Wet At Moran

September precipitation at Moran, Wyo., was 4.76 inches, a 50-year record, reports Henry C. Eagle, Snake River watermaster. The previous mark was 4.15 measured in 1927. The Moran precipitation wasn't merely a straw in the wind because other Snake River watershed figures also fall above normal.

LOOK ABOUT YOU

Uncle Sam has fallen to his knees, direct leadership to protect the citizen from nuclear attack. This option will not be shared by a core of dedicated civil defense experts, but it obviously does need only to look about his own community.

WETTER

The upper Snake river area wasn't the only district to report heavy precipitation. In fact, reports from the Snake River valley come reports of precipitation shower activity last month that left a good amount of moisture.

WATERMETER

Watermeter Eagle also reports the total usable holdover water in seven Snake River reservoirs was $13,000 acre feet as of Sept. 30, which is about 12 1/2 per cent of capacity and about the same as last year. With remaining storage the same, the Snake River watershed has higher and precipitation heavier, the outlook is better than a year ago.

INEXCUSABLE

In the past few days, three Idaho hunters have died because other hunters mistook them for elk or else saw something moving in the brush and fired at the movement. There is no excuse for ever making such a mistake. Any hunter who cannot tell the difference between an elk and a man or who fires at a movement in the brush should be barred from hunting for the rest of his life.

TRIFLES

Rifles used to hunt big game are not toys. Many of them are more powerful than military rifles designed specifically to kill men. With this in mind, each and every hunter should bear in mind the possibility that he must make absolutely certain that he kills the trigger before pressing the trigger. Once the bullet is sent on the mission of death, there is no recalling it.

NECESSARY

A needless death brings unnecessary grief and suffering to families and friends of the hunter killed "by mistake." And the loss of a life is a tragedy that lasts a lifetime of conscious mourning.

COLLEGE ATMOSPHERE

When dormitory facilities were made available this fall to girls attending Twin Falls Business College, it marked another step in the development of an institution that has become important to Twin Falls and Magic Valley. In addition to living facilities, the dormitory helps add to the atmosphere of a college.

COMMUNITY SHELTERS BEST

A family fallout shelter is worthwhile, especially for families in rural areas far from neighbors. But family shelters are not the best solution to the problem of nuclear protection.

Compromises May Be Key For Kennedy

WASHINGTON, Oct. 7 (AP)—President Kennedy apparently is going to have to make some compromises with the conservative to push his "new frontiers" program through the 1962 election-year congress.

In the expected absence of house speaker Sam Rayburn, D. Tex., Kennedy is likely to lack any powerful tactician among senate and house leaders who can put the necessary drive behind the controversial proposals he is expected to make.

Moreover, because of Rayburn's illness, Kennedy will lack among these leaders a vigorous "no man" who can advise him against the kind of mistakes presidents sometimes make when they misjudge the temper of congress.

Rayburn, with his standing among his colleagues and his long years of experience, often has been able to find ways of getting the seemingly impossible done in the house. Even though his performance this year was not so far because of declining health, he remained the most persuasive man in the house.

Rep. John McCormack, D. Mass., designated as acting speaker, seems to lack the power punch Rayburn packed. He does not have a similar political bank account of past favors for members upon which to draw.

While McCormack backed the President by demanding aid to parochial schools in the southeast, he has not advised Kennedy nor any of the other leaders seem to have the disposition or the power to tell the President he had better forget about some proposal or modify it drastically if he wants congressional approval for it.

In the senate, Democratic Leader Mike Mansfield, Montana, operates on the theory that the best leadership is that which does not try to dictate to those who follow. The Montana senator is more apt to take the role of an umpire between disputing party factions than that of a leader who herds them into line.

Mansfield tries to cooperate as fully as possible with Kennedy on all administration requests. As he sees it, his job is to do his best—but without any coercion of fellow Democrats—to get White House sponsored legislation passed.

Death Takes F. Meissner On Fish Trip

BUHL, Oct. 7.—Frank Meissner, 77, died of a heart attack at 11:15 p.m. Saturday while he and his wife were fishing near the Upper Salmon Falls dam in Blaine, Idaho.

He fell into the river when seized by the attack. Employees of the Idaho Power company working nearby pulled him out of the water. A doctor was summoned from Wendell. He was dead when the doctor arrived.

Kennedy to Rest, Relax

NEWPORT, R. I., Oct. 7 (AP)—President Kennedy rejoined his family today for a week-end of rest and relaxation ashore and afloat on the presidential yacht.

The President was on the ground only a few minutes after his 52-minute flight from Washington, and then he was aboard the yacht Henry II and off for his afternoon on the water.

Mrs. Kennedy waited for him aboard the boat.

The Kennedy's daughter, Caroline, couldn't wait—she was driven up from the pier in an automobile and wriggled her way through a group of staid officers.

The President was being greeted by an admiral when Caroline broke through the line and threw her arms around his knees, shouting, "Hi, daddy." She wore pink overalls over a blue shirt.

The President hugged and kissed Caroline and then led her to an open car for the short drive to the waiting yacht.

Red Bloc Is Recognizing Freed Syria

MOSCOW, Oct. 7 (AP)—Official recognition of Syria's new government by the communist bloc began today with an announcement that the Soviet Union is establishing diplomatic relations with Syria. The Russians were the first major power to do so.

Bulgaria and Czechoslovakia quickly followed suit.

The Soviet news agency Tass said ambassadors would be exchanged between the two capitals in response to a request for recognition by the new Syrian premier, Mamoun Kuzbari. He gained power last month in a military coup that split Syria from Egypt and President Gamal Abdul Nasser's United Arab Republic.

None of the western powers has recognized the Kuzbari government as yet.

"The Soviet government," said the note to Syria as published by Tass, "hopes that relations between the USSR and the Arab republic of Syria will develop on the basis of peaceful coexistence in the interests of the peoples of both countries, in the interests of strengthening world peace."

The new Syrian government is anti-communist. Kuzbari, soon after accepting the post of premier, said his government would continue a ban on the communist party.

But the communists—threateningly strong in Syria before being forced underground in 1960 by Nasser's rule—have openly expressed hopes of returning.

Utah Police Sleuth, Nab 10 Gamblers

OGDEN, Oct. 7 (AP)—Detectives ended four months of careful sleuthing last night by hiding for hours in a multi-doored cellar beneath a tavern and arresting 10 men for gambling.

The police and federal agents had gained entrance hours before they finally pounced on the game early today. They warned them to thwart the five dozens, some of them flashing light signals warning that someone was approaching, which guarded the room.

Officers said that as an extra precaution a wall before being cleared by divers from empty beer cases. What appeared to be cases of beer bottles stacked against a wall was a door that swung open and led to the tavern above.

The officers hid behind a partition in which small holes had been bored, and watched the operation for more than an hour. The signal that police were present was the light from a flash bulb.

The cellar was beneath the Mecca tavern, at 2404 25th street.

Arrested for gambling and operating a gambling device to warn against police was Horace H. Turner. Clyde Carbaugh was arrested for gambling. Bail was set at $1,000 each.

Eight others were booked for gaming.

Elk City to Get Electric Power Soon

ELK CITY, Oct. 7 (UP)—This central Idaho town which has never had a central electric power service station will begin receiving power Oct. 14 from the Washington Water Power company.

This little community in the Nezperce national forest will be celebrating its 100th birthday anniversary on that date.

A few homes in the town have had direct current power supplied by small gas or diesel generators. The WWP line will serve the area from a point near Grandville about 60 miles away.

Elk City is one of Idaho's oldest towns. It was established following a gold mining discovery in 1861. In the next two years nearly one million dollars in gold dust was shipped out and then the boom apparently fizzled.

Today, lumbering is the principal industry. The U. S. forest service estimates there is an annual allowable cut of 17.5 million feet of sawlumber in the area.

Football Tilt In California Sparks Riot

ALHAMBRA, Calif., Oct. 7 (UP)—Opening of the high school football season last night triggered a teen-age riot which embroiled police and between 500 and 1,000 adolescents early today.

When the battling was finally finished, police from every department in the area had rounded up 88 boys—64 of them under 18 years of age. Those over 18 were booked for failing to disperse and the younger rioters were turned over to their parents.

Nobody was hurt seriously. Police said the trouble stemmed from football rivalries when rival students from Alhambra and Monrovia high schools gathered in a five-block area. It spread when police stopped in.

The fighting started at a drive-in restaurant and, like a lit chain of firecrackers, spread to other restaurants.

