

As they wind down their high school careers, the group has translated that spring success into the fall, where — after years of struggling in the Great Basin Conference — Canyon Ridge and Twin Falls finished one-two in the regular-season standings.

That pins them as the teams to beat when the district tournament starts Thursday, though both teams have a first-round bye and will begin play on Saturday at Sunway Soccer Complex.

The legacy they leave is one of helping bring the two downtrodden programs to among the elite not only in the region, but the 4A division as well.

"It's been great to see this develop each year getting better and better," Clark said. "Playing with them and against them for forever, it's great to play against them and keep the top soccer in the valley here."

Tigers Rally Past A's to Force Game 5

ASSOCIATED PRESS

DETROIT • On a night of desperation, dispute and finally, delirium, Max Scherzer and the Detroit Tigers kept their season alive by the slimmest of margins.

A tying home run, helped along by a couple of fans in right field.

A full-count pitch with the bases loaded that was low and inside but became strike three when the batter swung.

A line drive down the line with the bases still full — foul by a few feet. During a relief outing to remember, Scherzer escaped a major jam one inning after two fans reached out to try to reel in Victor Martinez's disputed home run, and the Tigers rallied past the Oakland Athletics 8-6 on Tuesday to force a decisive fifth game in their AL division series.

Scherzer was in line to start Game 5, but the 21-game winner came on Tuesday instead for his first relief appearance since the 2011 postseason. He wriggled out of a bases-loaded, none-out jam in the eighth inning and got the win.

"We took our best shot and we had to because we were behind the 8-ball a little bit," Tigers manager Jim Leyland said. "We took that shot and, hey, both teams are going to have a good pitcher going two days from now."

After avoiding elimination, the Tigers can now send Justin Verlander to the mound Thursday night in Oakland. Verlander shut out the A's at the Coliseum in Game 5 of the division series last year.

Oakland hasn't announced a starter for Thursday. It is Bartolo Colon's turn in the post-season rotation, but rookie Sonny Gray could also come back on normal rest after a brilliant performance in Game 2.

"We haven't decided anything yet," manager Bob Melvin said.

Playing catch-up most of the way in Game 4, the Tigers tied it first with Jhonny Peralta's three-run homer in the fifth and then on Martinez's solo shot in the seventh. A couple of fans attempted to catch Martinez's drive, and at least one of them bobbled the ball as he reached over the railing above the wall.

That prevented right fielder Josh Reddick from having any chance at a leaping grab. Reddick and center fielder Coco Crisp immediately protested, pointing up at the stands in the hope of a fan-interference call. But umpires upheld the home run after a replay review.

"I have no doubt I was going to catch that ball. When I looked at the replay, that's what I thought," Reddick said. "It's totally frustrating that a fan can influence the game."

Gary Darling, the crew chief, was umpiring in right field. He disagreed, even after the replay.

"It was clear he was not going to catch the ball, so it was clearly going to be a home run," Darling said. "There wasn't any other evidence on replay to turn it another way."

Scherzer came out of the bullpen in the seventh and gave up a run, then ran into trouble again in the eighth. With the Tigers ahead 5-4, he allowed a walk and a double to start the inning. But after an intentional walk to load the bases, Leyland left his ace on the mound.

Scherzer struck out Reddick, who swung and missed at what would have been ball four on a low, inside pitch. Stephen Vogt struck out too, but pinch-hitter Alberto Callaspo's line drive to left nearly fell in before landing foul.

Callaspo eventually lined out to center.

"It was surreal," said Scherzer, the winning pitcher in both Detroit victories this series. "Maybe it's not the ninth inning, but that's the stuff you dream about pitching — bases loaded, eighth inning, no outs, and I was able to do it."

Detroit, held hitless through four innings in a game of twists and turns, added three runs in the eighth on a wild pitch and a two-run double by Omar Infante that made it 8-4.

Yoenis Cespedes hit a two-run single in the ninth, bringing the potential tying run to the plate, but Joaquin Benoit struck out Seth Smith to end it.

