Still in the Black

News that Idaho's general fund surplus isn't going to be as large as expected at the end of the biennium doesn't detract one bit from the fact that Idaho is still operating in the black.

There was a good deal of talk about Idaho's general fund surplus during the last session of the state legislature. It even figured in the budget for the next two years, as it would because the state is not intent on accumulating funds in excess of the necessary revenues to pay expenses.

Governor Smiley says the surplus will be somewhat below the 7.4 million dollars estimated for June 30, but he declined to say how far below the total would be. Other sources reported the surplus probably would be a million dollars lower than anticipated.

Naturally, a lot of political hay will be made over the budget, regardless of whether it balances. If the general fund is still in the black when the legislature convenes in 1963, practically everyone will be taking credit for it. And if the state happens to be in the red, everyone will be blaming everyone else.

What should not be overlooked is that Idaho's general fund has been maintained in fairly good condition down through the years. The state has not even approached the financial problems that have beset many other states, of which Michigan is one of the notorious examples.

Let's hope Idaho can go on keeping expenditures within the means of the state. It's considered "old-fashioned" these days to live within your means, but we like it.

STIMULATION

It wasn't so long ago that considerable concern was expressed over the U. S. auto industry because new cars were not selling. The lack of sales was one of the major factors in the recent recession. Although there was plenty of talk about the only real action was left up to individual auto dealers who managed to stir sales somewhat by sharper merchandising and better service.

Recently the Canadian auto industry has been facing a similar situation, with sales lagging considerably. The Canadian government has stepped into the picture to reduce the price of cars by repeal of a special 7 1/2 per cent luxury tax on cars. The tax has been effective since 1954 and was repealed after a commission on the auto industry convinced Finance Minister Donald Fleming the tax was a drag on new cars in Canada.

In the U. S. recession, government also entered the picture, but by repelling many of the taxes—many of them hidden—that are totaled into the final price of a new car. The U. S. government used a different approach, that of opening the public purse strings and "priming the pump."

It is not the nature of the U. S. government to reduce or eliminate taxes. It would be interesting to see what effect the action would have on the economy generally. It would be interesting to see how many ways of spending public money, necessitating continued increases in existing taxes and a diligent search for new taxes.

It would be a stimulating experience if the U. S. government would even think about eliminating a tax. Talking is as far as the matter would go.

About the only thing that would have a chance of reversing the trend would be a real flood of mail and telegrams to congressmen from weary taxpayers. If only one tax were to be terminated, then taxpayers would have a glimmer of hope and an opening wedge that might be broadened.

IT CAN HAPPEN HERE

The Republicans' choice for mayor of New York, State Atty. Gen. Louis Lefkowitz, may or may not make big political history this fall in a thrust against that city's Democratic fortress. But already he has carved himself a unique minor niche.

NOT IMMUNE

It is natural and proper for United States legislators to concern themselves with crime in Washington, since congress governs the District of Columbia.

Washington

WASHINGTON—'Do you believe,' asks M. T. of that such tours as Vice President Johnson's Southeast Asia and Pacific tour... WASHINGTON—'Do you believe,' asks M. T. of that such tours as Vice President Johnson's Southeast Asia and Pacific tour...

JUST AS BAD OFF

Stevenson himself discovered this when he tried to obtain cooperation in ousting or boycotting Fidel Castro. The Cuban dictator, he found, is so popular with the masses that government officials fear to hate him and not dare to oppose him openly.

This review is not a mere outpouring of personal opinion or criticism. It is a collection of almost every comment on our foreign aid program by experienced members of congress who have dealt with this problem for many years.

JFK WILL RUN AGAIN

There is a rumor that President Kennedy will run for a second term. How and when he might do so is not clear.

NEED TO ENFORCE LAWS

He could strengthen himself even further in Dixie, the would-be Democrat in the military and naval service. It is to enforce the laws impartially, and not become a vocally fanatical crusader for any cause.

LOGIC IS ON THEIR SIDE

Secretary of Interior Udall and Bonneville Power Administrator Luce have logic on their side in arguing that the best way to produce kilowatts for the Bonneville grid is to produce them at the site of the dam.

Car, Bicycle Crash Noted

BURLEY, June 24—Gene Nevearez, 12, and Ramon Nevearez, 9, children of Mr. and Mrs. Reynaldo Nevearez, Burley, were treated and released from Cassia Memorial hospital Thursday evening after the bicycle on which they were riding was struck by a 1955 Pontiac driven by Irene Vanbeuren, 21, Heyburn.

The accident occurred at 9:25 p.m. It was reported that the boys drove from a side road into the path of the Pontiac. Police said tire marks indicated the auto skidded in loose gravel for 63 feet and then stopped when the driver collided.

The older boy was pumping the bicycle and the younger boy was riding on the handle bar. Both had on dark clothing and there were no lights or reflectors on the bicycle, officers noted. The handlebar "broke" a headlight on the Pontiac.

Van Leuven was cited for operating a vehicle on a restricted driver's license. He is reported to driving from 7 a.m. until 7 p.m.

School Units One-Tenth of 1946 Number

BOISE, June 24 (AP)—Idaho's school districts number only about one-tenth as many as 18 years ago when the school reorganization program began—but the state's top school official said today he believes further consolidations would be wise.

"We're not advocating that any of our reorganized districts make further consolidations right now," said D. F. Engelking, state superintendent of public instruction. "But studies made nationally show that as time goes on, it is for the better interest of the schools to work toward large units."

Idaho began its reorganization program July 1, 1946, when school districts numbered 1,110. At the present time there are only 129 districts and 10 of those will go out of existence June 30. Of the present districts, 105 operate high schools.

The 1959 legislature set the cutoff date for the reorganization program at June 30, this year. At that time, any remaining common districts—there are now 10—lose the power to levy taxes and must be attached to adjacent reorganized districts.

The state department of education is arranging for the annexations and local school officials have been notified.

"We are not attempting to be dictatorial in those annexations," Engelking said. "They are being proposed after considerable study. Generally speaking we try to give the people involved the choice of the district to which they will be attached, although we want to be certain the annexation plan is feasible."

Of the 10 remaining common school districts, four are in Canyon county, two are in Jerome county, two in Owyhee county and one each in Gooding and Boise counties.