Alhambra police quickly broadcast for help to nine neighboring law agencies.

Roadblocks were set up and the drive-in restaurants closed by police. The youths were ordered to disperse over a broadcasting system, but the orders were not heeded, police said.

"It was spontaneous," an officer said. "We had hundreds of kids fighting half a dozen cops before help could arrive."

Officers John Seney and Joe Delatoste said the riots broke out about midnight after Alhambra high school had lost the football opener to Monrovia high, 33-0.

JOHN MILNER ... will be a featured speaker at the state PTA convention Oct. 18-20 in Idaho Falls. He will discuss juvenile problems. He was born in Twin Falls and his parents were associated with the establishment of the Twin Falls tract and Miller dam. He has been a social worker in Idaho for many years.

PTA Group To Meet at Idaho Falls

IDAHO FALLS, Oct. 7—Mrs. Floyd O. Kinsling, president of the district four PTA, announced Saturday that the state PTA convention will be held Oct. 18-20 in Idaho Falls.

Mrs. Kinsling stated that in line with the nation's concern about the rising rate of juvenile delinquency, the theme of the convention will be "Looking in on our Community." In addition to the usual opportunities at the state PTA conventions for leadership training and inspiration, delegates this year will have an opportunity to investigate what happens to a juvenile delinquent when he appears before a judge and is sentenced to a state institution.

The convention theme will be introduced with a mock trial of a youth in trouble, conducted by Probate Judge Winston L. Benson of Blackfoot, who is well-known in the state for his work with juveniles. This mock trial will dramatize the question "Where did the community fail?" and the delegates will then take conducted tours of the Idaho industrial school at St. Anthony and the Idaho State hospital in Blackfoot, where they will learn what happens to a youth who has been sentenced to these institutions.

After the tour Professor John Milner, of the school of social work, University of Southern California, will discuss juvenile problems. He was born in Twin Falls and his parents were associated with the establishment of the Twin Falls tract and Miller dam. He has been a social worker in Idaho for many years.

Delegates will attend various workshops, conducted by the state PTA chairman and assisted by professional people in their respective fields. Dr. Hervan Snyder, of the University of Idaho, and outgoing president of the Idaho Congress of Parents and Teachers, will be in charge of a legislative study session, participated in by legislators and educational leaders. In the legislative study session, sales tax and federal aid to education will be discussed.

Mrs. Kenneth Spencer, dean Gabriel, Calif., national representative from the PTA, chairman of the NCPT committee on international relations, will attend the convention. She has served in the parent-teacher association on a local, state and national scale for many years.

Dr. Royal L. Clark, professor of marketing and speech at the University of Utah, will be the speaker at a banquet Friday night. He will speak on "Things your kids would tell you if they dared." He received his AB degree from Utah University and Northwestern university. He also has been a director of retail training for large corporations.

Mrs. Kinsling stated that anyone who plans to attend the convention may contact their council presidents concerning transportation and further convention information.

FROM ALL ANGLES

By LARRY HOVEY

Several coaches from the Magic Valley area heard a brash specialist's view on football injuries and equipment in a speech delivered at Boise two weeks ago.

The doctor said the new plastic helmet is not an improvement over the old leather helmet. The plastic face guard will not protect the face from the modern plastic helmets he said.

But the doctor was even more pessimistic in denouncing the application of the face bar, which projects in front of the helmet. The thinking was that the bar would act as a lever for twisting necks.

Speaking of football protection, the doctor said that the use of padding will be required to wear fitted dental guards. This should eliminate the loss of teeth.

Coach Al Glendon, Hagerman, said a little tired of coaching football to 10-year olds of coaching none of my teams had given up a safety until this year," says Glendon. "I don't know if this season and every one has cost us either a tie or win."

Razorbacks Overwhelm TCU by 28-3

LSU Stuns Georgia Tech With 10-0 Win

BATON ROUGE, La., Oct. 7 (AP)—Charging Louisiana State stunned Georgia Tech in the Southeastern conference victory today.

LSU's Yellow Jackets got the seven points in the first half but could not push past the midfield strip.

Quarterback Lynn Agers spearheaded the Tigers first scoring drive with passes for nine, 13, and seven yards.

Halfback Bo Campbell fumbled a yard shy of paydirt and the Yellow Jackets recovered.

But four plays later, Tech quarterback Bill Gorman passed the pass from center, the Tigers recovered, and returned the drive from the 15.

Halfback Earl Gros punched down the middle for 13 and two plays later, Gros started a drive into the end zone.

Gros started in the one foot line and a three-quarter yard start started as he ended, with the Yellow Jackets unable to move.

Utah State and Wyoming Tie 6-6

LARAMIE, Wyo., Oct. 7 (AP)—Utah State and Wyoming, unseasoned defending co-champions of the Skyline conference, stopped each other today in a bruising football battle that ended 6-6.

With Cow boy quarterback Chuck Lamm's deflected with a sprained ankle, the Aggies and Wyoming alternated with rock ground plays until the second quarter.

Everything Went Black

ISC BLANKS ARIZONA STATE

Thornton Scores Twice As Bengals Spoil ASC Homecoming on 27-0 Win

FLAGSTAFF, Ariz., Oct. 7 (P)—Reserve quarterback Darl Thornton led Idaho State today to a 27-0 win over Arizona State college in a non-conference football game. It was ASC's first homecoming loss since Coach Max Spilsbury took over in 1956. Hammered by gusts up to 45 miles per hour, both teams stuck mainly to a ground attack. ASC never seriously threatened. The Bengals got their first ground plays, the Bengals moved to the two-inch mark from which Thornton drove over for his second score.

Idaho State struck twice in the second period, first on a four-yard play around right end and halfback Stan Brown that climaxed a 50-yard drive.

The second came a few plays later when the lumberjacks gave up the ball on the ISO 45. Four moves later, the Bengals were on the ASC 35, from which Brown traced off tackle for the tally. Bardell Bailey kicked both extra points.

With only five minutes left in the third quarter, Idaho State's Jim Schneider intercepted a pass from ASC quarterback Jerry Brown on the ASC 34. In three

Maryland Is Upset Winner Of Syracuse

COLLEGE PARK, Md., Oct. 7 (P)—Gary Collins, Maryland's All-America end candidate, snapped a pass to cash in on a two-point gamble today for a rallying 22-21 football victory over Syracuse.

Coach Tom Nugent dined a 21-point tie after Maryland's third touchdown midway through the last quarter to go for the upset over seventh-ranked Syracuse.

Quarterback Dick Novak pitched the ball to end Collins barely inside the corner of the end zone.

It was the first setback for Syracuse in three games and Maryland's third straight victory. Collins also caught a 30-yard pass from Novak for Maryland's first touchdown.

Syracuse went ahead 21-14 in the third quarter after a two-point conversion run, by quarterback Dave Sarrett.

Ernie Davis, Syracuse's All-American halfback, was injured and missed over two touchdowns.

Back Ernie Arzuff, 160-pounder from Barrington, N.J., flashed 64 yards to the Syracuse 10 to set up the winning touchdown. Halfback Dennis Condie blasted over from less than a yard out on last down.

Gophers Rally In Last Half To Nip Ducks

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., Oct. 7 (P)—Quarterback Sandy Stephens sped over for two touchdowns in the second half today to give the University of Minnesota its first 1961 victory, a 14-7 comeback effort over Oregon.

The smaller but quicker Oregon speed player inspired football fans here by leading the defending national champion four times into the Oregon 30-yard line and finally scoring a touchdown with only 30 seconds left in the half.

On the quarter, Doug Peck got hot in the second period, hitting three passes only to have the drive stall when a pass on a fake field goal failed.

After Stephens netted only six yards on a punt into the wind, Peck hit another long pass and then fired a strike to halfback Mike Gaechter in the end zone.

Spartans Cop 31-2 Victory Over Indians

FAST LANSING, Mich., Oct. 7 (P)—Michigan State, banking on a gambling offense to sustain two long touchdown drives, overcame its fumbling mistakes today for a 31-2 victory over Stanford.

The Spartans, ranked sixth in the nation, kept on the ground almost throughout this brilliant, sunny and warm afternoon and amped out drives of 77 and 80 yards before striking two lightning fourth quarter touchdowns.

A crowd of 61,877 watched Michigan State stop the Indiana forced passing attack with hard-charging line play and a light secondary defense. Back play calling figured in Michigan State's first two touchdowns and the gamble worked to put the Spartans out of reach.

