English Fog Is Torturous Wet Blanket

By DEWITT MACKENZIE

LONDON, Dec. 3 — This man and wife team of globe-trotting cosmologists has returned to their home in England that they were sent to get some of it off their backs. The program was presented by the Elks band. The program was presented by the Elks band. The program was presented by the Elks band.

Winter in England adds fog and rain. It is a cold, wet blanket that grips you in your eyes and throat, and makes your stomach ache. And when it really gets on your nerves it stops virtually all outdoor activity. The program was presented by the Elks band. The program was presented by the Elks band. The program was presented by the Elks band.

Now we really aren't raising the subject of fog because of personal discomfort, because we are doing pretty well. (Mrs. Mack says for me to speak for myself.) But Britain as a whole has been suffering from the black cloud. The program was presented by the Elks band. The program was presented by the Elks band. The program was presented by the Elks band.

Despite the fact that this is one of the great cold producing countries, there is a terrible shortage of hot water. The program was presented by the Elks band. The program was presented by the Elks band. The program was presented by the Elks band.

The combined cost of the two government-sponsored pipelines, the "Big Inch" and the "Little Big Inch" was about $145,000,000. The program was presented by the Elks band. The program was presented by the Elks band. The program was presented by the Elks band.

Four Months Peace Draft Gains Favor

WASHINGTON, Dec. 3 (AP)—Three weeks of public hearings on universal military training left congressional sponsors pessimistic to day over the chance of getting a peacetime draft law.

Publicly they are conceding nothing, but privately they would settle right now for a law requiring every able-bodied male to serve in the military training at or near the age of 18.

Senator Truman has requested a law requiring one continuous year of training. The war and navy departments and the chamber of commerce of the United States have opposed the proposal in hearings before the house military committee. So have numerous individuals and miscellaneous groups.

But some educators, churches and others are opposed to it. Bill for a draft act sponsored by the organized labor and farm groups who opposed universal training has passed the house military committee hearings.

"We will do well to get even a four-month program," one congressional aide said. "Right now I'm not so sure any kind of a compulsory bill could get out of the military committee."

"It looks like we are whipped, but we're not ready to quit yet," said another.

Some supporters believe their cause will pick up strength after the first of the year. They expect the unsettled international situation to help.

The end of the hearings is not in sight, but Chairman May, D. Cal., has told all witnesses they have heard by the middle of December. The committee action before next year is unlikely.

Report On the War

By General George C. Marshall

Biennial Report of the Chief of Staff of the U. S. Army
1943 to 1945, to the Secretary of War
Published by the War Department

This is the 14th of 42 installments of material selected from General Marshall's report on the winning of World War II.

AIR WAR

At the time of the QUADRANT Conference at Quebec in August 1943, there had been but a single United States division in the United Kingdom and our trans-Atlantic shipping effort was concentrated on fitting the heavy requirements of the Mediterranean campaign. By late August 1943, shipping was partially cleared from this heavy southern commitment and troops again began to pour into the British Isles. On 9-day, 6 June 1944, the strength of the United States army in that theater was 1,030,000 men and the interin an average of 150,000 men had been transported each month.

The buildup of this force, together with a corresponding accumulation of supplies of all kinds, involved a tremendous job of transportation, and special credit must be given to the Navy for its vital part in the undertaking. An enormous administrative task was also involved, since the quartering, feeding and training of such large forces had to be provided within the limited area of the United Kingdom. The efficiency of the pre-invasion buildup is exemplified by the speed with which the landing in Britain was provided with their essential arms and equipment. Through a system of equipment distribution and waiting for each unit on its arrival. Within a maximum of 30 days after debarking, divisions were fully equipped and ready for action.

