

Bressette goes to Boise

By LONNIE ROSENWALD
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Donald Bressette, the man who was arrested in Twin Falls Saturday for threatening President Jimmy Carter's life, will be transported to Boise for an initial court appearance at 1:30 p.m. today.

Bressette's wife Jackie asked Twin Falls attorney Jon Shindurling to consult her husband in jail before he leaves for Boise.

Shindurling said Deputy Sheriff James Munn agreed to allow Shindurling to meet with Bressette at 8 a.m. this morning.

But Munn did not tell the attorney whether or not Mrs. Bressette would be allowed to see her husband before he leaves the county jail.

U.S. Attorney Karl Shurtliff will make a formal complaint today in the U.S. magistrate court in Boise before Judge James Christensen. Shurtliff will charge Bressette, 46, with making a threat against President Jimmy Carter in a letter and phone call last Wednesday.

Bressette was arrested at his Twin Falls home at 2:30 p.m. Saturday by Secret Service agents and is being held without bond in the Twin Falls County Jail.

Meanwhile President Carter, his wife Rosalyn and daughter Amy leave Boise early this morning for a three-day rafting trip down the Middle Fork of the Salmon River.

Shurtliff said Bressette will be charged with violating a federal statute against threatening to "take the life of or inflict bodily harm upon the President." The federal violation carries a maximum sentence of five years in prison and/or a $1,000 fine.

Shurtliff said the complaint he'll file in today's preliminary hearing will include the date and contents of the letter and phone call in which Bressette allegedly made the threats against President Carter.

In the preliminary hearing the judge will decide if there is enough evidence to warrant a full trial.

Jackie Bressette, wife of the arrested man, retained attorney Shindurling Monday afternoon.

Shindurling tried to see Bressette in jail Monday night, but was told by Deputy Munn there wasn't anyone on duty to supervise the visit.

Shindurling said Munn told him he could see Bressette at 8 a.m. today.

The attorney said Bressette didn't request his assistance, but he plans to go to Boise for the preliminary hearing if Bressette should decide to retain him. Shindurling said Mrs. Bressette will be at the county jail this morning to request permission to see her husband.

She last saw him Saturday evening in jail.

Jimmy Carter arrives in Idaho

By DAVID MORRISSEY
Times-News writer

BOISE — President Jimmy Carter arrived in Idaho's capital city at 6 p.m. Monday on the first leg of what he called a much anticipated "family vacation."

The President held an informal news conference with reporters upon arrival but insisted his presence in Idaho was solely to run the rapids of the Salmon River and shied away from discussion of political issues.

And, Carter would not endorse the gubernatorial campaign of fellow Democrat Gov. John Evans.

"The closer I get to him politically the more it helps me," Carter said, adding Evans was a "popular" governor. But in response to questions, the president refused to issue a direct endorsement of Evans.

Later, at a news conference, Evans said he hadn't expected the Carter endorsement on this trip.

The rafting expedition down Idaho's "River of No Return," was a chance for the president to get "a few days of rest," Evans said, adding it would be "inappropriate" for Carter to mix politics with a family outing.

Carter did say he agreed with Interior Secretary and former Idaho Governor Cecil D. Andrus that the region of the Middle Fork of the Salmon River — where he would be rafting — should be classified as wilderness. Carter said he favors setting aside 1.4 million acres in wilderness in central Idaho, the same recommendation as that made by Andrus.

Carter's early evening arrival in the blue, white and silver Jet Air Force One, was not at the main Boise airport but at nearby Gowan Field.

Under partly cloudy skies the chief executive's plane taxied to a 50-foot tall steel and aluminum aircraft hanger built in World War II and now maintained by the Idaho Air National Guard.

The arrival was sealed off to the general public, but some 500 members of the media, Gowan Field service men and their families crowded the edges of the runway for the president's arrival.

The president answered seven minutes of general questions from reporters and then shook hands with persons in the crowd for approximately 13 minutes.

Carter was accompanied on his westward jaunt — his first to Idaho since becoming president — by his wife Rosalyn, his sons Jack and Chip and his daughter Amy.

Carter was also accompanied by Andrus and his wife Carol, who rode with the president on Air Force One.

Mr. Carter, who was wearing a grey two-piece suit, and Mrs. Carter dressed in a green sweater and a white blouse and slacks, were greeted by a welcoming party containing most of Idaho's elected Democrats — and several Democratic candidates.

Idaho's welcoming party included Evans, his wife Lola, Adm. Major James Brooks of the Idaho National Guard, Democratic Senatorial candidate Dwight Jensen, Idaho AFL-CIO president Robert Macfarlane, Lieutenant Governor William Murphy, State Treasurer Marjorie Ruth Moon and U.S. District Attorney for Idaho Karl Shurtliff.

The president said a major purpose of his trip was the opportunity to take a vacation with his family — an opportunity he said he hadn't had in some time.

Saying he was "an old canoe and kayaker," Carter said another purpose of his trip was to prove he could catch a bigger fish than Andrus. But the president noted Andrus brought his personal fishing gear with him. If Andrus catches the largest fish, that would be the reason Carter said.

Carter's arrival was preceded by one hour by the arrival of a rust colored Braniff 727 carrying almost 100 national news media representatives. Included in the national media representatives were reporters from the Washington Post, Time Magazine, United Press International, Associated Press, NBC, CBS and ABC.

Approximately 50 Idaho news media representatives, from almost every newspaper in the state as well as reporters from most Boise television and radio stations were also present. Carter's three-day white water rafting trip will take him through some of Idaho's wildest back country.

But the president will not be far from world events during that period. In a statement issued on Air Force One, prior to its arrival in Boise, Carter said a Strategic Air Command jet, supplied with sophisticated electronics equipment, would fly over the wilderness area.

That jet, plus the use of a communications satellite, means the president will be instant contact with Washington if the need arises. But Carter also said, jokingly, "I've issued a directive that there be no world crises" for the duration of the fishing and camping trip.

Evans, president talk issues in car

BOISE — President Jimmy Carter said Monday he will support increased funding for research and development of breeder reactors and that Idaho should be a prime beneficiary of additional funds, Gov. John Evans said Monday.

Evans made his comments in a press conference after riding with the president from the Boise airport to the Rodeway Inn.

The president held a short, eight minute informal press conference in Boise prior to the beginning of a family vacation in Idaho.

Evans said Carter didn't want to proceed with construction of Clinch River breeder reactor because of fears the plant would be "obsolete" when finished.

But the president feels more money should be spent researching nuclear power, Evans said, and that the Idaho Nuclear Engineering Laboratory at Arco would likely be a prime target for such additional funds.

Evans said he and the president also discussed the level at which sugar beet price supports should be established.

A bill establishing such price supports is currently in a congressional conference committee, Evans pointed out to the president.

Carter said he would wait and see what final action was taken by the conference committee before making a final decision on the subject, but that he was interested in the problem.

Carter also told the governor he favored a program under which Mexican nationals could be brought legally into the United States as field laborers.

No specifics were discussed, Evans said, but Carter feels there is a need for a program by which farmers can "legally bring workbacks into Idaho to provide the necessary labor," Evans said.

Carter also told Evans he was taking advice from Interior Secretary Andrus on enforcement of the 1902 Reclamation Act. The president "favors increasing from 160 to 320 acres or larger" the size of a farm which can receive water from federal reclamation projects.

Carter only vacationing

BOISE — President Carter didn't intend to slight Idaho by not hold a major press conference to discuss issues that affect the state, White House Press Secretary Jody Powell said Monday.

"The president just wants some peace and quiet," Powell told Idaho reporters. "I remember when President Roosevelt came to Warm Springs (Georgia)," Powell said. "Everyone knew he was there to relax and not to talk politics."

"I think the people of Idaho are pretty much like the people of Georgia," Powell continued. "They'll understand the need to get away from it all and to take a vacation."

Powell said the trip down the Salmon River was an "unprecedented" presidential vacation.

Interior Secretary Cecil Andrus first suggested the trip about a year ago, he added.

Carter will fly into the Middle Fork of the Salmon River early today with his family for a three-day float trip.

Tankers collide, oil spill begins

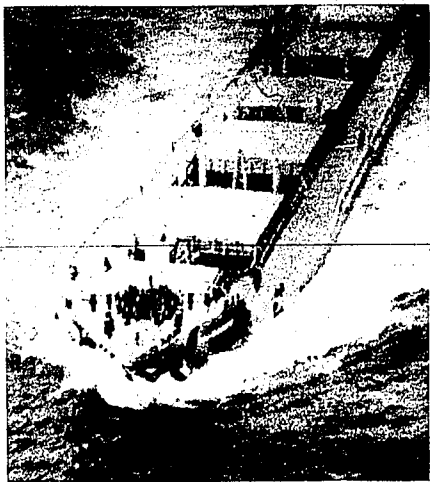

SAN JUAN, Puerto Rico (UPI) — A Greek tanker plowed into a Brazilian bulk carrier around dawn Monday, ripping open the side of the Brazilian ship and spilling the Caribbean with an oil slick 12 miles long and 300 yards wide.

A spokesman for the U.S. Coast Guard in San Juan said the damaged Brazilian ship, the Frotanorte, changed course and headed for Puerto Rico to make emergency repairs.

The Coast Guard spokesman said before the freighter reaches San Juan, probably early Tuesday, specialists from the Coast Guard's Marine Safety Office will take the necessary precautions to prevent any more oil from being spilled in Puerto Rican coastal waters.

The slick did not pose any immediate danger to any land areas, although prevailing ocean currents in the area would carry the oil slick towards the shores of the Dominican Republic.

There was no immediate indication as to the cause of the crash about 180 miles southwest of San Juan, but the Greek tanker, Theophas, was damaged on the bow and the Frotanorte on its left side. No one was injured.

Albuquerque plans parade for balloonists

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (UPI) — The hometown of the three adventurers who were the first to cross the Atlantic Ocean in a balloon plans to throw the biggest celebration and parade the city has ever seen, but the local heroes may have to do without the traditional ticker-tape.

"First of all, we don't have a lot of tickertape in Albuquerque," said Chamber of Commerce spokesman Barle Fritz. "Secondly, many of the windows in the newer downtown buildings are sealed shut. But we are coming up with lots of confetti and there are enough older buildings with opening windows on the second floor so that we can throw it out. We'll also be stretching banners across Central Avenue (the city's major downtown street)."

The Saturday celebration is for Maxie Anderson, 44, Ben Abruzzo, 48, and Larry Newman, 31, who crossed the Atlantic last week in a helium-filled balloon. "This celebration just isn't for some town heroes," said Fritz. "What they've done is comparable to the Lindbergh flight."

The parade will begin Saturday morning when the three arrive at the Albuquerque International Airport by private jet. A motorcade will carry them downtown to the city's Civic Plaza, where they will be greeted by various public officials, including New Mexico Gov. Jerry Apodaca.

"We're hoping for a very big crowd," said Fritz. "We would be very disappointed if there was a small reception, since the receptions for the three men in Paris and London have been so overwhelming."

Billion dollar weapons sale sent to Congress

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The administration Monday notified Congress of $1.15 billion in planned arms sales to the Middle East, pushing the total of weapons offered to overseas customers this year about $1.2 billion above President Carter's ceiling.

Pentagon officials said, however, the administration is expected to stay within the presidential limit because some of the most recent proposals will not be accepted by the customers until after the end of the fiscal year on Sept. 30, when the ceiling will expire. "The latest proposals go to the lawmakers, who have 30 days to approve them, include $800 million to set up and operate a shore establishment for Saudi Arabia's navy, and $350 million to arm 12 frigates Iran is buying from shipyards in The Netherlands and West Germany."

They raise the total of proposed weapons sales sent to Congress since Aug. 11 to $3.63 billion. Since the fiscal year started Oct. 1, the administration has sent the lawmakers about $9.8 billion in proposed sales. The president's ceiling for this year is close to $8.6 billion.

Pentagon sources said the recent rush of sales to Congress is a reflection of administration efforts to come as close as possible to the maximum allowed under this year's ceiling.

The proposals for Iran call for providing various kinds of missiles, torpedoes and electronic warfare equipment for the new frigates, which will cost more than $2 billion. Although Iran originally sought to buy the ships from the United States to act as escorts for the Spruance-class guided missile cruisers it has on order here, the administration agreed only to provide weapons on grounds the cost of the new ships would be too big to fit within the ceiling.

The move has raised a protest from lawmakers from areas in which U.S. ships are located that face the prospect of large-scale layoffs because of a lack of orders.

Czech dissidents begin political strike

VIENNA, Austria (UPI) — Exiled Czech dissidents observing the 10th anniversary of the Soviet-led invasion of their country launched a hunger strike Monday to demand the release of political prisoners in Eastern Europe.

The 10-day hunger strike was announced by Labor Rousek, a 23-year-old student who was among the self-exiled Czechoslovak dissidents gathered in front of St. Stephen's cathedral to recall Aug. 21, 1968.

On that day, the armies of the Soviet Union, Poland, Hungary, Bulgaria and East Germany marched into Czechoslovakia to crush the liberal Prague Spring movement of then Communist party leader Alexander Dubcek.

The demonstrators included several signers of the Charter 77 human rights document who recently fled to Austria to avoid persecution in Czechoslovakia.

"We demand the release of all political prisoners in Czechoslovakia, the Soviet Union and the other countries of the Warsaw Pact," Rousek said on a huge poster put up in front of the Czechoslovak Cedomir and the Soviet Aeroflot offices on Vienna's busy Ringstrasse.