Crisp had four hits and three runs for the A's, who led 3-0 and 4-3 but couldn't close out the defending American League champions. The Oakland bullpen hadn't allowed a run all series until Tuesday.

After Crisp put the A's ahead 4-3 with an RBI single off Scherzer in the seventh, Martinez lifted a fly to right against reliever Sean Doolittle. It would have been an extremely difficult catch for Reddick, and it looked as though the ball might have cleared the wall even without the fans' involvement.

It was certainly an anxious wait while umpires reviewed the play, which brought back memories of Derek Jeter's fan-aided homer against Baltimore in the 1996 AL championship series at Yankee Stadium.

Peralta followed with a double, and Austin Jackson — who was 1 for 14 with 10 strikeouts in the series to that point — managed a broken-bat single to put the Tigers ahead 5-4.

It appeared Detroit was in big trouble in the eighth, but Scherzer was able to protect the one-run lead, and the Tigers eventually added to it.

Detroit starter Doug Fister allowed three runs and seven hits in six innings before being relieved by Scherzer, who came back on three days' rest after his victory in Game 1.

Oakland took the series lead with a win in Game 3, and Crisp's leadoff triple Tuesday put the Tigers on their heels again. Detroit brought the infield in — a sign that even one run could be vital — and Crisp scored on Jed Lowrie's one-out single, putting immediate pressure on the Tigers' slumbering offense.

It appeared the Athletics were on their way to the ALCS when Lowrie's two-run homer in the fifth gave Oakland a three-run lead. With slugger Miguel Cabrera still hobbled by injuries, A's rookie Dan Straily held the Tigers hitless until the fifth.

But after a bloop single by Prince Fielder, Martinez grounded a base hit to right. Peralta, who moved from shortstop to left field after returning from his late-season drug suspension, lined one over the wall in left, finally bringing the Comerica Park fans to life.

Today is Wednesday, Oct. 9, the 282nd day of 2013. There are 83 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight:
On Oct. 9, 1813, Giuseppe Verdi, the composer of such classic operas as “Aida,” “La Traviata,” “Rigoletto” and “Il Trovatore,” was born in the Italian village of Le Roncole. (There is some dispute over Verdi's date of birth, with numerous sources saying he was actually born on Oct. 10.)

TODAY IN HISTORY

On this date:
In 1446, the Korean alphabet, created under the aegis of King Sejong, was first published.

In 1776, a group of Spanish missionaries settled in present-day San Francisco.

In 1888, the public was first admitted to the Washington Monument.

In 1910, a coal dust explosion at the Starkville Mine in Colorado left 56 miners dead.

In 1930, Laura Ingalls became the first woman to fly across the United States as she completed a nine-stop journey from Roosevelt Field, N.Y., to Glendale, Calif.

In 1936, the first generator at Boulder (later Hoover) Dam began transmitting electricity to Los Angeles.

In 1940, rock and roll legend John Lennon was born in Liverpool, England.

In 1946, the Eugene O'Neill drama “The Iceman Cometh” opened at the Martin Beck Theater in New York.

In 1958, Pope Pius XII died at age 82, ending a 19-year papacy. (He was succeeded by Pope John XXIII.)

In 1962, Uganda won autonomy from British rule.

In 1974, businessman Oskar Schindler, credited with saving about 1,200 Jews during the Holocaust, died in Frankfurt, West Germany (at his request, he was buried in Jerusalem).

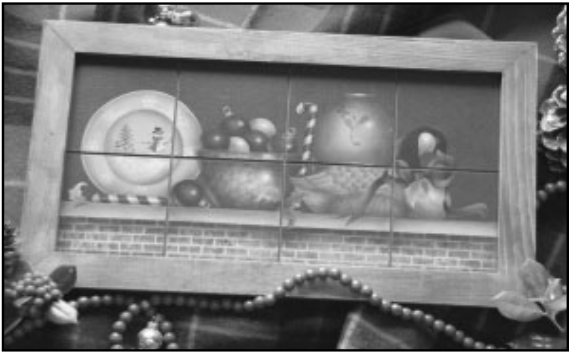

In 1987, author, politician and diplomat Clare Boothe Luce died in Washington at age 84.

