Navies Fight In Kula Gulf Of Solomons

WASHINGTON, July 6 (UP)—American warships have inflicted heavy damage on the Japanese naval force which they engaged in the narrow confines of Kula Gulf in the central Solomons, the navy announced today.

The navy also reported the loss of the U. S. destroyer Strong in a previous action.

Our forces suffered "some damage" in the Kula Gulf engagement which began early Tuesday morning (Solomon time), but "considerable damage" was done to the enemy warships.

Details were still lacking on the engagement, the navy said. The Kula Gulf action followed by 24 hours an American naval bombardment of Japanese positions at Vila and Bairano on opposite sides of the Kula Gulf.

It was during this bombardment that the Strong, a modern 2,100-ton craft, was torpedoed and sunk. Normal complement of the Strong was estimated to be about 250 men. The Strong was commanded by Comdr. Joseph Harold Wellings.

A naval spokesman said that although definite information is lacking, it is believed that "considerable damage" was done to the enemy warships.

The navy's communique also reported a destructive attack by army Liberators heavy bombers on Japanese installations on Ballale Island, in the northern Solomons.

The loss of the Strong related to the navy's communique that U. S. naval losses in this war. This figure includes 18 sunk, 13 overdue and presumed lost, and 100 reported to be present captured.

Bombs Fall out Of Plane; Town Church Damaged

BOISE CITY, Ore. A church and a garage were damaged when four bombs were accidentally dropped from a plane over this small Oklahoma panhandle town last week. There were no casualties.

It was not learned from where the bombs came, or the cause of the incident.

Deputy Sheriff C. S. Ricks said he practically the entire town was asleep when a plane dropped one at high altitude. Then the four bombs fell in quick succession. No direct hit was made on either the Baptist church or the garage. Damage to the two structures mostly was caused by concussion. Paint from the garage was left by the bombs.

In Oklahoma City, Mayor Charles E. Baker said that a small airplane bombed on a field near Cherokee, Okla., 150 miles east of Boise City.

CARE OF YOUR CHILDREN

By ANGELO PATRISI

"I like to have Robbie play with the other children and he loves it but when he comes in for lunch, he is so cross there is no living with him. He won't have this and he won't have that, and he cries and sobs and usually I have to put him to bed."

"After he has had a sleep he goes out again and I have the same problem all over. What makes him so cross? He is healthy but thinner than I like, and he is quick and nervous. If only he wasn't so cross!"

He is tired. Little children, particularly the quick, enthusiastic kind are likely to overtire themselves in play. They go beyond the stage of weariness that makes ordinary children sob. Soon their nerves cease to resist fatigue and they break down before stopping to rest. They don't know what is the matter with them so they cry in their discomfort. Fatigue like this is really ill-ness.

Regular Child's Day

One must watch children to understand how to deal with them. One child needs long hours of hard play to keep him fit, and preserve his sweet disposition, while another, like this little one, can play only a short while before needing rest and change of occupation. Try to find how much play the child can use and provide a change of exercise, or even complete rest, when his behavior shows he needs it.

Sometimes the character of the games have something to do with the child's nervousness. A game of cops and robbers played for too long a time might tire such a child to exhaustion. Again the character of his associates might add to his nervousness. If the leader is dominant and bossy, his term of supremacy should be limited for this sort of child, at least.

Needs Quiet

Crossness is an indication that the child has been tired beyond the safety limit. When he is in that condition, do not feed him a heavy meal. Give him a glass of milk, or half a one, and let him rest before giving him more. Don't bathe and fuss over him. Pull off his shoes and stockings, but do not come off the minute he reached you; lay him on his bed, and let him alone. When he is rested he can be given a warm bath, fed, undressed and put to bed to sleep it off. The half hour of rest and quiet will go a long way toward reducing the feeling that makes him cross.

When dealing with a cross child don't talk. Don't ask "What's the matter with you anyway?" Don't say "Stop that crying this minute." Your irritation adds to his fatigue. Quiet, the soothing stillness of a controlled spirit, reaches the seat of the trouble much sooner and does the work much more effectively.

The real cure for cross children is: Never let a child pass the safety limit of fatigue.

