Date Chosen For National U. S. Holiday

WASHINGTON, Sept. 8—In a case you have been wondering, Thanksgiving day comes on Nov. 22 this year, the fourth Thursday in the month.

Sometimes there is confusion when November has five Thursdays as this year.

According to tradition, the fourth Thursday is the day normally proclaimed by presidents ever since George Washington set a Nov. 26, 1789, as the nation's first Thanksgiving day.

Tradition and calendars were altered temporarily when President Franklin D. Roosevelt picked the next-to-last Thursday in November for the holiday. Congress later passed a law specifying Thanksgiving should be celebrated on the fourth Thursday.

President Eisenhower probably will make it official this year with a proclamation in the fall.

Old Colt May Show Way to Golden Cache

PT. HILLY, Kans., Sept. 8—An army aircraft pilot is reported to have found a cache of gold in Colorado this month, spurred on by a map he said was found in an old army pistol.

The 2621 military regiment said the story behind the map goes back to 1923 when his father, a policeman at Mayfield, Ky., attended a convention in St. Louis.

The pilot reportedly was a gun fancier and while at the convention acquired a "thumb pointer"—a collector's item.

About three years later the gun's main-spring broke, the sergeant said, and when his pistol strips were removed to replace the spring the map was discovered—etched on the inside of one of the strips. On the other strip was the name of a Colorado river where the gold is supposed to be buried.

"We checked with the county clerk in Colorado," the sergeant said, "and were told that there is still a ranch by that name at that location, a number of miles from the fairly large town, also referred to on the map."

The sergeant said the map is detailed and gives the exact footage from four prominent landmarks on the ranch. An "X" on the map with the word "gold" printed underneath marks a spot on the map, he added.

The date of March 18, 1894, is registered on the map, he added.

Successor for Jurist Minton Is Not Known

WASHINGTON, Sept. 8—Washington sources had almost no idea today as to who will succeed Justice Sherman Minton on the U. S. supreme court bench.

Minton announced his retirement effective Oct. 15, yesterday, saying he no longer felt physically able to do the kind of work that position demands. "The official reaction obviously was one of surprise.

Among the first names to crop up as potential successors were those of former Gov. Thomas E. Dewey of New York and Atty. Gen. Herbert Brownell. But informed sources indicated neither is a likely prospect.

The resignation gives President Eisenhower his third opportunity to name a supreme court justice. His previous selections have been Chief Justice Warren and Justice Harlan.

By retaining instead of resigning, Minton will be eligible to serve on U. S. circuit and district courts. He is qualified for a $35,000 a year pension.

THE OPPOSITION SPEAKS

Judging from the number and nature of protests at the hearing in Wendell, Friday, a battle royal is in store for those seeking to reopen Niagara and Crystal springs in Snake river north of Huhl.

Attorneys representing Northside Communities, Inc., the Jerome, Wendell, Gooding and Twin Falls Chambers of Commerce, the state fish and game department, the Northside Food and Gun club, the Idaho Outdoor association, the Idaho Game and Fish commission, the Idaho Forestry and individuals already having established rights to small amounts of water from these springs, brought out a number of reasons why an application to develop the springs in question should be denied.

The state fish and game department, representing northside communities, stressed the importance of this area in question as a recreational center and scenic attraction with great potentialities. It was brought out how extensively the Niagara and Crystal springs are being used for such purposes, particularly by fishermen, picnickers and such organizations as the Boy Scouts.

From cross examination of witnesses representing the development company, it was apparent that the preliminary engineering is far from complete in many important respects and there was little evidence to establish financial responsibility for the proposed project.

Two points in themselves made it all the more objectionable to the opposition that they thought of destroying the springs should be considered under the circumstances.

The development company's petition, however, failed to show the proper character of the springs, and that the company's intention was to use the water for irrigation purposes, failed to show a plan of how the two springs would appear after the water had been diverted, failed to show a provision for the sale of water to the persons owning and being irrigated, and that once the two springs are developed, they will be purchased by the state for development into a recreational area.

A subsequent motion proposed that the hearing at least be continued to some later date at which time the company should be expected to submit detailed information lacking in the present application.

Answer: Mr. A's penetrating analysis of the subject about the so-called "newsmen" of the presidential candidates. There has, certainly, been a great transformation in either Eisenhower or Stevenson.

