

PRISONERS DYING FIFTEEN EACH DAY

By H. E. WALTER
Managing Editor, Houston Chronicle

PARIS, April 28 (AP)—The prisoners left in the notorious German labor camp at Buchenwald are still dying at the rate of 15 a day although it has been two weeks since the American army opened the camp.

When captured the camp had a population of about 20,000 and those about to be taken away were removed so that only about 6,000 were there when a party of soldiers visited the place. They were sick and starving, most of them past saving.

The camp is a place of unbelievable degradation and filth although some officers and prisoners say much has been done since the Americans arrived to clean it up in contrast to the starvation and filth at Buchenwald is the cultural center of Weimar which adjoins the camp. The town suffered some bombing damage but is still and clean except for rubble around the buildings that were hit. Well-dressed Germans go about their business, paying little attention to American occupation forces.

The natives are stout and dignified. They comply with rules and regulations readily. Whether they were merely indifferent to conditions in the camp during the many years it was operated or ignorant of them is debated by the officers in town. Certainly there is no evidence visible that any of them feel guilt or responsibility.

TITLE DENIED GRANTED

H. J. Blanton was granted a decree to quiet title on 89 acres of land south of Berger Field in district Court. Ada W. Powell, executrix of the estate of W. W. Powell, was named as defendant.

Horrors Committed in German Prison Camps Unforgettable, Soldier Asserts

When a war correspondent describes conditions in a German prison camp as being "as monotonous as human degradation," it isn't propaganda, and he isn't exaggerating.

You have the word of Pfc. H. Wilbur McKay, Twin Falls, who has seen some monstrous, unforgettable sights of horror in the last few weeks.

Private McKay is a member of the fourth armored division that came to the rescue of the 10th airborne division at the famous battle of Bastogne.

Stories Are All True

"In our drive through Germany, we have liberated a lot of concentration camps of prisoners of war. The stories you hear about the Germans are all too true.

"It's horrible to see, and terrible to write home about, but it's all true and I feel that everyone should know about the conditions we found." Private McKay has written to his wife, who lives at 445 Elm street.

He told of helping to liberate a large camp full of Russian, French, Yugoslav, Italian and others.

Bodies Piled Up

"I saw 30 murdered men heaped up in one pile, an American flag among them. In another place close by, I saw the remains of where 3,000 prisoners had been buried, and the bones not consumed by the fire, thrown in long trenches," he wrote.

He described the 20 murdered men as resembling "a horrible mess, half-dead, just skin and bones."

"One of the prisoners told us that the morning before, the prisoners were called by name, taken out and shot through the head.

"The men had been sick and some of them were old, too old to work. I heard lots of such tales, before but I have seen it with my own eyes. I believe everything, no matter how degrading, I've ever heard about the Nazis," Private McKay declared.

He expressed the hope that the once respectable be caught.

3 FRENCH GIRLS LASHED TO DEATH

PARIS, April 28 (AP)—Three French girls were whipped and whipped to death in the presence of 200 American soldiers in a German prison camp, M. E. Walter, managing editor of the Houston Chronicle and a member of the editors' party investigating German camps, said today.

Walter quoted Sgt. William Sander, a Kentuckian who said he witnessed the murders and later saw the girls.

"The sergeant said the Germans had discovered the Frenchmen and the Americans were mutually helping each other in the camp and they were determined to kill them," Walter related. "The prisoners were assembled one morning and the women, all of whom were young, were lined up in front of them and forced to undress.

"German guards then took cat-o-nine tails and beat them until they died. The sergeant said it took only about 20 minutes."

Can't Print All

WASHINGTON, April 28 (AP)—Rep. Kunkel, R.-Pa., returned to Washington today from an inspection of the German concentration camp at Buchenwald, appalled at the evidence of Nazi atrocities.

"Anything you hear about conditions at Buchenwald will be understatement," he told reporters. "The full truth would get into the train of obscurity and fill—so low you couldn't print it."

"The army has done a wonderful job of cleaning it up," he said, "but the smell of death is out over the place."