What to do with your gum

Here's a word of advice to motorists who go bucketing merrily along thinking their oil filter is straining out the gum and goo that collects in all motor oil. 'Tain't so! After about 8,000 miles your filter ordinarily gets so clogged up that oil can't pass. It sidesteps through a by-pass valve and carries dust, gum and metal particles from the crankcase into your motor. That's an open invitation to repair bills—so ask us to replace your oil filter element every 8,000 miles. It only takes a minute, and the cost is very low.

CURTIS APPEALS FOR U. S. UNITY

REPUTED July 6—Recalling "the divided councils" of other wars, George H. Curtis, Idaho secretary of state, made a strong plea for the unity and effort in the principal address of the Independence drive yesterday.

"Anyone who has studied the history of the older wars and read the divided councils, the inefficiency and the lack of unity which characterized them, must feel that America is this time doing a glorious job," he said. "But it has been depressing in recent months to observe the troubles which disturb to some extent the war effort.

Capitalist war, the growth of a more powerful position for the communists are enjoying relative prosperity, but they have no interest in the war effort. They are too busy making money to care for the welfare of the nation.

Curtis, a Democrat, blamed some of the blame for the lack of unity on the government. He pointed out the lack of coordination and the lack of interest in the war effort.

Africa Waits

by Achmed Abdullah
NEW SERVICE, INC.

THE STORY: Lincoln Elliott, American, has just been elected honorary colonel of a French colony in central Africa. Long ago he had a romance with the French Legion following a bitter quarrel with his father, an ex-convict. He has a brother, Isaac, and this is the climax of his career. But his real dream is to go back to Africa on the important job ahead of him, the chance the African dream awakens old yearnings.

DI HASANBEH CHAPTEK II

He remembered how, years ago, he had seen the face of Mohammed, promoted to sergeant and with quite a little free time on his hands, he had, on occasion, deliberately forgotten that he was an American, a Christian. Remembered how he had mixed with the Moslem natives, often, when he was in London, for days at a time wearing their clothes, eating their food, hearing their fears, hoping that hope, desiring their dreams and his, eyes, stinging their eyes.

He remembered how, together his Moslem friends had never known that Lincoln Elliott, sergeant in the French Legion, and Terek al-Masjidi, the young Arab from the desert of Syria—what a queer accident that would occasionally wandered into town, were one and the same. Yes, he remembered.

Remembered the color of it. Color of gold. Color of blood. Color of passion. Remembered the scent of it, a mingling of musk and sweat, roseoil and garbles.

Remembered the life of it. Shamed, untrammeled, savagely, gloriously free.

And, as he remembered, he felt in his heart an unrest, that set his nerves tingling.

He had poured a generous two fingers of whiskey, when, in the faint chant of the drums, there came from a near Arab house a confused symphony of voices, restrained Oriental laughter, high pitched yells, the kind-in-its-voice of a woman's glass bracelet, a Negro's creaky, lumpy talk. The sounds leaped up like fragments of some half-forgotten melody; they mocked him—and tempted him... and, suddenly, he laughed, perhaps at Africa. Perhaps at his own self.

"Free!" he thought. "Free, once more, for the last time to the devil with cities and regulations—for the space of one night!"

And he led the woman and walking on tiptoe, went to his bedroom.

He listened.

The house was quiet. The servants were asleep. His second-in-command and good friend, Capt. Robert Pelletier, also of the legion, who had the room next to his, was snoring.

He locked the door, pulled down the window blinds, lit a lamp, undressed.

Feeling very much like a conspirator in some secret nocturne, he opened a trunk which held some of his more intimate belongings. He looked at the contents, smiled, went to work.

Studying his face in the mirror, he found it buried in a morose thorn by the tropical sun of many seasons. Given the right costume, he could pass anywhere for a desert Arab. Only his mustache was too military, too long. So, in the proper Moslem style, he clipped it away from the lips and shaved the corners.

Then, with subtle fingers that had not forgotten the trick of it, he crowned his head with a white cotton skullcap and tied over it the turban. The top, some silk kerchief of dull red with a bright orange border from which drooped colorful tassels that reached his waist. He fitted the kufiyah close to his head, his hand with the help of the nasal, or twisted hair rope, and pulled it out in a yearning and over his forehead, but it shaded his eyes and gave to his nose that high, bridging on the important job ahead of him, the chance the African dream awakens old yearnings.

