

LABOR TURNOVER RECORDS SOUGHT

Employers of essential labor in this area are being asked to furnish records of their current labor turnover to determine the extent of their compliance with the employment stabilization plan according to an announcement here today by A. J. Meeks, local U. S. employment service manager.

Infraction of the following types will be referred to the state war manpower headquarters for further action, Meeks said:

1. Employers who hire workers without statements of availability or U. S. employment service referrals.
2. Employers who hire workers without statements of availability in violation of the plan.
3. Employers who hire agricultural workers for more than six weeks without U. S. employment service referrals.
4. Employers who refuse to release upon request, workers hired contrary to the plan.

Violations represent a small percentage, however, when a few workers or a few employers will violate the plan. It is unfair to all those in the state who are cooperating fully," Meeks said.

A. J. Meeks, state manpower director.

The appeal panel of the commission for this area will meet Thursday, April 10 at 9 p. m. to discuss the stabilization plan. Members of the committee representing labor are Stuart Dunn and H. Walker. Two representing management are Dudley D. Driscoll and A. E. Ekeek. This board heard appeals of workers who have been denied certificates of availability.

Latest availability listing of jobs is now available at the U. S. employment service office.

WOOL PURCHASE PLAN IN EFFECT

WASHINGTON, April 22 (AP)—The government wool purchase program, under which the commodity credit corporation will buy the 1944 domestic clip, was approved formally yesterday by the Undersecretary of Agriculture Grover B. Hill in the presence of a number of wool-state commissioners. The program was approved after a long hearing at the U. S. Wool Board in Washington.

Under the program the CCC will pay an average of $1.18 a pound, resorted basis, for the American production of approximately 450,000,000 pounds.

Hill placed his signature to the order during a conference held in the office of Senator O'Hanley, D. Wis. Others on hand included Senators Thomas, R. Ida, and Murray, D. Mont. Reps. Ford, D. Tex., and Burnett, R. Wyo., and two CCC officials in charge of the wool program, Lawrence Myers and W. T. Darfien.

The program is substantially the same as that in effect during 1943. Under the 1944 program, however, the CCC will assume insurance and storage costs from the moment the wool first reaches a warehouse. The new regulations also provide for a 3,000-pound limitation on the quanty of wool a grower may sell in a handler, as compared with a 1,000-pound limitation imposed in 1943.

The transaction will still be made through the CCC as heretofore, however.

First Batting Title Was Wagner's Big Thrill

Honus Wagner's thick, powerful shoulders and massive arm put terrific power behind his wagon-tongue. His first big thrill was in his major league debut with Louisville when he singled first time up, driving in a run. Later in the game he stole a base and sacrificed once, all this against pitcher Tommy McVey of Washington.

"And," the Dutchman says, "my greatest thrill came when I won my first of eight batting titles in 1900 with Pittsburgh."

"We were playing our last game of the season. When the contest started I was tied for the National League lead with Philadelphia's outfielder named Flick, who also was playing his last game in the National League."

"The fourth estate boys in the press box were talking about a tie between Flick and me. So I was kept posted. I hit on my first trip up, so did Flick. He came up for his second at bat before I did. He didn't hit. I also failed on my second. We were even bled."

Close Batting Race
"The third time Flick got one. On my third I also hit. Still tied. Fourth time at bat, Flick flopped. Me too. Still deadlocked."

"Then I rallied in Philadelphia. Flick came up for his fifth and last trip, didn't connect. I got a double on my fifth crack and won the batting crown by a mere percentage point with 206."

"That was the biggest bang of my life. A few years later I pulled a smart play against the Giants. Mc-C, who was coaching on third, walked over toward me and with a good book, asked: 'You're pretty smart for a Dutchman at this time of life.' I thought that was the greatest testimonial I ever received."

Honus was a shy, retiring fellow in his playing days. He was a popular man to the extent of sneaking in back doors, riding in freight elevators, just to escape autograph hounds and the necessity for conversation which he didn't care either to have or make.

Dreyfus Only Pal
Wagner admits he could tick it off well only with Barney Dreyfus, who was his pal. They use to discuss new players.

"No one else talked to me in those days," Honus recalls. "Why, I played three years before my big league spoke to me, and not so nice either."

"My covering third for Louisville back in '97, when Jim Coe, hit fielder for the Giants, walloped his second homer. As he passed third en route home, I says nice hit and Coe, he yells back, 'Go to hell.'"

"That was the first time any big league player ever spoke to me on the diamond."

Later: Hooking up with Cobb.

49 DEAD AS U. S. STORMS SUBSIDE

By The Associated Press
Storms which hit the United States the past two days, leaving 49 persons known dead, subsided today after a final sweep of the eastern seaboard and the Great Lakes.

Nearly 200 persons were injured in the tornadoes, rain squalls, wind clouds and snow storms from the Rocky mountains to the Atlantic coast. Lighter rains, with snow in northern Utah, extended west of California.

Many remained homeless in Kansas and Oklahoma as rivers continued flooding in the wake of the tropical rains. A forecast of clearing and colder weather promised some relief, but several storms had not reached predicted crests.

Arkansas, with 25 dead in a series of tornadoes, was the worst sufferer. Six were killed in Fort Wayne, Tenn., by a wall which hit a high school. North Carolina, Alabama, Oklahoma, South Carolina, Texas, Kentucky, Georgia and Tennessee each reported one death directly or indirectly from lightning.

