New Tornados Slash South; Deaths Mount

By United Press

Tornadoes hit the states in Arkansas, Mississippi, Louisiana, Missouri, Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, Kentucky, Tennessee, Alabama, Georgia, Florida, and Texas.

The series of storms was born of a collision of warm air masses moving northward and a cold front advancing eastward across the Mississippi valley. Texas storms led 725 homes, hospitalized 100 and caused $200,000 damage. The unseasonable "heat wave" pushing up from the south over New York City, threatened to hit yesterday, Jan. 6.

Golden Gloves Plans Developing Fast

With plans for the Northwest Golden Gloves tournament to be staged the week of Feb. 10, under the sponsorship of the Times-News and Legion, developing fast, promoter Gene Osterman has called a meeting of the committee in charge of the event for Jan. 10, Wednesday, at the Legion lounge. The principal business of the committee probably will be to determine the date of the tournament in the Legion hall, which will seat 1,200 spectators, the high school gymnasium, into which 3,000 can be packed.

Supervisor of Schools A. W. Morgan has offered the Times-News and the Legion the use of the gymnasium for the event. In other words, the event staged for the area during the week. The tournament will probably consist of the preliminaries and the main event.

The ring, in which Travis (Travis) Budner and N. C. Weir, both former boxers, will take part, is in the Legion hall. The event will be staged in the Legion hall, which will seat 1,200 spectators, the high school gymnasium, into which 3,000 can be packed.

War Fails to Alter Farms In West U. S.

By WILLIAM E. LOWELL
WASHINGTON, Jan. 6.—Despite the huge crops of recent years, western agriculture seems to be as much the same as it was at the start of the war.

Good weather, greater utilization of labor-saving machinery and fertilizer and long hours of work, rather than new crops or expanded acreage are credited with having met the war time requirements.

It is said that acreage was expanded for some crops like early potatoes in the San Juan valley of California, flax in Montana, beans and peas in Colorado, Oregon, Washington and Idaho, but that expansion was away from before the war.

No New Land
Records of the agriculture department indicate that new land probably was not added to the national tally for crops, annual-fallow may have been neglected here and there but there was no large-scale breaking up of raw land as during the first World war.

New crops were introduced and none appears to have established a permanent place in western economy.

Montana produced a lot of mustard seed for special oil needs and the Pacific coast replaced Europe as a source of vegetables for the agriculture specialists are not ready to say that there have been a permanent part of western agricultural economy. Lardine clover, new pasture crop, may make the grade.

Machine Use Grows

An agriculture spokesman familiar with the western situation regards the expansion of mechanized farming as the most important change during the war. He believed it will continue. He cited especially pickup trucks, making possible use of grade crops for evulch. Hereafter the first has been off the ground on the ground. Variable hay balers and automatic loaders have helped feed crop producers, he said.

He mentioned, also, use of segmented sugar beet seeds as a saving of labor in thinning and blocking, and said mechanical loggers and loaders were being used more generally.