The units arriving in the United Kingdom from America were well trained, especially in fast-moving corps and army operations over large areas; those coming from the Mediterranean were battle-tested. Nonetheless, everything possible was done during their staging period in the United Kingdom to increase their combat efficiency despite the limited terrain available in a densely populated and cultivated country. The troops which were to make the assault landings maneuvered realistically on beaches and ground which approximated the target areas. In the early spring of 1944, joint exercises of the ground, sea, and air forces which were to make the attack were held along the southern coast of England. It was a full-dress rehearsal.

Troops Ready

Three weeks before the invasion General Eisenhower wrote: "There is no question at all as to the readiness of the troops. They are well trained, fit, and impatient to get the job started and completed. In forecasting future possibilities, it is, of course, necessary that we seek ways and means to bring into those factors in which we enjoy a great superiority over the enemy. These are, of course, the command of the air, including resources in airborne troops and ground troops which approximate the operation in which we would bring in behind the initial beachhead a great strength in armor and seek an opportunity to launch a big armored attack in conjunction with a deep and very heavy penetration by airborne troops."

By 1 July 1943 the allied strategic air assault of Air Chief Marshall, A. T. Harris Royal Air Force Bomber Command by night and General Zaker's Eighth Air Force by day on the fortress of Europe was in full swing and was producing important results. Single raids in which the air force delivered bomb loads of more than 500 tons had been made on the combat power of the German fighter force.

These results had been obtained with an American air fleet of less than 1,000 heavy bombers and 1,000 planes of other types. By D-day, the strength of the United States air forces in the United Kingdom exceeded 3,000 heavy bombers and 4,000 fighters of other types. The attacks on Germany continued with increasing intensity and shattering power.

The climax in air war came in February 1944, when the Luftwaffe made a powerful effort to avenge our day bombers from the skies. The battle raged for a week. It was fought over Rheingebirg, Schweinfurt, and other critical industrial centers. The German fighter force was severely crippled, and our attacks continued with unabated fury.

Air Targets

From the time of the Eighth Air Force's first heavy bomber attack on 11 August 1943 until V-E day, more than 1,500,000 tons of bombs were dropped on German targets. During 1943, following successful attacks on the enemy's submarine yards and bases, the effort of our precision bombers was concentrated against aircraft and ball-bearing manufacturing plants, airframes, and communications. The German fighter command, already outclassed by inability to get replacement aircraft, was further concentrated upon the destruction of the Ruhr-Rhineland industries and the understanding of the morale of industrial workers.

In order to exploit more fully the flexibility of our bombers, particularly against German industrial targets, the Eighth and Fifteenth U. S. Air Forces were combined on 1 January, 1944 to form "The U. S. Strategic Air Forces in Europe." Lt. Gen. Carl Spaatz was placed in command. The component forces continued to be based in the United Kingdom and in Italy respectively.

In the late spring of 1944, synthetic fuel plants and crude oil refineries became the prime targets. Extensive documents now show that the bombing campaign succeeded in reducing production between May and October 1944 to five per cent of the former monthly output.

The attack on German industry was coupled with attacks on German communications. Vital rail junctions and the canal which were so important in the enemy's transportation system were repeatedly bombed. During a single month—May 1944—more than 900 locomotives and 16,000 freight cars were destroyed in western Europe. The effects of this phase of the air assault were enormous, for transportation and communications are the life arteries of a modern industrial state engaged in total war.

Medium bombers, and fighter-bombers of Lt. Gen. Lewis H. Brereton's Ninth Air Force, which moved from the Middle East during the fall of 1943, struck enemy airfields in diversionary attacks so timed as to reduce the concentration of enemy fighters which might oppose the passage of the heavy United States bomber formations. Divergency fighter sweeps further disrupted the enemy's air opposition. As the range of fighters was increased through the installation of additional fuel tanks, they were employed more and more to escort bombers to targets deep in Germany.

As the aerial offensive mounted the enemy was forced to withdraw fighters from the support of his armies in the east to meet the threat from the west. This was a major factor in enabling the Soviet air forces to maintain superiority on their front.
