ALL NAZI FLANKS HIT BY BOMBERS

bombs aimed by precision bombardiers exploded among the parked cars in the large sales area, through the close-packed main building and across the parking area, causing much damage and "heavy damage."

After the bombs broke through the hangars and administration buildings, causing huge fires.

In the great confusion which followed, the German fighters saw only six German fighters over the airfield, but destroyed heavy fire.

The daylight assault by the British and American bombers, which on the eighth anniversary of the attack on Pearl Harbor, represented one of the most spectacular air operations of the war.

Commander Elated

Brig. Gen. Frederick L. Anderson of Kingston, N. C. commander of the eighth bomber command, said the fact that the large sales area and operations occurred on the anniversary was just a coincidence. He clearly was not concerned with the success of the shuttle raid.

"Germany is wide open," he said, "and we will continue to attack it in the strategic sense inasmuch as the German people are behind the axis industries rather than at the enemy front."

He declared the recent intense attacks on enemy airfields in Germany and occupied Europe were not part of an evacuation plan but rather an attempt to eliminate any opposition to allied operations by air fighter planes.

See Progress News

Over 100 tons of bombs are expected to be dropped on the "strategic" airfields of the German Luftwaffe in the next few days. He said this possible heavy bombing will be followed by an enemy aircraft have been so struck.

Great flights of medium bombers, which in the past have been active in Sicily meanwhile kept the war going from the Mediterranean to the southern Italy with withering machine gun and cannon fire and bombing.

During the last hours of the German attack on the British fleet in the Atlantic, it was disclosed, allied warplanes sank nine more small craft, destroyed two submarines and dropped bombs so close to a large number of others that it is doubtful if they will be of any use.

The British overnight attack on France has completed his primary largest and most important attack of the kind in Germany, with the country in flames and in flames as bright as day.

Forty-four bombers and one fighter were reported missing from the night's operations, which, in addition to the usual losses at Berlin, included intruder attacks on northwest Germany, France and the countries in flames.

Was the first attack on Germany's Baltic coast opposite Rugen Island and the islands of Rügen, Hiddensee, and Peenemünde, the Peenemünde plant is the center of the highest type of research in rockets, radio-location and armament.

Stagg Looks to Future Jaycees Beat Baptists, 3-2

THURSDAY'S GAME
Although doing down to defeat in its initial encounter, the Baptist team new entry in the City Softball League has served notice on the remainder of the circuit that its goals are to play tough.

The Jaycees, contender for the championship in the first half had come from behind to defeat the newcomers 3-2 in the second half opener at Jaycee park Thursday.

L. J. Patterson was principally responsible for the Baptist defeat. He held them to four hits. He would have escaped with a shutout had it not been for a home run in the third frame during which the new team scored both their runs.

With one down in the third, Crigger reached first on an error. David's home run, however, was the only other extra base hit of the game.

NEW NAVY PARTY TO SEEK WAVES

The second WAVE recruiting party to visit this territory will be "The Waves" which will arrive on Wednesday of next week, according to word received by Ray Robbins, chief recruiter here, from Idaho recruiting headquarters.

The following personnel are coming for the purpose of interviewing and examining applicants between the ages of 20 and 35 who are interested in enlisting in the WAVES. Lieut. Eugene F. Moore, Lieut. Earle G. Crawford, Ensign Helen Cullen and WAVE recruit, Miss Jeanne third class. Lieutenants will interview applicants while Dr. Canfield and Ensign Smith (navy nurse) will give the physical examinations. Young Miss Gills, enlisted WAVE in class V-10, will be glad to advise applicants about training schools, various billets available and in general, assist in the preparation of enlistment papers. Robbins urged all interested applicants to contact the recruiting station this week to secure appointments, application forms and information relative to enlistment. "I hope many of our WAVE applicants will be from this territory," Robbins said, "which is the reason this WAVE party is coming from Seattle to touring the state. Here is an opportunity for many Valley women to join the navy without having to go to Portland or Seattle for examinations and to learn in."

Navy recruiting offices here are below the fidelity National bank.

BOISE, Aug. 18 (AP)—Lieut. Col. Norman B. Adkinson, state selective service executive officer, said 25 per cent of Idaho's draft quota for August will be made up of married men without children. Adkinson added that in September, the quota will be about 50 per cent childless fathers and 40 per cent single men. Gen. Gen. M. O. McConnell, state selective service director, said the first fathers to be drafted after Oct. 1 will include those who fall to employment from non-deferrable employment, to work essential to the war effort. The Atascama desert, in China, is the driest spot on earth.

RUSSELL CIRCUS HERE ON AUG. 25 Russell Brothers' circus, one of the largest truck shows on the road this year, will play afternoon and evening performances in Twin Falls next Wednesday, Aug. 25. The circus will then move to Burley and will present two performances there on Aug. 26. The Russell show will be staged at 8 and 9 p. m. in Twin Falls the location will be Blue Lake boulevard south and Highland View avenue, same spot at which the Cole circus was set up. One unusual feature of the Russell presentation is the Winston equitrian act, known as Mavis Seal. Slicker, the movie seal, is star of the troupe. He is mounted from the center of the ring, he tosses balls and other objects to his teammates riding on points and in carts. While the riding acts balance and struggle among themselves, this returns to the circus program with Buddy, the celebrated talking sea lion, and star performer of Walter Jenner's remarkable trained sea lion act, which includes his one of the circus' most outstanding features. The performance embraces many additional trained animal features.

Back to College For the college girl here is shoes as dressy as your heart desires - but simple enough to complement this season's fashion silhouette and the wartime trend to buy practical things which give the longest wear.

