Standards for Navahos' Life Still Slipping

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 16 (AP)—Testimony by a government witness in the Colorado river suit has disclosed that the standard of living for the Navaho Indians in Arizona is "decreasing" despite the fact the tribe has a cash reserve of 50 million dollars.
William Head of Gallup, N. M., director of the Navaho, Hopi and Zuni reservations, testified in federal court Wednesday in support of the government's case for the Indians' rights in the controversy over Colorado river water.
Principal litigants in the complicated suit are Arizona and California. The government and several other states also have claims to be evaluated by special supreme court Master Simon H. Rifkind.

Welfare Considered
On direct examination by Walter Klech, Jr., department of justice attorney, Head testified Congress was considering welfare measures for the Navahos in an effort to improve their lot.

However Arizona attorney Mark Winner brought out on cross examination the fact that the tribe recently received 33 million dollars for signing gas leases on reservation lands and the natural resources on the reservation included three uranium mines, oil and coal deposits.

Cash Reserve
Head also said under cross examination by California counsel Northcutt Ely the Navahos' cash reserve on deposit with the federal treasury was estimated at 50 million dollars. Head said a large steel processing plant was planned to be located on Indian lands which would produce power "over much of the western part of the United States." He said the ready accessibility of large coal deposits makes the project feasible.

The Indian director estimated the number of Navahos having reservation rights to be about 82,000, but he admitted under cross examination he did not know the number of Indians who actually live on the reservation.

Head explained that even if an Indian left the reservation he was still considered a member of the tribe and entitled to all tribal rights.

POLITICAL JOCKEYING

Politics is a pretty old game and so some people imagine there's never anything new in it. But there is, and the 1960 Republican contenders for the presidency may be the ones to prove it.

For some time now a nomination race has been shaping up between Vice President Nixon and retiring Sen. William F. Knowland of California. Knowland made the prospect more certain recently by telling friends among California lawmakers that he definitely plans to run for governor of that state next year.

All along, the present Gov. Goodwin J. Knight has indicated an intention to run again, which would give California one of the hottest primary fights in many years.

Knight could, of course, change his mind and run instead for the senate seat Knowland is vacating. He doesn't particularly want the spot, but he might under some circumstances decide that going for it was the best thing.

Should he battle for the governorship, however, then the big question would be where Nixon would throw his very substantial weight.

And here's where the relative novelty in politics might appear. Some sources indicate he may lend his backing to Knowland, who could turn out to be his chief 1960 rival if he went on to win the 1958 governorship election.

Seldom in political history would you be likely to find a parallel. Presidential contenders are not in the habit of helping to build each other up. Their normal instincts are all the other way.

But Nixon has a problem. His dislike of Knight is personal as well as political, and is well known. To get behind the governor would look bad, and would go against his grain.

There's no way to stay aloof from the struggle, since the Southern California Republican organization is largely Nixon's, and would have to take a definite stand in any such contest.

Possibly the vice president believes his status with respect to the 1960 nomination is so strong that he can give such aid and still not suffer unduly. But obviously there is a risk involved and politicians as a breed do not run around deliberately trying to increase their risks.

It could be that Nixon just doesn't think he has any other choice in the matter, and simply will have to let the chips fall where they may.

WORLD ATOMIC ENERGY

The other day the President signed a formal document called "an instrument of ratification" and thereby created the international atomic energy agency.

Twenty other countries, including Russia, had already officially signed. The President's pen stroke was all that was needed to put this new agency in business.

Most of the publicity on this international agency has stressed the contribution it would make to speeding up the world use of atomic fuel for the production of electric power. This is one of its prime goals.

But the less publicized goal of the agency is the one which could let the world sleep better in the future. That will be its efforts to insure that no nuclear by-products of power and experimental reactors go into bombs.

The possibility of the development of so-called "clandestine bombs"—atomic weapons made in secrecy for nefarious purposes—has been scaring diplomats and statesmen more and more during recent years. The possession of such atomic weapons by unscrupulous, irresponsible dictators, for example, would really mess up international relations.

Unfortunately, as the atomic energy science advances, and more reactors begin operating, the danger of clandestine bombs being built also grows. The members of the new international atomic agency recognize this danger and the newly born organization will now begin its global nuclear sleuthing.

The real need for the agency to do this job won't become critical immediately, however. The U. S. will be supplying most of the fissionable materials to other countries for the next few years. And the rigid safeguards which the U. S. puts on them should prevent the building of any clandestine bombs in the meantime.

