TUCKER'S NATIONAL WHIRLIGIG

WASHINGTON—Now that President Eisenhower has submitted most of his major program to congress, Republican members facing reelection next fall feel more friendly to the man in the White House. Despite differences over farm bills, they believe the health and social welfare benefits he promises will effect their return to capitalistic life.

Their attitude is reflected in the additional ballot box boost to his proposals, the leaders on both sides have agreed to delay the effective date of insurance of the welfare state's expansion until the eve of the November voting. By holding prolonged hearings, each striving for liberal discussion on the floor, it will not be difficult to stall legislative passage.

The present strategy contemplates fixing Oct. 1, the beginning of the third quarter, as the date for passing out politico-economic favor. Thus, only a month before the polls they will be according to the theory, be grateful to the GOP for increased social security payments, minimum wages, unemployment compensation and finally government-financed medical insurance system.

MAY INSIST ON EXCISE TAX CUTS—In addition to these vote getting grants and Democrats probably will insist on such reduction of excise taxes when they expire a few months hence. They will also maintain firm support prices at their present levels, or only slightly below that figure. They will take no chance on losing the farm vote.

Recent polls have indicated the Republicans would lose at least 40 house seats. If elected, they would hold a majority in the lower chamber. They also suggest that a similar turnover in the senate might be possible. In view of the fact that there are still difficulties in obtaining general agreement to the plan for sharp disarray.

BIAS DISAGREEMENT—Mr. Eisenhower's economic advisers and their collegiate colleagues disagree sharply and angrily over present and prospective farm bills. The administration has been told to downplay their regard as healthy and corrective, and then a rebound. Associated with them in this belief are politicians generally and such industrialists as Henry Ford.

The classical students maintain that the United States is heading for a serious and dangerous decline, and that the signs are unmistakable. They demand more radical safeguards than the administration has erected. The principal spokesman for this school are Sen. Paul H. Douglas, I., former professor of economics at the University of Chicago, and the former president of the Congress of Industrial Organizations.

All these groups have a political rather than a definite bread-and-butter interest in the problem of debt. They are in the market for the money they will lose only their reputations or possibly their positions at Washington. The Republicans would lose if the "New Deal" might be defeated in 1936, if they "miss the boat."

TYCOONS CAN'T AGREE—But two organizations cannot agree to be wrong. They would like to see their share. They are the nation's leading mail order houses, Sears, Roebuck and company and Montgomery Ward. These two companies are the only ones of their kind, since they have such large rural markets. But their conclusions offer no sure guide, for they differ more completely than the public and private economists.

Sewell Avery, Montgomery Ward head, has anticipated a depression for almost five years. He has cut property investment by about 18 per cent and inventory. Sears, Roebuck, on the other hand, has increased cash and government security holdings from 50 to 200 million. He was nothing to banks. He has kept liquid. He has not taken an opposite course.

Robert E. Wood has increased plant and equipment by almost 50 per cent, and inventories by one-third. Sales are going up on all lines. He has cut down on his five years under study. Sears' holdings of cash and federal bonds rose from 120 to 170 million dollars. But on Jan. 1, 1935, Sears owned 200 million dollars in government securities.

When two such tycoons disagree, what is the average man to do?

NEW ATOMIC DIRECTION

With the launching of the submarine Nautilus the atomic age turns in a new direction.

Heretofore the emphasis has been on the atomic bomb—on destruction—while the Nautilus is itself a symbol of man's dreaming. His bright dreams, certainly, and if man is not dead, his nightmares too.

This in February. But it won't last too long, but while it does last, it is a hunderling! What makes it all the more so is that everyone wants spring weather so bad along about then that they can taste it. In spite of snow!

WHY AFTER DINNER SPEAKERS?

The after-dinner speaker is not going to like us for anything so the sooner we toss overboard this quaint custom of stuffing the Inner Man first and attempting to listen to the speaker of the evening afterwards the better. We are going to be.

Under the new order the before-dinner speaker will enjoy just as much attention as his academic predecessor, and the speaker who knows exactly when to stop will be the one to get the keys to the kingdom. He will have them sailing out of his hand.