Life in MAGIC VALLEY

Many spectators at a county fair, like the Twin Falls fair that ended Saturday, would have a difficult time estimating or understanding the amount of livestock that entered exhibits in the Twin Falls fair but the exhibits shown to the public were only the results, not the long hours of work and study that made them possible.

Members of livestock clubs really work at their projects. But they're not alone in their struggles. Donald F. Youts, assistant county agent, claims the success of exhibitors at all club depends on the leader of livestock club.

He claims boys probably make the best leaders because they know how to get things done. Leaders, though, are not "punch" your parents. It is their contentment, without the interest, backing and actual work on the part of parents, 4-H clubs would be next to impossible, they claim.

But while Youts and the leaders and the parents are passing the buck as to who is responsible for the success of the program, club members go about the business of fitting animals for show in the fair.

Makes no mistake about it. Preparing an animal for a show at a county fair contains "blood, sweat and tears." Many a crowded truck or skinned animal or worse, has gone into livestock projects. In a few instances, when taken over by a club member, are gentle and tame. Others are not. They come in off the farm, wild-eyed, woolly and hair full of burrs.

Such an animal is not the gentle animal a spectator sees in a show ring. After weeks of care, a club member cannot help but build up a certain amount of affection for the animal.

Then, there's the youth who has worked and worked on an animal which has gone through the rigors which do not measure up to par. Have you ever seen a small boy or girl with tear-stained face, chin, and lips; reassuring the animal that even though it failed to get a blue ribbon, the animal still is the best in the world?

The end of a fair marks the beginning of another project. It is then the livestock club member begins to lay plans for next year. Some raise their own projects, others acquire them from their parents and a few go into the open market.

But no matter how the animals are acquired, the aim of each member is the same, to make his animal the best in the next round. These 4-H livestock members own their own animals. They have to pay for their keep and have to care for them day-in and day-out throughout the year.

"But it's worth it," as one parent expressed at the fair this year. "The kids learn more from the animals than the animals do from the kids."

The 19 clubs that showed at the Twin Falls fair this year, together with their leaders, were: The Creek Livestock and Homemakers club, Nash Brackett; Salmon Tract Livestock club, David Chadwick and Harlan Fenderson; Junior Blacksmiths of Buhl, Ivan Gorman; County Cousins, TWIN FALLS, Tom Hines; FLEET, Fourteen Livestock club, Carl Leonard; Sally Pierce and Jeanette Brann; Top Trip Livestock club, Harry Williams and Rex Lancaster.

Members-Capsin; Junior Livestock club, K. DEWILL; High Nelson, Lisa Nelson and LeRoy Nelson; Twin Falls Agricultural 4-H club, Mrs. Lawrence Peterson and Mrs. Lewis Clark; Bettle, Fedora and Filbert, F. V. Morrison; Shamrock Livestock club, Ralph Olmstead; Stamen Blackhawk, Walter Shands and Gerald Kimplina.

CATTLEPOD Progressive Livestock club, Nils Casten and Jim Harding; Northview Livestock club, Ralph Hart and Warren Hart; Chalfont Livestock club, Earl Hildreth, Mrs. John Barrell, Mrs. Edward Wright and Joy Weaver; Sunnyvale Livestock club, Frank Southwick; Palmyre Farmers and Pioneers, Mrs. Rudolph Peterson, and Fred and Preston of Buhl, William Wain.

Mrs. Adeline Pines, HAGERMAN, who has been a patient in the Elks rehabilitation center, Boise for four months, returned home last week and was pleased to find her many flower beds had been weeded and cleaned.

"The Peace Jesus Gives"

By GLEN W. HUTTON
(Pastor, First Christian Church)

I was on a great ocean liner in the north Pacific, standing into the Gulf of Alaska. We had just finished dinner and darkness was fast falling upon the mountains of water all about us. My room steward helped me to the deck and I drew my overcoat close about me as I faced the north wind.

"The air was full of water as the wind seemed to catch each wave and haul it at our ship. Only momentarily could we see beyond the mountainous waves all about us. Then the ship was lifted as if by some magic and I saw a light flash and asked the steward, "What was that?"

He replied, "It's a danger signal on one of the treacherous rocks in these waters."

"Are there rocks here?" I asked.

"Yes," he said, "this is a graveyard for ships and many of them have gone down in this part of the sea."

