Teachers Pay Said Climbing But Still Poor

WASHINGTON, May 20 (U.S.)—Teachers' salaries are showing a steady improvement, but are still poor, according to a survey by the National Education Association today.

The survey by the professional teachers' organization showed that the average annual salary for the continental United States has risen from $4,250 in the 1935-36 school year to $4,720 last year, and $4,825 this year.

Every state except Alabama showed an increase. The Alabama figure was $4,550, $4,600 and $4,625.

The NEA said the improvement over the past two years of $370 and $105—indicates that teachers' salaries are not particularly subject to change in the country's economy. This is an advantage during a recession, a disadvantage during a boom, the report said.

"At the end of 1938," the NEA said, "teaching was still priced in the same salary range as other occupations. This is an advantage during a recession, a disadvantage during a boom, the report said."

It's 24-hour service at the Twin Falls Bank and Trust Company's Drop-In Depository. Marie For, left and Emma Thompson, of the new savings department of the Bank and Trust, show where to place the special Times-Barre Drop-In Depository envelope. ## Lewiston Editor Elected Chairman of Two-State News Agency as Meet Ends

The annual meeting of Idaho-Utah Associated Press members concluded in Twin Falls Saturday with the election of William F. Johnston, managing editor of the Lewiston Tribune, as the 1966 chairman. Johnston succeeds R. B. Telford, editor of the Times-News. Next year's meeting will be held at Ogden.

The business session Saturday morning included the presentation of photography awards, outstanding membership participation award and a discussion of color photo reproduction.

The Ogden Standard-Examiner received the outstanding membership participation award presented by Louis Ross, editor of the Daily Idahoan, Moscow. Accepting the award for the Standard-Examiner was Charles Carver, managing editor of the paper.

The Standard-Examiner was cited for its contribution to and coverage for the Associated Press involving new stories about the crash of a flying boxcar and parachuting crew members who landed in the Weath mountains north of Ogden. Photography coverage as well as news coverage was acknowledged by the convention.

A spontaneous discussion of color photography and color reproduction was held with H. C. Clavinger, managing editor of the Spokane Chronicle, speaking. Committee reports were presented on resolutions and the inter-ship program for college journalism students.

Approximately 30 editors and Associated Press employees attended the convention, which began Friday morning. Frank Starzel, general manager of the news service, was the noon speaker. Friday afternoon sessions included a luncheon and a discussion of color photo reproduction.

Winners and honorable mentions in the annual Associated Press photography competition were announced Saturday. Entries were judged by O. A. (Gus) Keiser, local photographer and former newsman.

In the sports division, first prize went to Arthur E. Andrews of the Lewiston Morning Tribune for a youth rodeo picture entitled "Just Orbit." ### DREAM SCHEME

"My bedroom is too small to be made attractive—it's too cramped and cluttered." Sincerely a week goes by that we don't hear this complaint. Actually, life is a mistaken notion. Even a tiny bedroom can be transformed into an enchanted haven of rest, decorated to beguile the eye and pamper the sensibilities, and furnished to gratify the need for comfort and convenience.

When planning the color scheme for a small bedroom, or any small room for that matter, avoid bold and vivid combinations. Choose pale receding colors that give the visual effect of more space. Pale shades of green, peach, and white.

It's possible to use a wall-to-wall carpet. This gives an enlarging effect, also. Don't use massive furniture. Remember, the furniture should always be in scale with the size of the room. Low, small-scale pieces are best for small rooms.

In the bedroom sketched above, every inch of space has been utilized—admirably. Low chests grouped with cover unit and dressing table have been arranged to leave the most free floor space possible.

Color scheme is composed of pink and softest blue. Note how the muted horizontal lines on one wallpapered wall add to the feeling of restfulness and tranquility.

Don't let your beautiful bedroom exist only in your daydreams. Come in and see your space problems—or any decorating problem you may have—with one of our professional decorators. You'll find it stimulating and rewarding, we're sure. Don't delay.

