

Hansen boom generates uneasy feelings

Texas man named champion

But the mayor points out a few years back "we were trying to run the city on an $18,000 budget, while it's now over $60,000." He said the primary problem with the village finances is that from 15 to 20 per cent of the residents are tax exempt by virtue of income or age.

"And yet they want all the services," he said.

Officially for the record city officials and businessmen are pleased with the influx of people "up there" as the new subdivision is called. "But off the reaction reflects the commonly held prejudiced views of many middle class people against those a few steps below them on the economic ladder.

"The mayor, who operates a motorcycle shop at the town's main intersection of Highway 30 and Rock Creek Road, scoffs at the criticism.

"Most people in the old part of town don't even know there's anyone up there," he said. "The trouble with this town is there are just too many people who want things to stay the same." Miller said in between waiting on customers.

He said he's sold a few Hondas "up there," he wouldn't have sold otherwise.

Kenneth Daw, who operates the town grocery store, said the added population has been a "tremendous help" in his business.

Currently serving on the City Council, Daw says back in the '50s about 70 per cent of the people here were on Social Security, and the "complexion of the town has changed the last two years."

Another businessman, Leonard Urie, whose son is on the City Council, also spoke kindly of the younger families, although he maintains the influx has not made an appreciable difference in his business.

"We have so many old people here this is what we need," he said, but he thinks another 25 new homes would "crowd us" as to water and sewage facilities.

A woman in the old part of town out working in her lawn seemed complacent about the situation, but some of the younger employees in the town's business establishments indicated what could develop into a divided attitude between old and new parts of town.

Most of the newcomers probably at this point could care less about what the "oldtimers" think. They are currently more concerned about getting the subcontractors to level their lawn areas and get the streets paved.

During a random sampling of opinion on the three streets in the subdivision last week, the overwhelming response to "Why did you move here?" was: "We like living in a small town."

"No one bothers me here," says Mrs. Jim Hollon, whose husband is a construction worker. She and her six children like it here better than in Twin Falls. They moved in last December.

She is not too happy with the developers because of large holes in her yard, which is as yet "hard packed" and unplanted. From her front window on the northwest corner of the subdivision one can view a field of hay across the road.

The "road" is really Main street, according to the corner sign.

"The kids love the school here. Laura, who's going into the fourth grade knows only the kids in her own class," says Mrs. Ron Gates.

The Gates and their four children moved in last November. "They like it because it's quiet," Mrs. Gates said she only knows of one family which has left the subdivision since that time. Most of the families plan to stay permanently, she believes.

"He doesn't take her husband any longer to drive to his job in Twin Falls from Hansen than it did to drive across Twin Falls, she says.

Down the street, the Steve

Pruetts had a household of children — four of their own and friends plus a little foster boy whom they sadly said soon will be leaving them.

"We moved here mostly for the children," Portia Pruett said. They lived in Hollister for four years but have lived in Boise and Twin Falls.

"We like the smaller communities," she said. Her husband, who works for the railroad, was raised in Rogerson, but he decided that was too far to drive. All their children play ball and are happily involved in the Hansen summer baseball program.

The Pruett's are preparing to go on a family camping trip soon at McCall. They would really prefer an acreage, but since that is beyond their means, "this is second best," Mrs. Pruett said.

Over on Wiseman Avenue are the Gordon Barrys, who both graduated from college last year. He works for his uncle and father at Volvo in Twin Falls and she teaches English at Murtaugh, so locating in Hansen was a halfway point for them.

They had one of the first homes in the subdivision, begun in June, 1974. "When we began there were only a few children here, but by the time it was finished it seemed like a million," Mrs. Barry said. They have but one child and pay the full loan payments since they both work, but they feel the home is a good investment.

"We don't plan on staying here the rest of our lives," Mrs. Barry said.

The reaction to residents in the mobile home courts is less apparent, probably because the people came in over a longer period of time and are not seen as primarily permanent residents.

There are some construction workers but also many other occupations represented, according to Wanda Dunn, whose husband, Jerold, is working at the Perrine Bridge site.

The Dunns have been at the court the past 18 months and have one child. Their spacious and well-appointed mobile home is proof that the old idea of "trashy trailer courts" is outmoded, at least in mobile home courts such as this with requirements that the homes must be 44 feet wide or more.

The Dunns would rather live in Twin Falls, but either there were no spaces to place their mobile home or no children were allowed.

There is a section in the Hansen court for adults only, with families having children allowed in the other part.

Similar to residents of the modular home unit, Mrs. Dunn said most of the people she knew in the court did most of their shopping in Twin Falls as well as working there.

Residents of the court simply rent the space and their purchase of a mobile home is their individual business, but negotiations are under way to have the court approved for future FHA loans, according to Rance Jensen, manager.

If these plans materialize, Hansen may well continue to grow.

The Mountain States Realty is also building four new homes across from the old grade school and city officials say there would be the old new homes throughout the old part of town if more building lots were available.

Bob Perkins, the town's police officer, says the increase in people naturally has increased problems, but they have not doubled. He now works the night shift and says the hiring of four extra employees through the CETO program has been "a shot in the arm to the city's police and maintenance work."

"So far, the extra people have worked out well," Perkins said, "but I'd hate to see the town grow too much more."

Many residents may echo his feeling, but it would appear Hansen's growing pains may have just begun.

WEISER, Idaho (UPI) — Unheralded Dick Barrett, playing in his first National Old Time Fiddlers Festival Contest, went home to Post-Store, Tex., a winner as judges named him the Grand National Fiddling Champion Saturday night.

Barrett outdid John Franise of Spokane, Wash., and defending grand champion Bennie Thomas of Arlington, Tex., for the title.

The five-day festival wound up Saturday with a parade, a giant jam session featuring most of the 200 contestants and the grand finale competition between eight finalists.