The department is proposing those annexations: Pils City and Blaine to Jerome; Orono to Bruneau-Grandview; Central Park to Middleton; South Side Boulevard and Greenhurst, Nampa; Knowlton Heights and Opener to Marsing; Orchard Valley to Wendell; and Banks to Garden Valley.

Preview and Introduction To Camp Tawakani Is Set

A special preview and introduction to the coming weeks at Camp Tawakani will be held for Blue Birds and Camp Fire Girls...

All who have been to camp in previous years, those who plan to go this year and other interested girls are invited to attend the "camp reunion" at which Marjorie Schroyer, camp director, will preside.

Camp seasons will start July 1 for Blue Birds, for a four-day session, and July 11 and 24 for six-day Camp Fire Girls sessions.

At the reunion Monday, Miss Schroyer will introduce counselors for the summer and will reveal new plans she has for the year.

Program leaders will be Linda Pond, VI Conner, Judy Kay Smith, Cecelia Zerle, and Elaine Thompson. Burley, all counselors are of college age and, like the program leaders, most of them have had many years in Camp Fire.

The program at camp will include woodwork, nature study, craft, creative art, recreation, cook-out for Blue Birds and overnight trips for Camp Fire Girls as well as other customary camp activities.

Many activities at the camp will be directed toward earning of Camp Fire honors. Miss Schroyer points out, but adds that this "should not deter non-Camp Fire Girls who want to come."

Having just earned her master's degrees with emphasis on education and outdoor education, Miss Schroyer points out that camp offers "an opportunity for girls to be socially, mentally, spiritually and physically toward useful citizenship."

Camp Tawakani will increase its physical assets this year with the construction of two new cabins, an eight-girl cabin made possible by $500 winnings in a KLEKK rally promotion this spring, and a six-girl cabin being erected and built by the Twin Falls Board of Work parties as needed to complete these buildings. Plans also call for cabins every week-end before the first session.

In addition to counselors and aides, the camp staff will include Mrs. Audrey Barker, Kimberly, H. H. Hilt, cabin being erected and built by the Twin Falls Board of Work parties as needed to complete these buildings. Plans also call for cabins every week-end before the first session.

There should be better blocking in the knits, Mrs. Schultz continued, and quilt blocks and finishing strips should be cut on the grain line, bias edgings should join on the bias and corners should be mitered.

Care of Your Children

Summer brings thirsty days and children are the thiriest of all thirsty ones. They need plenty of fresh, cool water. They will come into the house, sweating and their heads aching for the icebox to get ice for their glasses of water. This is understandable, but it is better for them to take their time about gulping down cold water. If they have to grind their teeth where a drink can be had, they are delayed a bit, which is a fine idea.

Shockley Stands Among Pioneer Batting Leaders In First Year of Pro Ball

Only one thing is certain about the erratic Magic Valley Cowboy this year and that is John Shockley is going to get his hits. Shockley, a hard-hitting pitcher turned batter, has been named one of the Pioneer league's first year of pro ball, the strapping native of Georgetown, Del., already is highly praised by the Philadelphia Phillies.

There are a lot of new things going around Shockley this season but it hasn't affected his bat. After being a pitcher all his competitive days, he was signed by the Phillies as a first baseman and that position still gives him surprises.

"I like playing first base because it's a clean-cut job and it's regular. But it seems like every something new coming up every day—something that I'm not quite sure about," says the 6-foot, 215-lb. 200-pound Easterner.

Shockley came out West to play ball. He jammed his right hand sliding into second base early in the season. After sitting out two games, he asked to come back into the service. His return was a little painful and for several games he lost the coordination of his powerful swing by favoring the injured wrist. He fell out of the 400 hitting class to about 250. But as the wrist healed, so did the batting average and it has climbed back up to its current level and stayed around there with no sign of letting up.

Eight now the left-handed hitter feels his swing is at its best. "I'm getting around on the ball a lot better now. I'm pulling almost everything," he says.

The injuries haven't left him entirely alone. In the last home stand, John was hit in the mouth by a line drive during batting practice. The smash opened up a large cut inside his mouth and he was rushed to the hospital for treatment.

"He was making sure he got back in time for the game," said John. "I have a 2-year-old kid, I'm already working on him, the same way. All the way out there and while we were there he was asking my family."

John, who slugged with the Phillies for a reported $50,000 this year and first is John Shockley, a hard-hitting pitcher turned batter, has been named one of the Pioneer league's first year of pro ball, the strapping native of Georgetown, Del., already is highly praised by the Philadelphia Phillies.

Shockley came out West to play ball. He jammed his right hand sliding into second base early in the season. After sitting out two games, he asked to come back into the service. His return was a little painful and for several games he lost the coordination of his powerful swing by favoring the injured wrist. He fell out of the 400 hitting class to about 250. But as the wrist healed, so did the batting average and it has climbed back up to its current level and stayed around there with no sign of letting up.

Eight now the left-handed hitter feels his swing is at its best. "I'm getting around on the ball a lot better now. I'm pulling almost everything," he says.

The injuries haven't left him entirely alone. In the last home stand, John was hit in the mouth by a line drive during batting practice. The smash opened up a large cut inside his mouth and he was rushed to the hospital for treatment.

"He was making sure he got back in time for the game," said John. "I have a 2-year-old kid, I'm already working on him, the same way. All the way out there and while we were there he was asking my family."

JOHN SHOCKLEY

It was in the hospital with hematitis when the Phillie scout talked to me about playing first base and getting as a hitter. I liked to pitch but I wanted to play everyday. I had played first base a few times but I also played in the outfield. I guess I just liked being in the infield.

"I guess I kinda wanted to see cowboys walking down the streets and things like that," he chuckled. "Yes," he acknowledged, "I've seen them, especially in Great Falls."

"But it's too big out here. You get on the bus and go and go and still you don't come to anything unless you get to the town you're going to. There's nothing but land and space between."

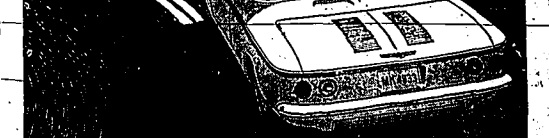

The concrete of opinion remains, particularly in the Jayco park pressbox, that Shockley isn't going to stay too long in the west. Despite his bulk he's been timed at 4.8 on the 60-yard dash in a baseball suit, his pitching career speaks for the strength of his arm and then there's always that 278 batting average.