Both the Cedomir and the Aeroflot offices were closed and guarded by Austrian police. The Aeroflot office displayed a sign reading "closed for renovation."

In East Berlin, a Czech Embassy spokesman said a "gas explosion" blew part of the roof off the ambassador's residence late Sunday but no one was injured. It was not known if the incident was related to the 10-year anniversary.

The demonstration in front of St. Stephen's in the heart of Vienna was preceded by a march to the Czechoslovak Embassy in a suburb district where dissidents laid a wreath and burned candles to protest the 1968 events.

One of the speakers was Vadim Delone, a Soviet emigrant who had protested against the occupation of Czechoslovakia in Moscow 10 years ago and was later forced to leave the Soviet Union.

In Prague, authorities said all was "quiet and normal" on the anniversary throughout Czechoslovakia.

The Czech Communist party newspaper Rude Pravo praised the "fraternal aid" rendered by the Soviet Union 10 years ago and said the Soviet assistance served "the vital interests of the working people."

Vietnamese, congressmen talk of MIAs, trading

HANOI, Vietnam (UPI) — Vietnam told eight visiting congressmen Monday it has found the remains of 11 U.S. servicemen listed as missing in action in the Indochina War and will return them to the United States.

Rep. G. V. Montgomery, D-Miss., chairman of the congressional delegation, emerged from 2 1/2 hours with Vice Foreign Minister Phan Hien and said former Hanoi's searchers to the remains of the 11. No identities were disclosed.

He quoted Hien as saying Vietnam's search organization is a permanent group but "it might be decided before the work can be completed."

The congressmen arrived four hours earlier to an unprecedented list of courtesies from the Vietnamese.

Conference sources said Hien also argued the case for America dropping its ban on trade with Vietnam, the nation's need for help in developing offshore oil, the failure of the two past rice harvests, its border fighting with Cambodia and its diplomatic battling with the United States.

"I hope we've got somebody good to negotiate with him or else we can come out second best," said delegation member Rep. Henson Moore, R-La.

The eight-man delegation, the largest such group to visit Hanoi in 30 years, came to Vietnam ostensibly to search for 340 MIAs, but the Vietnamese apparently intended to take advantage of the opportunity to press for normalization of ties with Washington.

Hanoi has dropped demands that America pay $5 billion in reconstruction grants. It has signaled it is seeking economic and diplomatic help while it fights a border war with Cambodia and struggles to offset aid cut off recently by China.

BETTER evidence of Vietnamese goodwill was an unprecedented offer to allow the delegation to be the first official U.S. group to visit Ho Chi Minh City, formerly the South Vietnamese capital of Saigon.

The delegation's Air Force 707 Jet landed at Noi Bai, the airfield that once sent Soviet-made MIG jets against U.S. planes. The field lies at the southern end of "Thud Ridge," which supported a gauntlet of rockets and artillery fire U.S. pilots had to run.

U.S. warfile fire U.S. pilots had to run. Some of the crew flying the congressmen — were never allowed to hit the airfield's runways. A political decision limited them to striking only planes attacking them.

Giving the U.S. plane permission to land at Noi Bai — named Phuc Yen during the war — was one evidence of Hanoi's current be- kind-to-Americans conduct.

The aircraft might have had trouble landing at the civil airport used by smaller postwar delegations from Washington.

The lawmakers went with high hopes. But caution was in their luggage. "Quite frankly, I don't know what's going to happen," Montgomery said just before landing at Hanoi.

Montgomery said the group carried no message from Carter. "But we do have a letter to the Vietnamese from the president's national security affairs adviser supporting our mission," the congressman said.

The delegation will fly to Ho Chi Minh City Wednesday and stay until Thursday. On Friday, the delegation flies to Laos for further work on the Americans missing in action and is scheduled to return to Washington Aug. 28.

Air fares going down

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Carter Monday announced a new aviation policy designed to cut the cost of air travel to Europe and Asia, provide more U.S. cities with flights to other lands and spur international airline competition.

Carter and Transportation Secretary Brock Adams said the goal is to make foreign air travel inexpensive enough for middle-income Americans, many of whom have been unable to afford it in the past, and to protect U.S. airlines from discriminatory treatment abroad.

Benefits already are visible, they said, because the new policy served as an informal guideline for recent aviation agreements with Britain, the Netherlands and Israel.

They noted fares have been cut by up to 41 percent to Amsterdam and 45 percent to London, and soon may be cut up to 50 percent to Tokyo.

"Ever since I became president I have been seeking to introduce the airline industry to the benefits of competition both at home and abroad," Carter said in a statement issued by the White House.

In a White House news conference, Adams outlined what the policy change will mean for the average American: "There will be more service from more points in the United States to all over Europe, and to Asia, at a lower price than before."

Adams left open the possibility of eventual flights from the United States to China, although he indicated they are not likely to come soon. He said talks with Japan are stalled after "very hard bargaining," but indicated discussions with West Germany and other European nations should go more smoothly.

Many nations are demanding revisions in aviation agreements with the United States that originally were written when U.S. airlines dominated the field of international aviation. Adams said talks were held with 26 nations last year.

Astronauts hold reunion

HOUSTON (UPI) — Twenty-six former astronauts who created a spellbinding chapter in American history by their consuming exploits in space returned to the Johnson Space Center Monday for their first "class reunion" since leaving the space program.

Most of them were as laconic as in the days when they first braved the frontiers of space, tried new technology and ultimately walked on the moon.

"It's good to be back," said Gordon Cooper, the retired Air Force colonel who flew on the Mercury 9 and Gemini 5 space missions. "We've had several nice visits."

Neil Armstrong, the civilian astronaut who became the first man to walk on the moon during the Apollo 11 mission, refused all comment with reporters, maintaining a strict privacy worked at for years.

Gilmore last, Spenkelnik next

NEW ORLEANS (UPI) — A federal appeals court Monday upheld the death sentence of John Spenkelnik of Florida, increasing the possibility he could be the first prisoner to be executed in the country since Gary Gilmore.

"There's a possibility he will be executed by the end of the year," said Assistant Attorney General Ray Marky. "He's running out of places to go."

Except for Gilmore, who proclaimed he wanted to die, no one has been executed in America since 1967.

The Supreme Court struck down capital punishment laws across the country in 1972 because of the arbitrary way they chose who would die and who would get life prison terms instead. Then, in 1976, it held the death penalty to be constitutionally permissible under certain circumstances and upheld new laws adopted by Florida, Georgia and Texas. More than 30 states now have capital punishment laws, and more than 400 persons are on Death Row across the country. A long appeals process through state and federal courts has so far staved off all executions in the last decade except that of Gilmore, who declined to appeal his death penalty and faced a Utah firing squad in January 1977.

Spenkelnik, sentenced to die in the electric chair, is the first to have lost his case at the advanced federal appeals court level. A Florida pardon board already has turned down his request for relief. Now he is expected to appeal to the Supreme Court, which for him may well be the court of last resort.

Only one other person under death sentence, Jerry Lane Jurek of Texas, has reached the federal appeals court level. But Jurek's case has not yet been argued and it could be a year or more before it is decided there.

A three-judge panel of the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals Monday unanimously rejected arguments in Spenkelnik's case that the Florida Supreme Court's review of capital punishment cases is arbitrary and inconsistent and the death penalty is unconstitutional.

Spenkelnik, 29, was convicted of the 1973 killing of Joseph Szymankiewicz in a Tallahassee motel room when a fight broke out between the two hard-drinking drifters.

Floods kill 450 in India disaster

NEW DELHI, India (UPI) — Floods spawned by monsoon rains killed at least 459 persons in three north India states, caused millions of dollars in damages and left tens of thousands homeless over the weekend, according to reports Monday.

Similar flooding in Pakistan and Bangladesh has slain 180 people and caused heavy damage to homes, crops and livestock. Thailand also reported heavy property losses but no fatalities in widespread flooding in the northeast.

Indian army troops and civilian relief workers joined to repair major roads in Punjab state Sunday and succeeded in reopening the Grand Trunk road from Ambala to New Delhi. Six deaths have been reported in the Punjab so far.

In Uttar Pradesh, India's most populous state, 288 deaths were reported, most as the result of houses collapsing due to flooding.

In Dehra Dun, a hill resort in Uttar Pradesh, eight members of one family were swept from their home and drowned. A 12-year-old son escaped by grabbing a wooden plank and hanging on until he was able to catch on to a treetop miles away, according to newspaper reports.

Tens of thousands of villagers left their homes in Uttar Pradesh, and in Bihar State where at least 75 persons were reported killed.

In Himachal Pradesh, according to state government reports, at least 100 persons have died. Landslides cut road and rail tracks between Kalka and Simla.

It's official, oil prices will rise slightly in '79

JEDDAH, Saudi Arabia (UPI) — Saudi Arabia has signalled its decision to raise petroleum prices, but the oil giant says the increases will be small and spread out to avoid jolting the world economy.

Saudi Oil Minister Sheik Ahmed Zaki Yamani said "dozens" of gradual price increases will avoid a "jolt" that could damage the world economy far more seriously than the oil price explosion of 1973-1974.

Petroleum industry sources said Yamani's remarks Sunday indicated Saudi Arabia, the most powerful oil producer in the oil cartel, was abandoning its oil price freeze in 1978 in favor of moderate increases in 1979. Iran, the No. 2 producer in the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries, already has made it clear it wants an increase for 1979.

Western officials have warned that any major increase in the price of oil will spur inflation, increase the huge U.S. trade deficit and put new pressure on the battered dollar.

Whether or not the Saudis and other OPEC nations decide on an official price increase, the Middle East Economic Survey, an authoritative oil industry analyst, predicted Monday that market conditions will drive prices up before the end of this year.

Yamani would not discuss any proposals he plans to make to OPEC at its December meeting that will decide 1979 prices.

"We should not be short-sighted," he told the Saudi newspaper Al-Medina in an interview. "If we do not allow for gradual price increases in the future we will face a sharp increase that could jolt world economies in the 1980s."

Israel retaliates in Lebanon

BEIRUT, Lebanon (UPI) — Two Israeli warplanes strafed Palestinian camps near Beirut airport and south of the city at dawn Monday in lightning retaliation for a terrorist attack on an El Al airlines bus in London.

At least four people were killed — including three guerrillas — and 40 people were wounded in the attack. Hospital officials said women and children were among the wounded.

The air strikes — coming less than 24 hours after a grenade and machine gun attack in London — were denounced publicly by the Palestine Liberation Organization as "a barbaric attack on civilian areas" and privately by Lebanese officials who complained their country was "framed in someone else's attack." The 15-minute attack began with a rumble and scream of the two jets at 5:45 a.m., met almost simultaneously with the cackle of heavy machine gun and antiaircraft fire from the Palestinians and Syrian peace-keeping troops in the heart of the capital.

UPI reporter David Zenian, among dozens of civilians jarred awake by the attack, said he watched the strikes; orange tracer bullets zipping across the sky.

The targets were the sprawling Bourj al Barajneh camp just east of Beirut airport and the Palestinian-controlled coastal town of Damour, 12 miles to the south.

All the reported casualties were at Bourj al Barajneh, populated by some 9,000 Palestinians and Lebanese civilians and heavily defended by guerrillas of both the mainstream PLO and non-PLO radicals such as the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine — the group linked to the London attack.

PLO military officials said at least one bomb was dropped at Bourj al Barajneh — killing three guerrillas near a sports center — and "a larger number" on Damour, but that the fierce ground fire precluded any wide-scale bombardment.

"Most of the fire was from 80mm machine guns," said a PLO military spokesman. "We kept them away ... We were ready for this. We expected (Israeli Prime Minister Menachem) Begin to do something like this and had been on alert of course ever since the London attack" Sunday afternoon.

Witnesses confirmed that ground fire apparently kept the attacking jets from more extensive bombing. Western diplomats felt there might have been another factor, however; possible Israeli reluctance to mount a major retaliation that could jeopardize the upcoming Camp David peace talks.

Vatican worried about terrorists

VATICAN CITY (UPI) — Cardinal Venetio Cooke of New York acknowledged Monday that the princes of the church gathering to elect a new pope are concerned about possible terrorist attacks during their conclave.

"There is concern for our safety," Cooke said in answer to a question about stepped-up security. "That's understandable."

Smiling, he said he was not himself concerned. "I never thought I would get such an easy way to go and join the Lord."

Inside the Vatican, the cardinals rely on 100 former Italian policemen working as security guards for the papal palace.

The guards usually wear gray business suits and carry small pistols in discreet shoulder holsters. Vatican sources say they also have sub-machine guns in their arsenal.

Outside the Vatican, Italian police have reinforced police guards surrounding the palace walls and assigned special squads to watch the various church residences in Rome where the cardinals are staying prior to the conclave.

During the late Pope Paul's funeral Aug. 12, an estimated 5,000 police were mobilized to guard the cardinals and delegations from 104 countries who attended.

Cooke said it was hard to predict how long the election would last but, "We are all hopeful it will not be prolonged. We are open to the Holy Spirit and to each other."

A number of church sources predicted the conclave will be relatively brief and result in the election of a moderate, rather than a conservative or liberal, to succeed Paul, who died 15 days ago at age 80 after a 15-year reign.

Cardinal Timothy Manning of Los Angeles denied the cardinals were working toward a consensus on two or three candidates, all Italians, even before the conclave starts.

Blacks fare badly househunting

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A nationwide government survey, in which blacks and whites applied to the same four private housing agencies in various areas, shows the blacks encountered a 75 percent chance of discrimination in rentals and 62 percent on the purchase of a home.