These safeguards are identical to those which the international agency will enforce when it begins distributing materials. So it will have the advantage of American experience in this effort for the bigger, longer job ahead.

The agreement which a country must sign to get U. S. fissionable materials states that such material "will not be used for atomic weapons, or for research on or development of atomic weapons, or for any other military purpose."

The receiving country must keep elaborate records of the storage, handling and use of these materials and send these records to the U. S. regularly.

With so many autos on the road these days we certainly don't need wars to keep the world from becoming overpopulated.

The average man wears a 7 1/4 size hat unless he happens to be the average man and goes bareheaded.

TUCKER'S NATIONAL WHIRLIGIG

WASHINGTON — The underlying and historical significance of this closing congressional session lies in the fact that it has tried to retrieve the political and legislative power which it had surrendered to the executive and judicial arms of the government in the last quarter of a century—since the lustrous and heroic days of Theodore Roosevelt.

With the exception of Calvin Coolidge and Herbert Hoover, headstrong, ambitious and determined men have sat in the White House since the turn of the century. It is true that Warren G. Harding does not fall into this category, but such cabinet ministers as Hughes, Mellon and Hoover attest the supineness of "the man whose chief fault was that he couldn't say 'no,'" to quote Harry Daugherty.

Congress did not fork over its prerogatives because of weakness alone. The legislators were the victims of circumstances. They abdicated authority under the pressures of two global wars and a worldwide depression in which the United States became the bulwark of western civilization. A strong government was a world necessity.

OVERPOWERING STRUCTURE — Whatever the reason, the President and the branch he heads have grown into an overpowering structure, with billions in finding money to fortify and expand their position. And no chief justice since John Marshall has trampled so ruthlessly on the jurisdiction of congress and the 48 commonwealths, in capitol hills considered conclusion.

As a result, and although the counteroffensive has generally escaped comment, congress has set out to cut the White House and the supreme court down to what it regards as constitutional measurements.

It should be noted, too, that this has been a bipartisan movement, although three Democratic Presidents—Wilson, Roosevelt and Truman—were most responsible for upsetting the balance of powers. On the other hand, two Republican chief justices—Hughes and Warren—asserted judicial authority which, in congressional belief, the supreme court does not possess.

CONGRESS HAS REBELLED—Remembering Yalta, Potsdam, the Korean "police action" and other alleged usurpations, Congress has rebelled against the Executive's handling of foreign problems as if that field were a Presidential preserve.

It has made sharp cuts in foreign aid and overseas military funds, with warnings that the end is in sight. It curtailed Eisenhower's proposal for a three-year and expensive loan fund of a vast sum to our allies. It insists on such a complete and continuous check on foreign spending that this restriction will inevitably affect basic policy.

It killed the school construction bill for various reasons. But a principal factor was the suspicion that it might lead to greater federal influence on educational personnel, policies and even classroom instruction. It killed the administration's plan to finance roadbuilding from the sale of bonds—an operation which would have bypassed congressional control.

REJECTED BUDGET REFORM—It rejected the Hoover-Eisenhower budget reform under which appropriations for vast federal projects would be made on a one-year rather than a long-term basis. It feared that, once it had been committed to a seemingly minor and 12-month undertaking, it would be forced to vote money for its continuation, even though the program proved worthless or unnecessary.

Congress has voted for salary increases and public works spending billions, even though they were opposed by the President's budgetary advisers. If there is one sentence in a Presidential veto or message which revolts the men on capitol hill, it is this: "The proposed expenditure does not accord with the policy of the budget bureau."

It is hardly necessary to detail the rebellion against the supreme court's philosophy. Nor was it the civil rights bill alone or the clumsy effort of Attorney General Brownell to backstop Chief Justice Warren, which inspired the movement to circumscribe the high tribunal.

Other factors were the rulings which appeared to favor communists, cripple the investigative process by Congressional committees, open FBI files to criminals and subversives, and wipe out so many necessary state laws in the enforcement field.

All or most of these supreme court assumptions of authority and new jurisdiction will be nullified by legislative action at the current or future sessions of the lawmakers.

VIEW OF OTHERS

IDAHO'S "DISTINCTION"

Although Utah and three other states have managed to eliminate their indebtedness in the last three years, the debts of 23 states and the federal government have been increasing.