Biologist Traps Albino Rat in Rock Creek Canyon

Robert P. Olson, public health biologist for the Idaho department of public health, holds a trapped white rat as he wades Rock creek near the railroad bridge over the stream. Willows and heavy growth along the stream allow the type of area in which the albino rats have been found in numbers. Rats can be eliminated by cutting off their food supply. (Staff photo-engraving)

Many Albino Rats Counted in Rock Creek's Canyon for Rodent Survey

Many albino rats have been spotted around Rock creek canyon and several trapped near the banks of the creek by a team composed of Robert P. Olson, biologist for the Idaho department of health, Helle and Keith Harvey and James Ingalls, south central district health agent.

The survey was ordered by the state health department a few weeks ago after James Ingalls, who is also sanitation officer for Twin Falls, submitted a report stating that white rats have been caught for the first time in 15 years in Rock creek and constitute a potential health hazard.

"I believe this is the only area in the state where there are white rats on the loose," Olson said. "Southern Idaho is one of the areas where the rats are most numerous."

He added that in 1946 there were no rats in the area. Olson said that the rats have been found in the area since 1946. Olson said that the rats have been found in the area since 1946.

Water, Nation's No. 1 Resource, Particularly Important for West

Here's the source of vital irrigation water in the form of snow in the mountains. Moisture seeping down in mountain forest also appears at lower levels in the form of spring water and feeds small streams. Water is the nation's No. 1 resource, and this is particularly true in Idaho. (Forest service photo-staff engraving)

By CHARLES T. DAUGHERTY
(Former Supervisor, Sawtooth National Forest)

Water is the nation's greatest resource, particularly in the western states.

It is a precious commodity upon which no one can place a real value. If one has an ample amount of it, the value seems not so high. With a diminishing amount, or a more urgent need for it, the value seems to fantastic heights.

The increasing population of the western states, the need for more water for irrigation, industry and adequate supplies for cities raise questions which should cause everyone to consider well the source of much of our water.

Based on Agriculture

It is pretty generally agreed that the economy and general welfare of southern Idaho is based upon agriculture and the related industries. In connection with this it is interesting to examine another well-established, but sometimes overlooked, fact. This is that only about eight percent of the total area of Idaho is suitable for the production of agricultural crops of any kind.

In recognition of this fact the people of Idaho are faced with the need to examine carefully and to take an active interest in the management programs of these other lands which make up approximately 92 per cent of the area of the state.

They need to make sure that these lands first contribute the maximum possible to agriculture within the state and second, that they are used wisely for all the other services and resources which they can yield.

Some Privately Owned

Some of this land area which makes up 92 per cent of the state is privately owned. This is a rather insignificant amount. The greater part is owned by the federal government and is managed by the bureau of land management and the forest service. The state owns a considerable amount but this, too, is small, compared to the federal.

It seems well to take a look at these lands with the thought of determining how much they can and do contribute to our basic industry, agriculture. We need to see how well the management of these lands is conducted so that the people of the state are engaged in the agricultural pursuits in which they are most interested.

Water is Most Important

Private water management is the resource which is most important to agriculture. There are few who would argue that this can be any other than water. It is said that water is the most valuable resource of all growing things depend on it for life. This is true. This being true we have no alternative but to insist that the lands from which this water flows are managed that they will yield this vital resource in the largest amounts and with the regularity and security which the state needs.

Scientists Study Birds to Discover Reducing Secret

ATTIEN, Ga., May 9 (U.P.)—Birds could yield a secret for looking lighter.

Some birds gain 50 to 100 per cent of their body weight in fueling up for long migratory flights. The gain is all fat, and it is put on in a few days.

Scientists are trying to learn how they do it.

If this process can be reversed, it might be helpful for many human ailments, says Dr. Eugene Odum, University of Georgia biologist who is directing some of the studies of migratory birds.

Fatness in humans is generally considered to be a matter of controlled eating. But there could be other factors.

Migratory birds have a still-secret way of putting on fat. It seems to be due to hormone action in response to the increasing length of daylight in the spring, Dr. Odum reports.

This is borne out by experiments in which birds are artificially exposed to extra amounts of light as though days were growing longer.

For a time nothing happens. Then in a quick few days the birds put on fantastic amounts of fat. More light triggers off some mechanism so the birds beef up their fat or fuel stores for long trips north.

In the fall, when days are growing shorter, the birds fatten up again for their journeys south.

