

4 German Towns Bagged by Tanks in Saar Fighting

PARIS, Dec. 4 (AP)—Staggered line guns threw salvoes today at the captured Saar river bridge inside Saarlautern while U.S. third army troops, storming across the intact span, fought the last spotty German defenses in that second city of the industrial Saar.

At the end of the western front, the British second army advanced 1,000 yards to the demolished Maas river bridge outside the Dutch road of Venlo mopping up the last Germans west of that water barrier. The Tommies took part of Venlo's suburbs west of the river.

Other men of Marshal Montgomery's 21st army group encountered foot-deep floods in the Arnhem and Nijmegen area, opposite which the Canadian first army has entered Germany within striking distance of the northern end of the Siegfried line at Kleve. Aeneas of the first and ninth armies suddenly found a battlefront on the Roer river before Cologne and crept slowly and fully toward the third battle line on that flooded stream, Duren.

Other men of the first army yesterday in one of history's most violent battles of attrition. They are today, a battlefront for a week although it had 100,000 soldiers, including the British, American, Canadian, and French, stood on the Roer for 30 miles.

General Patton is at the Saar on a 16-mile front. The battle was violent but the price immense. The Saar produces eight per cent of Germany's coal and 11 per cent of her iron and the third largest source of heavy industries in the Reich.

On the first army, battling down the superhighway from Cologne to Aachen, the U.S. third army is 23 miles from the great but battered city on the Rhine, whence roads will lead into the very heart of Germany.

The first army poured on its power. The first army which fought back German defenses a mile yesterday at the west end of Duren, a city of 32,000.

Yankees Blow up 300 Foes at Once Inside Fort Metz

INSIDE FORT METZ, Near Strasbourg, Dec. 4 (AP)—American army engineers blew up 300 Nazis inside a tank bunker of the fortress today by sending a captured German rifle, loaded with 7,000 pounds of time-fused TNT, careening to the concrete walls of the emplacement.

The TNT blew a terrific hole in the bunker, where the Nazis were holding out and refusing to surrender. The captured German tank was believed to be one of the last and some German officers were killed.

Buhl Captain Leads New Superfort Raid on Tokyo

SAIPAN, Dec. 4 (Via Navy Radio) (AP)—Capt. John H. Buhl, 1st, commanded the first plane to hit the Japanese capital of Tokyo yesterday.

Geer was delayed in taking off on the first B-29 raid Nov. 24 and flew all alone behind his gunners. He was off to the right of the main group of B-29s.

Sunday's raid on Tokyo by Capt. John H. Buhl, 1st, was a surprise. The raid was the first of its kind since the B-29s were first used in the Philippines.

After first being stationed in the Pacific, he and three other B-29s were sent to the Philippines. They were sent to the Philippines to train new pilots in combat tactics in the Caribbean.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 4 (AP)—A major portion of the big B-29 Superfortresses today were in smoldering ruins today following attack yesterday by 100 Superfortresses.

Striking at the Japanese capital the fourth time and the B-29s today were in the air for nine days, the raiders laid their bombs in perfect accuracy across rectangular factory buildings and saw eight to 10 fires burning as they headed back to their Saipan bases.

Near-gale winds probably turned the fires into more than one conflagration. The raid was considered one of the most if not the most successful yet made by the B-29s since they were first used in the Pacific.

The attack came simultaneously with an admission by Japanese Premier Kato that the war situation is "critical" for Japan with her urgent need for increase in planes, arms and other fighting power.

Conditions of our material fighting power do not permit any optimistic whatsoever, and we are far from reaching the point of exhaustion, he said.

The B-29s ran into heavy fighter opposition over Tokyo and were shot to bits, at altitudes of up to 30,000 feet, at altitudes of up to 30,000 feet, at altitudes of up to 30,000 feet.

The weather favored the B-29s and the raiders were able to see the city clearly. The raid was the first of its kind since the B-29s were first used in the Pacific.

YOU GOTTA THINK QUICK

By Stanley Palay

That's how I change came about. If anyone had ever told me the day would come when I'd be prepared to give up the material advantages I'd struggled for, I'd have thought he was nuts. And he had added that this would come because of a girl. I'd have been certain he was ripe for a strait jacket. All of which goes to show to what extent a fellow can reverse his stand.

And so the following afternoon I drove over to Dwayne's new rent house. It was my first visit there and he was still in the process of getting settled. I was sure that I had that was the reason for his lagged look. This having been another one of the sudden, unscrutinized moves.

Bogio wasn't in a talkative mood as he showed me around, so I didn't ask any questions. We wound up in the living room where the crackle of the radio was still in the air. I didn't have the guts, right then, to tell him he was soon going to have more war for the Criminal Code than for the novels of Jane Austen.

He was about to ease himself into an armchair when he remembered something.

"How about it, Dink?"

"Okay, Scotch and soda."

He came into the living room, fumbled around, and came back with a tray. For himself he had brought a glass of milk. The "Scotch" milk bothering you, Virgil?

"What's it to you?"

"I wasn't a thing but it didn't cost anything to ask. I shrugged down my drink and poured myself another. For a few moments neither of us spoke. I wasn't exactly afraid, but I didn't know how to start. When someone has owned you for about a year, it's hard to tell him you're torn up the inside. I made some more small talk.

"How come you're all alone?"

"Ginger shopping. The kid's driving her."

The way he answered I knew something was wrong. Bogio wasn't talkative. But on the other hand he didn't generally use words as if he had to pay a tax on them. If danger was near, Bogio's mind was a good-looking girl and that Don was out of three parts. Maybe his reluctance to talk, Bogio's employer wasn't based entirely on financial considerations. That didn't give me a chance to dwell on that idea. Bogio, who had been cleaning his knife with a silver paper knife, looked up at me.

"Well, what is it? You didn't come here to ask about my health."

"It was nice of him to make it easy for me. I took a deep breath.

"I'm quitting you, Virgil. I don't want to have anything more to do with the racket."

He gave out with an ugly, humorless laugh.

"Another of your moral periods," he said. "Each time they hit you, you want more dough."

For a moment he continued fiddling with his nails, then tossed the knife aside and crushed his fist on the bleached mahogany desk.

"That's enough. Let's Don't start provoking me. You signed a contract, didn't you?"

"You've got me wrong, Virgil. I don't want any more of your dough either. And what you've already given me I'll return. I've kept my accounts straight and I'll manage somehow."

Now that he saw I was on the level he became livid. He slowly rose out of his chair and walked over to me. The noise his hand made as it struck my face was like the crack of a whip. I didn't move and he struck me again and again. Then, panting, he returned to his chair.
