

'Corpse' walks in — alive

MIDLAND, Mich. (UPI) — Funeral director Gerald Miner blinked his eyes in disbelief.

"Thirty years in the business, and I've never had a corpse walk in on me before," he declared.

The "corpse" was Steven Farison, 20, who was incorrectly identified as the victim of a fiery traffic accident early Saturday. He walked into Miner's funeral parlor that day just as his mother, Jeannine Haapala of Flint, Mich., was making arrangements for his burial.

Mrs. Haapala said she turned away from the funeral home desk and became "so weak I couldn't even stand up." Steve was standing in front of her.

"This is a hell of a place for a family reunion," he said.

Flustered authorities in Midland soon discovered they had inaccurately identified a man's charred body Saturday in the wreck that also killed Peggy Wilcox, 18, and Julie Loose, 17, both of Midland. Early Sunday, authorities were able to identify the real victim as Bruce Beebe, 19, of Midland.

"We were halfway through making the (funeral) arrangements," said Mrs. Haapala. "It's quite a shock. I just pitched forward on the desk and cried."

Farison, a son by a previous marriage and now living away from home, had been in the car with the victims before the accident.

Saginaw County Sheriff Department officers spent 90 minutes with Mrs. Haapala and her husband Saturday asking about their son's jewelry, teeth and any other traits that could help identify the burned body. Statements from the couple led investigators to identify the body as that of Farison.

But as the couple started making funeral arrangements, Farison's cousin, Patricia Robinson, spotted the supposed victim riding a bicycle down a city street.

"I said 'My God, what are you doing? Your mom is making funeral arrangements,'" Miss Robinson said. "It was really freaky."

Lance probe ends quickly

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A Senate committee today gave Budget Director Bert Lance the "Good Housekeeping seal of approval" in his financial dealings and ended its investigation into questions of impropriety. "I see nothing here that involves conflict of interest with regard to Mr. Lance," Sen. Abraham Ribicoff, D-Conn., chairman of the Senate Government Affairs Committee, told reporters following a two-hour hearing.

At one point during a question-and-answer session with Lance, Ribicoff said, "You've been smeared from one end of the country to the other, in my opinion unjustly. We can just imagine what this has done to you and your family."

Lance was called to the Capitol today to spell out for the committee several of his financial dealings, including the sale of 191,000 shares of stock in the National Bank of Georgia and circumstances surrounding a $3.4 million loan he received from the First National Bank of Chicago last December.

Lance gave a point-by-point explanation of his finances. Overall, he said the questions of impropriety on his part had "created a haze of unwarranted uncertainty around the meeting."

After all 40 of the senators who attended the hearing had a chance to question Lance on the specifics of the deal, each one took turns in praising the budget director for his openness and candor.

Sen. Lawton Chiles, D-Fla., told Lance that it was "nice of you to drop by and confirm your innocence. We gave you the Good Housekeeping seal of approval six months ago (during Lance's confirmation hearings) and were going to put it on you again today."

The committee declined Friday to call Lance for information about a $2.4 million personal loan he got from the First National Bank of Chicago, in which his own bank had made an interest-free deposit of $200,000.

The panel also postponed a decision on Lance's request to be released from his promise to sell his 190,000-plus shares of stock in the National Bank of Georgia by the end of the year to avoid a big financial test.

Lance was president of the Atlanta bank. He promised during his confirmation hearings for the post as director of the Office of Management and Budget in January that he would sell his bank stock by the end of the year.

But since then the value of the stock has

BERT LANCE
... 'seal of approval'

plummeted and he stands to lose more than $1.8 million if not granted an extension.

The panel had been expected to grant his request until disclosure Friday of the Chicago bank transaction. Chairman Abraham Ribicoff, D-Conn., said then the committee had "an obligation to check this out carefully."

"It isn't just a question of an appearance of conflict," he said. "In all fairness the committee would be derelict in its duties—because they are serious charges—if it didn't give Mr. Lance a chance to respond."

Lance's office has denied any impropriety. Spokesman Robert Dietsch told UPI Friday the National Bank of Georgia was merely establishing a normal correspondent relationship with the non-interest-bearing deposit, and the Chicago bank later bid with several other banks on Lance's $3.4 million loan. Dietsch denied any connection between the bank deposit and granting of the personal loan which he called "a damn good loan—his assets far exceeded his liabilities."

Two members of the Senate panel were critical of the committee's decision to question Lance's finances.

Sens. John Danforth, R-Mo., and Sam Nunn, D-Ga., said such investigations are "destroying confidence in government."

Air strike

A "BORATE BOMBER" roars low over the crest of a hill after making a pinpoint drop of retardant on a hot spot in a brush fire near Altadena, Calif., Sunday. The fire, still raging uncontrolled today, has ravaged more than 3,500 acres. Forest Service officials said it started either from a tracer bullet or black power fired in a target practice area. One firefighter was killed and three others hurt when a helicopter crashed after they returned from fighting the fire. (UPI)

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Carter, answering criticism that he did not keep his campaign promises to blacks, told the Urban League today his welfare program will create one million new jobs.

"I've been in office now for six months," Carter told the League's annual convention. "I have no apologies to make."

Vernon Jordan, the league's executive director, criticized Carter Sunday, saying "black people, having tasted the sweetness of victory in November, resent the sour taste of disappointment in July... We resent unfulfilled promises of jobs, compromises to win conservative support and the continued acceptance of high unemployment."

In his speech, Carter listed the programs he had begun for the poor, including a new requirement that 10 per cent of all subcontracts in the public works bill go to minority groups. He predicted unemployment could be "perhaps as low as 6.5 per cent by the end of the year, with a trend downward."

Carter said the major goal of his administration is to assure that "all those who are able to work should be able to find work."

The President went on, explaining: "This emphasis on work for those who are able is not discriminatory, is not moving backward. We want for people to not be dependent on government... (but) be able to stand on their own feet."

In his welfare proposal, the President said, "there will be an additional one million job opportunities. Our goal is for every single family to have... a guaranteed job by the government."

Carter drew a smile from Jordan and applause from the audience when he said, "I hope in the months ahead I'll be able to work closely with Vernon Jordan — at the White House."

"We haven't done everything we would like to do nor everything we are going to do," said the President, cautioning critics not to jump the gun.

"It takes time to change the course of history. The eagerness to put into effect these programs is there."

Carter ended on a solemn note, saying he hoped "together we can put smiles on the faces instead of tears."

Jordan clasped the President's hand warmly following the speech and the two talked for about 15 minutes before Carter returned to the White House. Jordan would not comment on the discussion.

Truce in Libyan front?

By United Press International
ruling the Liberation Organization leader Yasser Arafat said today in Cairo both Egypt and Libya have agreed to a cease-fire proposal to end six days of border fighting.

Egyptian President Anwar Sadat ordered his troops Sunday to halt their clashes with Libya while Arab negotiators worked out a truce. But Libya did not mention a cease-fire and there were conflicting reports on how long the fighting lasted.

However, by late today there were no new reports of military action by either side.

Libya's official Arab Revolution News Service said earlier today local militiamen had "repelled and annihilated" invading Egyptian paratroopers in the border oasis of Jaghoub, but did not specify whether the clashes came after Cairo announced its cease-fire.

Three Egyptian officers were captured in the fighting, the agency reported.

A PLO spokesman in Cairo said that with today's cease-fire announcement, Arafat considered his six-day shuttle mission between Tripoli and Cairo completed.

Somalis trumpet triumph

NAIROBI, Kenya (UPI) — Somali-backed guerrillas today claimed they seized three Ethiopian towns, killing "a large number of troops" and capturing more than 1,000 prisoners in one of the fiercest battles of the two-month Ogaden desert war.

In a Mogadishu Radio broadcast, the Western Somali Liberation Front said its guerrillas captured Gode, Kebri Dehar and Werder.

Ethiopia admitted large areas were captured, but said regular Somali troops — not guerrillas — staged the assault.

"In the fighting a large number of Ethiopian troops were killed, many retreated and many surrendered," Mogadishu Radio said.

In Mogadishu, officials said fighting for the towns took place in the last few days and the prisoners were still with the front in the Ogaden.

In its last communique, Ethiopia admitted there was fighting around all three towns, but said they were still being held by government forces.

The towns are all deep in the Ogaden, forming a strategic triangle, each controlling important road junctions across the desert.

Oil company overcharges unpunished

WASHINGTON (UPI) — An independent task force reported today the government has failed to make major oil companies comply with its pricing regulations, leaving perhaps billions of dollars in overcharges undetected or unpunished.

The task force, formed May 13 by Federal Energy Administrator John O'Leary, said FEA regulatory compliance efforts have been "ineffective" since the 1973-74 oil embargo. It recommended a major overhaul to correct the situation as soon as possible.

Task force chief Stanley Sporkin, who normally is director of enforcement for the Securities and Exchange Commission, recommended that a special team of auditors and lawyers be formed to investigate the 15 largest oil refiners for overcharges and pricing rule violations.

He said putting the emphasis on the 15 biggest refiners would yield the largest return because those companies handle 70 per cent of the dollar volume of the entire industry.

Sporkin said the overcharges to be found "possibly amount to several billions of dollars." O'Leary agreed with that figure.

The Sporkin task force delivered a major indictment of efforts under the Nixon and Ford administrations to enforce rules adopted to make sure oil companies did not reap windfall profits from the energy shortage.

It reported finding a large backlog of unaudited firms and transactions going all the way back to the 1973-74 embargo. In addition, it said, there are some 3,700 audits that have started but have not been completed.

Without a "bold new initiative" to clear up the audit backlog, price violations dating back to the embargo may go undetected until the mid-1980s, the report said.

"The farther we get away from 1973-74, the less likely we are to make major recoveries (of overcharges)," Sporkin said.

The report said that July 1, 1974, and June 30, 1977, the FEA settled cases involving $218.8 million in price rule violations. As of June 30, it said, there were 3,955 open audits including 1,023 with potential violations totaling $1.7 billion.

O'Leary said part of the problem in the past was that the FEA was created to deal with an emergency and many of its regulations, adopted in a crisis atmosphere, were fuzzy. He said oil companies as a result interpreted the rules in their own favor.

FEA officials identified the 15 largest refining companies in the nation as Exxon, Standard of Indiana, Shell, Texaco, Standard of California, Mobil, Gulf, Atlantic Richfield, Sun, Marathon, Union, Conoco, Phillips, Cities Service and Getty-Skelly.

A spokesman said those probably would be the targets of the new effort.

"Fortunately," the Sporkin report said, "to date the FEA's efforts to secure compliance from our nation's major refiners have been a failure."

SECRETARY BROWN, PRESIDENT PARK SHAKE ... then they sat down to discuss pullout

US pledges Korea help

SEOUL, South Korea (UPI) — President Carter in a personal letter delivered to President Park Chung-hee, today reconfirmed U.S. determination to defend South Korea in event of an attack by North Korea.

Carter's letter was delivered by Secretary of Defense Harold Brown, who met with the Korean leader for more than two hours at the Blue House, the official presidential mansion in Seoul.

"I wish to emphasize strongly that our ground force withdrawal plans signify no change whatsoever in our commitment to the security of the Republic of (South) Korea," Carter said.

"The mutual defense treaty between our two countries remains fully in force, and our determination to provide prompt support to help the Republic of Korea defend against armed attack, in accordance with the treaty, remains firm and undiminished.

"I want to assure you (Park) again that our ground force withdrawal, which will take place over a four to five-year period, will be carried out gradually and carefully, in a manner which will preserve peace on the peninsula," the President said.

Brown told Park the United States will make a "modest" increase in the number of jet fighters it has based in the country as it withdraws the 33,000 ground combat forces U.S. officials said.

The United States now has 60 F4 Phantom jet fighters based in South Korea. The officials declined to give exact details, but said it would involve some increase in the about 7,000 U.S. airmen now stationed in the country.

Ad campaign scored

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Sen. William Proxmire, D-Wis., gave his "Golden Fleece of the Month" award today to the U.S. Postal Service for an ad campaign to make Americans write more letters — perhaps contributing more to postal deficits.

"The Postal Service says the ad campaign is intended to increase the volume of first class mail, thereby producing more revenues.

"But volume of first-class mail may, therefore, simply contribute further to Postal Service deficits," Proxmire said.

The Postal Service spent $2.4 million on the ad campaign, and another $775,000 in a seemingly futile effort to test whether the campaign works ... a grand total of over $4 million of the taxpayers' money."

Idahoan shot fatally

BLACKFOOT, Idaho (UPI) — An 18-year-old Pingree, Idaho man was found shot to death and dumped on Riverton Road near Blackfoot early Sunday morning.

Bingham County Sheriff Dean Jorgensen said Curt Cornelison had been shot behind the left ear. The bullet went through the skull and lodged at the rear of the right ear.

"We are investigating it as a murder," Jorgensen said.

Cornelison had been shot three or four hours before a passerby spotted the body found on the edge of the road, according to the sheriff.

Jorgensen said the way the body was lying, the fact there was no blood on the ground at the site and the position of the tracks at the scene led him to believe the youth had been shot elsewhere.

An autopsy showed the cause of death was a head wound from a .38 calibre handgun.

Idaho prison inmates stabbed

BOISE (UPI) — A second prisoner was stabbed at the Idaho State Penitentiary Sunday morning less than twenty-four hours after a Saturday stabbing.

The Sunday victim is Gary Green, 25, who is serving time for first degree burglary. Green was stabbed in the chest and neck about 11:00 o'clock Sunday morning.

Green was taken to St. Alphonsus Hospital where he underwent surgery for about an hour and a half, according to the hospital. He had multiple stab wounds in the chest and neck and was listed in critical condition after emerging from the operating room about 3:30 Sunday afternoon.

The first stabbing victim at the penitentiary was Val A. Burk, 22, who was attacked near his prison house in a medium security area of the prison Saturday afternoon about 4:00 o'clock. Burk, serving time on charges of burglary and receiving stolen property, also underwent surgery at St. Alphonsus and was listed in satisfactory condition Sunday afternoon.

Prison officials say the two stabbings may be related. Warden Richard Anderson says that no arrests have been made so far, but the evidence points to "a power struggle between a couple of groups" as the cause of the two attacks.

The prison was locked down Sunday-afternoon and prison officials and Ada County Sheriff's Department personnel were conducting an investigation centering on individuals who were observed in the vicinity of the recreation building where Green was stabbed.

Odd weather world-wide puzzle

By United Press International
In the heart of Rio de Janeiro's winter, an "instant summer" sent Brazilian beauties to Ipanema beach. Swedes are slipping through the coldest and wettest July this century, and Asians face droughts because the monsoons are late.

Americans, who experienced record cold spells this winter and 100-plus heat this summer, are not the only ones lamenting the extreme weather.

People all over the world say they are getting too much rain or not enough, too much sun or not enough and spells of freakish, unseasonal weather.

Although it's too early to predict the onslaught of a new ice age or anything so catastrophic, it's clear that weather patterns are changing the world over.

In addition to the western United States, major droughts hit Europe and China last year. In sub-Saharan Africa, hundreds of thousands of people have died in a massive dry spell that ravaged several nations.