Dr. Odum and associates are measuring the actual amounts of fat put on by various species of migratory birds. From this, they can estimate how far the birds could travel. Fat is one of the best energy fuels. It is comparable to loading an airplane with lots of high-octane gasoline.

The hummingbird weighs only 1.5 grams—about 1/16th of an ounce—but doubles this weight when it starts migrating. That gives it enough "fuel" to zoom across the Gulf of Mexico to Central or South America in a non-stop flight of 600 miles.

Generally, the fattest birds are those which had the farthest to go. Lesser birds, on the average, had shorter journeys to their winter grounds, or could make stopovers for feeding and refueling along the way, Dr. Odum reports.

The fat fuel for migration seems to be stored in all parts of the birds' bodies, but it does not harm their hearts.

This fat also seems to be different from the inert fat masses in humans, Dr. Odum adds. The migratory fat appears to be a temporary organ with special mechanisms which permit its rapid burning or utilization during flight.

But it could also hold a clue for human reducing diets.

Check of Paper Belies Assertion 'Nothing Good' Printed on Youths

"You never print anything good about youngsters."

This is a criticism often directed at newspapers at a time when juvenile delinquency and teenage violence appear to be increasing. But a survey of the Times-News for the first three months of 1959 shows that "good" news printed about youngsters far exceeds the "bad" news, with the latter confined almost entirely to traffic violations.

The check did not include the sports pages which would have run the "good" news to an enormous total because the three-month period covered nearly all of the basketball season. Likewise, the survey came too early to catch the spring flood of alumni and pictures concerning high school graduation with its hour of student scholarship awards and delegates to Girl State and Home State.

Measured Stories

In measuring the column inches of stories concerning constructive ventures of youngsters and comparing the "good" total with the "bad" total, Magic Valley youths have been on the good side of the ledger by a margin of nearly 2 to 1 in space. The "good" total is approximately 31 1/2 column inches and the "bad" is 10 1/2.

Pictures in the Times-News during January, February and March are the most illustrative of the "good" side of the ledger.

Almost 25 times more column inches of pictures have appeared showing the "good" things. In the first three months 72 pictures of youth activities, such as the Boy Scouts, Girl Scouts and many others, totaled 1,286 column inches of space.

Pictures of Vandals

Although it is never encouraging to look at the bad side, only three pictures appeared in three months illustrating the "bad" side. These three pictures totaled only 10 column inches in space and they're open to question. They concern vandals for which it was assumed youngsters were responsible.

The Times-News in compiling these statistics differentiated between the news stories and the pictures. The news stories, such as the Boy Scouts, Girl Scouts and many others, totaled 1,286 column inches of space.

Mostly Traffic Violations

Because the areas of "bad" items are confined almost entirely to traffic violations, the list is not nearly so long as the constructive activities. The stories concerned teenagers, involved in reckless driving, failure to yield the right of way, accidents, speeding and vandalism.

On the "good" side, the list is almost endless. The 31 1/2 column inches of space were devoted to stories of Deloitte, John's Daughters, Elks leadership contest winners, 4-H club activities, rectory, Camp Fire, American Legion, essay winner, student accomplishments, drama, Future Homemakers of America, Future Farmers of America.

A teen-ager in trouble is illustrated by this photo. "You never print anything good about youngsters," a common complaint heard by newsmen, indicates that newspaper readers apparently remember only the "bad" news. A survey of the Times-News for the first three months of this year shows "good" news of youngsters far exceeds the "bad" news. The survey excluded the sports pages during the basketball season and came before the heavy flood of "good" news in the form of delegates to Boy and Girl state, scholarship winners and graduation activities. (Staff photo-engraving)

News pictures and stories about "good" activities of juveniles far outweigh the "bad" side, as illustrated by this photo of members of Boy Scouts troop No. 68, led by instructor by Archie Brown, Scoutmaster, in the fine points of pack board construction. From left, boys are Alan Brown, son of Mr. and Mrs. Archie Brown; Howard Robinson, son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Robinson; Jack Bishop, son of Mr. and Mrs. John Bishop; and Mike Harper, son of Mr. and Mrs. Edwin Harper. War Correspondent Recalls D-Day Landing 15 Years Ago on June 6

In Normandy, you'll never forget the scene.