For the first time since it began last Tuesday, the little town of Weiser had good weather and no rains. That was good news for the 5,000 or so visitors who more than doubled the population of the town for the 15th annual festival. Police reported no major disturbances despite the disparate crowd of 64 timers, hippy-type kids and even a motorcycle gang.

Barrett collected $950 and a trophy for his win. Other champions selected earlier in the competition included Jess Cooper of Hermiston, Ore., in the under 13 division; Mark O'Connor, Mount Lake Terrace, Wash., in the under 18 class; Vivian Stearns of Meridian, Idaho in the ladies division and Thompson who repeated as senior champion for fiddlers over 65.

Idaho State University at Pocatello had a real problem with their new poly turf football field. Two weeks after it was installed the field was flooded, leaving tons of sand embedded in the turf. After four years of sand and softeners from other attempts at cleaning the Vapor Vac method won out over all others. The Vapor Vac All Star Team removed 2 1/2% more foreign substance than their closest competitor. The others had given up.

Boise firm disputes US study

BOISE (UPI) — Boise Cascade Corporation is disputing a Library of Congress study which concludes Northwest lumber companies are overcutting in lands they own in Oregon and Washington.

Sam Donaldson, director of communications for the company, says "we know that on our lands we can cut indefinitely on a sustained yield basis in Oregon, Washington and Idaho. Our forests are comparatively young, we'll be able to increase the harvest on our lands in the next couple of decades."

The study concluded timber companies were cutting their Oregon trees five times faster than the growth rate and in Washington at a rate double the growth rate.

Donaldson said the author of the study, Robert E. Wolf, used a Scribner log scale.

More efficient narcotic smuggling laws looming

ON Y. Times Service

SAN DIEGO — The Drug Enforcement Administration has agreed to adopt more efficient methods in combating narcotic smuggling along the Mexican border following a warning that government attorneys here would refuse to prosecute many of its cases.

Already under severe criticism in Congress including allegations of laxity and misconduct, the DEA was notified recently by U.S. Atty. Harry D. Steward that hereafter it must conform to 10 "minimum requirements" in handling routine arrests and drug seizures, to assure stronger cases that will hold up in court.

Since the DEA's creation two years ago as the government's superagency for drug enforcement, attorneys on Steward's staff have complained privately that its inattention to details and lack of professionalism have contributed to a growing number of jury acquittals in narcotics trials.

John E. Van Diver, regional DEA director in Los Angeles to whom Steward's letter was directed, said that he has issued directives for compliance with the new requirements although some of them will be "difficult to meet."

Similar notices setting forth standards of evidence were reportedly to have been issued, presumably with approval of the Department of Justice to other DEA offices, particularly those whose jurisdictions include border regions.

The "routine cases" to which Steward's letter particularly referred were described by him as those initiated by routine patrol or police work such as arrests made without prior information at border points of entry," as opposed to cases involving undercover investigations of major smuggling conspiracies.

Such routine cases make up the great bulk of narcotics prosecutions here. They frequently are referred to the DEA by customs agents and the Immigration Service's border patrol in the Tijuana-San Ysidro border crossing that is a gateway for the large-scale entry of illicit drugs into the United States.

In his letter to Van Diver, Steward said: "All assistants in the criminal division of the United States attorney's office will be instructed to decline or refer prosecution in those cases which do not measure up to the minimum requirements."

ROK force unready for blow

Editors Note: John E. (Jack) James, manager of the United Press bureau in Seoul, was the first newsmen to report the North Korean invasion of South Korea. His bulletin to the U.P. bureau in New York was filed hours ahead of other press associations. Now vice president for administration of the Asia Foundation, James recalls the work-shaking events of that sleepy Sunday morning in Seoul 25 years ago.

My habit was to go to the office in Korea early every Sunday morning. If there were important

Move broke Reds' back

'Task Force Smith' head still proud of landing

LOS ALTOS, Calif. (UPI) — He's 82 now and tends to his garden and reads, but retired Marine Corps Gen. Oliver P. Smith remembers with pride the task force he led into action early in the Korean War. It was called Task Force Smith and, at his home near San Francisco, he recalled the scrambling to put it together on short notice in September, 1950 — and the high tide of Korea that helped determine its place in history. "We had to assemble an outfit, but all the services had been reduced because of decisions by the secretary of defense," he said. "So we had to go all over the United States to get enough people. "Gen. Douglas MacArthur had the concept of landing behind the enemy. The question of tides determined the date of the landing. At Inchon there was a 31-foot maximum tide at that time of year September, and a sea wall. "We figured we had to land at high tide to get supplies ashore. That gave us only two hours. We couldn't land at night because there were a bunch of mud channels. "But there was a small island just off Inchon and we figured we could capture it and set up our artillery there. Our ships got in there, landed about six in the morning of Sept. 15, and within 45 minutes we had this little island. It had a causeway to Inchon, and we blocked it off. "About 5:30 p.m., one reinforced regiment with 5,000 men landed over the sea walls into Inchon, and another, also with 5,000, landed a few miles south. It was maximum high tide, and we blasted holes in the wall, and our LSTs landed with ammunition. "The troops from the little island joined the others. We captured a fair foothold the first night and a real beachhead the next day. "Of his present life, Smith said: "I've been retired 20 years. It's a pretty pleasant life, I haven't been back to Korea since the war and have no desire whatsoever to go back. I did my time out there and have nothing particularly I want to relive."