Scientists don't know in which direction the weather is headed, nor are they agreed on the reasons for the changes — whether the North Pole is slipping into Canada, the sun's patterns are changing or pollution is interfering in the atmosphere.

But while the scientists ponder, residents of every continent are coping — or at least, trying to cope.

"What kind of winter is this?" asked a Brazilian lawyer playing paddleball on Ipanema beach early this month. The skies were sunny and the temperatures hit 86 degrees.

Although the southern hemisphere's winter reaches its height in July with rain and cloudy days, no rain fell on Rio for the first 18 days of July.

The famed Ipanema and Copacabana beaches were filled with vacationing students, tourists from cold Sao Paulo and the nation's famed "girls of Ipanema."

The bizarre unscheduled "summer" came to a rapid end last week when a cold front bringing temperatures of 66 degrees swept out of the south carrying twice the average monthly rainfall of 16 inches in one long night of torrential downpour, lightning and thunder.

Half a world away, Swedes are unhappy about poor camping weather. Swedes are fanatic campers and the bad weather is creating, family tensions, psychologists say, that could lead to a record number post-vacation separations.

One psychologist said the cold and rainy weather is confining Swedes to their soaking tents, making family tensions unbearable.

"People feel fooled when their long-awaited vacation rains away," he said.

With temperatures ranging in the mid-50s and rain breaking records set last century, the harvest of several favorite crops is threatened, particularly cloudberry and strawberries.

"This is extreme," a disgruntled weatherman said. "Last week, it wasn't even summer."

As it is a muggy summer were not enough, Swedes also experienced record amounts of snow this past winter. When the snow melted, heavy floods broke dams and roads and delayed spring planting.

Although Britain has recovered from last year's drought, the first week of July was a scorcher. Workers set down their tools and walked out of factories without air conditioning. Women working in Nottingham's "Victoria Bus Terminal" canteen said they were practically nude beneath their coveralls to keep cool in 105 degree heat.

The World Meteorological Organization, a U.N. body based in Geneva, says there very well may be a very gradual trend undepay toward a new ice age. Sea ice has been increasing and there is a growing trend toward greater variability of weather conditions in many areas, it reports.

If a new ice age comes, Asians will be the last to know. They are experiencing heat waves and droughts. In some cases, heavy rains are pouring down only a few miles away.

Despite a flash rainstorm that killed more than 200 persons, South Korea's rice belts are suffering from rain shortages and farmers are worried that the unusually hot weather will severely damage the rice crop.

On Sunday, a summer heat wave sent millions to the beaches in Japan and 49 persons drowned and seven others were missing.

In Southeast Asia, Thailand and Malaysia both are experiencing severe droughts because the northeast monsoons are at least two months late.

The dry spell has devastated 50,000 acres of rice crops in Malaysia — about 5 percent of the nation's total acreage.

"We are still studying the flow patterns trying to figure out the reason for the freak weather," a baffled weatherman said.

Fossil fuel use labeled hazard

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A new scientific report warns that continued use of fossil fuel, especially coal, could increase the atmosphere's carbon dioxide with possibly catastrophic results.

A National Research Council report Sunday said the increased percentages of carbon dioxide could bring far-reaching climate changes in the next 50 years.

The panel said nuclear and solar alternatives to fossil fuels present difficulties, but climate changes from expanded fossil fuel burning "may be so severe as to leave no other choice."

Dr. Roger Revelle, chairman of the committee which studied the problem, called for a $20 million-plus annual research effort to see the climatic effects of an atmosphere richer in carbon dioxide than will be known 50 years from now when the problem starts getting serious.

Revelle, researcher from Harvard University and the University of California at San Diego, said it probably would be all right to use more coal for the next 30 years "but we can't get the coal habit if these climatic effects turn out deleterious."

The council, research arm of the National Academy of Sciences, said continued fossil fuel use and growing energy needs probably will increase the amount of carbon dioxide in the atmosphere four to eight times by the year 2000 to 2,150. That extra carbon dioxide probably would last at least 1,000 years.

Extra carbon dioxide in itself is not harmful, but acts like a greenhouse in the atmosphere, trapping the sun's heat and warming the air at levels closest to ground.

The report said the most serious effects of possible climate changes could be felt along boundaries of arid and semiarid regions.

"The worst situation could probably adjust itself, given sufficient time and a sufficient degree of international cooperation," the report said.

"But over shorter times, the effects might be adverse, perhaps even catastrophic."

A four to eight-fold increase in carbon dioxide in 175 to 200 years might result in an 11- to 16-degree Fahrenheit increase in the mean global temperature, the report said.

Ocean waters would become warmer with a resulting rise in sea levels of three feet that might flood low-lying metropolitan areas. Some sea ice would melt, but the committee said it is impossible to predict what would happen to the polar ice caps.

Frost-free growing seasons would move northward in the Northern Hemisphere and summer temperatures in middle latitudes might become so high that the corn belt in Iowa, Illinois, Indiana and Missouri would have to be moved into Canada.

Nuclear panel adopts critic's rule proposals

© N.Y. Times Service
WASHINGTON — The nuclear regulatory Commission has adopted many of the suggestions made by a critical staff official who charged that the commission's allegedly casual approach to preventing "the theft" of plutonium and highly enriched uranium posed a potential threat to national security.

The commission's decision to accept several of the key recommendations, made by unanimous vote June 30, was not publicly announced.

The allegations by James H. Conran are under investigation by four congressional committees, and Conran is scheduled to testify before a Senate committee Monday and a House committee on Friday.

Conran, an analyst with the commission's division of safeguards, first stated in April 1976 his reservations about the commission's effort to control nuclear material that could be fashioned into atomic bombs. One year later, disappointed by the agency's response, he restated his objections in public letters to President Carter, Rep. Morris K. Udall, D-Ariz., and the commission itself.

His original allegation was that the federal government had suppressed information that the commission's staff needed to devise effective regulations to prevent the theft of plutonium and highly enriched uranium. Conran said, for example, that information about the relative ease of making homemade atomic bombs had been withheld, as were "serious indications" that a large amount of special nuclear material might have been stolen from a fuel processing plant "at some time in the past."

Although Conran has not disclosed the location of the possible theft, a recently obtained commission summary document reports that in 1965 a nuclear facility in Apollo, Pa., was unable to account for 381.6 pounds of highly enriched uranium, enough for at least 10 nuclear weapons.

Nuclear energy officials in the government have insisted that there is no evidence that the special nuclear material was stolen, saying that it probably could not be accounted for because of the crude statistical methods used at that time.

The General Accounting Office said after its investigation that the company's books were in such poor condition that it was unable to come to any conclusion about the missing uranium.

point action plan based on his allegations.

The action plan said the staff should accelerate its efforts to work out a final agreement under which the Energy Research and Development Administration would provide the commission with "special information" and review procedures to determine that the commission "is receiving and will continue to receive all information necessary to carry out its safeguard functions."

Although a panel appointed to investigate Conran's charges concluded on April 29 that it did not agree with his assessment that commission policy posed a serious potential hazard to public health and national security, it did find merit in many of his specific allegations.

On June 30, the commission formally adopted an eight-

No 'snuff' victims found

YUCCA VALLEY, Calif. (UPI) — Sixty sheriff's deputies prowling the sizzling desert sands failed in their second attempt to find the bodies of possibly 15 victims of an alleged pornographic "snuff" filmmaker.

"We feel fairly confident with the number of men we had here that the area has been pretty well covered," said Sheriff's spokesman RICHARD RHODES after Sunday's 110-degree-plus search over 30 acres of desert.

Rhodes refused, however, to conclude there were no bodies buried in the area.

"I can't say that," he said. "You never know about the desert."

Authorities were guided to the site by a female informant police say helped recruit prostitutes for the alleged killer.

Investigators said failure to locate any bodies will prevent filing of murder charges against the lone suspect in the plot, Fred B. Douglas, 49, a Costa Mesa, Calif., upholsterer and purported minister, arrested last Wednesday. He was held on $250,000 bail.

Two police women, who infiltrated the plot by posing as models, took Douglas into custody at gunpoint after he took them to the desert and committed what investigators called "an overt act." They did not locate any bodies.

The informant, named Diane, reportedly recruited several of 15 models allegedly hired by Douglas for lesbian-bondage photographs, which have not been found.

Police in Garden Grove, Calif., said Douglas would drive the models to the remote desert shack, about 100 miles southeast of Los Angeles, to film the sex scenes.

The victim allegedly were tortured, dismembered and killed with bone saws, knives and guns, which were confiscated at the time of Douglas' arrest.

Terrorist bombs hammer Madrid

MADRID, Spain (UPI) — Terrorists exploded five time bombs in central Madrid today, damaging buildings and parked cars.

Meanwhile, Spaniards were informed of new price raises under an austerity program designed to put the ailing economy back on its feet.

Following a 20 per cent hike of gasoline prices at midnight Sunday, which upped the cost of a gallon of high test to $1.76, the government announced increases for other petroleum products, energy, coffee, flour and soyabean.

Utility prices were raised by 5.2 per cent and coffee went up to $9.12 a pound, for prime quality.

The five per cent increase in the price of flour was expected to drive up the price of bread.

The government said the increases were needed to offset the increased cost of imports, following the 20 per cent devaluation of the peseta two weeks ago.

No injuries were reported.

The office of governor Juan Roson said two bombs exploded in department stores belonging to the Corfe Ingles chain, which has been involved in labor disputes in the past months. Others went off in a luggage factory, a clothes shop and an empty warehouse.

The governor's office said the motive for the bombings was still unclear. None of Spain's numerous underground extremist groups have claimed responsibility, it said.

Extremists — mainly on the left — have been waging a bombing campaign designed to spread a climate of fear in Spain's new democracy, authorities said.

The last series of bombings occurred one week ago on the 41st anniversary of the outbreak of the Spanish civil war.

Arms data suppressed

WASHINGTON—A defense expert's report to Congress on relative U.S. Soviet military strength, contradicting the Carter administration's rosy view, has resulted in suppression of the report and threats that the expert may lose his job.

An alarming picture was painted by John M. Collins, a Library of Congress researcher, in his report prepared for the Senate Armed Services Committee last March: relative U.S. declines, both qualitative and quantitative; rising vulnerability in Western Europe; possible erosion of the nuclear deterrent. Collins is suffering Cassandra's fate. The committee's staff rejected the report and Collins faces disciplinary action.

It is alleged this was prompted by the Carter administration, but that has not been proved and is denied. Nevertheless, it fits a Carter administration tendency, previously reported by us, to smother material that would argue for higher defense spending. With a hold on Pentagon spending essential for President Carter's balanced budget, the tendency is likely to continue.

The Collins report was requested in July 1976 by Frank Sullivan, staff director of the Senate Armed Services Committee. He asked the Congressional Research Service (an arm of the Library of Congress) for an unclassified comparison of U.S. and Soviet military strength. What Sullivan wanted was a nuts-and-bolts catalogue to check Defense Department figures.

What Sullivan got was more than he asked or bargained for. Collins, with defense experience totaling 35 years, devoted full time to the project. He conferred with Sullivan in October and periodically gave him progress reports. Working through the Christmas holiday and 100-hour weeks at the end, he finished a draft Feb. 16. After review by the Defense Department, the Joint Chiefs of Staff and the services, Collins presented a final draft, ready for publication, to Sullivan March 9. At that point, Sullivan had uttered not a word of criticism.

Other steps could be taken. The above are merely suggestions. But until Idaho's present system of county government is overhauled, it remains a horse and buggy operation, plodding into the 20th century.

legislators should consider advancing a constitutional amendment reducing this to a simple majority. Such a move wouldn't guarantee any action, but it would at least make it possible.

Counties should also be allowed to devise their own form of government. Idaho is one of only eight states in the nation that by law demands just one form of county government exist. There should be no legal restriction on a county wishing to scrap its current smorgasbord of elected officials in favor of a professional county administrator or planner.

Again, a constitutional amendment is needed.

Finally, functional consolidation should be stressed by county officials. In the Magic Valley that means powerful Twin Falls County must take the lead in advocating regional sharing of power—such as in developing a truly Valley wide airport authority.

Also important is the need to undertake such a task now, while the question is still primarily one of excess and expense and inefficiency, rather than failure of local government to respond adequately to crisis situations. Idaho is fortunate in that the problem is still at this preliminary stage. Not all urban areas have been so lucky.

One obvious solution is the actual merging of two or more counties into one. Unfortunately, political reality suggests this is unlikely. Such a county merger last occurred in the United States in the 1930s, in Georgia. Too many jobs—especially those of powerful local politicians—are at stake to think this will ever be a completely successful answer.

Still a step should be taken making consolidation easier. Existing provisions in the Idaho Constitution require a near impossible two-thirds vote of approval by residents of the counties to be merged. Area

Time to change county government

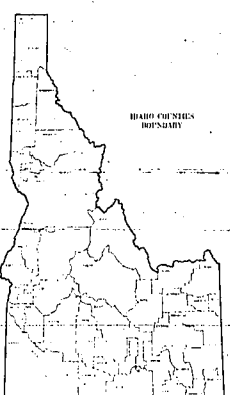

By DAVID MORRISSEY
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS—Few subjects have been so thoroughly discussed in recent years as the growth of government. Like sex, it remains interesting even if you weren't there.

Presidents, senators, congressmen and governors alike have been classified for lack of militance in ferreting out bureaucratic waste. Most now agree governmental expansion has gotten somewhat out of hand.

Yet the torrent of words advanced by those who would rend government with a cleaver have nearly without exception focused on politics at the state and national level. Ignored in the verbal assault has been a system of Idaho government largely outdated and increasingly irrelevant in its present form.

The system in question is county government. Consider a few facts.

—About 150,000 persons live in Ada County, a tiny clunk of southwest Idaho comprising about one eighth of the Gem State's total. That's one out of every six Idahoans.

—The same number of citizens can be found by adding the total population of the following 24 Idaho counties: Adams, Bear Lake, Benewah, Blaine, Boise, Boundary, Butte, Camas, Clark, Caribou, Custer, Cassia, Franklin, Fremont, Idaho, Lemhi, Lewis, Lincoln, Owyhee, Power, Teton, Valley and Washington. That's a land area larger than Massachusetts, Connecticut, Rhode Island, New Hampshire, Vermont and New Jersey combined.

Two of those counties have less than 1,000 persons living within their boundaries. Most have less than 10,000. Yet in these—and the remainder of Idaho's 44 counties—election day sees the voters dutifully electing three county commissioners, a recorder, a prosecuting attorney, an assessor, a treasurer, a sheriff and a coroner.

Few states can boast of a more unnecessary and costly fragmentation of government.

It's been that way, however, for nearly 60 years—since Caribou County became number 44 in 1919. And normally cost-conscious Idahoans, willing to squeeze a nickel until Jefferson's hair turns white, have so far seemed unconcerned at the cost of this additional layer of government.

It's not that the system wasn't a good idea to begin with. There was a certain geographic logic to this multitude of counties back when the region was young. In a state stretching from Canada to Nevada, and encompassing the wilderness between Oregon and Wyoming, it was the local unit of government which was closest to the individual citizen.

