Night for the Marrow

By Robert D. Lusk

PLOUGHING STRAIGHT AHEAD

Our luck, without warning, suddenly took a bit turn for the better. The dilemma was solved, and my grandfather and I, for I was old enough now to be a partner in the work, if not the farm enterprise itself, were offered a way out.

Our help came from the source of all our past assistance, Judge McMama. He drove into the farmyard one evening after dark and I had finished one of the simplest meals that ever aggravated our hunger.

"The judge no longer wants his flock out. He had bowed to the times. He had accepted many like, double-breasted suits as the mark of an important public official. The matter of pure white hair was still his crowning glory, however, and now it was in his hand to be cut to the walk to the porch. He was snuffing the air, turning his head from left to right.

"Well, well," he commented. "Can't you get any more of those suits? I would like to see a man wear more than one. I'm sure he knows that."

We settled down at the porch chairs.

"You know," the judge started right off. "I've made the business deal. I've got a man here named Lusk. The word is it's a good deal. I've got a man here named Lusk. The word is it's a good deal. I've got a man here named Lusk. The word is it's a good deal."

"I bought the house mortgage on this farm," the judge declared.

"Old Jan," the judge continued regarding Jan, "bank wants the thing around the place. Called me up today and offered it to me for practically nothing. I was just enough to buy it."

Old Jan was sitting straight up in his chair, bating into the air with his hands.

"Look here now, judge," he started. "What you trying to pull? We're not charity patients and we don't purpose to be your get charity."

"I could see the law suit moving out, but the judge must have rehearsed the handling of this situation."

"Listen, you old, broken-down, Peck Snare," he yelled. "Don't give me any of that. I'm not the Peck Snare. I don't feel sorry for you and I don't feel sorry for anyone. I got stuck with this mortgage. Now, if you'll keep your shirt on, I think we can all come out on the deal."

"I've got faith in this land in southeastern Colorado. It doesn't look like much now, but I know damn well it can come back if it's given a chance. If it's farmed right. That's going to be your job, and I'm going to see that you do it. I haven't got too much invested in this mortgage. I know I'm going to have to put a lot more in before this farm begins to pay out. But when I get through, I got a bunch that I'm going to have a good sound investment to pass on to the relatives I'm responsible for. It's going to take the land and you and me, and when you're out of the picture, I'm going to take the land and your grandson here. And, fortunately, the grandson is none other than the grandchilder."

"By God," said old Jan. "I'll walk off the place."

"You will not."

"And we don't."

It was like starting farming all over again, farming with hope, farming with a future. We developed a plan of operations. First we had to hold the soil, then, gradually, turn all of the land back into grass. There would be no cash crops. It would be a livestock venture as it always should have been, as it was until the war was over. Eventually a comparatively small portion of the acreage would be devoted to feed crops, with emphasis on drought resistant varieties. It would be slow, tedious work,

I was doing some "ploughing" of my own, ploughing heavily through cluttered books, for in the winter I was in town going to school again. I spent Saturdays and Sundays on the farm, but during the week I lived in town. I had a room in the basement of Judge McMama's house, tended the furnace and did the little work around the house and yard that was supposed to pay for my room and board. Mary Hoople was a friend of mine, for I met her in a couple of years. Yet, occasionally, when there was a school function, she would treat me to take her. I was back in a pleasant flow of living.

(Old Jan, too, enjoyed those years. He was tending back the farm. It was a great work even though discouraging at times. It was hard work. Old Jan had to be constantly on the alert to prevent the school from further ravaging his soil. If the latest report in him, he had to get out into it immediately to counter it up. "I'm sorry
I invented
the pocket!"

IF I had known that some Americans would be using pockets to hold all the extra money they're making these days, I never would have invented them.

Pockets are good places to keep hands warm.
Pockets are good places to hold keys... and loose change for carfare and newspapers.

But pockets are no place for any kind of money except actual expense money these days.

The place—the only place—for money above living expenses is in War Bonds.

Bonds buy bullets for soldiers.

Bonds buy security for your old age.

Bonds buy education for your kids.

Bonds buy things you'll need later—that you can't buy now.

Bonds buy peace of mind—knowing that your money is in the fight.

Reach into the pocket I invented. Take out all that extra cash. Invest it in interest-bearing War Bonds.

You'll make me very happy if you do.

You'll be happy too.