Salesmen Gather For Meeting Here

Salesmen and managers of the Bode and Pocatello plants of the Bode Bakery company will meet here at 1 p. m. today in the Park hotel for an afternoon and evening convention, at which time leaders of the baking company will discuss with salesman current problems of salesmanship and manufacture.

Managers expected to attend the Sunday meeting are Melvin Sader, of Pocatello, and Joseph McVey of the Bode plant.

The Bode company which operates four routes out of Twin Falls and one out of Gooding, is one of the largest baking companies in the west. With main offices at Boise and Pocatello, the firm maintains branches and other branch plants at LaGrande, Ore.; Grand Forks, N. D.; Aberdeen, S. D.; Butte, Helena, Billings, Havre, Livingston, Great Falls and Missoula, Mont., and Yakima, Wash.

YANKS FIND 'VAN' LIKE THEMSELVES

WITH SOVIET TROOPS ON THE ELBE, April 28—American soldiers were surprised to find that "Yan" was the typical Russian private, was pretty much like his GI counterparts.

An American sergeant who spent the afternoon of the linkup riding around with Russian soldiers thought they were pretty much like Yank officers.

He seemed to be acting under the same kind of orders as our officers do," said Sgt. Gerald E. Hornstead, New York, "and they treated German civilians in exactly the same way we do. While we were riding around one Russian worker came up and complained that he had been overworked and wanted him shot immediately.

The Russian officer was sympathetic, but told him "there will be no inquiry before there is any shooting."

German civilians, however, retain their dread of Russian brutality which the Berlin radio has been drumming into their ears for months.

Most residents of Torgau on the western bank of the Elbe fled the city ahead of the Soviet troops. Yanks drove through to market. The Russians found a few elderly Germans in the streets. One was picked up and taken to a camp where another was rummaging in junk heaps for scraps of food.

After seeing the German units give up to the Americans and the fact that they were fighting against the Russians, one is inclined to believe Propaganda Minister Paul Joseph Goebbels' over-the-top "terror" stories.

He did such a good job he scared many German soldiers into believing it was impossible to whip a Russian army.

Nurse, Adviser, Friend—Buhl Thinks a Lot of Mrs. Wilson

By MARTINA YETTER

Buhl, April 28—BUREAU REVEREND is being expressed by the whole world and over the retirement from its active working ranks of Mrs. Harry Wilson, who has been with the county nurse for more than 15 years, and who has been a great help to everyone. For she has been much more than just a nurse—she has been a friend, a confidante, a source of information, and general broad shoulders.

"And these things have been plenty told at times," she smiled, as she sat in her home at the edge of town. "Many a time I've been stuck on those back roads, in all kinds of weather. But it's a country to which a doctor seldom gets, especially in these days of doctor shortages. Sometimes lives are saved, you know, by being able to recognize symptoms and getting people to needed attention in time."

Looking back over her years as a public health nurse, Mrs. Wilson recalls: "I've taken care of families in tents with guns and rifles, in trenches and curtains for towels. In 1918 in a small epidemic I had 150 cases in the west end as one time. I helped John Brown with delirium tremens, encouraging and lifting up the families, and reasoning with the parents. I've had to face all sorts and conditions in all sorts of conditions, and people call me any time of day or night, for anything from a cold to a broken leg or a baby to be weaned, to train for school."

One day she brought his wife in to me in the middle of the night to deliver a baby. He was exactly what I thought that was part of my duty to care for her in my own home—and I had quite some convincing to do in the hospital in Twin Falls.

Objected to Quarantine. "I've had next to no trouble with quarantine as such. I usually explaining the necessity and reasoning with the parents is enough. I recall one time, however, who objected strenuously to a quarantine, and told me if I were a man he would beat up on me. I told him to come ahead, that I thought I could take care of myself, but he didn't accept the invitation.

"Many times I've assisted doctors in the delivery of babies, by light, or candlelight, in dirt and squalor almost beyond description, or in poor but clean and shining little homes. Soap is cheap, and everywhere I've tried to impress people with the virtues of cleanliness, but in some cases you don't seem to have any sense at all.