Area Writer Impressed With Revolutions of 20th Century

Never, in all of human history, has a single generation been obliged to compress into a few thousand years of technical change compressed into one decade.

Our country was born and matured in the first industrial revolution that began about 1776. We are now poised on the threshold of the second industrial revolution—a revolution which may make the turbulent events of the 19th century look like the spray that precedes the tidal wave.

Indeed our world revolves at the convergence of at least seven different revolutions: (1) the technical revolution spurred by automation, transistors, the giant calculators, new chemistry, electronics and the accelerating pace of invention; (2) the communications revolution brought by broadcast circuit television, inter-continental mass media, jet travel, missiles, international agencies and new techniques for influencing opinion through propaganda; (3) the fuel and power revolution which started with the dawn of atomic energy; (4) the anti-colonial revolution of the Afro-Asian people; (5) the demographic revolution triggered by the introduction of modern medicine resulting in a population explosion; (6) the extra-terrestrial revolution, which means that some of our great-grandchildren may be born on Earth if they are destined to be born—on Earth—and all the complex, intricate, and intricate plotting all there.

But there are social dynamics as well. What is happening to the internal sociology and value systems of America is almost extraordinary as what is implied by science, the human character of the world's non-white races and the latency to outer space. Here, too, in the myths, dreams, and myths of our own people, time has compressed the history not a civilisation into the lifetime of a single man.

Americans stand on the threshold of adventure unlimited. All of the adventures of history have been recreated in the 50th century for those who dare to risk them. Our generation can help lead the human race into brighter new horizons, for our world has resources of energy and communication which can conquer poverty and bring education to the masses provided we can keep evil men from perverting that dream.

Appeal Bond for Ranches Is Filed

A $500 appeal bond was posted Friday with the district court in Twin Falls by the Glenn Dale ranches, Inc. Buhi, in the firm's suit against Ralph G. Clark, J. W. Beck and K. T. Butler, members of the review committee for the U. S. department of agriculture.

John C. Hepworth, Buhi attorney who represents the firm, explained his client seeks to recover $2,252.44 penalty assessed for not conforming to the mixed grain ratio of 25 per cent wheat and 75 per cent barley previously required by the department of agriculture.

This winter, U. S. Senator Frank Church appealed to President Kennedy and had the ruling changed to allow a 150 mix after Idaho ranchers and farmers had appealed to the Idaho senator for a higher ratio.

Ex-Resident Paints Portrait on Velvet

Merlo Trehal, Elko, former resident of Twin Falls, displays one of the unusual paintings he has been doing on velvet in the last six months. He is using the technique originated and made famous by the late Edgar Leeteg. Some of Leeteg's paintings are on display at Herrett's Jewelry, Twin Falls. Trehal has been a hobbyist painter since high school days, but didn't attempt this form until last winter. Several of his paintings are on display in the Stockman's hotel in Elko. Merlo Trehal, former Twin Falls resident, who now lives in Elko, visited Twin Falls in 1949 to paint trees here and now operates a sign shop in Elko. He is an avid painter of velvet. Last February he became interested in the method of painting devised by the late Edgar Leeteg, some of whose paintings are on display at Herrett's Jewelry store here.

"Do-It-Yourself" Arena Constructed by Parents

One of the most ambitious do-it-yourself club projects undertaken recently in Twin Falls, the riding arena built for members of the Twin Falls Junior Riding Club, has been completed. The arena has been constructed by the parents of the members. It was started in late February and completed in early June. The arena was built by work parties, who have met and devoted both time, materials and talent to the project. It is located at the Park Ranch, owned by Cliff, Tim and Keith Qualls. Space for the arena was provided for—donated—by the Qualls family for the riding club. Tim Qualls, who is the head of the riding club, says the sturdiness of the members turned out for about three work parties in the last few months to complete the arena. He says from 10 to 12 couples worked during each session. All work parties were on (Continued on Page 14, Column 2)

Jolly Side Is Displayed by Congressmen

By ARTHUR EDSON
 WASHINGTON, June 24 (AP)—In this increasingly troubled world, where even the greatest of men are often sick, it's a pleasure to report that congress is still joggling along as full of jollity as ever. Not only is it full of a lot of other things besides jollity, Boreas, for instance. It is now apparent that many taxpayers, peered at Washington, have taken their horrible revenge by sending to congress the most uninteresting character they've ever met. Get a gaggle of these queaking monotonously in what some humorist has called a debate, and even the flowers on the senate rug begin to wilt. But the strong-hearted and the sturdy-eyed who hang on long enough will get their little reward. Sooner or later that well-known television entertainer, Sen. Everett McKinley Dirksen, R., Ill., will take the floor. No other senator can beat his way around the ornamental bush with a greater flourish. No one else can take a simple statement and clothe it in such splendid ornament. When, for example, Dirksen wants to define his position philosophically it comes out like this: "I do not know whether I am a lion or a mouse." (Continued on Page 14, Column 2)

Bygone Days Revived by Discovery Of Machine for Knitting of Sox

GOODING, June 24—You never know what you'll find under an old building. When workers recently tore out an old floor in a Gooding seed company warehouse they discovered a machine that is "better than a hundred hands." It is an old time sock knitting machine, and it is the most "extraneous" machine imaginable. It looks like a mechanical engineer's nightmare, but evidently it was a valued device in early days—at least it sold for $87.50 in the days when a dollar carried more value than now. It was found about a week ago by Elmer Meyer, a seed company employee. The machine was cleaned and put together and put in "near operating condition" by Claude Chess, seed company field man. It was found in a wooden box (something equally uncommon) beneath the floor. It was disassembled, dirty, but obviously a machine that had never been used. After Chess gave it a bath in carburetor solvent and a coat of new paint the machine looked like new. Putting it together was a problem. There were no instructions, just the illustration of the assembled machine on the side of the box. Using this and a little of his own imagination, Chess succeeded in assembling the machine with the parts available. There still are some parts missing. Included with the sock knitter was a winding mechanism, to be used for winding the yarn on the feed spool from bulk yarn. There also were two spools of yarn with the machine, one black and one gray. The machine was delivered to Gooding in December, 1922. It was manufactured by the Auto Knitter Hosiery company, Buffalo, N. Y. The box bears the motto, "Auto Knitter, Better than a Hundred Hands." The machine is well made and very sturdy.