On a regional basis, the survey showed the incidence of discrimination on home sales was four times higher in the North-Central United States than in the South and West. The lowest rate in both rentals and sales was found in the Northeast.

The survey, covering 40 major urban areas around the country, was conducted for the Department of Housing and Urban Development and the findings appear in the current issue of McClain's magazine. The 600 men and women who carried it out made 3,264 separate requests for a place to live.

Donna Shalala, assistant HUD secretary for policy development and research, said, "What this study means is that racial discrimination is still a serious problem in this country, and we can't forget it."

Bank Secrecy Act: Insidious threat to privacy

By MARTHA ANGLE and ROBERT WALTERS
(Newspaper Enterprise Assn.)

WASHINGTON — Can a federal law enforcement officer, acting without any court order, pry through your personal financial records to identify your creditors, your doctor, your psychiatrist or your favorite liquor store? The answer unfortunately is yes, notwithstanding the Fourth Amendment prohibition against "unreasonable searches" of citizens' "papers and effects" by investigators lacking a judicially approved search warrant. The unbecomingly opportunist for wholesale invasion of personal privacy without any awareness on the part of those being victimized, can be traced directly to a 1970 law passed by Congress and a 1976 U.S. Supreme Court decision.

The law is the Bank Secrecy Act. Among its lesser faults is a grossly misleading name, since it actually eliminated any vestige of secrecy by requiring commercial banks to make copies of the front and back of all customers' checks and deposit slips, and to retain those microfilm records for five years.

The well-intentioned law was designed to give federal investigators a valuable new tool in pursuing political corruption, drug trafficking, organized crime activities and other forms of white collar crime.

But it is applicable to all of the country's estimated 200 million checking accounts, most of them maintained by law-abiding citizens. The number of checks written — and photocopied — now exceeds 35 million annually.

The law contains no standards for establishing access to checking account information. With no statutory requirement for the issuance of judicial warrants or subpoenas, "a person today has no protection from prying government agencies," says Rep. John J. Cavanaugh, D-Neb.

According to Robert Ellis Smith, publisher of a Washington newsletter called Privacy Journal, there have been numerous instances of past abuses of the law because federal agents have gained access to checking accounts

"in cases where there was not even the suspicion of criminal activity."

The 1976 court case was the product of a futile effort to apply the same Fourth Amendment protection to cancelled checks held by a bank as those kept at home. But the Supreme Court ruled that bank customers had no "legitimate expectation of privacy concerning information kept in bank records."

Determined to redress that situation, Cavanaugh has fought during the past year for remedial legislation in Congress, gaining support from groups as disparate as the American Bankers Association and the American Civil Liberties Union.

The broad ideological support for the reform is demonstrated by the fact that among the numerous backers of the legislation are two California congressmen from opposite ends of the political spectrum — liberal Democrat Pattnoy H. (Pete) Stark Jr. and conservative Republican Barry M. Goldwater Jr.

Cavanaugh recently convinced the House Banking Committee to approve legislation requiring a federal agency seeking access to personal financial records held by a bank to first notify the customer of its intentions.

If the customer wanted to contest the government action a federal court would decide whether the search was a necessary part of a legitimate law enforcement action.

There are exemptions to the customer notification procedure, covering national security matters, grand jury proceedings and other sensitive criminal investigations.

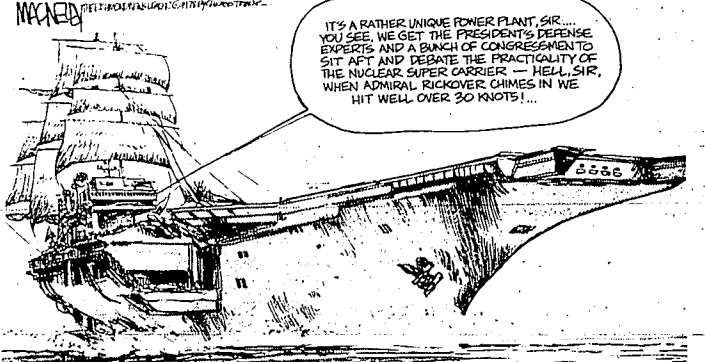

The importance of gaining full legislative approval of Cavanaugh's proposal in the remaining months of the current session of Congress is best summarized by a spokesman for California's Crocker National Bank:

"If a few individuals take unfair advantage of the law, the solution is to punish those few individuals and not to deny every other citizen the right to privacy in the name of administrative efficiency."

Painful blemish on skin of 1% initiative

The one percent initiative, that quick 'n' easy plan for limiting Idaho property taxes to one percent of the actual market value of land, still has a pretty-boy look to it for many Idahoans.

But a blemish appeared on the tax limitation measure recently, an imperfection that could be particularly painful in Twin Falls County.

According to a study of Twin Falls schools, the tax trimming initiative not only would trim away the fat in the city school system but could inflict a gouge into the meat of the schools, too.

At the request of the Idaho Department of Education, Twin Falls superintendent of schools Dr. James Sawin studied what the 1 percent initiative would do to his school system.

Sawin concluded the initiative probably would lead to a cut in the number of teachers or administrative staff.

Neither of these prospects are particularly appealing.

As Sawin and most school patrons know, Twin Falls already spends the least on education of any school district in Idaho on a per pupil basis.

Cutting out teachers from a district already offering a modest curriculum will end up hurting kids.

A cut in administrative positions within the Twin Falls school district might appear more attractive. But even this trimming would have detrimental side-effects.

Chief among these is the certainty that a lack of administrative staff at the local level will force more decision-making onto the Idaho state department of education.

"Paper-shuffling, the filling out of forms and the like (something unlikely to diminish even if the 1 percent initiative passes) would be taken over by the state education offices, in the opinion of Dr. Sawin.

And that means the state of Idaho, not the Twin Falls school board, could end up making more and more decisions affecting local schools.

From his observations as a school administrator in Colorado and Arizona, Dr. Sawin believes Twin Falls may already be getting near maximum value from its educational tax dollars. "We're very close to the line where additional cuts will devastate the educational system," Sawin said of the 1 percent initiative.

So, the question when discussing schools and the 1 percent initiative may come down to whether higher property taxes are worth it to support a decent educational system.

It is that kind of question that must be debated between now and November when Idaho will vote on proposition 1.

When the polls lie, and why

WASHINGTON — Professional pollsters will tell you that in any survey of public opinion, two factors are paramount. The first is the selection of a sample; the second is the wording of the question. Of the two, the question probably counts for more.

For a textbook illustration of that truism, consider the poll conducted last January by CBS News and the New York Times on the conservative movement in America. The pollsters concluded that "Americans are more conservative than they used to be," but some puzzling contradictions appeared: "This swing in the right may not be as clear-cut as it appears. There are many 'new right' issues on which conservatives and liberals think alike."

The poll was much publicized. Those of us on the conservative side of the fence took comfort in an apparent swing to the right. On particular issues, however, liberals took comfort in figures indicating that even putative conservatives were in their corner. One such issue was national health insurance; another was employment.

Top editors of the North American Newspaper Alliance looked at the Times-CBS News data in disbelief. The longer they studied the questions that had been asked, the more they became convinced the findings were worthless. So NANA commissioned the Opinion Research Corporation of Princeton, N.J., to undertake a second survey in which the questions were subtly but significantly reworded. The results should be a lesson to everyone who uncritically accepts a public opinion poll.

In the original Times-CBS News survey, this question was asked: "Do you agree or disagree that the government ought to help people to get doctors and hospital care at low cost?" A remarkable 81 percent of the respondents agreed with the proposition. It was still more remarkable that even among the respondents who had identified themselves as conservatives, 79 percent agreed.

This question also was asked: "Do you agree or disagree that the government in Washington ought to see to it that everybody who wants to work has a job?" On that question, 74 percent of the respondents agreed. Among those who styled themselves conservatives, 70 percent agreed.

Sponsors of the Times-CBS News poll reached a nice, smug conclusion: "On the traditional issues of jobs and medical care, there is no longer any large difference between liberals and conservatives. Back in the 1960s a majority supported government provision of jobs for the unemployed and low-cost medical care. Now, an even greater majority, including a majority of the 'very conservative,' feel that way."

Now consider what happened when NANA's poll reworded the two questions. In the NANA poll, the words "private enterprise" were substituted for "government." This respondent was asked if they agreed or disagreed that private enterprise ought to help the people to get jobs and low-cost medical care. The findings knocked the original poll into a cocked hat.

Answering the reworded question about private enterprise in medical care, 71 percent agreed with the proposition. Among those who had identified themselves as liberals, 73 percent agreed. Answering the reworded question about jobs, 70 percent agreed. Among those who styled themselves liberals, 72 percent agreed.

In each case, the question subtly invited the answer. In the first instance, by suggesting that "the government" ought to do a desirable thing, the question invited an agreeable response. In the second instance, by suggesting that "private enterprise" ought to do the same desirable thing, the question invited the same agreeable response. The moral is not to believe everything you see in the papers.

Let me give you a second, unrelated example of how the game is played. A long time ago I needed Dr. George Gallup by wondering about "his questionaire" and was delighted to have a favorable response from the liberal point of view. He denied this absolutely and assured me that his staff "agonized over" the wording of questions.

But last month Dr. Gallup published a poll showing that 58 percent of the people favor ratification of the Equal Rights Amendment. This was how he described the amendment. It was a proposal "which would give women equal rights and equal responsibilities." A phony question seldom has been asked by a reputable poll, but Gallup asked it. And he got a phony answer.

Carter may be a dead chicken in Texas

©N.Y. Times News Service. DALLAS — Democrats in this big, prosperous but politically contentious state are gleefully trying to tag Republican gubernatorial candidate William Clements with the disdaintful nickname of "Chicken" Clements. This has nothing to do with Clements' courage but much to do with President Carter's prospects here. It seems that at a recent chamber of commerce luncheon in the Panhandle city of Amarillo, Clements and his Democratic opponent, Attorney General John Hill, made what was supposed to be "non-political" appearances. Hill, leading off, stuck to the script with a few non-controversial remarks. Then Clements, a millionaire oilman, deputy secretary of defense in the Ford administration, and first-time political candidate, launched into what in Texas is commonly reported to have been a "tirade" against Jimmy Carter. The president, Clements declaimed, "is a dead chicken around John Hill's neck... and I intend to hang him with it." Whereupon, with a flourish, he produced a rubber chicken from a brown paper bag and flung it in the general direction of Hill. The chicken landed, however, in the plate of Mrs. Jerry Hodge, wife of the mayor of Amarillo.

Up to that moment, Mayor Hodge had been a staunch Clements backer. The "dead chicken incident," according to all reports here, instantly converted the mayor and his wife to the support of John Hill, who scarcely needed them.

In a statewide poll of 600 respondents taken recently by Pat Caddell, the Democratic nominee leads Clements by a staggering 65.9 to 29.3 (counting leaners). The question nevertheless remains: Is Jimmy Carter a "dead chicken" in the fourth largest state of the union?

It would not be hard to conclude that he is, although no knowledgeable political source here predicts that the president's unpopularity is great enough to elect Bill Clements, who spent about $1.5 million, mostly on television, to win the Republican primary, yet remains unheard-of by 29.5 percent of the respondents in the Caddell poll and not favorably known to 45.6 percent of the others.

But in the same poll Carter himself was rated as doing an "excellent" or a "good" job as president by only 42.3 percent of those queried; 55.4 percent rated his presidency "only fair" or "poor." In foreign policy matters, Carter's only fair-to-poor rating rose ominous level of 65.4 percent. This low score no doubt reflected the opposition of 59.2 percent of the respondents to the Panama Canal treaties pushed through earlier this year by the Carter administration.

Carter probably suffers also from the general cynicism of Texas voters about politics — 62.7 percent of the poll respondents agreed that "most politicians don't really care about people like me" and 46.6 denied that "this country is run for the good of the average person." That kind of alienation is bound to rub off on anyone in office — and the higher the office, the more the public distrust.

Aside from poll results, the signs of Carter's political difficulties here are everywhere. The belief is widespread that he could not have carried the state and its 26 electoral votes crucial to his election — in 1976 against Ronald Reagan, and that he could not carry it against Reagan in 1980.

Ron Calhoun, the Dallas Morning News' political writer, wrote recently that on one occasion or another, "virtually every Democratic candidate in Texas" has disassociated himself from the president, but that their Republican opponents were having a "field day" attacking him. Calhoun quoted Bill Fisher, the Republican candidate for congress in the 17th district (in central west Texas) as saying, "It's kind of hard to find many people in the district who said they voted for Carter, although he carried the district with 53 percent."

Fisher still is considered the underdog in the race for the seat of Rep. Omar Burtonson, who is retiring. But the "chink in the armor" of the conservative Democratic favorite, Charles Stenholm, is reported to be that he was Jimmy Carter's district campaign manager in 1976.

Tabloids fill newspaper void in New York

N.Y. Times Service
NEW YORK — New Yorkers got two new strike newspapers to read Monday but no indication of movement to resolve the walkout that has shut The Daily News, The New York Post and The New York Times since Aug. 10.

Federal mediators scheduled a resumption of talks Tuesday afternoon between the publishers of the three major dailies and their striking pressmen. But Leonard Farrell, one of the mediators, said there had been no signs that either side was willing to soften their stand on the central issue of pressroom manning.