The notoriously poor transportation system further heightened the need for centralized government. Traveling from one end of the state to the other—not to mention journeying through some of Idaho's mammoth counties—could often take days. If your horse didn't break a leg in a chuckhole, there was still a chance the rattlesnakes would get him. The best roads in Idaho, it was then asserted, were in Washington, Oregon and Montana.

different to the traditionally black institutions. These have a "unique value" and must be preserved as such.

What we have is federal control of higher education in the six states. It is virtually absolute control. The institutions cannot make any change that "directly or indirectly affects" achievement of the quotas without Mr. Callifano's approval. Courses cannot be significantly altered, or new courses added, or graduate programs introduced, or buildings erected, or land purchased, without Mr. Callifano's say-so. Teachers and staff members must be hired and promoted by racial quotas. Measures that do not please the secretary "will be rejected." If progress is too slow, Mr. Callifano "may impose more stringent requirements."

It is not the Goldbergian design, or even the Humpty-Dumpty logic, that gets you. It is the insufferable arrogance of our federal masters. Their concern is not for human beings or for constitutional equality, or even for

Desegregation edicts merit attention

By JAMES J. KILPATRICK

HEW Secretary Joe Callifano laid down some rules the other day for the court-ordered desegregation of higher education in six Southern states. The decrees rank among the glibdest conglomerations ever compiled by the bureaucratic mind. They merit your attention.

What they come down to, these marvelous edicts, is a form of social engineering as taught by Professor Ruben Goldberg according to definitions by Humpty-Dumpty. For a moment, Mr. Callifano's orders apply only to the colleges and universities maintained by Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, North Carolina, Oklahoma and Virginia, but the grandiose designs imposed upon the six "de jure" states today provide a pattern for all "de facto" states tomorrow.

The general idea is so to order people around that within five years, the Southern colleges that are now predominantly white, will be significantly blacker, and the colleges that are now predominantly black will be significantly whiter. This would be accomplished in the following fashion:

The less qualified black students (A) are not truly much interested in attending an academically tough, predominantly white university (B), mainly because most of their friends are at the predominantly black university (C). Meanwhile, the better qualified white students (D) are not much interested in attending (C) because most of their friends are at (B).

To correct this monstrous evil, Mr. Callifano has now ordered the white universities (B) to recruit and enroll the black students (A). This is to be done by employing "new and different yardsticks for measuring their potential" (E), but the universities (B) are not to lower their standards (F). Meanwhile, back at the black universities (C), the white students (D) are similarly to be recruited, though not in such numbers, by raising the standards (F). This is to be done by transferring top teachers and courses from (B) to (C). Forget it! The rules are a mish-mash. They rest on a foundation of semantic duplicity and cannot rise above it. Mr. Callifano says he wants "desegregation," which means an end to compulsory segregation. That end was achieved years ago. What he truly wants is compulsory integration, which is something else. Mr. Callifano speaks of "quotas," and he insists that "these quotas are not quotas." But they are in fact quotas. He agrees that the Constitution should apply equally—to all institutions, but he would apply the Constitution different to the traditionally black institutions. These have a "unique value" and must be preserved as such.

What we have is federal control of higher education in the six states. It is virtually absolute control. The institutions cannot make any change that "directly or indirectly affects" achievement of the quotas without Mr. Callifano's approval. Carter tries to sell 'broken Lance'

By WILLIAM SAFIRE

WASHINGTON—Jimmy Carter is trying to sell the Senate a dubious bill of goods about his longtime friend, the Office of Management and Budget director, Bert Lance.

The Georgia banker should be excused from conflict-of-interest disclosure promises, the President has asserted, because his promise to sell his stock has depressed his market value.

That is a deception. The reason that National Bank of Georgia stock has slid from 16 to 11 this year has little to do with the "overhaul." The stock has dropped because of the revelation that Lance tolerated bad loans on his books. The man who inherited the mess has had to write off the bad loans and cut out dividend payments.

The truth is that Lance's departure for Washington did not cause his financial embarrassment. On the contrary, we now see how his willingness to carry questionable loans as assets may have artificially maintained the price of his stock.

Carter is intimately familiar with Lance's affairs. On June 19, 1975, only a few weeks after borrowing $2.7 million to finance the purchase of his stock, Bert Lance brought Jimmy Carter to the Manufacturers Hanover Bank in New York to meet Lew Jenkins, the bank officer responsible with Bruce Brough for making the Lance loan.

Purely coincidental, insists Lance, nothing to do with using the former Georgia governor to shore up his reputation as a borrower. But Jenkins was the only banker to whom Lance took the new presidential candidate that day.

Bankitein Lance, who was Governor Carter's highway commissioner, also claims to have had nothing to do with the infusion of the Teamsters Central States pension fund money into his bank in early 1976, as Carter's star began to rise. At the time, the Lance bank's three-person trust department had an account over $2 million to manage, for no apparent reason, the politically sensitive Teamsters fund put $18 million into the Lance bank that has since grown to $23 million.

Not my doing, says the modest Lance today. Bank officials want us to believe that Atlantans John Spickerman, Teamster employer trustee, and Robert Pollar, Teamster fund lawyer, initiated the deal with King Cleveland, Lance's colleague, now retired.

But after Carter's election, on the very morning Lance's picture was front-paged as the first Carter Cabinet likelihood, Nov. 24, 1976—Lance met in his bank with Teamster pension fund executive director Dan Sliannon, John Spickerman and Teamster lawyer William Nellis of Chicago. Lance sees no impropriety of a Cabinet designee helping to line up some future business with the fund that the Labor Department says erruptly bankrolls Las Vegas mobsters.

Just before leaving Atlanta six months ago, Lance must have had cause to worry about his financial house of cards. He turned to another Democratic bankitein, J. Robert Aboud, the go-go boss of the First National Bank of Chicago who has replaced his mentor, the late Mayor Richard Daley, as the most powerful man in that city.

This is how human nature works. And without doing terrible violence to a free society, neither Mr. Callifano, nor Professor Goldberg, nor Humpty-Dumpty, nor a federal judge, can do much about it.

"THERE THERE! TAKE YOUR TIME SELLING THEM, BERT — CONGRESS JUST TOLD ME THEY REALIZE THIS ETHICS NONSENSE CAN GET WAY OUT OF HAND!"

to his Jan. 11 trip to Washington. Aboud refinanced the $2.7 million Manufacturers Hanover loan that enabled Lance to own his stock—adding another $225,000.

Why? Lance (give him credit, he answers his phone) says "First Chicago is moving aggressively in the Atlanta area."

I see a more sinister motive. First Chicago's Aboud knows all about bad real estate loans, and should have known that Lance's assets would shrink when the bad loans were audited by a successor. Here was Aboud's chance to gain life-and-death financial control over the man closest to the President.

"THERE THERE! TAKE YOUR TIME SELLING THEM, BERT — CONGRESS JUST TOLD ME THEY REALIZE THIS ETHICS NONSENSE CAN GET WAY OUT OF HAND!"

55 stricken by fever

MIAMI (UPI) — At least 55 persons have been stricken in an outbreak of typhoid fever in the "Old Havana" section of the Cuban capital. Radio Havana reported Saturday in a broadcast monitored in Miami.

The broadcast also said that 53 suspected typhoid cases were under investigation. Residents of the capital were warned to boil drinking water, use disinfectants where possible, and avoid allowing garbage to accumulate.

The broadcast also reported a major outbreak of diarrhea and said the number of cases had doubled in recent days.

Havana Radio did not mention any deaths in connection with the typhoid fever outbreak. Authorities say death rates from typhoid may reach 10 per cent although that figure may be reduced to 2 or 3 per cent with antibiotic treatment.

There was no further reference to the outbreak in Sunday broadcasts.

Baptists seek funds

PLAINS, Ga. (UPI) — The Maranatha Baptist Church, started last May by disgruntled members of Plains Baptist Church, started a building fund drive Sunday after holding services at the home of state Sen. Hugh Carter, the President's cousin.

The 29-member church also officially joined state and regional sect groups last week.

Most Maranatha members split from the larger church because of opposition to the forced resignation of Rev. Bruce Edwards. Edwards resigned last February after a racial ban led to turmoil in the church. The pro-integration organizers of the new church supported Edwards, who has recently assumed a post in Hawaii.

The church, was previously called the Boltford Baptist Mission and had been meeting at a rundown Lutheran church four miles from Plains. Sen. Carter said the Sunday services were held at his house because the Lutherans had scheduled a daytime event in the facility.

He said members hope to collect $200,000 before construction starts, probably within a year.

Singer will retire

TONY ORLANDO

COHASSET, Mass. — Singer Tony Orlando says he's retiring from show business to spend more time with his family and to honor the memory of his late friend, comedian Freddie Prince.

Orlando, 33, made the surprise announcement during a performance at the South Shore Music Circus in Cohasset, Mass.

He said he would only perform hospital benefits in the future. "It took everybody by surprise," Frank Lieberman, the singer's publicist, said.

Satellites link hospitals

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Veterans Administration is experimenting with space satellites to link remotely located hospitals via two-way television broadcasts.

The telecasts may be used for education programs or for consultations, according to VA administrator Max Cleland. The results will decide if a national satellite network would be valuable, he said.

The agency first used satellites for medical consultation via television in 1974 when 10 hospitals in Appalachia participated in weekly broadcasts for 11 months.

Under a new trial program beginning in September, 31 VA hospitals in 11 western states and as many as 10 other institutions, such as medical schools, will participate in weekly, two-way telecasts for 15 months, Cleland said.

Using a communications satellite launched from Cape Canaveral, Fla., in January, 1976, telecasts from various points in the nation will be relayed to hospital receivers for viewing by staff. Staff members, using telephone conference lines, will be able to ask questions and discuss clinical problems.

Pound notes in error

LONDON (UPI) — Correctly printed one-pound notes may soon become collectors' items unless the Bank of England gets cracking.

The bank acknowledged Sunday that many "error notes" have passed through the checking system. They should not have.

Some of the notes, which are now worth $1.75, are printed with the queen's profile on the wrong side while others have double serial numbers. Some batches of notes have been printed with the same serial number.

BIG FROGS ... researchers developing strain

'Superfrogs' sought

NEW ORLEANS (UPI) — There's money to be made rearing and selling the lovely bullfrog for food, but researchers first must find a way to cheaply supply finicky frog eating habits and develop a fast-growing "superfrog" strain.

The harvest of wild bullfrogs in the United States has dwindled and most of the frog's legs served in restaurants are imported. Besides their value as food, the web-footed, bug-eyed amphibians are used in a variety of medical research.

"I imagine every restaurant in this country would love to have them as a standard menu item," said Dr. Dudley Culley, a researcher with the Louisiana State University School of Fisheries.

As its stands now, even in South Louisiana where you can hear them croaking and see their legs served in restaurants come from overseas, Culley said in a telephone interview from Baton Rouge. Frogs feed on animal protein; which in their natural habitat in the wetlands of South Louisiana usually means tiny fish, shrimp or crawfish.

Culley said he is trying to develop a food pellet that could be manufactured cheaply and fed to frogs.

He said researchers have successfully fed frogs bolted shrimp, bolted crawfish and fish meal, but the frogs rejected the same ingredients when they were incorporated into a pellet which could be cheaply produced.

"Data indicate they have definite flavor preferences and they seem to have preferences for the feel of the food," Culley said.

The problem, he said, seems to be with the binding agent used to hold the food in pellet form.

Indians conduct ritual

IGNACIO, Colo. (UPI) — The Indian told came up behind the governor and tapped him on the shoulder.

"Hi, what's your name?" Gov. Richard D. Lamm said to the girl.

She peered closely into his face and said, "Who are you?" A 30-minute friendship began.

Noanna and Sereina House — aged 4 and 3 — stumbled across the governor Sunday while he and 3,500 others were waiting for Ute and Comanche Indians to conclude a sacred peace pipe ritual in their white ceremonial tepee.

The governor, dressed in blue cowboy boots, jeans and a light blue western shirt, was sitting cross-legged about 30 feet from the tepee. "No throwing grass," Lamm said to the girls. "No fair. I'm not going to play."

"I'm going to tell my daddy," "I'm going to tell my daddy that you've been throwing grass at me," the state's chief executive replied.

"You want some gum?" one of the girls asked Lamm, holding out a green gum.

"No, thank you," Lamm said. Lamm also turned down the offer of a piece of red candy from the girls, at least, he tried.

"Noo," said Lamm. "Don't throw it. Don't throw it." The tot hurled the candy at Lamm and giggled. "You've got my tennis shoes on," Lamm later said to the girls, grabbing for their tiny blue sneakers. "Give me them right now."

The girls cried out in glee. Lamm later took off his cowboy boots to show the girls his shoe size.

"Ohhh, snelly boots," cried one girl, bringing laughter from Lamm and the surrounding crowd.

Lamm, who arrived in Ignacio Saturday night to attend the ceremonies, lost his newfound friends a few minutes later when their mother sheepishly found out about the company — her daughters were keeping.

Fatty loses his club membership

OAKLAND, Calif. (UPI) — Bozo Miller, Oakland's dinner-table superstar, has lost his membership in the "Fatty's club" because he has dropped from 300 pounds to 210.

He can still eat 2 1/2 chickens at one sitting or drink 2 quarts of whiskey in an hour but he does this only if "there's a reason" — like money. "I just don't put it away like the old days."

Miller has not completely relinquished his championship belt for eating, he's "just loosened it." He says he "can still sit out-ent anyone."

In his heyday Miller was popular with the news media. Even restaurants across the country bid for his talents.

"You can go into certain restaurants, and they give you extra service," he said, "I used to go back to Tools Shop in New York, and he'd stack up eight of everything for me to eat and drink. When you set a record, your reputation spreads."

"Dick Stewart had a television show in San Francisco, and for 90 minutes he kept feeding me. I ate a 25-pound prime rib, a load of potatoes and two gallons of ice cream. I did it as a favor."

The man of girth and mirth hasn't had a life of unmitigated glee, though. His wife, Janice, whom he met while she was a 21-year-old Navy yeoman, has been a semi-invalid for 20 years. A few years ago, Honey, one of their three daughters, died in an auto accident.

"That's when my whole life changed," said Bozo. "That's when I quit eating and drinking so much. The accident was only a half mile from here. I drive by the spot every day. I look and wonder and still can't figure why or how it happened."

But his job as sales manager for Pacific Crown — a wholesale beer and wine company — goes on, and so do his jokes.

Citizens continue to want US flags

CHICAGO Sun-Times — The epidemic of flag fever that swept the country last year because of the Bicentennial observance hasn't entirely died out.

"The demand for flags is still very strong," said John T. Christiansen, vice president of J. C. Schultz Enterprises, which has flag factories in suburban Northlake and Addison. "Of course, people aren't buying flags like they did last year. That was crazy. It was almost impossible to keep up with the demand. But people who are buying American flags now are seeking better quality."

Many homeowners are still flying the Bicentennial or Bennington '76 flags that they bought last year, which is perfectly legit. Bicentennial events, particularly in the East, continue through 1981, since the Revolutionary War didn't end until 1781.

Anyone who wants to buy a Bicentennial or Bennington flag now is sure to get a bargain.