Claude Chess, fieldman for the Gooding seed company, displays a sock-knitting machine he and other workers found under the floor of one of the company's warehouses. It was marketed in the 1920's. The price marked on the box was $87.50. Although most of the parts were found, Chess says a few minor parts are missing. He intends to keep searching for the parts and eventually put it in working order. (Staff photo-engraving)

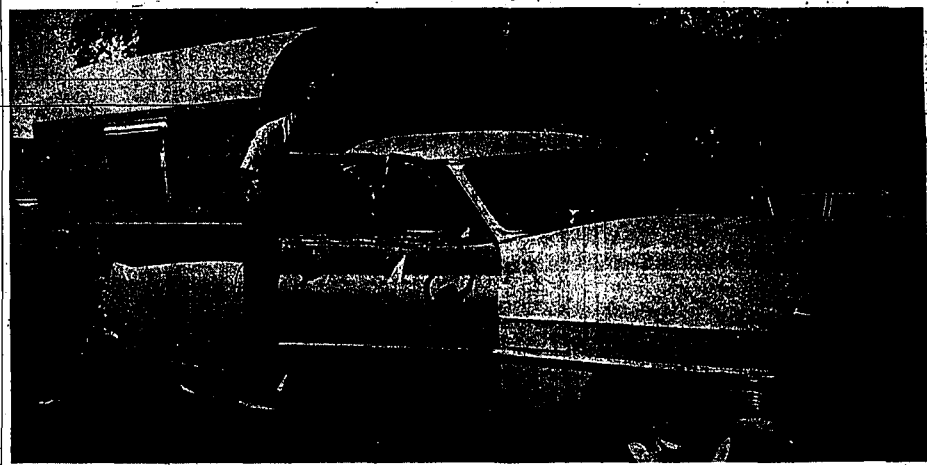

The building where the machine was found is located behind the warehouse, across the street from the main building of the Gooding Seed company. Chess says the building has been there for about 30 years and has been used for several things. There are enough parts missing from the machine so that it can't be operated, but Chess says he will keep looking for parts and hopes eventually to get the machine in working order.

quite famous, according to Trehal. Trehal has read articles on the technique written by both Leeteg and Erwin. Last winter he completed to try it. Since February he has completed many canvases, mostly portraits of animals. He says he is interested in this material because the map on this velvet is shorter than regular velvet. When the article was written by Paul and Helen (Continued on Page 14, Column 2)

Converted Cadillac Made Into Unusual Camping Outfit

This is the ultimate in outdoor living—a Cadillac pickup truck with a camper. Here, Emil Bordewick gets ready to step out of the hot sun into the air-conditioned interior of the cab. Bordewick decided to have a 1953 model converted into a pickup truck last summer. By adding the camper on the back it has become certainly one of the most comfortable mobile camping outfits in the Magic Valley area. If not the entire Northwest. The conversion work was done by the Larion's in Twin Falls. Bordewick says the truck drives as well now as it ever did. (Staff photo-engraving)

Test Flight in Air Force X15 Is Lonely Experience

By RALPH DIGHTON
 OVERT WENDOVER AIR FORCE BASE, Utah, June 24 (AP)—You're alone in the cockpit of the rocket ship X15, eight miles high and 400 miles from home. In the next few minutes you will drop away from your 1953 mother ship, shoot straight up at 4,000 miles per hour to a height of 90 miles then try to get back to earth alive. Man has gone faster and higher into space and back in a rocket-craft capsule—but he was only a worm in a bean shot into the air, with no control over his flight. Your job is to prove man can leave and reenter the atmosphere with the precise control needed for space ships of the future. The X15 so far has climbed to just over 32 miles high. Just last Friday one soared to a record mile-a-second speed — 3,690 miles an hour. As you near the launch point, monitoring systems on the ground and in the big eight-foot X15 are running electronic fingers over every working part of your plane. Fuel pressure—OK. Hydraulic control—OK. Auxiliary power—OK. Everything works. You check and re-check each of the 30 dials and 15 lights massed on the control panel inches from your nose in the cramped cockpit. Your right hand pulls back on the stick between your legs. The old girl practically stands on her tail, straining to escape into the dark sky above. The altimeter, which registered 41,000 feet when you hit the ignition switch, shows 30,000, then 100,000, then 125,000 feet. Your speed jumps from 600 miles an hour to 1,000—2,000—3,000 miles per hour. Now you are at the fringe of the atmosphere—as at the edge of man's experience. Whatever you do from here on will have a trail for tomorrow's spaceman. Little more than a minute and (Continued on Page 14, Column 2)

Life in MAGIC VALLEY

An interest in farm machinery since he was a youth has resulted in a varied array of more than 100 different farm implement models in the collection of Wuebbenhorst's collection.

Wuebbenhorst's collection boasts scale models dating back to 1924. Some of the models were made to his own designs, he recalls, and the later models he acquired through various means.

The collection holds a special place in the Wuebbenhorst home and can be found in the family room.

Wuebbenhorst is handing down the collection to his 13-year-old son, Del Gene, who has assisted his father during the past few years in restoring the scale models to their original state.

The display shows the great contrast between the old, out-dated types of tractors and farm equipment and the new, modern type models.

The smallest models to be found in the collection, also the oldest, are a miniature Avery beam scale and a miniature Case combine and an Avery machine engine, the original of which is almost nonexistent.

Also among the oldest models is a tractor made about 1928 by the Wallace Tractor company which later became Massey-Harris company and still later the Massey Ferguson company.

Other antique items include a loose jaw loader, dating back to 1907, which represents the first spreader, and an International—true—of—1917—vintage. This still rolls on its original tires.

An interesting model to be found in the collection is the Christie International Diesel crawler (bulldozer) equipped with tracks, which was built in 1919.

There is a brightly painted red and green grain wagon pulled by horses, which represents a model of a 1944 English-made T. E. H. tractor and a 1944 Massey-Harris tractor made in Canada.