Ten years ago: A suicide car bombing at a Baghdad police station killed eight people; Spanish military attaché Jose Antonio Bernal Gomez was shot to death in Baghdad.

Five years ago: Calm gave way to fear in financial markets, turning a relatively steady day into a rout that pushed the Dow Jones industrials below 9,000 — to 8,579.19 — for the first time in five years. Jean-Marie Gustave Le Clezio of France won the Nobel Prize in literature.

One year ago: Former Penn State assistant football coach Jerry Sandusky was sentenced to 30 to 60 years in prison following his July conviction on 45 counts of sexual abuse of boys. The producers of “Sesame Street” asked President Barack Obama's re-election campaign to take down an ad featuring Big Bird, saying the Sesame Workshop is a non-partisan nonprofit and does not participate in political campaigns. The ad mocked Mitt Romney's vow to end federal funding for public broadcasting.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE®

Bobby Wolff

"Fates cannot find out a capacity Of hurting thee.

From Thee their lean dilemma, with blunt horn

Shrinks, as the sick moon from the wholesome morn."

— Richard Crashaw

This four-heart contract came along in the Championship Swiss Teams, the main event of the Brighton Summer Congress. West, Catherine Seale, had appreciated from the bidding that Nevena Senior, her partner, was likely to have a singleton diamond or a void, so she led a low one (for suit preference) to the jack and queen. South played a heart to dummy's queen and Nevena made the winning play of withholding her ace. Declarer next threw two clubs on the spade ace and king, then played a club. West could win and give East her diamond ruff. Senior next cashed her heart ace, removing dummy's last trump in the process, then played another club for a second diamond ruff. Well defended, for two down.

Despite the fine lead, declarer could have succeeded. Missing the trump ace, South may suspect there is a likely defensive diamond ruff to come, but there is nothing she can do to prevent it, and she needs club ruffs in dummy, so she should accept that fact and play a club at trick two.

This puts the defense in an unenviable position. West can win the club and deliver a diamond ruff. But if the continuation is ace and another heart, declarer is in control. The last trump is drawn, then three clubs are discarded on the top two spades and fourth diamond. And if East had played back a low heart to retain control, one club could be ruffed in dummy and the other two pitched on dummy's spades.

ANSWER: In this position it looks more sensible to respond one no-trump than to introduce spades (and risk playing in an unsatisfactory fit) or pass and let partner suffer in a 5-1 fit. Although one can introduce spades here with only four, you would surely not care to do so with a relatively weak suit.

DEAR ABBY: My daughter-in-law had an affair with a co-worker and is now pregnant by him. She swears she loves my son and won't leave him, but insists that her lover be a part of the baby's life. My son is torn. They have two small children and he doesn't want to break up the family. How can he continue to trust her?

DEAR ABBY
Jeanne Phillips

My husband refuses to have her in our house. She can be vindictive to those she feels have "wronged" her, and I'm afraid she'll keep us from the grandchildren. My son used to go to church before she came along, but they no longer go. We sought legal advice for him and he knows the score in that regard. Abby, how can we make him see this woman is no good for him?

—HEAVY-HEARTED MOTHERINGGEORGIA

DEAR MOTHER: If I were you, I'd stop trying. Your son has made his choice, which is to keep his family together. If that means accepting that his wife will maintain a relationship with her lover and, in essence, her baby will have "two daddies," that's the way it's going to be. While I understand your husband's anger, as long as your son is willing to tolerate the situation, there is nothing to be gained by banning your daughter-in-law from the premises.

Because you mentioned church, pray for the strength to support your son through this because he's going to need it. I'm sure he is fully aware that his wife isn't "good" for him, but he's trying to take the high road anyway. So try to be supportive.

DEAR ABBY: I met a woman who seems to be everything I have been looking for. We have similar interests and share many of the same goals.