DEAR ABBY: After reading your response to CONFUSED regarding ERA, I am still confused. You stated that "The ERA means that women will be subject to the draft." I have read various articles by people supporting the ERA that have said over and over that the power to draft women, if they should be needed to serve, already exists. The U.S. Constitution grants this power and the ERA will not really affect it.

What do your experts say? Does the power to draft women already exist or not? This seems to be the main complaint against the passing of the ERA. Please set us straight on this part of a very important issue. Thank you.

FAITHFUL READER

Women not now subject to drafting

DEAR FAITHFUL READER: Under the present law, women are precluded from being drafted by Section 453 of Title 50 of the United States Code. Once the ERA is ratified, the Congress will be required to treat men and women equally with respect to the draft. This means that both men and women who meet the physical and other requirements, and who are not exempt or deferred by law, will be subject to conscription.

Of course the ERA will not require that all women serve in the military any more than under present law all men are now required to serve. Those women who are physically or mentally unqualified, or who are conscientious objectors, or who are exempt because of their responsibilities (certain public officials, or those with dependents) will not have to serve. Thus the fear that mothers will be conscripted from their children into military service under the ERA is totally unfounded.

Congress has always had the power to draft women by legislating such a change. It almost did so in World War II. But the law as it currently stands does prohibit the drafting of women.

DEAR ABBY: People who dislike having their friends follow them into the kitchen are missing the boat. What difference does it make if their kitchens are messy? Why are some people always "on stage," never wanting anyone to see them (or their kitchens) in a less than perfect state?

My friends come to see ME—not my kitchen. And if they want to follow me into my kitchen while I'm preparing a snack or dinner, it's all right with me. It gives us that much more time to spend together.

How can a person find time to finish a good book or do something creative or make himself an interesting person to be with if he's always worrying about appearances?

KITTY

DEAR KITTY: Thanks for pointing out something I confused did not see. That's a topic on which I was scroopic.

DEAR ABBY: Many of your letters are regarding sex problems. Here in Baton Rouge, sex is regarded as a MISDEMEANOR—the more you MISS, the MEANER you get.

your health

By LAWRENCE E. LAMB, M.D.

Dear Dr. Lamb—
My son, now 57, was injured 18 years ago. He was in a coma for twelve weeks then developed convulsions and spasms for which he had two brain operations within a year. This left him with bad double vision and right side paralysis. He works with handicapped persons and does well, but his only locomotion is his wheel chair. He thinks hypnosis could help him, but how? By whom? Where? Is it possible?

Dear Reader—
Your son needs to understand exactly what his problem is. The nervous system is constructed like an electrical system. Our muscles move because impulses, like electrical current, pass through nerve fibers which, are much like the wires for an electrical circuit. The central area where all these circuits come together and are integrated is in the brain. If you destroy certain brain cells the effect is the same as if you broke a wire in an electrical circuit.

Your son's brain damage has destroyed cells that affect his vision and his right side. These cells will not regenerate. Using hypnosis is a bit like trying to use the power of suggestion to get an electrical current to move across a broken wire. It won't happen.

This same problem occurs in many stroke victims. The difference here is that in the early days of the stroke some of the cells don't work because they are injured but not totally destroyed. This is usually caused by local swelling. If these cells recover rather than die the function related to those cells may be regained.

How do some of the so-called miracles work? You need to look into the background of these to see what the facts really are. Sometimes these are not related to brain damage at all but are examples of hysterical paralysis, or a disease that does not kill the cells and they recover eventually like a "miracle."

Dear Dr. Lamb—
Is driving a car impossible following cataract surgery? I can't find a definite answer to my question and would appreciate straight answers.

Dear Reader—
Lots of people who have had cataract surgery do drive a car without any difficulty at all. It depends entirely on how good the individual's total vision is after surgery.

Some people with cataracts have other eye problems as well. This may limit their results from surgery. The use of contact lenses after surgery has helped to limit the amount of distortion of vision that occurs. So if a person's eyes are otherwise normal and with the aid of contact lenses, most patients should be able to drive without any real problems after surgery. I suppose I should add that I am assuming the person could drive before surgery since the operation won't enable a non-driver to acquire the skill.

Military girls don't fit Amazon image

By SUSAN FOGG
© Newhouse News Service

WASHINGTON — Although press and television reports on women at the military academies, in basic training and boot camps, on ships and in Air Force blue may suggest the dawning of an age of Amazon warriors, the image is far from the reality.

Despite a doubling in their numbers in the armed forces since the end of the Vietnam war, women still make up only 5 per cent of military personnel due to discriminatory restrictions that could severely inflate the Defense budget, reduce the size of the armed forces, or lead to reinstatement of the draft, according to a report by the Brookings Institution, a prestigious private think-tank.

While stopping short of calling for combat roles for women, the authors of the report — civilian defense analyst Martin Binklin and Air Force Lt. Col Shirley J. Bach — urged the armed forces to move toward less restrictive personnel in women in the services by 1982.

As it now stands, the armed services expect to increase the number of women in their ranks from 100,000 today to 147,000 by 1982, so that women would constitute 7 per cent of the forces.

But the Brookings report found that even excluding women from frontline combat jobs, the services could enlist 400,000 women, or 22 per cent of the total at the most conservative estimate. Fully a third — over half a million women — might be enlisted, a move that would make three-quarters of Air Force personnel and one-quarter of the Army female.

Full equality — combat duty — for women in the military should await studies of the impact of their presence on group morale, the study's author's said at a press luncheon, although both added that they felt there would be individual women who could handle combat roles as capably as men.

The women's movement has played a part in the push toward greater participation by women in the military, but the authors said the economics and politics of the volunteer services may prove the crucial factor in the next decade or two.

The sudden deflation of the baby boom in the 1960s means that by 1985 the pool of 18-year-old male high school graduates will be markedly reduced from today. Women could expand that pool.

Military recruitment efforts will have to compete with the civilian job market to attract these desirables, and for men, the wages and job training opportunities are not as attractive as for women — who with comparable backgrounds can earn only half as much in the civilian sector as men.

The alternatives to overcoming the dwindling pool of eligibles could lie in reducing the size of the armed forces (and hence, in theory, the country's military preparedness), increasing military pay — the largest single factor in the defense budget — to competitive levels with the civilian market, or in bringing back the draft.

Even if the revival of the draft in peacetime proved politically palatable, they said, the draft would inevitably have to include women.

Binklin cited the changing attitudes of men of the question of sexual equality, predicting a males-only draft would bring a spate of lawsuits claiming men were losing their civil rights, solely because of their sex.

The authors noted the problems of manpower (even with the draft, there would not be enough males to fill the needs of the services, so that women would also have to answer the call.)

About Women

Actress marries

Actress Brenda Vaccaro, 36, was married in Dallas, Texas, July 20 and is now Mrs. William S. Bishop. She did not think much of marriage earlier this month when she was interviewed on the subject by US magazine. She said then: "Living together is more important than marriage because being together is more important than any piece of paper."

Former movie star Barbara Rush, 47, is now in Chicago starring in the romantic comedy "Same Time, Next Year." Co-starring in the two-character play with the Denver-born actress is Tom Troupe.

Alice M. Rivlin, director of the Congressional Budget Office, said that although the American economy would continue to expand through 1978, inflation was a deeply embedded force that would abate only slowly. "The realistic outlook is for no more than a slow unwinding of the current rate of inflation," she said.

American Broadcasting Company officials here announced that Sally Struthers has been signed to play the female lead in "National Velvet," the 1944 film in which another teenager, Elizabeth Taylor, galloped to victory in the British Grand National. Tatum is scheduled to begin shooting in England in September. (UPI)

Innaurato scores with 'odd' comedy

By GLENNE CURRIE
UPI Lively Arts Editor

NEW YORK (UPI) — A year ago, playwright Albert Innaurato was sick, broke, owed $5,000, and no one seemed interested in his plays.

"It was the worst period in my life," he said. "I was even evicted from my apartment."

"I have a chronic illness and I'd been turned down by all the (medical) insurance companies. I had two operations and no money to pay for them. While I was still in the hospital I was hemorrhaging and I couldn't afford another operation."

It wasn't till late 1976 that things started looking up.

The respected off-Broadway Circle Repertory Company accepted Innaurato's comedy "Gemini," about life in the Italian section of Philadelphia where he was born and brought up. And comic James Coco had seen an off-off-Broadway (non-paying) showcase version of his "The Transfiguration of Beano Blimpie" and persuaded a producer to present it with another one-act play off Broadway, starting Coco.

"Gemini" now is on Broadway. Innaurato won an OBIE for "distinguished playwrighting" for the two plays. And both were nominated for Drama Desk awards.

Innaurato has at least one more play in draft, has an offer to write an original screenplay, and wants to do new productions of "Blimpie" and "Earth Worms," which had an OOB showcase production earlier this year. "I'm also doing a lot of short stories all of a sudden. And I have two novels in my head."

"I've had a headache for four months," the genial 28-year-old giant said with a grin.

"Now I'm looking for an apartment. I'm now paying $250 for a hole-in-the-wall in the Village. When my agent saw it she was horrified and said I had to get out of there. All I can find is something for $600 a month. I should make enough this year to pay the rent, but I'm only going to sign a one-year lease."

"If you're fool enough to write plays," he added, "you're fool enough to write plays," he added, "with all the financial insecurity and heartache, you have to have a martyr complex."

Innaurato's father is a printer and his mother a nurse: "lower middle-class people."

"I love them very much; they're very intelligent. My father has great verbal gifts, very articulate. I think he could have been a writer. But when I think of any strength I may have I think it comes from my mother."

"I inherited some sort of queer gene and taught myself to read music and play the piano and fell in love with opera. I tried to write operas but couldn't do it. So I switched to the theater. In high school I wrote a little play, and I did a lot of acting and directing."

Because of his health he attended a number of special schools in Philadelphia, then went to Yale Drama School.

"They ignored my plays," he said, "though they deny it now. Other people got the prizes — Chris Durang and people like that."

"I got a scholarship but I still owe Yale and for medical bills."

After receiving his MFA in playwrighting from Yale in 1974, Innaurato got a Guggenheim fellowship in playwrighting, which had run out when he went into the hospital last year. At that time "Blimpie" was 5½ years old, "Earth Worms" 3½, "Gemini" about a year.

Talking of his summer of 1976, Innaurato said, "After that kind of experience you can hardly think of 'Blimpie' as ugly; life is ugly."

"Blimpie" concerns an unloved fat youth who commits suicide. "Gemini" deals with the sexual confusion of a young Italian. "Earth Worms" features bisexuality and homosexuality.

"Homosexuals hate my plays," he said, "I have no gay following because of the element of sexual confusion. I know many heterosexuals who have unhappy lives, society's sexual attitudes are so awful. It's just a case of people having a problem, not whether they're gay or straight, but of people adjusting to each other."

Sex education fails in what kids want

ANN ARBOR, Mich. (UPI) — Sex education in U.S. schools has failed because courses concentrate on anatomy and reproduction "when what the kids really want to know about are human relationships," a researcher said Friday.

Sylvia S. Hacker based her conclusion on a doctoral thesis on the steady increase in the number of unwanted pregnancies among teenagers while the national birth rate declined in an age of "sexual enlightenment." She said, simply, that teenagers were not among the enlightened.

"Sex education classes in this country are a failure," said Miss Hacker, who operates University of Michigan's health clinic.

"The classes are dealing with anatomy and reproduction when what the kids really want to know about are human relationships," Miss Hacker said. She interviewed 38 sexually experienced young people aged 15 to 23.

"What will she think if I try something?" and "How far should I let him go?" she said youths who had, without contraceptives, indicated a general desire to avoid pregnancy but with varying degrees of self-consciousness about the use of contraceptives.

Twins develop own language

SAN DIEGO (UPI) — For years, the small twin daughters of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Kennedy were thought to be retarded because they speak only gibberish.

But speech therapists have now discovered that the 6-year-old girls actually developed their own language and are both bright youngsters.

Alexa Roman, a speech therapist at Children's Hospital calls the language "Idioglossia" or "twin speech."

"Development of this kind of language has been found to occur in very rare instances among twins who have had no other contact with other children," she said. "There is very little in the medical literature about it."

English and German are spoken in the Kennedy home, but the twins could speak neither, according to the parents. Therapists have now found the children understand both languages, even though they don't speak either one.

The language the girls have developed sounds like gibberish to others, but among themselves they appear to communicate well with their chatter.

No one — including the parents — has yet been able to translate the twins' language. Some of it sounds like this: "Dugon, haus you dinikin, duah, snup-aduh ah-wee dedipana dilaubana."

Because of health problems shortly after the twins' birth, the Kennedys were advised there was a chance their daughters would be retarded. And when the infants didn't utter their first sound until 17 months old, they were convinced.

Earlier this year the twins were put in a special school class for the mentally retarded. But teachers soon realized the girls were in the wrong class and they were sent to the state's regional center for the developmentally disabled at Children's Hospital, where authorities said the children were now learning English rather rapidly.

Annual festival honors monster

PERRY, N.Y. (UPI) — In 1855 a giant sea serpent poked its ugly head out of the waters of Silver Lake and scared six fishermen out of their hip boots.

No matter that the whole thing turned out to be a big hoax two years later — the mighty Sea Serpent of Silver Lake is still very much alive in this tranquil community of about 4,600 tucked away between Buffalo and Rochester.

In fact, Perry has been honoring its mythical monster for the past 25 years with an annual Silver Lake Sea Serpent Festival. This year's slingshot is slated for July 24-30.

According to town legend, the serpent was about 60 feet tall, 100 feet long, and has shiny, dark green skin with yellow spots, and flaming red eyes. It was sighted in the lake several times that summer of 1855.

"We're told that vast crowds of people would line up around the lake each night to wait for the serpent to appear," festival official Rose Andolina said.

Occasionally the serpent would rise 10 feet out of the water, sending onlookers scurrying away in terror. Then, just stopped appearing.

Two years later the townsfolk found out why when they poked through the burned out Walker's Hotel and found the remains of the canvass monster, which had been rigged with a popping system to make it rise in the water.

"The hotel owner, A.B. Walker, apparently dreamed up the monster as a way of drumming up some business for his place," Mrs. Andolina said.

The serpent was forgotten until 1952, when the local Jaycees decided to bring it back in slightly smaller version made of paper mache and fiberglass.

Every year since then, the new demon has been the center of attention at the week-long celebration of sidewalk sales, talent shows and concerts.

But this year, there's a problem.

Some rats got into the back room of Perry's old, crumbling town hall where the monster is stored and ate him.

"There's only the frame left," Mrs. Andolina said.

So for this year's festival, they'll use a small model of the demon.

"One of our townspeople has offered to rebuild him for next year's festival, but it will cost $600," Mrs. Andolina said.

"We're also thinking of buying an inflatable serpent, so we'll never have any more storage problems."

Tourism maintains castle

By GAIL GREGG LONDON (UPI) — The lord and lady's home is a castle. And despite the fact that it is big and cold and costly to keep up, the lord and lady go to humbling lengths to insure that the castle will remain their home.

Witness: A dozen well-dressed Midwestern ladies, two unflappable husbands, a bustling guide disembark from a tourist bus in front of the Oxfordshire manor house.