"There isn't much you can do with people who refuse to learn. But I've tried to do all I can, and I've been varied, interesting and absorbing experience, and I can assure you there is never a dull moment, or a waste of time, in the life of a public health nurse.

Fractured Her Back. One of the bravest things Mrs. Wilson ever did was when she was given a handpick which would have flung her over the side of the road. She was on her way to school, and fell on the ice and snow on the Deep Creek school yard, fracturing the lumbar vertebrae in her back.

Thinking it was only a bad back sprain, she tried to work for some weeks, getting up out of bed to answer calls; but she finally had to give up.

The middle of February she went to Boise and discovered the back trouble. She nine weeks stay in a cast, then came back and took up her work again, wearing a heavy harness brace made of steel and leather. For the next eight months she carried on in this heavy harness, driving her own car and making her rounds as usual. The brace is discarded now, though she still has to wear a heavy support for the weakened back.

Three years ago Mrs. Wilson was sent to Minneapolis, Minn., by the Twin Falls County. In 1932, when the National Foundation to take the Kermey method of treatment for infantile paralysis. She has had five or six cases since then, and often saves lives. The treatment definitely relieves the pain of a great deal of pain, and it gives hope to the children. The value value, though of course results are varying in different cases.

Since the war Mrs. Wilson has taught home-nursing classes, and will continue to do this as long as she is needed in that capacity. She also assured everyone that she will be available for demonstration and instruction in the Kermey treatment at any time she needs advice.

Mrs. Wilson first began her public health work in 1922, when she became one of the original nurses in the newly founded Kermey Institute-sponsored health unit in the county. Dr. George C. Hinely, of Twin Falls, was the first director of this unit. Since then she has served as county health officer, nurse, until her present resignation. She took her nurse's training in the old Boyd hospital in Twin Falls.

THREE PROOFS OF SHAPE OF WORLD

By J. HUGH PRUETT

Astronomer, General Extension Division, University of Oregon

That the earth rotates daily on its axis and revolves yearly around the sun, has practically 100 per cent acceptance, but occasionally we find a sincere person who still objects all or part of this doctrine. A widely-known Chicago leader taught that the earth was flat; nor was he shaken in his belief by a trip "around" the world. Two correspondents in the northwest write they still cannot accept the annual revolution of the earth.

The ancient considered the world flat, stationary, and at the exact center of the universe. According to the Greeks, completely surrounding this "earth-island" there flowed Oceanus, the great ocean-river, on which the sun nightly was lowered around to the east. Beyond Oceanus' night and gloom dominated the mysterious luminaries.

Long Ago. A spherical world was advanced by many ancient scholars. A very few believed in its rotation and revolution, but not until after Copernicus' teachings in the 16th century. A. D. were these notions generally accepted.

So irrefragable seem the proofs at the present view that it is hard to believe anyone capable of averting reasoning and willing to study into the subject with open mind and open heart. Without explanation, the leading proofs are listed below.

1. Proofs that the earth is a sphere: ships have sailed around it. The hull of a departing ship disappears below the horizon first. To a traveler going a considerable distance north or south, stars never seem before him above those behind. The shadow of the earth on the moon during an eclipse is a circular shadow of stars at all angles perfectly according to the assumption the earth is round. Photographs from very high altitudes show curved horizons.

2. Proofs of rotation: The Foucault pendulum. Deviation in the right in the northern hemisphere (left in southern) of horizontally moving projectiles. Earth's equatorial bulge. Day's rising and motion of stars.

3. Proofs of movement around the sun: Aberration of light. Parallax of stars. Spectroscopic shifts of light from the stars. These all require a considerable explanation.

MINING FIGHT
TARIFF SLASHING

WASHINGTON, April 29 (AP)—Protests by western mining men against tariff-cutting powers conferred on the new reciprocal trade agreements act have been read out of the record of the Colorado Mining Association, which is the committee that tariff-cutting on gold and silver will throw the industry into a severe depression. It urged the committee should keep out of the act, and that it should include:

1. Future self-preservation requires protection of the nation's resources.

2. Employment cannot be gained by dislocating the nation's industrial system in order to collect gold and silver.

3. High wage scales cannot be maintained in America if cheap foreign labor is imported in the form of raw materials.

4. It seems to me there are better ways of proving the goodness of our country.

5. I would be greatly interested in a peace conference and program made up entirely of those nations that kept out of the war.