We stood for a few more minutes, watching for the light, but it never

Jerome Writer Finds Solution To Problem of Traffic Deaths

Editor, Times-News:
 "People will not slow down to save their lives, or their children from an auto wreck, but they will slow down to save their driver's license."
 "I am sure the governor of Connecticut in his recent Saturday Evening Post article 'How We Cut Our Auto Death Rate' did it by reducing the speed limit to 35 miles an hour. I will take the driver's license away from every driver, no exceptions, for 30 days who exceed that rate.
 "There is the answer for Idaho. We have got enough guts to advocate and back up such a drastic action in Idaho."
 "Can't you just hear the anguished wail of the mother who says 'Are they crazy? Why I can drive faster at 45 miles on a good road than some drivers at 35?'"
 "The Connecticut drive is based on a very simple premise. Out of 125 deaths in 12 months, 58 were attributed to speeding. Remember the street signs we heard here about how Idaho was going to reduce the cause of more deaths on roads?
 "I am our governor and legislature, and have the nerve to push through and enforce such a good limit just to save lives, cut-up lives, lives and heads and feet?
 "How about our safety council? I'm thinking about our own Governor's committee. I would not want a member in it to favor such an amendment."
 "OK, here it is. It works there with many other traffic laws. Dare we try it in Idaho?"

Executive Board Meeting Planned

BOZEMAN, Sept. 8—The first full PTA executive board meeting will be held at 7 p.m. Wednesday at the Lincoln school auditorium.
 Plans will be made for a luncheon reception at the unit meeting on Sept. 11.
 Following the executive meeting, a workshop will be held with units from Shoshone, Blackfoot, Dietrich and Carey invited to attend.
 The meeting will be held in the PTA building, which is located on the corner of 1st and 2nd streets.
 The seven relatively complete manuscripts and upwards of 600 fragments of scrolls found in the caves are unquestionably authentic. They were written by ancient Jewish monks during the period approximately 200 B. C. to 70 A. D.
 The scrolls were part of the ancient religious library and include fragments of virtually every known book of the Hebrew (old testament) Bible, with the possible exception of Esther. One is a nearly complete manuscript of the book of Isaiah which is about 1,000 years older than the earliest version previously available.
 There are only slight differences in the scrolls compared with documents previously used as a basis for translating the old testament.
 The Jews of that day looked for the coming of a Messiah. But there is no clear evidence that they regarded their "teacher of righteousness" as a savior or that he made claim to divinity.
 Speculation that the "teacher of righteousness" may have been crucified cannot be supported by any scroll text.
 The scrolls did not proclaim that the teacher had overcome death and returned in the power of the spirit to his followers.
 The possibility of protracted controversy diminished sharply this summer when Dupont-Sommer himself "clarified" his views.
 "I never claimed that the Dead Sea Scrolls could strike a blow against the 'uniqueness' of Jesus," he said. "I believe that the scrolls do not deny the divinity of Jesus (even in the sense of son of God incarnate)." In the general sense, viewed as a whole, the originality of the Christian church seems to me to be unquestionable.

Tests Disclose Factors to Aid, Insulate Against Delinquency

DETROIT, Sept. 8—A factor which "insulates" a boy against delinquency has been discovered, an Erie State university research team believes.
 The factor: "a young teen-ager's belief in himself as a 'good boy'."
 The findings of a year-long study were based on 125 ninth-grade boys who were selected by school teachers as either delinquent or as expected to become so even though they live in the highest delinquency area of Columbia.
 Reported Dr. Walter C. Backus, professor of social administration: "We felt that if we could determine what makes a good boy tick, then perhaps we might be able to get something with delinquency prevention."
 Earlier research in the field, he said, had dealt chiefly with the traits and background of "bad" boys.
 A series of self-evaluation tests given to the selected 125-year-olds and interviews with their mothers indicated in the research team that the boys regarded themselves as "self-assertive and obedient."
 The boys' answers also showed that a report was filed on each child, whether about right and wrong than a 200-ton stockpile of coal. It cost about $100, which the complete cost is still being worked out.

Report Given on Costs of Project

SHOENON, Sept. 8—At a meeting of the city council this week, a report was filed on cost of other projects for the recent war on social roads.
 "The slings program cost $100,000," reported the city engineer.
 "A 200-ton stockpile of coal cost about $100, which the complete cost is still being worked out."