My problem is I'm only 5 foot 9 and she's 6 feet tall. Am I foolish for feeling like less of a man when in her company? What will people think?

—NOT SO TALL IN NEW JERSEY

DEAR NOT SO TALL: If you would allow a 3-inch difference in height to keep you from pursuing a woman who "seems to be everything you're looking for," then you ARE foolish.

Being taller than a woman doesn't make a man more manly. What makes a man manly is his level of self-confidence, which you appear to lack. Until you understand and accept that what other people think is THEIR problem, I'm not sure you'll find the happiness you're looking for.

DEAR ABBY: I'm a 15-year-old girl who's involved with social media. My parents have always been protective. A few days ago they asked me for the passwords to my Twitter, Facebook and email accounts. I understand they're trying to protect me, but the fact that they don't trust me by now is upsetting.

I tried telling them this, and they say they DO trust me, but they still want my passwords. Is this a contradiction? I need some independence, and they don't seem to understand that.

—LOSING MY MIND IN TACOMA, WASH.

DEAR LOSING YOUR MIND: It's not a contradiction if you read some of the news coverage on the Internet about young people who have committed suicide because they were hounded by cyber-bullies. It's not a contradiction if you consider that sometimes bad things happen at parties that aren't properly supervised. If, God forbid, you should "disappear," your parents — and the police — would want to know who had been communicating with you and what was said.

Please do not overreact to their concern. While it would have been better if they had given you a reason for their request, I doubt they'll be reading over your shoulder. Most parents don't spend a lot of time doing that unless they have some reason to mistrust their teenager.

IF OCTOBER 9 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY: Persevere in the face of any small slowdowns during the next 12 weeks, as the universe could be merely testing your resolve. Don't neglect your health, especially if you have a heavy schedule and be sure to keep up with routine checkups. The more you accept your lot on life, the more likely you will eventually achieve your ambitions. January is the month in which you could receive ample rewards for your accomplishments, so be on the alert for helpful advice and a chance to make some permanent improvements.

HOROSCOPE

Jeraldine Saunders

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Ignore the call of an investment or major purchase. Your pocket could develop a hole, so pay attention to where your money is going. Accountability might be on the table with a relationship or financial situation.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Taking matters into your own hands or making the first move could backfire today. Your gentleness could be mistaken for weakness or flirtation, so tread carefully especially when in pursuit of romance.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): You'll get the best results if you present a professional demeanor and exert careful control in public or on the job. Minor mix-ups dissipate quickly. Hold off on key purchases.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Be true to your school. Stick up for loyal friends. A few little unimportant cross currents can threaten to disturb the harmony of your existence, but a tolerant and benevolent attitude will see you through.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): The tide is turning in your favor, but some of your deepest concerns are still at sea. This isn't the best time to ask for a promise or commitment in the romance department, but you can head in the right direction.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Being sensible and down-to-earth does not always take into account the scope of human feelings. It would be wise to wait several days before you make crucial decisions. A loved one might be somewhat evasive.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Put off major decisions. Choosing the right thing to do under these stars might only create a misunderstanding. It's good to be sympathetic, but when you act from your imaginings you can create new problems.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Sentimental journeys could have pitfalls. Sympathy and compassion might flavor the atmosphere, but you may lose money due to an appeal to your emotions. Exercise restraint when pursuing a blossoming romance.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Venus is in your sign, so you might expect preferential treatment, pampering, or a perpetual party. People may hide reactions to your unabashed cheerfulness or even think you're a lightweight.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You have the stamina and resourcefulness to see important plans through to completion. Work diligently on your own, but remain cautious of misunderstandings that stem from confidential conversations.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Sometimes it pays to be on your guard. Remain dubious if drawn in to discussions of things that seem too good to be true, or if innuendo is substituted for facts. Steer clear of new investments or expenses.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Being in love with the idea of being in love could cause you to pine for someone who's inappropriate or spoil a good friendship. Be as considerate as possible and don't give in to sudden romantic urges.