The only model Wuebbenhorst feels is lacking in his collection is an old type Furston tractor. He owned one at one time, but it is where his father moved. Wuebbenhorst hopes if anyone has this item he would contact him so he could bring his collection up to date.

Wuebbenhorst pointed out his collection has become so large he now is adding only new tractors, balers and combine models each year from companies who continue to make changes in their models.

This hobby has served as a family project for years, according to Mrs. Wuebbenhorst, who also enjoys the project. She reported much of their spare time through the years had been devoted to restoring the models to their original state.

When a model is required in bad shape a unique procedure is used to restore it to its former condition. Models are removed and the wheel is fired in a furnace to remove all the old traces of paint. It is sanded, repainted to its original color, needed repairs made and wheels replaced.

At present, Mrs. Wuebbenhorst notes all the models are in good shape and occasionally an accident occurs when work must be done on one of the models. Materials such as paint, wheels and various parts needed to make repairs are always kept on hand in a special drawer.

To Wuebbenhorst's knowledge he is the only one in this area with such a collection. His hobby has been part of his personal life as he farmed for several years and now of owner-manager of the Valley Tractor and Implement company in Buhl.

"The best surprise of my 71 years," exclaimed Mrs. E. O. Bell, (WUEBBENHORST), after she was presented the most loyal Richfield fan plaque by Coach Dale Chatterton, Richfield.

The unique award presentation to Mrs. Bell was made at the banquet honoring Richfield high school student athletes and coaches. Mrs. Bell's attendance at the banquet was not unusual, as she had been an invited guest for many years.

Mrs. Bell later realized the team members' attention to her arrival at the banquet was a "good riddance." Dressed in their best the boys were all lined up in the hall to greet her.

"Don't they look nice?" asked the coach.

Mrs. Bell answered, "Yes, but I can't see them. They would look better to her dressed in their basketball suits, out on the floor ready to play." Mrs. Bell's attention later was the most loyal fan plaque.

Her interest in ball games reached a peak when her oldest son, Richfield, played in junior high basketball in Van Duser. Mr. Her interest in ball games has been continued by her son who has attended ball games in Richfield.

During long distances has not caused Mrs. Bell to miss a ball game whenever Richfield plays. She and her husband are two of the distant game scenes where the Richfield players have been encouraged by her welcome presence.

Ball games even take preference over Mrs. Bell's fishing hobby. Her husband and her son are especially proud of her fishing prowess in local waters—Little Wood river and Snake river.

However, ball games remain her chief diversion and probably inspired by her welcome presence at home. She lives directly across the street from the two Richfield schools, the marriage house in town to the ball games.

World Brightened Some by Jollity of U.S. Congressmen in Lighter Moments

(Press Page 15)

I think I'm a garden variety conservative. Now let me move along to a discussion of the minority leader in having with Sen. Allen J. Ellender, D., Elmer.

Ellender has a paper which he says represents President Kennedy's view on an amendment which he has signed the paper.

"Here's the way it looks in Dirksen's eyes," he says, "I wish to suggest to my distinguished friend from Louisiana that if he will call up his chief in the White House, I am sure we can get one of the riding papers to get on his horse and dash down there and get the statement. It should not take more than an hour."

"I would like to see this matter laid out in official fashion. I would like to see the sentiment documented, and then I would like to see the signature at the bottom of the paper."

"There is nothing that gives such stability to a piece of paper as the signature of a senator," Ellender said. "The senator is not inclined to say that the paper is not authentic. It is."

Dirksen: "Oh, indeed not. My friend is the soul of all that is true and authentic. He would never desire to do anything—any sentiment—imposed on someone unless it was in a religiously stated as a fact because his reputation for probity and integrity is absolute and unimpeachable."

Ellender: "And beyond reproach, too."

"Yes," said Dirksen, the model of amiability. "But I would still like to see the signature."

If a senator were to move one of his bills along faster, he may ask for copiers. Dirksen agrees a bill should be considered on its own merits and not on how many copies it has.

But he and his wife wanted to throw a good will law.

"I would like to see this resolution outlawing the en-ty business of copiership. I think it is wicked. I think it is evil. I think it is unjustified. I think it is un-American. And if someone will hand me a copy of 'Right's' magazine, I am proud to emphasize my belief that copiership of measures in the House is un-American."

Having isolated the virus, Dirksen bowed to the legislative facts of life and allowed it.

Or in his more picturesque words: "So far as it now obtains, I may just as well become a part of that inequity and ask for copiership."

Senate attendance is rarely large, but as the day wears on and the senators wear out, you often can spot the senators present on one hand, with a finger or two left unemployed.

Which accounts for an exchange between Sen. Mike Mansfield, Democratic leader from Montana, and Sen. Barry Goldwater, R., Arizona.

Mansfield: "I think the senator is entitled to a larger audience than is presently given."

Goldwater: "I do not know that I am entitled to it."

"I do not know that I am entitled to it," Goldwater said emphatically. "I am not sure that I know the difference between the brilliance of the remarks are such that they are entitled to a larger audience."

"But I am not sure that I know the difference between the brilliance of the remarks are such that they are entitled to a larger audience."

"The senator from Montana and I, both come from Western states where we are used to standing in the broad expanses where there is nothing but the Lord and the wind."

"In this chamber sometimes we do not have the Lord present, but we always have the wind. So the lonely Goldwater dejected until the next day, when blow into the old wind chamber.

The house, with 437 members, has such severe time limitations that many senators would find it difficult to do their best with the short time available."

"But some of congress' gayest stuff never shows up on the floor at all. A congressman who reads something he likes can insert it

Former Resident's Paint Experiments On Velvet Canvas Arouse Interest

That paints on velvet are all actually painted on is the tip of the iceberg. If too much paint is applied the nap will mat, destroying the effect.

Anyone who has been seeing paintings in the three-dimensional and life-like effect.

Trehal has learned that only the best oil paints are practical. He explains cheap paints have more oil in relation to pigment. When there is excess oil, too much oil is absorbed in the cloth, blurring detail.

The paintings have to be painted over the course of several sittings and the paint has to be applied in several layers.

But this is just one of the complications. All of Trehal's paintings are on black velvet. The dark background has a greying action on any paint applied to its surface. Mixing and applying paint in the dark, according to Trehal, any time a paint is applied to a velvet background, color must be considered. It is two or three weeks after a painting is finished before the final color is set.

