Thus far in its o the United Nations Thus far in its existence the United Nations has been concerned chiefly with the "how" of international relations. This is a highly important activity, yet in a way it is also mementary and superficial. For international relations cannot be enduringly cordial until their "what" and "why" have been examined with respect to the billions of people affected be them.

The ultimate purpose of the United Nations

(b) utent. The uilfmate purpose of the United Nations comes right down to the individual human beings who occupy this planet. In the world's councils they seem generally to be thought of and referred to in buik, when they are con-aldered at all. They are the common man, the masses, the prolestrait, what you will. Yet U.N., however much it may generalize, cannot ignore that uilfmate purpose, which is that man shall be permitted to live out his days in peace, and that governments shall give legal, economic and social heip in mini-miting his fears and promoling his happiness. The U.N. has faced this fundamental issue y appointing a commission must proceed from the simple declaration of the U.N. charter that one purpose of the United without disticting as to respect for human rights and for fundamental freedoms for all without disticting as to respect in human rights and tor fundamental freedoms for all without disticting as to respect in human rights and tor fundamental freedoms for all without disticting as to respect in human rights and tor fundamental freedoms for all without disticting as to respect in human rights and tor fundamental freedoms for all without disticting as to respect in human rights and tor fundamental freedoms for all without disticting as to respect in human rights and tor fundamental freedoms for all some for the sample down for all the forman for human factor and the sample distiction as the respect in human factor and formation for human fractor for all the formation for the sample distiction as to respect in human formation and formation for human factor for all the formation for all the formation for the sample distiction as to respect in human formation and formation for human formation for all the formation formation for all the formation for all the formation for all the formation for all the formation formation for all the formation formation for all the formation formation formation formati thout distinction as to race, sex, language

Without distinction as to face, sex, language or religion." This declaration must be defined and made specific. The difficulties connected with the task are all too apparent. They begin with the various answers to the question: What are human rights and fundamental freedoms?

human rights and fundamental freedoms? Each nation has its anyrer, complicated by many considerations. Tradition, culture and religion affect it. 30 drittion, culture and religion affect it. 30 drittion, culture dependent of natural resources. What are the human rights dya Chilean farm worker, an Arab nomad-a Chilean farm worker, an Arab nomad-a Chilean farm worker, an Arab nomad-a Chilean Mant are the fundamental freedoms of an American industrialita, a Russka mechanic, a Javanese plantation hand, a Spanish fisher-man?

man? And how far will the U.M. go in "encourag-ing respect" for these rights? What, for ex-ample, will it do about the religious distinction of caste in India? What about the "funda-mental freedoms" of Jew and Arab to occupy the homeland of Palestine? What about punishment for political opposition to a dictator-ship? What of the disfranchised in a free ship? What of the disfranchised in a tree democracy? These are some of the issues on which pence depends. Worldwide treedom of reponsible, constructive human action seems impossibly utopian. So do worldwide justice and fair opportunity and decent living conditions. So, does worldwide pence, which is impossible without these other conditions. Their achievement, then, will have to be attempted, hopeless though the task may seem. Perhaps the attempt will suggest a method already apparent. In a recent speech Warren Austin spoke of two articles of the U. N. charter as being "definitive and unequivocal—they are the law." But, with all respect for the distin-guished American delegate's learning, are they?

they? Is not the charler an agreement, which on occasion can be broken by certain govern-ments through use of the veto? It scarcely can be called law when there is no central authority capable of enforcing it. If, with time and experience, such an authority should evolve from the U.N., then perhaps the utopian goals of worldwide liberty, equality and security may become visible.

OVERLOOKED VIRTUES

OVERLOOKED VIRTUES The reasons behind proposed legislation to ban industry wide collective bargaining are apparent. The country airendy has seen what thappens when bargaining breaks down in basic industries like coal and steel and in-dustry wide sirkes are called. But recent days have shown the country mother aspect of the controvery. An indus-try-wide agreement in the construction field has set up machinery for voluntary settle-ment of disputes without strikes. By mutual greement contracts have been extended in a large segment of the ateel industry field ensitive aims the entire industry. There is also the intricate task of simplify-field by the strike in the New York dress-making establishments, which con-stitute aims the entire industry. This work, which has removed the threat of a lot of potential dispute, has virtually been compiled in the United States Steel corpora-tion and agreed to in principle by the other big companies.

The nation needs protection from the econ omic paralysis of nation-wide strikes in key industries. This should not, however, prevent ar wipe out the protection, given by industry-wide afforts to settle troubles peaceably.