NO STARVATION OF Germans Put 'em To Manual Labor

Editor, Times-News: I realize that it is only on rare occasions that you publish a tribute in verse to a public figure.

1. I would be greatly interested in a peace conference and program made up entirely of those nations that kept out of the war.

2. Employment cannot be gained by dislocating the nation's industrial system in order to collect gold and silver.

3. High wage scales cannot be maintained in America if cheap foreign labor is imported in the form of raw materials.

4. It seems to me there are better ways of proving the goodness of our country.

THE AMERICAN HOUSE

One Saturday afternoon in April my father came home unexpectedly. He did not come into the sitting room where we were playing Authors, but instead called my mother out into the hall. There the two of them went into the parlor and closed the door behind them. Saturday was my father's birthday. His coming home meant something important was going to happen. I pondered the momentous. We were all aged.

"Has someone's dead," Julia suggested cheerfully.

"At first we could make out almost nothing when I got into the room we heard my father say it. A note at the bank."

A note meant a letter. A letter brought news. Julia was right, I decided. My father had died and left us a fortune. I would take a trip to Europe. I would go on the Lusitania. I would buy myself a red and white pilotcoat with a flounce.

Convinced that my father's only relation, she lived in a big house called Baltimore on the other side of the junction. He had been born on the birthday of the Queen whose name she bore, and that circumstance had earned her entire existence for it gave her, she felt, a real aristocratic air and almost told her that every cent she owned would go when she died to "The Friends of the Royal Family," an organization of which she was a charter member. But Cousin Victoria was noted for clanking her silver.

The front door closed, and my mother, he checks very flushed, came back into the sitting room. "I have news for you."

Two flounces, maybe . . .

"Jim McClure has left town," she told us in a choked voice.

I felt terribly let down. So, could she, did Sue and Julia. Jim McClure was a little plain man, but all three of us had viewed him with distaste. His leaving did not move us. Certainly, we thought, it did not justify the parlor.

"The bills behind him," my mother went on.

"That didn't impress us, either. Jim's bills in our life. My father sent them out occasionally, and people paid them in their own way. Sometimes it was with the potatoes, sometimes with weekly deliveries of the potatoes. But always for a father's patient. So was the barber and the butcher and the collector of the potatoes. Every once in a while he would get together with one or another of them for square dealing. My mother repeated gravely: "The bills that your father will have to pay in cash."

We sobbed. Our cash was gone, and we knew it. To buy horses and carriages for the estate. But we did not care easily.

"What did you do that thought best at the time," my mother continued. She never criticized him, at least in our hearing. But she had turned out badly. He has spent all of his money, and now he has had to borrow $500 from the bank. Then the note didn't concern Cousin Victoria.

"Now there is only one way out."

"What way, Mom?" Sue asked.

"For us to move into the attic and run the place until he has paid back what he has borrowed."

She must have seen the amazement in our faces. No one in our village had ever lived in the attic. In the house where you had been born, and, as likely as not, where your father had been born. You were brought up to believe there was something suspicious about people who moved around.

"It's only for the summer," my mother hurried on. "By August your father will have other plans," she paused and sighed. "It will be very different from our life here."

My mother's eyes fell to the marble top of the table. "You will probably hear and see things, living there."

The room seemed warmer. I looked down at my shoes, fearful of smudges, though there was nothing to smudge. I could see with my own eyes. . . . Hear with my own ears. . . .

"And if you do," she went on, suddenly severe, "I want you to remember your upbringing. If I could only be sure of that."

We moved on the next Saturday in May. My mother packed only our toilet articles and our clothing, leaving each of us to judge what else was indispensable. There's no need of carrying a lot of things that will just have to be bought when we're again," she warned.

The day was dull and chilly. At a o'clock my father came for us with the truck. We got in gravely and sat throughout the ride in silence. For the first time I could remember we had looked out our door. And we had looked it from the outside.