There are serious drawbacks to the system we have suggested. In the first place, one thing does not seem to be known to us as much as a rule to the following of it. We are going to put this in the same way that, but speaking conversationalists are unhelpfully aware, like Glen Taylor Democrats, and the speaker who knows exactly when to stop at these functions, either from the telling or the plot.

Let's hear the speaker of the evening before show and the inner life stays on the podium the longer he stays on the podium the longer he stays on the podium.

By switching the arrangement we automatically have a common table-top—his speech and everybody can hear it over while they eat. As far as we are concerned, the after-dinner speaker is a thing of the past after dinner speakers make this pretty easy to do.

Next time you attend a function hold the speaker up. If he does not, let him continue telling falling his hat on his head and let him go. If he does, let him and enjoy his meal in peace after. The Shirley Heist.

GO DWELL IN IT!

The guy at the Smithsonian Trust Department can roll over and go back to sleep now. It may be he never actually woke up. That business of Es-dah-how being interpreted for the mean "River Dweller" is a lot of you-know-what! The learned gentleman may go dwell in the river if he wants to. At any rate, should he desire to jump in it, I for one, would be willing to give him plenty of assistance.

The accepted interpretation of Es-dah-how was made a good many years ago and probably before the birth of Es-dah-how. It must have been decided while there were still plenty of Indians around to dispute it if it had been wrong.

All right, let the Indians' word for it. As for the learned gent at Smithsonian, methinks he speaks with a forked tongue.

CONSUMERS NEED AID

The political sagas are pretty well agreed that in a voting year the farmer, whose voting potential is concentrated to powerful effect in a number of states, will get more attention from congress than the consumer.

We're all consumers, of course, and consequently the farmer total a much smaller segment of the population. But they are organized for political action through many national federations. Their influence upon the making of laws is direct and immediate.

And the results of past elections have demonstrated to trembling politicians that farmers' strength at the polls is no myth. Their uprising against the Republicans in 1948 is widely credited with accomplishing the victory of former president Truman.

Similarly, consumers have to be greatly aroused before they make their numbers felt at the polls. They did in 1946, when they severely rebuked the "big meat controls." Yet normally the "petition" is not sufficient to cement them as a voting force.

Perhaps they would be more stirred than they are in this election year if they really understood what the existing farm program costs them.

As farm price supports work, they keep prices high at a triple cost to the consumer. The guaranteed price is a subsidy to the farmer. If the market price falls below the government will pay the farmer for the excess in one charge.

But by supporting the price, the government also forces the citizen to pay more for things in the market. So he pays once as taxpayer and again as consumer.

Is that all? Not quite. The surplus which the market can't absorb has to be stored. And it takes 14 million dollars each month out of the taxpayer's pockets to cover the storage charge on huge supplies of grain, cotton butter and eggs the government buys from over-producing farmers.

The farmers may deserve some protection of their government, for they are in a hazardous business. But the present system, with its triple penalty on the consumer-taxpayer, is costly, wasteful and impractical.

Farmers know it in their hearts, but they cling to it because they fear the unknown. Politicians know it, and they understand, too, that in the end it is up to them to devise a way to get out of the mess, while still reassuring the farmers.

One wonders how long it will be before congress summons up its courage and frames a program that will give both the farmers and the consumers a break.

ITALY'S CONSERVATIVES

There can be no hiding the gravity of the political situation in Italy. Some of the same timidity which afflicts French politicians seems to hold Italian statesmen in its grip.

The recent fall of Premier Pella's government was an unhappy symptom of this affliction. Pella's regime was intended to be temporary with the intention only that a stronger leader could be found. But he was unable to hang on even that long.

Pella had succeeded Premier De Gasperi, who was weakened by last summer's general elections, and whose government finally collapsed.

Throughout the postwar period De Gasperi, staunch friend of the west, had kept Italy's center parties threaded together in reasonably able effective coalition. Anticipating trouble in maintaining a working majority in the Italian parliament, De Gasperi had jammed through an election reform under which the center would get 65 per cent of the seats if it got 51 per cent of the vote.

In the summer balloting, De Gasperi's Christian Democrat and other center groups appeared, however, to have garnered only 49 per cent of the total. Without the big extra bonus provided in the election law, the center could put together only the most fragile coalition. Not long afterward he gave up.

