British Land To Liberate Holland Port

PARIS, Nov. 1 (UP)—British amphibious forces stormed ashore on the south and west coast of Walcheren island above the Scheldt estuary today in a bold bid to crush the last German strong points blocking the sea approaches to Antwerp.

The troops began landing early this morning near Flushing, at the southern tip of Walcheren, after an all night allied artillery bombardment from the Brekens area three miles across the entrance to the Scheldt estuary, the German trans-oceanic agency said.

Violent battle The German high command said violent fighting for the city and port of Flushing was going on after the landing, which was supported by naval forces.

The reported landing came while Canadian first army forces six miles northeast of Flushing were inching across the 150-foot wide causeway from south Beveland to within 30 yards of the eastern coast of Walcheren against point-blank German artillery and enfilading machine gun fire.

On the mainland, American and Polish troops carried the southwest Holland offensive into its final stages with two advances across the Mark river and canal, last night's defense warheads at the Holland Deep six miles to the north.

Cross Mark River American forces fighting with the Canadian first army plumed across the Mark river north of Oudenbosch and carried out a 100-yard-wide bridgehead on the north bank south of Zeperweg, only 100 yards from a half mile below the German held 15-span bridge across the Holland Deep at Mordijk.

Polish troops on the American east flank fought up the highway from Breda and then smashed across the Mark canal—can extension of the river—and seized another bridgehead six miles south of Mordijk.

With British forces already at the Maas northwest of Tilburg, official reports from first army group headquarters said all but 10,000 German troops south of the Maas and Holland Deep had escaped to the north bank.

RAF's Bombing The reported allied landing on the south coast of Walcheren was expected to bring quick liberation to the whole island, already four-fifths under water after the RAF's demolition of its dikes and German demoralization.

Allies Launch Offensive To Regain Burma Region

By BARRELL MORGAN

Following the recall of Gen. Joseph W. Stilwell, American, British and Chinese troops have opened a drive which may lead eventually to the re-occupation of all of Burma.

The drive, planned before Stilwell left the CBI theater, is under the overall command of Lord Louis Mountbatten.

Stilwell's aides who planned the operation appear to have as their main objective the clearing of the road to China. Opening of the campaign which coincided with the return of dry weather after the monsoon season was announced yesterday by Mountbatten's headquarters in Rangoon.

Some Indian observers believe the campaign may develop into a major attempt to regain the whole of the British empire.

The allied push southward toward Kachin, on the west side of the Irrawaddy river, is expected to clear the east side, will, it is expected, drive the Japanese far to the south. This would permit a further offensive toward the Indian Ocean.

The push also may continue farther west, toward the Salween river, with British troops clearing the Japanese out of the central Indo-Burma mountains. Military observers in India believe that such a development is in the cards for this year.

The United Press said that the Japanese will be operating on the central Burma plains before the monsoon rains slow military operations next May.

Controlled with the operations along the Irrawaddy river are the activities of the Chinese Salween forces, who, with Stilwell's American advisers, weapons and ammunition, are being a slow way southward along the old Burma road.

Superfortresses Hit Jap Capital; Yanks Repel Nip Landing

By The Associated Press

Superforts bombed Tokyo today in the first American raid on the Japanese capital in more than two years, unconfirmed Japanese radio reports indicated.

In a series of confused reports, Tokyo radio said a B-29 apparently from a newly developed base in the Marianas island appeared over the capital but left "without attempting attacks"; that several four engine planes were over the capital and factory district throughout the day.

The reports also stated that an enemy plane or planes were over the Tokyo area around 1 p. m. Wednesday (Tokyo time).

One broadcast, received by the federal communications commission, giving detailed instructions on how to deal with the situation, said that the enemy planes were covering the entire area around the capital and embracing several prefectures.

Several enemy four-engine bombers, it was reported, were at 1 p. m. but were driven off, the first Tokyo report said.

A later broadcast, received by the Associated Press, said: "The enemy planes only one enemy plane, B-29 bomber, and not two as believed earlier, appeared over Tokyo early this afternoon."