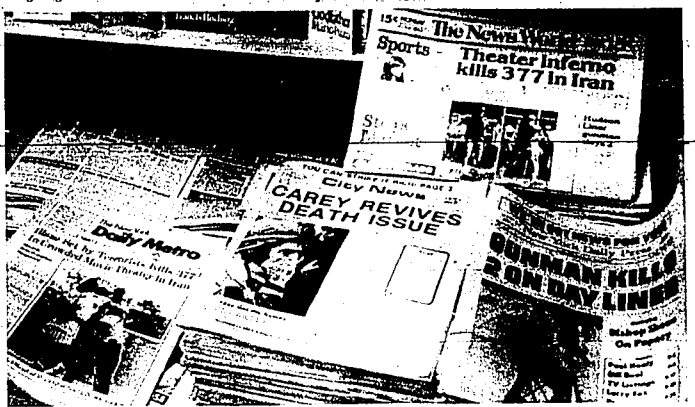

And two more of the 10 newspaper unions began actions that could take them on strike too. All of the unions have been honoring the picket lines set up by the pressmen and, since last Thursday, the paperhandlers, but formal strike votes by other unions could complicate a speedy return to publishing even if the pressmen settle.

The two new strike newspapers, The Daily Metro and The Daily Press, are, like The City News that began publishing last week, 25-cent tabloids staffed by regular editorial and advertising employees of the struck papers.

Rupert Murdoch, publisher of The Post, reportedly provided a vital piece of financial help to The Metro by agreeing to buy 150,000 copies a day to be distributed to Post readers who have the paper home-delivered. But Murdoch said that he was giving no other financial aid to the paper and that he had no ownership role. There have been persistent rumors that he intended to shut down The Post, which he bought in 1977 for a reported $50 million, and start a new daily unencumbered by past union contracts. The City News is being home delivered by Times distributors, a relationship that prompted union charges that The Times had at least part-ownership of the new daily. But Arthur O. Sulzberger, publisher of The Times, said it "has no financial interest in any strike newspaper being published."

McGovern advocates Cambodian take-over

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Sen. George McGovern, who bitterly opposed U.S. involvement in Vietnam, Monday suggested creation of an international military force to topple the communist leadership of Cambodia.

McGovern, D-S.D., compared the reported slaughter of Cambodians carried out by the new communist leaders to Adolf Hitler's program to exterminate Jews. He added Cambodian leaders have made the Nazi's operation "look very tame" by comparison.

"Do we sit on the sidelines and watch a population slaughtered, or do we marshal military force and put an end to it?" McGovern asked two administration witnesses testifying before a Senate Foreign Relations subcommittee on developments in Indochina since the U.S. withdrawal in 1975.

"We ought not to dismiss out of hand the possibility of the international community to stop this indiscriminate slaughter."

McGovern made clear he was not proposing a reinvolvement of the United States "with the Marine Corps" but rather a military operation mounted, ideally, by the United Nations.

He added he held out little hope the United Nations would act. "One would think the international community would at least condemn the situation and move to stop what appears like genocide," he said. Scholars and other specialists have estimated the Khmer Rouge government of Pol Pot has caused the death of up to 1.2 million Cambodians out of an estimated total population of 8 million.

Long turbans help prisoners escape

RAWALPINDI, Pakistan (UPI) — Five Indians convicted of spying and each serving 14 years imprisonment escaped a Pakistani jail by using their turbans to scale a 30-foot prison wall, it was reported Monday.

The Urdu-language daily Naaal Waqa reported the three Hindus and two Sikhs dug a hole through their cell wall and in darkness scaled a 30-foot wall with the help of the Sikhs' turbans.

IRS clamps down on segregated schools

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Internal Revenue Service moved Monday to revoke tax-exempt status for privately funded and elementary schools which cannot prove they are free of racial discrimination.

The proposed new guidelines would tighten safeguards by shifting the burden of proof from the government to the schools themselves. "We've seen our present procedures aren't working," said IRS spokesman Leon Levine. He said the proposal — to be published Tuesday in the Federal Register — was approved by the Justice Department's civil rights division and is in line with the Supreme Court's Alan Bakke decision because no hard and fast quotas are involved.

The IRS estimated that under the proposal, as many as 3,500 of the nation's 18,000 private schools could be reviewed to determine whether their contributors may continue to receive tax exemptions.

"The procedure contains guidelines to help identify schools that claim to be racially non-discriminatory but in fact discriminate," the IRS announcement said.

The new rules, described as being in line with recent federal court decisions, would free the government of proving that discrimination exists and require the schools to establish that it does not. If schools cannot make such showings, the service will consider the schools "to be racially discriminatory and tax exemption will be revoked or denied," the announcement said.

It said a close look would be taken at private institutions "formerly or substantially expanded at or about the time of desegregation of the public schools in the community."

Private schools where enrollments grew less than 10 percent "during the period of desegregation" will be allowed to retain tax-exempt status without special review, the IRS said.

Standard appeal procedures to the courts will continue, the IRS said. Schools can retain the tax exempt status by having "minority enrollment in significant numbers" — defined as 20 percent of the percentage of minority school age population in the community.

Minority scholarships, recruitment, teachers and increased minority enrollment also can be used to show the school "is operated in good faith on a non-discriminatory basis," the announcement said.

Nader accuses Ford of delaying Pinto recall

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Ralph Nader accused Ford Motor Co. Monday of insisting on an ineffective "cheap technical fix" for the 1.5 million Pintos it has agreed to recall because of exploding gasoline tanks.

In a letter to Henry Ford II, chairman of the company, Nader said the company is trying to delay the recall so there will be fewer of the 1971-76 model Pintos and Mercury Bobcats it will actually have to fix.

"While Pinto owners await notification by mail of the recall campaign, Ford Motor Co. is still trying to persuade the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration to accept a cheap technical fix for the hazardous fuel tank design that will not meet minimum safety precautions," Nader said.

"For example, Ford's proposal to place a plastic shield and a longer fuel tank filler pipe in these Pintos has failed to pass NHTSA muster in recent unpublicized government-sponsored crash tests," he added.

Ford agreed to the recall in June under pressure from NHTSA. The repair program has not actually started, however, because NHTSA has not yet approved it.

Robert Redford environmentalist

Robert Redford

VAIL, Colo. (UPI) — Actor Robert Redford, an ardent environmentalist and a sewer commissioner in his own town, dropped in on a weekend symposium to sit in on a discussion on water problems.

"Too often there is a stereotyped image about what an actor is and too often it means giving up citizenship papers," Redford said at the symposium.

Redford, who is a sewer commissioner in Prewa Canyon, Utah, where he lives in a solar house, said he and some neighbors were trying to create a water district. The actor said he started coming to the Vail Symposium, an annual series of seminars on national topics, in 1974.

Redford's presence drew about 150 persons, the largest crowd of the conference. They listened patiently to Utah Gov. Scott Matheson give a speech on water problems before Redford arrived. The actor was introduced during a question and answer session, and he made a speech.

"It's insane to assume that we can go forward without development," said Redford, who has supported various environmentalist causes. "We are a development-oriented society."

But, said Redford, orderly development is needed, and he warned that "technology is not out of control with the natural balance of things."

"I really do recognize how difficult and complicated ... it is to manage this balance," he said. "It's not easy."

Big bucks in engineering

NEW YORK (UPI) — Boom times continue for new college graduates with a bachelor's degree in petroleum engineering, a College Placement Council job survey released today shows.

The going salary for the new engineering graduates is $1,633 a month — compared to $1,271 for humanities graduates such as history, English, music, art, sociology majors. The petroleum engineering salary was up nine percent over last year's.

"Competition is fierce for petroleum, mining and chemical engineers," Jean G. Kessler, Council director, said.

"It's a seller's market and if you're a minority or a female, wow!" Mrs. Kessler, running the surveys for the Council in Bethlehem, Pa., since they started 19 years ago, said recruiting on the college campuses this year "beat the boom years of the sixties."

The Council report is based on offers made by firms recruiting on college campuses. It showed offers to all bachelor's recipients up 35 percent over last year and 90 percent ahead of 1975-76 — one of the better recruiting years of the seventies.

At the doctoral level, 20 percent more offers were recorded than last year and almost 60 percent more than in 1975-76. The doctorate in metallurgy brought $2,068 a month; in chemical engineering, $2,074; in chemistry, $1,859.

At the master's level, offers did not show the spectacular gains run up for bachelor's, rising only three percent over the previous year.

The three leaders in master's dollar averages were chemical engineering at $1,629; Master of Business Administration-technical, $1,619; and mechanical engineering $1,571. Mrs. Kessler said there are jobs for bachelor's in humanities but that "it's a harder row to hoe." "The humanities graduates may need to bump around for a year before they find a niche but there are opportunities — in sales, insurance, banking."

The report showed over 90 percent of the bachelor's offers came from employers in the private sector, with manufacturing and other industrial firms accounting for almost two-thirds of them.

The remainder were from government agencies and non-profit organizations.

"While all crucial areas at the bachelor's showed improvement, the engineering curricula accounted for 58 percent of total offers.

Employers made 41 percent more offers to engineering graduates this year than they did last — which showed a 53 percent increase over 1975-76.

Women, accounting for 22 percent of the new bachelor's degrees, were offered 50 percent more jobs than in the previous year; men, 32 percent more.

Mrs. Kessler said the offers to women reversed last year's pattern.

The CPC Salary Survey is based on job offers made to graduating college students in selected curricula and graduate programs during the normal recruiting period, September to June. Degrees in teaching are not included.

Foreign sightseers flocking into USA

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Foreigners are visiting the United States in record numbers, drawn by cheap airfares and the multiplied buying power of their currencies against the dollar, the government said Monday.

Figures for the first five months of 1978 suggest far more foreigners may visit the United States in 1978 than the record 20.1 million forecast before the dramatic fall of the dollar, U.S. Travel Service officials said.

Travel from Europe was up 35.3 percent in May alone.

Cheap airfares played a major part in the 51 percent increase in visitors from Great Britain for the month of May, officials said. But the number of travelers from West Germany, where airfares have not dropped as dramatically, jumped 30 percent — French travel to the United States was up 19 percent.

Foreign visitors to the United States, expected to spend nearly $9 billion, enjoy multiplied buying power against the declining value of the dollar. An estimated $600 billion is held overseas, sent abroad to pay for foreign exports such as oil and Japanese goods. The result is a glut of dollars, slashing its value against foreign currencies.

"The West German mark, for example, buys twice as much U.S. currency today as it did in 1972. The Japanese yen buys 40 percent more U.S. currency today than it did just 18 months ago.

"We're saying the growth is coupled with the lower airfares and the falling dollar," said Beverly Shipka, deputy director of the travel service's office of policy and research.

Nearly 7 million foreigners traveled to the United States in the first five months of 1978, a 6.2 percent increase over the five-month period in 1977.

The U.S. government emphasizes this country as a travel bargain in its

$1 million paid advertising aimed at foreign tourists. A two-week tour of the East, including food, lodging and transportation, sells for about $800 in London.

Officials expect figures on foreign travel to the United States during the summer to show a 20 percent growth over the same period last year. Estimates of 20.1 million visitors for the year are "conservative," Ms. Shipka said.

"It would be my guess that it would be heavier because of the buildup of knowledge about the United States, the favorable word of mouth and the economic benefits," she said.

Bounty may increase on Army deserters

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Defense Department will ask Congress for authority to increase by up to triple the bounties paid to sheriffs and police departments for arresting military deserters, it was announced Monday.

The step is being taken because the FBI is planning to drop on Oct. 1 its traditional role of searching for deserters in order to concentrate on higher priority investigations such as white collar and computer crimes.

Under the plan, Congress will be asked for legislation that would allow the Pentagon to pay local law enforcement agencies up to $75 a head for each deserter they return to military custody and up to $50 a head for deserters held in jail to be picked up by military police.

Present payments are $25 and $15, respectively. The Pentagon said it would not use the full increases immediately, but first boost payments to $50 and $25 to see if they created a big enough incentive for local agencies to fill the gap being created by the FBI's planned cutback.

The Unmaking Of a Millionaire

While serving in a California jail for writing bad checks, a 43-year-old woman learned she was the heir to a four-million-dollar estate. That's just one of the truth-is-stranger-than-fiction stories you'll read in an exclusive excerpt from Jerry and Rena LeBlanc's book, Suddenly Rich. The LeBlancs also describe some people who expected to inherit a fortune—and saw their dreams go up in smoke. Read "Inherit the Windfall." Tomorrow on the features page.

Fortune snares fools

Trouble trails sudden riches

Some folks can't win for losing. Let Lady Luck smile and they "self-destruct," report Investigative Journalists Jerry and Rena LeBlanc. They cite the true-life story of a down-at-the-heels house painter who stumbled upon a massive fortune — only to sabotage himself out of it. And how some folks get delusions of grandeur . . . like a platin-vanilla couple from Tennessee who squandered a multimillion-dollar inheritance before they ever saw it. Last in a two-part series, excerpted from the book "Suddenly Rich."

By JERRY LeBLANC and RENA DICTOR

Field Newspaper Syndicate

As Oscar Wilde once said, there are two great tragedies in life: not getting what you want, and getting it.

A rich, young commodities broker in Chicago, known for his shrewd handling of funds in a field which, with its huge winnings and losses, is not too far from gambling, commented: "People in my business have a tendency to self-destruct. I think it's far more important to know what Freud thinks about death wishes than what Milton Friedman thinks about deficit spending."

And then there's the story of Danny Diaz, which took place in Ventura, 50 miles north of Los Angeles.