Shows site of key fight

local developments, I could file while my competitors were off guard. Also, I remembered that World War II began on Sunday in the Pacific. "But I had no special foreknowledge of the Korean War. June 25, 1950 seemed like any other Sunday. As I drove through the deserted streets of Seoul toward the United Press bureau, a light drizzle began, and I turned aside to the U.S. Embassy, where I had left my raincoat in the press room a few days before. The time was a few minutes before eight a.m. "As I ran across the sidewalk through the rain, a member of the U.S. Army attaché's staff, who lived in staff quarters in the building, came rushing out. Probably because we were both running, he assumed I already had the news. "What do you hear from the border?" he asked. "Not much yet, what have you heard?" I replied. "Hell, I hear they've attacked everywhere but Eighth Division," he answered. The ROK Eighth Division was stationed in the mountainous East Coast region. "But reports he had received were preliminary, sketchy, difficult to pin down. So I drove to the Korean Defense Ministry. Most staff officers had not yet arrived, and messengers were being dispatched to their homes. There was considerable confusion, but few facts. Communications with the army units along the 38th Parallel were never very good. That morning most telephone lines were cut. There were a few radio reports of a North Korean attack on the Ongjin Peninsula in the west. Other reports mostly from the National Police, mentioned tanks attacking at Chumchon in central Korea and Tongduchon directly north of Seoul. "I returned to the embassy, where I checked the translations of North Korean broadcasts. There was nothing unusual in them. I went to the National Police headquarters, where worried men were trying to re-establish radio or telephone contact with their border units. Obviously, something unusual was happening. There had never been such a complete breaking down of communications. "I went to the office to check incoming dispatches. There were no clues in the news from the rest of the world. I called Australian Maj. Stirling Peach, a U.N. military observer and a very large target who later showed great courage under fire. He knew nothing. "Returning to the embassy, I pooled my meager findings with Ambassador John J. Muccio, Counselor of Embassy Everett Drumwright, Public Affairs Officer James L. Stewart, and Army attaché Lt. Col. Bob Edwards. The consensus was that no news probably meant bad news, but we could not be sure. "For nearly two hours, I moved from source to source, headquarters to headquarters. Gradually, as limited communications were restored, it became clear that the North Koreans had attacked simultaneously in at least four places along the border. Other than that, we had no details. "A little before 10 a.m., I was back in the embassy again, trading information and discussing the reliability of what we had. It was late Saturday night in New York and I was edgy. If I delayed filing much longer the story would miss the Sunday morning editions. Yet the information was still difficult to assess. I asked officials there whether they had heard

Washington. They had not, but were about to draft a cable. "It's good enough for you to file. It's good enough for me," I said, and returning to my pressroom desk, wrote the first of many thousands of words that I filed that day. Within an hour of the first, carefully worded dispatch, additional communications were restored and we knew the attack was a major one. Shortly after that, the first North Korean planes appeared over Seoul, and a little later the North Korean radio charged that the South had attacked it. We knew for sure we were involved in a war. "I have often been asked why the North Korean attacks caught everybody in the South completely off guard. Many of the ROK army soldiers were away on weekend passes. The U.S. Military Advisory Group was without a commanding general and the chief of staff was in Japan. A more complete state of unreadiness is hard to imagine. "In retrospect, I think we had been put on the alert so many times that we failed to give proper weight to some of the obvious signals. There had been an increased tempo of propaganda during the preceding month. Refugees, who had been fleeing the North at the rate of about 1,000 a month, suddenly stopped coming. We noticed this and knew a rather wide strip of land along the border had been sealed off to prevent their escaping, but failed to judge the military significance of this information. We dutifully reported, in March, South Korean estimates of North Korea's superior strength that later proved reasonably accurate, but also neglected to discuss them to some extent. So, although we knew exactly what North Korea's aims were, we were unprepared for the event

New invasion during 1976?

By JAMES KIM

SEOUL (UPI) — President Park Chung-hee contends the North Korean Communists may take advantage of the American presidential election in November next year to stage an invasion of South Korea. "And he feels the United States will honor its defense commitments to South Korea and that Japan and other neighboring countries fully recognize the importance of South Korean security as a key to sustained peace in Asia. Park believes the U.S. military presence in South Korea is a vital factor in maintaining the balance of power that forms the backbone of peace in Northeast Asia."

Park stated these views in a written interview with United Press International marking the 25th anniversary of the outbreak of the Korean War on June 25. "Asked if he thought the North Koreans would take advantage of the Indochina debacle to launch a military adventure in Korea, Park said, "There is a strong possibility they would do so. "Now that the North Korean Communists have seen that more than 500,000 American troops equipped with air transport aircraft and tanks to enter the Viet Cong aggression, they may very well miscalculate and feel they could defeat U.S. forces barely numbering 40,000 on the Korean peninsula," Park said. "And because of the Indochina developments, U.S. public opinion has been wavering about U.S. commitments abroad. The North Koreans seem to judge that a period of time around the American presidential election next year may be the best opportunity for North Korea's invasion of the south as they believe instability in the United States would be at its peak then. "Park said there was ample evidence North Korea had been preparing for a southbound invasion, including more than 100,000 tons of Communist built, into southern areas of the border, and various military bases moved down to near the truce front between the two Koreas. "Asked about U.S. defense commitments to South Korea, Park said the U.S. administration and Congress have repeatedly made public assurances that the United States would honor its obligations to South Korea. "I do not intend to doubt such reaffirmations of U.S. commitments," Park said. "U.S. commitments to South Korea are based on the Korea-U.S. Mutual Defense Treaty signed in 1954 and approved by the parliaments of the two countries, and also I believe Americans honor their commitments. "Asked why the presence here of 40,000 American troops was necessary while South Korea had one of the best armed forces in the world, Park said the military situation in Korea should be viewed in a wider context. "Ours are formidable armed forces," Park said. "But our forces alone cannot be a sufficient deterrent against the military power of the Communist powers behind North Korea. "Therefore, I think an appraisal of military strength between South and North Korea should not be viewed only in the context of South and North Korea but in the context of an overall comparison of the military power of the free world and the Communist bloc. "Asked, though, U.S. forces stationed in South Korea number only 40,000 they serve as a balance in the equilibrium of power that plays vital roles in maintaining peace in northeast Asia. It is for this reason that their continued presence in South Korea is necessary. "But Park said "we would fight to the last man and to the last moment to drive back North Korean Communist forces whether there is support by U.S. forces or not," Park said. "Morale is the highest ever among our forces, and our people have a firm determination to defend their homes, their working places and their fatherland for themselves. Not only our friends but also Communist countries should be clearly aware of this. "Asked why he thought support would be forthcoming from Japan and other Asian neighbors in the event of a war in Korea, Park recommended that these nations think about what would happen to them if South Korea fell into Communist hands. "I am deeply interested in those specialists' views that if Korea is communized Japan will face immediate and serious threats to its security and a turbulent change will result in Japan's domestic political order, and significant changes will take place in the peace structure of Asia. "Therefore, I believe that Japan and other Asian nations should recognize South Korea's security, the key to sustained peace in Asia, is as important as their own affairs."