The irony of this is that it need not have been. For a special election commission has been reconing 1,300,000 ballots challenged by the communists. And on the basis of 700,000 recounts so far, it is reported that De Gasperi government had all allies actually in the election with 52 or 53 per cent majority—more than enough to gain 60 per cent of parliament's seats.

De Gasperi had not pushed the recount at the start, partly because it was feared the communists would be the only gainers. Had he been a little less cautious, he would still be presiding today over a fairly strong Italian government.

Now the great fear is that a new election will be necessary and that, again, the communists will be the only real beneficiaries. Both the left and the right gained at the expense of the center in the July voting.

So Italy's moderate leaders find themselves in a French-style dilemma. They are afraid to face a new voting test, and evidently they are afraid as well to insist that the real results of last year's election be carried out.

Report Insists Spies Worked At Army Fort

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25 (AP)—Joseph R. McCarthy's permanent investigating subcommittee says today very definitely was "espionage" at the army's radar center in Ft. Monmouth, N. J.

In a 55-page annual report on its investigations, the subcommittee said last night that executed atomic spy Julius Rosenberg, Joel Barr and other red agents stole the proximity fuse and similar secrets from the base.

"There is a possibility that some members of the Rosenberg ring may still be employed and in operation" there, the report said. It also alleged that communist spies operated successfully "in other similar places."

But the report did not cite any specific cases of recent spying although McCarthy R. Wm. said in a New York magazine interview last week his group turned up "very recent espionage" at Ft. Monmouth.

The army had said its investigation of security conditions at the big radar center produced no evidence of espionage. Army Secretary Robert T. Stevens conceded, however, that there may have been some during Rosenberg's time, in the mid-1940s.

Panel Proposals Rapped by Solon

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25 (AP)—Sen. E. A. Tamm, D-Md., criticized today the panel proposals for a new economic policy, headed by industrialist Clarence B. Randall, made a number of recommendations, including broadening the Federal Reserve's powers to increase imports and thereby help free nations to earn dollars.

Dwornak told a reporter congress should exercise greater control on foreign trade policies "instead of delegating greater authority to the executive branch."

Report Insists Spies Worked At Army Fort

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25 (AP)—Joseph R. McCarthy's permanent investigating subcommittee says today very definitely was "espionage" at the army's radar center in Ft. Monmouth, N. J.

In a 55-page annual report on its investigations, the subcommittee said last night that executed atomic spy Julius Rosenberg, Joel Barr and other red agents stole the proximity fuse and similar secrets from the base.

"There is a possibility that some members of the Rosenberg ring may still be employed and in operation" there, the report said. It also alleged that communist spies operated successfully "in other similar places."

But the report did not cite any specific cases of recent spying although McCarthy R. Wm. said in a New York magazine interview last week his group turned up "very recent espionage" at Ft. Monmouth.

The army had said its investigation of security conditions at the big radar center produced no evidence of espionage. Army Secretary Robert T. Stevens conceded, however, that there may have been some during Rosenberg's time, in the mid-1940s.

Budge Assails BPA Acts for New Building

BOISE, Jan. 25 (U-P)—Representative Budge, R. Id., says a new office building now going up in Portland to house the headquarters of the Bonneville power administration is being built as a result of "machinations" designed to circumvent the will of congress.

He charged in a letter to Representative Phillips, R. Calif., chairman of a house appropriations subcommittee, that the BPA arranged with the general services administration to have the building constructed after BPA was unable to get congressional consent to the project.

"Elaborate" Structure
Budge described the building as an "elaborate" structure, with an underground parking garage and an "office" for an assembly hall for 500 employees plus numerous and varied conference and consultation rooms.

He placed the cost at $4,000,000. But O. C. Braden, regional director of the GSA, said in Tacoma, Wash., the building would make for more efficient operation of BPA in Portland. He praised its erection as "the result of long-range planning."

Space Leased
He said the interior department now rents or leases some 600,000 square feet of office space in a number of buildings in the city, and that the new building would enable all offices to be concentrated.

Braden said the new building would lead to more efficient operation.

BOISE, Jan. 25 (U-P)—Driver error has been responsible for 300,000 traffic deaths and 10 million injuries throughout the nation during the past 10 years, Harold Davis, state traffic safety director, said today.

The only driver who stands a good chance of escaping accident is the one who is "sportsmanlike, competent and skillful."