Hired by a real-estate company to repaint several old houses it had purchased for resale, Diaz found, in a musty bedroom closet, a green metal box with a small silver handle which he promptly hid in his car. Then he returned to his painting.

BRIMMING WITH BILLS

When he reached home late that day, Diaz found a screwdriver and desperately pried at the lock until it snapped open. He lifted the lid slowly, and his mouth fell open. The box was crammed full with money.

The bundles of $20 bills, bound together with paper clips and dried and cracked rubber bands, had a strange yellowish-orange tint that did not resemble real money. He looked closer. Maybe it was just faded with age. On the very top was a small piece of paper, three by five inches, with the figure, "$50,000."

It's got to be real, Diaz told himself, studying one of the bills carefully. It looked official. "The United States Will Pay to the Bearer Upon Demand Twenty Dollars in Gold," it said, and the bill was dated 1931. It felt like real money—too. And, he discovered, all the bills had different serial numbers. Some were labeled Silver Certificate. So it was real money, he decided. It was just old. Fifty thousand dollars! It was more money than he'd ever dreamed of having.

Thrusting a handful of bills into his pocket, he closed the metal box, put it under the bed, and headed for a small tavern where most of the patrons were Mexican-Americans and where Danny Diaz was well known.

"Hey, this is real money, no?" he asked the bartender. The bartender consulted with another man, and Diaz worried. They examined the bill very closely, then told Diaz it was all right. Danny, relieved, had a drink then bought a round of drinks for the house.

As the evening progressed, things became blurred. At some point, he telephoned his relatives. He was feeling very generous at the bar, and the word quickly spread that Danny Diaz was buying drinks. Soon, all of his friends were gathered around and, before long, he'd run out of money and had to go back for more.

LOSSES COUNT

Some time in the next few days, a cousin or brother arrived and Danny Diaz remembered taking out $10,000, counting it off, putting it in a paper bag and then in the bureau drawer. Minutes later it wasn't there. Had he taken it to a bar? Perhaps. But other bundles of the money seemed to be gone, too. He didn't really care. He was very happy and not very sober, and his trips to the treasure box seemed not to seriously deplete the supply. He wasn't thinking very clearly. The celebration continued.

Several days later, at a nearby high school, a teenage girl waited nervously after the class bell rang. She wanted to see the teacher. She didn't know whom else to talk to, and she felt she had to talk to someone. She stood in front of the teacher's desk and he asked what she wanted. "Is this real?" she asked, putting a yellowish $20 bill in front of him and trying to sound disinterested. "My mother said it was real, but I think it's counterfeit."

The teacher examined the bill and explained to her that, yes, the money was real, but it was a gold certificate, probably worth 10 times as much as the $20 face value — not to be taken out and spent like just any $20 bill. Where did she get it?

Opening her purse, she spilled out $1,000 worth of bills from Danny Diaz's green box. She told the teacher that a man who lived in her house had a lot of money and that she was afraid her mother would get into trouble because of it.

"What if the police should know about this," the teacher suggested. "What if the money was stolen? If it was stolen, then it will mean trouble to anyone who touches it, no matter how genuine it is." Thus began the end of Danny Diaz's short, happy era of prosperity.

On the fourth morning after his wildfall, he awoke with a hangover in the Ventura jail. Instinctively, he thrust his hands into his pockets. Empty. He could have cried.

Two years later, the money that nobody had known about except Danny Diaz rested in a safety-deposit box in a Ventura bank while several parties disputed its rightful ownership. Diaz, who had found the money, left town when they placed him on probation. He also entered a formal claim for the money, but he didn't really expect anything to come of it. After all, he had never had any luck . . .

In his case as in those of countless others, the art of getting and keeping — found treasure required a spirit of adventure . . . and a measure of skill, too.

So, you may ask, what is really required of those of us who would embark willy-nilly on the road to riches? Bankers, sometimes, marry; chorus girls, certainly, but their women frequently offer outstanding charms in return.

SURPRISE LEGACIES

As for unexpected inheritances, we are a mobile, transient people and many of us lose track of even our closest relatives and friends. Thus, the situation of a surprise inheritance is neither unique nor now even rare, though it usually calls for a long-late relative.

A Manhattan-based company, Missing Heirs International, claims to have found 80,000 heirs through the years, delivering to these astonished people sums ranging from a mere $1,000 to $7 million in estates they never knew existed, from relatives they'd never met.

Imagine the surprise of a 43-year-old female prisoner at the Orange County Jail in California, serving a one-year sentence for writing bad checks, when she was informed that she was the heir to a $4 million estate that had been left in the hands of a financial institution!

EVERY HEIR IN PLACE

Even though stories of heirs who run amok with their inheritance are noted from time to time in the press, the vast majority of estates, large and small, pass from parents to sons and daughters with no upheaval in their lifestyle, and that applies whether the bequest routinely transfers into the survivor's hands at an anticipated, appointed date such as the 21st birthday, or if it comes unexpectedly from a distant, unknown source.

Sometimes, however, word of a huge inheritance reaches a family and throws it into excitement and turmoil; but, then, as claims and counterclaims move matters into the small-lie processes of the courts, the people are left hanging on and hoping for years and their lives, as they await the outcome, are almost suspended. Which is not at all what Southern Ernest Medders had in mind when told he had become suddenly rich.

In the late 1950s, Medders was a husky, balding, middle-aged man with a small-town, folksy gentility. He and his short, plump wife, Margaret, eked out a living at the near-poverty level in Memphis, Tenn., as a sometimes mechanic earning $75 a week and she employed as a nurse's aide in a local hospital.

Then all the Medders kin were called to a special meeting. A Mississippi lawyer stood in front of them waving some important-looking documents and citing chapter and verse about how Medders' father, and his father before him, settlers on the Texas range who had been ousted despite legitimate claims, were the legal and rightful heirs to the famous Spindletop oil fortune. The lawyer set forth his detailed plan for filing his claim in federal court, but Medders wanted to get down to brass tacks: How much did it mean in dollars?

"Five hundred million," replied the lawyer. And he must have had impressive reasons to back up what he was saying, because Medders, who admitted he couldn't even read, upon returning to Memphis, immediately found himself able to borrow a seven-figure sum against the forthcoming inheritance. Why wait for the lawyers to iron out details?

NEW LIFESTYLE

The Medders soon packed up and moved to a Texas ranch more befitting their new station in life.

Parties at the ranch became the highlight of the Dallas social calendar, with 500 to 1,000 guests convening. People were flown in by tuxedo-clad pilots, or they rode private trains and "special" buses equipped with bar and a free-flowing champagne fountain. The hosts dressed in finery, furs and jewelry from elegant stores like Nieman Marcus.

By 1967, the Medders' credit was so firmly established that they were able to borrow another three-quarters of a million dollars from bank-based bankers who had not noticed that the United States Supreme Court in 1965 had quietly dismissed their claim to the Spindletop oil fortune as having no merit.

Later that year, an overdue $3,000 feed bill toppled them from the empire. When the feed-store owner pressed for payment, Medders admitted that he had never received a cent of his supposed inheritance and had, in fact, been living for seven years on borrowed money. Aghast creditors formed a line all the way from Dallas to Medders' ranch, which went on the auction block as the bill collectors settled for a few cents on the dollar at best.

Just as quietly as they came, Ernest and Margaret Medders were back near Memphis to live out their days on a Social Security check of about $250 a month. Looking back, they sometimes had trouble believing that for a brief, heady moment in time, they were at the top of the heap.

From sea to shining sea, from classroom to the unisex shop, we hallow the concept of equality . . . then we spend our days fighting it by trying to rise above our neighbors in the Status Wars.

Social comparison — whether it's gossip about how much an acquaintance spends for clothing, the salary of a sports star or the faded tradition of keeping up with the Joneses — spans the gamut of our economic lives as we all struggle to become richer, if only a little richer than yesterday. "It isn't enough to succeed," the witty Gore Vidal once quipped, "one must also have a friend who fails."

Who wants equality if he can be rich instead?

Dear Abby

Wife becomes concerned over 66-year-old rival

© 1978 by Chicago Tribune-N.Y. News Synd. Inc.

DEAR ABBY: I'm 33 and my husband is 36, and my problem is his interest in a 66-year-old woman. Can you believe it? This has been going on for the last six years. They work together, and Jim gives her a ride to work and back. But that's not all — they talk on the phone every night, laughing and carrying on like two kids.

Since she doesn't have any means of transportation, Jim carries her around on weekends to do her shopping, errands, doctors' appointments, etc. She pays him back by cutting his hair and giving him manicures and rubdowns. She even clips his toenails!

This woman has been a widow for 20 years, and the only social life she seems to have is with my husband. Some of my friends have asked me if I'm "jealous," so I guess it's common knowledge that he and this old lady have something going.

What I want to know is, what can a 66-year-old woman do for a 36-year-old man?

WONDERING IN TEXAS

DEAR WONDERING: All she has to do is "be there."

DEAR ABBY: I answer the telephone in an office in a small Southern city, and my employers have instructed me to find out who is calling before they take any call.

Over the years I have been subjected to untold abuse when I ask, "Who's calling, please?" I've been told everything from "It's none of your business," to "Andrew Jackson."

"Don't people realize that I couldn't care less who is calling — I'm only following instructions."

"Then there are people who ask, "Is he there?" (There are three he's in this office.)

And there are those who call and say, "I'm the one who called yesterday." (At least 100 people called yesterday.)

Here's my favorite: "Didn't you give him my message?" (I just give messages, I can't make my employers return calls.)

What's what

Under the painting of Leonardo da Vinci's Mona Lisa is another painting of that fair lady. And under that one is still another of her. X-rays so indicate. Leonardo evidently did the thing twice not to his liking before he got what he wanted.

Four out of five convicted rapists are jailed not for committing their crimes forcibly, but for involving themselves with underage girls, the police records show.

A rattlesnake doesn't like to get its rattle wet. It won't rattle rightly, if wet. A rattlesnake, therefore, holds its rattle above the water when it swims.

A thin glass is less likely to crack when filled with hot liquid than is a thick glass, curiously.

Only one woman in 10, it's said, can whistle.

SCREEN KISS

Q. "In what picture was the longest screen kiss of all time?"

A. Alfred Hitchcock's "Notorious." Ingrid Bergman and Cary Grant had at it for a blushing-lengthy interval.

Q. "How long do most people keep their cars? How much mileage?"

A. First owners, 3.7 years, 53,000 miles. Usually then the car has two more owners at least before it's pulled off the road after 9.5 years.

Q. "Have cannibals ever lived in North America?"

A. One tribe only insofar as is known. The Kwakiutl Indians.

Q. "Did Popeye have a papa?"

A. That he did. Popp Deck Pappy, by name.

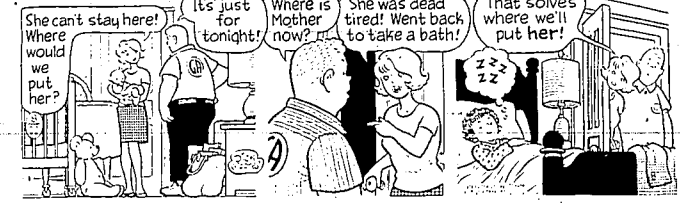

SEASONED CITIZENS

Some people of retirement age are none too fond of that label "senior citizen." Still, a pollster claims it's the most preferred brand now in use for said generation. Second choice is said to be "mature American." Third choice, "retired person." Personally, I like "Seasoned Citizen" better than any of them. But it, too, no doubt would become mildly objectionable, if used overmuch, what? Why any such appellation at all is necessary remains a mystery.

Scientists now believe there have been 16 times as many people on earth all told as there are people on earth right now. They figure the human total so far has amounted to about 69,000,000,000.

Choosing of pope shrouded in secrecy

VATICAN CITY (UPI) — The rules governing the election of the new pope are so obsessed with secrecy and so concerned with treachery that some Vatican watchers say they seem more suited to a meeting of warring generals than a conclave of Catholic cardinals.

But there are a number of historical reasons for the rules, laid down by Pope Paul VI in 1976. They are designed to ensure the 111 or so voting cardinals will be able to make their decision completely free of outside pressure.

However, the mania for secrecy — perhaps reinforced by security considerations — affects many beyond the confines of the conclave itself. A solemn oath, with automatic excommunication for anyone breaking it, has been administered to anyone having any kind of contact with the conclave, from plumbers to high-ranking priests.

"Guerri has everyone terrified," one Vatican source said, referring to Cardinal Sergio Guerri, 72, the cardinal in charge of the affairs of the Vatican City state. "It's like being back in the time of Pius XII."

The Vatican under Eugenio Pacelli, who was first secretary of state and later Pope Pius XII, was noted for its extreme secrecy.

One priest noted there has been more talk of excommunication in the past two weeks than there was during the entire 13-year reign of Pope Paul, who always sought the path of conciliation and declined to expel even such dissidents as traditionalist Archbishop Marcel Lefebvre.

Scores of reporters Monday signed formal protests to the Rev. Romeo Pancitelli, Vatican press director, protesting the exclusion of all but five persons from each of five language groups on a press tour of the conclave premises.

English-speaking correspondents include representatives of all the major wire services and networks as well as many metropolitan newspapers. They were asked to draw lots for the conclave tour.

The reporters said the exclusion "flies in the face of everything the Holy See has been saying about social communications for the past several years."

Some of the non-Italian cardinals, including all eight Americans, have been gracious and accommodating in giving interviews.