Korean economy recovers

SEOUL (UPI) — A Korean proverb says ten years is long enough to change mountains and rivers. This holds true with the South Korean economy. "The Korean economy, devastated in the three-year Korean war in the 1950s, has recovered remarkably. "During the past decade, the Korean economy expanded at an average of 9.8 per cent annually. From 1961 to 1974 its per capita gross national product increased more than six times to about $53 with the real GNP growth rate reaching a record 16.5 per cent in 1973. Despite the oil crisis, economy grew by 8.2 per cent in 1974. "Exports rose from $27 billion in 1955 to an impressive $4.5 billion in 1974, and are expected to hit $6 billion this year. "Although there is a considerable gap between urban and rural income, an increasing number of Koreans now enjoy a comfortable life with various locally made labor-saving devices. "Almost all households have radios and one out of every six households can afford a television set. The telephone, which has proliferated from 28,000 sets in 1955 to 868,000 in 1974, has become an essential part of daily life. "Seoul's public transit system, first replaced by a major subway system, the first segment of which went into operation last year, can build oil tankers on the South Korean coast can build oil tankers on the 260,000 deadweight ton class. The nation's steel industry, once heavily dependent on backyard furnaces, is becoming increasingly self-reliant with the construction of an integrated steel mill with a capacity of more than one million tons. "A large amount of foreign capital and advanced technology plus the toll of the Korean people went into this success story. "U.S. economic assistance has played a major, if not decisive, role in Korea's economic development and social progress. Japan also has contributed to the Korean economic buildup. After Korea's liberation from Japan after World War II but was interrupted by the 1950-1953 Korean war.

Soviet blunder allows joint UN action

UNITED NATIONS (UPI) — A Soviet diplomatic blunder (rivaling the Kremlin's 1939 non-aggression pact with Adolf Hitler) enabled the United Nations to enter the Korean War in modern history's first collective security action of its kind. "On Jan. 13, 1950, Soviet Ambassador Yakov A. Malinkov serving his second appointment in the U.N. position-walked out of the Security Council, declaring that his government would not participate in the Council's work until Nationalist China was expelled in favor of mainland China. "Six months later the Soviet Union still was boycotting the United Nations when the Council met within hours after North Korean troops stormed across the 38th Parallel to start the Korean War. "So Malinkov was not present to use the Soviet veto when the Council authorized the action that brought troops of 16 countries to the aid of South Korea. He did not return until Aug. 1, when it was his turn to become Council president, whereafter he paralyzed U.N. action with parliamentary maneuvering. "By then, it was too late. "Less than 24 hours after the fighting erupted, reported in detail from Seoul by the U.N. Commission for the Unification and Rehabilitation of Korea, the Security Council in a Sunday afternoon meeting voted 9-0, with Yugoslavia abstaining, to declare if aggression, call for a cease-fire and urge members to give no assistance to North Korea. "The following day, the U.N. Commission reported that all evidence indicated that the invasion was "a calculated, coordinated attack prepared and launched with secrecy." It concluded that the rapid North Korean advance would make the Council's cease-fire and withdrawal resolution academic within days.

Responding to a direct appeal from the Korean National Assembly, President Harry S. Truman announced at noon on June 27 that since North Korea ignored the U.N. appeal, he had ordered U.S. air and sea support for South Korea. "Three hours afterward, the Security Council recommended that U.N. members "furnish such assistance to the Republic of Korea as may be necessary to repel the armed attack and to restore international peace and security in the area." "Australia, Belgium, Canada, Colombia, Ethiopia, France, Greece, Luxembourg, the Netherlands, New Zealand, the Philippines, Thailand, Turkey, South Africa and Britain joined the United States in sending troops to fight alongside the South Koreans. Denmark, India, Italy, Norway and Sweden provided medical units. "Because the U.N. Charter provides for a military staff committee of the permanent council members to handle the organization's involvement in matters concerning armed forces, the Soviet Union would have had a voice in directing operations against a foe it was actively supporting. "This made no sense, so the Council created the "U.N. Command-U.S. Government." To head it, Truman named Gen. Douglas MacArthur, who lost support of U.N. members when he advocated pursuing the Chinese across the Yalu River. Truman eventually removed MacArthur, replacing him with Lt. Gen. Matthew B. Ridgeway as U.N. Commander. "It was the U.N. Command that signed the Panmunjon truce on July 27, 1953, on behalf of South Korea and the countries fighting under the world organization's blue-and-white flag.

Although the Soviet Union and the People's Republic of China whose presence in the United Nations the Kremlin finds less welcome to it than it thought it would be, condemn the U.N. action as illegal, the U.N. Command still is alive in Seoul. "A map of the Korean peninsula is shown, with labels for North Korea and South Korea, and various cities and locations marked, including Seoul, Pusan, and the 38th Parallel. The map shows the geographical context of the Korean War, including the Yalu River and the sea coast."/>

Data gathering units at work

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (UPI) — The last in a series of eight Orbiting Solar Observatories which scientists hope will solve some of the mystery of the "black holes" in space is transmitting information back to earth.