The artist must work slowly, with minimum of paint on his brush. Mistakes that are minor can be corrected immediately by wiping with white and use paint thinner. But mistakes must be minor and there can't be many. It is impossible to paint over a mistake, as in regular oil painting. Another difference is the dark background and the utilization when creating the shadow areas of a portrait. If a shadow is dark, no paint is applied. Such areas as hair, eyebrows, clothing shadows, eyes and other areas remain as plain velvet.

To Trehal's knowledge, no painter has ever used other than black velvet. But he intends to experiment with white and use the background color to form the highlights, rather than shadow areas.

Trehal believes one of the reasons the paintings have depth and exhibit life-like quality is because velvet has depth on the cloth reflects light in a different manner than regular oil paintings, more life human skin.

The technique is much easier to use when working with a model who is a cosplayer or a volunteer. The shadow areas can be difficult to great advantage with such a model. Trehal says children are utilized to paint, compared to an older person.

One of his most interesting portraits is of Winnemucca, the Indian. Trehal did the portrait by

Camping Outfit Has Built-in Comforts

Bordewick lifts up one of the doors that were built into the side of the truck and displays the seats for the camper store. The back shop put doors on both sides of the truck. The other one houses tools and fishing gear. The camper can be removed from the truck by loosening four spring-loaded bolts. (Staff photo-photography) chance. Bordewick intended to trade the 1953 sedan off last winter. But when he discovered how little the car was worth on a trade, he decided he would rather keep it and use it for some purpose.

1953 Cadillac Sedan Is Changed Into Pickup Truck; Camper Mounted on It

He also hated to give up the $400 air conditioning system in the car. He had grown fond of the air cooler, especially during hot months.

Last winter he spied a pickup truck camper unit on sale. He wanted the camper, but didn't have a pickup truck. It occurred to him to use the Cadillac.

Larry Jenkins was surprised but said it could be done.

Bordewick says, "The car had only 112,000 miles on it. I figured it was only about half worn out and was good for many more years of driving." So the process of turning the sedan into a pickup truck began.

The back shell and trunk area were removed and turned into a truck bed. The front cab was fastened by welding on the back of the cab of a 1953 GMC pickup truck salvaged from a wreck.

The 550-pound camper was placed on an angle iron frame and bolted down with four spring-loaded bolts. The front suspension was realigned because of added weight on the back end.

Special shock absorbers with overload springs were installed to handle the weight and the camper was rewired to correspond with the "truck's" electrical system. Two doors for storage space were installed on the side of the truck. In the area where the back doors had been, one door houses the gas bottle for the camper above and the other is for tools and fishing equipment. The truck was painted a bright blue.

Now the big air conditioner supplies only the cab of the truck, instead of a large sedan. It is more than adequate and will lower the temperature of the cab to the low 70's in hot weather within two or three minutes.

With all the paraphernalia on the back of the truck, one might think the outfit would be awkward. But Bordewick notices no difference except for some wind resistance when the wind is gusty. In fact, he leaves his car at home and drives the truck every day.

Last week-end he gave the outfit its maiden voyage and drove to Alturas lake. He breezed over Ca-

Guests were introduced by Mrs. Emma McIntosh, program chairman. They spoke on parliamentary procedure of the legislature and the school bill, the juvenile delinquency, driver training and the drug bill.

Gibson told of the duties of the door men at the legislature. Peterson stressed the formality of the opening of legislature.

The next regular meeting will be Oct. 16.

He made the honor pin with no effort, noting his only trouble was keeping a light rein on the sazer engine.

New Arena Provided for Junior Riding Club Use

Members of the Twin Falls Junior Riding club race around the new arena at the Park ranch, northeast of Twin Falls. This is a new arena built by parents of club members. It is completely lighted and the members will be able to practice at night for the many rodeos and fairs where they will perform throughout the summer. (Staff photo-photography)

"Do-It-Yourself" Arena Is Constructed By Parents of T.F. Junior Riding Club

The week-end, so the event concluded about three feet from the arena, to protect the fence from livestock charging against it. There is a group of riders interested in calf roping, and the fall will protect the fence from the running horse.

There are about 80 members in the club, divided into drill teams. The team performs at rodeos, fairs and horse shows throughout the state. The performing team has from 25 to 34 members, depending on the size of the arena.

The new arena, 300 feet long and 150 feet wide, gives the team a place to practice drill maneuvers. It is surrounded by a high double-thickness sheep fence, topped by six-foot rail. Fence posts are made of six- by eight-inch railroad ties. The sturdy posts are spaced only five feet apart. On the inside of the fence there is a guard rail, installed about three feet from the arena, to protect the fence from livestock charging against it. There is a group of riders interested in calf roping, and the fall will protect the fence from the running horse.

The arena also is equipped with lights. There are 10 power poles around the outside, equipped with 150-watt bulbs. The only thing left to do on the arena is to connect the poles to the power line.

Until the electricity is connected, the drill teams will rehearse during the afternoon. Afterwards they will rehearse in the evening when it is cooler. Qualls says the team will rehearse two times a week (until after the Nampa Stampede).

Practically all of the materials used in the arena were donated by members of the club. The railroad ties and the fencing came from a multitude of farms and ranches, according to Qualls.

Anything that had to be purchased was purchased by the owners of the ranch. In addition to the construction of the fencing and the roping chutes at the west end of the arena, a good deal of work went into leveling the land for the riding area. There were large boulders in the arena. They were blasted out with dynamite and then the land was leveled.

But the arena isn't limited to use by the drill team only. Qualls notes that it is also for the use of the parents of the team.

What do YOU know about TAXES?

Here's a quick quiz—and the answers—on some tax facts that surprisingly few people know.

- How much of the taxpayers' money has been used to put the federal government into the electric power business?
answer: So-called "public power" has already cost American taxpayers $5,500,000,000.
- How much more are lobbyists for government-in-business trying to get?
answer: Pressure groups for federal "public power" are seeking $10,000,000,000 to put the government even further into the electric business.
- Is this government spending necessary?
answer: No, it is not. America's independent light and power companies are ready and able to supply all the low-price dependable electric power this country will need—without depending on your tax money.

Very few of your friends and neighbors know all these important facts. When enough people know, such unnecessary tax spending will be stopped.