Half an hour later, the broadcast continued, "without attempting attacks, the enemy plane flew in a southerly direction."

Build Back The contradiction of succeeding reports recalled the confusion among Tokyo broadcasters when last month, December 1943, Japanese bombers struck the city April 18, 1942. This was the first report of American planes in the city since then.

At the time of the Marianas invasion there was much speculation that engineers would build a huge base on Saipan for B-29s and B-29s. There has never been a B-29 in the city since then.

Cigarette Shortage at Rock Bottom Throughout America

By United Press

The cigarette shortage hit rock bottom across the country today and threatened Press reporters in major cities found it virtually impossible to buy popular brands.

A high executive of one of the big five of cigarette manufacturers told the United Press that a flourishing and growing black market was at least partly responsible. It had cut out of their supplies.

But Chicago's low level turned up a few packs of the not so well known brands, but no popular ones.

In San Francisco, "cigarette today" signs were being displayed by cigar stores through all of the city and some of the rest had their stocks of "low" well known brands.

JAPS CHASE ALL WAY TO MANILA

By MORRIS LANDSBERG
ABOARD A U. S. CARRIER IN THE PHILIPPINE SEAS, Oct. 27 (Delayed)—The navy's top carrier-plane men—with 30 planes to his credit—said today he and two other Hellcat pilots chased a formation of Japanese fighters and bombers all the way to Manila on the day he landed about nine miles from the enemy aircraft in a single flight.

The ace, Comdr. David McComb, 32, of Los Angeles, said: "There were only two of us at the outset against 40 Japs. We really scrambled like cats to get the eagle for him."

"What they really needed, his full story revealed, was principally more ammunition and gasoline rather than help."

McComb's unit is tied with Capt. Don Gribble, 31, of Los Angeles, and Capt. C. C. Clark, 31, of Los Angeles, as the top ace of the war. McComb, 32, of Los Angeles, was first with 33 enemy planes to his credit.

His wingman, Lt. (jg) Roy Rushing, 22, of McComb's unit, was tied with six planes and two probables to the two he really had, Lt. (jg) C. C. Clark, 31, of Los Angeles, who joined the fight after half an hour, and treated with four planes shot down and one probable.

WICKARD BLASTS GOP FARM ISSUE

BLOOMINGTON, Ill., Nov. 1 (AP)—Secretary of Agriculture Claude R. Wickard told a Democratic rally here last night that "farmers will take no chances with promises and a Republican victory would mean such a tariff—Wall Street—old guard still runs the show."

"Most American agriculture again go through bankruptcy as it did following the last war," he asked in his prepared talk. It need not, he answered, "if agriculture maintains its legislative gains of the last 12 years and sees to it that the national administration during the next four years is sympathetic and not hostile to the farmer."

"Farmers know," he said, "that without their farm program—AAA, REA, farm credit and soil conservation—the chaos which might overtake agriculture in the postwar period might well destroy the family-size farm operation as it has come to signify American survival."

DEWEILER CITES FARMING VIEWS

PAYETTE, Nov. 1 — Spiking a statement that if elected he would wreck the department of agriculture, William H. Deweller, Republican candidate for governor, speaking here last night, stated: "No one knows better than I, a farmer for 25 years, the problems which must be faced in the potato-grading question."

"Some have said that while I was a member of the state legislature I opposed federal grading of potatoes. I have grown approximately 20,000 sacks of potatoes a year, and no member of the legislature was more interested than I in proper grading for the protection of the industry as a whole."

Recalling the fact that cull potatoes have been sold in other states as Idaho potatoes, Deweller said: "I worked long and hard, serving on the committee that established federal grades."

He also advocated a 25 per cent reduction in state income taxes.

Speaking at Wetser Monday night, Deweller praised Dewey as "a man who worked his way to the top. He is the kind of vigorous man this country needs as President in these or in any other times."

Deweller displayed advertisements from central Idaho papers urging men to seek war jobs in the coastal areas.