The OSO 8 was released into a circular orbit Saturday 343 miles above the earth. It began beaming data back to earth within an hour after launch.

Three of the eight separate data gathering systems were turned on Saturday. The remaining five were to go to work Tuesday, according to the National Aeronautics and Space Administration.

"All experiment are in good working order and we are looking forward to a very exciting mission," said Dr. Adrienne Timothy, OSO program scientist.

The OSO-8 will attempt to locate "black holes" in space, which may give clues to the age of matter and perhaps help to shed light on theories of creation.

"Black holes" are thought to be stars once many times the size of the sun which imploded into masses a few miles in diameter, their gravity so strong that even light cannot escape.

Pot laws studied

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (UPI) — California could become the fourth state to decriminalize the use of small amounts of marijuana under legislation to be considered by lawmakers this week.

Assembly Speaker Leo T. McCarthy said another vote could be taken early this week on a Senate-passed bill substantially reducing penalties for possession of marijuana.

The measure was defeated in the state Assembly last month on a 38-34 vote, three votes short of a majority.

Some Democrats joined opposition to the bill and all 25 Republicans refused to support it.

Republicans last week voted in caucus to remain united against the measure, but leaders conceded the necessary 41 votes had probably been lined up for its passage.

Cambodia stands firm

BANGKOK (UPI) — Cambodia said today it would defend its territorial integrity at all costs.

A broadcast by Radio Phnom Penh made no reference to reports that there had been fighting between Cambodian and Vietnamese troops over an offshore island, but observers here believed the statement may have been made in response to the reports.

The fighting was reported to have taken place over the island of Paulo Wai, which has been claimed by both North Vietnam and Cambodia.

Significance of the island grew with reports it may be located astride large oil deposits.

"In the past the Cambodian people have been known as a peaceful people and have never interfered nor violated the territory of other countries," Radio Phnom Penh said.

VIETNAMESE physicians brought into Nebraska to alleviate a critical doctor shortage in rural areas check into Creighton University, Omaha, June 22 with their families prior to starting school here today. # 23 Viet refugee doctors begin school in Nebraska

OMAHA, Neb. (UPI) — Twenty-three Vietnamese refugee physicians, brought to Nebraska to serve in rural towns which have been without doctors for years, are going back to school at Creighton University.

The doctors will take up to two months of English training to help them obtain licenses required for medical practice while their families attend classes to help them adjust to American life.

Last week, the doctors were given the Defense Institute Language Test, developed by the Army, to determine individual adaptability to the English language.

"They did very good," Dr. Richard Passon, a Creighton dean, said of the refugees who took preliminary language tests. "In fact, they did somewhat better than we expected. We are impressed because they are highly motivated. They are very anxious to get into the program."

Michael Byrne, Creighton public relations director, said the major purpose of Creighton's language and cultural program for the Vietnamese is to help the physicians prepare pass license examinations and to settle successfully in Nebraska.

"The language training at Creighton is intended to complement the medical and scientific training that will be provided by the University of Nebraska Medical Center in Omaha at a later date," he said.

"The doctors' classes begin today. Creighton also plans to keep their families occupied."

Byrne said a language program will be provided for wives "to help them maintain sufficient independence in their first year so their husbands can devote full time to preparation for their licensing."

Refugees plan to go home

CAMP PENDLETON, Calif. (UPI) — At the end of a long ordeal that involved escaping the Communists, traveling to a strange land on crowded boats and planes and being shuffled from camp to camp, 164 Vietnamese refugees arrived Sunday to reverse the process and return to their Asian homeland.

Two military C-119s, the same planes that brought many of the refugees to the United States, brought the refugees from Ft. Chaffee, Ark., to this Southern California Marine base to begin the process of repatriation.

A base spokesman said they appeared "miling, quiet and happy" when they arrived. All were given quarters and meal cards and were integrated with the rest of the refugees here who are waiting to get

Old timer

CHARLES W. Snook has turned 95 and the "oldtime cowboy" showed he could still ride during a birthday party in his honor. Snook has lived in Salmon all his life.

Tough Creek home of Salmon native

By BOB JOHNSON Times-News Writer

SALMON — The only white man who was a palisadeer at Chief Tendoy's funeral in 1907 turned 95 June 13.

Charles W. Snook, who was born in Salmon City, Idaho Territory, June 13, 1880, is the oldest man still living who was born in Lemhi County. He's lived in the county all his life.

Snook ranched, drove freight teams and was an outfitter for hunters but most of his life was spent buying and selling horses.

Today, he lives in Salmon. His son, Charles A. Snook, 63, lives with him.

He said that the further you go up the street, the tougher they get and he lives in the last house. Actually the saying originally was that he lived up Tough Creek, the further up the creek the tougher they got and he lived in a tent above the last house.

Besides being a close acquaintance of Chief Tendoy, leader of the Lemhi Indians, Snook also knew Idaho's last territorial and first state governor, George L. Shoup, a Salmon resident.

In 1909-10, Snook ran a freighting outfit with 10 horses pulling three wagons. He hauled freight to Salmon from Red Rock, Mont., for Shoup's warehouse and Monk and Green's grocery store.

"When I would check in, Shoup would always ask if I wanted a drink of Salmon City ditch water and he would bring out a tin cup full of whiskey," Snook recalled that his father and Shoup laid out the city of Salmon in 1867 and built the first bridge across the river here in the late 1860s.

Snook was born at the family home in Salmon. Behind the property was the old stockade that was built when Chief Joseph created an Indian scare when he passed through the upper Lemhi Valley.

In 1907 the Lemhi Indians were moved to the reservation at Blackfoot and Snook bought Chief Tendoy's ranch at the mouth of Agency Creek.

Snook recalls that he sold his cattle and went into the sheep business "and lost it all."