Close Look at "Log" in Canal Reveals Big Hip Bone of Prehistoric Mammoth

HAZELTON, June 24 — Take a close look at that next log you see when you go fishing. It might be a prehistoric bone. At least that's the experience of Elmer Cox and James Curd, who work for the Brandon and Mechem ranch near Hazelton.

The men and several companions were walking along the north-side canal when Cox spotted what he thought was a log sticking above the surface of a small pool. The water was turned out of the canal at that time and the bed of the canal was filled with small pools.

The more Cox and Curd looked at the log, the more it looked like a bone. After scrambling along in the water and tugging it out of the mud it turned out to be a bone about three feet long.

This particular bone was one of the smaller bones of a prehistoric mammoth. Curd called the "Times-News" to tell of the discovery and was referred to Don Crabtree, who has made a study of the prehistoric animals. Crabtree identified the bone, noting that it is in a good state of preservation and one of the best he has ever seen.

Curd found the bone in a large pool of water about two miles downstream from Milner dam in the North Side canal. He estimates that when the water is flowing normally in the canal the bone would have been about 15 feet under the surface.

It was located in a large hole that had been washed by the current. Curd says Crabtree noted there are probably other bones in the area. The hip bone is in such good preservation that the marks where the muscles attached to the bone are still present.

Cox says there is too much water in the canal during normal times to hunt any other bones. Curd and Cox intend to varnish the bone to preserve it and then contact personnel at Idaho State college on their discovery.

Gen. Curtis LeMay, "Old Ironpants" Of Air Force Legend, Gets Job Done

By DEB PRICE
WASHINGTON, June 24 (AP)—Wherever he goes the legend of Gen. Curtis LeMay, the tough air force hero, always precedes LeMay, the man.

Non-nuclear wars in which the role of the air force will be limited to team membership with the army and navy on an equal footing.

may well carry over into the meetings of the joint chiefs of staff. In June 1950 LeMay told a Senate subcommittee that the air force's weapons systems have proved to be becoming more and more apparent that the function of individual services are beginning to overlap.

There were those in Washington who said—some in print—that the blunt, abrupt LeMay would never get the top job, that he could never adjust to the niceties of political life where ambiguous language is often more highly regarded than plain talk.

LeMay has described himself as a mixed force man; that is, he believes a strategic deterrent should consist of both bombers and missiles. He once said the guided missile would never replace the manned aircraft because "it can't think."

LeMay answered none. He pointed out that he was not yet chief of staff and that to answer the questions prior to his interview with the press would be improper.

Indeed, LeMay pioneered the use of management controls in the air force. He has been a quality producer—the strategic air command.

LeMay would not win any kind of popularity contest with the general public and admirals of the army, navy and these altitudinarians.

Salmon Fishing Is Popular Gem Sport

Fish and game department spokesman say there is a tendency for the harvest ratio of salmon to be increased relative to the size of the run. This means the bigger the salmon runs, the greater the number of days fished. There are three runs of salmon from the ocean to Idaho spawning streams. These are called spring, summer and fall chinook. The Salmon river and tributaries accommodate about 100,000 salmon a year, while the fall chinook spawn below Swan falls in the Snake River. (Fish and game department photo—staff engraving)

Spring Chinook Salmon Are Returning Into Columbia River Tributary Waters

BY JIM HUBBARD

Idaho Fish and Game Department spring chinook salmon are back in Idaho's tributary waters of the Columbia river system nearly 40,000 miles from the ocean and the summer-run is not far behind. While this always is exciting news, the 1961 runs have been dreamed about with more zest than usual because many sports fishermen hope for at least a tie with the fabulous spawning activity because of the summer of 1957. That was the greatest ever since recorded in Idaho began.

The life of the majority of chinook salmon normally is four years from egg to open maturity and return to Idaho the following year. Thus 1961 salmon seasons have awaited impatiently because the spawning chinook count at Bonneville dam four years ago totaled 120,441, more than twice the number for 1956. Moreover, records for the same year show a total of 24,211 summer run chinook was tallied.

This is the highest summer run in nearly a quarter century of fish counting at Bonneville.

The 1961 runs to date, however, show an unusual number of 5-year-olds. This is true not only of the spring chinook run, which already is being harvested in Idaho, but also of the first summer run fish. Indeed the latter have more 5-year-old fish than the spring run, according to reports from the lower Columbia river basin.

Because of the large number of older fish, this year's spring chinook are bigger and heavier on the average than in most years. Already the existing Idaho record for chinook is a 40-pounder taken in 1958, one that topped by one weighing 47 pounds and measuring 47 1/2 inches in length. It was taken from the Salmon river near Whitebird—the last week in April.

Reports from Oregon say that the total spring chinook run into the Columbia river is slightly bigger this year but slower by nearly the large migration of 1957. This means that the expected 1961 run escapement has not been as good. The size of the spring run has not been determined as yet. The total spring run was counted by adding the commercial chinook harvest on the lower Columbia to the Bonneville dam escapement.

Mature salmon are grouped into three age classes—the 2, 4 and 5-year-olds. Data collected during the past year and in 1961 to date show that the return from the 1956 brood stock has been good. The vanguard of the 1961 summer chinook run entered the Columbia the latter part of May and these salmon had even more 5-year-olds than the spring run, according to scale and length studies.

Biologists agencies take scale samples for laboratory analysis from the lower Columbia commercial fishery and visual length frequency readings of fish on the counting board at Bonneville dam. Dead fish also are measured and examined to determine spawning success. Aerial counts are made later of chinook nests or redd to learn trends in all major areas.

Successful salmon anglers wanting to "age" their catches can do so by using the following data:

1. Salmon up to 24 inches in length are 3 years old.
2. Salmon 24 to 31 inches are 4 years old.
3. Salmon over 31 inches are 5 years old. Of course, there is a big overlap in these size-age classes.

Another "rule-of-thumb" is that "jacks," those precocious 3-year-olds, nearly always are males, and the 5-year-old fish usually are females. Most years males outnumber females in chinook salmon runs.

