DIRECT PRESIDENTIAL PRIMARIES

In the 157 years since the constitution was ratified, four amendments have been passed which affected the methods or participants of national elections. The 12th amendment made the office of vice president subject to election, rather than giving it to the losing candidate in the race for President. The 15th candidate in the race for President. The 15th amendment gave the vote to Negro eltizens; the 17th provided for poplar election of senators; the 18th legalized woman suffrage. Now Senator Langer of North Dakota has proposed another change. He-would give the people the privilege of selecting candidates for President and vice-president through direct national primaries conducted by both major parties.

In the rush of recent events, Mr. Langer's suggestion hasn't caused much popular exclument. Yet it is sound enough to merit wide

In the rush of recent events, Mi. Mangalan suggestion hasn't caused much popular excitiment. Yet it is sound enough to merit wide discussion.

The biggest, most obvious advantage of the proposal would be to remove the chance for bosses or small political groups to frustrate the people's will. This is not the rule, but it has been done.

Theodore Roosevelt's defeat in the 1912 Republican convention was pretty clearly a defeat for rank-and-file sentiment. Warren G. Harding emerged from the fog of a smoke-filled room as a boss-picked Republican candidate in 1920. There is reason to believe that Al Bmith, not John W. Davis, was the popular Democratic choice in 1924, Ity, fact, Wendell Willike's nomination is about the only recent example of direct public hinders of the sentiment of the preddential primary might give some voice to the impotent and wirtually disfranchised Republican minority in the South As it is now, the votes of southern delegations to the Republican conventions are numerically important and politically powerless. They can be also be a subjected on the supplication of the proposal naturally have been raised. It has been said that primaries would give no clear majority to one candidate. REPEAT PERFORMANCE ABROAD

Henry A. Wallace, now visiting England, was asked his tangible remedy for present world ills. "We must make it clear," he answered, "that American power will be used to encourage productivity for the benefit of the common man, rather than to divide the world in two."

That seems to us neither very tangible nor very specific. It will please those who find funfailing delight in Mr. Wallace.

very specific. It will please those who find unfailing delight in Mr. Wallace's repetitive theme song about Mr. Wallace's common man. But how should we make this clear? Mr. Wallace doesn't say.

theme song about Mr. Wallace's common man. But how should we make this clear? Mr. Wallace doesn't say. Because Mr. Wallace is vague doesn't mean, however, that he is simply an ungracious guest, like England's Prof. Harold Lack! was in America. Mr. Wallace is a popular figure with many supporters in the Labor party. He accuses Mr. Atllee and Mr. Bevin of war mongering, as he does Mr. Truman and Mr. Marshall at home. And in doing so he echoes the criticism of many Laborites against their government's policy toward Russia. It seems a pity that Mr. Wallace has never sat at a conference table with Mr. Stalin or Mr. Molotov and been subjected to the pressure of their bludgeoning diplomacy. He might then find, as other American negotiators obviously have discovered, that a firm stand against present Russian tactics is the only alternative to a complete capitulation to Russia's insistent demands.

FINAL AUTHORITY

We were beginning to think that John L. Lewis was probably the most powerful in-dividual in these United States, when he up and lost his argument with the supreme court.

And just when we had about concluded that the high court was the ultimate in unassailable authority, one of its members, Associated Justice Frank Murphy, lost an argument with a traffic cop.

Sontiebow, this last incident seems to restore a familiar and normal balance of power. We feel decidedly better about the whole thing.

a Choice Spot for Dairying DELOFEX DAIRYING is Big Business in Idaho! Two of this state's many creameries are rated as the nation's largest; much of the West's butter, cheese and evaporated milk comes from İ Idaho. But, for all its bigness, Idaho's Dairy industry is the sum total of thousands of farmers who find here the fertile soil, abundant water and climetic conditions which make Dairying a most profitable enterprise. In fact, Dairying provides Idaho's farmors with their largest cash crop. Bohemian O Because of its sparkling flavor and hon-rich goodness, wide fame has come to another product of Idaho industry-Becr