Major areas of flooding, for 38 hours to reach 22 snow-covered states in the Colorado-New Mexico border other snowpelt areas succeeded in opening Indian pass, a road to the south. The army reported communications with several communities with severe flooding.

EXTENDED PRICE CONTROLS URGED

WASHINGTON, April 12 (UP)—The emergency price controls must be extended "substantially" to prevent price chaos, Price Administrator Chester Bowles told congress today.

Testifying before the house banking and currency committee as the first witness on legislation to extend the price control program beyond its present June 30 expiration date, Bowles said that under the program:

1. The cost of living per average family has risen nearly 8 1/2 per cent since price control was first introduced, and relief in May 1943.

2. The cost of living has been in check with no rise whatsoever for the past 13 months.

3. Corporation and farm profits are at "record" levels, and "business failures" at the lowest point in 50 years.

4. The anticipated amendments which will be proposed by opponents of the present program, and said that if these will be designed to make it mandatory for the office of price administration to establish prices which are profitable to each of its 3,000,000 business concerns.

Any such plan, he said, would "would cause unbearable increases in the cost of living, and would increase the cost of living for all of our citizens who could least afford it."

A second amendment will seek to permit individual OPA price regulations to be challenged in each of the 53 federal district courts, Bowles said.

Previously, John E. Baker, assistant attorney general, said that the bill would be "a very real and serious threat to the stability of the economy."

Night for the Morrow

OLD JAN IS INTERESTED
XV
Although a new hired man and his wife were living with my grandfather, his letters told of old Jan's increasing loneliness. He was approaching 80. He wanted to have a younger man instead of steadily farther away.

It was arranged that he should come east to visit us during the Christmas holidays in 1928. He came and it was like old times again.

"Have you cleaned up on any more letters?" was one of the first questions he asked me.

"I don't know any more letters here, I haven't."

"No letters in Cleveland? That's bad. I'll make a note of that and tell it up the first thing I get back. Ship little Jan two more letters. I'll have to put them in the file."

I told him that I might be a little out of touch.

"Oh, we can remedy that. Let's feel your pulse. How's that?"

I was growing rapidly, all that was but before me and tell him, but grandfather wanted something that disappointed in the size of me.

"You're broken, but he would declare," said Anna, what was a boy in a city do to build himself up?

My mother told him of the school, the playgrounds of the park and the recreation facilities of Cleveland.

"Now," he would complain, "they can't take the place of nature. A farm's the place for a growing boy. You can't grow a man in a city."

It was a couple of days after Christmas that my father came home from work in an unusually cheerful mood. He beamed on all of us.

"Well, Pa," he said to my grandfather, "I ran into something today, something big. I'm going to talk business with you tonight, and I'll bet you five hundred bucks you'll listen. This is no like any of those deals I talked to you about. They were chicken feed. But you won't be able to laugh this time. We'll go into it right after dinner. Have you something good for dinner, Mother?"

Throughout the meal my father led a conversation brightly from one small subject to another. He reminded jokingly about the good old days in Colorado. His bald head bobbed back and forth, reaching for one subject or another, reaching for some familiar incident. My grandfather's participation in the conversation, while friendly, was somewhat reserved.

After dinner we moved into the living room while mother remained to clear the table and do the dishes.

"All right, here goes," Dad began, reaching unconsciously for that left ear. "This has to do with the trucking business."

"I don't know anything about the trucking business," Old Jan broke in quickly.

"Well, don't let that bother you. You don't have to know it. I've been in the automobile business all my life, practically. And the trucking business is a part of the automobile business. But you know the United States, and you know geography, and you know something about what's going on in the world."

"I wouldn't be too sure that I do, but go on."

"Well, you know railroads and what they do for the people who get in on the ground floor. Made 'em rich."

"Some got rich."

"All right, so some didn't, but those who got in on the ground floor and used their heads did pretty well by themselves."

"And I suppose the same thing now applies to trucking?"

"You're damn right! What are you doing, still up?" he asked looking at me.

"Well, don't be interfering in this conversation."

"It's not, now, where was I? Yes, I was telling you that trucks were going to take over the work of the railroads. No doubt about it. They are doing it now. Highway are developing so fast it would make your head spin. But you haven't seen anything yet. What did you come here on?"

"You're a train, of course," my grandfather said simply.

"That it won't be a train, of course, for many years. A few years from now if you come to Cleveland, you'll come on a bus, of course."

"That's what's happening. The old train has come in the end of the trail."

"The automobile trail?"

"Yes, the automobile trail. You're right, but the railway don't think it's so funny. They're pretty worried that the smart ones on the other side of the fence, they're not worried in the least because they're going to make plenty off the trucking business."

My grandfather was getting a little testy.

"Now, let's get down to cases," my father continued. "This proposition I got is one where I take over a piece of territory which is a part of a large system. But I own my own truck. It's really my business, but we're all tied together with contracts and agreements. My headquarters would be in Pueblo."

I don't believe my grandfather heard a great deal of the rest of Dad's sales talk. The magic name, Pueblo, had changed the whole situation. Pueblo! That would mean we would come back to Colorado! If the proposition were at all reasonable, he would do what he could. After all, which was more important, the farm or his family's success, the raising of livestock, or the successful raising of a boy?