While they have all made it clear their vow of secrecy prevents them from discussing personalities, they have given many reporters valuable help in understanding the issues confronting the church as the cardinals prepare for the crucial election.

The locking up of the cardinals and their oath of complete secrecy about everything that goes on in the conclave makes sense in the light of history.

In the past, powerful countries were able to impose or block specific candidates. Catholic monarchs made sure the papacy was kept weak. As recently as 1903, Austria successfully vetoed a cardinal in the conclave that elected Pope Pius X.

All the voting slips and notes made by individual cardinals will be burned, but an official record of the voting will be kept.

Big gains registered by dollar

TOKYO (UPI) — Spurred by reports that the American government has moved to bolster the dollar, the U.S. currency gained substantially Monday against the Japanese yen in its best performance in more than two weeks.

Banking sources said the dollar closed at 190.20 yen.

After opening at 189.00 yen, compared with Friday's closing rate of 186.05 yen, the dollar hit a high of 190.50 yen at one time, the sources said.

They said one of the major factors behind the dollar's rise was the U.S. Federal Reserve Board's decision Friday to raise the official discount annual rate from 7.25 percent to 7.75 percent, effective today.

News reports from Washington about the U.S.-Japanese collaboration to bolster the dollar in the near future also boosted the American currency, they said.

The sources said the dollar was traded at a central rate of 189.60 yen, against 185.40 yen Friday.

The dollar has thus recouped most of the losses it had suffered since it plunged to 190.60 yen momentarily on Aug. 4.

The sources said trading was relatively heavy, with volume of transactions amounting to an estimated $585 million, compared with $495 million on Friday.

In Europe, the dollar opened higher on all major money markets today while gold prices fell.

In Zurich and Frankfurt, where the dollar had fared the poorest in recent weeks, the outlook had also improved.

In Frankfurt the dollar opened at 20 marks against 1.9825. Monday was the first day the dollar moved above the 2,000 marks level since Aug. 4.

The dollar opened in Zurich at 1.6525 Swiss francs against 1.6345.

On other markets, the dollar opened in Paris at 4.3650 francs against 4.32, in Amsterdam it opened 2.1680 guilders compared to 2.1460, in Milan the dollar opened at 828.25 lira against 829.05, and in Brussels it opened at 32.25 Belgian francs, up from 31.95.

Gold, meanwhile, fell off from the record prices it set last week opening in Zurich at $205.3750 against $210.6750. In London gold opened at $204.00 against $210.3740.

In London the pound opened lower at $1.9375 against $1.9430.

New devil for Viets

HANOI, Vietnam (UPI) — The Vietnam war may live in the hearts and minds of some Americans, but it is fading from Hanoi.

China, not America, is the local devil now.

A planeload of Americans saw the change Monday when a Congressional delegation landed to scout chances of closer Washington-Hanoi relations.

The United States Air Force silver-and-blue 707 rolled down the runway of what had been called Phue Yen airfield, a dormitory for the MIG-21 jets and rocket artillery that downed American airmen in yesterday's war.

The crew, veterans of the war that was, eyed the lightly camouflaged anti-aircraft artillery along the runway, but the artillery crews deserted their guns and almost shyly approached the American plane. One gunner removed his green pith helmet, held it a moment by his side and then, grinning, raised and waved it.

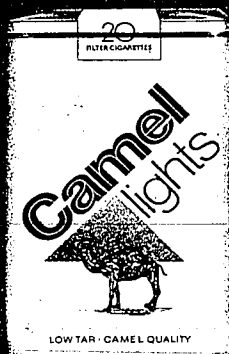

Out in the bright-green Red River delta rice paddies beyond, water brown and still stood in round pools as big as swimming holes — the remains of American bomb craters. But no one pointed. Goodbye to yesterday.

The four-mile road into Hanoi might have been used as a living museum of war. Military cemeteries, yellow headstones with red stars, nudged the roadside.

The Long Binh Bridge, that mile-long golden gate span across the Red River, for years had been U.S. pilots' favorite target and now it is as patched as the dress of a dust bowl farmer's wife. It is Hanoi's aorta and until now closed to alien photographers.

This day the visiting Congressmen paused by the bridge and posed for photographs.

Family, home, outdoors worried Bressette

By LONNIE ROSENWALD
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Protective concern for his family, his neighborhood and the wilderness he loved dominated the life of Donald Bressette more than anything, according to friends and relatives.

In the wake of Bressette's arrest Saturday threatening the life of President Jimmy Carter, those who know him here continue to react with disbelief.

"Don is a real nice person," said Wayne Kinney, the sporting goods dealer who got to know Bressette during the ten years he equipped him for his hunting and fishing trips Bressette loved.

"Don always had a great interest in nature," remembered Bressette's sister, Evelyn Foley, who hasn't seen her younger brother in six years. She remembered Donald as a child "loved hunting and reading about the mountains."

It was hunting that drew Bressette to Colorado from the Massachusetts home where he was born and raised.

Bressette was born the last of seven children to Mr. and Mrs. Simon Bressette, vegetable farmers in Adams, Massachusetts.

He grew up on the farm, learning how to hunt deer with an uncle, and attending St. Johns catholic school in North Adams.

Bressette dropped out of high school to go to work on the family farm. He married Helen Hunt, a girl from Vermont, in 1959 and with her moved to Colorado, in search of better hunting grounds.

Bressette's first marriage ended in a divorce in 1960 in which he lost custody of his four children. He traveled around the country for several years before moving to Idaho because he'd heard the hunting was better here.

The elk which Bressette dreamed of shooting down in Colorado and later in Idaho continues to elude him, but the avid hunter likes to brag to his family about the deer he killed at Gallina Summit. The deer's horns are modestly displayed on his basement wall.

Soon after arriving in Bellevue, Bressette met and married his second wife Jackie Southern. He spent the next few years working as a ranchhand, first for Bud Purdy in Pico and then for Hadley Stuart in Bellevue.

It was while working on Stuart's ranch that Bressette was knocked from his horse by a bull, injuring a disc in his back.

After an operation and four months of recuperation, Bressette tried to go back to ranching but his injury continued to bother him.

In 1970 he finally had to give up ranching. He moved to Twin Falls where he bought a house "because it was something more secure," according to Mrs. Bressette.

Despite the time and attention Bressette puts into working on his house and taking care of the yard, Mrs. Bressette said her husband "was misplaced in the city."

"He isn't pleased with Idaho. He has always had hopes of going back to New England where he could have some acreage and more privacy for his family," she said.

After moving to Twin Falls Bressette worked as a custodian at the Immanuel Lutheran School for a year. Pain in his back forced him to undergo a second operation which left him disabled and eligible for social security support.

Since 1972 Bressette has worked as a free-lance writer, combining his love of the outdoors with his writing skills. His articles have appeared in newspapers throughout Idaho, including the Times-News, and in national magazines.

"Those two interests, writing and the outdoors, are his life," Mrs. Bressette noted. Daily he sat in his living room typing out articles about hunting, fishing and camping, using past experiences and periodic trips into the wilderness as his source material.

Bressette's free-lance career took an upswing a year and a half ago when he began writing weekly columns in the Idaho State Journal in Pocatello and the Statesman in Boise. The day after Bressette was arrested his column on coyote hunting appeared in the Journal.

Mrs. Bressette said her husband grew less interested in camping during the last few years because he thinks Idaho campgrounds are "trampled" and overcrowded.

Instead, he threw his energy into maintaining a meticulous vegetable garden (where he grows tomatoes, grapes and beans. He also assumed many household tasks that his wife had done before she began got a job in the circulation department at the Times-News.

Neighbors said Bressette is concerned about problems in the neighborhood he lives in. Nel Young, owner of the Idahoan Motel on the same block as the Bressette home, said Bressette is extremely concerned about the "crummy neighborhood" as she described the area she and the Bressettes live in.

"He'd think it was up to him to correct it," Mrs. Young said.

Bressette made occasional complaints to the Twin Falls police about noise and "the hippie situation" on the street, according to Mrs. Young. She said her neighbor was "trying to protect his family," and he "often kept his daughters at home" because he was worried about their safety.

The Bressettes live comfortably enough, Mrs. Bressette's salary, Mr. Bressette's social security payments and sales of his articles — enough to buy a new car and plan a family trip to the east coast next spring.

Yet Bressette's financial and literary boasts in the last two years were offset by increasingly severe and frequent migraine headaches, which his wife said he's had as long as she's known him. The constant doses of aspirin he took for the headaches since they began stopped working several years ago and the pills gave Bressette an ulcer in 1969.

Recently a doctor prescribed medication for Bressette's crippling headaches.

Fear of headaches crept up on Bressette every evening. He'd eat an early dinner in order to be prepared to fight the pain. After dinner he would watch the 5:30 p.m. news, perhaps followed by an entertainment show. Then he'd turn in for a night of headaches and pain-filled sleep.

Palmistry, astrology legal in Twin Falls

By JEFF SHER
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — The Twin Falls City Council Monday night legalized commercial palm reading, astrology and similar practices but left unanswered the question of whether they can be conducted in a private home.

Before voting on legalization, the council changed the wording of the proposed ordinance relating to where palm reading could be practiced, a change which later caused confusion as to where the council intended to allow the practice.

The proposed ordinance originally allowed the practice of such arts only in the commercial (C-2) zone, but councilman Gordon Cox opened discussion of the subject by proposing to amend the ordinance to allow it in all zones other than residential zones. The effect of this change is to allow the practice in commercial and industrial zones.

Cox also proposed to reduce the annual license fee for the practitioners of the arts in question from $100 to $50.

His amendments passed the council 4-2, with Jim Smallwood and Mary McClusky casting dissenting votes.

The council then passed the amended ordinance five to one, with only McClusky dissenting.

At that point, Dewey Martinez, who first raised the issue when he requested, on behalf of his sister, to open a palm reading establishment in Twin Falls, asked if the ordinance, as passed, would allow his sister to operate such an establishment in her private home.

Councilmen Chris Talkington and Leon Smith indicated to Martinez that if his sister's home was in a commercial or industrial zone, it could be allowed.

City Attorney Chuck Brumbaugh then reminded the council that wording in the ordinance flatly prohibited the practice in a private home.

Martinez again posed his question, and was instructed by Smith to check with the city manager or city attorney as to the exact wording of the ordinance and an answer to his question.

Smith told Martinez if, after consulting with the city administration, he had any further questions or objections relating to the ordinance, they could be "taken up at a later time."

Given the city attorney's observation that the ordinance prohibited the practice of palm reading in a private home, and Martinez' earlier statement that his sister planned to practice in her home, further questions from Martinez may be forthcoming.

Something to look forward to — There may be one good thing about going back to school after all — new duds. Mrs. Dorothy Stark of Kimberley shopped recently in downtown Twin Falls with her son Mike, 10. Mike will enter the fifth grade next week when

Negotiators call in fact-finders for school talks

By CHRISTOPHER BOGAN
Times-News writer

HAILEY — Unable to reach a contract agreement, Blaine County teacher and school board negotiators have asked officials from the Idaho Department of Education to come "fact find" and propose a settlement for the two groups.

Both sides agreed to make the last ditch effort at settlement last week when teacher and school board representatives once more reached a stalemate over contract discussions.

For six months, the county's teachers and school board have been knocking heads over teacher salaries and several other contract considerations.

The teachers say they will go back to school August 30 without new contracts and hope that a settlement can be reached through the fact finding team.

Although the teachers have considered the possibility of a strike, their chief negotiator, Irene Healy, said Monday that "a strike is the last thing on our minds."

However, Healey did not rule out the possibility of a strike if this latest attempt at settlement is unsuccessful. School Board Negotiator Gordon Wasord first proposed a fact finding team be called in to assist negotiations when last Thursday the two parties found themselves at an impasse once again, with a $42,000 difference in their total salary proposals.

The teachers lowered an earlier contract offer from $150,000 to $140,000 but the school board would not budge from its $98,000 contract proposal made last negotiating session.

Both sides agreed the gap was too great to settle through simple mediation and they decided an outside party is needed to evaluate the teachers' and the school boards' position and to recommend a compromise settlement.

A federal mediator was brought in to help resolve the deadlocked negotiations in June, but he told the teachers and school board that they needed a budget session to settle certain facts then disputed.

Healy noted mediation occurs when two parties are within close range of a contract agreement and a third person could conceivably arbitrate a compromise.

But fact finding, the last stage of negotiations, occurs when the two sides are so far apart from resolution that a simple compromise seems impossible.

The teacher and school board negotiators agreed Friday to ask George Hunt and Don Dietsch, both officials at the Idaho Department of Education, to determine the facts of the Blaine County contract impasse.

Hunt, the teachers' choice for the fact finding team, agreed Monday to participate in the Blaine County negotiations, but Dietsch, the boards' choice for the team, had not yet been contacted by the board Monday.

Hunt, who last week completed a fact finding review in Arco, explained that fact finding is the process whereby each party in dispute makes a presentation with supporting evidence and fact finders review the evidence and then submit a report recommending a resolution.

Hunt noted, however, that a fact finding recommendation is not binding for either the teachers or the school board.

In addition to the salary dispute, Healy said the teachers and school board a fighting over teacher evaluation procedures, grievance procedure and class sizes.

She said the school board does not want the teachers to be able to negotiate these matters but the teachers feel they should be able to. Healy and Wasord said fact finding will begin as soon as a state team can come to the school district.

Berry Jay Anthony of 424 1/2 Walnut St. was charged with reckless driving after hitting the rear of a stopped pickup on Blue Lakes-Boulevard-North. Judith Arlen Naegle of Twin Falls, driver of the pickup, was not injured.

