

Woman killed in bar

By BONNIE BAIRD JONES
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — A 23-year old Twin Falls woman was stabbed to death at about 11 p.m. Wednesday in the bar she had operated on Main Avenue North.

County Coroner Cloyce Edwards said the woman, Shannon M. Woodland, 23, of Twin Falls, died of "exsanguination," the loss of blood by external bleeding. He said any one of three stab wounds she sustained could have caused death. He said she suffered two stab wounds in the chest, one of which entered the heart, and another wound in the throat which severed a main artery.

Police said she and a partner, Ginger Worley, had recently leased Woodland's Bar at the corner of Main Avenue North and Sixth Street North. They were operating it under a new name of S&G's. Police said she was apparently alone in the bar when the unknown assailant entered. Her body was found by a customer who called police about 11:31 p.m. from the bar.

Police reports indicated there had been a number of customers in and out of the bar until about 10:30 p.m. At about 11:30 p.m. a customer, whom police said they prefer not to identify at this time, went into the bar and found it empty. He told police both doors of the business were open and he waited a while for the bartender to come in and when she didn't appear, he went to the woman's restroom and rapped on the door. Getting no response, he pushed open the door of the men's restroom and found Ms. Woodland's body on the floor with blood around her. He said he went to the pay telephone in the bar and called police and an ambulance.

Police said when they arrived the woman appeared to be dead. Coroner Edwards was called to the scene and pronounced her dead. He said her body was near the toilet with one arm resting over the bowl.

Police said the motive was apparently robbery as an unknown amount of money was missing from the cash register. The woman had not been assaulted but had been stabbed and her throat slashed. The coroner said she had not been dead long when he saw her and said she probably died within a very few minutes after the wounds were inflicted.

Officers were continuing to question patrons of the bar and associates of the victim Thursday night in an attempt to determine any information which would point to a suspect in the case. At a late hour Thursday night officers said no suspects had been taken in to custody.

The 'spider' spins fun at the fair

"The Spider" — It "goes up and down and round and round, like most of them," as a worker on the midway at the Twin Falls County Fair and Rodeo described the whirling machine. Inland Empire Shows, headquartered in Buhl, operates the midway. Saturday is the last day to take advantage of the fair and rodeo.

Today a few more judging events take place and the rodeo performs at 8 p.m. Stories on page B3.

Snoring can be serious enough to lose sleep over

Newhouse News Service

WASHINGTON — Dr. James C. Paupst estimates there are 25 million persons in the United States and Canada who snore. And, he reports, unfortunately there are more than 25 million who listen.

Clearly, the sleep specialist says, snoring is a serious business. Most snorers snore because they lie on their backs. Weight makes their jaws hang open and the snoring commences.

Booting before sleeping is another cause, Dr. Paupst reports. Or you may suffer from "sleep apnea," which means cessation of breathing. When aggregated it could cause heart failure.

Writing in "The Sleep Book" (Coller Books, $3.95 paperback), Dr. Paupst says there are about 180 devices on the market that purport to stop snoring.

One of these is an electronic gadget worn around the sleeper's neck. It gives a tiny shock with each snore, and is guaranteed to end snoring inside a week, the manufacturer claims.

The "cure" is said to last three weeks, when the gadget can be removed. The performance is repeated when snoring resumes. The device sells for about $40.

Dr. Paupst, who is in private practice in Toronto and is author of "The Pill," began researching sleep in 1972. He started with 25 men and 9 women whose occupation and lifestyle subjected them to unusual stress.

He began studying their sleep patterns: Were they light sleepers? Heavy sleepers? Early morning awakens? Did they have difficulty falling to sleep? Bizarre, sexual, symbolic or mystical dreams?

Getting back to snoring, Dr. Paupst says some cases are caused by a structural nose or mouth defect, which can usually be rectified by surgery. For sleeping partners, he recommends what most non-snorers resort to — a good pinch or a thump in the back. But heavy snorers may just grunt, turn over, and resume snoring.

The author reports that in an experiment in Chicago, 50 snorers were recruited and treated through hypnosis. Every one, he says, was cured.

Finally, if your sleeping partner snores, a simple remedy the author swears by is to peel and eat a sweet onion before bedtime every night. The problem — with your partner — will soon disappear.

House upholds president's veto on defense bill

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The House gave President Carter a decisive victory Thursday, upholding his veto of a defense authorization bill featuring a nuclear supercarrier opposed by the White House as a "$2 billion turkey."

Carter's opponents fell far short of the two-thirds vote needed to override the veto of the $36.9 billion defense bill, falling even to get a simple majority. Those voting against the override came out on top in the 206-191 vote.

Backers of the carrier had threatened to tie up the defense budget for months in an attempt to reconsider the bill, but support for a drawn-out battle was uncertain. In the Senate, a powerful critic of the veto took note of how the wind was blowing and quickly introduced a new authorization bill with only one change — the deletion of the carrier. Sen. John Stennis, D-Miss., chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, called for quick approval of the new bill to prevent the nation's defense programs from being hurt. "We must not delay," he said.

Carter's Aug. 17 veto of the defense bill — his fifth since taking office — took many lawmakers by surprise and led to charges he acted merely to assert his authority. It was the first time a major defense authorization bill was vetoed this century.

The House vote came after a brief debate in which Carter supporters echoed the president by attacking the proposed supercarrier as wasteful. "It's a $2 billion turkey," Rep. Ronald Dellums, D-Calif., said. "It's not going to save the world from communism and it's money down the drain."

Carter's image got a boost from the vote, but congressional sources said the president may be hurt in the future by his steamroller lobbying campaign to sustain the veto.

The sources said the administration brushed the feelings of key House members by implying carrier advocates irresponsibly slashed $2 billion in high-priority programs from the budget to pay for the supercarrier.

Rep. Melvin Price, D-Ill., chairman of the House Armed Services Committee, had no immediate statement on the defeat of the override attempt.

'The most trying ordeal of my life'

Bressette cleared of threat charges

By LONNIE ROSENWALD
Times-News writer

BOISE — Having convinced authorities a sheriff's deputy had misunderstood him, a Twin Falls man was cleared of charges he threatened the life of President Carter.

U.S. Attorney Karl Shurtliff announced Thursday charges were dropped against Donald Bressette, who was charged Aug. 22, with threatening the president in a letter and phone call the week before Carter visited Idaho on vacation.

Although Shurtliff did not disclose the reason he asked Boise Magistrate Judge Jim Christensen to drop the charges, Bressette told the Times-News in a telephone interview Thursday the prosecution determined he hadn't made a threat against the president.

Bressette had been charged arrested at his Twin Falls home Aug. 19 and charged with threatening to kill or inflict bodily harm upon the President, a federal violation which could have brought the 48-year-old freelance writer five years in prison and/or a $1,000 fine. Following his arrest by U.S. Secret Service agents, Bressette had been held for five days in four different jails and had undergone two weeks of physical and psychiatric testing in a Boise hospital. Shurtliff released a statement Thursday which said, "The U.S. Attorney determined it would not serve the interests of justice or the interests of Mr. Bressette and the community to go forward with this prosecution."

After learning from his physician at St. Alphonsus Hospital in Boise that he will be released from the hospital this weekend, Bressette expressed relief that "the most trying ordeal of my life" will finally be over.

Bressette said his defense, which had not been revealed earlier, was that the alleged threatening phone call, made Aug. 16 to the Twin Falls Sheriff's office, was actually a warning that was misinterpreted by Deputy Sheriff Ike Maxson, who answered Bressette's call.

"I didn't even make the damn threat," Bressette said.

He said when he phoned the Twin Falls County Sheriff's department five days before the president was due to arrive in Idaho for a raft trip on the Middle Fork of the Salmon River, he told Maxson that radicals might try to harm the president while he was on the river.

Bressette said he told deputy Maxson, "There are radical groups in the country that might harm the president."

Bressette said Maxson misquoted him in a transcript of that phone conversation. According to Bressette, the transcript, which was shown to Bressette the night he was arrested, read, "I am part of a radical group that might harm the president."

Bressette said although he disagrees with some of President Carter's policies, he voted for the president in 1976.

He claimed he tried to explain his version of the story to Secret Service agents during four hours in which they interrogated him after his arrest. "They wouldn't listen," Bressette said. He added, the Secret Service "blew it all out of proportion."

"I was trying to protect the president," Bressette explained, in accounting for the phone call and an accompanying letter he sent to the sheriff's office before President Carter's arrival in Idaho. "I thought he might be in danger in such a remote area."

Bressette said he had no evidence of actual plans by radicals to harm President Carter, but he began to feel the president was in danger when he overheard a conversation at a restaurant in Twin Falls just before the president was due to arrive in Idaho for a five-day vacation.

"I heard some people say, laughing,

"Boy, they better be careful. Someone could take a shot up there in the wilderness and nobody would know who did it," Bressette said.

He said even though the speaker might have been kidding, the comments prompted him to try to warn the authorities to guard the president carefully during his trip.

"I told them I'd make damn sure I'd comb those riverbanks," Bressette said, referring to the call to deputy Maxson.

Bressette said Maxson didn't question him over the phone but repeatedly told Bressette to "talk slower."

Bressette said he was arrested after the Secret Service traced a map and pamphlet he sent them before he made the warning call. The pamphlet was traced to his wife Jackie through the organization which printed the pamphlet.

Bressette, an outdoor writer who has spent much time in the Idaho wilderness, said he also mailed the sheriff's office a U.S. Forest Service map of the Middle Fork Region.

Twin Falls Deputy Sheriff James Mann said "His (Maxson's) statement to the Secret Service will have to stand."

House passes surveillance bill

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The House Thursday passed legislation to set up safeguards aimed at ending abuses in the surveillance of suspected foreign and American spies within the United States, retaining some of President Carter's key suggestions. By a vote of 246-128, the House passed the bill and sent it on to a conference committee where its differences with a version the Senate passed 95-1 in April must be reconciled before it can become law.

Earlier Thursday, the House reversed itself and voted to require court orders for all surveillance on suspected foreign spies and espionage agents in this country, regardless whether they are foreigners or U.S. citizens.

The 200-176 vote against a previously passed amendment restored a key provision of Carter's proposed counter-spy guidelines that supporters of the FBI and CIA had sought to kill.

Menachem Begin, Jimmy Carter and Anwar Sadat at Marine Parade Thursday night

High-powered discussions at Camp David summit

CAMP DAVID, Md. (UPI) — The leaders at the Middle East summit appeared to move into high-powered discussions of major issues Thursday, and President Carter held a special late-night session with Egyptian Prime Minister Anwar Sadat. Sadat and Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin met twice earlier in the day under Carter's auspices, then the three leaders attended a special performance by the crack U.S. Marine bugle and drum corps, plus a performance of the silent drill team. As the highly polished, stiff wheeled in the light of a new moon, Carter put his arm on Sadat's shoulder and whispered in his ear. Afterwards, said White House Press Secretary Jody Powell, Carter and Sadat talked together in their second bilateral session since the summit began Wednesday.

Others present were Vice President Walter Mondale, Secretary of State Cyrus Vance, national security advisor Zbigniew Brzezinski, and-

Byrd fails at bid

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Senate Democratic leader Robert Byrd failed Thursday in a bid to reach a gentlemen's agreement barring a "low-blow" attack against the bitterly disputed natural gas bill.

But Byrd warned foes of the legislation not to take his abortive plea for a carefully orchestrated natural gas showdown in the Senate as a sign of weakness.

Border bombing

SALISBURY, Rhodesia (UPI) — More than a score of mortar shells rained on the border garrison town of Umfali Thursday night, the military command announced.

A military spokesman in Umfali, located about one mile west of the Mozambique border, said between 20 and 30 mortar shells fell on the town, which serves as the army's 3rd brigade headquarters.

Working on tax cut

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Senate Finance Committee began working on a tax cut bill Thursday to offset Social Security tax increases and at least a part of the last two years of inflation.

Individual income tax cuts were the first order of business as the committee scheduled seven days of drafting sessions, ending Sept. 19. More controversial tax changes, such as cuts in capital gains taxes, are scheduled for the middle of next week.

Smoking regulations

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Civil Aeronautics Board Thursday again postponed action on a move to ban cigar and pipe smoking on commercial airliners, but decided to have a quick second look at a proposal to strengthen existing regulations.

The Tobacco Institute promptly hailed the inaction, declaring it, along with some congressional testimony Thursday, amounted to a "real repudiation" of HEW Secretary Joseph Califano's war on smoking.

Today's weather

Drier air (at last) is due to arrive

Twin Falls, North Side, Burley-Rupert area:

Mostly sunny today and again Saturday. Cooler, windy at times today. Highs both days 65 to 75, lows tonight mostly in the 40s.

Halley, Camas Prairie, lower Wood River Valley:

Patches of morning fog, otherwise partly cloudy today and Saturday with a few mountain showers. Highs today in the upper 60s and Saturday in the lower 70s. Lows tonight near 40.

Synopsis:

Clouds and widespread areas of rain extended from the Cascade mountains in Washington and Oregon over most of Idaho. # Mormon denial

RENO (UPI) — Mormon Church officials Thursday denied Republican lieutenant governor candidate William Boyd's charges the Church is involved in political campaigns.

Boyd told Reno reporters Wednesday he has asked for an investigation of the Church for possible violations of campaign laws involving distribution of campaign literature in places of worship in Las Vegas. He also said the Church is trying to infiltrate political campaigns as part of a plan to gain control of political parties in 13 western states.

Boyd questioned whether the Church is actively supporting Republican opponent DeVoe Heaton and Democratic candidate Myron Leavitt.

Almanac

By United Press International

Today is Friday, Sept. 8, the 251st day of 1978 with 114 to follow.

The moon is approaching its first quarter.

The morning stars are Mercury, Jupiter and Saturn.

The evening stars are Mars and Venus.

Those born on this date are under the sign of Virgo.

The late Ohio Republican Sen. Robert A. Taft was born Sept. 8, 1892.

This is American comedian Sid Caesar's 50th birthday.

On this day in history:

In 1565, the first permanent settlement of what is now the continental United States was founded at the present location of St. Augustine, Fla.

In 1900, more than 6,000 persons were killed when a hurricane and tidal wave struck Galveston, Texas.

In 1924, the U.S. liner "Morro Castle" burned off Asbury Park, N.J., taking 137 lives.

In 1974, President Gerald Ford granted former President Richard Nixon full pardon for all offenses he may have committed during his years in office.

A thought for the day: German philosopher Arthur Schopenhauer said, "Hatred comes from the heart, contempt from the head, and neither is quite within our control."

Tomorrow

Among the stories in tomorrow's Times-News:

• Two young men set out last Thanksgiving to climb Mt. Borah, Idaho's highest peak, but never returned. When their bodies were found recently, the story of what happened to them became clear.

• According to one observer,

"one of the great environmental ripoffs of the 20th century" has been taking place this summer in a tiny U.S. Senate chamber. The "ripoff" is said to be threatening Alaska's great wilderness.

Pathologist claims it's 'smoke-a-phobia'

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Moving to counter allegations that cigarette smoke is hazardous to non-smokers' health, a House committee Thursday put on a parade of medical and other experts who testified there is no such evidence.

One pathologist denounced opponents of public smoking as purveyors of "smoke-a-phobia and cancer-a-phobia."

The hearing was held by the House subcommittee on tobacco, headed by Rep. Walter Jones, a Democrat from North Carolina, the leading tobacco producing state in the nation.

Nine other members of Congress were on hand — an unusually high turnout for a hearing — all from tobacco states and some not even on the parent Agriculture Committee.

Jones said the panel is concerned about local laws and some company policies outlawing smoking in public, and about segregation of smokers on airliners.

Eight holders of doctorates testified, along with one polisher, all saying cigarette smoke does not harm non-smokers and public puffing therefore should not be banned.

Margaret Trudeau evokes chauvinism

By MIKE ROYKO
Chicago Sun-Times

It isn't easy being a enlightened male. I have to constantly guard against falling back to my male chauvinist attitudes.

For example, I just finished reading People Magazine, which has another article on the life and travels of Margaret Trudeau, wife of the prime minister of Canada.

It was a difficult struggle not to fling the magazine down and shout, "Shameless hussy," as I would have before I became enlightened. Instead, I succeeded in reminding myself that she is an adult female who is living her life as she sees fit.

It had been awhile since I read anything about Mrs. Trudeau.

The last thing I remembered reading was when she had dashed off to New York to become a photo-journalist, gab about with members of the Rolling Stones and find her real self, while old Pierre stayed home and took care of their three little kids and Canada.

Now I find she is no longer gadding about with the Rolling Stones in New York. She says she still loves her husband, and might return to him some day. But until then, she is in southern France gadding about with a handsome actor named Jean-Luc Fritz, who is tall, lean, blond, and wears "his shirt" open to the belly button. Jean-Luc looks like the kind of guy I would like to invite to a bar on Milwaukee Avenue so we could all break beer bottles on his head.

Mrs. Trudeau is no longer a photojournalist either. Apparently she discovered that there is more to photo-journalism than buying a $50 camera, hanging it around her neck and hoofing about Manhattan with a look of intense artistic awareness on her face. Eventually you have to push the right button and reload the camera and that is where most such instant photojournalism careers have floundered.

She says she is now an author, which probably means that somebody gave her a good deal on a trade-in of her camera for a typewriter. She is also a film actress, appearing in a movie about a young wife who dumps her aging husband for younger men. I wonder where they got that idea?

And apparently she has found herself. She says it was hard at first because she had to learn to do her laundry, cook, shop and things like that. But she has struggled through it all and will put it all in a book about herself.

Besides finding herself, she also found Jean-Luc Fritz, with whom she wasn't sneaking around, instead of posing for magazine pictures. In pre-enlightened times, there might have been married women with three children who took up with sleepy-eyed men who wore shirts open to their belly buttons. But they generally tried to keep these activities quiet, rather than call a press conference to discuss the subject.

In those times, I would have had the predictable male chauvinist response, probably saying something like: "I know what Pierre Trudeau should do. He ought to borrow a pistol from one of his Mounted Police, hop a jet to France, burst in on the two of them, put a bullet into that goggle's tanned but miserable hide, and give her a thorough beating. No jury in France would convict him. They would probably award him the Croix de Guerre."

But now that I'm enlightened, I don't think that way anymore. Instead, my reaction is to shrug and say: "Well, Mrs. Trudeau is a grown woman. It is her life to lead as she thinks fit. Her husband should accept that and live his own life. And if Pierre should happen to run into his wife and Jean-Luc at a party or something, he should try to act adult and sophisticated and not do anything more than to figure that pretty-boy's face a little."

The magazine also showed a picture of Mrs. Trudeau posing seductively in a skimpy bathing suit while jutting out her pert behind, as film actresses often do.

Evidently, she is proud of her behind. In an earlier interview, she was quoted as saying that her best feature is her "ass." In the current story, she says that her best feature is her "bum." Between interviews, she probably consults a Thesaurus.

Once again, I showed restraint. My old reaction would have been to shout: "Has this woman no shame, no sense of decency? What is a married mother of three doing talking to a magazine about how nice her bottom is? Is this what she wants her children and the voters of Canada to read? Pierre ought to go to France and give her a few sound kicks in her best feature."

But once again I remained enlightened. I told myself: "Well, she is a grown woman with her own behind living her own life. And if she wants to sit down with a reporter from People Magazine and discuss her behind, that is her right. After all, she is now a film actress as well as an amorous, liberated woman, and so, the visual qualities of her behind have become important."

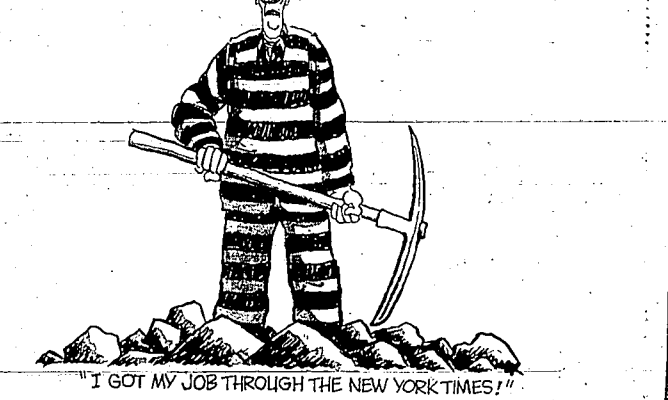

I hope others feel the way I do. After all, who are we to judge Mrs. Trudeau, her conduct, or even her behind?