The total debt of the states climbed twice as fast, in percentage terms, as the federal debt between fiscal 1953 and fiscal 1956, according to a Congressional Quarterly study.

In addition to Utah, Kansas, South Dakota and Wyoming paid off their indebtedness during the period and another five states, Florida, Indiana, Kentucky, Nebraska and Wisconsin, were debt-free in 1955, have remained that way. Only Idaho went from a debt-free status in fiscal 1953 to the red in fiscal 1956—to the tune of two million dollars.

Nevada experienced the biggest debt gain rate (228 per cent) in the three-year period. Its increase of $2,043,000 was small in terms of dollars, however, compared with Massachusetts whose debt climbed 260 million to $45 million (91 per cent) in the period.

Arizona's debt decreased 80 per cent during the period but New Mexico registered a 71 per cent gain. Montana's debt went up 38 per cent in the three years. Texas' debt soared 91 per cent in the period; New Hampshire's 82 per cent, South Carolina's 65 per cent, Ohio's 59 per cent and Maryland's 58 per cent. Meanwhile such populous states as Washington, New York, Illinois and Pennsylvania registered healthy decreases. California's debt went up 43 per cent to a total of $21 million dollars.

Recently President Eisenhower asked Treasury Secretary Robert B. Anderson to head a seven-member cabinet-level group to study with a group of governors to study ways of returning some federal functions and tax sources to the states. However, the federal debt on June 30, 1956, totaled $269,883,000, compared with $4,911,145,000 for all the states.

One thing is indisputable: Governmental expenditures come out of the taxpayers' pocket irrespective of what unit is spending the money—Salt Lake Tribune.

EFFECTS OF THE KUROSHIWO

If it is true that the Japan current—called by the Japanese the Kuroshio, or black tide, and by most oceanographers the Pacific Drift—has slipped two degrees to the south, the weather on the Oregon and Washington coasts the next few summers may solve a dispute of long standing.

It is generally believed that the Japan current, which is warm at the outset, gives the Pacific Northwest a mild climate. Climatologists, however, point out that what is left of the current in this area does not come within 150 to 300 miles of the Oregon and Washington shores. Rather, the cold California current washes our coast.

Therefore, they argue, the Japan current has a negligible effect on our climate. What gives us our equable weather conditions is the ocean itself, which is cooler in summer and warmer in winter than the adjacent land. Onshore winds give us the benefit of this temperature difference.

It may be, as Japanese scientists said the other day, that the northern section of the main Japanese island of Honshu will have cooler weather in consequence of the Kuroshio's apparent present turning east on the 38th parallel instead of the former 40th.

But on this side of the Pacific the winds at the coast are not likely to be any cooler on a bare midriff or the water any colder when one sticks a toe in it—Portland Oregonian.

It was quite startling. As a matter of fact, our first thought when we saw four guys (almost middle-aged) wearing Bermuda shorts, was that someone was sandbagging us. But then they walked on down the street, stopped near a parked car and finally got into it.

When they drove past, we glanced at the license plate. California. For a minute there we thought some more of those guys were trying to give the Wild and Woolly West a bad name. But there's the West and then there's California.

HOW THINGS APPEAR FROM PEGLER'S ANGLE

CHICAGO — William Lurye, the martyred picket of David Dubinsky's union, who was stabbed to death in the New York garment district on May 9, 1949, was a Chicago criminal with a multiple record of arrests, convictions and terms in prison. Nevertheless, 65,000 New York needleworkers had to knock off work for a half day on May 12, 1949, and devote themselves to "demonstrations" of sympathy by political decree of their fuhrer and the sub-fuhrer.

In a similar imposition on the faceless rank-and-file a few weeks ago, the entire industry in the city of New York was closed down for a half-holiday in solemn tribute to Dubinsky's personal majesty on the 25th anniversary of his first "election" to the job of president-dictator. In all such cases, the workers forfeit pay for the time lost.

Lurye was a thief and racketeer with a record dating back to his 17th year, 1928, in Chicago. His father was occasionally implicated in violent union troubles including gun-play, in the junkyard of the West side. A dominant police official who directed the investigation of the New York stabbing in the phone booth, said recently that Will Lurye was killed for double-crossing other crooks in a deal for safe-conduct through picket lines.