One of Snook's fondest memories is of the time he was going with a girl in Salmon who entered the newspaper's "most popular girl from Lemhi County" contest. The prize was a trip to the World's Fair in 1904.

"She went to the fair with her uncle and I shipped three head of horses to St. Louis and took them back myself and went to the fair with her."

Snook is the oldest living member of the Salmon Odd Fellows, joining Rocky Mountain Lodge 5 in 1901.

He commented that he doesn't go to church unless it's a funeral. "My grandmother was an Episcopalian but I'll probably go to hell."

Road repair projects underway

SHOSHONE — Howard Johnson, Shoshone, district engineer for the Idaho Highway Department, has released a report on highway construction projects in the district.

Johnson said work on the Idaho to Sweeter and Cottrell to Idaho sections of highway has not been resumed. Installation of guardrail and signing will complete a project at the Cottrell Port of Entry on I-80 to the junction of I-15W, at Cottrell later this month.

The contractor will begin crushing operations next week to complete the stockpile of cover coat material and aggregate in the Albion and Malia vicinities.

Minor traffic improvements can be expected at the West Bliss to East Bliss section where concrete back on the railroad overpass is being placed, plant mix pavements is being laid on the roadway and fence is being installed.

Two steel bridges on the Maled River on I-80W have been completed and chain link fence is being installed adjacent to the bridge abutments.

About eight miles of State Highway 24 is receiving a bituminous surface and will be completed next month.

Work will also be completed next month on a 3 mile of I-80 between the road to being resurfaced.

A completed list will name you a road free of potholes, ask our Chief Clerk.

your health

Dear Dr. Thosteson:
I have an elderly aunt (in her mid-70s) who has mild diabetes, a healed ulcer and diverticulosis.

Now she has been having some throat trouble. Barium x rays showed nothing. She has had an evaluation and says it feels like a soft lump clinging to the inside of her throat.

The doctor says there is nothing he can do and that she has to live with it. The family is quite concerned. She is up and around every day and can do light work around the house.

The doctor's "live with it" seems quite harsh, don't you think? Do you have any information that would be helpful? — C.A.M.

It can sound harsh, but sometimes — usually in cases such as these — it is all the doctor can say until something more explicit develops.

With the combination of ailments, past and present (diabetes, ulcer, diverticulosis), hers is a difficult problem to evaluate easily. It does sound as though there could be some neurological disturbance affecting her swallowing mechanism.

Mild diabetes can cause this. So can a "little stroke." The barium swallow X ray should have revealed the presence of any real lump. It would be more difficult to determine the cause of any neurological problem.

If your aunt does have what is called "diabetic neuritis," it would reveal itself in other findings. There might be an eye muscle weakness, for example, or a tingling of the extremities, and perhaps a lessening of tendon reflex revealed in the knee-jerk tests.

Lumpy throat must wait

Dr. George Thosteson

Careful control of diabetes is essential, and don't let the term "mild diabetes" fool your aunt into complacency. Persons with mild diabetes can have nerve problems, as I mentioned earlier, as readily as can those with more severe conditions.

Dear Dr. Thosteson:
About two years ago I had a very bad sunburn on my legs. They swelled up, especially at the ankles. I had no medical treatment.

Now, even though there is no redness or swelling, I still get this burning feeling, especially around the ankles. Do you think this is caused by the sunburn two years ago? — B.K.R.

Severe sunburn, especially one severe enough to have caused the swelling you describe, can cause tissue damage. Severe sunburn can be dangerous in many ways. For example, hair follicles and sweat glands could become involved. In such cases infection may, but not necessarily, accompany it.

Although two years is a rather long time for symptoms to persist, it is quite possible your present discomfort is traceable to your earlier sunburn episode, since you did not have such symptoms before that time.

You should see your doctor, or a dermatologist, if possible.

Dear Dr. Thosteson:
I am in my early 40s and enjoy sex with my husband about once a month. Within the past three years, just before I reach a climax I get a sudden, violent headache. Can you give me any explanation? — Mrs. N. L.

The post-coital headache is not uncommon in either men or women. As in any headache the basic cause usually involves a dilation of the blood vessels in the head area. Excitement, an increase in blood pressure or nervous tension, which accompany sexual intercourse, can be a factor.

Why don't you speak to your doctor about it? He may help you by prescribing a mild tranquilizer (or use prior to sexual intercourse). Or one of the vasoconstricting drugs (such as ergotamine) can be helpful in countering the dilation problem.

This type of headache is often found in persons who have difficulty in attaining orgasm.

Headaches! You can beat them. Write to Dr. Thosteson in care of this newspaper, P. O. Box 399, Elgin, Ill. 60120, for a copy of his booklet, "How to Tame Headaches." Enclose a long, self-addressed, stamped envelope #100 to return.

Sheep exodus from farms may continue

By BERNARD BRENNER
UPI Farm Editor
WASHINGTON (UPI) — A long, steady exodus of sheep from the nation's farms and ranges probably will continue for at least another five years, an Agriculture Department specialist predicts.

By 1980, economist Edward H. Glade Jr. said in an interview, sheep will probably be down to winchling under 10 million. This would be less than a fifth of the 56.2 million peak—sheep—population recorded in 1941. It would be less than a third of the 33.2 million on hand in 1960 when the current sharp downturn began.

Glade, in a recent agriculture Department report, said farmers and ranchers who formerly raised sheep have been steadily shifting to other kinds of livestock or crops because for three reasons—labor needed for profitable sheep production has been hard to get and costly; production costs generally have been rising; and losses to coyotes and other predators have been heavy.

Another factor, according to agriculture records, appears to have been a shift from wool to synthetic fibers despite an active promotion program financed by wool growers. In the first quarter of 1975, the records showed American mills producing woolsen and worsted-type fabrics used about 110 million pounds of all fibers, of which only 20.9 per cent were new wool compared with 68 per cent manmade fibers.

