THE LABOR HOLIDAY

Labor Day means many things to many Americans. To school children, of course, it is probably the last day of "freedom" before another long torm begins. To their parents, it is the last warm-weather holiday, to be spent perhaps on a special sutting put plain perhaps as special sutting put plain creational people, it is the climax of a busy exact, the heat filing before the tents are folded and summer silpa quietly away.

We ought on this Labor Day to ponder in dead seriousness just how we precious vote come November,

We must read and listen and inform ourselves as to the myriad problems that control the nation and the world, beyond those that affect us personally or the little groups to which we belong. We must then study the records and proposals of those who had for our commission to try to solve those who Finally, we must register and vote—in or make der that future Labor Days may be as meaningful as this one in 1960.

A TIDE OF YOUTH

A TIDE OF YOUTH
There will, of course, be legitimate discussion in the 1980 presidential campaign as to which candidate, Vice President Mixon or Sen. John Kennedy, has the most suitable experience for the 190. But the question of age can hardly enter into it.

of much greater-interest is the question ow two men so relatively young happened o be chosen as presidential nominees in 1960. Certainly an element of accident existed. Nixon had the undeshlable advantage of being vice president, which assured him steady national attention and opportunity to deal with Republican party leaders.

Kennedy was catapulted to center stage by his drawnite though unaccessful bid for the vice presidential nomination at Chicago the stage of the control of the vice presidential nomination at Chicago.

those people.

In other words, despite all the talk of popular groundswells for other candidates, the evidence in the spring primary voting and the public opinion polis clearly indicated that millions of Americans wanted Nixon and Kennedy as nominees.

Hence the "generation jump." The problems are new and vasily challenging. Both in government and busifiers, the demand appears to be for new, young, vigorous leadership with a fresh outlook and a pounding attack.

But 1860 is also an election year. Traditionally, the day following Labor Day has

It is for this reason that Labor Day that