Lurye was Dubinsky's boss-picketer, responsible for preventing the distribution of needlework among non-union shops. He arranged to permit delivery of hot cargo to "outlaw" shops at a small stipulated price per garment. There is little room for doubt that Dubinsky had heard about this deal. However, he chose not to believe that Lurye had sold him out.

Lurye's sister, Min, a noisy personality in Dubinsky's New York machine, is represented as a warrior fighting on in the gallant tradition of a family of heroic unioners. Another brother, Sam, known mostly as the Simon-Kahn, had an Illinois-prison record, racked up about the time that William was earning his stripes in the house of correction and Pontiac reformatory. Min is known as a "Love-stonelle," or political disciple of Jake Lovestone, the whilom boss of the American communist party and current manager of Dubinsky's overseas political apparatus. A newspaper picture of a "communist" disturbance at Madison and Wells streets, Chicago, Jan. 26, 1926, bears the outline, "women communist workers arrested on Madison street. Miss Min Lurye, 2021 Division street. Police broke up the meeting and arrested 9."

J. B. Matthews, the original fellow traveler; Ben Gitlow, one of Lovestone's contemporaries in the Soviet communist movement in the United States; and Maurice Malkin, a lesser bolo of the Lovestone movement, all declare that Min Lurye was known to them as a Lovestoneite. Gitlow said, and Malkin concurred: "Minie was a Lovestoneite and she is now coordinator and organizer of the Dressmakers' Joint Board in New York, working with Sacha Zimmerman, who was a charter member of the communist party of the United States. Minnie's brother, William, was a Lovestoneite. So was their father, Max."

On the day before the half-holiday of mourning imposed on the 65,000 New York members of the Garment Workers' union, an AP dispatch said Dubinsky "blamed the killing on 'open shoppers' who hired assassins to fight unionization." Another AP story described a gathering of 4,000 at Manhattan center.

"Mr. dress-manufacturer on 35th street, our efforts will never cease," Dubinsky said, "according to the Associated Press. Dubinsky did not identify the 'dress-manufacturer' on 35th street."

An official report in the files of Pontiac reformatory says William Lurye was known also as William Kahn. The bureau of identification noted that this Lurye died in St. Vincent's hospital, New York, on May 16, 1949. He had started his career with six months in the house of correction upon sentence of Nov. 22, 1928, for robbing a number of telephone coin boxes. Earlier that year Lurye had been extradited to Omaha as a fugitive on a larceny charge in an automobile case. There is no disposition of that case in the Illinois files.

His bit in Pontiac, a subsidiary of Stateville-Joliet, began April 11, 1929. The offense was burglary in an apartment. He was paroled after two years and about three months to work for an uncle at a fish market in South Bend, Ind.

On June 8, 1934, he and other hoodlums were caught running away from a wedding party which they had crashed and caused a disturbance. One month later, he was pinched on suspicion in connection with the use of an automobile in numerous burglaries. He was exonerated. Two months later, he was pinched again as "a well-known hoodlum," questioned about burglaries and released.

The file includes a letter from Al Dubinsky, an interior decorator, offering Lurye a job at $25 a week on parole. There is nothing to indicate whether Al Dubinsky and Dave Dubinsky are related or acquainted.

William was discharged from parole in May, 1935.

Samuel Kahn, alias Simon Lurye, was about 17 when he entered Pontiac on Oct. 28, 1932, to do one year for a stickup with a gun. He and two other hoodlums had poked an ice cream parlor for $10.

Care of Your Children

By ANGELO PATRI

Now that the schools are opening for the fall term and schools are on everyone's mind it might be a good idea, a very good idea, to take a look ahead to the years when the children will be about to enter college, and plan for that time.

Too many parents and young students give no thought to this until the last year in secondary school and find themselves in a difficulty. The student has not taken the courses required for entrance to the college he wants to enter; he is not qualified to enter the college that is willing to accept him because his marks are too low; he does not know what he wants to do in college; he has not done any of the outside (internum) work that first-class students usually do and so is not a preferred student.

In short he is out of secondary school with no place to go. This should not happen.

Then there are the students, well-qualified but without funds. Many of them do not know of the scholarships that are offered to them. Many of them want to enter the colleges close to their homes and cannot be admitted because there is no room for them.

Had they looked ahead a bit, asked questions of their teachers, written letters to heads of colleges they might have learned that there were openings in colleges farther afield, institutions that offered the same courses as the older ones.

As I look about and see the many, many scholarships, for so many different groups of students, read about the college distant from the older centers of population, it seems to be a matter of preparation for college and not a lack of opportunity that holds young people back.