Stopped on their 28 in a fourth down and 2 situation and protecting a 7-3 lead, the Spartans close to go for it. Sherman Lewis, who'd scored the Spartans' first touchdown, made it with five yards to go.

Michigan State went on to score an 11 then turned the game into a rout with two touchdowns and a safety in the final quarter.

Michigan Pounds Past Army 38-8

ANN ARBOR, Mich., Oct. 7 (P)—Michigan's bruising line battered Army into submission before halftime and, combined with a devastating ground attack, carried the ninth ranked Wolverines to a 38-8 victory today.

Some 65,000 persons witnessed the intersectional clash in which undefeated Michigan blasted the previously unbeaten Cadets with a total of 239 yards gained in rushing.

The Wolverines grabbed a 17-0 halftime lead after recovering three Army fumbles, two of them inside the Army 25.

The first set up a touchdown scored by Dave Rainey from the 12. Following the kickoff, Army lost the ball again and after the Wolverine attack stalled at the four, sophomore Doug Bieble booted an 11-yard field goal.

Michigan's second touchdown came on a 47 yard jaunt by Benny McCre, the Big Ten's hurdles champion, early in the second period.

Reserve quarterback Bob Chandler went into the game in the fourth period and flipped a 36-yard scoring pass to end Bob Brown for Michigan's final touchdown.

Cornell's football team includes 16 lettermen.

Daughter Greeted Visitor to Backyard Playhouse

Patsy McIntyre, 10, talks with her father, Gene McIntyre, from the door of the new playhouse he built for Patsy and her two sisters. The playhouse is the site of everything from everyday "playing house" to violent frontier "Indian wars." The building measures 10 by 10 feet and is painted a bright red and white. The girls picked the colors and, together with a crew of neighborhood children, helped their father paint the building. (Staff photo-enslaving)

Indian Battles, Delicate Surgery Performed in Backyard Playhouse

The world of the adolescent is bounded only by the limits of their own imaginations. This is proven daily by the daughters of Mr. and Mrs. Gene McIntyre. McIntyre recently built a playhouse for the girls and everyday, everything from Indian fights to delicate heart surgery is undertaken within or near the playhouse. McIntyre was able to build the playhouse with a minimum of expense. McIntyre and his family are former residents of an apartment house owned by Mrs. J. C. Toolson. McIntyre was offered the lumber if he would tear down some old garages near the apartment house. The girls had been trying to talk him into building a playhouse for some time and this offered a good opportunity to get lumber.

Unusual Names Grace Mountain Map

Sky Fry, supervisor of the Boise national forest, points to the town of Stanley with his pencil and notes with his right hand, the general area discussed in the article in that area have some of the most unusual names in the western mountains. (Staff photo-enslaving)

Logical Names Given to Some Mountain Creeks

Occasionally those who travel in the mountains can't help but wonder how some of the creeks receive their names. One common one is the use of the same names over and over again. All the Boulder, Dry, Flat, Buck, and Cedar creeks were named to end, they would reach to legend and legend again. But travelers in the wilderness sometimes find areas where the creeks not only have unusual names, but they also have a sort of logic to the names. This is the time of year, during the hunting season, when many of these creek drainages are explored and the odd names discovered. But you don't have to be a hunter to note some of these names on the map. A good share of these unusual names are in the northern area of the Boise national forest. For example, take Indian creek, one of the major creeks that drains into the Middle Fork of the Salmon river. All of the creek's tributaries have names associated with Indians—Little Indian, Papoose, Wampus, Big Chief, Wickup and Tommyhawk. The next major creek to the south is Little Pistol creek. All of its tributaries are named after parts of firearms or after firearm brand names. These tributaries are named Marylin, Winchester, Remington, Colt, Arizer, Saver, Stevens and Springfield. South of Little Pistol creek is Pistol creek, which continues the firearms theme—Thirty-eight, Forty-four, Twenty-two, Automatic, Chokebore, Gun, Forty-two, and Forty-four. A good share of these unusual names are in the northern area

Youngster Has Unusual Hobby of Creating Many-Faced Characters

A stranger knocking at the front door of the Walter Doos home in Twin Falls could meet up with almost anything—a clown, a Frankenstein's monster, a werewolf, a beastie on a beat, a bearded, wizened old man. Actually, these characters don't live there, they are simply the creations of the multi-faced Lee Doos, son of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Doos. Doos is a Twin Falls high school sophomore with a most unusual hobby—theatrical makeup.

This is doubly unusual because the 15-year-old Doos has studied the art of makeup for the last six years. During these years he has created a multitude of character makeups. He says he first became interested in the hobby after seeing clown makeup, done for a school event, by his cousin, Bob Alworth, son of Mrs. Tom Alworth. He learned some of the basic principles of makeup from his cousin and, later, Mrs. Alworth instructed him.

Another event in his life that stirred his imagination was seeing the motion picture, "The Man of a Thousand Faces," which dealt with the life of Lon Chaney, a master of character makeup. Character makeup is young Doos' particular interest. The idea of completely changing the countenance of an individual fascinates him. So it is only natural that clown makeup, one of the more extreme examples of character makeup, would gain his interest. Doos admits he has an interest in acting itself, but it is the behind-the-scenes work of show business that holds his greatest interest. And he adds that character acting is the type that appeals to him, particularly clowning. He has worked on clown skills, but he has experimented far more with the makeup needed for this type of comedy. Doos has a scrapbook full of colored photographs and paintings of traditional clown makeup. He has experimented with all of them and created a few of his own.

Doos says that he has always found the circus-type of show business interesting, and he adds he would even like to spend some time later in life working as a clown. He says he believes the clown character interests him because it totally alters the appearance of a face. It takes from 45 minutes to an hour to finish an elaborate makeup job. After he has finished, he will make his own criticisms of the job and make mental notes on how he can improve it the next time he tries that particular makeup.

But Doos isn't the only member of the family who is drawn into this activity. His interest also affects his younger brother, Bruce, 9, and his sister, Colleen, 18. Often they are willing guinea pigs for his experiments.

Mike Dietrich, son of Mr. and Mrs. Dean Dietrich, a neighbor of Lee Doos, looks in a mirror as Doos turns him into a beastie. Doos' experiments with all types of character makeup. Clowns and various types of monster makeups are some of his favorites. Doos has studied theoretical makeup since he was 9 years old and he says if his interest continues he will probably study it in college. (Staff photo-enslaving)

So the stranger knocking on the door might meet up with two or three characters at once. Doos works on the hobby mostly on the week-ends. He will devote two or three hours of working on his different characters. He will refer to photographs he has on his shelves of the types he has made. (Continued on Page 21, Column 1)

Old, Cylinder-Type Record Player Is Big Attraction in Valley Home

Strangers in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Homer Johnson are often attracted to the strange-looking box in the corner of the room. This is to be expected, for few members of the younger generation have ever seen such a machine. It is an Edison Acousticon, one of the first record players—the type that used cylinder records.

The biggest attraction about this machine is not just the curiosity value it has. The Johnsons' machine works perfectly and they have a supply of about 75 records. The machine was patented in 1903 and many of the songs predominate that era. Manufacturers in this age could learn something from the machine's design, for it has worked without fault or repair since it was purchased. In fact, the machine uses the original diamond needle.

The attraction now is mostly purchased by the younger persons who visit the Johnsons. Most of them have never seen or heard that type of machine. The peculiar, high, tiny sound of the voices and the accompaniment amuses them—and well illustrates the contrast of the parlor entertainment of a few years ago with this age of stereophonic reproduction. The machine originally was owned by the Johnsons' father, and later became the property of his mother. She notes that it was one of the first of its kind in the farming community near Anna. At that time she lived on a farm with her parents. To illustrate how much the machine held the fascination of the neighbors, Mrs. Johnson says a neighbor who lived down the street. (Continued on Page 21, Column 1)

Volume Control Is Unusual, but Effective

Her elaborate collection of records includes all types of songs that were popular many years ago. She records many stories in three or four series with the young children who visit her home. # Life in MAGIC VALLEY

"Twenty" is the pride and joy of the Ed VanOstran home in Buhl. Twenty, a kind-of-a-spoiler-of-the-sparrow-family, was first found as a baby by 6-year-old Shirley VanOstran. The youngster found the bird, which she called "Twenty," in her mother's yard. She brought it home, and believed it would not last the night.

By morning, however, Twenty still was alive. Mrs. VanOstran decided she would do all she could to keep it alive. Patiently Mrs. VanOstran would wait until the tiny bird laid out a little "chirp" time. It opened its mouth as she would stuff it with hamburger which she injected with a toothpick. She would feed it with a toothpick for three to four weeks.