One thing I am certain of, though. Her best feature sure ain't her brain.

Paranoia squashed Don Bressette

Don Bressette, the man who made news in Idaho last month for allegedly threatening the life of President Carter, seems to have fallen victim to a nasty case of common paranoia.

Bressette was charged with threatening the life of the president just before Carter's trip to Idaho. He was arrested after a Twin Falls County sheriff's deputy apparently misunderstood a call Bressette made to the authorities.

Bressette, rather than threatening the president, now appears to have simply been warning the sheriff's office of a conversation he had overheard at a Twin Falls restaurant.

He heard some men laughing about how easily someone, anyone, could take a potshot at Carter on the Middle Fork of the Salmon river and get away with it.

So, Bressette called the sheriff's office to alert them to the conversation.

Only the officer misunderstood and thought the call was a threat.

The Secret Service was called in, and they

Farber case a loser

WASHINGTON — If my brothers of the New York Times are as smart as they universally are thought to be, they will wiggle out of the Farber case as gracefully as they can. What began as a causa celebre has become a bummer instead. The whole affair ought to be shelved, as H.L. Mencken used to say, planissimo.

The Farber case, if you came in late, involves reporter Myron Farber of the Times. As a consequence of his investigative digging, Dr. Mario Jascavitch is now on trial for murdering several patients at the small Riverside Hospital in New Jersey 12 years ago. The doctor's defense counsel demanded Farber's notes. Farber refused to surrender them to the trial judge for his inspection in chambers. The judge then jailed the reporter and smacked the Times with a horrendous fine.

On two points, in my own view, the trial judge erred. His subpoena was entirely too sweeping; it goes far beyond the particularized limits implicitly imposed by the Fourth Amendment. And the fines of a flat $100,000 plus $5,000 a day are purely vindictive; they reflect the anger of a tinpot tyrant on the bench and cannot be sustained. If the power to punish for contempt embraces the power to impose unrestrained punishments of this magnitude, something had better be done about the power to punish for contempt.

But on balance, the trial judge was right. Farber was standing on the First Amendment, pleading his right of free press to protect his sources. Every one of us in the news business is with him in principle. If we can't effectively protect our sources, pretty soon we will be out of the news business. We will be serving up little more than a puree of handouts instead.

If we of the press have rights under the First Amendment (and the Supreme Court never has bought the proposition we are trying to sell, it is beyond question that Dr. Jascavitch has rights under the Sixth Amendment. The Sixth lays down the rule, with perfect clarity, that in all criminal prosecutions, the accused "shall" enjoy the right to have compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his favor.

In the direct conflict between our tenuous right to protect sources and a defendant's absolute right to evidence that might help him, the defendant on trial for his life surely has the better case. Farber and the Times would have been better advised, after registering a formal protest, to have negotiated a surrender with the judge.

When the contretemps arose late in July, Farber and the Times insisted the reporter was protected by New Jersey's "shield law." This is a state law purporting to protect newsmen from court orders that might result in disclosing confidential sources. The trial judge brushed aside the shield law as it never had been written.

Some of us in the news business agree with him in that position of disdain.

Shield laws may provide some tinsel armor against the subpoenas of legislative bodies, but they are going to be ruled worthless in criminal prosecutions.

One of the unhappy consequences of the Farber affair is that it has prompted some well-intentioned members of Congress to renew proposals for a national shield law. Senators Pat Moynihan of New York and Alan Cranston of California, and Congressman Philip Crane of Illinois, are rushing to our support. I wish they would stay off our side. We ought to fight out these conflicts one at a time, case by case, relying upon the Constitution alone. Once we accept in principle the power of Congress to give us freedom, we accept in principle the power of Congress to take it away. Thanks, gentlemen, but no thanks.

On Aug. 4, when Farber went to jail, he appeared to be acting as a martyr in a noble cause. Subsequently, it transpired that Farber had entered into a lucrative contract with Doubleday to do a book about the Jascavitch case. The effect was to leave a ring around the collar on his white robes of virtue. It won't wash.

For all these reasons, Farber ought to throw in his hand. Many of us would like to take the issue of protecting our sources back to the Supreme Court, in the hope of moderating the Brandzburgh decision of 1972. When we do, we will need a better set of facts than the Farber affair provides.

Scaring some sense into teen crooks

When an Idaho teen-ager commits a burglary or some other crime, our state's criminal justice system often tries to come down as softly as it can.

A kid often gets off with a warning, is released to his or her parents, and rarely goes to jail.

Unfortunately, this willingness to give teen-age crooks a second chance often leads to a second or third criminal act.

A just-released Law Enforcement Planning Commission Study in Idaho found over 30 percent of the adult burglary suspects arrested in the state turn out to have been arrested as juvenile criminals.

In other words, many teen-age burglars fail to get the message that their actions as young crooks are serious violations of the social order.

The Region 5 Idaho Health and Welfare Department has an idea to get a message through to the sometime thick skulls of teenagers who commit crimes.

It's a Hollywood kind of social reform. It wouldn't require a high-paid psychologist to administer.

Basically, it's an attempt to scare some sense into a teen-age crook.

Quick, simple, and it just might work.

The regional health and welfare office has proposed taking Magic Valley teen-age criminals on a tour of the state penitentiary once they have been arrested.

The message behind the tour would be simple: clean up your act or this could be your future home.

There's a kind of elemental beauty to this idea.

Give a young tough a firsthand view of the dreary, drab life inside the state prison and the kid might figure out on his own that a year in the pen would mean a year without girls, fast food stands, cars or separate bedrooms.

Such a tour could do more than a dozen stern lectures from parents or juvenile officers.

Camp David summit represents the best American interests

WASHINGTON — There is an air of calculated caution if not pessimism about the meeting of Carter, Begin and Sadat at Camp David, but if it is such a meeting had been arranged a year ago, after decades of war between Cairo and Jerusalem; it would probably have been hailed as an occasion for wonder and rejoicing.

Prime Minister Begin, who has a sense of history if not a sense of humor, obviously hasn't come to Camp David to enter the dreams of King David, who originally gave Israel its national unity and character and developed a nation out of a collection of tribes and families. But the outlook now is not quite as bleak as it seemed at the turn of the seasons a year ago.

At that time, the Carter administration was still thinking seriously of arranging a Middle East conference at Geneva, with the Soviet Union as co-chairman. This was such a predictable diplomatic disaster that startled Begin into inviting Sadat to Jerusalem and persuading Sadat to accept the invitation.

Just a few short weeks ago, when the early hopes of a Middle East "general settlement" had vanished, Sadat came up with an even worse idea than a Geneva conference. According to officials here, he proposed the following:

— Since he and Begin had not been able to agree on the future of the West Bank, the Gaza Strip, the Palestinians, or the meaning of UN resolutions 242 and 338, something dramatic should be done to break the stalemate.

— Accordingly, Sadat proposed that the leaders of the principal nations of the world — the United States, the Soviet Union, the United States of China, Britain, France and West Germany — should meet with the representatives of Israel and Egypt, preferably on a ship somewhere at sea to consider the unresolved problems of the Middle East.

Officials in Washington agreed that any attempt to arrange such a conference would fail, and that even if it could be arranged, it would probably be the most spectacular sea-going wreck since the Lusitania.

So while the prospects for success in the Maryland mountains are not precisely alluring, they are probably better than they might have been at Geneva or at sea. There are one or two other hopeful crumbs.

The illusions of the dramatic Sadat mission to Jerusalem have vanished. A great opportunity may have been missed at that point, but these three men at Camp David are now down to some hard realities. None of them is going to get what he wanted. The time for dramatic "break-throughs" and "general settlements" is over for the present. The problem now is not to put forward what they all know are non-negotiable "demands" but to work around the problem and keep the talks going.

In this process of compromise, Carter, Sadat and Begin have some things in common. They are all in trouble politically with their own people, or at least with that thinking "remnant" which the Hebrew prophets as well as Plato thought might save nations from the excesses of the politicians and the multitude.

There is no expectation now in the United States, Egypt or Israel that their leaders are going to "settle" in a week at Camp David. Conflicts of philosophy and territory that have been going on since Biblical times.

All that is asked of them now is that they narrow the differences between the two sides and avoid another Middle Eastern war.

For some reason that is not quite clear but has to be taken seriously, President Carter has got it in his head there must be agreement to compromise between Begin and Sadat or there will be a serious crisis in October followed perhaps by war. This conviction also contributed to his call for the Camp David meeting, and even if there is the remotest chance of this, Carter's anxieties have to be respected.

For another war, with the new weapons now available to both sides in the Middle East, could be much more serious than all the wars since the creation of the modern state of Israel. The military balance of power clearly lies with Israel, not only in the air but in her capacity to deploy nuclear weapons if the life of the state were threatened. The consequences of anything like this on the oil supplies of the Middle East as well as in the disruption of the industrial world are fairly obvious.

With this nightmare in mind, no matter how remote, President Carter was undoubtedly right to bring Begin and Sadat to the Summit, and to insist, so far as possible that the conversations be frank and private. The outlook is gloomy only if you expect the conference to end at Camp David with a clear winner like David's slingshot victory over Goliath. But this is precisely what Carter is trying to avoid. He has lowered his expectations, but wants above all else to keep the two sides talking instead of fighting.

One expert disagrees with one-bullet story

Dr. Michael Baden displays suit coat John Kennedy wore when he was shot

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A panel of medical experts Thursday reported agreement with the Warren Commission conclusion that the same bullet wounded President John F. Kennedy and Texas Gov. John Connally on Nov. 22, 1963, in Dallas. But one panel member forcefully dissented.

Dr. Cyril H. Wecht, director of the Pittsburgh Pathology and Toxicology Laboratory, disagreed with his seven forensic expert colleagues, and told the House Assassinations Committee the same bullet could not have passed through Kennedy's neck and into Connally's body.

Wecht kept alive the 15-year-old controversy over the number of shots fired in Kennedy's assassination by declaring there was a possibility of still another, unrecorded hit of Kennedy, "but we needed the brain" to check that out.

The committee's chief investigator revealed earlier in the day that Kennedy's brain, removed during autopsy and preserved in a metal container, had disappeared years ago.

Kennedy's shirt and jacket, bloodstained and slashed by doctors at the Parkland Memorial Hospital in Dallas vainly trying to save his life, were displayed publicly Thursday for the first time at the hearing, where conflicting autopsy reports also were revealed.

Dr. Michael Baden, chief medical examiner of New York City, reported seven of his panel of eight experts agreed the same bullet that pierced the president's neck also caused multiple wounds to Connally, who was sitting directly in front of Kennedy in the presidential limousine.

"They also agreed another bullet struck Kennedy's head, literally exploding part of his brain through the front of his skull and killing him.

The conclusion closely followed that of the Warren Commission in 1964 — that two bullets, fired from the rear by a lone assassin, struck the president in the back and the head and one of those bullets traveled on to wound Connally.

However, Connally and his wife both testified Wednesday they believed there were three shots, the first and third hitting Kennedy and the second wounding Connally in the shoulder, hand and thigh.

Chess players tie again

BAGUIO, Philippines (UPI) — World title Anatoly Karpov failed in a bid to trap challenger Viktor Korchnoi Thursday and the two masters played to their 19th draw in the world chess championships.

The game was ruled an automatic draw in the final minutes when Korchnoi, playing under intense time pressure, repeated his moves while attempting to evade Karpov's bid to exchange rooks.

Korchnoi refused the trade, evading the swap twice by shifting his rook between the seventh and the eighth rank of his queen bishop file.

Czechoslovakian arbiter Miroslav Filip said the draw was called because the same position appeared three times during the game.

That kept the score in the $550,000 match at 4-1 in favor of the Soviet champion. The 27-year-old Karpov needs two more victories to retain the crown.

Suspect in theft surfaces

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — Arne Ristol, an accountant who got rich quick on a near $1 million bank error, surfaced to face grand theft charges Wednesday, cutting short a long-planned European vacation, his attorney said.

Ristol, 52, first attempted to plead not guilty to grand theft charges. But his arraignment was delayed until today to give his attorney Eugene Andres time to review the case.

Municipal Court Judge Gabriel Gutierrez refused to lower Ristol's $100,000 bail and he remained in custody.

Ristol is accused of stealing $927,288, transferred into his checking account through a bookkeeping error last May at a downtown branch of United California Bank.

Bank officials said they have located about $300,000 of the money.

In arguing for a bail reduction, Andres claimed Ristol had returned from a "long-planned vacation in Europe" to turn himself in.

Prosecutor Kellogg Chan, however, said Interpol officers already knew where Ristol was and were about to pick him up when he returned. Chan also claimed Ristol left the United States just one day before charges were filed against him and had tried to "wash the money," placed in his account.

Ristol, a native of Norway who studied in Sweden, worked as an accountant out of an office in his home in suburban West Covina.

Deaf driver strikes blind

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va. (UPI) — A deaf driver, unable to hear the warning of a passerby, struck a blind pedestrian while backing out of a parking lot, police said Thursday. Police said driver Charles Crawley, 29, had let two blind passengers out of a store for the blind Wednesday and was backing out of the lot when a passerby yelled at him to stop. But Crawley could not hear the warning. Robert W. Green, 61, was struck by Crawley's car and slightly injured. He was treated at University of Virginia Hospital.

Rock group drummer dies

LONDON (UPI) — Keith Moon, 31, drummer for the rock group "The Who," died Thursday, hospital officials reported. A spokesman for Middlesex Hospital in London said Moon was rushed to the hospital Thursday night and pronounced dead on arrival. The spokesman said no further information would be released pending the outcome of a coroner's report. Moon, known as "Moon the Loon" to rock fans, had appeared Wednesday night at a lavish party in London celebrating the birthday of late rock star Buddy Holly.

Climbers stricken

KATMANDU, Nepal (UPI) — Ten American women attempting to climb the 28,560-foot high Annapurna peak in central Nepal have all come down with bad colds, forcing them to rest at their first base camp, a friend of the women said today. "But their spirits are high," said Eva Altmeyer of Heidelberg, West Germany, who returned after accompanying the all-woman expedition to their base camp 16,500 feet up the mountain side. The expedition is led by Arlene Blum, a 33-year-old biochemist at the University of California, Berkeley.

Moonlighting photographer turns searchlight operator

DES MOINES, Iowa (UPI) — Nostalgic Mike Harden wants to revive the lost art of lighting up the skies of central Iowa.

So Harden, a photographer, purchased five giant searchlights last year to begin his moonlighting career as a crowd catcher.

"They were there in the past. You always saw the searchlight scanning the skies at premiers or at the opening of stores. There was a lot of market for the lights. People's imagination was sparked and lit up," Harden said.

"But people sort of lost track of them in recent years. They forgot about it and they didn't get as much of a market play."

"And it's not for the lack of skies in central Iowa, and not because the skies have become any less dark or there's a lack of places to put them."

Harden said it has become very difficult to get merchants interested in bringing back searchlights for promotional events, partly because of the high cost of electricity. He charges up to $60 an hour for the use of his lights.

But he said each time he brings out his lights he builds interest and enthusiasm.

"People didn't know about them and didn't understand them," he said. "I feel like I know everyone one of their parts like I know a relative. And when you get close to them, they really are something quite special."

Harden said he is working to improve the lights' mobility to make them more attractive to merchants, who want to attract big crowds.

"I need to make myself more versatile. Where we are now is that the lights have got 1940s-style mobility. And we can't move them at faster than 25 mph. And that tends to slow down your work," he said.

Castro's offer endangered?

HAVANA (UPI) — Cuban President Fidel Castro says violence by anti-Communist exiles could endanger his offer to free political prisoners and let them go to the United States.

The president warned that anti-Castro militants in the United States might take action against Cuban exiles involved in making the arrangements for the proposed prisoner release.

"We have to prevent the child from dying just as it is being born," he said. "We must prevent it from being harmed too much."

The Cuban leader, wearing his familiar green military fatigues and smoking his ever-present cigar, made his remarks Wednesday night at a relaxed three-hour news conference in the Palace of the Revolution.

Castro made his unexpected offer three weeks ago, but U.S. and Cuban officials kept the proposed release a secret until disclosures in Havana and Washington last Thursday.

Attorney General Griffin Bell said the United States plans to send a special team to Cuba to screen the first 48 prisoners and 30 family members. A Bell aide said as many as 1,000 prisoners might be freed under the program.

It was understood that Cuban exiles in the United States made the first overtures to Havana for the prisoner release and then asked the United States to admit them.

Castro told the news conference his decision to free the prisoners was a unilateral action without anticipation of a favorable reaction by the United States. "Naturally we do not expect any response," he said.

He scoffed at a question about whether Cuba might spout lies in the prisoner group, saying, "If we say prisoners, they are prisoners. neither spies nor terrorists."

Castro said about 3,000 out of 15,000 Cubans once jailed for "counter-revolutionary crimes" are still in prison and will be released as they complete their sentences.

But the Cuban leader said some 400 other prisoners-convicted of major offenses such as assassinations are "an entirely different matter."

Castro refused to identify the first 48 Cubans on his release list, saying the United States "might consider it pressure to force them to accept the prisoners."

But he said the United States has a moral obligation to let them all in because American officials encouraged anti-Castro activities right after the revolution that brought him to power in 1959.

Castro said he feels his government can now discuss problems of mutual interest with Cubans overseas because "there has been a decrease in hostility... a certain detente has taken place."

"But there is something else," he added. "The revolution has celebrated its 20th anniversary. It is irreversible. I think Cubans abroad have realized this."

He said his government is willing to talk with Cuban "communities" in the United States about such issues as relocating freed prisoners.

Moscow SALT session could be wrapped up today

MOSCOW (UPI) — Soviet and American negotiators held a talks session and a working lunch on a new Strategic Arms Limitation Agreement Thursday and U.S. diplomatic sources said they hoped to wrap up the discussions today.

Neither side commented on progress, but diplomatic sources said that chief U.S. negotiator Paul Warnke came to Moscow with two or three precise technical issues he hoped to settle to clear the decks for a meeting between Secretary of State Cyrus Vance and Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyko in New York later this month.

The morning meeting at a Foreign Ministry reception building was between Gromyko and his aides and Warnke, his four-man delegation of experts and U.S. Ambassador Malcolm Toon.

The American then hosted a "working lunch" at Toon's residence.

There was no afternoon session, presumably to give both the U.S. and Soviet delegations time to consult with higher authority.

The diplomatic sources said the American delegation hoped to wrap up the talks and leave Moscow, for Washington by late Friday. The talks resume at 9:30 a.m. Friday.

Warnke has predicted that the Soviets and Americans could reach agreement on a new SALT treaty before the end of 1978 if the progress and momentum of the last few months can be maintained.

Martial law imposed in Iranian cities

TEHRAN, Iran (UPI) — Martial law was imposed for six months on the capital of Tehran and 11 other cities torn by anti-shah rioting by conservative Muslims, the Iranian radio announced Friday morning.

The announcement followed nationwide demonstrations Thursday by hundreds of thousands of Muslims who defied a government ban and marched through the capital and other cities with banners calling for the ouster of Shah Mohammed Reza Pahlavi.

The announcement was made on Iran radio's 6 a.m. broadcast.

The announcement of martial law, expected for some time, followed two massive anti-shah marches in Tehran and other cities of the country Monday and Thursday.

The military rule was imposed as the opposition announced plans to hold another mass rally in Tehran to mourn the dead in the last week of rioting in Tehran and the provinces.

The radio listed the cities which came under martial law as Tehran, the two holy cities of Mashad in east Iran and Qom south of Tehran, the Tehran suburban town of Karaj, the industrial township of Qazvin west of Tehran, Tabriz in west Iran and Ahvaz, Abadan, Shiraz, Kazeroun and Jahrom and Isfahan in south Iran.