"The guests" are welcomed on the terrace; the bus is shooed discreetly to the garage.

The Americans, who have paid $17 each to tour the historic home and lunch with nobility, chat over wine and comment on the well-clipped topiary garden.

"A few Venture" to talk with the lady.

"We think you're really gracious to let us come into your home like this," one said.

"We think it's super," smiled the lady. "We so love having people to the house."

Later, over lunch, someone ventures to ask: "Do you enjoy doing this?"

"Quite," she answers.

"Do you have people to lunch often?"

"No!" she responds. "No, only once or twice a year. As you can tell we're terribly inefficient at this sort of thing. As I keep saying, this is our home. If we have to turn it into a hotel, I don't want to live here."

Still, she and her husband regularly open their home to visitors who pass judgment upon their furnishings and food and inevitably ask each other, once out of hearing range, "Why do they do this?"

The answer if simple: their historic home has become prohibitively expensive to maintain. They have had to open their doors to visitors to make ends meet.

"Economic and fiscal pressures such as the escalating cost of repairs and extra taxation make it increasingly difficult for historical architectural properties to be maintained in good order, and the government is reluctant to take over the responsibility should private owners decide to give up the struggle," the British Tourist Authority says.

Jim: "It certainly is and it certainly complicates the game for the ordinary player. I also complicate it for the expert, but if he can't handle complications he shouldn't consider himself an expert."

Oswald: "It does complicate things sometimes. On other occasions it really helps the defense."

Jim: "When modernist West opens the five of spades against South's normal three-notrump contract, declarer ducks in dummy. East wins, the trick with the queen and since he is sure that his partner has led from the jack he leads the king right back. Later on he gets in with the king of diamonds and the defense gathers in enough tricks to give poor South a headache."

Oswald: "Even without this convention an alert East would still get rid of that king of spades and hope for the best. The convention just made the play a cinch."

A Tribute...
The Optimists' Club
by JACK WÄRBERG

Someone said that at the Optimists' Club luncheon the doughnuts have no holes in them! True or false, it could be possible for the Optimists to do nothing but good. I feel sincerely that every cloud has a silver lining. What a marvelous world this would be if everybody believed in and practiced this faithless philosophy! Then we could truly live the Golden Rule — and we would have 150,000,000 friends in America alone. The good that the Optimists' Club is doing can't be reckoned in mere money. They're disseminating a tidal wave of optimism... and that's more precious than silver or gold!

Pioneer Day—ferris wheels to rodeo—fun for all

George Wiley/Times-News

Lou Freeman/Times-News

HAGERMAN—The little town of Hagerman looked like a miniature metropolis Saturday as crowds jammed the streets for the annual Pioneer Day celebration.

The day's events began about 8:30 a.m. with a rodeo queen contest. A parade with more than 80 entrants made the journey down Main Street about 11:30 a.m. A rodeo was held at 1:30 p.m. in the city park.

Leading the parade were Mr. and Mrs. Mark Steele, who have lived in the community since 1927. Great-grandparents several times over, the Steeles farmed in Hagerman for years even though Mr. Steele, now 83, was blinded in both eyes in his early 30s.

The Pioneer Day is sponsored by the Hagerman Ward of the LDS Church.

Barbara Hall, whose husband, Blair, was chairman of this year's celebration, said the event had been held for so many years nobody remembered its origin.

One participant said she could remember parades as far back as 1926.

For Mrs. Hall, helping her husband oversee activities gave her a first look at a Pioneer Day parade.

"I thought this was a fantastic parade," she said. "This is the first time I've watched a parade—and I've been involved in this quite a few years."

Woodside lots still bound for auction

By CHRISTOPHER BOGAN
Times-News writer

MILLIE—Unsold properties at the Woodside Village Resort here are still expected to go on the auction block, despite a change in their corporate ownership.

McCulloch Oil Corp. has announced that it will sell its land development interests at Woodside and seven other communities throughout the West to a new company jointly owned by itself and former McCulloch executive Lorne Pratt.

McCulloch Properties, Inc. (MPI), a division of McCulloch Oil Corp., currently owns the 60-acre Woodside subdivision as well as 1,580 acres at Dempster Gulch west of the city.

Contractors from its start four years ago in 1973, the Woodside project turned out to be a giant lust for MPI, and in late February the company announced it would seek permission to put about 950 unsold lots up for public auction.

MPI executive officials then anticipated a "substantial loss," perhaps as much as $3 million, when it disposes of these landholdings.

A public auction must first be approved by the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD), and, according to MPI officials, government red tape has held up approval of the auction so far.

MPI expects HUD to decide on the Woodside auction proposal by August.

Pratt, a former executive vice-president of MPI, said the new company will be formed within 90 days with McCulloch owning 51 percent of the firm, and Pratt owning the other 49 percent.

"The purpose (of the transaction) is to allow McCulloch to take the final steps to get out of the land business," he said, "and to allow the new company to conduct the land operations as an ongoing business," Pratt told the Times-News.

Under terms of an agreement announced by Pratt in Fountain Hills, Ariz., and by McCulloch in Los Angeles, McCulloch will provide financing of about $60 million for the new company to meet McCulloch's commitments.

The new firm will buy all developed and undeveloped McCulloch properties in Woodside as well as in the communities of Fountain Hills and Lake Havasu City, Ariz.; Holiday Island, Ark.; Silver Lakes, Calif.; Pueblo West, Colo.; Silver Creek and Palomino Valley, Nev.; and Westcreek Park, Tex.

"This new company will also acquire McCulloch owned recreational and resort facilities at the various communities.

"In January of next year I plan to launch a major residential construction with an expenditure of at least $12.5 million in 1978," Pratt said.

C.V. Wood Jr., chairman and chief executive officer of McCulloch, said the proposed sale would expedite McCulloch's previously announced plans to withdraw from the land development business.

The sale "is subject to negotiation of a definitive agreement and satisfaction of a number of conditions, including receipt of any necessary approvals of McCulloch's security holders," Wood said.

Rim hearing transcripts still remain uncompleted

GOODING—Gooding County officials are still waiting for transcripts of the last public hearing on a lawsuit seeking to halt development on the Snake River Canyon rim throughout the county.

Gary Shaw, deputy county prosecutor, said Thursday that written briefs can be submitted up to 15 days after the transcripts are received.

The last of three public hearings to air the issue was held June 16. Transcripts taken by an independent court reporter from Twin Falls have not yet been returned to the county clerk's office, according to John LeMoine, commission chairman.

After the transcripts are received and the 15-day period for receiving written briefs is observed, all evidence will be studied by a citizen committee appointed earlier by the county commission to conduct the hearings.

Ralph Faulkner, chairman, and committee members Cliff Harris, Wendell, and Vern Cox.

Hagerman, will make their recommendation on future rim development to the county commissioners who have the final decision on the issue.

"We'll make our recommendation as soon as possible after getting the reports," Faulkner said.

R.W. Stevens, Hagerman, who initiated the suit, has requested the 15-day period for submitting briefs, Shaw said.

During the three public hearings, held in May and June, more than a dozen persons testified, including geologists, engineers, landowners and a high school youth.

Most of the testimony pointed out dangers of further pollution to the underground springs which interlace the canyon rim and provide drinking water for Hagerman Valley residents as well as support a thriving fish hatchery economy in the area.

Scouts go to national jamboree

MAGIC VALLEY—A total of 54 Magic Valley Boy Scouts and their troop leaders left Saturday to attend the National Boy Scout Jamboree at Morain State Park in Pennsylvania Aug. 1 to 11.

Before arriving in Pennsylvania, the Scouts, representing Troop 781 from the Burley and Northside area and Troop 782 from the Twin Falls area, will take an eight-day bus tour of several eastern cities.

The tour includes such sites as Independence Square in Philadelphia, the United Nations Building, the Statue of Liberty and the Empire State Building in New York City, and a day at the King's Dominion amusement park in Doswell, Va.

Scoutmasters Keith Jensen, Twin Falls, and Fred Lock, Gooding, will be assisted by assistant leaders Jim Archibald, Wendell, Al Lewis, Twin Falls; Bill Skaggs, Gooding, and Bob Bopp and Tim Miller, Twin Falls.

Planners will relocate office

TWIN FALLS—The Region IV Development Association will move its office to Twin Falls; if Twin Falls County Commissioners delete the provision saying the office must come here.

Everett Ward, Richfield, chairman of the now six-member development group, said directors have voted to accept the offer of Dr. James Taylor, president of the College of Southern Idaho, to move the office from Wehdell to a building now being renovated by the college for office space.

The building is located on Snakeone Street south, near the Rock Creek Bridge, and has parking space in the rear, Ward said.

Twin Falls County Commissioners refused to join the regional development group until last month. In June they sent a "letter of participation" to the association, but Ward said one paragraph stipulated that we have to move to Twin Falls.

"While the directors feel it will be beneficial to accept the offer of office space, Ward said, "We will still reserve the right to turn the offer down."

If the situation were reversed, and some of the smaller counties were asking the group to move out of Twin Falls, I'm sure we'd be told in no uncertain terms what we could do," Ward said.

The Region IV Development Association is the successor to the former Magic Valley

Association of Governments which went defunct because the majority of county commissioners in Magic Valley decided to withdraw their membership several years ago.

It was felt under the then-existing membership fees, larger counties were charged more than it was worth. Cities also were charged membership fees.

Ward said five of the smaller counties—Camas, Gooding, Lincoln, Blaine and Mindoka—kept the concept of regional development alive since the demise of the old organization.

A psychiatrist does not usually shake hands with his patient until the last treatment. Or so reports a student of such matters. Theory is that a handshake tends to reveal the personality traits of the shaker. And the psychiatrist does not wish to let the patient either interpret or misinterpret his own traits.

Note that Isaac Newton is repeatedly portrayed by cartoonists as a figure sitting under a tree, being hit on the head by a falling apple, and almost invariably as an old man with a long white beard. In fact, Isaac was only 24 when he discovered the law of gravity.

MOURNING BROOD
Was the custom hereabouts 200 years ago to give each body who attended a funeral something called a mourning brooch. On it was inscribed the name, age and death date of the deceased. And in it was a lock of hair, supposedly from the deceased's own head. But during big funerals, sometimes hundreds of those brooches were handed out, and it was understood by all that the hair in them had been furnished by the dead but by the living—friends, relatives, even strangers. Undertakers kept locks of hair in stock. And brooches, too. So did jewelers. And traveling sellers of trinkets. And the engravers did a nifty business.

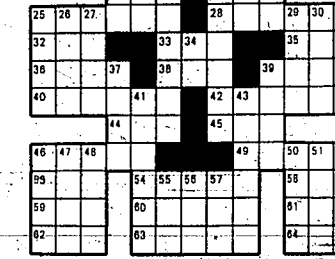

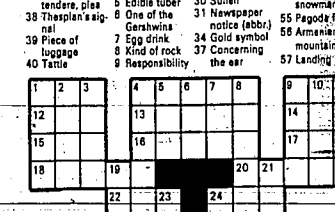

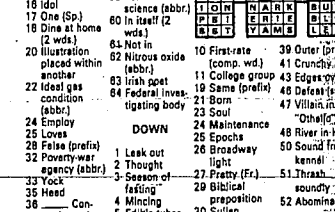

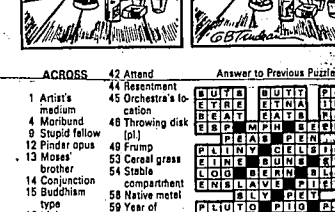

The surveyors also have come up with the fact that 11 per cent of the men in this country and 28 per cent of the women have kept diaries for more than three months.

Dixie drought slows up kudzu vine

ATLANTA (UPI) — The searing heat wave and prolonged drought blanketing the South may succeed in an area where man and machine have failed — slowing down the spread of the nearly invincible kudzu vine.

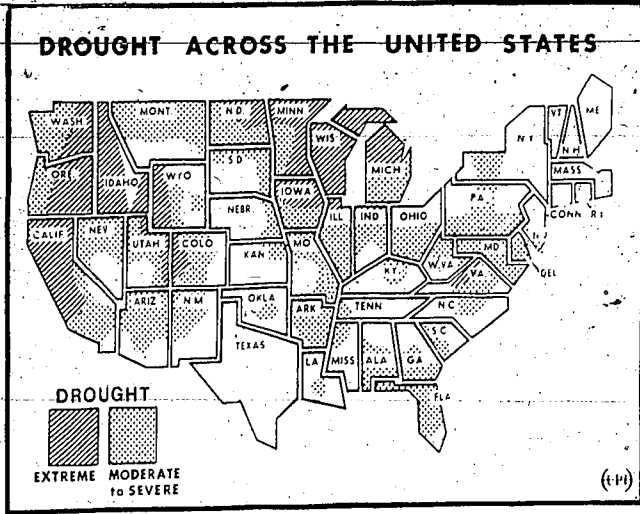

The National Weather Service in Atlanta said that since June 19 there have been 29 days in which temperatures reached 90 degrees or above. More 90-degree or hotter weather and a continuing shortage of rainfall is in the long-range forecast.

Kudzu is a vine of a deep green color and a phenomenal ability to grow — up to 12 inches a day — even in the poorest of soils. Native to China, it made its first appearance in this country in 1876. The vine was first used as food for cattle and later to control erosion. In the 1930s it was planted along highway rights of way all over the South.

But inability to control its spread brought kudzu into disrepute. It is seen principally along roads and highways, engulfing abandoned houses and barns, climbing trees and turning fields into expanses of green.

"Really excessive" high temperatures probably slows it down some," Dunn said. "If this kind of stuff (the heat wave and drought) continues, kudzu may lose out to broomsedge," the latter, a stiff-branched plant that thrives in poor soil and some rural areas to brooms.

Impact spreads

Average urban beef prices go down

DENVER (UPI) — Shoppers in 19 of the nation's larger cities paid an average price of $1.46 per pound for beef this month, two cents less than it cost them in June, the American National Cattlemen's Association today.

Association President Wray Finney said his organization's monthly survey showed average retail beef prices in mid-July ranged from a low of $1.29 in Cleveland to a high of $1.77 per pound in Portland.

"Production of beef and other meats has continued large for some time, and this has kept meat prices relatively low," Finney said. "There has been virtually no change in retail beef prices over the last three months, although there have been slight increases in cattle and wholesale beef prices recently."

"Retail prices are expected to increase eventually, however. Because of continuing large financial losses, as well as drought in some areas, cattlemen have been forced to cut back or liquidate their basic herds, and this will bring reduced beef supplies and higher prices later," Finney said the five-cut average for July declined in nine cities, rose in nine and was unchanged in one. Average prices for ground beef, round steak; T-bone steak and chuck roast prices decreased during the past month. Sirloln steak prices increased.

Average prices for five cuts of beef as determined by the survey were $1.33 in Atlanta, $1.60 in Baltimore, $1.31 in Chicago, $1.42 in Dallas, $1.35 in Denver, $1.46 in Des Moines, $1.53 in Detroit, $1.56 in Houston, $1.46 in Jackson, Miss., $1.43 in Kansas City, $1.55 in Los Angeles, $1.39 in Memphis, $1.58 in New York, $1.48 in Omaha, $1.35 in Phoenix, $1.36 in San Francisco and $1.60 in Washington, D.C.