There seems to be a tendency for the harvest ratio to be inversely related to the size of the run. It works like this: When the spring and summer chinook runs are large, the fall chinook are large, the number of days fished is greater than during a year with a lesser run. A similar escapement of brood run to spawning gravel is related to the number of salmon that will enter a river three, four, or even five years hence. There must be at least two others. These are (1) the production of young fish from the brood run, and (2) the survival to maturity of the younger generation.

Biologists must have the age composition of each annual run to determine the success of any brood run. Study results of this kind in Idaho are available for 1954 through 1957, and again for 1960. New ones will be made this fall.

Test Ride in Air Force's Experimental X15 Rocket Ship Is Lonely Experience

clapped. The engine like those. All at once the roaring pressure at your back ceases off. Nothing is wrong. The engine has run out of fuel—the pressure second it was supposed to do so. The engine has burned 400 seconds and carried you to a height of 150,000 feet.

The speed now is 4,340 feet—considerably more than 4,300 miles per hour.

You've scattered a cloud of lightning bolts, but you're not through yet. You're still 60 miles—then 50 miles above the Earth.

Up here, the control stick is trying to straddle a useless. The air is too thin for wing and tail surfaces to push against.

Slowly your speed has pushed you back in the seat with a pressure of five times that of gravity. So that every more like trying to swim through molasses—slowly you grasp a hand grip at the top of the seat.

Moving the grip in any of three directions will make small bits of hydrogen peroxide a jet of steam from holes in the wings and nose of your plane. A jet of steam rising upward from the left wing will force the nose up, making you bank to the left. A jet upward from a jet under the nose will force the nose up, making you climb.

You don't use these controls yet. And come on home. The rocket is in a ballistic trajectory, like a rock thrown high in the air, and you're safe until you start down.

Through the narrow V-shaped windshield you can see hundreds of miles of the mountains and deserts of California, Arizona, Nevada, and the broad sweep of the Pacific ocean.

"Then a voice crackles in your ear.

"This is Nasa One," says the radio in your helmet. "You're looking good from here."

Nasa One is the national aeronautics and space administration's ground control center back at Edwards air force base, Calif. Director Paul Bickel can't really see you. He is watching on the radar screen.

"Put her nose down," he says, "and come on home."

This is where the team jets take over. A "whoosh" from a hole in the top of the X15s rounded nose starts you downward.

Ahead and below is a patch of yellow—the great Mohave desert. You look to hit a pinpoint on the ground.

You've used up all your fuel, so there'll be no second chance if you miss the landing strip at Edwards.

But that isn't your main worry right now.

The immediate problem is to slip back down into the heavy atmosphere as slowly and gently as you can, in a plane that glides like a brick.

All the atmosphere too fast, in too steep a dive, and air friction will turn you to toast.

Get the nose too flat and you'll overshoot the base.

22 Foreign Aides Will Visit Rupert

RUPTUR, June 23.—Plans for the visit of 22 foreign agricultural engineers July 6 to the Minidoka irrigation projects were announced this week by Vance Smith, county agent.

The group will have lunch in the area and will visit the Twin Falls, Pocatello and Aberdeen areas.

Walker "You're in good shape. Five feet, two feet. Touchdown." Your kids' grid center. The sand of the dry lake bed. Second after your nose wheel touches and it's all over.

Tins Listed for Saving of Water

Because of the water shortage, County Agent C. W. Dalch has listed good forms in saving water.

He recommends that farmers stop ditching free of weeds and long grass, plug rodent holes and find a way to use waste water.

Irrigation should be determined by soil moisture and should be done by hand. It is better to stop supply by irrigating every other row if the water pattern breaks in the furrows than to let the surface in the dry row.

On close growing crops, make the furrows as far apart as possible to save labor and water.

Get the water through in one-fifth the time it takes to wet the root zone and use a large head of water to push the water through fast without scalding.

MAGIC VALLEY PORTRAIT

Jack Smith's Agriculture Career Has Been Varied; so Has His Civic Work

Few persons have had such a varied career in the Magic Valley as Jack Smith, presently general manager of the Bean-Grower's warehouse and former county agent. But his interests aren't limited to agriculture. Smith has been active in the Twin Falls Chamber of Commerce, church work and the Citizen's Planning committee.

JACK SMITH

Smith was born in Malta, where his father, the late John O. Smith, farmed. His mother, Mrs. Florest Smith, still lives in Malta. He attended public schools in Malta and was graduated from high school there in 1935. The next year he attended Idaho State college and then transferred to the University of Idaho the next year. He attended school part of the time with two older brothers, Vance and Veal. Vance Smith now is county agent at Rupert, and Veal is the head of the dairy husbandry department at the University of Arizona.

After three boys through college was a chore, so Smith stayed put of school for a short time and then returned to the farm. He returned to school in the fall of 1939 and 1940. He was graduated with a degree in agriculture and a major in dairy husbandry in February, 1941. In 1940 he had married Thelma Perrett, of Idaho Falls, who taught in the Malta school. After graduation, Smith went to work for the Albers Milling company in Tacoma, Wash. He worked as a salesman and fieldman for the company. He was with this company for one year and then took the job of assistant county agent at Caldwell. He worked there for two years. Smith's job was studying irrigation problems on the Black Canyon irrigation project. After he left Caldwell he took the job of county agent at Coeur d'Alene. He was there from 1944 to 1946. He came back to Twin Falls county agent in May, 1946. In August, 1946, he took over his present job as general manager of the Bean Grower's warehouse, a large cooperative with about 1,200 members. The warehouse has from 35 to 100 employees, depending upon the time of year, and has six buildings in Valley. Smith always has been active in the LDS church. He was superintendent of the Sunday school in Coeur d'Alene and he served as chairman of the Twin Falls third ward in 1946. He has served as bishop two times, for the second ward from 1950 to 1954 and the fourth ward from 1954 to 1959. He now is a member of the seventh ward and is the first counselor in the presidency of the high priest quorum of the Twin Falls stake. Smith also has been active in Twin Falls Chamber of Commerce work. He has served on the board of directors and as president of the chamber. He currently is chairman of the transportation committee. Smith and his wife have nine children, five girls and four boys, ranging in age from 3 to 20 years. This fact he has five children in the Twin Falls public schools. Consequently, Smith has an interest in the school. Last spring he served as co-chairman, with Mrs. John Breckner, of the building committee of the Citizens' School Planning committee. This was the largest sub-committee. It was the duty