Traditional Religious Beliefs Aren't Challenged by Scrolls From Dead Sea

WASHINGTON, Sept. 8—Leading scholars are now convinced that the famous Dead Sea Scrolls will have very little, if any, effect on traditional religious beliefs.
 The sensational theory that these ancient manuscripts might shake the foundations of Christian faith in the divinity of Jesus Christ has been rejected by an overwhelming majority of competent authorities. It recently was repudiated even by the French scholar, Andre Dupont-Sommer, who originated it.
 Dupont-Sommer, a former Catholic priest who left the church, set off a sharp controversy by tracing parallels between the new testament story of Jesus and the career of a "teacher of righteousness" mentioned in some of the scrolls dated more than a century before the birth of Christ.
 The French scholar's views were given wide circulation in this country last year in Minuteman, Wilson's bestselling book. "The Scrolls Proved the Dead Sea 'Wildcat' right—and a number of Unitarian clergymen and other 'religious liberals' agreed that the scrolls challenged the uniqueness of Jesus."
 Protestant and Catholic scholars who worked on the scrolls raised a strong protest against this interpretation. They said the parallel between the scrolls and the career of a "teacher of righteousness" mentioned in some of the scrolls dated more than a century before the birth of Christ.
 The same verdict was expressed by Catholic Miss. Patrick W. Stebbins, director of the American School of Oriental Research in Jerusalem. Samuel Sandmel of Cincinnati, agreed that the scrolls "had been" recorded a fantastic welcome entirely out of proportion to their significance." He said he could find nothing to indicate "any need to reconsider or revise any theories about Christian origins."
 The possibility of protracted controversy diminished sharply this summer when Dupont-Sommer himself "clarified" his views.
 "I never claimed that the Dead Sea Scrolls could strike a blow against the 'uniqueness' of Jesus," he said. "I believe that the scrolls do not deny the divinity of Jesus (even in the sense of son of God incarnate)." In the general sense, viewed as a whole, the originality of the Christian church seems to me to be unquestionable.

Trip Over Dollarhide Summit Famed for Scenery

To take the trip over Dollarhide summit, turn east at Ketchum on back, such as the one shown here just below the summit, are easy, despite appearance. This hairpin switchback makes a turn of 45 degrees. Although no speedway, the road is in good condition, but requires careful driving. (Blair photo-courtesy)

has not yet been found. A short distance farther on is another lake. This one can be seen from the road. It is smaller than Dollar lake and, like the former, has no visible inlet. Water from the lake flows into Warm Springs creek. Fishing here is quite good since the surface does not freeze over solidly in the winter. Evidence of last winter's snow slides, trees carried down from the mountain, can be seen from the road. To the right, another mile is the bridge, now closed, which led to a large CCC camp. Billings in a meadow about a mile farther on and to the left of the road is the only remnant of what once was a large fish-pond. In the creek below is one of the trout bands which encircled the wheel. An ore and slack separation mill stood at the mouth of Westford. A short distance away, and many years ago, mines for many miles around brought their ore here to be "traged" or separated from the worthless rock. A short distance to the left is Basalt gulch at the mouth of which is the mill of the Sun Valley Lead and Silver company. Three miles farther on is a Prechman's bend. Here some of the largest snow slides occur. The bend was named for an old French prospector who lived there for many years. A mile farther up is the Crony cove and the Warfield hot springs. Right on the mountain, with a crossy zig-zag road to reach it, is the Silice Kitten mine, not working at present. And in another mile is Red Warrior creek, and then another, Rooks creek. Up Rooks creek the Boston-Idaho mine was worked for many years. In a snow slide in 1910 a man and horse were covered and killed in a snow slide at the mine. For the next four miles a creek runs into Warm Springs creek every mile. They are the Thompson, Caulie and Piacier creeks. Off to the

There is no stable inlet and no outlet. Many years ago August Farnham, pioneer settler in Ketchum, dug a tunnel from the lake to irrigate some of his land downstream. While this man-made outlet is visible, it is no longer used. The water is always fresh but fish do not come in the lake since the water freezes completely over during the winter. Beaver, however, are plentiful. Soundings have been made to some depth in this lake but the bottom places in the world—a short way up the Warm Springs road, to the left and down in the creek bottom; is the Warm Springs ranch where fishermen who haven't had very good luck may go to catch their limits and turn and try them. For the next one and one-half miles the road passes through the slopes of Bald mountain. During the skiing season buses drive from the road down to the creek bottom to pick up water and return them to the lift at the foot of the mountain. Along Warm Springs creek there are many summer cabins. One belongs to Mr. and Mrs. Carl Brant who own the hot springs rights which, for many years, have furnished water for the plunge and hotel. The Bald mountain is piped to the lift at the foot of the mountain. Next is Dollar lake, which you won't know is there unless you get out and walk around a large part of the ground. Between this hill and the mountain to the lake, about 200 feet across no matter how it is measured.

