Significant Politics

When C. Girard Davidson, assistant secretary of the interior, came out here to announce that the government will extend Bonneville power transmission lines into southern Idaho, there was more politics involved than most of the people perhaps realized.

Significantly enough, Gov. Arnold Williams, titular head of the Democratic party in Idaho, was all but ignored in the stage setting for this "revolutionary" announcement.

The show seemed to center around Pete Leguineche, Democratic candidate for congress, and the assistant secretary from Washington, who was the one delegated to aid the glad tidings. In fact, Pete was one of the three incorporators who had already arranged for a $1,000,000 corporation to work hand in hand with the department of interior and the Bonneville power administration.

For some strange reason, the people of Idaho aren't hearing much about Arnold Williams and George Donat in this campaign, even though they are the Democratic candidates for governor and United States senator, respectively.

It's Leguineche and Glen Taylor who are getting the big play. Leguineche is plumping the state for CVA, Glen Taylor and all the things that are in keeping with Henry Wallace's philosophy. Glen Taylor in turn is waging a strenuous campaign of all... running George Donat for office.

When someone was to be called to Washington to confer with Hannegan and President Truman, it was Leguineche, not the governor, nor the Democratic state chairman.

When someone was to confer with the United Nations council at Lake Success, N. Y., and bring back a report on the condition of agriculture at home and abroad, it probably should have been the governor. But again, it was Leguineche.

The remote controllers of the Idaho Democratic campaign apparently are much more interested in Leguineche than they are in carrying the state ticket or in electing a Democratic governor.

Why?

After a year of wrestling with the problems of reconversion, the combined efforts of congress, the White House and various bureaus have left the country with no consistent, workable stabilization policy. The result is not only exasperating, but discouraging.

First came the long, unsettled period in which price controls were more or less maintained while the lid was taken off wages. Things became more chaotic when the price control act expired and congress finally patched up a new one which was neither fish, flesh nor good red herring—as the saying used to be when those scarce commodities were abundant.

Then with the maritime strike, the country found the wind blowing from another quarter. Now prices were being allowed to rise while an effort was made to hold down wages—just the opposite policy of a year ago.

OPA ceilings today are generally higher. But the AFL seamen's unions, which had negotiated pay rises to which the operators were agreeable, found that they were not permitted to get more money than CIO unions were receiving for the same work.

It seemed somehow appropriate that the wage stabilization board had worked itself into a spot where it had the choice of a prolonged strike if the AFL company-unions contracts were not approved, or a new strike by CIO maritime unions if they were.

Here we might quote again those oft-quoted figures on high production, high wages, high employment, high this-and-that, and give credit to private management and labor for bringing us so far along the road to normal existence in spite of the confusion.

And we might safely predict that neither private management, labor nor, for that matter, government, can fulfill the idea of government's having a hand in all labor-management negotiations.

Yet it is evident that the maritime strike, like so many strikes before it, was called for and made a striking government to come in and make a ruling and a settlement. So in practice, if continued, would certainly not be consistent with a free economy of private management.

We shall probably have to wait for a new concept to make the job when the political air has cleared. Then let us hope that the various factions in Washington will unite on an intelligent and workable plan of stabilization, or else take the only sensible alternative of casting off all restrictions and hoping that things will work themselves out through our traditional, time-tested peace-time methods.

A home-management specialist says that six tons of dishes are washed each year by the average housewife. After being left in the sink how long?

TUCKER'S NATIONAL WHIRLIGIG

CONSERVATIVE—The Truman-Wallace-Byrnes facade over the American attitude toward Russia related foreign policies has encouraged Republican hopes of a presidential triumph in 1948, but the Democrats are in a less optimistic mood.

use to the character of pietistic, church-going, timid men, who should understand that such men are not representatives of labor but leaders, responsible to their subjects and ruthless in their brutality to the innocent man.

It is such a pity that such men should be in the position of their official dignity. For I will not deny myself the right to accuse them of failure in their own responsibility. In the presence of notorious and dangerous conditions the moral leader should stand firm, his spiritual protest, instead of the mere finding too many in the line to yield the protection of their friends merely because they go to church.
