WASHINGTON, March 18 (AP)—Gen. Jacob L. Devers, army ground force commander, announced today he has abolished the insignia that have been shouldered by individual units since World War I.

He said the change was necessary to foster an increased ground force esprit de corps.

The abolished insignia were used by armored, amphibian and airborne units, anti-aircraft, artillery, and other units that were assigned to any particular division. They will be replaced by the army ground force shoulder patch.

Troops that are part of a division continue to wear individual division shoulder patches.

National guard and organized reserve corps divisions will continue to wear their shoulder insignia. National guard troops will wear a strip with the name of the state or territory below the normal division insignia, to be removed when they enter federal service.

SPORTS

Some of the "ifs" in the argument of this area's pleasant supply may be created by the systematic court that Mel Ertson, as president of the Southern Idaho Fish and Game association, has embarked on. It's a five-year affair that provides for a check in the spring, after the next-a-half before and after the hunting season.

The four-time yearly court will be made in the southwest 20 acres of each of the 17 town sites in Twin Falls township.

Accompanied by his brother, Rulon, and Morris Lund, state upland bird culturist, Ertson began the check last week. He held a Yolo State certificate.

"We worked only 10 of the 17 areas mapped out," Ertson stated, "because in seven of them we could see that there was no cover there at the present time and of course they would not be a habitat of the birds now."

"However, we found 70 birds on the 10 that we worked and of these 17 were males, which is an excellent average."

"Following the seven areas that were passed up, this made an average of a bird to every 102 acres."

The game association chief said that Lund was every 102 acres of the bird's habitat.

Ertson warned hunters not to become overly optimistic as a result of the findings.

"We'll not really know whether the pheasant flocks are improving or deteriorating for at least two years after and after many more surveys," he concluded.

AND THAT'S THAT FOR NOW, except: Principle John D. Flint hopes to come out of Idaho High School Athletic association's meeting to be held here March 28 with the state basketball tournament. . . . It's in baseball here the principle's advice heart home, because he was quite a star during his student days.

Another winner was Triste, owned by Leonard Patton, Burley, which finished first in the derby. ## Tired Othman Dropping Use Of Novel Pen

By FREDERICK C. OTTHMAN
WASHINGTON, March 16 (UP)—The honeymoon is over between Othman and that post-war wonder, the ball-point fountain pen. I have bought three pen nibs for a nickel and a bottle of black ink for a hopeful insurance agent contributor (a nib and a bottle of ink) and I have thrown my atom pen away for good. I have written in my instrument into the lake, if a mermaid finds one there, she's well come. Probably just what she needs for writing underwater love notes.

When the first of the ball pens hit the shops about a year ago, I rushed down with my $12.50. I bought a pen, a cylinder of shining aluminum, a thing of beauty, guaranteed to write at least two years on callio, on callings up and down on the floors of swimming pools. It was a wonder pen. Only thing it wouldn't do was write on plain dry writing paper. I nursed this great invention. I held it under my chin. I shook it. I poked it. And it squirmed me finally with the consistency of warm glue.

Gels New Model
The man wouldn't give me back my money. He gave me a new, improved model, which was much better. It wrote fully half the time, and only left every other word a blank. On long words, like onomatopoeia, of course, it stalled in the middle. Long, weary, ink-stained months passed by. I tossed my super pen in the drawer with the drawn out light fuses, the used bottle caps, and the rent receipts. One hundred and two rival makes of ball pens now were on the market. The manufacturer of mine kept putting out new models at reduced prices, the latest at $1.25. I wasn't having any.

Falls for New One
Soon I was reading about a new kind of ball bearing pen with homogenized action and a gold-plated cap, which wrote and wrote, smoothly, like a pearl rolling down a velvet dress (with Lane, Turner inside). After months, or maybe years of this effortless writing, the literature, said all I had to do was pay 50 cents for a tube of ink. This screwed in with a minimum of fuss. I could wear white kid gloves while doing the job. Price: $18, including tax. I bought one. It was superb. It was magnificent. It was the easiest writing pen I ever owned.

Wordless on Checks
For eight weeks I transferred my thoughts to paper with a minimum of fuss. I did not give up until I was about to sign my name to a check for $54 for three gold fillings. The dentist lent me an old-fashioned pen to finish the job. I bought a 50-cent filler for my fancy pen and nothing happened. The man said maybe the factory had forgotten the ink. He gave me another. It seemed to have some ink in it some of the time, because again I had a pen that wrote half the time. My investment now in wonder pens was $31.

More Interesting
Eventually the manufacturer produced a new model inside of transparent plastic, so the customers could see the ink. I spent another 50 cents and my pen wrote as beautifully as it ever did. For four days it performed like a thoroughbred. Then it ran dry. I spent another 50 cents and this time my pen lasted almost a week.

The writing instrument of the 21st century now is into me $22 worth and it isn't a case of the original cost, but the upkeep. I am a little discouraged. I wish I could write golden words so I could afford to use my tomorrow's pen today.