Around Mountain Loop

This is one trip that gets you back to where you started from. Blaine county residents call it the "Hailey to Hailey" trip. It takes you over Dollarhide summit and through some of the most beautiful mountainous country in Magic Valley. If you don't want to get back to the place from which you started, just continue on south after reaching Fairfield. (Blair photo-courtesy) right is a hemlock-in creek and with the forest service's telephone line perched crazily above. Then the mountains fall away and the country opens up for several miles, giving a view of great-covered mountains beyond. The foot of the summit is across this clearing and sharp. Last night's weight of snow has "flattened" these peaks until they now are at a 45-degree angle. To the right, across the canyon-heads—can be seen the remains of the Dollarhide mine bunk house and the remains of a road around the steep hillside which only a pack burro could travel. A mile down from the top is a sheep road to the left. Three miles farther on is a sign which reads "Carriage down." A good road which once set out a mile from the road. The remains of a large mill, one log and three board houses and the remains of the town. All around are wild gooseberries, hawberries, elderberries and Oregon grapes. Two miles farther down the road

Hunters Not Only Use Bow and Arrows, They "Manufacture" Them Also

Joe Dolan, expert, one of Magic Valley's leading archery exponents, goes wild pig hunting with a bow and arrow in Arizona every February and seldom fails to bag his game. Dolan holds numerous awards and championships for his skill at the sport. (Staff engraving)

Delvan Hibbert, Cary, is not only skilled in handling a bow and arrow, he also makes his own equipment. Here he uses a "Hibbert tester" to help him judge the balance of a bow. To ascertain the weight of the bow's pull, he uses a scale. (Staff photo-engraving)

Hibbert, in making a bow, spends hours sanding and shaping it. Once he is satisfied with the shape and balance of the weapon he strings it, a delicate task which calls into use seldom used muscles on the back and shoulders. (Staff photo-engraving)

Magic-Valley Hobbies No. 37 History Might Have Been Changed if Indians Had Known How to Make Bows

The history of the west might have been different if Indians had been able to make archery equipment as good as modern bows and arrows. Delvan Hibbert, state fish and game department employe at Carey, and archery enthusiast, maintains, "At best, he claims, it would have taken quite men longer to quell them. Hibbert and Joe Dolan, Rupert, are two of the leading archery exponents in Magic Valley. Both are bow and arrow big game hunters and each kept in practice by shooting at small game. Dolan's skill with modern "primitive" weapons is attested by his was army of trophies he has won in the last 10 years. Hibbert, in addition to hunting with a bow and arrow, makes his own equipment. Dolan became interested in archery in 1943 and his interest was whetted by the fact he bagged two deer that year. He brought one of them back with a shot between the eyes. (Since then he has shot 10 javalina wild hogs) in Arizona, 15 deer, one rook and "thousands of jackrabbits."

Among the awards he has is the national archery championship. Dolan's record shot of 174 yards, a diamond studded pin for drawing the largest bow in a bow and arrow, National Field Archery Association recognition and instructive wild archer scale championship for 1953. In archery, most people shoot for aiming. In instinctive shooting, the arrow is loosed without aiming. He holds more archery awards than any other archer in the United States. He was Idaho state champion in 1952.

Hibbert became interested in archery while working among the Indians in Wisconsin. A chief presented him with his first bow and arrow and later, at Utah State Agriculture college, he and a group of friends decided to hunting with "primitive" weapons.

For the hunt, Hibbert decided to make his own weapon. His first and second tries were unsuccessful but on the third time around, he made a satisfactory weapon, a bow he still prizes highly.

Bows usually are of two types, straight or recurve. Hibbert says, "A recurve bow is more sensitive and faster to cast but is harder to shoot. Most hunters prefer straight bows. Other types of bows include the long bow and the flat bow. The long bow was used by the early British, while the flat weapon was most popular with the American Indians. Modern archers also use the flat bow. The long bow is made of a single piece of wood that is, almost round and approximately six feet long. A flat bow is wider than it is thick and is more adaptable to changes, the archer explained.

Bows can be made of one piece of wood such as the iron wood bow presented to Hibbert by the Wisconsin Indians. He said such a bow has a pull of approximately 66 pounds but its shooting strength is closer to 32 pounds.