Cocaine arrest

HAILEY — A 42-year-old California attorney was arrested Saturday at Friedman Memorial Airport in Hailey and charged with possession of cocaine with intent to deliver.

Bruce Augustus was arrested by a Hailey police officer Saturday afternoon when the officer inspected a briefcase and some other luggage as the man prepared to board a plane to Salt Lake City, according to Hailey Police Chief Dan Norton. Norton said Officer Dave Cameron discovered several vials of what is alleged to be cocaine in a eyeglass case.

Augustus, who Norton said is an attorney in Southern California, appeared Monday before Magistrate Judge Alban and was charged with possession of seven ounces of cocaine with the intent to deliver, according to Blaine County Deputy Prosecutor Keith Roark.

The California attorney was released on $5,000 bond, and will be arraigned in Fifth District Court in Hailey, Roark said.

'Grassroots' forms... with one victory already

By DAVID MORRISSEY
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — The Idaho Property Owners Association may be in for a fight.

The Boise-based property owners group is the key sponsor of the 1 percent Initiative, which would limit property taxes to 1 percent of actual market value. It approved by Idaho voters in November. More than 50,000 signatures were collected, by the property owners to place the initiative on the ballot.

But not everyone is convinced the initiative is the way to spell tax relief. A Southern Idaho group with one victory under its belt is quaying off to do battle with it.

Last week Glenns Ferry Mayor Doyle Messerly announced the formation of "Grassroots," an organization he said is "made up primarily of rural Idaho people who are concerned with public issues that affect our rural way of life." Messerly, the president of Geocorps, said the initiative, if it becomes law, "would be a catastrophe for family farms in Idaho."

Grassroots is "100 percent in favor of some tax relief or a curtailment of expenditures," Messerly said. "But the 1 percent initiative has shortcomings as it's written. The small farmer, if he figures out his market value, will be paying more than he does now in taxes. He's presently taxed on the yield factor. And if he sells the land he could increase the market value but not the productive value."

Messerly was the president of an earlier South Idaho organization known as Citizens for Alternatives to Pioneer, the group that fought Idaho Power Co.'s plan to build a coal-fired power plant near Boise. Partly because of the public support raised by the CAP, the Idaho Public Utilities Commission refused Idaho Power's request to construct the facility.

Messerly said "basically the same people" who were involved in the anti-Pioneer fight are now signing on to fight the 1 percent initiative. The new group was formed "because we felt we needed a grassroots organization to formulate information on a multitude of problems."

After examining the results of the primary election, Messerly said the organization's membership concluded that there "seemed to be quite a strong movement in certain areas against the 1 percent. We felt that now was the time for us to move."

"We don't have any money," Messerly said, adding the organization would wage its war against the 1 percent initiative through letters to the editor, in newspapers, press releases and public statements in an effort to educate voters. Those were the same tactics CAP used, he said.

Carter bends 'schedule' on Boise arrival

By STEVEN K. WAGNER
BOISE (UPI) — The only thing on schedule, said President Carter's arrival and subsequent itinerary in Idaho was that he arrived in Boise Monday — the day he had planned. But that was slightly amiss. Carter's plane, Air Force 1, was to arrive in Boise near the city's National Guard terminal at 6 p.m. But the plane initially flew a scouting mission over the airport 15 minutes earlier — at 5:15. The actual landing was at 5:55, five minutes ahead of schedule. From there the president, followed by Interior Secretary Cecil Andrus and the president's aides and family members, walked down the plane ramp and greeted Gov. John V. Evans, his family, and a long line of other people. But instead of being whisked off by his entourage of Secret Service men in the presidential motorcade as planned, Carter walked over to a waiting band of reporters where he discussed his upcoming float-trip down Idaho's Middle Fork Salmon River. Aides had said they did not expect the president to mingle with newsmen, and his itinerary had him scheduled to leave the airport five minutes after landing. The president's staff had said the trip would be "strictly vacation" and the impromptu press conference — at least — was centered on just that, his vacation. Carter spoke with reporters for about 10 minutes, answering questions about the float trip and discussing his ebullient popularity, saying "It's not that bad. We're making progress. The poll I really want is that of my support in the Congress." Shortly after 6 p.m., and already way off schedule, Carter moved away from reporters and to a waiting throng of about 1,000 people. He moved from one end of the crowd to the other, shaking hands, smiling at onlookers, and speaking on occasion. At about 6:25, 25 minutes behind schedule, the president and his motorcade of 14 law enforcement and other vehicles, left for their destination, Boise's Rowley Inn, arriving shortly before 7 p.m. — a half hour late.

The president's schedule called for a 7 a.m. landing, a 6:05 departure to the motel, and an arrival there at 6:25.

NEW CANNING KITCHEN HOURS
TWIN FALLS — The Twin Falls canning kitchen due to a lack of produce will be open fewer hours effective this week. They are 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Mondays and Fridays and Wednesday from 8 a.m. to 1 p.m. until further notice.

President explains low popularity

BOISE, Idaho (UPI) — President Carter Monday repeated his explanation for his low standings in the polls — it's because of the difficult subjects he tackles. "I think we're doing okay in the polls," Carter told reporters at Gowan Field. "We've addressed some real difficult subjects."

Carter said, however, he would be watching "carefully" whether incumbent Democratic members of Congress would get re-elected in the fall.

Castleford man released on bond in Jerome arrest

JEROME — A Castleford man arrested in Jerome Friday night for allegedly carrying a concealed weapon and resisting arrest was released on $3,500 bond Saturday. Fifth District Magistrate Judge Paul Smith of Twin Falls set bond for Gregory Lee Small of Castleford who was arrested at the Northern Tavern in Jerome at 8 p.m. Friday by Jerome Police Officers Dale Lovell and Jerome Deputy Sheriff Harvey Heines. Small's attorney in the case is Gregory Fuller of Twin Falls.

A second man, Mike Wilson of Jerome, was charged Friday night with interfering with a police officer in the same incident. Wilson allegedly interfered with the arrest of Small. Wilson was being held in the Jerome County jail pending arraignment.

Police take woman into custody

TWIN FALLS — Twin Falls police took into custody a woman they feared would jump off the Singing Bridge on Shoshone Street South Monday morning.

Buff bathing OK in Denver

DENVER (UPI) — City park police say because of a questionable constitutionality of an ordinance prohibiting topless women in public, they will have to let women continue to sunbathe and frolic in the parks barechested.

Richard Fischer, a parks police supervisor, said he had received instructions from the city attorney's office not to enforce the law until a case testing its legality was settled through the state's appellate court system. He said he expected an increased number of young women basking in the parks. "Last summer when we had a workable ordinance, we had fewer violations," he said.

'Skins owner tosses barbs at Allen

WASHINGTON (UPI) — An NFL owner may be scorned; but he doesn't quickly forget those who scorn him. Washington Redskins' President Edward Bennett Williams took advantage Monday of assembled fans to toss barbs at former Coach George Allen and fellow NFL club owners.

Joking with the more than 1,600 attending the Redskins' Alumni Association's 17th annual Welcome Home luncheon, Williams needled Allen and Los Angeles Rams' owner Carroll Rosenbloom.

"I was certain," said Williams, "that at the end of last season, George didn't want to coach here. I talked with a psychic advisor who backed up my hunch."

"I asked her if George really wanted to coach my team. She said he wanted to. When I thanked her, she said, 'That's OK, Carroll.'"

Williams also related a story of a fictitious oil-rich sheik who purchased American "toys" for his son.

"The son wanted an ice skating rink," said Williams, "so the sheik bought his son Rockefeller Plaza. The son liked elevators in tall buildings, so the sheik bought the Sears Tower in Chicago."

"After a visit to Disneyland, the lad said that, more than anything, he wanted a Mickey Mouse outfit. So the sheik went out and bought his son the Los Angeles Rams."

Allen was hired last winter by Rosenbloom to coach the Rams after being fired by Williams. After just two exhibition games, both losses, Allen was fired 16 days ago by Rosenbloom.

Rosenbloom cited a concern for Allen's health as a reason for the firing.

"The three most-frequently told lies are: 'I'll have a check in the mail for it tomorrow,' 'I gave at the office,' and 'I'm from the government; I'm here to help you,'" Williams said.

"Certainly Carroll Rosenbloom has to rank no worse than No. 4 with his 10-season games don't mean a thing."

"And he can't be too far down the line with 'I hate to let you go and I know you didn't get a fair chance, but it's your health I'm thinking of.'"

Lasorda down plays Sutton-Garvey fight

MONTREAL (UPI) — Los Angeles Manager Tom Lasorda hopes he has restored peace between two of his stars, thus preparing the Dodgers for their stretch run.

"They are both on good speaking terms again," Lasorda said Monday of first baseman Steve Garvey and pitcher Don Sutton, who brawled in the team's clubhouse prior to Sunday's game against the New York Mets.

"These things have happened on professional teams before," said Lasorda before his team took the field for a game with the Expos. "You hope it won't happen to your team, though. I was sorry to see it happen between two class guys but sometimes things just happen like that."

Lasorda is trying to play down the incident and talk more of his team's battle for the title in the National League West.

"They are both top-notch players," he said, "and I know this will not affect us in our quest for the pennant."

Despite Lasorda's contention that "It was a spur of the moment" flareup, there is little doubt problems have been festering in the Dodger clubhouse for three years, ever since some of Garvey's teammates hung the "All American Boy" tag on him. Many of Garvey's teammates remain cool to him, claiming the first baseman uses the image for selfish purposes.

No problem with this monkey

O.J. Simpson got to monkey around a little at the Marine World Africa in Redwood City, California Monday after playing only a few plays against Oakland Sunday. Simpson has yet to play much for the 49ers and only gained 12 yards in Sunday's game against Oakland. Five-year-old Shana the chimp doesn't seem to mind whether O.J. is a famous runner or not as she hammed it up for the photographers.

Surprising Washington gets PAC-10 nod

By United Press International
The big news in Western college football this fall, of course, is the expansion of the Pacific 8 Conference with the addition of Arizona and Arizona State.

Both schools have solid football traditions and figure to make the Pac 10 one of the strongest conferences in the nation.

However, neither is expected to make much of an impact this fall, and the fight for the Rose Bowl spot opposite the Big 10 champion will be among Washington, Southern California, UCLA and California.

Washington's Huskies not only surprised their Pac 8 rivals in winning the conference title last year but fans across the nation as well when they upset Michigan 27-20 in the Rose Bowl.

Of that championship team, 18 of the 22 starters are back this year, and seemingly Washington stands a cut or two above the pack. The only problem facing Coach Don James is finding a No. 1 quarterback to replace Warren Moon, who has moved on to the Canadian Football League. Duane Akina, Moon's backup last year, and redshirt Tom Flick are the candidates.

In Washington's run-oriented offense, the quarterback need not be an exceptional thrower. He needs to be durable, though, and be able to take an occasional shot or two and bounce back.

There are nine starters back on offense and nine on defense. World class hurdler Spider Gaines is an exceptional pass catcher and Joe Steele rates with the best running backs in the college ranks.

John Robinson and his USC Trojans did not reach the Rose Bowl last year and while the team went 8-4, it was considered a bummer. Robinson thinks the Trojans can be better this year but he also thinks Washington may be hard to catch.

"Our's is going to be the best conference in the country," Robinson says. "Last year we placed three teams in the top 20. This year we could do even better. I think four schools have an excellent chance to win the conference. That's Washington, us, the (UCLA) Bruins and California. It should be a helluva race."

"Right now I don't think the two, Arizona schools are physical enough to win but you never can tell. They have fine reputations and could be factors, although I think it won't be until next year, after they've had a chance to really size up the league."

Like Washington, quarterback is a weak point at Southern Cal. Junior Paul McDonald is the top candidate. The Trojans have only 11 returning starters but they were so deep a year ago that their backup players all got experience. A huge offensive line should make things easy for running backs Charles White, Dwight Ford and Lynn Cain.

UCLA, which missed making the Rose Bowl last year because of a last second loss to USC in the last game of the season, has its usual share of talent but could get hurt by injuries. The offensive backfield is as good as any in the nation. Rick Bashore is the quarterback and the running backs are Theotis Brown, Olympic hurdler James Owens and Freeman McNeil.

California's strength is its offense although a lot will depend on how new coach Roger Theder handles the quarterback situation. His problem, as was the fired Mike White's a year ago, is an abundance of talent. Theder will have to pick from Charlie Young, Gary Graumann, Eric Anderson and Rich Campbell and then stick with him.

The rest of the Pac 10 has Stanford, the Sun Bowl winner last year, Arizona State and Washington State somewhere in the middle and Oregon State, Arizona and Oregon near the bottom.

Of this group Stanford is the mystery team. After having lost Guy Benjamin, Gordon King and James Lofton from last year's 9-3 team, the Cardinals could be as low as 4-7 and as high as the sky. A lot depends on an offensive line that is as big as any but lacks experience.

Steve Dils looks like a solid replacement for Benjamin and might even be better. There's also little Darrin Nelson at running back. Nelson, as a freshman last year, ran for 1,069 yards and caught 50 passes for 524 yards. That's a first in NCAA history. The Cards are solid on defense and will go with a 2-3 alignment because of an abundance of linebackers.

Washington State has the best passer in the conference — and maybe in all the nation — in Jack Thompson and as long as he is on his feet, the Cougars will be in the game. There's a new coach again this year — Jim Walden — and he's the fourth one in as many seasons.