Gets New Arm

Patience and loving kindness paved the way for Twenty's new arm. When Mrs. VanOstran decided the bird was old enough, she turned it loose to fend for itself. However, she was greatly surprised when two days later she saw it outside on her lawn again. The bird was again on her shoulder. It was Twenty. So she decided since the bird came back to her, she would keep it for a pet. Now the VanOstran home boasts a barn cat, and a dog as well as a bird which she has brought all separated.

Twenty has a special niche in the house and is kept in a bird cage. The happy bird is even developing a little song. Mrs. VanOstran says that Twenty is the same as she does for the rest of the family and tries to give it a well balanced diet near Patti.

The bird likes parakeet seed, curls food, apples, bread and water, lettuce and celery. It has a special place in the house as the peck has to be open and closed before it will touch it.

Mrs. VanOstran noted that when they found two stray kittens which she kept alive by feeding milk in soft bottles. Last year, she was a farm accident in which she was killed. She was a farm accident in which she was killed. She was a farm accident in which she was killed.

... 14-year-old Paul boy who has recently received an artificial limb and is undergoing a series of operations at Shriners hospital, Salt Lake City, son of Mr. and Mrs. Louis Spevak, Jr., who live in the Hopewell district, he lost his right arm four years ago in a farm accident in Montana. His mother says he is looking forward to a useful future life and is becoming adept at using the left hand. His family hopes he will be home from the hospital by Christmas. (Staff engraving.)

Mr. and Mrs. Louis Spevak, Jr.

Mr. and Mrs. Louis Spevak, Jr., of the Hopewell district near Patti, has hopes for a useful future life now that he has received a new artificial arm.

His life has been shadowed by discouragement to which he succumbed, since losing his arm in a farm accident in Montana, Mont., four years ago. He was helping his father by driving a tractor when the brakes locked on the back wheel. In attempting to release them he slipped off the tractor the wrong way and was caught under the front wheel.

The tractor had stopped on a hill and when the boy lost his balance the tractor rolled over him and his underarms, causing severe skin burns on his back and neck.

A doctor later saw his artificial limb with control to the right shoulder and called to him. In response young Spevak raised his arm to get control under the wheel. The limb was torn completely off, hanging only by loose skin.

The doctor says the doctor stated her son saved himself from probable death by bleeding by applying his own blood, mangled arm with his left hand.

AS YOUR MINISTER SEES IT

By CLARENCE A. HORST
(Pastor, Highland Memorial Church)

As one looks at life you would think that it is made up of a series of mistakes. Why is it that you do this or that? Why must I go to school? Why must I respect my elders? Why must I respect my parents? Why must I take my place and help with the duties of the home? Why must I only children ask questions, but we adults feel the same way so often.

If life is going to be successful, we must follow the Divine example that God has given us in the life of Jesus. One would think that Jesus being the Divine Son of God that surely there would be no must imposed on Him. But as we study His life we find that every detail is true. As a boy of 12 we hear Him ask His Mother, "Why is it that you do not understand that I must be about My Father's business?"

Jesus learned as a child that every successful person must learn that there is a divine pattern for his or her life. God has not placed us in this world just to loaf in a little space of time, but rather that all that we do or say or even think must be for the honor and glory of God. Just as Jesus must be about His Father's business so must each one of us.

We sometimes think that life would be so much more enjoyable and interesting if there were not so many things that we had to do. If we could live it without so many restrictions. Yet there is nothing farther from the truth. To live an easy life is to live a soft life. And to live a soft life is a life of weakness.

To take up the hard things in life, the disappointments, rebukes, cloudy days as well as the bright

Interest in Fallout Shelters Mounting Amazingly in "Revival for Survival"

Discusses the upsurge of interest in fallout shelters, Wyo. reflects the attitude in many other communities throughout the United States.

Indeed, Director Frank B. Mills of the office of civil and defense mobilization describes the interest in fallout shelters as a nationwide "revival for survival."

In Indianapolis, for example, 12,000 persons took home survival pamphlets from the civil defense booth at the Indiana State fair, and Louisville firefighters trooped through a model fallout shelter at the rate of 600 an hour. Residents of Livermore, Calif., have formed a non-profit organization called Survival Associates, Inc., and plan to break ground Tuesday on a shelter building program covering six acres. Terrace Park, O., voters will decide next month whether to fund a $250,000 bond issue to build a shelter for all 1,900 citizens; and Miami residents have formed a proposal to build a community shelter under the Grange hall.

Civil defense officials in Virginia every state report the new surge of requests for survival information, lectures, first aid demonstrations and the like has been so overwhelming they haven't been able to meet the demand.

Paul Kridl, Jr., civil defense director in Norman, Okla., resigned last month "because there has been so much interest I just couldn't handle the job properly reported deliveries of concrete blocks for shelters to 100 homes during two weeks in August."

The new interest also has spurred a number of fire-by-night operators, and worse. Helena, Mont., civil defense officials reported salaried peddling for as much as $500 a month "cheerful" made of plywood; and authorities have cautioned Salt Lake City residents against a salesman who Pennington who assured him he would start in a week.

Despite popular scoop of persons buying guns and armor for their shelters, arms and ammunition makers report no noticeable sales increase. A common-sense practice, however, is for home owners to keep their shelter projects secret.

Some states are encouraging shelter building by granting tax relief. One of the most liberal is Alabama, which allows a property member of a family with an income of $10,000 a year to receive a $1,000 state income tax reduction.

The federal government, for its part, has broadened its FHA insured loan program for shelter builders so 20-year loans of up to $10,000 now are available. Many banks are offering shelter construction loans. One bank employee in Virginia said several customers had commented on the bank's advertising approach of stressing the urgency of building a shelter and then granting a five-year loan.

The federal government's $30 million dollar public shelter program—aimed at equipping every shelter in the last war—has been expanded in the last war. The program is being expanded to save the lives of at least half the 80 million Americans living in prime target areas.

Best material for the do-it-yourself (400 to 900) shelter, for which OGDH supplies the simple plans is solid concrete blocks. Plasticrete corporation, a leading maker of the blocks, has stepped up production. In Utica, N. Y., a building supply dealer comes with step-by-step concrete blocks for shelters to 100 homes during two weeks in August.

The new interest also has spurred a number of fire-by-night operators, and worse. Helena, Mont., civil defense officials reported salaried peddling for as much as $500 a month "cheerful" made of plywood; and authorities

Practices Hobby of Makeup on Sister

Lee Doss finishes making up his sister, Colleen, one of the patient members of the family who let Doss practice his hobby on them. Doss, 15, has been interested in theatrical makeup since he was 9 years old. He spends many hours each week experimenting with different effects. Cloway makeup is one of his favorites, and he admits to a secret desire to someday work as a clown. (Staff photo—engraving)

T.F. Youngster Has Unusual Hobby of Creating Characters With Many Faces

(Continued From Page 19) Ford, lately, he has been working in theatrical makeup, and church functions, but he says next year and his senior year he intends to take acting and drama and will be able to apply his hobby to school studies.

Looking like an old man, squinting at a test of the Times-News, Lee Doss displays one of his character makeups. Doss says he is interested primarily in experimenting with all types of character makeups—such as clowns and monsters. (Staff photo—engraving)

Society Seeks to Protect Wildlife From Extinction

LONDON, Oct. 7 (AP)—At least 32 species of mammals, birds and reptiles are dangerously near the point of extinction—but they have an influential friend in London. He is Lieut. Col. C. L. Boyle, a retired artillery officer. In the war between man and animals for possession of the earth "I'm on the side of the endangered animals," Colonel Boyle readily admits.

"This doesn't mean, by the way, that I am against man's right to civilization. But about doing pretty well on this planet, and ought to remember that there is room for the beasts too," Colonel Boyle is secretary of the Fauna Preservation society, which has placed 32 creatures on its list of "endangered species." Among the creatures on the endangered list are all variations of Goshawk falcons. Their absence on living in many parts of the world, but then traveling many thousands of miles to some tiny beach to breed, makes survival difficult. Creatures of the sea eat them, and men eat their eggs. Among birds in trouble are the blue and the kelp and New Zealand a parrot which has wings but doesn't fly and prefers to live in holes. Lieut. Col. Boyle said that the ivory-billed woodpecker is just about gone, the last colony having been reported in Louisiana in 1944. Other birds making a desperate fight to remain on earth include the Hawaiian goose, the Indian blue-headed duck, the California condor, the North American whistling crane, Steller's albatross, the Japanese crested ibis and the Bermuda petrel. Mammals which the society fears are reaching the point of extinction include one of the most graceful of the antelope, the Arabian oryx, believed by some to have originated in the concept of the mythical unicorn. The society is much concerned over the prospects of the rhinoceros which, particularly in the Arabian peninsula, is being annihilated by poachers. The society has estimated that there are about 400 footloose rhinos in India, perhaps 300 in Nepal, and smaller groups in other Asian countries.