Martial law already is in force in Isfahan since last month. The announcement meant the military authorities there still faced difficulties in containing riots after having relaxed curfew the past week.

West German gangster underestimated police . . . and he died because of it

DUESSELDORF, West Germany (UPI) — Bader-Meinhof gangster Willy Peter Stoll, labeled one of the country's three deadliest terrorists, was surprised and killed in a Chinese restaurant because he thought policemen were "dumb" and so hardly bothered to disguise himself, police said Thursday.

Stoll pulled a pistol loaded with dum-dum bullets when two plainclothed detectives approached him in the Shanghai restaurant Wednesday night but the police shot him four times before he could open fire.

Stoll, 29, who joined the West German Red Army Faction — popularly known as the Bader-Meinhof gang — in 1972, carried a forged British passport and an Austrian identity card, both in the name of Herbert Wendel, aged 30. Stoll, one of three persons wanted for nine political killings in West Germany, also had a British driver's license made out to Wendel.

Duesseldorf Police Chief Horst Jaeger said Stoll must have felt safe because he looked almost the same as his "wanted" posters, which have flooded the country since Stoll and two companions narrowly escaped arrest last month. He wore the same eyeglasses and sports clothes and had the same type of haircut. The only attempt at a disguise was a small mustache.

"He probably thought the police are dumb and became overconfident," a police official said.

Other diners recognized Stoll and left the restaurant to call police, who sent two plainclothesmen. They sat down at a table next to Stoll's and ordered a cola.

Police said Stoll would probably still be alive if he had heeded the shout: "Police, hands up!" Instead he reached inside his jacket for his 9mm pistol loaded with dum-dum bullets.

One of the plainclothes police shot him three times and the other once.

They said Stoll arrived in the restaurant alone and was not accompanied by fellow fugitives Christian Klar and Adolph Stolz, with whom he made helicopter reconnaissance flights last month that put police on their trail.

Guerrillas capture Nicaraguan reporter

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (UPI) — Mario Jofre Estrada, a 50-year-old radio reporter, thought, "Here we go again" when guerrillas took over his radio station early Thursday.

"I slept on the floor for two nights when they took over the National Palace, and I thought I was going to have to do it all over again," Jofre said.

Jofre was taken hostage in a raid by Marxist Sandinista guerrillas on the National Palace two weeks ago, and on Thursday he was captured again by the same organization.

"It was 6:55 a.m. when a young man and a young woman came to the door," Jofre said later at the studios of the station, Radio Mundial. "The girl pretended to be crying and we thought they wanted to place a death announcement of a relative."

"But once they were inside the young man pulled a snub-nosed pistol on the disc jockey on the controls, Alonso Luna, and put it to his head.

How Do You Cure the Friday Morning What-Do-I-Do's?

You wake up in the morning facing the weekend! Two days of questioning yourself "What to do?" We're going to make it a little easier for you to decide. Introducing, every Friday morning, the Idaho Weekender. The Weekender will be your guide to what's happening through the weekend and on through the next working week in the Magic Valley and surrounding areas. (T.V. schedules, gossip columns, entertainment columns, features on singers and film personalities, book reviews, movie reviews, valley comments, dining guides, and special local features.) Whatever and wherever it is, it will be in the Idaho Weekender. It will make waking up to the What-Do-I-Do's a little easier to cope with.

ABC says 'Battlestar Galactica' hit show

By DAN LEWIS
HOLLYWOOD — Rarely has a new television show been heralded as widely, nor favored as heavily to be the hit of the season as ABC's "Battlestar Galactica."
 The TV prognosticators are not unmindful of "Star Wars," the original mould for this genre. Its enormous success is seen as a forecast of nothing short of sensational ratings for the new ABC entry. "Battlestar Galactica" is a space fiction, which ABC will launch Sept. 17 with a three-hour episode. It cost $7 million to produce this opening episode, and will cost approximately $1 million per episode, according to executive producer Glen Larson, who claims that the television project was in development long before "Star Wars" hit the big screen.

 Larson acknowledges that the huge success of "Star Wars" spurred interest in his television show. "We couldn't sell it before the success of 'Star Wars,'" Larson confides.
 The huge outlay for the three-hour premiere is money wisely spent. Larson and Universal, which financed the project, already have the premiere in release in Canadian theaters, where it might well make back the initial investment. They plan to release it overseas shortly.
 Ironically, Universal was one of the major studios which had an early shot at "Star Wars," but turned it down. 20th Century-Fox subsequently put up the money for the George Lucas space saga and created box office history.

 For this television production, which has all the trappings and settings of its illustrious big-screen prototype, the producers have put together a cast of television actors who are very familiar and popular with television audiences. The father figure, Lorne Greene, is not unaccustomed to such status. He once was the partrich of the Cartwright clan on the Ponderosa — for a series called "Bonanza" that had a 14-year run on NBC.
 Then there's Richard Hatch, who came up through daytime soap ("All My Children") and reached career maturity during two years on "Street of San Francisco" after replacing the original cast's Michael Douglas.

The third lead is Dirk Benedict... frequent series guest-star and, briefly, co-star of a short-lived series, "Chopper One."
 Greene likes to joke about his role. When someone inquired if he felt like a Galactica Moses in his new role, he retorted: "Am I supposed to be the Chuck Heston of outer space?"
 Close to a half-million dollars was spent for the permanent space-vessel set. It is known as Galactica, manned by the above trio, who are the remnants of human life in space after a "peace mission" not only fails, but wipes out all others except this trio, projected into the seventh millennium of time.
 This is a neat trick. The set makes it all work on a small screen, which restricts the movements and the vastness that the wide screens permit.

 Since this is a technological age, people will love "Galactica," according to the comments of Madison Avenue, where sponsor's dollars are allocated.
 Greene says he's delighted to be back in a series. After "Bonanza," there were movies and television guest shots, even another crack at a series, "Griff," which lasted less than half a season on ABC.
 "I'll stay with this, as long as my health holds out," Greene responds to an inquiry, hastening to add that his health is pretty good.
 He's taken it on because he likes the idea of joining in "the adventure of a new concept."

 "It's the most expensive television show ever done," he notes. "I wanted to know what a show would be like at these costs," he jokes. Benedict anticipates a huge following among the younger generation. It's where "Star Wars" had its greatest following.
 And Hatch points out that, unlike "Star Wars," this series will not be violent. Benedict supports him, reporting, "We only blast robots."
 Hatch adds: "ABC came down very strongly against violence."
 Finally, Greene was asked what he felt was the principal difference between a Western and a space series. He replied: "There wasn't as much space on the Ponderosa."

Big changes seen in Bill Anderson's country styling

By JAMES BESSMAN
CountryStyle News Service
 If there is one thing that remains constant in the career of a great artist, it is the fact that he is continually adapting to keep up with the changing world and times.
 Nowhere is this more evident than in Bill Anderson, whose sexy "cheatin'" songs with Mary Lou Turner have surprised a great many of his older fans. But these are only surface changes. In a recent talk with CountryStyle, Bill went beneath that surface.
 "There's been a change in my style and career in several areas. It used to really bother me when people would come up to me and say, 'Hey, you've changed.' I thought that was like saying, 'Hey, you've got bad breath' or something. And I read where Johnny Cash said on the back of one of his album liners, 'That's the greatest compliment somebody can pay me, when they say, 'You've changed,' because I feel like I'm born a little everyday that I live.'
 And he said, 'The way that don't feel that way is the day you go to change, I'm not going to change.' And I've kind of adopted that as my own philosophy, because you've got to change. Everything around you changes, and if you don't change you're going backwards."
 "The first thing I always thought about change was that when I lived at home everybody would say 'Well, you'll go to Nashville and make a big hit. You'll change, you won't know me.' Well, I had this in the back of my head: 'I'm not going to change, I'm not going to change,' and then all of a sudden I realized, you know, I can be that way in that area, I mean, I can still wear the same size hat that I wore before."
 "But you got to be flexible. Now it's only been in the last three years that I've realized that. One of the things that made me realize it was surrounding myself with some younger people. Not that I'm that ancient, but Mary Lou is younger than me, of course, and she grew up not only on country but on some contemporary music."
 "So, I'm getting this influence from her. And then I get younger kids in the band, and they turn me on to certain things. And I have a very hip record producer, Buddy Killen, who produces Joe Tex and some of the R&B artists. So I get all this input that I sort through and figure, well, this is right, and well, that's too far, and that's not far enough. So the whole thing has just been an awakening for me, and I love it."
 "How does Bill feel about all the attention his "cheatin'" songs with Mary Lou have received?
 "I think that's one of the minor changes. If you go back to the very early days of my records and you look carefully through them, I did some songs like 'Sometimes' years ago, but they just didn't hit, so nobody realized I was into that."
 "The first record I ever made with Jan Howard was called 'I Know You're Married But I Love You Still,' but we didn't make any more of that type. But when 'Sometimes' hit, it hit so big that it was just like hitting a mule over the head with a two-by-four to get his attention."
 "And there's been some backlash, but mostly good natured, you know, 'Did Mary Lou Turner ruin Bill Anderson?' That sort of thing, but that happens any time a boy-girl duo starts up. I went through the same thing with Jan Howard, although we did not do many cheatin' songs. But when you make records together and travel together, when people see you together they naturally assume that you've got something going. But the people who know, they understand we're just doing songs and making records."
 One of the biggest changes in Bill's music is found in his approach to his road show.

For 12 years Bill traveled with his Po'Boys — a basic, all-male country band with steel and lead guitars, bass and drums. Although the band was successful, Bill gradually realized that he had gone about as far as he could go with them musically. His new band, The Po'Folks, gives him a more contemporary sound.
 "When I say contemporary I don't mean like a rock sound or that kind of thing, although we have branched out in that direction a little bit, but a sound where we can go on stage and completely recreate the sound of all our records."
 "We have four guys and two girls now, and all six people sing. So I can create the very heavy vocal sound on my records with a group on a stage, and yet we can go back and do Po'Boys with a harmonica and a dobro like we did in 1961 and make it sound like the records. We've also added an ARP Omni synthesizer. So we're much more flexible on stage."
 Another important change in Bill Anderson the Artist is in his outlook. This is evident in his refusal, unlike Haggard with his "Okie," to sing his own super song of 1970, "Where Have All Our Hoes Gone?"
 "The lines were drawn," Bill reminisces, "and a lot of people I think misinterpreted what I had to say in that song because in those days everything was strictly black and white. But after I lived with it a while I realized that I had changed, too. So I just figured, well, that's part of the growing-up process. It doesn't come back to haunt me much today. It might have slowed down my acceptance by some other people, but people forget, I think."
 "The 'growing-up process' Bill refers to really goes all the way back to his youth.
 "When I was a kid, I loved sports — particularly baseball. I loved to write and I loved country music. In the beginning I started out writing sports for a newspaper in my home town. And I organized a little band in high school, and we played around in talent shows and that kind of thing. But I wasn't really serious about it until I realized one day that I didn't have to write just sports, and I started fooling around with some songs and one thing kind of led to another. So my background was in writing, but the music part of it I had to develop."
 Bill credits three Hanks for having the greatest influence on his songwriting career.
 "When I was coming along Hank Williams was the biggest influence in my life because I was in my early teens during the peak of his career, and I think without knowing it that I identified with the fact that he wrote and sang his own songs. I started a record collection when I was eight or nine years old and I've still got the old Hank Williams 78's."
 "Hank Thompson was influential to me because Hank Thompson always carried a good band and always sang what I thought were well-written songs. Hank Snow, also, because he was one of the few people I liked who sang uptempo songs, and I identified with them. Basically, I liked the ballads. I liked the mournful things that Williams sang. But I identified with Hank Snow for some reason."
 In 1958, Ray Price recorded "City Lights," which became the first hit written by Bill Anderson. Throughout the next two decades Bill wrote many other hits for many artists, including Price, Jean Shepard, Porter Wagoner, Charlie Louvin, Connie Smith, Faron Young, Cal Smith, Mary Lou Turner and Roy Clark.
 Aside from Bill's recent success in songwriting, he is also writing a book about his experiences, appropriately taking an insider's viewpoint. With all that Bill Anderson has accomplished throughout his remarkable career in country music, he will undoubtedly have much to say.

Whispering Bill Anderson adapts to changing world and times

Music composers seek royalties from colleges, clubs and groups

NEW YORK (UPI) — Hundreds of colleges, clubs and fraternal and veterans organizations across the country are breaking a federal law every time they use music for a dance, concert or other public performance.
 They could be fined anywhere from $250 to $10,000 for each violation, which means each song.
 The violations stem from the fact that the groups, under the 1976 Copyright Act that took effect in January, must purchase a license, which guarantees composers royalties for their work.
 But despite the violations, the organizations need not worry that their next social will be raided by a bunch of gun-toting G-Men.
 "We're not looking to trap anybody," said Ed Cramer, president of Broadcast Music Inc., one of three organizations named in the new law as having a right to issue licenses on behalf of copyright owners.
 Cramer, a copyright lawyer, discussed the new law in an interview. He described how it affects groups that were previously exempt under the old copyright, which dated from 1909.
 BMI, like its competitor, the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers (ASCAP), is in business to protect and collect royalties for artists. BMI, represents about 50,000 artists, among them such contemporary music writers as Barry Manilow, the Bee Gees, Neil Sedaka and Paul Anka.

Under the 1909 law, Cramer noted, there were two 28-year terms during which the work was protected. "Under the new law, it exists for the life of the author and 50 years after his death," he said.
 Most musical royalties — 85 percent — come from the broadcasting industry, "which pays us so much a year based on their advertising revenue," Cramer said, noting that there was no difference from the old law.
 The major changes, he said, involved the way the law related to juke boxes and so-called non-profit public performances, which were exempt between 1909 and January 1.
 For juke boxes, the owners have to obtain an $8-a-year license from the government. But, said Cramer, of the estimated 500,000 juke boxes in the country, "three out of four are not licensed" even though royalties from each box "amounts to peanuts for the individual song writer."
 But, what he called "a significant inequity" under the old law was that non-profit institutions — colleges, private clubs, church groups, veterans and fraternal organizations — did not have to pay royalties for music they used.
 "Every supplier of goods and services to non-profit organizations is going to be paid. The telephone company, the electric company, the musicians. They (composers) should not be forced to subsidize music for non-profit purposes," Cramer said.

After all, he noted, most composers are not as commercially successful as the Bee Gees and the Paul Ankas, and depend on their royalties for a living.
 "There are composers out there whose works are not going to be in the top 40, whose principal exposure is in the non-profit area. And it is these people who need it the most who will benefit from the law," Cramer said.
 The type of composer he was talking about was one — like BMI's 17 Pulitzer prize winners — whose works are used by colleges, universities, city symphony orchestras and so forth.
 BMI has reached an arrangement through a national college organization by which each school pays 5% cents for each full-time student to "cover all music dues — including college radio stations — except for special concerts," Cramer said. But, he said, many colleges have not come through.
 As to the clubs, organizations and other non-profit groups, Cramer said their licenses would primarily depend on how much they budget for music each year.
 "A group using minimal music would probably only have to pay about $2 a week," he said.
 "We are trying to convince these people that not only is a matter of law they have to pay, but that morally they should be paying because they're using somebody's product. Next time you hear a song ask: How does a composer get paid?"

World's tallest lady meets her match

WILDWOOD, N.J. — She had always said she would never fall in love with a man shorter than she: "I'm an old-fashioned girl!" was Sandy Allen's earnest explanation.

Still, when you're over 7 feet 7 inches and the world's tallest woman, a certain flexibility is necessary, and not just for getting through doorways. So this week Miss Allen finally had her chance, with the arrival in this country of Europe's tallest man, an English chip named Chris Greener. Given the fact that people rarely fall in love simply because of comparable stature, neither seemed to approach the occasion with more than a friendly curiosity — which was just as well, since the initial encounter left a bit to be desired in the romantic mood department.

After all, tender blandishments are a little awkward at a press conference, in front of flashing cameras. Then there was the carnival atmosphere of the boardwalk at the New Jersey shore, where Miss Allen, the resident star attraction for the summer at Adie's Fantastic Facts-n-Feats in Wildwood, which also sponsored Greener's trip. The crowds strolling along the boardwalk clotted in astonishment around the lowering duo, small children agape and giggling, their elders whispering, "Are they husband and wife?" and "Brother and sister?"

What they are, in fact, are hapless victims of a similar malfunction of the pituitary gland. Miss Allen's extraordinary growth was halted only two years ago with the surgical removal of the tumor that for 20 years had caused her body to produce between 200 and 1,000 times the normal amount of growth hormones. Greener's tumor was treated with radiation therapy, which finally fixed his height at 7 feet 6 inches.

For the 23-year-old Miss Allen—the problem had socioeconomic as well as medical roots. She grew up in the little town of Shelbyville, Ind., and was raised by her grandmother, a cleaning woman who didn't have the money to finance a journey to Indianapolis, let alone for the more sophisticated medical care they might have obtained there. And although by age 10 she was already 6 feet 3 inches, a terrified Sandy adamantly refused to submit to treatment; her grandmother didn't insist, and the girl endured a childhood in which people's reactions to her consisted largely of whispers, giggles, shrieks—and such labels as the Jolly Green Giant.

For Greener, who is now 31, the problem was somewhat less dramatic; as a child he was considered merely tall and lanky. The son of an accordion exporter in Wallace, near Liverpool, at 16 he went to work for a shipping company. At the time he was 6 feet 7 inches and still able to shrug off his height, as well as the accompanying nickname "Lofty": "I was tall, everyone knew I was tall, and that was that." As for his parents, he said with a rueful smile, "Perhaps they were under the impression it would stop."

But it didn't. "I really started getting depressed, very upset after a while," he concedes now. "I really had a thing about what was happening. Eventually I realized I was still growing, and I had a choice of either going out and being seen, or staying in, not getting remarks, and adopting the life of a hermit. I opted to ignore the comments that are made."

Today Greener is said to be the world's second-tallest living man, his size bested only by that of a 33-year-old Chicagoan whose mobility is restricted by his height of 8 feet 2 inches. The director of an airport-export company in London, Greener keeps long hours at his job—and returns at night to his elderly mother.

Music Club slates singer for meeting

TWIN FALLS — G. Robert Newman of Rupert will be the honored performer for the Twin Falls Music Club's annual membership tea on Sept. 11 at 1:00 p.m. at the Community Christian Church on S. Grandview Dr.

A baritone, Newman studied with Mary Walker of Twin Falls in 1974-5 and has a B.S. degree from Utah State University. His credits include a tuition scholarship to the San Francisco Conservatory of Music, soloist with the Washington-Idaho Symphony in Oct., 1977, and soloist with the University of Idaho Vandotors and U of I symphony, Christmas, 1977. He was the winner in the vocal division of the Idaho Federation of Music Clubs auditions in 1978 and was the Idaho Federation of Music Clubs $1000.00 Trust Fund Scholarship winner. He also had the lead in the Moscow Dinner Theater production of "Little Mary Sunshine" in April of this year.

The program will include an operatic aria, semi-classical and contemporary works. For reservations call 423-5578 or 734-7015.

First meeting scheduled for music teachers

TWIN FALLS — Magic Valley Chapter of the Idaho Music Teachers' Association will have its first meeting of the season at 10 a.m. Friday in the Fireside Lounge of the Methodist Church, 360 Shoshone St. E., Twin Falls.

The program will be given by Mrs. JoAnn Gerrish. She received her bachelor's degree in flute and piano from Utah State University in Logan, Utah.

She has served as staff pianist and instructor of applied music at the College of Southern Idaho and is presently first chair flutist with Magic Valley Symphony. Mrs. Gerrish gives private instruction in flute and piano at her studio.

Mrs. Kelly Brailsford, chapter president, announces all Magic Valley music teachers are cordially invited to attend and membership is open and will be accepted at this time for teachers desiring to improve their professional standard of teaching.