BOYS and GIRLS Shoes

Years of experience has taught us the importance of style and perfect fit in shoes for growing boys and girls. Red Goose, one of the oldest and most reliable brands of children's shoes, is featured in our shoe department. Almost care is always taken to see that the shoes are properly fit and Red Gooses are nationally known for their ability to withstand rough usage. Bring in the children for a better fit in a high quality shoe.

DEATH WRITES THE LAST EDITION

By Adeline McElfresh

COPYRIGHT, 1943, NEA SERVICE, INC.

CHAPTER I

A nasty mixture of rain and snow was driving across Midvale as Pat Clem hurried along the treacherous sidewalk toward the neat brick building that housed the Express. The leading—and only—newspaper in the sleepy southern Idaho town. This time it was a lone, November gray that seemed to hang so low that it hid the houses in a calm white world of its own. Only the north wind that blew to across the street was bitter.

Pat entered involuntarily as she opened the office door and a gust of wind whirled her inside.

"Let's alternate, Elmer," she called to the pretty blonde who was a clerk in the circulation department. "Elmer Roberts did not smile back. There was an excited, frightened look in her eyes. She looked to Pat.

"You look positively scared stiff, Elmer. What's wrong?"

Elmer looked more frightened than ever. Her eyes were wide and darker than usual. She caught at Pat's coat as if a drowning man grasps a life preserver.

"Mr. Parker was killed last night."

Pat's mind reeled. "Dead?" she finally repeated dumbly. "Murdered?"

Elmer nodded. She fumbled for her handkerchief.

Pat's stomach didn't say any more. She couldn't—not about Joe Parker, her editor, the best friend she had ever had. She turned quickly and went to her own desk in the news room. She didn't want to be in the front office when other members of the staff came in, didn't want them to see the pale, shrunken face in her eyes. Maybe, after a little while, after they had had the shock and felt the same pain, it wouldn't be so bad.

Pat's father was a newspaper man. He had owned the Express for half a century, had carried for it a place of respect in the community that few papers have. But it wouldn't be the same, ever again, either the Express or Midvale. Not to Pat, nor to the countless other persons to whom the elderly editor gave a hand during his years of service. Perhaps a Pat thought, stonily, perhaps not even to Dave Elson, the star graduate of the Express staff. But no, she couldn't herself, Dave Elson would be too engaged in his own affairs to bother about what was happening in Midvale. Midvale was no longer "home" to the rascally young man who, after writing several successful books, had left his smoky New York office to go into government work. Pat bit her lips... remembering.

"That's all the police know right now, Patricia," Clem Evans, the Express sports editor, told Pat when he came in fifteen minutes later from the police station. "We were at his desk, writing something on that junk heap he calls a typewriter. The housekeeper's room is right over his study and she says she heard no unusual noises. She woke up around midnight and saw the light in his study was still on—she could see it shining out on the steps—and she called down that it was time he was getting some sleep. When he didn't answer, she went down." Clem paused. "Joe was all slumped over there as usual in his back."

The sports writer ran a rough hand through his graying hair. His eyes were suspiciously moist. He walked over to the window and stood looking out, his hands boring into his pockets as the girl would not see the tight-clenched lips.

Pat was almost glad when her telephone rang a minute later and Josephine Billingsley informed her in a stilled voice that she had a party that "just must be in the paper this afternoon." Pat knew, of course, that the crack reporter expected to pick up some inside news on the murder but she was beside the point. Joe Parker would want the paper to go on—he had proved himself time and time again.

Pat thanked Mrs. Billingsley and hung up. She had a chance to question her, she rolled a sheet of copy paper into her hand.

"Mrs. Josephine Billingsley," she wrote hurriedly to the members of her Sunday school class at a departmental pre-thanksgiving party that night. The house was decorated with...

"Nobbody knew," she murmured, half to herself. "I wonder... Elmer! Let's look in his desk. We might find something out."

"We can't, no, Patricia," he reproached. "Burglars! What a nuisance. I suppose, we have a paper to put out."

Pat turned back to her typewriter and the story about Mrs. Billingsley's party.

"Right after we go to press," sports editor promised, "we'll have a look-see. But you know Joe Parker. He'd want the Express out on schedule."

The girl averted her head. She could hear the linotypes out in the composing room and there was something reassuring in the clatter. Something to hold onto in a world suddenly gone topsy-turvy.

Press time came and nothing had happened. Pat went over to the police station again. There was despair in his voice when he told Pat about it. Chief Blatz was stumped. He had been over the house with a fine-toothed comb, but there was nothing.

"You're under control, Patricia?" Clem asked, glancing over her shoulder at the two-column head as she wrote.

"Yes, this is the last headline."

A short time later Pat was re-attaching the Parker desk, something that apparently had not occurred to the police, while Clem Evans scanned the front page for mistakes.

There were packets of letters, clippings, memos and feature stories, sample columns that had been sent to the paper, and news papers that seemed to be nothing but an indecipherable mess. Pat tossed aside the memos, features and columns. They didn't interest her, but the letters with miscellaneous signatures did.

"Ready, Clem! I have things half-way sorted out."

The sports editor pulled his chair over to the desk. Pat handed him a pile of letters and slips of paper.

"I feel a little guilty," she confessed. "If we should find something..."

She left the stenographer hanging in mid-air. "There was no need to disturb it, for Clem Evans understood. He just nodded.

"You did a good job today, Patricia. Parker would be proud of you." Thank you, Clem," she smiled, still going through the papers, but the smile faded quickly as she stared at the letter she had just read from his envelope.

"Clem!" she breathed. "Clem, look here!"