Arizona State, as Robinson noted, lacks overall size to play week after week in the Big 10 teams. Frank Kush is 164-91 over the years but he's in a tougher conference this year than the Western Athletic and there are few soft spots. Mark Malone is the quarterback and at 6-4 and 212 he could wind up as the finest running quarterback in the school's history.

That leaves Oregon State, Arizona and Oregon.

Craig Fertig's rebuilding program at Colorado State last year and this year the Beavers could be tough. Not good enough to contend for the title but solid enough to knock off some of the better teams. With the right bounce OSU could have won at least four conference games in 1977 instead of going 0-7.

John Norman will run the option offense next when Norman is healthy, he's good as usual running or throwing. Lack of depth will hurt the Beavers.

Lack of depth also is the problem at Arizona and Oregon. Tony Mason is in his second year as coach at Arizona and Rich Brooks is in his second year at Oregon.

Pincay receive suspension

SARATOGA SPRINGS, N.Y. (UPI) — Jockey Laffie Pincay Jr., who was riding Affirmed in place of the injured Steve Cauthen; was suspended from riding for seven days for interfering with Alydar during the $104,800 Travers Stakes Saturday.

The suspension, announced Monday by the stewards at Saratoga Race Course, is to begin Thursday, Aug. 24.

Pincay had Affirmed on the lead but abruptly headed the Triple Crown winner towards the rail nearing the half-mile pole of the 1 1/4-mile race. The sudden move cut off Affirmed, who was attempting to move up along the rail and caused the bigger colt to lose ground and fall far off the pace.

After Affirmed crossed the finish line 1 3/4 lengths ahead of Alydar, an "inquiry" sign was posted and Alydar's jockey, James Velasquez, also claimed foul against the California rider.

Affirmed was subsequently disqualified in favor of Alydar, resulting in the Triple Crown winner's first loss this year after eight straight victories and a narrow Affirmed's winning margin over Alydar to 7-3.

Judge dismisses crash suits

INDIANAPOLIS (UPI) — A federal judge Monday dismissed three separate suits seeking $7 million damages each against the operators of the charter plane that crashed Dec. 13, killing 29 persons, including the University of Evansville basketball team.

The suits were filed on behalf of the estates of three of the University of Evansville basketball players killed in the crash. The entire Aces team and Coach Bobby Watso died when the plane, chartered from National Jet Service, Inc., failed to reach flying altitude after takeoff and crashed at Evansville.

The suits were filed on behalf of relatives of players Steve Miller, Michael Joyner and John Ed Washington. Miller's wife, Vicki, was plaintiff in one suit while Robert Joyner and John A. Washington, fathers of the other players, were the other plaintiffs.

Federal Judge James E. Noland said the suits, as amended, no longer belonged under the jurisdiction of his court.

But Noland said amended briefs indicated other actions would likely be brought under the Federal Tort Claims Act.

Attorney Earl Townsend, who represents the three families, also said he intends to refile.

A report from the National Transportation Safety Board said the crash of the DC-3 was caused by an improper weight balance and failure of the crew to remove external safety locks.

The findings were immediately disputed by Elliott Martin, president of charter air service.

The no I don't ache bike riding blues

BY DOUG TULLIS
Times-News sports writer

ALTURAS LAKE. — All the praise in the world goes out to the three local bicyclists who had the guts to tackle the 130 or so miles from Twin Falls to Alturas Lake this last weekend. A few more of us should have the same courage and work up the stamina.

The surprising, or not so surprising thing about the ride is that the three say they don't ache from the ride.

Their comments about saving gas, saving money and saving their bodies goes a long way as advice for the rest of us.

It's just not often enough that you see anyone older than the late teens riding a bike down the road or highway. In town, just about every child from age five on up has a bike and is mobile enough to make it to the park and back without any trouble.

The adults, on the other hand, run out and jump in the two ton automobile and drive two or three blocks to the park to sit and watch the team play softball or football or any of a dozen other sports.

All the driving adds to the deficit in the economy because it takes gas and oil to operate that two ton monster.

Now, I agree that a car is necessary but I also agree with what cyclist Dave Nelson said, "After I rode a while, I soon discovered just how easy it was to get around and just how much fun it was."

We adults like to play and play a lot — like tennis, golf, with a cart of course, softball, and racquetball. A few even like to jog and swim. All because it is fun to play those sports.

Truthfully, it takes a little time to get into shape to compete in any of those sports. Some take longer than others. But once that "in shape" conditioning is reached, the games become easier and more fun.

Runner Scott Fife got into shape in the Marines and hasn't quit running to keep in shape. "No, I don't breathe hard anymore while I run. Oh, when I go up a hill, I do, but not on the level."

In bike riding, John Houser, Dave Nelson and Gary Graham say they are in good shape and did not get overly tired on their little trek to the north.

"That cotton-pickin' Gary started out at the bottom of Galena and took off. A little while later, we caught up with him. He took off again and we caught up with him a second time. After that, he took off and we didn't see him again until he was way up the road waving to us," was one of the explanations given by Nelson of the trip up the 8700 foot summit.

It seems that Graham decided to do a little racing on his own with the mountain and he won. He managed to peddle his bike to the top of the summit in eighth gear. To get a little perspective of how tough that is, grab a bike and try to ride it out of the canyon at Shoshone Falls or Twin Falls using gears used on flat ground.

The whole point is that the three who tried and succeeded in the ride were in shape. The began at least a year ago and gradually got themselves into the shape needed to make the ride.

Nelson said he was surprised to see so many other cyclists riding around Sun Valley and on north. "We were at the lookout soaking up the feeling that we'd made it an up the hill comes another cyclist. Just Basking for all that's good for you if you could ride up the summit once every week or so," he added with a gleam in his eye.

The gleam apparently is not shared by others in the club since only three club decided to take the ride.

"We'd like to have people come and join us and have fun," Nelson said Monday afternoon. "Sometimes, I think we scare people away with our big talk." That big talk included mention of an overnighter, qualifying trips of 25, 50, 75 and 100 mile rides, along with the trip planned to Stanley Basin.

Nelson wanted to start the faster ones first in two. Then every five or ten minutes, start another two. That way, nobody was lunched up and cars wouldn't have trouble passing them," Nelson added.

The beginning of the ride was the toughest part, both days. Any challenge forms a mental barrier and for the three, it was the same. One of the group had almost decided he was going to back out after reaching Sun Valley but the other two wouldn't have any of it.

I rode about 18 miles with the trio. At least, I tried to keep up with them without much success. Surprise, it took about an hour and there are no side effects from the ride. Although I'm not in the shape they are, I'm getting there by riding only six miles a day.

The one fact that is very evident is that it takes a bit to get into condition to ride with those who are already in shape. Another very interesting fact is to discover just how much the beauty of the mountains one can absorb while riding at 10-miles-an-hour.

An offshoot of the biking thing is that it is so cheap it's enjoyable. I get a kick out of pumping a little extra hard in passing a gas station. I can get quite a bit further on 63 cents worth of gas than on 63 cents worth of gas.

My insurance company wouldn't be too happy but it doesn't cost a fortune for liability and collision coverage. As a matter of fact, it doesn't cost a thing.

I breathe better, feel better and when I get home at night, I'm ready to go to sleep.

If it sounds like a sales pitch for biking, it is. Saving money, yourself, and having fun in the same time makes it all worth the effort.

Nielson given nod as Oiler backup

HOUSTON (UPI) — Houston Oilers coach Bud Phillips Monday said Clifford Nielson's steady performance against the Dallas Cowboys earned him the backup quarterback position.

"I say that the kid emerged as the No. 2 quarterback without any doubt in anybody's mind," Phillips said. "His play was excellent."

Nielson, a rookie drafted in the third-round out of Brigham Young University in May, was forced to play when Dan Pastorini's hamstring injury was slow to heal last week. Nielson played every offensive down in a Houston win Saturday night in Dallas.

"He called an excellent ballgame. He had a lot of poise. Not once during the ballgame did he get rattled," Phillips said.

For the past five weeks, the 6-4, 205-pound Nielson has competed with second-year pro Tommy Dunliven for the backup quarterback position.

Oilers' center Carl Mauck admitted before Saturday night he lacked confidence in Nielson, who had failed to impress in two previous appearances.

"He played extremely well," Mauck said. "He called some audibles that worked out well. Dallas was into a stilted defense the time we had second-and-14. Nielson saw (Thomas) Henderson, the linebacker on the right side, come up to the line. Nielson read the defense and called the right play."

Phillips, at a hastily called news conference Monday, said a knee strain suffered by Billy Johnson was the only serious injury from the game. Johnson was on crutches Sunday.

"I don't think it's real bad," Phillips said. "But at the same time, we're gonna take our time and let our doctors decide how long he'll be out."

Wide receiver Eddie Frazier, running back Bob Carpenter and possibly running back Anthony Davis will return to practice this week after recuperating from injuries. Davis fractured a small bone in his lower leg the first week of training camp.

"We're going to try to get again today on Anthony's leg," Phillips said. "If he has no calcium from that bone they'll turn him loose."

Robbery suspect dies from wounds

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (UPI) — A 17-year-old youth charged in the armed robbery of Kansas City Royals first baseman Pete LaCock, his wife, and four others, Monday died from gunshot wounds he received in a fight with his intended victims.

Alex M. Clark of Kansas City was shot Saturday with his own gun after he was chased and caught by LaCock and the others who were robbed. The gun went off during a fight, striking Clark in the head.

Capt. Lloyd DeGraffenreid said the death was listed as a homicide but said no charges would be filed against any of the robbery victims, pending the outcome of a grand jury investigation.

four friends, Mr. and Mrs. Gary Gullickson and Mr. and Mrs. Ronald Baldwin, all of Wichita, Kan.

Gullickson was wounded in the shoulder by a shot fired by one of the suspects during the robbery.

The three men fled on foot, pursued by LaCock and the two other men. LaCock and the others overcame Clark after a short chase, and he was shot in the head with his own gun when it discharged during a scuffle.

Detective William Switzer said police were trying to determine who was holding the gun when it discharged.

LaCock, 26, the son of entertainer Peter Marshall, said his attorneys had told him not to comment on the incident.

Police said jewelry, cash and personal items taken from the group, valued at $665, had been recovered. Some of the items were strewn on the street and others were recovered from the suspect, police said.

The decisive moment came on the street when the suspect, identified as the Jackson County Grand Jury Friday, authorities said.

Out-of-state drivers win Pocatello races

POCATELLO — Out of state drivers captured the top spots in the last outing of the Intermountain Raceway here this past weekend.

Idaho drivers managed to get into the quarter finals and semi-finals in several events in front of the record 2,000 local fans but were pushed to the sidelines as regional racers won the events.

The favorite of the day was college teacher Twig Zeigler of Pendleton, Oregon in his #40,000 Mustang funny car. Even though he was upstaged by Clint Miller of Grand Junction, Colorado in the quarter-finals, Zeigler pleased the crowd with a top run of 208 miles per hour and an elapsed time of 7.12 seconds.

Zeigler's race partner Dave Austin of Twin Falls earned the semi-finals of the Modified eliminators with a 12.60 run in his '57 Chevy.

Dennis Wallin of Jerome made it to the quarter finals in his W/guns Center with a 12.17 but could go no further with the heavy out of state competition.

The weekend races marked the end of the formal racing season for the Intermountain Raceway and races will resume again in May.

Japanese cyclist retains sprint title

MUNICH, West Germany (UPI) — Japan's Koichi Nakano is still the world's fastest professional sprint cyclist. The 22-year-old smiling star of the Orient retained his title on the last day of the track events at the world championships Monday.

He downed West Germany's Dieter Berkmann 21 in the final. Another Japanese, Yoshinobu Sugano, took the bronze medal 21 from Italy's veteran Giordano Turrini, competing in his 15th world championship.

Nakano was clearly the master in the final. He did not seem to be trying in the second race, when he lost casually to Berkmann's 11.58. He then finished so far ahead in the third that Berkman eased down before the line.

Nakano, who last year earned $300,000 from professional cycling in Japan, outpaced Berkmann from the inside lane and switched to the more favorable outside to win comfortably in 11.17.

Noel de Jonckheere won Belgium's first gold medal this year when he took the 50 kilometer amateur points race in 1:30.35 seconds — only the second time that this event has been held in the world championships. He edged the American, Peter Dinklage.

Second with 38 points was his teammate Walter Baumgartner and third was Jean Jacques Riblere of France with 29 points. Fourth with 26 points was Denmark's Hans Orsted.

The decisive moment came on the grid, lap when Baumgartner and Orsted broke away and after two laps were chased by de Jonckheere and Riblere.

 VALVEE! Don't miss seeing any of them. Read today's Classified Ads.

One of the world's most distinguished cars now has a distinguished new dealer.

Peugeot has long been known for building superior automobiles. In fact, they built their first car in 1889. And today, you'll find Peugeots all over the world. In over 165 countries. And now you'll find more of them in your area, too.

Because Peugeot Motors of America, Inc. has just appointed us your Peugeot dealer in this area for the luxuriously comfortable Peugeot 604 SL and the impressive line of 504 Gas and Diesel Sedans and Wagons.

Besides finding the full line of Peugeots here, you'll also find factory-trained mechanics. Plus a completely stocked parts department (and if it should happen that the part you need isn't available, we have a 24-hour hot line with Peugeot to get it - fast).

So stop in and get delivery of our fine Peugeot. You'll find that no one builds cars the way Peugeot builds cars. And that no one will do a better job selling and servicing them than we will.