New Income Tax Form Is "Simplified"

WASHINGTON, Oct. 7 (AP)—The new, simplified, two-page income tax form 1040 had its rollout party at Internal Revenue service this week.

The Commissioner Mortimer J. Caplin, displaying the form at a news conference, acknowledged it won't make tax-paying a joy. But he said taxpayers better arranged, printed in bigger type on higher quality paper. And it substitutes plain English wherever possible for technical and legal language.

The form will be used for 1961 returns, replacing both the old 1040 and 1040W for the millions of individual taxpayers who get less than $200 of their income from dividends and interest.

It will be mailed out in December in a remodeled tax instruction book with perforated pages, so that taxpayers need remove only the sheets they need instead of the entire 16-page center section.

But Caplin said the new 1040 would serve the great bulk of taxpayers whose income comes mainly from wages or salaries, including the 7.5-million persons who last year used form 1040W.

Roadless Back Country Yields High Hunter Success

Fish and game department fieldmen say this is typical of roadless Idaho back country where quality hunting conditions yield high hunter success ratio but not as great elk harvest as areas having easier public access. ### Idaho Has Quality Elk Hunting, but There Are Some Who Ask What It Is?

By JIM HUMPHREY
Idaho Fish and Game Department

Idaho has the nation's biggest elk herd and the best hunting on the continent, according to the fish and game department, but little agreement among sportsmen on what makes it so.

In fact there's really no unanimity even as to what is quality hunting.

Bringing home game, for example, no matter how or where from, is the main measure of success for many hunters.

What care they for the orange berries of mountain ash, the blueberries of the shrub, the gold of aspen leaves against the contrasting blues of the evergreens, the pines, firs, spruce and larch?

Others want elbow room in virgin territory far from competing hunters, roads and highways. They imagine that bagging an animal is easier in the country where elk have not learned to be wary of people.

Game biologists, of course, know that the mere presence of man is a means of public access does not by itself affect elk populations. It's what the road brings—people and physical changes of habitat—that cause herd numbers to fluctuate.

But even the experts differ in regard to what factors add up to quality hunting.

A mass of information pertaining to quality hunting has accumulated in recent years. It includes ideas and experience of big game hunters, conservation officers, game biologists, outfitters and guides, and just plain "outdoor people." But to get one composite picture that can be labeled quality hunting is difficult because quality means different things to different people.

However, consideration of real quality in hunting leads to some interesting questions which must be solved if the greatest good is to be realized from the total hunting enterprise.

A new road into the back country may make no material changes other than notifying bringing a flotilla of hunters and spoiling the wilderness that remains good in the sense that there is the proper amount, type and juxtaposition of food, cover and water. Elk numbers remain high but hard to find because they are more elusive. Hunter success drops sharply because easy access brings older, youngsters and half-hearted, unskilled individuals.

Has this lowered quality hunting in the area? In the good of the range. This would bring in more nimble but it might fall to improve hunter distribution. Any conservation officer in elk country knows of places where good site herds live placidly near main access roads leading into favored hunting areas. These would be heedless of the multitude of thundering vehicles carrying hunters "as far back as possible." This results in a pile-up of hunters at the end of the road, while the elk along the way may go unharmed.

Does quality hunting suffer when elk in highly disturbed areas become more nocturnal, feeding by night and "brushing up" by day?

Probably Idaho's most accessible country is the one between the Selway and the Clearwater river drainage, one of the country's finest elk hunting areas both from the standpoint of herd size and hunter competition.

More than 2,000 elk were bagged last year by just under 5,700 hunters in this almost roadless Selway-Bitterroot country. The hunt success figures went to almost 45 per cent in the upper Selway, where hunters used horses and pack strings. In high hunter success the best measure of quality?

Game managers say the Selway probably does not have many more elk per square mile for example than the north fork of the Clearwater river. But it does have a greater hunter success ratio under more pristine conditions. Comparative figures show that the north fork of the Clearwater last year counted the most hunters and highest total kill of elk in the state. According to hunter questionnaire data, over 9,000 hunters bagged more than 2,000 elk for a success ratio of nearly three out of ten.

Can it be said, therefore, that the Selway elk hunting is of higher quality than the Clearwater? Or vice versa?

The difference is that public access brings more people into the North Fork than the Primitive Selway, a greater number of women, youngsters and lacklitical roadhunters, and a lower success ratio is inevitable. If all hunters were as skilled, well-guided and equipped, and spent as much time as those going into the Selway, it is believed that the north fork success ratio would be just as good—percentage as the Selway.

Hunting with pack stock of course is the ideal way to go after elk, whether in the North Fork Clearwater, Selway-Bitterroot or other areas. Pack stock in Idaho includes thousands of farms and ranch horses, as well as animals owned by outfitters who make packing a business. The majority of hunters nevertheless set up camps near roads and hike into adjacent country-side to look for elk, returning to base at night.

Many of these foot hunters do score. Their degree of success generally is in direct ratio to the distance they get away from the hunter questionnaire data, they hire packers to bring their meat out.

Game management workers do agree that Idaho's top quality elk hunting will bring the most good to the greatest number only if people will get away from their cars, trailers and camps. Elk cannot be reeducated contrary to their nature to accommodate ill-equipped, inexperienced hunters.

Regardless of definition, quality hunting remains in the domain of the latter day "horsey set"—the farmers, pony lovers and workers who take their thrif horses along, or whose thrift squirrels away from other living expenses enough money during the course of a year to hire professional outfitters and guides.

Pack Frame Also Can Be Used as Stretcher

This is the way the packboard can be utilized as a stretcher. The stretcher-packboard combination was invented by Bryle Carr, right. Playing the role of injured hunter is Carr's boy, Danny. T.F. Man Invents Combined Ladder, Game Carrier, Stretcher, Packboard

A Twin Falls man has come up with an invention that properly can be called multi-purpose. It can be used as a stretcher, packboard, wild-game carrier and even a step ladder. This might sound like a lot of work for one small piece of equipment, but it could come in handy in backwood areas. The packboard was designed by Bryle Carr. Carr notes that it was a backwoods accident that prompted him to set to work on it. Two years ago he was hunting elk in the woods north of Boise-fourth he was hunting. One of the members of the party twisted his leg, nearly incapacitating himself. This could be serious even on main street, but the hunters were a four-hour walk from camp. Getting the injured man back into camp proved to be a chore and, to say the least, an ordeal for the man. At that time Carr says he roared. He would never go big game hunting or spend any time in the woods without a stretcher. But who wants to carry a stretcher everywhere he goes? Carr realized he would have to design what he wanted and also be able to use it for other purposes.

Items constructed of the tubing—such as airplane wings. The packboard was finished. Carr put the packboard into production last spring and he has already made 200 of them, selling them through area sporting goods stores and several large wholesale houses are then carrying them in their catalogs. The packboard initially is intended to be used as an emergency stretcher. As light as it is, it can be carried by a hunter all day without fatigue, according to Carr. By simply folding it out, it will form a six-foot stretcher. Carried on the back in a folded position, it can be used as a packboard for carrying equipment or meat. But if there is a need for two packboards, such as when a hunter gets a big animal down some distance from camp, the folded packboard can be taken apart, forming two packboards. The two parts are just snapped apart and then snapped together again when the hunters are through with them. Used as a stretcher it can carry an injured hunter or game. Carr has designed the frame so that when it is used as a ladder or a step-ladder, either in camp or around the home, it is sturdy and carries his rifle. Carr has designed it so when used as a packboard it is narrow at the top and wide at the bottom. He points out that this enables the hunter to negotiate brush easier. And since it is narrow at the top, a rifle can be carried on the shoulder without interfering with the packboard. One of the amazing things about the packboard is its strength. Used as a stretcher, it will support 300 pounds with ease—provided the hunter wants to carry that much down a mountain trail.