Owhyee livestock shows alter aims

MADISON, Wis. — There are many livestock shows where young people who exhibit animals are learning nothing except some out-of-date traditions of the show ring, a University of Idaho extension specialist said here.

Speaking at the annual meeting of the American Society of Animal Science, J.D. Mankin said Owhyee County in Idaho has broken with tradition in order to fortify the "educational function" of youth livestock shows.

"A livestock show should not be a beauty contest," Mankin said. "Livestock are raised for their meat, not for their looks. Young people who are learning about the livestock business need to understand the qualities our customers — the packers — are looking for in meat animals."

Judges in youth livestock shows in Owhyee County try to explain how animals in the show ring would be evaluated by packers.

"Three judges are used to measure quality and yield-grade indicators and other traits that make the animal useful to the packing industry," Mankin said.

Changes in the county's livestock shows have been made "one step at a time" over a five-year period, the University of Idaho extension livestock specialist said.

"These changes gave young exhibitors an appreciation of the factors affecting the livestock industry. A true 'teaching moment' was again developed at youth shows," Mankin said.

Among other changes projected in the future, Mankin said the animals' average daily gain should be considered in livestock judging. "This will reflect to producers the value of such animals in the enterprise profit structure," he said.

Mankin prepared his report in collaboration with two extension colleagues — meats specialist John C. Miller and livestock specialist Edward P. Duren. Mankin and Miller are stationed at the University of Idaho Research and Extension Center at Caldwell. Duren is headquartered at Soda Springs.

New approach cited

MADISON, Wis. — A new market-oriented approach to 4-H livestock projects was presented here by Dr. John C. Miller, University of Idaho extension meats specialist, in a report to the American Society of Animal Science.

Miller said 4-H members who work with livestock should learn "economic realities" as well as techniques of training, grooming and showmanship.

"How to produce for the market is the most important lesson that can be taught in youth livestock projects. Young people will understand this lesson if they are rewarded for producing the kind of animal the packing industry wants," Miller said.

Stock shift plan fails

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — Cattle rustling is a long standing western crime, but two California brothers have been accused of a new twist — cattle moving to defraud a bank.

Lamb processing hiked

GREELEY, Colo. (UPI) — Montfort of Colorado, one of the nation's largest meatpackers, said Tuesday it would increase processing of lambs by 200,000 head a year because of production halts by other companies.

Samuel D. Addams, Montfort president, said the decision would provide a market for lambgrowers who previously sold animals to plants closing in western Nebraska and northern Utah.

Couple 'loses' boy, 7

TWIN FALLS—Like the "old woman who lived in the shoe," an Idaho Falls couple has trouble keeping track of their children.

Mr. and Mrs. Merle Morgan called the Twin Falls sheriff's office from Idaho Falls late Friday afternoon frantically asking for help. It seems they had driven to Filer for the Arabian Horse Show and when they returned to Idaho Falls discovered they had left one of their three children behind.

Deputy Sheriff Buddy Dewesse went to the fairgrounds where he found seven-year-old Jesse Morgan calmly watching the horse show.

Dewesse took Jesse home with him to wait for the return of the Idaho Falls family.

Sheriff Paul Corder said the couple traveled in a camper and thought all three boys were in the back when they left Filer and did not discover one was missing until they had driven all the way home.

Attorney sues Inn

HAILLEY—A Utah attorney has brought suit against the Holiday Inn in Ketchum and one of its managers on charges of personal defamation of his character.

Alan Coombs is asking the court to award him more than $100,000 in damages relating to an incident on March 8, 1976 when he was arrested by Ketchum police after a complaint made by the Holiday Inn manager, George Stewart, on charges of defrauding an innkeeper.

The charges were later dismissed by Magistrate Daniel Alban in the Blaine County Court House.

In addition to the rest, Coombs claims Stewart, with deliberate intent to injure him, said publicly: "Call the Sheriff. Someone get his license plate. You are a smart-mouthed— and I am charging you with a felony. Idaho law now makes defrauding an innkeeper a felony."

Coombs is asking the court to direct Stewart, the Holiday Inn and its owner, the Fraser Mortgage Co., to award him $50,000 in actual damages, $50,000 in punitive damages and $1,000 in attorney fees.

Hiring authorized

TWIN FALLS—The Magic Valley Hospital board earlier this week authorized administrator James Rosenbaum to hire a new public relations director.

A story in Thursday's Times-News reported the board had authorized the hiring of a new personnel director. The hospital already has a personnel director, Phil Sampson.

The Times-News regrets the error.

Divers aided search

TWIN FALLS—Sheriff Paul Corder said Saturday the body of Allen Ricks, 17, Twin Falls, was recovered by members of the Snake River Scuba Diving Team who volunteered their services at the small lake above Dierkes Lake Saturday afternoon.

He said Leonard Cox found the body in about 50 feet of water in the area which had been marked for search and close to where Ricks was last seen by his companions Tuesday.

Corder said deputy sheriffs Jim Hopkins and Bufeh Fillmore went to the lake to look for the body when they met the Burley divers who offered their services. He said a few minutes after they entered the water they discovered the body and brought it to the surface. Kelly Reynolds, Dave Teek and diving club president, Max Vaughn, all Burley, also assisted in the Saturday effort.

Demos hold picnic

SHOSHONE—The 1978 elections campaigns heated up a bit Sunday as 150 area Democrats gathered here for a picnic and rally. Though interrupted by rain, the Democrats listened to speeches by candidates and discussed the political battles next year will bring.

Among those attending was Stan Kress, of Firth, who last year ran for Congress against incumbent Representative George Hansen, R-Pocatello. "I'm not an announced candidate and I'm not officially running for anything," Kress told the Democrats. "But you and I both know I wouldn't be here if I wasn't thinking of it."

Also attending were newly-elected State Democratic Chairman John Greenfield; District 21 Chairman Alex Echelata; Lincoln County Chairman Floyd Kising; Gooding County Chairman Grant Zollinger; Mike Wetherill, a possible candidate for Attorney General; Jerome County Chairman Frank Titus; Jean Terra, an assistant to Gov. John Evans and Pat Osbon, an assistant to Sen. Frank Church.

Plant denies closure rumor

By SHANE O'NEILL
Times-News writer

BURLEY—Amalgamated Sugar Company plans to run all four of its Idaho and Oregon beet processing plants this fall.

Rumors had circulated that a disease had harmed crops in the Twin Falls area and that plant might be closed, hauling beets to the Mini-Cassia plant near Paul.

Amalgamated officials Friday denied the rumor.

Alvin Keller, fieldman for the Burley area, said, "As far as I'm concerned this is just a rumor. I haven't heard a thing about it."

Pete Chertwell, manager of the Paul plant, said all four plants will be in operation "unless something happens we can't foresee at this point." The plants are referred to are at Twin Falls, Paul, Nampa and Nysa, Ore.

The infestation of curly top disease is carried by the "white fly" or sugar beet leafhopper. The Filer-Buhl area has had a much heavier incidence of the virus than other areas in the Magic Valley.

Although some curly top has been noticed in the Mini-Cassia area, it does not seem to be a major problem. Hank McNeel, Minidoka County extension agent, said "There have been a few leafhoppers in here," but he said they were scattered.

"Really, there's not much you can do for it," he said. "The main thing is to plant seeds that are resistant."

Ray Freymiller, former head of the Cassia County Beet Growers Association, said he has seen "quite a lot" of the curly top disease this summer, but he could not judge the percentage of the fields that are infested.

Freymiller said the infestation is scattered. He said one portion of his fields, only about an acre, was hit by the disease heavily, but it "didn't seem to spread through the field too much."

He estimated he would get only a 50 percent yield where the disease had infested the crop heavily.

"Whether it'll let up now, I don't know," he said. "I haven't seen any in the beans."

Melvin Cull, a farmer southwest of Burley, and now president of the beet growers, said he knows of no curly top in his area. He said an Amalgamated field man checked his fields and could find none although the field man reported some infestation in the Buhl area.

Keller admitted there is some curly top in the Mini-Cassia area but added, "I don't look for much problem over here."

Keller said, "There's a little bit. Some fields will be reduced 15 to 20 percent but the fields are very scattered."

McNeel said curly top has not been noticeable in Minidoka County but he added beet farmers are having problems with the beet leaf miner and there is "quite a bit of this English grain aphid."

McNeel said the leaf miner, which goes into the leaf and takes all of the chlorophyll out, can be sprayed with Dyofox although "you've gotta be awful careful with (federal) law."

He said a lot of the leaf miner has been noticed but where it was treated early in the spring farmers are having "pretty good luck."

McNeel said the area also has "quite an infestation of the green bug." He referred to an aphid that infests small grain.

McNeel said he had found one field in southwestern Minidoka County near the Jerome County line which suffered from the sugar beet webworm.

2 towers erected

By LORAYNE O. SMITH
Times-News writer

MAGIC VALLEY—Weather reporting towers have been erected at two suggested sites for Idaho Power Company's proposed coal-fired generating plant, despite some confusion over Bureau of Land Management right-of-way approval for the Bliss site.

A 100-foot meteorological tower began recording data Thursday at Sid's Crossing in eastern Lincoln County, according to Bob Brown, Bliss, public relations director for Idaho Power Co.

He said a smaller, portable tower which already has been collecting weather information at Sid's Crossing will be moved to the proposed American Falls site.

Brown said another portable tower will be set up on the Bliss Butte, north of Bliss, where the company has requested right-of-way access to BLM land. He said "our lawyers say we have received approval."

But workers at the Sid's Crossing project said they had already set the tower at Bliss, even though state BLM officials reported earlier that day the application is still being reviewed.

Harold Brown, reality specialist at the Shoshone BLM office, said the right-of-way application "had been processed at the district level" but that an archeological report had been sent to the state BLM office later.

Shoshone BLM personnel made a field report on the request to set the tower on Bliss Butte, Brown said, as well as an environmental assessment.

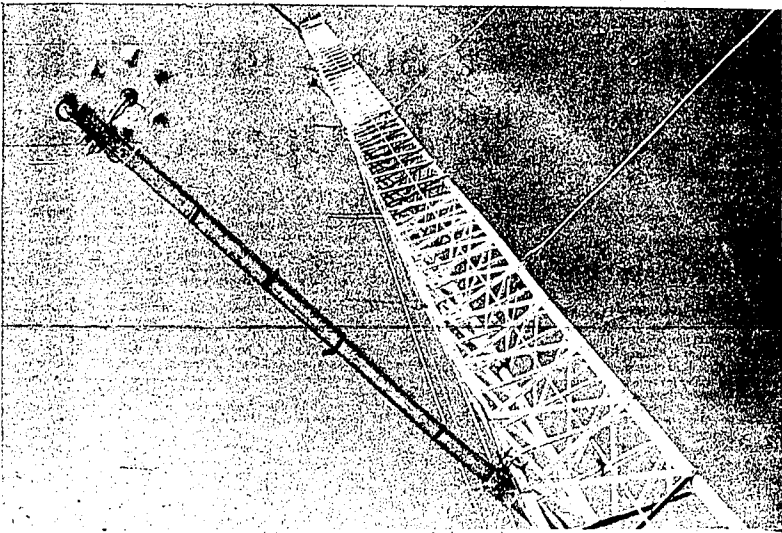

The BLM official said the battle where the tower apparently already is placed would provide "poor access" for hauling coal, indicating that if the Bliss site should be selected, the power plant itself would be built at a different location.

Three families north of Bliss have reported they believe their farms, which join at the corners, are being considered by Idaho Power because the firm previously has made tests on the private farmland.

A spokesman at the State BLM office, where the right-of-way will be issued, said the "case will have to be reviewed" and an appraisal made before the right of way can be granted.

The Idaho Power Co. last month applied to the Idaho Public Utilities Commission (IPUC) for permission to construct a 500 megawatt coal fired plant, listing three proposed sites—near Bliss, Sid's Crossing and one west of American Falls.

Brown said the company had been unable to obtain another large meteorological tower, so had settled for the smaller, portable ones at the Bliss and American Falls sites.

New spaceship resembles jet

By CHRISTOPHER BOGAN
Times-News writer

SUN VALLEY—It looks like a spaceship straight out of a Flash Gordon serial, but it's not from any science fiction magazine.

This year will see a new shape in the skies over California, according to Samuel Beddingfield, manager of the Space Shuttle Program assessment office at Kennedy Space Center in Florida.

That shape is a spacecraft that looks like a heavyjet jetliner and indeed lands horizontally just like a plane.

The orbiter is the manned portion of the Space Shuttle Transportation System, a reusable Earth-to-orbit spacecraft.

He spoke before a meeting here of the "Flying Physicians," a national group of doctors who have developed medical relief programs flown by airplane to disaster and emergency areas.

Beddingfield described what once would have seemed the excited reverie of a science fiction buff, but today is the reality of NASA's Space Shuttle Orbiter program.

Beddingfield predicts the orbiter will open the door to building large structures in space and who knows—could one day make possible space colonization on large orbiting space stations.

Already the orbiter has received wide public attention. It's that funny looking aircraft that newspapers and magazines have shown riding piggyback on a Boeing 747 jetliner.

The large plane carries the orbiter to high altitudes and then releases the spacecraft to glide to a landing at NASA's Dryden Flight Research Center in California.

A cargo and personnel carrier, the shuttle will deliver payloads to orbit, eliminating the need for costly launch vehicles. NASA officials say it will extend the useful life of satellites by allowing repairs in orbit or retrieval of satellites for repair on earth.

NASA officials predict the shuttle will pave the way for manufacture in space of items like pharmaceuticals and crystals for electronics, which are best produced in a vacuum or weightless environment.

According to NASA, the space shuttle will allow whole teams of scientists to go into space to study and experiment at vantage points as high as 500 miles above Earth.

In the space lab—a pressurized module that fits into orbiter's cargo bay—scientists will be able to work in shirt sleeve environments for up to 30 days.

Beddingfield says launch power eventually will be supplied by two large solid-rocket boosters and by the orbiter's three main engines. The rockets will be reusable.

This year the orbiter is being tested as an atmospheric vehicle. Mounted piggyback atop a modified Boeing 747 jetliner, the orbiter will be carried to altitude and then released in a series of unpowereed flights to check out aerodynamic and flight-control characteristics.

Inquest set at Burley

BURLEY—An inquest will be held into a death that followed a Saturday night traffic accident here.

Dead is Ina Hoggan, 35, Burley.

The victim was struck by a car driven by Jerry Seadall, about 16, Rupert, as she was crossing Overland Avenue shortly before 10:30 p.m. Saturday, according to Cassia County Coroner C. Bruce Young.

Young said the woman died about 12:45 a.m. Sunday at Cassia Memorial Hospital. He said she suffered multiple head wounds and internal injuries in the accident.

Young said the victim was crossing Overland Avenue from east to west in the pedestrian lane at 15th Street and was about eight feet from the curb when the southbound car struck her.

Young said no autopsy will be performed. He said the date for the inquest has not been scheduled.