The incredibly vast panorama of more than 4,000 invasion ships, the big battleships, the armor of steel at German coastal fortifications. The weird spectacle of tanks swimming in the surf, like monster beetles. And Allied troops by the tens of thousands wading ashore in the teeth of enemy fire.

I was ticketed to land with the D-day: June 6, 1944.

As an accredited AP war correspondent, I spent the last night before the invasion in a sealed-off camp near Portsmouth, England. In a letter home, I wrote: "I have the somewhat dubious distinction of being selected as the first airborne correspondent ashore in the whole invasion setup."

Fifteen years ago, under the supreme command of Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower, the mightiest invasion armada in history was poised to strike across the English channel for an assault on Hitler's fortified Atlantic wall.

Military experts say it could probably never happen again.

With the advent of nuclear warheads, a single hydrogen bomb could obliterate an entire invasion fleet or destroy all life on a beach head.

But if you were there on D-day...

Novel Dancing Doll Devised by Buhl Man

The "man" in the foreground is a dancing doll. The man in the background is L. D. Major, Buhl. Major has been entertaining various groups with the doll since the winter of 1918. During that winter the weather was so bad that the Major was snowed in for several days. To pass time and to provide entertainment for the next meeting of the Deep Creek Grange, Major started working on the doll. In three days he finished it and presented a show at the Grange meeting. He has been performing with the doll since then. (Staff photo-gravering)

Winter Storms Led Buhl Man to Start Hobby With His Wooden Dancing Doll

Buhl, May 30—Winter storms can cause havoc but they can also create hobbies. During the winter storms of 1918, L. D. Major, Buhl, started a hobby that has kept him interested and provided entertainment for many persons throughout this region.

During the inclement weather three characterized the parties in winter, Major decided to pass time by making a wooden dancing doll that would resemble one he had seen when he was a young boy.

The project served a dual purpose, it would help pass the time and with a little practice, it would enable him to provide entertainment at Deep Creek Grange meetings.

Major says, "It was my wife's idea to turn to put on the Grange program, so we decided to make the doll."

He took some hard walnut he had hauled from Missouri several years before, and went to work with a coping saw, chisel and file.

Mrs. Major notes the house was filled with sawdust and wood chips for three days. At the end of that time the doll took form and started his dancing career.

Major attached a pole to serve as a handle in the back of the doll and had a neighbor, Mrs. Gordon Healy, paint a face on it.

He placed it on a board standing on a length of board. He sits on the other end of the board and pounds out a rhythm. The board vibrates and the doll dances—it's that easy, providing you have a good sense of rhythm.

As he pounds he either whistles a tune or, in the event he is performing for a group function, he is accompanied by a piano.

The doll's feet rotate against the pine board, sounding like a full wood floor. In the background is Major's whistling and the sound of his feet beating out the rhythm on the board.

The doll creaks and clatters and rattles in its means man. Arms to the left and right wiggle and jig.

Major notes that one of his best accompanists was Mrs. Orrin Howard. "She plays that old 1920 rhythm," Major says.

In the past years Major has performed at many group functions throughout this area—Grange meetings, lodge meetings, school dances and other group gatherings.

Major notes that one of the best audiences he has ever had "was at a Knoll Grange meeting five years ago. They liked to never let me

MAGIC VALLEY PORTRAIT

Harry Musgrave Looks Back on Varied Experiences From Wide Range of Jobs

The personality of Harry Musgrave is the sum of many experiences in many, varied occupations.

Homeowner, farmer, Puller brush salesman, businessman, radio variety show master, entertainer—all are occupations followed by Musgrave at one time in his life.

Now he is a retired, successful Twin Falls businessman who recently described his occupation as a man who "watches windows and plants fruit trees."

Too Simple

But this is too simple a description of a man who has led such an interesting and active life as Harry Musgrave. The best way to keep his active life in order is to start when he first came to the valley.

Musgrave, one of five brothers, came to this area from Montrose, Colo., with his father and mother and his brothers in an immigrant railroad car in 1909. They were accompanied by four horses and 15 head of cattle.

His father was a saddle maker who had purchased an 80-acre farm west of Piler. He attended elementary school in Piler and high school in Twin Falls. During high school he was football captain for one year and was a champion wrestler on the school team.