Versatile Packboard Displayed

Bryle Carr, inventor of the packboard in the photograph, places it on his son, Danny. Carr has created a packboard, made of aluminum tubing, that will not only serve as a packboard, but it can also be used as a step-ladder and emergency stretcher. The packboard only weighs five and three-fourths pounds, and it opens to a length of six feet when used as a stretcher. (Staff photo-engraving)

Stock Expert Of Today Is Beatnik Type

NEW YORK, Oct. 7.—A beatnik, a millionaire. At least, a stock market expert. A controversial figure in Wall Street, he's Walter K. Gutman of Stearns and Company.

By profession, he's a security analyst—one of an army of 6,800 banded together in the National Federation of Financial Analysts societies, and 2,800 of these are in New York.

They're a new breed in Wall Street, developed in recent years to give advice on securities at brokerage firms, banks, mutual funds, etc. What these men say about a security—or the stock market itself—is far-reaching.

Gutman has sprung into prominence because of the odd-ball nature of his own market comment. A weekly letter published for the guidance of his firm's clients, "The Gutman Letter," goes to about 16,000 persons.

Outstandingly, it's a letter of stock market advice. Actually, it's a long essay about anything that pops into Gutman's fertile mind, including the market—sometimes quite incidentally.

A former art critic, Gutman writes occasionally about art, especially the modern, abstract art which he himself practices. He's had three exhibitions of his own at New York galleries.

He also writes about existentialism, and other aspects of philosophy, off-beat drama and literature, oddities of history and economics, satires and foreign politics, space age technology, and his friends—among them, Kerouac, novelist and father of the "beat generation."

At the end of the article on Zen Buddhism or a beat party in Manhattan, Gutman and Gutman throws in a few references to obscure over-the-counter stocks. He specializes in unearthing these—the kind of long shots that could make you rich or broke.

At the same time, he has a professional security analyst's understanding of more conventional stocks and a very good forecasting record on the general stock market trend.

Last June, just before leaving for a six-week European trip, Gutman wrote a letter entitled "Why the Next Bull Market Will Start in August." Wall Street was skeptical, but after a month of searing doubt at the time but, sure enough, when Gutman returned in August the market was reaching a succession of historic highs.

A pudgy, round-faced man of 38, Gutman has written that he looks "something like an owl" and "a bit like a frog." He loves to talk and write.

Son of a cotton converter who went out of business in the depression, Gutman was graduated from Bowdoin College in 1924, studied in Yale graduate school for a while, soaked up culture in Europe for a couple of years, then got a job as a social worker in New York in 1927. At the same time he began writing art criticism for intellectual magazines.

But the hand-to-mouth existence wearied him and he took some night courses in security analysis, preparing for a regular salaried job. In 1942 when he was 38 he landed a job as a junior security analyst with Goodbody and company. In 1949 he began to write the Goodbody Letter. When his fame mushroomed, he switched to

Mrs. Johnson says the hands enjoyed this and it was one of the few farms where the hands ate in complete silence, except for requests.

It cost about $35 new and the money for this extravagance was saved out of the butter money, in the days when there were no telephones or electricity, the machine was a novelty. Records cost about 12 cents, and they were a real bargain because they run four minutes apiece.

Some song titles are "Bedtime at the Zoo," "The Ballad of Floyd Collins," "Land of My Sunset Dreams," "Wabash Blues," "He's sloppy," said one of his fellow analysts. "He's brilliant," said another. Gerald M. Loeb, partner in E. F. Hutton and company, a recognized Wall Street personage, said, "I think Walter Gutman long ago proved that he knows what he's talking about when it comes to the stock market, and that's all an investor needs to know."

Manufacturers Working on Smaller U.S. Automobiles

DETROIT, Oct. 7.—American manufacturers are continuing work on cars smaller than anything now built in the United States. They won't be introduced with the 1962 models now beginning to appear in dealer showrooms. They may never be introduced in this country. But usually, reliable informants claim at least one such car will be rolling from an American assembly line by next June. This would be the long-rumored Ford Cardinal, although it could have another name when it comes to market. Manufacturers often use code names to hide advance projects. Current code names for the Cardinal-type car now under development by Ford in Europe is the Archibishop. The Cardinal is said to have a wheelbase of about 96 inches. Five inches shorter than the 1961 American, the year-old model is reported to be about 60 inches high, less than 50 inches wide and less than 40 inches tall. This would make the Cardinal role's general manager, insists there are no plans to market such a vehicle. Volkswagen expects to sell about 200,000 cars in the United States for 1962, roughly 10 per cent more than this year and about half of the import total. The Cardinal, as now planned, is a front-engine, front-wheel drive vehicle. The last American-made front wheel drive car was the Cord.

Old Trail to Oregon Through Magic Valley Is Still Long and Hard to Travel Even With Modern Vehicles

Frank C. Clarke, 76-year-old Glenna Ferry pioneer and trail authority, checks his personal map. Clarke was leader last Sunday as a group of members of the Twin Falls County Historical society traveled and photographed the old trail on the south side of the Snake river between Three Island crossing and upper Salmon falls. He has been exploring this area for years and maps he has made are being copied by the bureau of land management and the trails he outlines will be added to official government maps. A Glenna Ferry businessman, he dedicates his time in an effort to have the Oregon and other trails preserved. (Keller photo—staff engraving)

A dry wash proves a little tougher than anticipated and one of two vehicles making a trip over a portion of the Old Oregon Trail last Sunday got "hung up." The wash, scene of several flash floods in years past, had cut the trail to a depth higher than the top of the axle. Some 20 minutes of digging by Harold F. Brown, left, Twin Falls, and Frank C. Clarke, tour leader from Glenna Ferry, resulted in the car getting free under its own power. A second car could not be brought up to help because this was the only place to cross. The area is south of the Snake river between Glenna Ferry and a point below Hagerman. (Keller photo—staff engraving)

Worn places on lava rock made by old time freight wagons and found along the old trail heading north into Idaho from Kallion, Utah, are pointed out by Peter Goetzten, Twin Falls. He was one of several historical society members who explored the trails last Sunday. The worn places in the rocks were caused by the thousands of iron rimmed wheels hitting them as oxen or mules pulled the wagons loaded with supplies toward Fort Boise and Idaho City. (Keller photo—staff engraving)

Much of Oregon Trail Through Idaho Is Still Visible, but Is Hard to Travel

The road to Oregon is just as all on the south side, long—and just as hard—as it ever was. Especially that portion Falls Historical society, in two between the Three Island crossing four-wheel drive vehicles, following of the Snake river at Glenna Ferry and upper Salmon falls, two points last Sunday. They spent some 10 hours in the area with Frank Clarke, Glenna Ferry pioneer and map maker, as guide. True, they moved faster and took a few short cuts, but they were not available in the covered wagon pioneers, but they were actually driving on the old trail and in the old ruts more than half the time.

Ox Shoe Found on Trail

A handmade ox shoe he found on the Oregon Trail near Glenna Ferry last Sunday is displayed by O. A. Kellner, president of the Twin Falls County Historical society. This shoe brings to four the number now owned by the society. The shoe found Sunday was for the right side of a hoof. (Staff photo—engraving)

Mrs. Arthur M. Kleinkopf, Twin Falls junior high school history instructor, stands beside the old freight road which used to lead from Kallion, Utah, to Idaho City by way of Three Island crossing near the present town of Glenna Ferry, and Old Fort Boise. Thousands of wagons loaded with supplies of all kinds passed over the route as well as about 1800 men. The three railroads led through Glenna Ferry. The heavy wagons made between 10 and 12 miles a day drawn by mules or oxen. Trains numbering more than 100 wagons were common. (Keller photo—staff engraving) ence of the passing of the pioneers still remains, and glad because we were no more than we were following the roughest ride we had ever taken." Next spring, after the snow is gone, the historical society hopes to organize a tour over the same route with all persons having access of the four-wheel drive variety, invited to attend. "We'll arrive when the trip was over that such a heritage as we in Idaho have with the Oregon and other trails still usable, should be shared with others," Kellner said. The decision for the open trip next spring was made right then.