The Agriculture Department's tabulation of sheep numbers currently shows about 12.5 million head on hand last Jan. 1—9 per cent below a year earlier. This followed declines of 8 per cent, 6 per cent, 7 per cent and 3 per cent in the four preceding years.

"I think they'll level off eventually and they'll continue to be significant in some parts of the country," the economist said.

"In some areas, that's all the land will support," Glade noted.

Current estimates show most of the nation's remaining sheep are concentrated in the 13 western so-called "Territory States" including Texas and South.

Sediment check starts

MOSCOW — Because soil erosion and landslides may destroy the spawning beds of salmon and steelhead trout, scientists of the University of Idaho are developing research tools for monitoring sedimentation loads of mountain streams.

Work is in progress this summer in the headwaters of the Middle Fork of the Salmon River near Stanley. Here, a technique for predicting harmful effects of high sedimentation levels was tested in 1973 and 1974.

In their current studies, the UI researchers are refining the sedimentation methodology in order to make it a useful tool for conservation agencies.

to know when damage to fishery resources is being threatened by increasing sedimentation of a stream," said Myron Molnau, associate professor of agricultural engineering in the UI College of Agriculture.

"Research now under way will provide a practical means of predicting and preventing future trouble," Molnau added.

The College of Agriculture is cooperating in the research project, with staff members of the departments of agricultural engineering and entomology participating. Entomologists are studying the effects of sedimentation on the insects which provide food for fish.

Engineering, through its civil engineering department, is also involved in the measurement of the high mountain streams' sediment transport capacity.

The overall study is coordinated by the Cooperative Fishery Unit in the UI College of Forestry, Wildlife and Range Sciences.

Ten years ago, the salmon spawning runs in the South Fork of the Salmon River were wiped out by huge amounts of sand washed from roadfills and landslides. The sediment completely filled the pools in which the salmon rest and regain their strength before making their final run to the spawning beds.

Heavy damage to the spawning beds was noted in the 1965 disaster. Unstable soils in the area descended into the mountain streams as a result of high snow-melt rates and an exceptionally severe rainstorm.

Prevention of other disastrous fish kills is the goal of the University of Idaho researchers. Their studies in Central Idaho include careful measurements of three areas — Elk Creek, Capehorn Creek and Knapp Creek.

OAKLAND (UPI) — Sal Bando doubled home the winning run in the 12th inning of the opener and then singled in the go-ahead run in the nightcap as the Oakland A's beat the Kansas City Royals 7-6 and 8-1 Sunday to take a 4½ game lead in the American League West.

The crowd of nearly 30,000 included FBI agents and special security guards on hand behind the home plate screen and in the rightfield bleachers because of a written death threat to A's star Reggie Jackson and Vida Blue. Blue was on his way to his 11th win when the Royals erupted for three ninth inning runs in the opener to tie the game. Jackson drove in three runs in the doubleheader with his 16th home, a single and a sacrifice fly. A's owner Charles O. Finley told both players they could have the day off, but both said they preferred to play.

Yankees 5-3 over Tigers

LA takes pair from San Diego

SAN DIEGO (UPI) — Bill Buckner doubled in the eighth inning and scored when first baseman Willie McCovey committed an error on Willie Crawford's grounder to bring a 2-2 tie and give the Los Angeles Dodgers a 3-2 victory over the San Diego Padres Sunday.

The victory gave the Dodgers the series 3-1 and moved them within two games of division leading Cincinnati.

Dirt starts free-for-all

IT WAS THE TOP of the 8th with two out when Braves catcher Vic Correll (29) drew a walk. Giants first baseman Willie Montanez (23) met Correll on the bag, and minutes later it was alleged that Montanez threw dirt in Correll's face. (UPI)

Brawl ends no-hitter as Giants, Braves split

ATLANTA (UPI) — Rookie Pete Falcone, his pose apparently disrupted by a Benches-clearing brawl triggered by teammate Willie Montanez, lost a no-hit bid with two out in the eighth inning but combined on the field with reliever Gary Lavelle Sunday in pitching the San Francisco Giants to a 5-2 victory over the Atlanta Braves in the nightcap of a doubleheader.

FORECAST FOR TUESDAY, JUNE 24, 1975

GENERAL TENDENCIES: Conditions do not seem to be breaking as you would like and you are inclined to be in an argumentative mood. Strive for more harmony with co-workers to gain your objective. Be logical.

ARIES (Mar. 21 to Apr. 19) High-up is looking for someone to blame so be sure to stay out of this person's way. Relax at home tonight.

TAURUS (Apr. 20 to May 20) Leaving present duties for something new is not wise at this time. Make the evening a happy one with good friends.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21) A good day to check your credit and to take care of important bills. Listen to the advice of business expert.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21) Make sure you keep any agreements you have made with others. Trying to make changes now is not wise. Be alert.

LEO (July 22 to Aug. 21) Although you may be in a mood of dissatisfaction with duties ahead of you, attend to them cheerfully for best results.

VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 22) Although recreation could be on your mind, first clear up some important work that has to be done. Be sensible.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 23) The situation improves at home but you still have to use more tact to gain your objectives. Don't neglect your health.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21) Don't be resentful if an associate wastes you to do more work than you had expected. Sidestep any arguments.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21) Your ideas may not be so good as you think, so be careful in all your dealings. Strive for more happiness.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 20) Do not involve yourself in whatever is a public nature at this time. Show more cooperation with your associates.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19) You feel hemmed in by circumstances so do only those things that are within your power right now. Relax tonight.

PISCES (Feb. 20 to Mar. 20) Look within yourself for answers you need to purging situations instead of relying so much on the ideas of others.

IF YOUR CHILD IS BORN TODAY... he or she will be able to accomplish a great deal in public life once the expectations of others are understood. Much ability at hand here which is the key to success. Teach early to understand the value of money.