Lockup traps sailing duo

CHICAGO — A suburban moving company will provide a bridge over troubled waters for a Florida sailing couple stranded here by closed river locks.

The "bridge" will be a flatbed trailer and driver provided at no charge by the Glen Eillyn Moving and Storage Corp. to carry the couple and their 36-foot sailboat, Esprit, around the closed locks on the Illinois River.

With luck, David and Lucy Winton will set sail again later this week.

"All we need now is to have a marina stand by to lift the boat out of the water and onto the truck," Winton, 62, said yesterday.

Dear Abby

Snoopy wife uncovers upsetting facts about husband

© 1978 by Chicago Tribune-N.Y. News Synd. Inc.

DEAR ABBY: I don't know what possessed me to do it, but I examined the contents of my husband's footlocker, which had been stored in our basement for eight years—since our marriage. I became curious and took the key off his key ring while he was showering and opened his footlocker while he was at work.

I found a large bundle of love letters from a "Miss Somebody" I had never heard of. She described their affair in some detail, and in one letter she mentioned that she was expecting "their" child. (They apparently had an affair going for at least two years.)

Oddly enough, there was no subsequent mention of the birth of the child, losing it, an abortion, or anything to indicate what came of that pregnancy.

Although this happened several years before I met my husband, I am hurt and angry to think he kept this from me. I feel deceived. We have three children and I thought we had a good marriage.

Should I confess that I snooped and demand an explanation?

HAWAII

DEAR HAWAII: You say that until you snooped, you "thought" you had a good marriage. Well, if you "thought" you had a good marriage, you had one.

Your husband's affairs (literally) prior to your meeting are none of your business. For you to admit that you snooped and demand an explanation would surely damage your marriage. I advise against it.

DEAR ABBY: I recently moved to a rural area that has a small post office. Whenever I go there, I notice that one of the clerks (a dumb bunny if ever there was one) is busy reading all the postcards. In fact, before she hands over my mail, she tells me who it's from and what's on the card.

To whom should I report this brazen invasion of privacy?

DISGUSTED IN PA.

One day last week I was late for work, and just after I had slammed the door and locked myself out, I heard my telephone ring. Having an elderly, chronically ill parent living out of town, I always answer my telephone. Well, I finally found my keys, opened the door and ran back to get the call, which turned out to be a sales pitch for some outfit selling cemetery lots!

I would tell you what I told him to do with his cemetery lots, but you'd never print it.

Therapists say schools need reform

TORONTO (UPI) — Psychologists, focusing on ways to help children cope with potentially harmful pressures, say schools need to reform their anti-smoking campaigns and more work is needed on the impact of television commercials.

In reports to the American Psychological Association, researchers say schools may take the wrong approach in stressing only the long-term health dangers of cigarettes. Programs based less on fear and more on teaching how to say "no" are more effective, they say.

Researchers also say many studies of the effect of TV advertising on children — a controversial area — have been too unsophisticated. Scientists and policy makers should pay more attention to how such studies are conducted, they say.

"Public interest groups claim that television advertising adversely affects the health and social development of children, while advertisers contend that commercials have no detrimental effect and may, in fact, serve to enhance children's consumer socialization," Robert Rychlicki and others from the University of Montana said in one report presented Wednesday.

Another report by five researchers from California's Stanford University and McGill University in Montreal described how to successfully "inoculate" children against television commercial appeals by using short consumer awareness films to explain tricks used in commercials.

The study of school anti-smoking campaigns, conducted by Richard Evans and others at the University of Houston, said traditional efforts to make children aware of the possibility of cancer or heart and lung damage have proven relatively ineffective.

"Our in-depth interviews with a large population of seventh graders suggest that ... peer pressures, models of smoking parents and the mass media — such as cigarette company advertising — may override the belief of children that smoking is dangerous," Evans said.

"Anti-smoking messages in schools ... focus too much on the future dangers of smoking. Children are more likely to focus on the present. Smoking control messages should emphasize more immediate effects of smoking on the child or teenager."

Evans called for a new approach based on films and posters in which students themselves demonstrate how to say "no" to pressures to smoke. He said initial tests using such a program have proven "quite effective."

Hospital class for expectant parents starts

TWIN FALLS — A class on parent and infant care for couples expecting babies in October and November will be held at the Magic Valley Memorial Hospital beginning Wednesday, Sept. 6, from 7 to 9 p.m. in the hospital auditorium.

The course informs expectant mothers and fathers on pregnancy, growth and development of the unborn child, hospitalization, labor and delivery, and various aspects of the care of the infant during its first year of life. The last class on infant care is open to any interested persons.

The classes are taught by members of the nursing staff of the hospital's obstetrics department. Lectures, discussions, film showings and printed materials are included in the classes.

Anyone desiring further information may call the hospital at 733-1511 and ask for Roberta Reynolds, R.N., or Pat Hollibaugh, LPN, extension 220, obstetrics department.

Hospital reports several lost items

TWIN FALLS — The Magic Valley Memorial Hospital has numerous personal effects in their lost and found department which can be claimed after proper description is provided.

Former patients and/or family members may contact the Public Relations Department, 733-1511, extension 272 for further information. All items not claimed by Oct. 2 will be turned over to the Hospital Auxiliary.

Details may hamper initial planning of positive actions

GENERAL TENDENCIES: This is a fine day for new beginnings of all kinds, but be careful of specific details to make sure they are accurate. Evening finds some delays and obstacles in the path of long time goals.

ARIES (Mar. 21 to Apr. 19): Be enthused about whatever fascinates you most and get much accomplished. Look at a loved one from a different angle and feel happier together.

TAUROS (Apr. 20 to May 20): A different perspective is necessary in dealing with associates for greater success in the future. Get details clear in your mind before you tackle any important work.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21): Use more up-to-date methods in handling work where you have to meet a deadline. Get more cooperation from co-workers.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21): Plan a new kind of entertainment early and later it works out fine. Cement better relations with loved ones.

LEO (July 22 to Aug. 21): Know what the needs of kin are and have more harmony and happiness at home. Not a good day for entertaining at home. Buckle down to business you have to attend to.

VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 20): Decide early who can be of greatest assistance to help you in an upcoming project and then waste no time contacting them. Get all the information you will need.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22): Study your true monetary status and improve it with good planning. Be practical and sensible, though. Don't put off making needed repairs.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21): You can gain your fortune, aims with less effort than usual if you change your attitude. Pay attention to detail where business matters are concerned.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21): Talk over with trusted persons how to gain your goals more speedily. Try to gain the support of an important person. Clear up problems with loved one where possible.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 20): Look to a clever friend for aid in gaining a personal goal. Get into the details of such. Show that you are open-minded.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19): Get involved in community affairs that will give you added prestige. Do whatever will extend career matters.

PISCES (Feb. 20 to Mar. 20): Paytime is best for getting out to new places and being with newcomers, but be sure to support a partner in the afternoon, evening. Follow hunches for good results.

IF YOUR CHILD IS BORN TODAY... he or she will be able to take something that is outmoded and make something worthwhile and profitable out of it. Teach early to listen to the views of others before reaching decisions or passing judgment. Add sports to school curricula.

What's what

Train watchers initial boxcars

To that lengthening list of oddball hobbies, please add train watching. Did you know there's a nationwide network of train watchers? They look for unusual boxcars and photograph same, then trade the photos by mail with other train watchers. If possible, they write their initials on such boxcars. What's meant by unusual boxcar here is any boxcar that's out of its normal territory. They also keep in touch through their specialty journals.

Prostitution is legal in Nevada, except in Las Vegas and Reno, where the gambling interests don't want the girls to take their clients out of the casinos. But the girls do so, nonetheless. This comes up because a subscriber asks how much those girls earn in Las Vegas and Reno. Correspondents say $150 an hour isn't unusual.

FAILING GRADES

Q. "I've got a kid who's into computers, HO trains, dissected pinball machines, ham radio gear, that sort of thing. Yet he's flunking every class in school. How did Thomas Edison do in school?"

A. Edison was at the bottom of his class. Could be your son, too; is a genius. However, you ought not overlook the possibility that he's just plain stupid, in which case you might want to consider selling him.

Q. "Does a cross-eyed person see two images at the same time?"

A. The two eyes may pick up two different images at the same time, but the brain accepts only one, mysteriously. The selection of which image it accepts is subconscious and instantaneous. Remarkable, what?

Q. "Does tennis have a season?"

A. Not really, there's a tennis tournament every week of the year.

SMOKERS

That smokers tend to gain weight after they quit smoking is common knowledge. How widely known is a recent medical finding that how much they gain seems to hinge on how much they smoked. The more cigarettes they smoked, the more pounds they pick up after they quit. Researchers at the Medical College of Wisconsin found that out.

Pan Am, National airlines agree to merger

NEW YORK (UPI) — Pan American World Airways announced Thursday a definite agreement with National Airlines on a merger and at the same time disclosed it will abandon service to Moscow and some other European points Oct. 29.

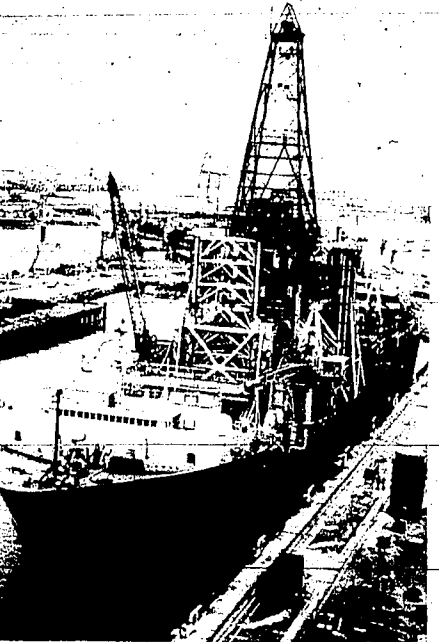

Pan Am's decision to give up the Moscow route, which it had worked years to get, came as a surprise. Pan Am President Daniel A. Colussy said Pan Am had found that the traffic collection and distribution system in the Soviet Union and eastern European countries "is totally controlled by their state-owned airlines and consequently competition for business in those countries is not possible."

Pan Am also will drop service Oct. 29 to Vienna, Prague, Bucharest, Belgrade and Budapest. Its only remaining service to eastern Europe will be to Warsaw by way of Frankfurt, West Germany.

Service also will be dropped to Lisbon, Vienna and Ankara and to Boston and Portland, N.H., in the United States. Colussy said service to Paris, Vienna and Lisbon was being dropped because increasing costs and competition of both foreign flag and other U.S. airlines on those routes caused declining profits. The merger agreement with National, reached Wednesday night and announced Thursday morning, calls for payment of $11 a share for National stock or a total of $350 million cash.

National will become a Pan Am subsidiary and will be renamed Pan American U.S.A., Inc. The companies said no Pan Am employees will lose their jobs because of the merger and Pan Am agreed to use its best efforts to see to it that no National employees including members of management, are displaced.

Sea mining test nears

Mining ship Gjomar Explorer is at San Pedro, Calif., for final fitting prior to testing an ocean mining system later this year for Ocean Minerals Co., Mountain View, Calif. The firm is developing methods of mining mineral nodules from the sea floor. Test mining equipment aboard the ship is designed to work at depths of 14,000 to 18,000 feet of water. The ship is under lease from the U.S. Navy.

Profit-hungry Americans export know-how, suffer from results

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Americans eyeing short-term profits have virtually given away basic technical knowledge that foreign nations now are using as an economic weapon which reduces American jobs, industrial production and living standards, according to two businessmen.

United States to foreign countries were presented Wednesday in hearings before a House Science and Technology subcommittee. The hearings continued Thursday and today.

Now the industrial development of Japan, Taiwan and West Germany may be surpassed by the oil-producing nations which have accumulated the wealth to buy technology on an "unprecedented scale," he said.

protectionism — not for hard-goods, but for technology," Brenner said. Brenner quoted a Japanese businessman who estimated Japan received $9 billion in technological know-how from U.S. industry for $1 billion.

House panel approves base price sugar bill

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The administration, after a series of losses in its effort to hold down the price of raw sugar in legislation moving through Congress, finally won a victory in the House Ways and Means Committee.

committee to go along with a proposal his subcommittee rejected. "I understand the secretary of agriculture will recommend a veto if this escalator is retained," said Vanik.

Consultant backs pipeline for northern tier states

SEATTLE (UPI) — Northern and mid-continent states that would be served by the proposed Northern Tier Pipeline will face a serious petroleum shortage by 1980 unless the project is built, a private energy consultant said Thursday.

superport at Port Angeles, Wash., and a 1,550-mile pipeline across Washington, Idaho, Montana and North Dakota to Clearbrook, Minn. The estimated cost of the project is $1.2 billion.

The company has contended that the proposed pipeline presents the best alternative for pumping Alaskan and foreign crude to the interior.

But Scheurer said U.S. manufacturers put short-term profits over long-term national interests, such as loss of jobs and tax revenues through the sale of knowledge to foreign producers or the transfer of technology to a foreign affiliate.

Hansen, Kimberly study plan using Twin Falls sewage plant

By BONNIE BAIRD JONES

Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Two Twin Falls county communities are planning expanded sewer systems which could involve piping sewage to the Twin Falls city sewage plant for treatment.

Public hearings will be held this month in both Filer and Hansen to gather input from their outgrowth citizens on a solution to their outgrowth treatment facilities. Each community will propose some four to five alternatives. In each case one of these alternatives will be to transport sewage to the Twin Falls city system.

The Filer hearing will be Monday at 7:30 p.m. in the Filer city hall. In Hansen the hearing is set for Tuesday also at 7:30 p.m. in the Hansen city hall. In both communities city councils and engineers are urging good citizen participation to help determine how to meet the problem and how much to spend.

Gary Young, Twin Falls city engineer, said no stand has been taken by the Twin Falls City Council on such a system. He said much depends on the results from a review of the city's plant. James M. Montgomery of Boise should have the review finished within a few weeks, possibly even by the time the hearings are held, Young said.

He said whether or not Twin Falls could handle the additional sewage depends on the capacity of the city's collection system and plant. Also, he said Filer and Hansen must work out an agreement with Twin Falls for fees and operation of the joint facility.

Young said some of the industries purchasing space in the Twin Falls plant overestimated their needs and would probably like to sell some of the reserve space they hold.

In Filer there is a moratorium on building, imposed several months ago, to hold community growth down to a level the present lagoon system can handle until improvements are made. Filer's lagoon treatment facility was built in about 1962 and upgraded about seven years later. It now operates at more than capacity, Mayor Eldon Ryals said.

Engineer Hal Reeves of Hamilton and Vocler Engineers said there are five possibilities for solving the problems. The first would be a regional sewage plant concept and would involve building a main trunk line along Pole Line Road to carry sewage from Filer to Twin Falls.

Or Filer could expand its lagoon system, storing the effluent during winter months and using it for land application during the summer. In this way, Reeves said, the city would use the treated effluent for irrigation or allow evaporation. An additional 40 acres of land would be needed for this method. Another alternative would involve upgrading the present system with filtration, chlorination and expanded lagoon area, using land the city now owns.

Alternatives 4 and 5 call for building new mechanical treatment plants for the city, with alternative 4 being a simple-to-operate mechanical treatment facility, which would produce a high quality effluent, and an oxidation ditch method which would allow the effluent to go back into Cedar Draw.

Alternative 5 would be a more complicated mechanical plant which would require building an additional equalization basin. It would be more costly than other alternatives.

Cost estimates range from $75,000 for the oxidation ditch method to about $1.5 million for the regional waste water treatment plant. But Reeves said the operation and maintenance costs would also have to be considered.

Engineer James Coleman of JUB Engineering said the Hansen alternatives include four possibilities. Using the Twin Falls plant would mean building a trunk line from Hansen to Kimberly and tying in with the Kimberly system, which already uses the Twin Falls city plant. Young

Jerome GOP women sponsor program

JEROME — The Jerome County Republican Women will hold a meeting Wednesday at Wood Cafe in Jerome at 8 p.m.

The program will be "everything you wanted to know about the one percent initiative," according to Maxine Bell of Jerome, president.

Guest speakers will be Jerome attorney Bob Williams and State Rep. Gordon Hollifield, R-Jerome. The meeting is open to the public.

said this would have to be reviewed to determine if the Twin Falls collection system could handle the additional load once it reached the city lines.

Hansen is also considering a system of collecting, treating and then storing effluent for ground application. Or, Coleman said Hansen could build a total containment facility, a different concept from the present lagoon system. There would be no discharge. Another alternative is to expand and upgrade the present system to produce an effluent which could be discharged into a canal and carried to the Snake River by the Twin Falls Canal Co. system.

Coleman said the Hansen plant is a good one but it falls to meet Environmental Protection Agency standards in the spring and early fall when algae blooms and grows, causing an increase in solids in the effluent. He said growth of Hansen in the past few years has pushed the plant to capacity.

Cost estimates range from $318,000 to expand the present lagoon to $1.1 million to build the total containment facility. Building a trunk line to Kimberly would be about $328,000. Again, Coleman said cost of maintenance and operation of various systems as well as capacities must be considered.

In both Filer and Hansen the local communities would pay only 10 percent of the total cost of improvements. The federal government would pay 75 percent and the state 15 percent under available grant moneys.

Thomas against women's prison

GOODING — Will Thomas of Gooding, a Republican candidate for county commissioner in District 1, has come out against a woman's prison in the former TB hospital.

"This is a very poor location for a prison," he said. "Placing a prison on this site would require that the taxpayers of Gooding build a facility to take care of approximately 80 kindergarten children or discontinue the program."

He also said the senior citizens would not have a suitable meeting place at this time.

"I think we are very much in need of an alcoholic treatment center, because of the number of broken homes each year, financial stress, and highway accidents. People in Idaho should try in every way to treat these people," Thomas commented.

He added that with 50,000 alcoholics in Idaho, the former hospital could be better utilized as a treatment center than it would to spend thousands of dollars to remodel it for a few women prisoners.

Concerning housing for the women offenders, the Cottonwood facility would probably be much more feasible to operate and maintain than the Gooding site.

Idaho water board to hold public meeting in Twin Falls

TWIN FALLS — The eight-member Idaho Water Resource Board will come to Twin Falls Tuesday to answer questions about water projects it is proposing in Idaho.

Scheduled to meet with the public between 8 and 9:30 p.m. that day in the College of Southern Idaho mini auditorium, the board's visit will follow a tour of the proposed Eagle Rock dam site and American Falls and Milner Dams.

The board recently aroused interest in Magic Valley by proposing a water project to develop farm land on the Bruneau Plateau. An application for water rights involving winter flows of the Snake River caused a stir among local irrigators. Many said they planned to protest the filing for 1.7 million acre feet of river water.

"We encourage anyone with any questions on any of these projects, or who might wish to visit with the board regarding other items, to come and talk with us," C. Stephen Allred, director of the Idaho Department of Water Resources, said. "We are hoping to get a good turnout, to find out what the people in this area really think."

After the question-and-answer session Tuesday night, the board also plans a tour of proposed low-head hydroelectric sites and part of the Bruneau Plateau the next day.

Larsen pays ticket

BLACKFOOT, Idaho (UPI) — Republican gubernatorial candidate Allan Larsen paid a $37 fine in Bingham County Magistrate Court Thursday for driving his car 27 mph over the speed limit on an interstate highway.

Larsen, Speaker of the Idaho House of Representatives, was ticketed at about 7:30 a.m. Aug. 13 on Interstate 15 near Blackfoot, his home town.

Idaho State Police said Larsen was clocked at 82 mph in a 55 zone.

Mobile home owners

Magic Valley power charges probably conform

By BONNIE BAIRD JONES
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Mobile home owners in Magic Valley are probably not paying excessive rates for electrical power.

But it might be well for those who pay their court managers rather than the power company to check their rate classification, a staff member of the Idaho Public Utilities Commission says.

The PUC had reported some Boise Valley mobile home owners are paying commercial rates which are about double residential rates.