It is because of this fact the Indians' fight against white men was not as effective as it could have been, he maintains.

Bow makers today prefer composite wood when making a bow of only one piece. Bamboo, which is a grass, not a wood, makes excellent bows when pieces are laminated together in layers. Many archers prefer a combination of fiberglass and wood.

certain that each end is perfectly aligned and in balance with the other.

To test the balance of a bow, Hibbert has designed a tilting board which he uses to "cock" the bow so he is able to ascertain, from a distance, where the weapon needs more shaping.

Hibbert also makes all his bow strings. The thread he uses will withstand a three-pound pull. For a 60-pound pull he weaves 20 strands together.

It's more difficult to string a bow than it is to shoot it, Hibbert claims. If a person is not used to the work, every muscle and bone in his back and shoulders will pop and crack before the job is done. And, if care is not exercised, a bow can be broken, he added.

Hunting arrowed look a lot more dangerous than bullets. The ones Hibbert uses are made of fine carbon steel with needle sharp tips and razor sharp blades. They will pass through a 1,000-pound steer and cut at least three inches into green bone.

Arrows kill by permitting an animal to bleed to death. Shock helps to kill when an animal is hit by a bullet. Arrows are designed to make a clean wound. If the wound hits a vital organ, it is fatal in a short time. If the wound is only a flesh wound, it will heal readily, he says.

"Hibbert, no sport can compare to bow and arrow hunting. He likes the idea that a close approach must be made to the animal before an arrow is loosed. Dolan, over in Ru-an arrow he didn't see. The arrow pierced the deer which ran off the archery hunt area onto a general hunt area and was downed in the modern conventional manner.

The hunter who brought the deer down obligingly returned Hibbert's arrow.

Hibbert claims interest in archery

Fox, Shire to Meet Again In Mat Bout

"Professor" Roy Shire, who holds the edge over "Chief" Kit Fox in their matches to date, will tangle again Tuesday evening at Radio Rodeo. This time, however, the grapples will stage an "indian style" bout with their wrists being tied together with a leather thong. From Cuneil will square off against newcomer Jan Madrid in the semi-final bout and Danny D'Rourke and Hardy Kristemp will meet in the one-half preliminary match.

Lullaby Time

The light is over for Larry Bataan of the Philippines, who's making the lower rope for a pillow after taking a knockout right from Mexico City's Bill Macklin in the sixth round of their scheduled 18-round bout at Hollywood, Calif. Macklin took the count. Bataan, who weighed 120, is recognized as bantam champ by the NABA, but it was a non-title fight. Bataan weighed in at 119. (AP wirephoto)

Pascal Continues to Pace Pioneer Batters

The Magic Valley Cowboys have been named by the Boise Braves for the Pioneer league pennant, but the Braves' Bob Pascal is within grabbing distance of the league's individual batting crown. As of last Thursday when the figures were compiled by William J. West, league statistician, Pascal had a mark 10 points ahead of the team's Bob Johnson. Pascal's Mike Coppola has led off out of 23 homers and appears headed for the league homerun championship. Bob Hill, Billings, had 21 victories and is the league's only 20-game winner.

The game's only touchdown came in the second quarter when Malad's Steve Morgan and Jim Dupree turned in some good running efforts. The Bruins made 21 first downs and the Bees made eight. Most of the second half was played on the elder territory and the Twin Falls defense was together in the second half than in the first two quarters. The Box Elder defense did a good job, too, particularly near its own goal line.

Farm Union's U. S. Message Read at Meet

BOZEMAN, Sept. 8—Message of the United States Farmers Union was reviewed by Mrs. Clay Burrows at a meeting of the Twin Falls Farmers Union Wednesday night.

The little over 50 years farm families working together have built Farmers Union into a thriving and powerful organization to champion the rights of family farmers. Their job is not even half done. It will not be done until every farmer gets a fair price for the commodity he produces and can provide his family with a standard of living on a par with other groups in our economy. The job will not be done until rural communities can fully share in the abundance of modern life; the message related.

Mrs. Jessie Danner, at whose home the meeting was held, spoke on organization and legislation.

A county meeting will be held at Bismarck in the near future, says Nancy Pross, county president. The date will be announced later. Pross also reported on the booth at the county fair.

Following the business meeting, Pross showed two films, "Two Blades of Grass" and "What Price Plenty?"

Refreshments were served by Mrs. Danner to 20 members and five guests.