Investigation of the accident is continuing by Burley police.

B-1 bomber expensive, general tells TF group

By BONNIE BAIRD JONES
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS—Although Air Force management wanted the B-1 bomber badly, it is an expensive weapon and there are substitutes, Lt. Gen. Alton D. Slay, Washington, D.C., said in Twin Falls Thursday.

The three-star general was in Twin Falls at the invitation of Brig. Gen. Gene Hull of the U.S. Air Force Reserve, as speaker for the Idaho meeting of the Air Force Association Wednesday night. He also addressed Kiwanis Club members at noon Thursday.

Gen. Slay is Deputy Chief of Staff in charge of Research and Development for the U.S. Air Force in Washington. He is also a command pilot with 7,500 hours flying time and 181 combat missions over Southeast Asia.

Gen. Slay said he and other members of the Air Force administrative staff worked hard in support of the B-1 bomber and lost.

"We realize it's a very expensive weapon and you can't have everything you want. I wouldn't say there is a replacement, but there are substitutes which will serve us well," he said

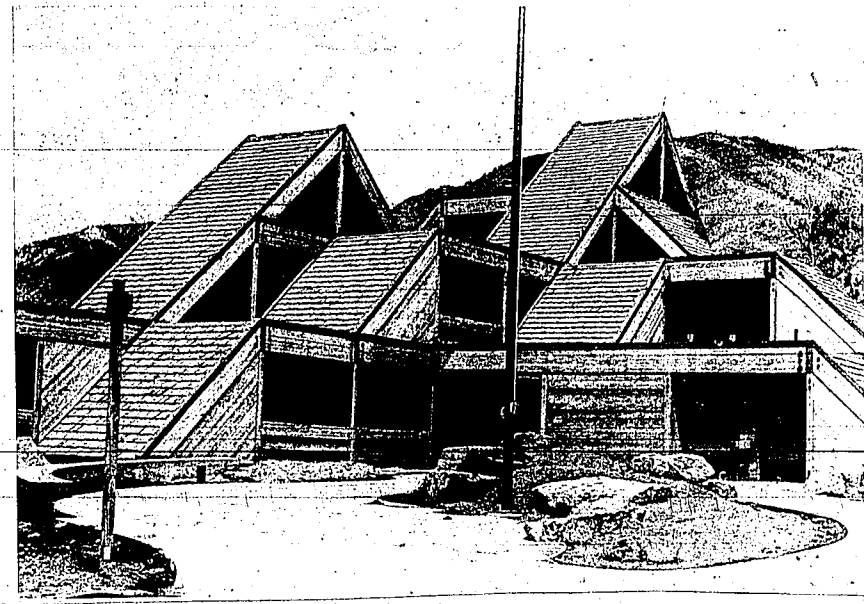

Gen. Slay said "Missile X" for example is a very effective weapon and the B-52 bomber is still a good one. He said the "Missile X" will be in full scale development in a year. It is now in the preliminary development stage and shows promise.

Gen. Slay said the U.S. Air Force and the nation's defense as a whole is reasonably good at this point and is getting better.

He said this nation's technology is something no other nation, including the Soviet Union has and something which has kept the United States at the top of the list of world powers.

Gen. Slay said the most expensive item the Air Force or any other branch of the military has is people.

"The dollar today is buying only 60 cents worth of commodities for the householder but it is buying just 44 cents worth of manpower," Gen. Slay said. "We have dropped from one million to about a half million people in the Air Force and while we have reduced manpower, we have actually strengthened our position. We have fewer but higher quality people."

LEE TREVINO shot a 74 Sunday to win the Canadian Open by four shots and notch his first victory since back surgery interrupted his career. Trevino's victory earned him a berth in the $300,000 World Series of Golf in September.

Trevino ends long victory drought

OAKVILLE, Ont. (UPI) — Lee Trevino made it back to the winner's circle after more than a year's absence by firing a 74 to capture his second Canadian Open championship.

The leader after each of the first three rounds, the 37-year-old Trevino began the day with a six-stroke lead and lost only two strokes of his lead on the final round to finish with a 72-hole total of 280.

Trevino had two birdies and four bogeys on the 7,291-yard layout to pick up his 20th PGA victory and first since May 1976. The triumph was worth $45,000 and pushed Trevino's career earnings to $1,066,851.

"Sometimes people who think they're tough need to get knocked down. Then they remember what got them there was hard work," said Trevino, who underwent back surgery last year. "When you get hurt you want to prove something — that you're not washed up. That's the road I'm on now.

"It was a pretty easy day for me. I actually didn't play the back very well, especially the last four or five holes. I kept looking at the board and nobody was doing anything, so I started hitting it to the center of the greens.

Peter Osterius, who has yet to win on the PGA tour, came from eight strokes behind to finish second. The Briton lopped three strokes from par on the front nine and took a bogey on the tough back nine to finish with a 70 to close within four strokes of Trevino with 224.

He picked up $25,650 for the second place finish. Osterius, who now plays out of California, said: "I don't know whether I had it in my mind to catch him. I had a chance to finish eight under, but I just played each shot as it came along. I just played with much better concentration than I've had.

"I think we've all forgotten how good he really is," Osterius said of Trevino.

Tom Kite, who at one point closed to within three strokes of the lead with birdies on the first two holes, recorded a final-round 73 to finish in third place.

Starting the day in a second-place tie with Ray Floyd and Jack Nicklaus, the 27-year-old Texan shot 36 on the front and 37 on the back nine for a 72-hole total of 285 and his best payday of the 1977 tour at $15,975.

Nicklaus, the course's architect, finished in a tie for fourth with five other players. Hoping to mount a charge from his six-stroke deficit, Nicklaus started poorly, bogeying the first, second and fourth holes.

Starting the back nine three-under-par and seven strokes behind Trevino, Nicklaus ran into putting trouble. He had three consecutive bogeys on the 13th, 14th and 15th, recovering slightly with birdies on 16 and 18 to end at 286.

Joining Nicklaus at 286 were Floyd, Mike Morley, Bill Kratzert, Mike McCullough and Charles Coody.

Trevino went into the tournament with winnings of only $26,235 on this year's circuit. He previously won the Canadian Open, the world's fourth oldest national tourney, in 1971. As a result of his repeat performance, Trevino will join 13 other competitors in September's $300,000 World Series of Golf.

Paul Newman comes back

LONG POND, Pa. (UPI) — Actor Paul Newman, driving a D Production TR-6 Sunday, came from dead last to finish third at Pocono International Raceway in a benefit auto race for the Deborah Heart and Lung Center.

In the program's second event, Newman was catching the leaders when his car swallowed a valve, forcing him to the sidelines.

Waterski champs

BERKELEY, Calif. (UPI) — Veteran Cindy Todd, Plerson, Fla., won only one event but captured the overall women's championship in the California International Water Ski Tournament Sunday with Miami's Riecky McCormick taking the men's division without winning a first.

Todd took the slalom with 53 buoys, emerged third in tricks and went unplaced in jump.

McCormick's rare winless triumph was achieved by a 159-foot jump behind Mike Suederhoud, Redding, Calif., fifth in tricks below 18-year-old white, Cory Pickos, Kenosha, Wis., and a pointless slalom outing.

Other single event victories were scored by world jump queen Linda Giddens, Eastman, Ga., at 119-feet, Cindy Matrangola, Sacramento, Calif., 3,350 points in tricks, Kris LaPointe, Los Banos, Calif., men's slalom at 50 buoys and Suederhoud's 162-foot jump.

Eyeless skater sues

BUFFALO, N.Y. (UPI) — Attorneys for Greg Needl and the National Hockey League were scheduled to appear in U.S. District Court here Monday to argue over a league bylaw which prevents the defenseman from playing in the NHL.

Needl, 22, of Vancouver, Canada, lost his left eye in a hockey accident in 1973. He was drafted by the Buffalo Sabres in 1975 but an NHL regulation bars players who have less than 20 percent vision in either eye from playing in the league.

Needl claims the rule violates his civil rights and said that the $1 million lawsuit against the NHL was filed "with every confidence that we'll come out winners."

Stacy nabs 2-shot US Open victory

CHASKA, Minn. (UPI) — Hollis Stacy fought off challenges for four days and won the U.S. Women's Open golf championship Sunday by two strokes at Hazeltine National Golf Course.

Stacy, playing in her eighth Open, fired a final round 74 for a 72-hole total of four-over par 292 for the 6,313 yard course and won first prize money of $11,000.

Nancy Marie Lopez, 20, of Roswell, N. M., making her debut as a pro, charged from two strokes behind to tie Stacy at three-over par midway through the final round. But she hit a tree and took a double bogey on the 12th hole and finished with six-over par 294, for second place money of $7,000.

Defending champion Jo Anne Carner of Lake Worth, Fla., trying for her third U.S. Open title, was three strokes back at 295.

Australian Jan Stephenson, playing out of La Quinta, Calif., only one stroke behind Stacy going into the final round, had trouble with trees and putts on the last nine and fell back to a 10-over par 298.

Stacy, one of 10 children and winner of three girls junior championships before turning pro in 1974, said her victory was "the most exciting thing that's ever happened to me."

Referring to Lopez's last day challenge, she said, "I felt like I had a monkey on my back the whole day."

She also congratulated the greenskeeper at Hazeltine, which many of the players called the toughest course they had ever played, and added, "I don't know what course Dave Hill was playing, but I sure liked it."

After playing Hazeltine in a 1976 men's Open, Hill referred to the course as a "cow pasture."

Stacy shot a two-under par 70 for a two-stroke lead on the first round Thursday and led all the way.

For four days many expected Stacy to fold under the pressure and the veteran Carner, leading money winner and pre-tournament favorite, to charge to the front, but it never happened.

Stacy, who kept saying "I'm confident I can win" and "I welcome the pressure and the galleries," led Lopez by two strokes and Carner by three strokes after the second round and Stephenson by one stroke after the third.

Stacy shot one-over par on the first nine holes Sunday, taking a bogey five on the fifth hole for a 37, while Lopez shot a 35 to tie it up at three-over par. But on the back nine Lopez hit a tree and wound up a double bogey six on the 12th hole and bogeyed the par four 18th to wind up six over.

Stacy, confident and cool, shot even par all through the back nine until she reached the 18th where she missed a four-foot putt and took a bogey five.

Stephenson wound up in a tie with Pat Bradley of Westford, Mass., and Amy Alcott of Pacific Palisades, Calif., at 293. Susie McAllister, of Alamo, Calif., fired a two-under par 70 on the final round to finish at 299.

Donna Caponi Young, Los Angeles, finished with 300, Jane Blalock, Boca Raton, Fla., had a 301, and bunched at 302 were Judy Rankin, of Midland, Tex., Joann Prentice, of Muskogee, Okla., all-time money winner Kathy Whitworth, of Richardson, Tex., and Sally Little of Carrollton, Tex.

America's Cup practice round

SKIPPER Ted Turner sails his 12-meter yacht Courageous during practice start in the America's Cup Observation Trials off Newport, R.I., Sunday.

Duncan successfully defends golf title

TWIN FALLS — Defending champion Gary Duncan, gathering momentum from a 90-foot birch putt on the 14th hole, overhauled young Mike Hamblin to repeat as the Canyon Springs amateur golf champion Sunday.

Duncan, scrambling through the tournament to that point, escaped a point-of-no-return on the 14th with the long putt.

"I stepped it off. It was 64 long steps. When it went in I just went wild," Duncan said. "I threw my hat probably 150 feet in the air."

The stroke at that time drew Duncan to within a stroke of the lead but he moved even on the 16th when Hamblin, the high school state medalist and a senior-to-be at Twin Falls, caught a tree with his tee shot on the 16th and had to settle for a bogey.

Hamblin had the ball on the over-the-water par three 17th hole but in trouble with the "frog hair" grass on the edge being allowed to grow for the past couple of weeks.

"I knew if I grounded my putter the ball would move. So I couldn't — and I ended up with three putts," Hamblin said. "I'm not disappointed, I'm happy," he said with a face that rather belied the statement.

Going into the final round, it was a matter of Tim Crist and first-flighter Barry Espil leading the whole thing with 73. The moonsons greeted the early tee-off players but by the time the championship flight took to the course there was no problem with wind or rain.

Through the first six holes it was a matter of sub-par golf. Joe Heckman of Seattle, charging out of a 78-opening round, was three under. Crist was one under and Kevin Packard, Duncan, Dave Driscoll and others were two under. Hamblin was one. It looked like a donnybrook.

Then came No. 7. Bogies flew and nearly all the players started coming back toward par. Only one of the leading eight championship fighters parred the ominous eighth three-par. By the end of the first nine everybody was back to par or maybe one under.

Crist, who really doesn't have the golf tournament experience and overall background in play with the folks he was beating to this point, held up very well until the 13th. Then came a tough double bogey. After that came an unbelievable four-putt double bogey and Crist was effectively out of title consideration although he'd dominated for 13 holes.

Up to that point Fr. Cosmas White had been the most consistent of the bunch, slowly whittling away and finally pulling into a tie. Then came a couple of bad holes that knocked him back to an eventual third place finish.

Meanwhile, Espil, who was threatening — for the second straight year to win this thing out of the first flight — ran into trouble on the front nine Sunday. Steve (Corky) Ballard wasn't having those problems. He turned the front nine in two-under and ended the day with a one-over 73 to win the first flight at 151.

In the third flight Perry Hanchey led from start to finish to wind up with a 163 and a five-shot victory over runner-up Allan Howa. Harold Davison, escaping out-of-bounds trouble on the 10th hole, was third at 169. Jon Pope was fourth at 174 and John Bilow and late-finishing Rich Watkins had 176s.

Ron Strom defeated Wes Startin on the first playoff hole to win gross honors in the fourth flight at 180. Redman was third at 181 and Dr. Don Keith and Dr. Vernon, Winnemucca, shared fourth.

Mike Donnelly, always confident of a high finish, took second at 162 while Ted Black took off the effects of a 10-year class reunion to post a 78 and claim third at 163. Dave Soll, Jerome, had 164 and Al Rohweder, Twin Falls, and Doyle Morrill, Kimberly, had 166s.

Sorry, Billy

YANKEE Manager Billy Martin talks to his right fielder Reggie Jackson before the Yankees' game Sunday. Everything seems chummy, but Martin is on the verge of being fired and his nationally televised shoving match with Jackson earlier this season didn't help his standing with the Yankee management.

Martin has death row feeling

NEW YORK (UPI) — Billy Martin pulled on his striped uniform in the New York Yankees' manager's office Sunday morning and said he felt like a man on death row.

Martin arrived at Yankee Stadium Saturday morning amid rumors that his job once again was in jeopardy. It reportedly had been offered to third base coach Dick Howser, who turned it down.

Martin, who met with reporters before the game against the Kansas City Royals Sunday, said the phone in his office rang about 11:40 a.m. and club president Gabe Paul summoned him to a meeting.

"Gabe said nothing has changed," Martin told reporters.

Then Martin's phone rang.

"Uh, uh," he said. "Wait a minute."

"But it was merely another false alarm."

Martin said Paul told him to pay no attention to the rumors. But asked whether he believed the Yankees had unsuccessfully looked around for another manager, Martin said, "I don't know, but I feel that might be right. I've got to believe that rumors don't just start."