"The Stars impel, they do not compel." What you make of your life is largely up to YOU!

what's what

J.M. Boyd

A moment of silence, please, in tribute to the month of June. It has lost first place hereabouts among the big marriage months. For two years now, more people have been getting married in August than at any other time. They are making a shambles of our old institutions, the rascals.

NO, THERE'S no such thing as a yellow sweet pea.

DO YOU REALIZE that some of those welders working on the Alaskan pipeline are pulling down as much as $1,500 a week?

THE PROPORTION of first babies born to unwed mothers has more than doubled—from about 5 to 11 per cent—in the last 20 years.

BROKEN BONES

Q. "How many of his bones has Evet Kniesel broken over the course of his career?"

A. Just 53.

Q. "WHAT KIND of bathing suit did Martha Washington wear?"

A. Looked sort of like a nightgown with elbow-length sleeves, a high neck and lead weights sewn into the hem at the ankles. Don't know how she kept from sinking in that thing.

Q. WASN'T IT once the duty of a man to marry his brother's wife after his brother died?

A.—In biblical days—among the Jews, it was. Please note: the identical situation was legally branded as incestuous 100 years ago in England.

BURPEE

The French name "Beau Pre" means "beautiful meadow." Appropriate that the seed-growing family called Burpee got its moniker from that, what?

EVERY NOW and then, some country buys so much of something from another country that the trade balance gets upset. Even as the United States now buys oil from the Middle East, this kind of dangerous imbalance has been cropping up for a long time. One of the most intriguing instances of it occurred during the 17th century when all the notables in France wore wigs. They imported bales and bales of horse hair from Germany. Colbert, the finance minister to Louis XIV, went into a snit for fear the Germans would get all the French gold. He tried to outlaw the wig, but couldn't pull it off.

Cobalt speck aids prediction of floods, avalanches available water

BOISE (UPI) — A tiny speck of cobalt is turning the tables on Mother Nature.

Used by weather and soil scientists in the West, the isotope is aiding prediction of potential flood and avalanches as well as forecasting the amount of available water for farmers and hydro-electric energy.

A scientist tired of building nuclear "bombs" and reactors hit on the idea.

It first struck Rod Morrison of Idaho Industrial Instruments of Boise after he came to Idaho to work for the Atomic Energy Commission's facilities in eastern Idaho.

He discovered there was a need for an accurate gauge to measure the amount of water content in the heavy snow accumulations in the western states.

Tired of working on nuclear bombs and reactors, he began working on such a gauge in the basement of his Idaho Falls home and came up with a nuclear device that would accurately and safely measure water content.

Morrison decided on Cobalt 60, used in the battle against cancer, because of its safety and ability of the isotope to penetrate density.

He said Cobalt 60 "is less hazardous than an x-ray."

Those who have used and studied the device contend that it "is so safe you couldn't get a dose of radiation even if you wanted to."

Don Borghthaus, a radiation physicist with the Rocky Mountain Reporter Institute in Boise, reported it would take 500 hours of looking directly at the gauge at a distance of eight inches before a dangerous dose could be obtained.

"In order to reach a harmful dose," Borghthaus said, "ridiculously long exposure times are necessary."

Morrison said that the instrument is so precise "it can measure a tenth of a per cent of water."

Accuracy of the gauge has won the praise of snow survey specialists for the Soil Conservation Service of the U.S. Department of Agriculture.

Jack Wilson, an SCS snow survey expert who installed the first unit three years ago, said it was the "most accurate gauge he had ever seen."

Idaho and California were the first to use the device. Since then gauges have been installed in several western states as well as one foreign country.

Switzerland found out about the isotope precipitation instrument and decided that it could be used for avalanche prediction. The country was so happy with performance of the gauge that a second device was ordered — this time to determine how much water is available for hydro-electric purposes, the main source of power for the tiny nation.

In the U.S., at least for now, the gauge has primarily been used to measure the amount of water in snowpacks to aid specialists in determining how much water will be flowing off mountains when the spring thaw arrives.

Wilson said that the nuclear gauge has been so much more accurate than the "pillow-type" devices used in the past that "you really can't make a comparison."

On one mountain where both devices were in operation this past winter, Wilson said, there was deviation of 10 inches of water. Wilson said that could be disastrous when one is considering flood control and attempting to determine how much water is available for agriculture during the summer months.

Morrison said lack of immediate acceptance of the device has been a misunderstanding on the part of most people.

He said that the general public still didn't understand the difference between "an atomic bomb and other utilization of nuclear energy."

There still are very few of the gauges in operation: Prior to their installation in a few selected areas, snow survey crews either had to travel by snowmobiles or helicopters to check out areas for snow water content.

Wilson said the beauty of the isotopic gauge is that it eliminates human error because there is not maintenance necessary.

"The little bead of cobalt, which is the size of a head of a pin, will last up to 10 years," Morrison said.

Wink, Tex., received 1.26 inches of rain during 1964, the lowest recorded annual rainfall in the state.

Jarbidge road not advisable

JARBIDGE, Nev. — The road to Jarbidge is "not advisable," to passenger vehicles, according to Phil Joyal, Jarbidge deputy sheriff.

Joyal described the road as "dangerous but passable" and said that the road is so washed out in places west of Murphy's Hot Springs that "a driver could end up in the river if he is not careful."

For the past three weeks, Joyal said, the road has been entirely washed out and only four-wheel drive vehicles could get into Jarbidge on an old access road. But temporary repairs have recently been completed on the regular road from Murphy Hot Springs.

"As soon as the water (in the Jarbidge River) goes down Elko County will come in and make permanent repairs," he said.

Joyal said that so far the town's annual Fourth of July celebration has not been cancelled. He said it's hard to tell whether the road will be fixed before or after the fourth.