However, Glenn Call, rate officer with Idaho Power Co. in Twin Falls, said he knows of no such cases here. If there are, he said the arrangements are in conflict with PUC regulations and company policy.

PUC staff member Deanne

Kloepfer said in the Boise area PUC investigators found some older mobile home parks where a central meter is used, homeowners were charged on a commercial rate. The individual home owners pay their share of the cost to the court manager. In this way the individual mobile home owner was paying about double the residential rate charged other home owners.

Ms. Kloepfer said there have been no complaints from the Magic Valley area, so there are probably no overcharges here. She said anyone living in a mobile home and paying the owner or manager might want to inquire about the rates if they seem high.

"Not so in this area," says Call. "I think there is probably some misunderstanding about this. If the individual home owners are being charged a commercial rate, they are in conflict with the Public Utilities Commission regulations and our regulations."

Call said some mobile home courts might be paying on a commercial rate for their coin operated machines and other business uses.

The only way a mobile home resident would be paying a commercial rate, he said, is if the mobile home court owner runs all electrical service through a central meter and then charges the mobile home resident himself.

"Sometimes a court will try to make a little profit this way, but if they do they are violating PUC regulations and haven't been detected by PUC," Call said.

Every homeowner, whether mobile home or conventional home, pays the same rate as long as there is an individual meter. Call said he doesn't know of any courts where the residents don't have individual meters.

Mobile home owners and managers in Twin Falls say their rental places each have a separate meter and the home owner pays a residential rate according to his individual meter, even in cases where park managers read the meters.

Mrs. J. C. Williams, owner at Lazy J Mobile Home Park, said residents there pay bills directly to the power company. She said the park may have a commercial rate for street lights, coin operated laundry facilities and other services, but the mobile home owners pay according to their individual meters.

Most mobile home owners contacted said they had no idea if they were paying residential rates but several said they plan to find out.

Reagan's facelift causes speculation

COEUR D'ALENE, Idaho (UPI) — Ronald Reagan, looking 10 years younger after apparently undergoing a major facelift, told a packed gathering of Idaho Republicans at the North Shore Convention Center Wednesday that pocketbook issues are the biggest issues of our time.

While the Republican leader spoke, people who had seen him before began rumbling about the new look Reagan and what it meant, a run at the presidency with a younger image or simply a man fighting the aging process at 67.

One veteran observer, Spokane newspaperman Ross Woodward, who took several close looks at the candidate, said Reagan's leathery-tan look was gone and a "pinkish glow" was in its place.

"His skin was smoothed over and tightened, and he had a kind of pinkish glow. It looked to me like the outer layer of skin on his face had been taken off. He looked much better than the last time I saw him a few months ago."

"But he looked kind of peeled. I've seen him and covered him many times and before last night, he always had that leathery, California tan look. And now it's gone."

Reagan Addressed a benefit on behalf of the re election of Conservative Congressman Steve Symms, R-Idaho.

Reagan said "high taxes are the top item of conversation throughout the country today."

"And inflation, which is as violent as a robber or a mugger, also occupies the concern of most people," "Proposition 13 in California and Initiative One in Idaho are just a few indicators of this national concern, which he said could be best addressed by the Republican Party."

He said people in the main are concerned about five fundamental things: family, work, neighborhood, freedom and peace. He repeated these five things throughout his speech.

"We should drop the image of a party of the rich. Now the people and the Republican Party are engaged in a common cause."

"We're not a narrow ideologue trying to impose our ideology on the majority. In the points of fundamental belief today, we are a part of a great majority of Americans."

"And we are trying to assert our rights against the purty of a combine of elitists of left social revolutionaries and against some economic illiterates who happen to hold public office at the present moment."

Ranchers say Challis area wild horses a menace

CHALLIS, Idaho (UPI) — Challis ranchers say wild horses in the area are a menace to good range management and should be eliminated.

They also told a hearing on the Bureau of Land Management's proposed range-management plan and environmental statement Wednesday they want practical range management and less bureaucratic regulation of agriculture.

The BLM proposal for the Challis unit south and east of Challis in eastern Custer County would cut down cattle grazing in the area, limit wild-horse grazing to an average of 162 head and put most of the range land into rotating-use cycles.

Over a 15-year period, it is designed to improve food production for animals on the range — including the wild horses.

Ranchers in the area favor tight control over the wild horse population but agree with the BLM's rotating grazing ideas. However, Lawrence Bradbury of the Custer County Economic and Resource Stabilization Committee said the ranchers and the BLM have different views on proper range management.

County Chairman Clyde Rigby of the Custer County commission complained that not one person who wrote the BLM proposal lives in the county. He said the BLM and other agencies have overestimated tourist income to the county and said that ranching is the county's most important economic factor.

Accused threat fabricator agrees to undergo treatment

IDAHO FALLS (UPI) — A woman accused of fabricating a death threat against President Carter has agreed to undergo psychiatric treatment and is reported to be in State Hospital South.

After the woman offered to submit to psychiatric treatment during a court appearance this week, Bonneville County Prosecutor Gary Jensen dropped a request for an involuntary commitment. She was turned over to the state Department of Health and Welfare — presumably for treatment at Hospital South in Blackfoot, although officials there would not comment.

Libertarian Party convention begins

POCATELLO, Idaho (UPI) — The Libertarian Party State Convention convenes Friday night at Idaho State University in Pocatello.

Party Chairman Larry Fulmer said a First Amendment defender, Nat Henoff, will address delegates at 8 p.m. Friday in the ISU Student Union Ballroom.

Idaho Property Owners Association

President Don Chance will speak Saturday, Fulmer said.

Fulmer said Henoff is a "regular" contributor to "Playboy" and the "Village Voice" and has written various books, including "The History of the First Amendment."

Delegates also will nominate candidates for statewide office and draft a platform, according to Fulmer.

Larsen hires Ravenscroft, Smith

BOISE (UPI) — House Speaker Allan F. Larsen has hired two well-known Republicans to help him in his campaign for governor.

Larsen has chosen Bob Smith, administrative aide to Rep. Steve Symms, as his $1,500 a month campaign manager and former opponent Vernon F. Ravenscroft as the $2,500 a month head of his citizens' committee. Both also will receive expenses although Smith will be limited to $500 a month.

Ravenscroft, who lost a close race with Larsen for the GOP nomination, said his basic committee will include former Govs. Len B. Jordan and Don Samuelson and three other unsuccessful candidates for the nomination — Larry Jackson, Jim Crowe and Jay Amyn.

Bruins seek second win against Caldwell

TWIN FALLS — Flushed by breaking an 11-game losing streak with a season-opening victory last week, the Twin Falls Bruins host the Caldwell Cougars in their second non-conference game of the season tonight.

Coach Ed Knecht continues to push his young team in an effort to get them ready for continually increasing strong foes. And he lists Caldwell as one of the teams that the Bruins must be very ready for if they plan to win.

"They are a good ball club," Coach Knecht said. "I put good ball club into the reference frame that they aren't a Capital or a Borah but they are every bit as good as many teams in the Southern Idaho Conference."

"They appear to be a solid club with three excellent skill people," he continued. "They have (Ray) Anthony who they just keep shooting into the middle against you. He's about 210 pounds and a strong fullback, hard to bring down. Then about the time they feel that you have become too conscious of Anthony inside, they hit you with that long pass. And (Quarterback) Free can throw it 50 yards and they give him good protection. They have the receivers, especially one who can get deep and catch the ball. They did that three times to Nampa last week."

"I don't think that overall Caldwell is a big team. Just about our size with the exception of Anthony. They appear to have pretty good quickness. And their big plus is they will give Free protection when he's trying to throw."

Looking at his own team, Coach Knecht said "I think we can out of the Minico game in pretty good shape. We had a few minor injuries but nothing, I don't believe, that will keep anyone out of the lineup Friday. The question mark is (250-pound tackle) big Beale. He fell on a shoulder and dislocated it in practice Tuesday night. I understand he has a history of dislocations so it might be that he will be available to play at least some Friday night. But we'll just have to see."

Concerning the first game, Coach Knecht said he had to be pleased with the victory but there were some pluses and minuses.

"On the plus side, Minico got inside our 20-yard line and the boys just dug in and held them out. That is a big plus. Defensively we played pretty well with a couple of exceptions caused by mental mistakes. But you have to expect a few of those. Another plus was although we were in an entirely new offense for these young men, we had only a couple of penalties and two of those were for our receiver lining up outside. All those things are pluses."

"The minuses are that we were inside their 20-yard line a couple of other times and we couldn't get it in. That dropped pass in the end zone and then the other time when we lined up outside inside their 10, got the five-yard penalty and didn't get it."

"The coach said the basically second half nemesis of fumbled quarterback-center exchanges was a very big minus that he would like to see end forever."

The Bruins are running junior Mike Liebert at halfback this week and the coach would like to see the youngster in there quite a bit. "He gives us considerably more speed at that position. The trouble is he has a problem with injuries...series of things that in themselves aren't really serious but keep him out of practices and games."

The coach says the Bruins still are playing their season plan of playing directly to each game. Previously, he had stated that total emphasis would be given to each game with last week forgotten and next week a total mystery as far as thinking goes.

Idaho State invades Utah Saturday night

POCATELLO — Possibly Idaho State's toughest task of the 1978 football season will be preparing for Saturday's game with the University of Utah.

The Bengals and Utes meet at 7:30 p.m. in Rice Stadium.

The Bengals returned from Sunday's game against Utah State in Osaka, Japan, at 9:30 p.m. Monday and coach Bud Hake immediately began preparations. Jet Ing is sure to effect the ISU squad, just as it did the Bengals and Aggies on the trip to Japan plus the team has just four days to get ready. The Utes will be playing their first game.

Hake has a high regard for Utah's offensive strength. "Last year Utah passed more than it ran with quarterback Randy Gomez, a good thrower and scrambler. But Coach (Wayne) Howard improved his running game with a fine recruiting season."

Gomez is the sixth-ranking passer returning to school in 1978 off last year's NCAA stats. He completed 155 of 315 aerials for 2,015 yards. His chief target is split-end Frank Henry, who had 40 receptions for 622 yards.

Showing how the Utes have beefed up their running game is the ascendancy of tailback Robbie Richeson to the starting lineup over returning starter Tony Lindsay, who had 467 yards and a 4.0 average. Richeson is a sophomore who saw only limited duty a year ago.

Redshirt defensive end Jeff Lyall will help improve Utah's defense. Lyall was a three-year letterman playing for Coach Howard at Long Beach State. Outside linebacker Guy Morrell tops the returning Ute defenders.

Last year the Utes posted a 3-8 record and finished fifth in the Western Athletic Conference at 2-5. Utah holds a 2-2 series lead over ISU.

Hake's main task in preparation for Utah is bolstering the kicking game. "I was very displeased with our kicking. We're going back to scratch to straighten it out and we'll work on it all week."

ISU averaged only 32.6 on seven punts and Bengal special team punt coverage was unable to stop fleet Jimmy Bryant and Dave Parlin, who averaged 12 yards on six returns.

However, Hake lauded the defense that allowed Utah State only 188 yards and limited quarterback Eric Hipple to three completions in 15 attempts and picked off three passes.

"I was extremely pleased with our defense," Hake said. "Late in the game we used a defensive front three composed entirely of freshmen and they played well."

The Bengal offense produced 111 yards, but as Hake said, "the rain rendered inoperative everything we worked on for three weeks. But the same is true for Utah State. We planned to throw up to 50 per cent of the time but the typhoon prevented us from doing that."

Weber shifts quarterbacks

By United Press International
Weber State quarterback Morris Bledsoe led the Big Sky Conference in passing last year. But Saturday night he'll be standing on the sidelines when the Wildcats open the 1978 season at home against powerful North Dakota State.

Bledsoe, who threw for nearly 1,900 yards and nine touchdowns in 1977, has lost his starting job to his backup John Lockett.

But coach Pete Riehlman says Lockett isn't the only new Weber State starter for the Wildcat-Bison game. Riehlman said freshman running back Mike Taylor has also earned a first-string berth based on his pre-season performance.

The Weber State-North Dakota State game is just one of a full slate of seven as all the Big Sky teams swing into action Saturday.

call for the Bengals at quarterback. He replaced Kirk Koetter when Koetter separated a shoulder carrying an option run. He may be lost for the season.

Injurywise, Koetter's was the saddest note. But on the positive side, offensive guard Tom Townsend, who had injured a knee in practice the week before, came out of the game in fine shape.

Preparing for battle

Defensive end Rob Newell of Twin Falls and head Coach Ed Knecht check an injury to Newell's wrist as they and the Bruins prepare to take on Caldwell's Cougars tonight at Bruil stadium. Newell, shifted to defensive end for the opener against Minico, drew praise from Coach Knecht for outstanding effort in a totally new position. Newell doubts the injury will keep him out of action Friday.

Celtics' Dave Bing announces retirement

BOSTON (UPI) — Dave Bing, the mainstay of an injured and ineffective Boston Celtic backcourt last season, and in his prime one of basketball's top guards, retired Thursday.

Bing, 34, was talked into playing for Boston last season by Red Auerbach, who had always coveted the former Syracuse All American, the second player picked in the 1966 National Basketball Association draft.

Bing, a seven-time All Star, averaged 20.3 points per game in his 12-year career. He is 12th on the NBA scoring list with 18,327 points. Last year, he averaged 13.6 points for Boston, fourth on the team behind Dave Cowens, John Havlicek and White.

Bing, who took over the Celtic backcourt leadership last year when Jo Jo White was injured and Charley Scott was traded, blossomed into one of the few bright spots during last year's 32-50 season.

"Dave performed above and beyond any expectations under unusually difficult circumstances last year," Auerbach said. "We were very sorry to hear he wishes to retire but understand his desire to disrupt his family for another year. He played for us in the true Celtic mold and it was a pleasure to have him on the squad."

Bing told the Celtics from his Southfield, Mich., home that he would like to stay in basketball in some capacity.

The Washington D.C. native was the first round pick of Detroit in 1966 and played nine seasons with the Pistons and two with the Washington Bullets before coming to Boston.

Petrie calls Walton victim of bad aides

PORTLAND, Ore. (UPI) — "It's sickening," said Geoff Petrie, the first ever Portland Trail Blazer, when asked his opinion about Bill Walton's defection from Oregon's major pro team.

"I think it is a real tragedy what Bill has allowed to be said in his name by a couple of people I consider to be social misfits," Petrie said of Walton spokesmen Jack Scott and John Bassett.

Petrie, who is the property of the Atlanta Hawks and out for two seasons because of a knee problem, spoke out in an interview with Oregon Journal sports writer Ken Wheeler about the Walton affair, and came especially to the defense of team physician Dr. Robert Cook.

"I've never met a more competent or compassionate guy that Dr. Cook is," said Petrie. Cook also is Petrie's personal physician. The innuendo raised by the Walton camp about Blazer medical practices, said Petrie, "is disgusting. I don't see how they can criticize Bob's medical practices with the team. I know when I was with the Blazers and had a problem, Bob was the first guy to say, 'Hey, let's get another opinion.' And I know that Walton got kid gloves treatment."

"When I was with the Trail Blazers, I had some differences with management," Petrie added. "But I'm glad to see that owner Larry Weinberg stood up to Bill on this matter and told him he wasn't running the team."

"I look, I've heard Bill refer to doctors he had before as being butchers. The guy has been hurt ever since he set foot on a basketball court. At this point, I have no respect for him."

"Bob Cook defended Bill back when he wasn't the popular thing to do. He defended him in private and in public. As far as I'm concerned, there is no rationale to this thing. In all my years in sports, I never have seen anything like it, never heard of anything like it."

"Bill was Bob's friend. Bob treated Bill with honesty, compassion and friendship. Now I wonder if Bill understands those kind of feelings. If he's capable of those kind of feelings, he wouldn't let this happen."

"Look, the three of us—Bill, Bob and I—have been out drafted together, almost drafted together. You would think that we shared something. But this is one of the most sickening things I have been close to in my life. What's the most sickening is that two guys like Bassett and Scott go on and on in the papers with their innuendo. And it's patently untrue."

"In his book about Bill Walton and the Blazers, Scott wrote that I nearly died from an overdose of butazolidin. That's totally untrue."

"I don't care what happens to Bill Walton. But I do care what happens if this has any negative effect on Bob Cook, who was on the front lines in Viet Nam trying to save 18-year-old boys from death, sucking blood from their lungs with ball point pens."

"This is a guy who just wouldn't do anything that would hurt a person. He's still my personal physician. I think he's made of gold."

Petrie left for Atlanta Thursday for another check on his knee, and with some hope of returning to action in the NBA where he was an All Star performer with Portland and one of the league's top pure shooters. Portland traded him along with center Steve Hawes to the Hawks for rights that brought the Blazers Maurice Lucas in the ABA dispersal draft.

Walton ends association with Scott

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) — Basketball superstar Bill Walton, in a prepared statement released through an attorney, said Thursday he has ended his business relationship with confidant Jack Scott and he expects to sign a contract with an NBA team other than the Portland Trail Blazers by Oct. 1.

"I am grateful for the consideration Jack gave in helping me," Walton said. "I retained him to begin the process of securing a release from the Portland Trail Blazers, and that phase has been completed."

"Jack will return to his own projects and I intend to continue to pursue a contract with a team other than Portland. I expect this process to be completed by the first of October. From this day on, I will be speaking for myself alone."

Walton, who is on crutches because of an injured foot and probably cannot play in the 1979 season, became disenchanted with the Trail Blazers, he said, over their medical practices involving the use of pain-killing drugs. About a month ago he asked them to affect a trade with another team.

The Golden State Warriors if a trade could be worked out. Nothing has come of negotiations with the Warriors and last week Walton said he might re-consider remaining with the Blazers. But after a weekend of talks with the club, he said he still wished to be traded.

The latest reports have him dealing with the new San Diego franchise.

Holmes sees little hope for Spinks

AUSTIN, Texas (UPI) — World Boxing Council heavyweight champion Larry Holmes said Thursday World Boxing Association champion Leon Spinks does not have the skill to survive next week's return bout with Muhammad Ali.

"I feel All will win because Spinks does not have the boxing ability," I think and I hope All will win," Holmes said.

Holmes was attending a news conference in the Texas Capitol where he endorsed Democratic governor nominee John Hill, admitting, however, he had not met Hill.

Holmes was the WBC crown from 1976 to 1979, who was awarded the title after Spinks refused to fight Holmes after winning the crown.

Holmes said he hopes the WBC and WBA champions can meet in the future to settle the issue of who is undisputed heavyweight champion, but indicated he isn't in any rush to fight either Spinks or Ali.

"I want to be a fighting champion and will fight all comers," he said. "We're not going to wait on Muhammad Ali and we're not going to wait on Leon Spinks, we're just going to go do our own thing."

Holmes said he is attempting to schedule the first defense of his title in November against European champion Alfredo Evangelista, a loser to Ali in an earlier bout.

Promoter Don King told reporters he hopes All will retire if he regains the WBA crown from Spinks in their Sept. 15 fight in New Orleans.

"We really don't want to fight All," King said. "If he is blessed enough to win the championship a third time we hope he will retire. If he should want to continue to fight we would have to accommodate him, and I think it would be to his own peril."

Holmes said he could easily win the WBA crown to go along with his WBC title if Spinks is successful in defending against Ali in New Orleans.

"Leon Spinks does not have the boxing ability or the boxing knowledge to stay in the ring with me," he said.

Crawford heads for Chicago

MOSCOW (UPI) — A Soviet court Thursday convicted American businessman F. Jay Crawford of buying blackmarket rubles and six antique samovars but allowed him to walk away a free man with a five-year suspended sentence.