"No Chemists Allowed," Is Motto of Kentucky Distiller

LOUISVILLE, Ky., Oct. 7 (AP)—Hanging over the door of the distillery is a warning: "No chemists allowed." The sign was placed there years ago by Julian P. Van Winkle, Jr., at 37 the nation's oldest active distillery executive. "No chemist ever did anything for our business," he says, emphasizing the remark with a flourish of his shillelagh. "And you can tell them I said that." Pappy, as he is known to his friends, has been in the industry 68 years, starting as a salesman when he was 19. He runs Shultz-Weller distillery with the help of a son, O. K. McClure, the secretary-treasurer. At a tour of the plant, with Pappy acting as guide, you learn that "our old-fashioned method of making bourbon is the best. We get some help from the Kentucky water and air. "You couldn't go two miles away, on the other side of the river, and turn out the kind of whiskey we do." The 72-acre distillery was watered from limestone springs that flow 100 feet underground. Its bourbon is aged in 15 unheated warehouses whose 2,964 windows are open winter and summer from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. "To let in our celebrated Kentucky ozone." He figures this operation costs the company about $14,000 a year in labor but claims it's worth it. "Our whiskey always sells with the windows open." Inside one building are rows of open tubs where the grain is slowly mashed and fermented. "We don't cook our grain under pressure or high temperature, but let it simmer at nature's boiling point for three full hours. It's sort of like preparing porridge stew. We think our mashers ought to sit on the stove a spell to come out just right." The fermented mash is distilled; or vaporized, then condensed "in liquid form." It's distilled in an old-style contraption known as a copper pot-still doubler. Finally, the product is stored in charred barrels "cut from the soundest, clearest, sweetest, lightest white oak timber that grows in our state." Pappy was a golfer and hunter until two years ago when pneumonia forced him to give up both. He likes to "take a nip now and then and loves good cigars. I smoke cigarettes whenever I can borrow one." He has no plans to retire. "You couldn't retire me for a million dollars. You're content to sit here and watch the whiskey roll out and the money roll in."

Spanish Girl Living in Magic Valley

Magdalena Tor, standing, displays a Spanish embroidered shawl to her "sister for a year," Jeanne Bachman, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. K. K. Bachman, Burley. Miss Tor is a senior at Burley high school. She is spending a year here, sponsored by the American Field service program. Miss Tor plans to study either economics or medicine when she returns to her home in Barcelona. (Staff photo-engraving)

Spanish Girl Finds Things Different Than She Imagined in United States

BURLEY, Oct. 7—Last spring a Spanish girl in Barcelona, Spain, spoke before a group of young students. This girl had just returned from a year in Wisconsin, sponsored by the American Field Service. One girl in the audience was enthralled. Now that girl is in Burley, sponsored by the same program. Her name is Magdalena Tor, and she is living with the K. K. Bachman family and attending Burley high school.

Although she has traveled through most of the major countries in Europe, she never had traveled in the United States. And she is finding things a little different than she imagined. Life here is not quite what she thought it was. Many of her impressions of American life she got from gangster movies, "Tommy" Williams plays and from hearing about how American sailors "comport" themselves when on shore leave in Barcelona. But Burley is different. There are no gangsters, no depressing Williams characters and no American sailors on shore leave. She likes Burley.

After she heard the former exchange student speak, she started processing her applications. She was accepted and traveled by boat to New York this summer. She arrived in Burley Aug. 22, just in time for school. She is in the senior class at Burley, but she actually finished school in Barcelona last spring and would have attended the University of Barcelona this fall. Here she is taking economics, history, Spanish, French and typing. She says that when she enters the university she intends to study either economics or medicine. She hopes to be accepted by the medical school and eventually become a pediatrician. She notes that women doctors are uncommon in Spain, but she is determined to be accepted and eventually practice.

Miss Tor says the life she leads here definitely is different from Barcelona. For one thing, she was amazed at the small towns, towns spread out over the countryside, rather than built up several stories. The "cold weather" we already have here has already chilled her, and she says she isn't sure how she will cope with the weather later in the winter. She has been amazed at the quiet neighborhoods in Burley, where children can play in the streets. She lives in an apartment house with her parents in Barcelona, directly across from one of the largest and most beautiful plazas in the city.

Another thing that amazes her is the freedom American girls have. In Spain, young girls unless they are engaged, never go out in the evening. And in Spain, young people can't get a driver's license until they are 18 years old. Although life definitely is different here, she says she is enjoying it. She likes school, but until she attended Burley high school she had never gone to a co-educational school. In Barcelona there are five schools for teenagers. Three schools are for boys, and two for girls. Miss Tor says she actually knows very little about the United States. She is looking forward to visiting Yellowstone National park and Sun Valley, and after school is out in the spring she will rejoin the other exchange students and go on a three-week tour of the United States.

There are two school-age girls in the Bachman family, Rebecca, 12, and Jeanne, 14. Miss Bachman notes that all of the family wanted to become a sponsor of a young girl, but Jeanne, who explains she wanted an exchange student in their home who she would have a "sister" her age this year.

MAGIC VALLEY PORTRAIT

Experience Gained in Many Jobs Now Helps H.L. Derrick as City Manager

Within the last 10 months the name of Twin Falls' new city manager, Herb L. Derrick, has become well-known to practically every citizen of the area, either by meeting him personally or by following the stories in the Times-News that have dealt with the myriad problems that have faced Derrick and other city officials.

Derrick started work here Dec. 1, 1960. He came to Twin Falls after serving the community of Ontario, Ore., for 15 years. He has a long career working at jobs that deal with the type of problems peculiar to city administration.

For many years he has wrestled with city street, sewage, water, stream pollution and other related problems. Derrick's background has been varied and has equipped him to cope with practically any knotty problem that might arise.

Derrick was born on a cattle ranch in the Blue mountains of Oregon. His younger life was spent in this type of environment. He was born in the town of Unity. When he was elementary school age he lived for a brief period in Bush and Yampa, but much of his public schooling he got in Portland. He was graduated from Washington high school in Portland in 1928.

After he was graduated he attended the University of Oregon, majoring in business courses. Later he realized he was interested in engineering, as well as business, and he took the International Business school course in engineering. He laughs when he recalls taking the course. "This was so tough in the early years of the depression that he said a friend doubled up on the course and split the cost of tuition."

He got married in 1932, and as he recalls, "You could hardly buy a job in those days." He worked intermittently for the U. S. forest service to put himself through school and to make a living. When he worked for the service he tackled practically every job they had to offer—he was a lookout, fire guard, assistant district ranger and a timber cruiser.

But Derrick made his living in somewhat more unusual ways in those days. He was a bronc buster. When he wasn't working for the forest service, he tackled a string of raw broncs. "Derrick says, 'I got $15 for each horse I trained to ride and rein. I could usually do this in three weeks to a month, depending on the horses and how many I was working with at the time.' He says he usually worked a string of about 15 horses. He did this for about three years, in the early 1930's.

In 1933 he went to work for the forest service on a permanent basis. He worked for three years in the Whitman national forest as a timber cruiser, marking the timber for sale.

Later he joined a group of engineers with the bureau of reclamation and helped build two dams—the Agency Valley dam and the Unity dam. He worked in 1935 and 1936. After working as an engineer, he joined the Oregon Lumber Co. as a logging and surveying engineer. He was with that company until 1945. While he was with the company he tackled practically every problem associated with lumbering. He built roads (some of the toughest kind in the world to build), chose the winter and summer logging areas, and even laid and built entire towns.

It was when he was building a company town that he realized he was interested in city administration work. He built three company towns the size of Kimberly. These towns did not differ from other towns of this size. There were waterworks, sewers, fire departments, schools and streets to build and maintain.

The stream pollution problems in this area are nothing new to Derrick, for he also was a member of the liaison committee of the Oregon state board of health, which dealt with stream pollution. Derrick and his wife have three children — Mrs. George Jones, Dalton Derrick, both Ontario, and Jerry Derrick, who is a sophomore engineering student at the Oregon Technical institute.

Only two of the world's 3,000 kinds of lizards are known to have poisonous glands and both are found in North America.

H. L. DERRICK

put in working order. This work frustrated Derrick. In 1945 he was offered a job by Ontario. The city was constructing 30 miles of water main. Derrick was hired as project engineer. Later he became city engineer and city administrator. The city government of Ontario didn't provide for a position with the title of city manager, but during the 15 years he was there he was the man responsible for all the chores of a city manager.

Derrick is a member of the Snake River valley shiners' club and is a Mason. He is a member of the Elks lodge and the Twin Falls Lions club. He is the immediate past president of the Ontario Lions club. He belongs to the International City Managers' association and the American Waterworks association.

During the time he lived in Oregon, he served on many state boards and committees dealing with community problems. He has served on panels and prepared papers for the International City Managers association and the American Waterworks association. He was chairman of the short course school of waterworks operation at Corvallis. He served as clerk of the school board on several occasions in Ontario, organized the county planning commission for Malheur county, and worked on the Oregon street and highways commission, whose purpose is to coordinate city, county and state road construction.