"At the same time," he said, "one federal bureau sponsored these ads, selective service notified us they must assume we can replace our agriculturally deferred young men whom they have begun to induct."

"This bungling will continue to cripple Idaho farm efforts," he said.

What About our future

IDAHO has a proud history of pioneer achievement; of progress; of development. Yet, Idaho's real history is yet to be written. We are a comparatively young state with great future possibilities.

We owe it to ourselves and to our boys who will return from the Armed Forces to make further strides in development, that we may make new jobs and new opportunities.

BOTTOLFSSEN WILL WORK FOR IDAHO

Bottolfsen has shown that he has a deep and sincere interest in Idaho and Idaho people. He has shown that he believes in:

1. The kind of government that fosters successful farming, mining, business and trade on the basis of free enterprise.
2. The rights of Idaho and each state to govern itself as provided by the Constitution; and as opposed to ever-increasing dictatorial bureaucracy.

3. Rights and freedom of the individual as opposed to spreading, sprawling bureaucratic control.
4. The maintenance of free enterprise to provide opportunity for the individual.

Bottolfsen stands on solid ground. He has ideas regarding the future of Idaho; and he has ideals regarding the rights of states and individuals.

Elect C.A. Bottolfsen

Republican Candidate for the UNITED STATES SENATE

YOU GOTTA THINK QUICK

THE STORY: Les Kabatke, temporarily down at the phone call from Virgil Bogie. Bogie wants to see him right away.

Fifty-seven was the age of the apartment house with a red and white striped awning and a colored doorman. I gave my name to the clerk at the desk, took the elevator to the third floor and then walked along a thick carpet which decorated your footstep so efficiently that you sounded like a cat.

I had barely touched the buzzer of apartment 307 when Glinger opened the door. It looked as if they were impatiently waiting for me. "Hello, Les!" exclaimed Glinger with that dazzling smile of hers. "Come right in." She took both my hands and shook them with the confidence and assurance of a mother bringing home the weekly check.

"You're looking more beautiful than ever, Glinger," I said, grinning back at her. I wasn't kidding. Her green eyes were bright and clear, her complexion was flawless, and she had a light coat of tan that suited her admirably. It was evident that the new woman had done her good and that whatever the extent of Virgil's sickness, she wasn't going to allow it to show.

Glinger, in a heavy voice, was whispering to me on the stairs. She was holding a pug dog in one arm, motioning me to sit down, and then returned the dog to her. I was frankly shocked by her behavior. Her usually well-kept face seemed thin and drawn. There were dark circles under her eyes which he had just closed, and he looked as if he hadn't slept for the past week.

"Virgil's not feeling so good," Glinger explained in a whisper. "I've seen him a couple of nights. He's one of his migraines and he's feeling sick to his stomach. He doesn't sleep well. I told him to take a rest this morning, but he was in a hurry to see you. Now he's saying that he'd better wait for a while."

If I know anything about Virgil, I wasn't the journey that made him feel sick. It took something like a stronger to knock him off his feet.

"Make yourself comfortable," commanded Glinger. "I'll get you a drink."

Investigation of its activities would have the bankruptcy court turn the whole thing over to the federal authorities if it found irregularities were discovered?

"It might," I said. "Provided the corporation did so the receiver-ship."

I was on the spot. Bogie had been out of circulation for the past six months and, before leaving, he hadn't even hinted that anything might be wrong. And now I was supposed to come back and give the answers. I was to be a code book, a future confessor, and a brain trust all rolled in one. The whole thing had been trained for and it looked as if I were finally going to function.

I scouted uneasily in my chair. "Now look here, Virgil," I continued. "I know your rules and I want to abide by them. But if you want me to help you, you're going to have to be more explicit."

He didn't say anything the last night, thinking, I knew what was going on in his mind. Here he was, a man who had built up something terrible by the simple method of divide and rule. He'd played a multitude of persons and corporations against each other, and he'd always come out on top. He was in a unique position, for while he knew all those working for and with him, few of them knew each other. Each had a specific job to do and was supposed to get going when called upon. My job was to hand out legal advice of a certain nature.