"It's not what I wanted but it's what I got," said Crawford, who protested his innocence throughout his two-day trial on currency speculation charges. The 37-year-old Mobile, Ala., businessman left Moscow City Court immediately after the verdict, flashed a victory sign to reporters, then jumped in his car and drove to the U.S. Embassy where he started filling out the forms for a visa to leave the Soviet Union. "I am going on vacation," Crawford said. "I will be in Chicago later ... as soon as I get an exit visa." That could take up to seven days but Crawford, a Moscow salesman for the Chicago-based International Harvester Co., said he hoped the Soviets would rush his visa application through. He said he was booked on a Friday night flight to Frankfurt, West Germany. Judge Lev Mironov's predictable decision finally defused the cowboy-booted tractor salesman as an international issue. Sources close to the case predicted the verdict would be a prelude to a Soviet offer to swap imprisoned dissidents Anatoly Shebaransky and Anatoly Filatov for two alleged Soviet spies being held in the United States. But in Washington, the State Department ruled out any link between the Crawford case and the two Soviets being tried in Woodbridge, N.J., on spy charges. Describing the action against Crawford as "improper and unwarranted," spokesman Hodding Carter III added, "As far as we are concerned, the release of Crawford is not part of a bigger deal. It is not connected with any kind of swap, or anything of the sort, involving the so-called Woodbridge Two." In Chicago, a spokesman for International Harvester said the Soviets put on a "show" trial with evidence "so weak and inconclusive as to be unworthy of comment." "The Embassy is pleased that Mr. Crawford will not be imprisoned. We anticipate that Mr. Crawford will shortly depart the Soviet Union, a U.S. Embassy spokesman said. "Mr. Crawford has consistently proclaimed his innocence of any wrongdoing and the court proceedings support his position," the spokesman said.

Palestinian stronghold target for Christians

BEIRUT, Lebanon (UPI) — Israeli-backed Christian militiamen unleashed a fierce artillery attack on a Palestinian stronghold in south Lebanon Thursday and a rightist leader charged the United States and Syria were plotting against the militias. Israel added to the tension during the second day of the Camp David Middle East summit meeting by sending jet fighters cracking sonic booms over the border area and deploying gunboats off the Lebanese coast. In Beirut's southeast Christian suburbs — where Israel's militia allies have battled Syrian peace-keeping troops since February — residents reported sniper fire but no immediate resumption of full-scale fighting. Christian militiamen near the southeast frontier early Thursday rained heavy shellfire on the Palestinian-dominated town of Nabatiyeh.

Congress bristling over deal

WASHINGTON — The Carter administration, seeking to complete a controversial arms deal with Iran, is facing congressional opposition and uneasiness over the sale amid criticism that the administration was juggling figures in its promise to curb arms sales abroad.

The Iranian arms deal — which one congressman said gets "high yanks for stupidity" — involves an administration decision to sell the Shah of Iran some $300 million worth of weaponry for 12 expensive guided-missile frigates that will be built in Dutch and West German shipyards.

Congressional sources said Iran had wanted to buy the frigates as escorts for four big Spruance class destroyers that the Nixon and Ford administrations agreed to sell Iran. Initially, the shah wanted the hulls and propulsion systems for the frigates to be built in U.S. shipyards.

But President Carter, who announced last year measures last year to restrict the sales of U.S. weapons abroad and vowed to reduce transfers, apparently told the shah that he would have to choose between the frigates and some other expensive weapons system, such as the airborne warning and control system plane (AWACS).

The president apparently told the shah that Iran could not buy them all and stay within the president's self-imposed ceiling on overseas arms sales.

Congressional sources said the shah, after deciding to buy the hulls and propulsion systems for 12 guided-missile frigates from the Netherlands and West Germany, then formally requested the U.S. weaponry so that the frigates would have the same weapons as the destroyers they were to protect. The arms include high-powered automatic guns, surface-to-surface missiles and a torpedo-launching system.

Early last month, Congress was informed that the sale of the armaments for the European-built ships had been approved by Carter. Since then several congressmen have protested the sale, largely on grounds that the arrangement undercuts the arms sales policy and, at the same time, damages the U.S. shipbuilding industry, which will lose over $2 billion to the Europeans who are constructing the frigates.

Britons told no elections coming soon

LONDON — Prime Minister James Callaghan sprang one of the biggest political surprises of the postwar era on the British public Thursday night by announcing that there would be no general election in the near future.

In a brief television speech, the prime minister said the present Labor government would carry on "because we are doing what is best for Britain." He conceded that without a majority in the House of Commons, and without the guaranteed support of the Liberal Party, he would be "more vulnerable" in Parliament. But he argued vigorously that an election this fall would solve nothing.

"Let's see it through together," Callaghan told the nation in a dramatic live broadcast from his office at 10 Downing Street.

The leaders of opposition parties expressed astonishment and some irritation at Callaghan's decision to soldier on.

Mrs. Margaret Thatcher, the Conservative Party leader, said the prime minister had made "a mistake" and had ignored the national interest. "He should now properly seek the verdict of the people," she added, accusing Callaghan of timidity at a time when "he has lost his majority and with it the authority to govern."

David Steel, the Liberal leader, called the announcement "truly astounding." He said the country would be disappointed by what he described as a decision "to stagger through a difficult winter with no majority."

Rifle was aimed at publicity . . . not at Andrus

KLAMATH, Calif. (UPI) — Interior Secretary Cecil Andrus dismissed as a publicity stunt the rifle shots fired from a distant car at the end of his tense meeting with Indians angered by a federal ban on one of their traditional fishing rights.

Four or five rifle shots cracked from a passing car some 400 yards away while Andrus and Indian leaders stood near the Klamath River Thursday. The bullets did not come close to the secretary.

Andrus termed the rifle shots a "media show. They aren't out to kill anyone, they just want a solution to the problem."

No time was Andrus understood, De Noto County was turbulent.

The Indians are upset over a federal ban on gill netting salmon who swim up the Klamath River to spawn.

"If you want war we'll give you war," shouted Raymond Mattz, jabbing the secretary in the chest with a finger. A friend quickly pulled away Mattz, who reportedly was angry because he had a share of 651 netted salmon federal officers seized in a truck in nearby Crescent City last week.

The Indians have insisted on their traditional right to net fish from the river even though marine biologists are warning that salmon populations are rapidly falling off.

Andrus said the Indians will federal task force to help draw up a list of full blooded Yurok and Hoopa tribal members eligible to participate in joint political organization that will control the river as it runs through reservation land.

He predicted it would take four months to make the selections. Then the Indians will have the authority as a political body and the federal government, which moved in because of an absence of such an organization, will back away.

Once organized, the Indians will no issue fishing licenses and have the authority to levy taxes on resort owners who fish the river with paying customers.

Andrus said the gill netting ban, enforced by either himself or the federal government, will remain in effect until marine biologists assure him that minimum of 115,000 salmon have reached the spawning ground. At the latest count only 55,000 had made it past the Indian gill nets, anglers and other perils such as sea lions near the mouth of the river and ocean fishing trawlers.

The Indians had promised to stop defying the federal fishing moratorium if Andrus would meet with them.

The meeting ended abruptly, however when a Yurok Indian, Eleanor Logan, shouted: "Just a minute. The feds are out there harassing people with guns."

She said the Indians were on the river trying to catch fish for a religious ceremony known as the "Deerskin," and that people

Ballistics expert Monty Lutz displays weapon used to kill John Kennedy

Ballistics expert supports Warren Commission findings

WASHINGTON (UPI) — An Army ballistics expert Friday told a House committee in vivid detail of tests involving gelatine-filled skulls and live animals used by researchers investigating the gunshots that killed John F. Kennedy.

Ballistics expert Larry Sturdivan told the House Assassinations Committee the evidence supported the Warren Commission's finding that one bullet probably passed through the president's body and continued on to grievously wound Texas Gov. John Connally.

The assassinations panel concentrated in its third day of hearings on the Nov. 22, 1963, killing in Dallas on the weapons involved and particularly on the key question whether a single bullet could have hit both Kennedy and Connally and emerge almost unmarked.

If they were struck by separate bullets, the theory of more than one gunman would be given major support.

A four man panel of ballistics experts, convened by the committee, found the "president would not have been a difficult target for someone familiar with Lee Harvey Oswald's 6.5 mm Mannlicher-Carcano rifle at about 60 yards range and at the 11 m.p.h. speed at which Kennedy was traveling.

George Lutz, a firearms and toolmark analyst, testified, "I believe it would not appear to be a difficult shot with or without the (scope) device by a person familiar with the firearm.

"At that speed?" Rep. Floyd Filthian, D-Ind., asked.

Lutz replied "It would not be difficult."

Sturdivan showed films of ballistics experiments he performed for the Warren Commission, including shooting low and high velocity bullets through blocks of gelatin.

He told the committee "no bullet goes straight when it enters a solid mass," which could account for the missile's change of trajectory in hitting both Kennedy and Connally.

Some of the bullets deviated within the gelatin by as much as 90 degrees. Others disintegrated,

Iranian troops gun down demonstrating Moslems

TEHRAN, Iran (UPI) — Armored troops fired steady machine gun bursts Friday into crowds of thousands of Moslem zealots demonstrating in Tehran against the shah in defiance of martial law imposed only hours earlier.

Government figures broadcast by the state-run radio said 57 persons were killed and 205 wounded in the day-long battles. But estimates based on reports from witnesses and hospital sources put the toll of dead at up to 250 with hundreds more wounded.

Martial law was declared in Tehran and 11 other major cities as rioting sparked by Moslem traditionalists seeking the Shah's ouster spread.

Tanks and armored cars rumbled through the capital and troops fired first tear gas and then their guns into the crowds that gathered in squares and bazaars shouting "death to the shah!"

The bloodiest confrontation came in the morning at Zohreh Square near the parliament building.

A crowd of several thousand demonstrators shouted slogans and hurled stones until the troops opened fire with steady bursts from their machine guns.

The crowd scattered but regrouped in other parts of the capital, including the grand bazaar district, which has been the center of recurring demonstrations since early this year by Moslem extremists protesting the shah's attempts to modernize Iran.

Rioters ransacked two banks and set fire to several stores, including a four-story department store.

Three hospitals in the main riot area were packed with victims and their weeping relatives. Residents gave shelter to many of the wounded as they ran wildly through the streets, frantic for cover and bleeding from bullet wounds.

A number of homes in the Zohreh Square area were turned into improvised clinics where sympathetic doctors treated patients who feared being arrested if they went to hospitals.

A different story?

Sheriff doesn't believe Bressette misunderstood

By BONNIE BAIRD JONES
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — The Twin Falls County sheriff does not believe his deputy misunderstood Donald Bressette, who was cleared Thursday of charges he threatened the president.

U.S. Attorney Karl Shurtliff in Boise did not disclose the reason for dropping charges against Bressette, who is expected to be released from a Boise hospital soon.

Bressette, 40, of Twin Falls, however, told the Times-News Thursday his arrest Aug. 22 was based on a misunderstanding — by a Twin Falls Deputy.

Deputy Sheriff Ike Maxson stated to authorities he took a telephone call Aug. 16 from an anonymous male caller who stated he was part of a radical group which planned to harm President Carter during his recent Idaho vacation trip. The statement and a letter led to Bressette's arrest.

Sheriff Paul Corder said his deputy called him and told him what had happened.

"I told him to sit down while the call was fresh in his mind and write down exactly what the caller had said," Corder said. "I told him, 'Don't do anything else first but write it down now while you have it fresh in your mind.'"

Corder said Maxson is a top law enforcement officer and very thorough in an investigation or other matter, and he said he does not believe he would make an error of this magnitude.

Corder said the "letter" Bressette told the Times-News he mailed to the sheriff's office with maps, was not mailed.

"It was found thrown in front of our office door in the hallway of the courthouse by one of the girls when she came to work. Someone had cut the letters 'TF' from a newspaper and the word 'sheriff' from a magazine," Corder said.

He said there was no message, only a map of the Salmon River's Middle Fork area with marks at various locations.

"I feel if someone had heard a conversation in a restaurant and wanted to warn us, he could have come into the office and talked to one of us. We are here 24 hours a day. I don't think if the purpose was to warn authorities, he would have gone to the trouble of cutting out letters to address the message to me," Corder said about Bressette's explanation of his call and letter.

The sheriff also said Bressette had contacted the sheriff's office in the past — and had been given help by officers in solving motorcycle problems in his neighborhood.

"He was somewhat familiar with our office and would have had no difficulty contacting us," Corder added.

The sheriff said when Maxson contacted him about the telephone call and was told to write it down immediately, he was also told to then notify the Federal Bureau of Investigation with a full report.

"Deputy Maxson did what I told him to do and I think I told him the right thing," he said. "We would do the same thing again. Had we ignored it and something had happened I'm sure we would all be in a lot of trouble," Sheriff Corder said.

No suspects reported in murder of bar owner

By BONNIE BAIRD JONES
Times-News writer

Ms. Woodland was found dead of knife wounds Wednesday night in the restroom of her Main Avenue bar.

Although officers have been working almost around the clock on the case since about 11:30 p.m. Wednesday, Police Chief Tim Qualls said he has not issued any warrants for arrest and has no suspects in custody.

He said a number of items are being prepared for shipment to the Federal Bureau of Investigation laboratory for comparisons. The results could shed some new light on the case, he said.

Officers were called to S and G's bar at the corner of Main Avenue North and 6th Street North about 11:30 p.m. Friday by a bar patron who happened in and discovered the woman's body in the men's restroom of the building. Her throat had been cut, and she sustained two knife wounds in the chest, according to County Coroner Cloyce Edwards.

Officers have been questioning patrons of the bar, associates of the dead woman and others who might be able to shed some light on the death. Ms. Woodland and a partner, Ginger Worley had recently purchased the bar.

Late Friday Qualls said he had "nothing new to report" but the intensive investigation is continuing. He said he can not reveal what items are being sent to the crime laboratory for comparison.

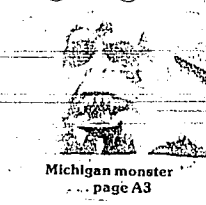

Ms. Woodland tended bar at the tavern, formerly known as Walt's Tavern, and customers were known to have had been in the establishment until about 10:30 p.m.

Shortly after 11 p.m., a customer, whose identity was withheld by police, entered the building and found it open but empty. He told police he waited, thinking the bartender was in a back room.

When she failed to appear he wrapped on the women's restroom door but got no answer. He then opened the door to the men's restroom where he found her body and notified police and an ambulance. Officers said there also was a robbery of money from the cash register.

Good morning!

Kennedy in Moscow

MOSCOW (UPI) — Sen. Edward Kennedy acknowledged Friday that the U.S. Senate is in a "tough mood" about the Soviet Union and said he will meet with Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev Saturday to discuss some of the factors that have led to the decline in superpower relations.

"This is a difficult and trying time in U.S.-Soviet relations," he said.

"It's a tough mood at the present time but well just have to wait and see what steps are taken to improve it," he said. "I would hope to be able to at least express one senator's view about some of the factors that have impacted and influenced the Senate."

North Korean guest

TOKYO (UPI) — Chinese Vice Premier Teng Hsiao-Ping arrived in the North Korean capital of Pyongyang Friday as guest of honor for celebrations today marking the 30th anniversary of the founding of North Korea's Communist government.

But the Soviet Union will be very much in the background this time.

Teng was welcomed by 66-year-old President Kim Il Sung, who has ruled North Korea ever since his guerrilla soldiers marched in with the Soviet army at the end of World War II.

Gurus under fire

BAGUIO, Philippines (UPI) — Authorities Friday considered banning two American gurus of Soviet defector Viktor Korchnoi from the playing site of the world chess championship.

Stephen Michael Dwyer, 31, and Victoria Sheppard, 32, have been giving Korchnoi yoga meditation lessons in an attempt to counter the alleged powers of an opposition Russian mind bender.

Border talks

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (UPI) — Argentine troops marched through the streets of a southern town bordering with Chile and planes simulated an air attack as the two countries prepared to resume talks on a long-standing frontier dispute, officials said Friday.

An Argentine official said further air raid drills and blackout practices would be held next week along key areas of Argentina's Chilean frontier. The talks begin next Wednesday.

U.N. troops blocked

BEIRUT, Lebanon (UPI) — Israeli-armed Christian militiamen blocked U.N. troops from setting up positions near the Israeli border Friday and the worst fighting in a month broke out in Beirut, posing a new crisis for the Camp David peace summit, 5,500 miles away.

Residents in south Lebanon said Christian militiamen in Marjayoun shelled a Norwegian U.N. contingent for about 90 minutes while Israeli reconnaissance jets cracked sonic booms overhead.

Attacking disease

NEW YORK (UPI) — City engineers began draining and disinfecting water towers atop buildings in Manhattan's garment district Friday in an effort to eliminate a possible source of Legionnaires' disease.

City health officials also ordered continued flushing with water and disinfectant of streets and subway stations in the area to sanitize pools of stagnant water that may have harbored bacteria of the disease.

Only a pawn?

FRANKFURT, West Germany (UPI) — American businessman F. Jay Crawford, in West Germany briefly today with his fiancée, insists he was only a pawn, the Russians played to win release of two suspected Soviet spies from a New Jersey jail.

Crawford and his American fiancée, Miss Virginia "Ginny" Olbrish, were to fly to Chicago on to Chicago today aboard Lufthansa flight 430. He will report to company directors, then take a few days leave, he said.

SALT talks end

MOSCOW (UPI) — Chief U.S. arms negotiator Paul Warnke wrapped up two days of "useful and constructive" talks with Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko and says he is hopeful a new strategic arms limitation agreement can be reached by the end of 1978.

Warnke, director of the U.S. Arms Control and Disarmament Agency, flew back to Washington Friday.

Plane crashes in Nicaragua

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (UPI) — Two American mercenaries and a high official of Nicaragua's National Guard were killed Friday in the crash of a light plane over an area with reported troops movements near the Costa Rican border.

The crash, which also killed a Vietnamese refugee aboard the Aero-Commander craft, occurred during heightened protests against the government of President Anastasio Somoza Debayle, whose family has ruled Nicaragua for more than 40 years.

National Guard press spokesman Col. Aquiles Aranda identified the Americans as Michael Echanis, 27, of Memphis, Tenn., and Carlos Wilfred Sanders, 28. The plane was piloted by Brig. Gen. Jose Ivan Allegret Perez, chief of operations of the National Guard, he said.

Somoza said in a recent interview he had hired the two Americans, both Vietnam veterans, to train his troops in anti-guerrilla warfare. He said they were signed to a private two-year contract.

The crash, which the National Guard spokesman said was caused by bad weather, occurred in the area of Lake Nicaragua, which forms part of the border with Costa Rica. There were unconfirmed reports of troops movements in the area Friday.

Echanis and Sanders were well known to the foreign community in Managua and Sanders recently was seen passing out a calling card stating his profession as "mercenary."

Tomorrow

Among the stories in tomorrow's Times-News:

The statistics on Idaho beer sales in 1977 may surprise some people. They show the state is the 10th largest beer drinking state per capita in the nation. That works out to 25.3 gallons of beer for every Idaho man, woman and child.

Before there was a Twin Falls, in the 1890s, a group of pioneers were talking about bring land to a section of the arid Magic Valley. They labored mightily, but now the name of that section, Blue Gulch, is just a romantic memory of what might have been. Read it in tomorrow's Times-News.

White House denounces report on moratorium

CAMP DAVID, Md. (UPI) — "The White House Friday described as 'uninformed speculation at best' a report that the Israel proposed a moratorium on future Jewish settlements along the West Bank, Gaza Strip and the Sinal Desert.

The report was carried in the Boston Herald American and other newspapers of the Hearst group.

Asked about the report, White House spokesman Jody Powell insisted that the news blackout around the Camp David summit has been effective, and he said, "There have been no leaks."

He was referring specifically to the Hearst report and described it as "uninformed speculation."

Although Begin is willing to stop future settlements on the Sinal, Gaza Strip and West Bank, according to the Hearst report, he is reportedly standing firm in his insistence that Jews be given the right to buy land in those areas once Abarat take control.

Carter irks Rhodesian

SALISBURY, Rhodesia (UPI) — A Rhodesian church leader Friday denounced President Carter's "deafening silence" on the terrorist killings of 49 people and a bishop scuffed with demonstrators disrupting a memorial service for the dead.