—Had Musgrave

Musgrave laughs and says, "I had music and art, then, and how I've got neither."

Musgrave notes he was supposed to work on the farm during school but he spent most of his spare time participating in school athletics.

While he was in school he met Flora B. Hendricks. Two years after they were graduated in 1914 they were married.

They decided the life for them was the life of the homesteader. So the moment they were married they caught a train for Rogerson, a life to watch the cattle and transferred to a horse-drawn wagon, and struck out west across the desert to their homestead 11 miles north of Three Creek.

—Best Years of Life

"Those were the best years of our life," Musgrave notes. "We had no income, we didn't have to pay any taxes and we didn't have to farm."

But farming in that area was a rigorous and disappointing experience for four sons and a daughter.

The doll serves as an excellent entertainment device when children come to the house to visit. Although he doesn't usually have an accompanist, he draws the doll out of its closet home and puts it on the board and pounds out a tune.

Major doesn't have a regular accompanist, but he can usually find an accompanist at the gatherings where he entertains.

—One of the biggest shows for the doll was presented at a three-act play produced by the Deep Creek Grange several years ago. The doll was one of several added attractions.

The Deep Creek Grange traveled with the play to various Granges throughout the area and presented the show. There were 10 persons in the play and another six persons involved in the between-act entertainment.

Major laughs when he recalls an incident when the play was being presented. The play troupe packed up and went to perform for the Hollister Grange. But there was no one there. It seems there was a confusion in dates and no audience appeared.

Right now the doll is still dancing strong and Major is getting ready for more appearances. He will perform for any group that calls and he can't bear to turn them down.

"What I like in the kids," he says, "is they enjoy it. I never get enough of it."

Major has used the doll to entertain his own children. He has performed Musgrave says, "We were supposed to put in crops, and we did, but the jackrabbits ate all the crops."

The Musgraves lived in that area from 1915 to 1918. In 1917 their son, Edward, born Musgrave, became a Puller brush salesman and says when the boy was born they had to add a tent addition to their 12-by-14-foot wooden shack.

Returned in 1918

They returned to the Twin Falls tract in 1918. Farming was better here, but Musgrave notes the years in the desert hadn't been completely wasted. When they went into the desert they had only one horse. When they returned they had four horses, two cows, a few pigs, some chickens and a son.

"That's really some accumulating," says Harry Musgrave.

He recalls they were away from work he was able to do on the power line that was being constructed from Thousand Springs to Jarbidge. That work was the salvation of many futures in the area, especially during the winter months.

In 1918, for their return to the tract, they not out the big horse-drawn wagon and harnessed two horses. The other two horses, which were led to the rear of the wagon. The Jersey cow had a calf. They put the calf in the rear of the wagon so she would follow. The chickens were placed in the wagon with the calf. Musgrave, their son and they were on their way.

—Looked Like Gypsies

"We really looked like a bunch of gypsies," Musgrave says.

Musgrave farmed until 1924. Then his wife convinced him he was better suited for selling than farming. He wanted to go into business for himself, so he struck out for Boise and later on to Idaho.

He came back a Puller brush salesman. He had the western half

New Bomber Robot Guides U. S. Planes

WICHITA, Kans., May 30—A complex new bombing-navigation system will enable the latest B-29 Superfortresses to fly thousands of miles to a predetermined target without the crew turning a hand.

Boring Aircraft company, reporting the guidance system developed by the company, adds it will be the most accurate and most potent aerial weapon.

In practice, Boeing said, the B-29 navigator would feed the planes location, in latitude and longitude, into electronic computers before takeoff.

Once airborne, the location of the target would be fed into the computers and control of the bomber switched to the automatic system. The computers would then would take the plane to the target by the shortest possible route.

Near the target there would be a crew chief to guard against malfunctions of the automatic system. Then the bombing system would take over to center on the target.

After a bomb mission the computers could take over for the return flight, even to taking pre-arranged evasive action.

building filled and had so much confidence in their new system that they took their son and went to the World's Fair in Long Beach, leaving the business operation to employees.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Musgrave noted that of course returned their parents, who didn't seem to state their confidence.