He said he thought the latest crisis surrounding his job began following New York's 5-4, 10-inning loss Thursday night to the Milwaukee Brewers after the Yankees took a 4-0 lead into the ninth, threatening to sweep a doubleheader.

"It was a terrible game," Martin said. "I have to feel that might have done it. I was pretty upset, too. It was the worst game I've ever seen, like watching a Class C game."

Martin appeared in good spirits Sunday morning, a strikingly different mood than his sullen manner after Thursday night's doubleheader and the tears he reportedly shed Saturday when his job seemed in jeopardy.

"When I got fired in Minnesota I thought that was the worst thing that ever happened," he said. "Then it happened in Detroit and I thought the same thing. Then in Texas. It isn't something you really get used to."

Martin said he would continue to manage the way he has and not worry about the constant turmoil surrounding the Yankees.

"I've never run scared in my life and I won't run scared now. I've got an obligation to the Yankees to go out and do my job like I did it yesterday. My personal feelings are second. Whatever happens, happens."

Ali risks future title bout by defending against Shavers

By STEVE WILSTEIN
UPI Sports Writer

NEW YORK (UPI) — "I ain't no ducker, sucker, nobody can accuse me of duckin' nobody. I fought 'em all, the big, bad Sonny Liston, beat him twice, Joe Frazier, beat him two outa three and shoulda won the first time, George Foreman, knocked him out, beat Ken Norton twice, Jimmy Young. I gave everybody a shot."

Alli Muhammad Ali is back for another round in the life of the Greatest. He's 35-years old but his voice and lungs are still 25 and Monday he's coming back to New York to kick off the promotion of his next, little defense Sept. 29 against Earnie Shavers in Madison Square Garden.

Shavers, unlike Ali's last opponent, Alfredo Evangelista of Spain, is a known quantity. He's got fists of lead and has knocked out 52 of his 54 victims, including Jimmy Young and Jimmy Ellis each in one round in 1973. His overall record is 55-5-1 and the three times he has been knocked out himself, it was against heavy-listed opponents like Ron Lyle (1975), Jerry Quarry (1973) and Ron Stander (1970). Shavers will be 32-years-old Aug. 31 and is ranked fourth or fifth in the world by the various boxing councils. He is the only heavyweight among the top five Ali has never fought and his $300,000 purse is the biggest of his career.

Alli is already looking ahead to retirement, a real one this time, some time next year. He knows he can't go on much longer and keeping saving his crown with close decisions as he had against Norton and Young last year.

All will be getting over $2 million for Shavers, but if Ali loses he could blow a possible $5-million next January or February against the winner of the Nov. 5 Norton-Young fight, not to mention the $2-million he'd pick up against Italian Alfio Pighelli.

Is Ali taking too big a risk against a puncher like Shavers?

"The champion always takes the risk," Ali said recently. "Everybody wants what I got but I'm not ready to go away yet. I don't duck nobody. I ain't afraid of nobody. What's Earnie Shavers? Just another slugger. I beat Liston and Jerry Quarry and Frazier and Ron Lyle. You think Shavers is tougher than them?"

And then last week after the fight finally had been announced after much litigation, Ali said on a Gary, Ind., radio station that he'd knock Shavers out in four rounds.

Shavers may not be another Frazier, but he is in the prime of his career...wallo...Ali's punching ability is aging rapidly. At this point in Ali's career, Shavers is as big a risk as Frazier was in Manila two years ago.

Ringside insiders think they know why Ali is unconcerned about Shavers. They believe Shavers has poor stamina. He has gone as far as 10 rounds only six times in 60 fights. If

All can hold off Shavers' initial charge for a few rounds, as he did Foreman in Zaire, Ali can dance around him and cut him up or knock him out. They fighters are easy targets.

Alli is among the ring's best defensive fighters and Shavers may not have the know-how to break through. All's a clever counter pouter. Ali also takes a punch as well as any heavyweight around and even if Shavers lands one real good shot, it may not be enough to stop the champion.

While this bout was tied up with lawsuits for over a month, Ali considered replacing Shavers with sixth-ranked Larry Holmes. Ali reportedly turned down Holmes for the same price because he is a big, fast, rangy fighter with the speed and style to stay with Ali 15 rounds. Ali doesn't want somebody too dangerous right now and he figures Shavers' big swing will be easier to avoid than Holmes' long jab.

KANSAS City's Fred Patek may look like he is following through on a roundhouse to the head of the Yankees' Lou Piniella, but Piniella had just lost his balance after Patek tagged him out in the Yankees 3-1 victory Sunday.

Oregon students favor keeping PAC 8 ties

EUGENE, Ore. (UPI) — Some 80 per cent of the University of Oregon's students think the Ducks should remain in the Pac-10 with the entry of the two Arizona schools in the athletic conference, it was reported today.

However, the students, according to results of an opinion survey, balk at the prospects of increasing their financial contribution to UO athletics. The survey was conducted on the UO campus this spring by a Portland-based research firm, Bardsley & Haselcher, and the results just released.

Three Redskins hold out

CARLISLE, Pa. (UPI) — Wide receiver Frank Grant, running back Mike Thomas and offensive tackle Tim Stokes officially became holdouts Sunday night when they failed to report to the Washington Redskins' training camp with the rest of the club's veteran players.

Grant and Thomas, who are obligated to the Redskins for the option year of their contracts, are represented by the same agent, Guy Draper, who had hinted they might not report if negotiations were not going to his satisfaction.

Draper said the Redskins' chief negotiator, Tim Temerario, Sunday morning in a meeting Temerario called "pleasant enough."

"I expected both of them to be here," said Temerario. "There weren't any threats." Stokes, who is reportedly at his Portland, Ore., home, played out his option last year and is technically a free agent.

GUILLERMO Vilas, Argentina, puts all he's got into a return in his semifinal match with Eddie Dibbs in the Washington Star International Tennis Championships. Vilas beat Dibbs 7-6, 6-2 Sunday to advance to the finals where he will meet Brian Gottfried of the United States.

Intent return

Vilas, Gottfried reach net finals

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Guillermo Vilas and Brian Gottfried, the top two seeds in the Washington Star International Tennis Championships, survived shaky starts Sunday to advance to the singles final in the $125,000 event.

Vilas, a 24-year-old Argentinian, beat fifth-seeded Eddie Dibbs of Miami Beach, Fla., 7-6, 6-2, while Gottfried, of Bonaventure, Fla., eased past No. 6 and local favorite Harold Solomon 4-6, 6-3, 6-1.

Monday night's final will be worth $20,000 to the winner.

Dibbs, the second ranked player in the United States behind Jimmy Connors, had Vilas on the ropes twice during the first set, but couldn't follow through.

Down 5-4 in games, Vilas fought off two set points. Later, during the 12-point tiebreaker, Dibbs took a 5-1 lead, then blew the next six points and the set.

"When you lose a set like that, you have a tendency to let down a little," said Dibbs. "They key to beating guys like Vilas is to get on top of them and there's nothing more."

"After the first set, he (Dibbs) was disappointed and I played quite well at the beginning of the second set."

The second set started 2-2.

before Vilas took advantage of Dibbs' errors to reef off four straight games and win the match.

Gottfried, who has won four tournaments and more than $100,000 this year, started sluggishly, losing the first set to Solomon. But, with the games 1-1 in the second set, he won 12 straight points for a 4-1 lead.

Solomon, the No. 6 seed from Silver Spring, Md., won the next two games, but Gottfried broke his service in the eighth game for a 5-3 lead and served out to take the set.

"At the beginning of the match, I was making too much of an adjustment," said Gottfried, referring to Solomon's stay-at-the-base-line tactics. "I was trying to bring him to the net, but I wasn't used to doing it and I was making a lot of errors."

In the third set, Solomon won the first two points of the opening game, but Gottfried aggressively rushing the net, rallied to win the game. He then won the next three for a 4-0 edge and went on to put the match away easily.

"Even though I lost that second set, I felt okay until the first game of the third set," said Solomon, who won 13 straight matches. "I seemed to be giving him an easy point in every game. That hurt me a lot."

Gottfried, No. 1 in the Grand Prix point standings, had four service aces during the 1:53 match while Solomon had none. Three of Gottfried's aces came during the third game of the second set, at the start of his 12-point run.

Sherwood Stewart and Fred McNeil, the No. 3 seed, defeated top-seeded Raul Ramirez and Gottfried, 6-3, 6-3, to move into the championship Monday against Alexander and Dent.

Monzon claims he's still the greatest

MONTE CARLO, (UPI) — Carlos Monzon, film star, international playboy and occasional boxer, says that a year out of the ring has not changed his status as the world's greatest middleweight.

Rodrigo Valdes of Colombia hopes to prove the handsome Argentinian wrong next Saturday when the two clash in a rematch of last year's title bout when Monzon won the undisputed world crown on points over 15 rounds.

Both men arrived in Monte Carlo Sunday predicting their own victories.

"Naturally I'll win. I don't have any doubt about the final result," said Monzon before leaving Rome, where he has been training for the past month. "He doesn't have a good puncher."

"I feel in top form and this time Monzon won't get away," reported Valdes in the Italian Riviera resort town of Bordighera.

Valdes, the former World Boxing Champ champion and his American manager Gil Clancy still feel they let the Argentinian off the hook in June, 1976, when Monzon, recognized by the World Boxing Association, united the two titles.

At 30, Valdes feels he has two vital advantages — age and practice.

Monzon will be 35 in August and has said himself that this will be his last fight. He can make as much money starring in film extravaganzas such as "El Macho" ("The Male").

Monzon claims the all-time world record for going undefeated in 12 years, 8 months and 11 days and has been variously vaunted as history's best middleweight and pound for pound the best boxer around in any division today.

But, more importantly, the last time the man from Santa Fe stepped into a boxing ring it was to meet Valdes, and Monzon's impressive fight record has remained stationary at 88 wins, three losses and nine draws since then. Sixty-one of those wins were by knockout.

Valdes, on the other hand, has fought twice and won twice since losing to Monzon. Both bouts were against modest opponents but both were won by knockouts scored with that savage left hook, leaving him with a fight record of 57-4-2.

The fight was postponed from July's last month when Monzon's Italian sparring partner, Franco Saputo, opened a cut on the champion's left eyebrow with a sharp uppercut, interrupting his training for 12 days. Monzon's private doctor, Roberto Paladino has pronounced the cut completely healed and the man in top form.

2 million smolts flown to coast

More than 2 million Snake River and 3 million hatchery chinook salmon and steelhead trout smolts were flown, trucked and floated to the Pacific Ocean this year.

The Corps of Engineers' Fish Run project operated from Lower Granite and Little Goose dams on the Lower Snake. The project's work during this year's downriver run compares with the 3.6 million total fish transported in all the previous five years of Fish Run.

The Corps reports the amphibious plane used this year in the fish haul will not be used next year. The airlift of fish was an experiment, and the Corps wants to wait until the fish airlifted this season return from the ocean about two years from now. Then, the success of this phase of Fish Run can be measured.

Since it started in 1971, the Corps reports having spent $7.6 million on Operation Fish Run, with about $784,600 of that expended this season.

France scores Davis cup upset

PARIS (UPI) — France qualified for the interzonal semifinals of the Davis Cup tennis competition for the first time ever Sunday with a 3-2 victory over Romania in the European Zone "A" final.

France's Jauffret sent Romania through in the first of the reverse singles matches when he raced through Dimitriu Haradau 6-1, 6-4, 6-4 on the red clay center court of the Roland Garros stadium to give the home side an unbeatable 3-1 lead.

Romanian No. 1 Ilie Nastase pulled back one symbolic point by defeating Patrick Proisy, who stretched him to four sets, 6-4, 4-6, 8-6, 6-1.

Jauffret defeated Nastase in the opening singles match on Friday and Proisy beat Haradau. On Saturday, Nastase and Ion Tiriac outclassed Jauffret and Patrice Dominguez in the doubles.

France will now face Italy, Hungary or Spain in the second half of September. The other semifinal will pit Australia against Argentina.

"This is a new satisfaction in my career, a great adventure," said Jauffret, 35. "I am especially happy for our (nonplaying) captain Pierre Dourmon."

Jauffret, already the French hero after unseating Nastase, made short work of Haradau, allowing the Romanian to hold his service only in the first game of the first set.

Haradau settled down after that but never a match for the Frenchman's powerful forehands.

Jauffret went 3-0 up in the second set, but started making unforgivable errors until Haradau climbed right back up to lead 4-3. Jauffret con-

Grambling investigated for aid violations

BATON ROUGE, La. (UPI) — Grambling State University, training ground for dozens of the nation's black athletes, is under investigation by the NCAA for allegedly providing illegal financial aid, according to a copyrighted story in the Sunday Advocate.

The newspaper also reported Grambling was secretly penalized by the NCAA two years ago for allegedly taking a recruit to the Bayou Classic football game. It said the penalty was the loss of two scholarships.

Dr. Joseph Johnson, Grambling president, and

David Best, NCAA director of enforcement, refused to comment on the situation. The newspaper said it said Eddie Robinson, Grambling athletic director and head football coach, confirmed the school was under NCAA investigation but "said he knew of no violations."

Robinson refused to speak about the reported prior penalty.

According to the Advocate, the most serious of the new charges involved illegal financial aid to student athletes and illegal transportation of high school prospects to some games.

The newspaper said it learned of the nature of the charges from a source involved with the NCAA, who asked to remain unidentified.

Grambling may receive official notice of the charges by mail at any time, the newspaper reported.

An NCAA investigator spent almost a week on the North Louisiana campus two months ago to obtain information on the athletic program as part of the investigation. Robinson told the newspaper.

Marty Robbins racing again

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (UPI) — Country-western singer Marty Robbins, who called it quits as a part-time race car driver two years ago, says he's "changed his mind and will enter the Aug. 7 Talladega 500."

Ironically, it was at Talladega two years ago that Robbins had his third and most serious crash in a race car and announced his retirement from racing.

"There's no special significance to the fact that I'll be ending my racing retirement at Talladega," Robbins said Saturday night. "I just decided to give it another try and the Talladega 500 was the next race on the schedule."

Robbins said he was serious about his retirement two years ago.

"At least I was sure at the time," he said. "But racing gets into your blood...it's a difficult sport just to walk away from."

At the time he quit, Robbins said expense, not the danger involved, was his main reason for getting out.

"I had three straight wrecks. When you walk away from a wrecked car you are walking away from several thousand dollars," he said. "I was racing merely as a hobby and the hobby suddenly became too expensive. It wasn't a matter of nerve, but a matter of running out of spending money for a hobby."

Robbins shaken but uninjured. He was running behind Rame Stott when Stott's car blew an engine. Robbins hit the spilled oil and, along with James Hutton, skidded into the swerving lead car. A gas tank exploded and a ball of flame engulfed all three cars as they spun off the track.

Robbins, who wrote and recorded a song about the mood of a race car driver, said "I honestly don't remember the crash too clearly."

"I remember being pulled from the car and then I started singing the words to 'El Paso' (one of his more popular songs) to myself to see if I could still remember them."