I could actually see the struggle going on in Bogie's mind. A rule that had been sacred to him was hanging in the balance. He'd never told anyone more than was necessary to keep the organization functioning. Now he had to choose between total collapse and confiding in one person. And that person was me.

The suspense became unbearable. He sat there, and I sat across from him. I didn't add anything to what he already said. I didn't have to. He knew as well as I did that the time had come for a showdown if he wanted to continue functioning. I finished up my drink and put the glass on the table.

"Okay," said Bogie after awhile. "I'll talk. But first I'll remind you that I still have a power stored by you. And I don't have to tell you what'll happen if you double-cross me."

"Sure," I said. "I know." I settled back in my chair and lit a cigarette. "Go ahead."

WORLD TO SHARE IN U. S. AIRCRAFT

By JAMES J. STREIBIG
Associated Press Aviation Editor
CHICAGO, Nov. 1.—The United States is expected to assure delegates to the international civil aviation conference that its attendance of transport aircraft will be available to cooperating nations on equal terms.

This attitude, learned on the eve of the 20-nation meeting, may play an important role in meeting anticipated opposition to the American suggestion that world air routes be operated as quickly as the military situation permits.

Canada is one of the countries known to feel that its interest in international air transport would suffer from immediate commercial operations on a wide basis, since it is not yet ready to act.

Nothing to Lose
The American view is understood to be that this country has nothing to lose and perhaps much to gain by a liberalized policy in the distribution of transport facilities. The good will which might be expected in this connection is a factor in future relations, and the use of United States aircraft for the transport of goods and passengers is an industry planned with the thought of a better future.

No other country has been unwilling to transport aircraft on a scale worthy of consideration since the war began.

The convention staff went through last-minute dress rehearsals today for the opening tomorrow afternoon.

Staff of 200
A staff of nearly 200, principally composed of the technical phase of the conference, worked on the machinery for the three-week meeting. The staff is to be made up of a pattern for the civil air portion of the peace conference.

The largest delegation among the early arrivals was the Canadian, getting ready for a fight to influence the international air authority with broad economic control.

More than 60 nations have made it clear that they will support that stand along with some of the smaller countries.

The question of what might be the effect of the last-minute Russian withdrawal continued to be the first one asked by every new arrival.

EXPORT CONTROL TO BE RELAXED

PEA, with hopes of boosting U. S. exports to a postwar level of 6 or 7 billion dollars annually compared with present shipments of about 2 billion, is described as particularly eager for the earliest possible removal of trade barriers.

Deep parsing of the quota list would be preliminary to an even more drastic release on the European V-day; when only a comparative handful of commodities—forest products, chemicals, textiles, and some consumer goods, among others.

CHARLEY GOSSETT WANTS HARMONY IN IDAHO

He Will Work With All Interests in the State for THE GOOD OF IDAHO

This is a time when the people of Idaho should elect a man for Governor who has in addition to the ability, experience and training for the office, the desire and disposition to work with other groups and people for the common good of all.

Gossett is just such a man. He will work in harmony with the legislature and all branches of state government.

Gossett will work sympathetically and understandingly with the counties, cities and all other local governing bodies within the state. He will work in harmony with agricultural organizations, with labor groups, trade and business associations and the lumber and mining industries.

Gossett will strive to improve conditions in our prison system, in our state institutions, in our schools and in our care of elderly people, the blind and destitute children.

CHARLEY GOSSETT Is the Man BEST QUALIFIED For GOVERNOR

Charley Gossett is a successful farmer, livestock producer and businessman. He is a capable executive fully qualified by experience and training to guide Idaho through the trying years that lie ahead.

Gossett will give Idaho a business-like administration. He has a broad knowledge of the state and its problems and the ability to make his program effective.

When your son and Gossett's son return from the war we can be sure with Gossett as Governor Idaho will be ready to meet its responsibility to returning servicemen and war workers.