The Anglican dean of Salisbury, the very Rev. John Da Costa, told an overflow crowd of more than 1,000 mourners in Salisbury's Anglican Cathedral that the guerrillas who shot down a civilian airliner with a heat-seeking missile horrified even God.

By United Press International
Today is Saturday, Sept. 9, the 252nd day of 1978 with 113 to follow.

The moon is in its first quarter. The morning stars are Mercury, Jupiter and Saturn. The evening stars are Mars and Venus.

Those born on this date are under the sign of Virgo. American scientist Joseph Leydy was born Sept. 9, 1823.

On this day in history: In 1776, the second Continental Congress officially changed the American nation's name from "United Colonies" to "United States."

In 1943, American and British troops from North Africa invaded Italy at Salerno. In 1971, more than 1,000 convicts took over the state prison at Allica, N.Y., and held 35 convicts hostage.

Four days later, 28 convicts and nine hostages were killed as state police re-took the prison. In 1970, Chinese Communist Party Chairman Mao Tse-lung died at the age of 82.

A thought for the day: Massachusetts Gov. Calvin Coolidge, who later became the 31st president, said, "There is no right to strike against public safety, anywhere, anytime."

Kindergarten may go if 1% becomes law

By RICHARD CHARNOCK
BOISE (UPI) — District administrators and kindergartens may be the first to go if state school funds have to be cut back to cushion the blow of the 1 percent initiative, a consortium of educators said Friday.

Composed of representatives of teachers, trustees, parents, superintendents and the state Department of Education, the coalition outlined for the Board of Education where cuts might have to be made.

With Public Instruction Superintendent Roy Truby as their spokesman, they stressed their guidelines simply were made in response to a request from Gov. John V. Evans to outline how they could cut 30 percent out of next year's maintenance of operation requests.

Truby said, in an interview before the meeting, he doubted if such a "disaster" would strike the public schools, but he said some sort of guidelines would have to be developed if it did.

From the general fund, the consortium recommended the state appropriate $22,206,000 next year. That is $21,741,100 more than the current appropriation or an increase of 9.43 percent in aid and an increase of 9 percent in weighted average daily attendance support.

Tax cut proposals under fire

BOISE (UPI) — One speaker ridiculed the 1 percent property tax initiative — and others generally criticized it — at an Idaho Public Association panel discussion Thursday at Boise.

Don Rolfe of the Idaho Education Association called the initiative an "unmitigated disaster." Rolfe, saying there is no fat in Idaho government as the initiative's backers have said, also labeled it as poorly drafted and ill-conceived.

Rolfe and other speakers agreed the initiative, now known as Proposition 1, will be defeated on election day in November.

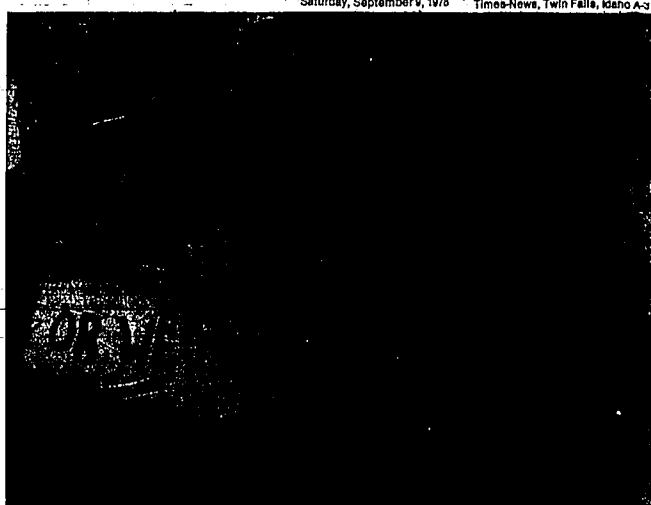

"The initiative will be with us in the 1979 Legislature whether it passes or not," Rolfe said. "But I would like to start getting needed property tax reform with a clean slate, without this terrible bill."

Rolfe said the initiative is similar to California's Proposition 13, "so similar that some of the laws it refers to do not exist in Idaho."

Idaho's farmers and homeowners need property tax relief, but they should not get from the initiative, Rolfe said. "Idaho cannot afford the 'relief' the initiative would provide."

He cited drastic cuts the state's school districts would have to make to survive the initiative. The measure would eliminate several programs outright, drastically reduce others and put most schools below accreditation levels, he said.

Among items eliminated in smaller schools would be all extra-curricular activities, transportation and hot-lunch programs. In large districts, the school-year would be cut short by 20 days and teacher salaries would be slashed.

Three costumed tax cut supporters demonstrate their views in Lansing, Mich.

Michigan to vote on tax cut

By JOANNA FIRESTONE
LANSING, Mich. (UPI) — Barring judicial intervention, Michigan citizens will vote this fall on a California-style tax-cut proposal that would slash property taxes by $1.75 billion, state election officials said Friday.

The Board of State Canvassers, on a 4-0 vote, ruled that enough voter signatures had been gathered to get the so-called Tisch Tax Cut Amendment on the Nov. 7 ballot.

Elections officials decided the Tisch supporters had collected about 13,000 more than the required 266,000 valid signatures.

A group of about 25 Tisch supporters, with bullhorns and banners, demonstrated outside the building where the canvassers met.

Two men, dressed in gorilla suits despite the near 90-degree heat, held a huge banner reading: "Put us on the ballot or we'll turn into monsters."

Three tax reform measures are among Michigan's 11 ballot propositions: the Tisch plan, the Headlee Tax Limitation Amendment and a plan repealing that part of the property tax used for education.

The Tisch and Headlee proposals are being challenged in the Michigan Supreme Court by East Lansing attorney Zalon Ferency, who last month lost a bid for the Democratic nomination for governor. Ferency, regarded as an expert on Michigan constitutional law, claims the Headlee and Tisch plans are unconstitutional.

The Headlee Tax Limitation Amendment would prohibit state taxation and spending from growing at a rate faster than citizens' total personal income. It has been endorsed by most public officials.

Nation's schools still idled by strikes

By JACK LESAR
United Press International

School principals showed up at strike-bound Cleveland schools Friday to open classes for more than 100,000 pupils but found themselves locked out by the strikers.

The few children who did show up for the opening day of schools were sent home, joining the ranks of more than 800,000 students idled by teachers' strikes in a dozen states.

Strikes were reported in Illinois, Pennsylvania, Vermont, Rhode Island, Connecticut, Michigan, Louisiana, Washington, California, Idaho, Ohio, New York and New Jersey.

The number of students affected by walkouts was expected to drop sharply next week with the resumption of classes for 250,000 Philadelphia public school pupils. But threatened strikes — including a walkout set for next week against the 70,000-student Boston school system — could offset the back-to-school movement.

Martins, Ind., teachers ended an 11-day strike, voting unanimously to accept a tentative agreement reached by negotiators during the night.

Others may follow One postal union signs new pact

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A rural postal workers union signed a new three-year contract Friday, and Postmaster General William Bolger said he expects three other unions representing 500,000 workers to accept binding arbitration, if necessary, to avert a strike.

Negotiators for the Postal Service and the three unions, whose members have worked nearly seven weeks without a contract, bargained face-to-face on the eighth day of a special 15-day mediation process, with no signs of progress.

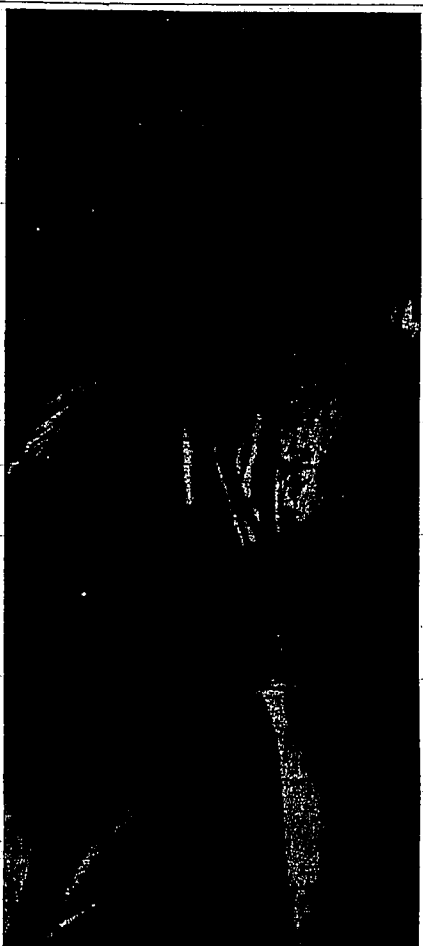

James J. Healy, a Harvard University labor relations expert who is supervising the talks, planned to hold sessions through the weekend, said a spokesman for the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service said.

If no agreement is near by Monday or Tuesday, Healy will prepare to issue a binding arbitration decision himself, the spokesman said.

Under an agreement that prevented a walkout on Aug. 29, Healy was given 15 days to either bring about a negotiated settlement or issue a binding decision.

"I expect that they (the unions) will live up to that commitment," Bolger told reporters after signing the new contract with president Clifford Edwards of the 40,000-member National Association of Rural Letter Carriers.

Noting that the law forbids a strike by postal workers and requires binding arbitration in the event of a contract impasse, he said: "You can be sure of one thing — We're going to follow the law."

Elvis Presley in bronze

Statue of Elvis unveiled in Las Vegas

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (UPI) — A 6-foot, 400-pound bronze statue of Elvis Presley was unveiled at a downtown hotel Friday in a ceremony attended by 1,700 persons including his father and ex-wife.

Vernon Presley and his former daughter-in-law, Priscilla, watched as the life-size likeness was publicly displayed to applause and cheering.

Presley said of sculptor Carl Romanelli's work, "I have mixed feelings. It's an honor, but it's still a sad time for me. It captures a lot of his face and hands."

He continued, "The fans have been a great help with their thoughts, but it's been a very tough year for me."

The statue shows the late singer with a guitar draped around his neck with a microphone in his left hand and the right arm extended towards the audience.

Presley first appeared in Las Vegas in 1956.

GSA shuffles personnel as probe continues

By IRA R. ALLEN
WASHINGTON (UPI) — Twenty federal building managers of the scandal-plagued General Services Administration have been reassigned to other positions as part of a major personnel shakeup, GSA announced Friday.

The reassignments were ordered "effective immediately" as grand jury investigations in Washington and Baltimore probed widespread fraud and bribery charges involving the multi-billion dollar government building and maintenance agency.

GSA Administrator Jay Solomon said he expects the investigations to produce indictments against at least 30 employees and office supply and building-maintenance companies.

ABC News reported Friday that a government audit covering a period through 1976 said Computer Sciences Corp., a consulting firm, may have overcharged GSA on a $2.7 million contract. According to ABC, "The GSA concludes that serious questions exist as to the propriety of about $948,000, which appears to have been billed to the government for consulting services."

Further, ABC said, the audit found a former employee of the firm who charged "collusion between employees of contractors and sub-contractors to overcharge the government."

GSA spokesman Peter Hickman said the 20 building managers in the

Washington, D.C., area were transferred "effective immediately" to other GSA posts within the GSA's Region 3, which includes the District of Columbia, Virginia, Maryland, Delaware, Pennsylvania and West Virginia.

Replacements for the transferred managers were also immediately named by John T. Myers, regional commissioner of GSA's Public Building Service.

A green light for L.A. busing

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — Supreme Court Justice William Rehnquist Friday refused to delay Los Angeles' plan to bus 30,000 students, squelching what was seen as the last hope of opponents of the integration program.

Rehnquist, in Washington, turned down an appeal by the group Bustop, which asked him to delay the program pending a review of all aspects of the case. The decision appeared to ensure that the busing program would go into effect next Tuesday when schools open for the fall semester.

Robber barons could loot Alaska

By JOHN B. OAKES
©New York Times Service

Though few Americans outside Alaska seem to be aware of it, a classic struggle to prevent one of the great environmental ripoffs of the 20th century has been taking place this summer in an obscure committee room of the United States Senate — and at this point it looks as though the American people may well turn out to be the losers once again.

The issue is whether the last major areas of ecological significance in the United States, whose ultimate disposition is still in the hands of Congress, will be opened to the usual coterie of developers, prospectors, oil-men, loggers and lobbyists — or whether the unique wildlife, water, forest, wilderness and scenic resources of these fragile Alaskan lands will be protected for the permanent enjoyment and benefit of all the American people who own them. Because of lack of leadership in the Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources, the prognosis at this stage of the game is not good.

It is not as though Alaska — by far the largest state (more than twice the size of Texas) and with by far the smallest population (about that of Buffalo) — were being deprived of what rightfully belonged to it, as many of Alaska's hungry politicians led by two Senators (Stevens and Gravel), would have the American people believe. Congress has already given Alaska and its half-million inhabitants — in the most generous endowment ever bestowed on a new state — the right to select more than 100 million of its total 375 million acres (including Prudhoe Bay and most of the other potential oil lands) as a kind of dowry for economic development. In addition, 45 million acres (and nearly a billion dollars) have been assigned to the 65,000 Aleuts and Eskimos in settlement of native claims.

What more then, can Alaska's people and politicians want? "They want it all, and they want it now," says Chairman Morris K. Udall of the House Interior Committee, who shepherded his Alaska "national interest" land-use bill (H.R. 38) through the House of Representatives in May. This bill, a compromise proposal that badly needs strengthening in the Senate, would at least reserve, under varying degrees of federal protection for conservation purposes, about 100 million acres of Alaska's irreplaceable natural resources, mainly in the form of national parks, wildlife refuges, scenic rivers and wilderness. Left open, for all the development Alaska's get-rich-quick exploiters are capable of, would be at least 90 percent of the state's high-potential oil and gas lands, and 60 to 70 percent of its potential hard-rock mineral producing areas.

Yet many of Alaska's development-oriented politicians, including former Gov. Walter E. Hickel, running again for governor, and Sen. Ted Stevens, running for reelection — with the enthusiastic support of all the potential plunderers on hand — want not merely to cut down the already curtailed and barely adequate areas earmarked for special federal protection under the House bill. Even more important to them and more devastating to the environment, they want to eviscerate the kinds of protection provided, opening particularly fragile areas to miners, oil prospectors and loggers when so much as yet unexplored, less sensitive land is already available to them.

For example, they would undermine the entire system of federal protection in the very areas most in need of it, through high-sounding but totally destructive proposals for "cooperative management" of state and federal lands.

They want the state to be able to select some 10 million acres (of the 100 million allotted to it) that are included in proposed national parks and refuges of vital ecological significance, thus creating inholdings and reducing boundaries to the extreme detriment of some of the very areas most in need of protection. They would open up particularly vulnerable parts of the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge to oil and gas exploration that would be sure to result in decimation of one of the greatest remaining caribou herds on earth, on which many Eskimos rely for their livelihood.

They would shelve the stupendous Gates of the Arctic National Park to promote mining and other forms of exploitation. They would cut into the Yukon Flats for alleged agricultural and probable second-home development, thus further reducing what is still one of the major sources of water fowl for the entire continent. They would encourage commercial loggers to continue to hack away — largely for export to Japan — the spectacular timber resources of southeast Alaska, destroying scenic, watershed and wildlife values which the United States Forest Service itself has been unable or unwilling to protect in the past.

Republican Stevens and his Democratic colleague Gravel have both threatened to filibuster the Senate bill if it does not meet their approval; and in a pusillanimous attempt to appease them, the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee under Sen. Henry Jackson of Washington (whose great conservation record of the past is in danger of being swept away by his weak leadership in the present crisis) has been giving the exploiters practically everything they want. The bill to be reported from committee next month looks now as if it is going to be virtually dictated by Stevens — who is not even a member of the committee but seems to be controlling it. It is shaping up as a rejection of the view held by most Americans (as the polls clearly show) that it is more to the national interest to preserve Alaska's multifaceted resources intact in the most crucial and sensitive areas than it is to exploit every last acre for immediate and transitory gains.

If the Senate bill as now emerging cannot be revised in conformity at least with the House measure, then no law is likely to be approved before Congress' self-imposed December deadline. In that case, "it is the Alaskans themselves who will suffer first, as the status of virtually all the lands in question will be thrown into doubt once again — and their use for development or any other purpose will be indefinitely stymied. But the loss would be a national one, too, for Congress ignoring popular opinion and yielding to localized and concentrated pressure groups, would have proved itself this year powerless to prevent the most blatant giveaway of — natural, — environmental — and ecological values since the days of the robber barons a century ago.

Revisiting Huckleberry Finn in the 1970s

It was the last lazy day of summer vacation before school began. Huck and Tom were stretched out on the riverbank. Huck was chewing on a stalk of grass.

"Got a light?" Huck asked.
"Sure," Tom said, flipping a Bic.
"That grass any good?"

"Not bad. Have a stalk."
"Thanks, where'd you get it?"
"Injun Joe."
"He still deals'n grass? I thought he got busted."

Women's prison not 'the best use'

A special legislative committee trying to find a site for a women's prison should heed the views of most Gooding residents and cross that city off the list as a possible location.

A better utilization of the facility that the committee should realize is an expanded alcoholic treatment program and continued use by community service activities like local kindergartens, senior citizens' organizations, and the Antique Festival Theatre.

The legislators have been assigned the task of finding a feasible location in Idaho for a women's prison. No date has been set for publication of its final report.

The fact that Gooding citizens are strongly opposed to the idea of a prison in their community was shown again Thursday night when those who spoke against the prison outnumbered proponents by better than 4 to 1.

In addition, surveys in the community have indicated heavy opposition to the idea, and even a poll in the junior and senior high school classes showed the strength of the opponents. That survey indicated 117 were against the prison, while only 11 favored it.

It is really needless to continue the debate over the prison issue in Gooding. Both candidates for governor have come out against it, most of the community doesn't like it, and last year, the legislature refused to approve a request for money to convert the old hospital to a prison.

In more ways than one, it is a dead issue, and should be treated as such by the legislative committee. Even politically. It's likely the prison won't get off the ground. The only real question that remains then is how to make the best use of the old three-building hospital which is only being partly used at the present time.

A suggestion that the space could be used as both a prison and an alcohol treatment center doesn't seem feasible. The two uses don't seem compatible.

As the director of the alcoholism center, Carl Bergstrom, says, alcoholics have been stigmatized too long, and placing them in a prison environment "helps perpetuate the myth they have done something wrong" rather than allowing them to be seen as persons with a treatable disease.

Bergstrom probably has offered the best answer to what to do with the old hospital. He said the center could be expanded and fill a large part of the remaining space.

It seems it would be more economically feasible and logical to expand an existing service in the building than to initiate a new one. With an estimate of more than 60,000 potential alcoholic patients in Idaho, the treatment of these patients at Gooding would be of beneficial service to the entire state.

Removing the center would probably mean the end of a worthwhile service. Financially, the center probably wouldn't be able to survive.

The legislative committee, taking into account the opinions of Gooding residents and these other facts, should begin looking elsewhere for a prison site.

"I didn't know you could play an instrument, Huck."
"I can't. But I can get one and learn. It don't take long. I read in Rolling Stone that The Adenolds made their first hit record two months after they started playing. Now they're millionaires."

"I wish I could do that. I'm tired of school."
"Then don't go. You can get an instrument and we can both become stars."

"I can't. Aunt Polly says I have to finish my last year."
"Tell her you won't."
"I did tell her. But she said if I didn't go to school, she'd take back my Honda and my stereo, make me repay the money I borrowed for rock concert tickets, and I'd have to go out and get a job and pay rent or else I'd have to move out."

"Your aunt is a hard broad."
"Yep. She's been like that ever since she went to see an analyst about

"What did the analyst say?"
"He said that I was just a lazy, selfish, insensitive bum, and that she shouldn't worry. Things haven't been the same since."

"Is that why I can't come over to your house anymore?"
"Yep, she says you're weird."
"Me? What's weird about me?"

"Well you've got to admit, Huck, that not many people have a picture of Charles Manson."
"Plenty do."
"Yeah, but not tattooed on their chests."