Too, the girl who is willing, even eager, to leave home to attend a distant college is often held back by parents who want her to stay home. That may not be to the advantage of the girl at all. She is likely to be the one who needs to go out of home and community to where she must make her way. Often this going away is a stimulant to growth in many fields.

Bear Trouble Given as Bus Delay Factor

ATLANTA, Aug. 16 (AP)—The army and an unassuming bus company official named Quattlebaum rewrote the story of the three bears yesterday. But neither came up with a practical solution to get around the "bearicide" in the Great Smoky mountains.

The problem arose from the army's desire to get fresh recruits from western North Carolina over the mountains to Knoxville and the bus company's desire to get the schedule laid down by the Pentagon Agreement.

For this task, the army has an agreement with the Carolina Coach company at Raleigh. The Carolina coaches are in the jurisdiction of the third army, which has headquarters in Atlanta and an area recruiting post in Knoxville. But the buses are persistently late getting the rookies into Knoxville. The matter has been brought to attention of headquarters in Atlanta by the Knoxville recruiting officer together with the explanation provided by J. H. Quattlebaum, the bus company's vice president in charge of traffic.

Quattlebaum's "brief," as relayed by the assistant traffic manager to whom it was addressed, spoke for itself as it reached the scrutiny of the army brass.

Not Kidding

"To be perfectly frank with you," Quattlebaum said, "even though you may think I am kidding, the bears in the Smoky Mountain park cause the lateness of the buses in the tourist season."

"If the weather is pretty and the bears come out of the woods to the side of the road, every tourist and his family has got to stop and try to feed the bear and take pictures and so forth."

"This continues until a trooper comes along and runs the bear back and makes the tourist go on. It is impossible to pass when such happens. It usually takes us from 20 to 30 minutes or longer on a schedule. In other words, if we have three bears, the bus is an hour late."

Canada Rules Made Tighter For Security

OTTAWA, Aug. 16 (AP)—The U. S. government has agreed to prevent any security information gathered by Canada from going to non-government bodies without Canadian permission, it was announced yesterday.

The announcement was made in publication here of a note delivered by the U. S. state department on Tuesday to the Canadian embassy in Washington. It followed exchanges of protesting notes and replies between the two governments following the suicide of Canadian Ambassador E. Herbert Norman in Cairo this spring.

At that time, the liberal government of Prime Minister Louis St. Laurent told the U. S. state department that the Canadian government, on a reciprocal exchange basis, unless Canada had a controlling voice in what was done with the information.

The U. S. note to the new Defense-baker conservative government, published today, confirmed this understanding.

Norman jumped to his death in Cairo after his name had been linked with communists for the second time in testimony before a congressional subcommittee in Washington. Former External Affairs Minister Lester B. Pearson headlined the inference in the congressional testimony. He said some information gathered by the Royal Canadian mounted police had got to the committee without Canadian authorization and without a subsequent report that cleared Norman.

Formation of Gang Lauded By Evangelist

NEW YORK, Aug. 16 (AP)—Billy Graham shared his pupil Wednesday with a former teen gang member who said he has joined a new gang and "Christ is the guy who runs this outfit."

Stanley Rachmace, 16, told a Madison Square garden audience of 17,000 that in New York he has "seen guys in the gang get together to make their own weapons and prepare for battles with other gangs."

"I've seen broken heads, stabblings, black eyes and broken bones guys got in gang fights. But you guys you teen-agers who think you're tough, you don't really know how tough it can get 'til you start witnessing for Christ," Rachmace said.

The youngster with the crew-cut said he is now a member of the Centurion Christian Cadet corps, sponsored by the Protestant Council of New York.

He and 32 other boys from Camp Centurion, a Protestant council camp at Wharton, N. J., were special guests at Graham's third "accident on youth" revival meeting. Most of the boys at Camp Centurion have run afoul of the law once, a council spokesman said.

Ridicule Seen

"Once you take your stand for God," Graham told his predominantly teen-age audience, "the gang will call you a sissy, a holy Joe, a coward, a religious fanatic. You must look them in the face and say, 'yes, I am a Christian.'"

Special guests at the opening of Graham's 14th week in the garden were Brooklyn Dodgers pitcher Carl Erskine, former heavyweight fighter Lou Nova and Anglican Bishop Adelaun Howells of Lagos, Nigeria.