Business grew

But the business grew into thriving new and used product sales and they had a flourishing furniture business. In 1941 they decided to sell the business and go some traveling and go into a sort of semi-retirement. Musgrave adds that one reason they decided to sell was because he was tired to deal in inferior furniture manufactured during the war years.

They moved to Hollywood but weren't happy and soon moved back to Twin Falls.

Musgrave had seen how successful shopping centers were in California, so he decided to try something along this line in Twin Falls. He developed the "Village of Opportunity" on Kimberly Road, and re-opened the Harry Musgrave Merchandise Mart.

—Said Business

He sold his furniture business to the Northside Furniture company in 1941 and sold it.

And now, in his words, he "washes windows and plants fruit trees." But he adds, "that he is just as active as ever."

"I just love to dig in the dirt," he says.

In reflecting back on his varied occupations, and his successful business career in Twin Falls, the foundation of it all is that there are so many, many good people in this area.

Her Father Built This Log Cabin South of Hansen Back in 1880's

Carla Brose, Hansen, stands near the door of the log cabin her father, Robert Brose, built in the late 1880's. Miss Brose has preserved the cabin and in the past few years remodelled the inside and made the necessary modern renovations for the cabin. Many log cabins of that time, the logs were squared by Robert Brose and his younger brother, Frank, before the cabin was built. The cabin was originally three rooms, but has been enlarged to accommodate tenants. The logs for the building were brought down from the south by Brose and his brother. The two men came to the Hansen area in 1880 after traveling across the nation. The last leg of their journey, from Salida, Colo., was made on foot to Albion and by horse from there. ## Ranch Homesteaded by Robert Brose In 1886 Preserves His Old Log Cabin

The preserved remains of a 70-acre log cabin and a 60-acre concrete block home are concrete reminders of the accomplishments of pioneer Robert Brose who helped forge a civilization in the area.

The 10-acre homestead of Robert Brose, who came to the valley in 1886, lies six miles south of Albion.

Home for 70 Years
Members of the Brose family lived on this land, farmed it, and made it a home for more than 70 years.

Robert Brose, one of the pioneers who now lives on the ranch, recently recalled her father's trip to the United States as he had told her. When he homesteaded was established by a few families were in the area, and Miss Brose could recall it as families in the rock creek valley when she was a small girl.

From Germany
Robert and Frank Brose started in Washington from near Berlin, Germany, where their parents had been. Neither could speak English when they arrived at the homestead in Wisconsin, but by time they arrived near Hansen they could speak well enough to get along.

They stopped to work on the ranch and the Brose family had money to carry on, and they picked up quite a bit of the language there," Miss Brose recounted.

From Salida the two young men, Robert Brose and his brother Frank, began walking to Washington when the snow had melted. When they reached Albion, Frank didn't want to walk any further and they purchased a horse. When they reached the Rock Creek area, the horse became sick and they decided to stay awhile.

They worked for other people in the settlement to make some money," Miss Brose said. Soon after arriving, the two traveled to Albion where they filed for the homestead. Until they built the log cabin they lived in a dugout.

Married Immigrant
Robert Brose married after living a few years in the area. His wife, Augusta, was an immigrant from northern Germany and she came to the homestead in 1889.

The annual trip to Shoshone for the family was one of the big events of the year. The trip was made in a wagon pulled by a team of horses. The trip was made in a wagon pulled by a team of horses.

Miss Brose recalled many Indians in the area when she was a child. Although they were friendly, Indians they could cause some excitement by sneaking up on the house without making any noise.

There were none of the pleasures of the 1890s for the children, but Miss Brose recalls that when people moved into the area, they were very busy with work and play all day.

"We had been in the yard and when we went to the kitchen we saw two red-tailed Indians poking their heads from behind the fence. Mother was almost too scared to speak, but we found a lot of bread and some milk and gave it to them. That's all they wanted."

However, the more fierce Indians were not so many miles away, and Miss Brose can remember her father telling about one time he was camped in the mountains. Several Indians with paint on their faces and wearing feathers rode right through the camp while Robert Brose stood watching with his shotgun at his side.

He said they were on the way to the south, but must not have cared enough about him to stop. They just smiled and rode on.