Western Plants Used in Landscaping

Billy Leonard, Twin Falls Bank and Trust company employe, points out some of the small plants that decorate the drive-in bank area. The area was landscaped last spring and has attracted a lot of attention in the meantime. Native western shrubs and grasses were used to landscape the area. All the plants chosen will remain small in size as vision at the corner won't be obscured. (Staff photo-enslaving)

Native Western Grasses, Stones Are Used in Twin Falls Bank Landscaping

For several months passers-by have noticed the new sidewalk landscaping around the Twin Falls Bank and Trust company drive-in branch, some of the first landscaping done in commercial areas in this region using weathered rock and stone. Aided from the fact that little commercial landscaping has been done around here, the thing that attracts attention is the selection of unusual plants and grasses. The landscaping was done by Faugh's nursery. According to workers at the nursery, all the plants and grasses are native to the western country, but they are unusual enough that they strike the eye and wend the curiosity. Levels of grasses probably will recognize the names of the bluffs, names that sound more like something that fishes. The bunch grass that surrounds the planter area is festuca tenuis, or, more commonly known, blue bunch grass. The small plant with the broad leaves is a native-type of creeping rhubarb, sometimes known as Oregon grape. There is a dwarf variety of mugo pine, and a small evergreen, kinninnick. This broadleaf evergreen is rockspray cotoneaster and there is also a dwarf fern form of black Norway spruce. The native western plants were chosen at the request of Harry Eaton, bank president, who wants to landscape the new area with native plants. Choosing the plants was somewhat of a problem. Plants had to be chosen that wouldn't grow too high and block the view at the corner, yet they had to be large enough to be decorative. Most of the plants will continue to grow, but it will be a horizontal growth that will give bulk and height. The areas containing the short plants and grasses is also decorated with regional rocks, covering the rock break the flat line of the planter area and give a natural effect. Another thing taken into consideration was the color of the plants. Throughout the year the plants will be various shades of green, grey, and red, offering a change and an interesting assortment of colors. Two types of trees were planted. Along Shoshone street south are male blue ash trees. These were chosen because they are clean and have no seeds to clutter the downtown area. They will grow to a height of about 20 feet and will achieve a balanced shape and never have to be trimmed or shaped. Moraine locusts were planted along the inside areas. They are another seedless type of tree and very hardy tree. All trees were planted in special tree wells, designed so tree growth never will buckle the concrete on the sidewalk. The pits were filled with gravel, and field tile was used so water would readily move through the soil to water all parts of the root system. Another thing that has attracted attention of the public in the manner in which the new sidewalk in the concrete for its sparkling effect.

Blue Ash Trees Decorate Bank Area

Billy Leonard and Harold Hove, both bank and trust company employes, inspect one of the blue ash trees along Shoshone street south. These are male blue ash and they were chosen because of their size and shape and because they are recognized as one of the cleanest trees around in downtown landscaping. They will grow to a height of about 20 feet and will achieve a natural balanced shape, eliminating the need to trim and shape them. (Staff photo-enslaving)

Young Housewives Enjoy Playhouse

Two young housewives are hard at work in their new playhouse. From left the girls are Lynn, 8, and Connie, 6, daughters of Mr. and Mrs. Guss McIntyre. This is the interior of the room in the playhouse, which their father just completed. The playhouse is made of lumber McIntyre salvaged when he tore down some old garages. Although he thought he was finished, the girls are already trying to convince him they need electricity. (Staff photo-enslaving)

T. F. Backyard Playhouse Is Site of "Indian Battles," "Delicate Surgery"

(Continued From Page 19) Indian raid, plant crops and weather hazards. The bright little playhouse then becomes a log cabin and the girls become frontier wives. It's up to the neighborhood boys to protect the homestead. But this is all rather simple compared to the game of "hospitality." This requires talent and training—and, again, imagination. For the sickest with the game. There are doctors and nurses and operating rooms. The object is for the patient to get good and sick and then for the doctors to perform a dangerous operation—which is always successful. And the method of diagnosis is simple. Asked how the cause of sickness is determined, Patay McIntyre, 10, says, "They tell you." They have performed brain and heart surgery and all the patients are faring well, in fact, patients are performing the operation they sometimes find them- selves in the role of doctor. McIntyre considers the building a good investment in time and money, and so do the girls. They helped paint the building and did as much work on it as money, and so do the girls. McIntyre considers the building a good investment in time and money, and so do the girls. They helped paint the building and did as much work on it as money, and so do the girls.

Fair, Joint "Y" Supported Here

A resolution supporting a joint Y-GA-Y-W-C cooperation plan for a proposed Twin Falls winter fair were outlined during the Friday noon luncheon of the Twin Falls Chamber of Commerce in the Rogerson hotel Pine room. Thomas Hovenden explained proposed plan for a local "winter fair" which could become an annual event, such as Ketchum's Winter Days. He noted that the event, which could be held during January or February, would include a livestock show and sale, farm equipment and other city-wide activities. The next regular meeting will be held Friday noon, Oct. 20, in the Rogerson hotel.

Errors Admitted

BUHL, Oct. 7.—The Idaho public utilities commission said Friday it erred in reporting that the permit of Victor Cernauskas, Richfield, had been cancelled. The PUC said the clerical error was unintentional and the permit had not been cancelled.

SON PROMOTED

BUHL, Oct. 7.—Ray L. Conner, son of Mr. and Mrs. Carl O. Conner, 118 Eighth avenue south, was promoted to private first class in Germany where he is a member of the 18th artillery.

as they could, but like many women, they aren't content with the building as it is.

Next they want cupboards, and then they want electricity, and then they want a real telephone, and then they want flower boxes, and then a record player.

McIntyre sighs and notes that he didn't get much fishing done last summer. "And now I don't know if I'll go fishing next year or not."

But he does admit it was worth the time and effort, even if there are a few Indian battles in the backyard.

Creative Art Projects Demonstrated To Twin Falls Teachers at Workshop

Some 95 elementary school teachers and a junior high school teacher from Twin Falls school district No. 411 learned several creative art projects recently during a workshop on art education in the Harrison school auditorium.

Mrs. E. J. Wiedemann, Lompoc, Calif., national art education consultant for the American Crayon company, conducted the two-hour session and demonstrated several projects for elementary school students, including holiday decorations, notebook covers, maps, tinfoil and shoebox animals and a new silk screen process.

The art supply company furnished crayons, poster paint, watercolors, chalk, construction paper and a paint mixer solution. The teachers furnished their own shoe boxes, sponges, waxed paper, and the watercolor solution would show only on the bare paper and adhere to the waxed crayon marks.

She explained that the teachers could use white paper and white crayons to make secret Halloween cats, and then trade papers and use watercolors on them to make the cats appear.

She pointed out that most pupils don't learn the shapes of countries in geography by just coloring the country, and mentioned that by using waxed paper and crayons to trace the country, two or three times they would learn the country's shape faster.

She explained that the pupils could trace the country once and then put dots where the principal cities are, trace it again and show the principal exports, and then trace it a third time and paint the topography. "By this time," she said, "the students should know the shape of the country."

Mrs. Wiedemann also demonstrated how to make animals from shoe boxes. She recommended a third or fourth grade gift for younger children because the cardboard would be too tough for first and second grade children to cut.

During a special demonstration for principals and art teachers after the main workshop, Mrs. Wiedemann showed a new screen process technique which junior high school students and upper grade elementary students could use. She noted that the process could turn out one print in two seconds and would be good for making Christmas cards as a fund-raising project for Boy Scouts or Camp Fire Girls.

Breakins Reported for Jerome Area

JEROME, Oct. 7—Two break-ins and another attempted have been reported to the Jerome police. All three incidents took place in the Jerome industrial area.

Tuesday night Hellman and Nelson in the 200 block of 3rd avenue C was broken into. The door was broken open with a pry bar. The intruders did not gain entrance to the office where the owners could tell, nothing was taken.

Wednesday night $108 in cash and more than $500 in checks and 11 promissory notes were taken from the Stimpert brothers in the 300 block of Birch street. Either the door or they had a key to the door, police said. The checks and notes were in a desk drawer.

Thursday night an attempt to enter the Stimpert building on Main street appeared to have failed. A pry bar to try to force an entrance, police reported.

JEROME TO NAME THURSDAY'S IGA A "Woman of the Year" was announced at a meeting of the Professional and Business Women's Club on Oct. 7. 3:30 P.M. Mrs. Louise Shaddock was featured speaker. Plans should be made by Monday with any BPW member.