"I didn't even know it was him. I thought it was a rock star."
"Anyway, she doesn't want you around. She wouldn't even let me call you so you could help me paint our fence!"

"Did she make you paint that whole fence?"
"Yep. She thought it would keep me busy for a week. But I fooled her and got it finished in one day."

"I used psychology. I convinced half the guys in the neighborhood that painting a fence was fun, so they all got spray cans and joined in."
"No kidding!"

"Yeah. The trouble was they sprayed it with dirty words and gang slogans. I told Aunt Polly it looked great because it reflected contemporary attitudes, but she blew her stack. She said the fence would bring down property values for miles

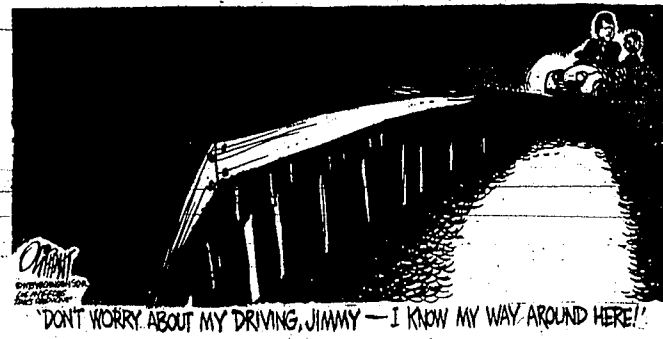

"How's he paying the tuition?"
"Student loan. He says that when he finishes college, he'll change his name, have plastic surgery done, and they'll never catch up with him to collect."

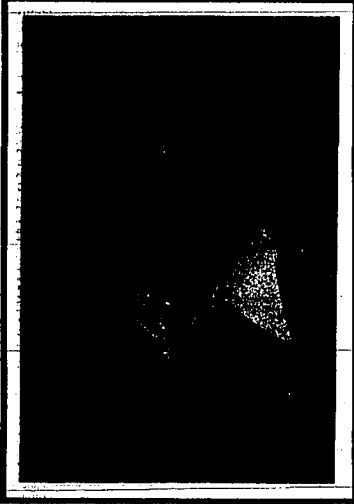

"Maybe I'll turn him in for a finder's fee. Say, Tom, I'm gettin' hungry. Let's go get a pizza."
"I had pizza last night. Let's get some tacos instead."
"I had some tacos for breakfast. Why don't we get Big Macs?"

"That's what I had for breakfast."
"How about some pizzaburgers?"
"OK. Then we can go to the beach."
"Tom, I really feel sorry for you, starting school tomorrow."

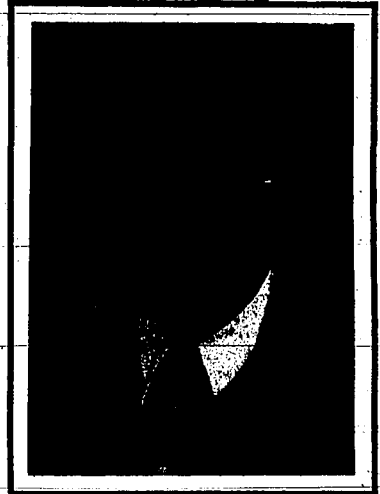

"Yeah, about the only good thing about it is that it means I get to see Becky Thatcher again."
"You still after that? I thought you put a move on her last semester and she told you to bug off!"

"She did. But things will be different this time."
"What makes you think so?"
"I hear she's on the P.M.I."

Perhaps she was crowded out

Landlord Fred Gaston sits amid heaps of garbage filling apartment

DETROIT (UPI) — The woman in Apartment 307 was "nice to everybody," often paid her rent several days early and when she went out, she looked like a fashion model. But Sue Richards never invited anyone into her apartment, said building owner and landlord Fred Gaston.

On Wednesday, Gaston was forced to enter the woman's apartment because the tenant in the apartment below hers complained water was leaking through the ceiling. Gaston could open the door only 18 inches.

Inside was a mountain of garbage — clothing, boxes, cans, bottles and bags that once contained take-out food. Roaches scurried about on the pile, which covered every square inch of the three-room apartment.

In places, garbage was piled four feet high.

Fire officials estimated the garbage took seven years to accumulate. Gaston said Ms. Richards had lived in the building at least 10 years.

"I've never seen anything like this in my life," an investigator said.

Ms. Richards has been missing for several days.

"She always paid her rent — sometimes she paid four or five days early," said Gaston. "Everybody liked her and I never had any reason to go up there."

He said that whenever he asked her for a key to the apartment, she had always "put me off" with excuses and promises to provide the key later.

Tremor stirs old arguments

MUNICH, West Germany (UPI) — Humans can't sense when an earthquake is on the way.

Animals can, although how much in advance of the shock remains in dispute.

Sunday morning, just before West Germany's worst earthquake in 35 years started sleeping citizens all over the south of the country, a tropical fish at Munich's Hellabrunn zoo became upset, apparently by rumble it could feel under the earth.

Zoo keepers felt nothing. But the frantic six-foot fish broke through the wire netting around its aquarium, and died.

Dr. Arnfried Wüenschmann, director of the Hellabrunn zoo, recalled that the elephants lost their cool in 1976 when the tremors of a severe earthquake in northern Italy unnerved humans as far away as Berlin.

Since the quake that caused millions of dollars' worth of damage to homes and businesses Sunday, the Seismographic Observatory in nearby Fuerstenfeldbruck has received over 70 letters from pet owners who say their pets acted strangely just before the quake hit.

Baby rabbits curled up like hedgehogs, dogs barked, cats became upset, it was reported.

But Dr. Eberhard Schmedes of the Fuerstenfeldbruck Observatory doubts that animals sense impending earthquakes more than about 20 seconds earlier than do humans.

Dr. Theodor Haltenorth, a Munich zoologist, takes the opposite view, that animals may sense earthquakes hours or even days in advance.

Unfortunately animals reactions are difficult to measure, Haltenorth says. Animals will have to be observed much more closely if they are to be used as part of an early warning system.

Rolf Schick of Stuttgart University's Geophysics Institute shares Schmedes' doubt, if only because the reports of sensitive animals always come in only after an earthquake.

"Why does no one call us when their canary bird signals an earthquake?" Schick asked rhetorically.

Male flavor vanishing on Providence campus

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (UPI) — A few old-timers near Brown University still talk wistfully of the Saturday nights when Brown men would don their tuxedos and venture across the road to visit the women of Pembroke College.

With its fraternities and sports teams, was strictly a bastion of masculinity.

Then in 1971, Brown and Pembroke merged. Brown kept its male flavor simply because men outnumbered women by 50 percent.

Times are changing.

For the first time in Brown's 214-year history, the freshman class which arrives at the Ivy League school next Monday will have more women than men — 656 men versus 723 women.

"There's nothing alarming about it," said Admissions Director James H. Rogers. "We are 'sex-blind' in our admissions selections procedures and we had an increase in the number of woman applications."

"This has not been a sudden and startling development," school spokesman Bobby Clark said.

It is notable, though, when compared to the rest of the Ivy League.

Harvard plans to welcome 1,030 men and 605 women this month. At Yale, it's 840 men and 535 women. Princeton expects 757 men and 406 women. Dartmouth anticipates 733 men and 315 women.

Columbia will have 750 men, while neighboring Barnard expects 510 women. At the University of Pennsylvania, it's 1,300 men and 835 women. Only Cornell's School of Arts and Sciences generally has a planned even split in its 950 freshmen.

Rogers said Brown accepted about 25 or 30 more men than women this year, but as always, a higher percentage of women accepted the school's bid for admission.

No one really expects a radical change in Brown's atmosphere this year since the number of women has been increasing steadily since the merger. Men will still outnumber women overall.

"As to why all of a sudden we had 51 percent women and 49 percent men this year, I have no full explanation. We take each application as it comes and compare it to all the others," Rogers said.

"I suspect we will find ourselves next year at 52-53 percent male, and 47-48 percent female without it being a goal," he said.

That should appease some of the more traditional graduates of decades past.

Gentle quake in California

WOODLAND, Calif. (UPI) — A gentle earthquake shook the southern Sacramento Valley Friday, triggering worried calls to police switchboards but apparently causing no damage.

In Sacramento, the Department of Water Resources seismologists' first estimate of the tremor's magnitude was 4.1 on the Richter scale.

"I lasted for just a couple of seconds," reported dispatcher Marge Rosasco of the Woodland Police Department. "There have been quite a few calls but no reports of damage."

Designer Cardin pushes curb on counterfeiters

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Designer Pierre Cardin and U.S. trade ambassador Robert Strauss Friday urged international action to curb brand name counterfeiting that threatens everything from Walt Disney movies to blue jeans.

Counterfeit labels may be attached to more than $100 million worth of merchandise a year, officials said, with precise estimates impossible.

Perfumes, watches and cosmetics with false labels have invaded the United States, officials said, while counterfeiting elsewhere has affected chemical companies, liquor distillers, clothes manufacturers and sewing machine makers.

"Piracy of a business brand name is highway robbery of the consumer," declared Strauss, who at one point during a news conference held up a shirt, blue jeans and a tote bag emblazoned with counterfeit labels.

The products look and are labeled exactly like the real product, Strauss said, and the buyer has no way of knowing he is buying a fake.

Cardin, an internationally famous designer with 370 licensees worldwide selling $250 million worth of merchandise annually, said he repeatedly has found counterfeit samples of his products around the world.

"You are surprised to see your name in a window of a shop that never had a license," the designer said.

"You see merchandise with the name Pierre Cardin and they have no reason to be there. They come from Hong Kong."

Customers are cheated, Cardin said, because they spend a great deal for a name brand and may get a fake. And manufacturers lose millions because their products are being undercut by less expensive, similar looking merchandise.

International negotiations already are under way among the 10 largest industrialized nations to tighten rules against counterfeit merchandise. Talks resume in Geneva Tuesday as part of multilateral negotiations on tariff reduction.

The United States and a 10-firm coalition of manufacturers from around the world, including Cardin and Walt Disney Productions favor an accord that would subject counterfeit merchandise to seizure and forfeiture.

Congress already is acting to stiffen U.S. safeguards against counterfeit merchandise.

Bank heist dry run

PALMA, Mallorca (UPI) — A bandit stole $34,000 Friday from the Bank of Catalonia only to be captured a little more than a mile away when his car ran out of gas.

Police arrested the man in his stalled car and said the gun he used to threaten the manager and two employees at the bank was a toy.

Prelate's body returned

ROME (UPI) — The body of Metropolitan Nikodim, the second-ranking primate of the Russian Orthodox Church who died in Pope John Paul I's arms Tuesday, was flown back to the Soviet Union today.

Nikodim, 48, suffered a heart attack during an audience with John Paul, who administered last rites and said the primate died "in my arms" after saying "the most beautiful words about the church that I ever heard."

The body was laid in the Vatican's St. Anna church.

Accompanying it aboard a special Ilyushin-62 Aeroflot airliner was Cardinal Jan-Wilibrand, the Dutch prelate in charge of Vatican relations with other churches, and department undersecretary Monsignor Gianfranco Arrighi.

The funeral of the black-bearded prelate has been set for Sunday in the Orthodox cathedral in Leningrad and will be attended by Metropolitan Juvenal of the Moscow patriarchate, Metropolitan of Minsk Anton and Archbishop of Viborg Kyrill.

Pastor Hicks returns home

TWIN FALLS — Pastor James C. Hicks returned this week from the annual Assemblies of God General Presbytery at the church's international headquarters in Springfield, Mo.

Pastor Hicks is one of three members of the General Presbytery from the South Idaho District.

A highlight of this session was announcement of Dan Betzer of Springfield as the new speaker for the Assemblies of God radio program, "Revivaltime."

The group also decided to construct a new $3 million warehouse for the church's Gospel Publishing House and called for a national leadership training seminar to focus on church growth.

KRISTINE JENSEN leaves on mission

Jensen goes on mission

JEROME — Kristine Jensen will be leaving to serve a mission call as a Welfare Service Missionary in Asuncion, Paraguay.

Miss Jensen is the daughter of Robert A. Jensen and Elzina Glenn Jensen (deceased). Her departure date is scheduled for Sept. 14. She is a graduate of Twin Falls High School and of Brigham Young University and has held a teaching position in the Jerome school system for the past three years.

A farewell to her will be held at 3:30 p.m. Sept. 10, in the Jerome Latter Day Saints First Ward Chapel on East Avenue C in Jerome.

LDS plans new chapel dedication

TWIN FALLS — The new Latter-Day Saints of Jesus Christ Chapel will be dedicated this Sunday at 8:30 p.m. by Pres. David Carter of the Twin Falls Stake.

The building located on Eastland, just south of Falls Avenue, was completed in about 10 months at a cost of $750,000. It will house the Twin Falls Seventh and Eleventh Wards.

The LDS Church, following church policy, paid for the church before dedication. The facility will serve about 1,000 persons. It has 21 teaching stations, a kitchen, gymnasium, offices, library, stage, chapel and Sunday school rooms.

The public is invited to attend dedication and tour the building. A combined choir from the two wards will provide music and Bishop Richard Stiesch of the Seventh Ward and Bishop John Hougaard of the Eleventh Ward will proceed the dedicatory prayer to be offered by Pres. Carter.

Filer Baptist Homecoming

FILER — The First Baptist Church of Filer observes its Homecoming this Sunday.

Rev. Gilbert Myers, minister of the First Baptist Church of Twin Falls, will speak at the afternoon service at 2 p.m. Special music will also be featured. Rev. Will Lane will speak during the 11 a.m. worship.

There will be a potluck dinner at 12:30 p.m. hosted by the church social committee. The church will provide drinks and bread.

Elders visit LDS stake

JEROME — Members of the Jerome, Idaho, Stake will be visited by two general authorities of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints for their general conference on Saturday and Sunday, according to Donald W. Black, president of the Jerome Stake.

Conference sessions will be held at the stake house on Lincoln Street. Elder Mark E. Peterson, a member of the Council of Twelve Apostles, will be featured speaker, and Elder Derek A. Cuthbert, a member of the First Quorum of the Seventy, will also speak.

Elder Peterson is known throughout the church as a forceful speaker and writer. For many years he has been prominently identified with the church's public relations program and chairman of the church information committee. He served as an advisor to the newly organized department of public communications and has helped establish the operations of many of the visitors centers of the church.

Elder Cuthbert has served the church as regional representative, president of the Birmingham and Leicester stakes, counselor in the London Stake presidency and recently served as president of the Scotland Edinburgh Mission.

The Saturday night meeting will be for all adult members and will start at 7 p.m.

Elder Peterson will meet with the youth of the church, 12 years of age and older, at 8:30 Sunday morning.

Nelson plans LDS mission

TWIN FALLS — Earl George Nelson, son of Mr. and Mrs. Earl Nelson of Twin Falls, has been called to serve a mission for the Latter-Day Saints Church in Rochester, N.Y.

He was graduated from Twin Falls High School and attended Ricks College for one year.

Nelson was honored at a Sacrament meeting in the 10th Ward Aug. 27. He will leave for the mission home in Salt Lake City on September 16 and will later leave for the Los Angeles Mission in California.

He will speak in sacrament meeting Sunday at the Jerome Second Ward at 5:30 p.m.

Lee graduated from Jerome High School and attended Ricks College in Rexburg for one year.

Lee prepares for mission

TWIN FALLS — Kent Ernest Lee, son of Mr. and Mrs. Allan D. Lee of Jerome, will serve a two-year mission for the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints.

Lee will enter the Mission Home in Salt Lake City on September 16 and will later leave for the Los Angeles Mission in California.

He will speak in sacrament meeting Sunday at the Jerome Second Ward at 5:30 p.m.

Lee graduated from Jerome High School and attended Ricks College in Rexburg for one year.

Haddock professes vows

SHOSHONE — Carmen Haddock professed triennial vows in the Benedictine order at a ceremony at St. Gertrude's Priory at Cottonwood Aug. 19.

Sister Carmen Haddock committed herself to the community at the chapel ceremony presided over by Mother Mary Marge Goeckner and Idaho Catholic Bishop Sylvester Treinen.

Present for the occasion were Sister Carmen's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Bob Haddock, Rob and Mary, her grandfather Carlos Berriochoa Sr., all of Shoshone; Mr. and Mrs. Alan Cameron and daughter and Tom

Horoscope

Don't fly solo but seek the help of others today

GENERAL TENDENCIES: See understanding associates and work out a plan of action whereby you and they will be able to accomplish better results at joint projects. Evening is not a time to take strenuous exercise, but to build up vitality.

ARIES (Mar. 21 to Apr. 19) Planning for a whole new and improved set of conditions is wise. A new contact can be of great assistance to you. Meet with this person early.

TAURUS (Apr. 20 to May 20) Be enthused about handling obligations and they are soon behind you. See a good friend and be happy. Make evening a quiet one and relax.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21) Do what will make your dealings with a partner more successful. Later, join forces with one who is most creative and get good results.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21) Get to important tasks early since you are thinking clearly. You get unexpected results. Steer clear of one who opposes you.

LEO (July 22 to Aug. 21) Study home surroundings and see where you can make it more functional and more to your liking. Don't close your eyes to any of its drawbacks.

VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 22) Have talks with interesting persons who can be helpful to you. Avoid a bigwig who has an axe to grind. Be very careful in motion, especially while out driving.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22) Good day to get in touch with others and exchange views that can bring greater security. You are a fine salesperson and can use this quality to good advantage.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21) An early start on financial affairs sees you getting them done well in a short time. Be sure to make property repairs right away and save money.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21) Finish necessary shopping before you go out for fun. See what you can do to improve health. Be active.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 20) Get advice so that you can improve outside affairs and then carry through in a positive manner. Make plans now for future activities.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19) Daytime is best for seeing and being with good friends. Home is your best bet in the evening. Don't neglect marketing, shopping.

PISCES (Feb. 20 to Mar. 20) Get involved in a community project that can enhance your position in the community. Improve credit matters also. Be careful you do not take any risks in the evening.

IF YOUR CHILD IS BORN TODAY... he or she will be able to study a project and know how to enlarge it so that it is more functional and profitable. Give as fine a comprehensive education as you can that will help your gifted child to make a success in life. Give piano lessons also, if possible.

What's what

Roller skating is coming back

Understand roller skating is coming back with an intensity comparable to that brought on by the hula hoop and the skateboard. It's a cyclical craze, roller skating is. Ever since one William H. Fuller popularized it in 1863, roller skating has dipped and risen, dipped and risen. In, oh, maybe 20 or 30 or 40 year intervals. Last enormous rise was during the Depression in the 1930s. Clamp-on skates were the thing then. Now fancy laced boots with plastic wheels are in.

The washing of clothes for many generations in a bygone era was exclusively man's work. The carrying of the water, exclusively woman's.

The widow is far less likely to confess her past than is the widower.

TENDERLOIN
Q. "In most every big town is a vice neighborhood with nightclubs and girls whose known as the Tenderloin. Why is it so called?"
A. In 1876, New York City Police Capt. A. S. Williams was transferred to the West 30th Street precinct, right in the middle at that time of the city's nightlife center. Newsmen quoted him as saying: "I've been having chock steak ever since I've been on the force, and now I'm going to get a little tenderloin."

Cucumbers are sliced up with a paraffin spray. So are apples and pears. Tomatoes are gassed with carbon monoxide to make them pink. Orange growers add orange dye to their spray. Bananas are sprayed with ethylene gas to make them yellow. Just cosmetics, that's all. Good grub is a beauty contest, brother.

ANGER
The older you get, the less likely you'll stay angry for any length of time. The older you get, the less likely you'll hold grudges. The older you get, the less likely you'll do anything "to get even." These simple facts have been confirmed by University of California researchers who've studied such at great length. The way of all this is not because older people are less selfish. On the contrary, may be they're more so. It's simply that anger, grudges, revenge are useless wastes, and the older you get, the more you realize that, and don't want to be bothered.

A newborn baby seems unable to nurse without shutting its eyes tight.
There are places in the Arctic where it's illegal to walk on moss.