He dressed his body in a simple white cotton shirt, light-sleeved, open in front, which covered him from head to foot and was fast by a handsome shawl. He struck a crooked, sithering, and shuffling dagger into his fold. Over it all he threw a voluminous burbanee of camel's hair—"good against cold, good against heat," say the Arabs. He tucked his bare feet into yellow leather slippers.

He was about to leave the room; stopped suddenly in the doorway. "Something— he thought—was missing from his costume. He frowned, wondered.

Then he knew what it was.

In former years when, for the sake of the adventure, the thrill, he had been in the thick of things, there had been one thing which had acted as a talisman. It had been important, had given certain doors. Today his talisman was merely sentimental, but because it was sentimental, he wanted it.

So again, he groined in the trunk and found a broad bracelet of hammered iron, silver-lined with both ends. He took it out, looked at it, a boyish, rather self-conscious smile curved his lips.

He remembered the first occasion on which he had worn it. Remembered how Terek al-Masjidi, the Syrian Arab, he had joined the desert Legion of the Di Hasanbeh, a patriot with a flaming and frenzied heart through the Italian control of the water of desert, hope, and acquiescence; and that had become a member of the Legion and learned its secret pass-words.

It was—or rather, had been—a simple silver bracelet, but in women's wear. For years it had been powerful in Central Africa, had finally become too powerful.

For his leaders had begun to mix politics with the religious and mystic rite.

It was at this point, the superstitious awe with which the Negroes followed them that they had an active interest in anti-European intrigue.

The French government had stepped in. The Legion had been declared illegal and its members had been jailed and more exiled. And when, some weeks earlier, on the eve of his departure, Lincoln had conferred in London with General de Gaulle and Winston Churchill, he had been given a mass of confidential information in regard to the restoration of the colony which was to rule-whom to trust and whom not to trust, whom to flatter and whom to threaten, whom to bribe with gold and whom with honest money. Taxes, and to liquidate, if need be—the Di Hasanbeh had not even been mentioned.

The Legion, no doubt it had been dispersed. Its power was gone. It was today no more than a pale memory. Still, here was its talisman, the iron bracelet; and why shouldn't he wear it.

So he slipped it on his wrist.

He extinguished the lamp. Caustically he left the room, the shawl, walked out into the street, lost himself in the dense, trooping shadows cast by the Mosque of Swords.

There, for the last time, he would dip into the secret rite of the Islamic. He would fast, for the space of a few hours, the crushing burden which Fate had put upon his shoulders.

"You wouldn't exactly call it pleasure driving!"

Scoffer Gets New Job

N. T. Donih, a painter who spent camouflage on Douglas war planes at Santa Monica, Calif., openly scoffed at office girls' laboriously replacing damage to leg make-up by hand during their lunch hour. "You need a professional touch," he told them, and immediately was put to work spraying the liquid make-up on their legs with assembly line technique. The girls, left to right, are Frances Rainford, Helen Holmes, Marilyn Pickard and Marjorie Heils.

WPB Orders New Cut in Newsprint

WASHINGTON, July 6 (AP)—The war production board today ordered newspaper publishers to reduce further their consumption of newsprint during 1943's third quarter. The cut ranges up to five per cent for large users.

The additional five per cent reduction does not apply to the first 25 tons for newspapers using less than 500 tons a quarter. This provision, WPB said, is designed to aid the operation of smaller newspapers.

Better Health and Added Energy

LESS MEAT
Calls for Still More
"ENRICHED" BREAD

Every housewife knows that meat is a highly important item in the family diet—that when its use is limited, something must be done to supply these vital ingredients from other sources. Perhaps government nutrition experts had this in mind when Uncle Sam ordered that all white bread be enriched with proteins, vitamins, calcium and iron. Because enriched white bread now provides a solution to the meat rationing problem. It's the simplest method of supplying these food elements in adequate amounts to maintain civilian health and energy.

Two slices of BUTTER-KRUST "enriched" White Bread at every meal, together with the rationed foods that are available, will round out a well-balanced diet. Less meat calls for more enriched bread, so be sure to eat it liberally.

There's no need to go hungry—no matter how luscious an appetite the hard-working members of your family have. Let the scarce, rationed food be the "trimmings"—and around them build a simple menu with enriched white bread, fresh fruits and vegetables. There are scores of ways in which you can serve these foods in combination. They'll provide abundance on the vitamins and minerals that are so vitally necessary in your diet.
