

No need to fuss over foreigners buying farms

By WAYNE KING
N.Y. Times Service

ATLANTA — Panelists representing government, agricultural, academic and real estate interests generally agreed Thursday that the furor over foreign interests buying up critical American farmland is not justified by the extent of current foreign holdings.

At the same time, everyone also agreed that the picture presented by present methods of gathering information about the foreign incursion into United States agricultural production is sketchy at best and possibly misleading because many foreign buyers prefer to remain anonymous because of the legal or political situation in their home countries.

But what information that is available suggests that holdings of American farmland by nonresident aliens is minute at present, and, as one panelist put it, "Despite the nightmarish vision of camels roaming where cattle used to graze, the Arab presence is negligible."

That panelist, Stephen K. Weber, Director for Operations for Oppenheimer Industries of Kansas City, a land investment, brokerage and management concern with a substantial foreign clientele, maintained that the concern over foreign investment in American farmland "may be a media event."

At the same time, he and other participants, including Stanley S. Sargol, Assistant Director of the General Accounting Office, which is gathering data on foreign farmland ownership for the Congress, currently considering legislation to require disclosure of such holdings to the Department of Agriculture, conceded that no reliable method now exists for determining the extent of foreign land ownership.

John Jr. Gornall, Jr., a lawyer whose Atlanta firm has handled a number of foreign land acquisitions, said, "I'll guarantee you this: you'll never find out that any of my clients own United States land unless they want you to know it. A lot of foreign transactions are structured in such way that you cannot find it."

He noted that in some South American countries, for example, capital cannot be taken from the country under pain of felony and acquisitions here are thus hidden.

The panelists appeared at a seminar sponsored by the Georgia World Congress Institute, a state funded informational group. Georgia United States Senator Herman E. Talmadge has been a leading advocate of mandatory disclosure of foreign farmland holdings and is a chief sponsor of a Senate-approved bill to implement that disclosure.

Sargol of the GAO, which has completed a preliminary spot survey to "suggest" the extent of foreign ownership, conceded that foreign ownership could not always be determined.

In a study completed in June, the GAO sampled 11 counties in Georgia, and three each in California, Kansas and Missouri. "The bottom line," he said, "was that 44,000 acres out of 16,000,000 in the counties had been bought by nonresident aliens," about one-tenth of one percent.

He reported that Johnson County, Ga., had over 6 percent of its farmland under foreign ownership.

A telephone check by The New York Times in Johnson County revealed that the land referred to, according to the Clerk of Courts Daley Powell, had been bought by four corporations with the names Southeastern Investors Land and Cattle Co., Norfolk Farms, Cypress Farms and Southeastern Cotton.

The governor's office in Atlanta said the owners of the Georgia corporations were "European banks," but suggested that the actual purchase money was likely in trust — "and that could be anybody, maybe Arabs, anybody."

The General Accounting Office found that while nine states had general prohibitions or major restrictions on foreign ownership of land — Connecticut, Indiana, Kentucky, Minnesota, Mississippi, Missouri, Nebraska, New Hampshire and Oklahoma — "In the aggregate, state laws do not significantly inhibit foreign ownership of land."

Also, few states had data on foreign ownership. Iowa reported only three one-hundredths of one percent of its farmland was owned by foreign or substantially foreign interests and Nebraska nine one-hundredths of one percent.

However, the rate of foreign buying of United States farmland might have been suggested by a report from Vermont — based on a limited survey, nonresident aliens in that state bought 951 acres, or about 20 percent, of the total 4,746 acres of farmland that were sold in four of the state's 14 counties during 1976 and 1977. Sargol conceded that his office had not determined "what percentage" of recent land purchases were made by foreign interests, only the total amount now held in comparison with the total amount in existence.

Regardless of the extent of foreign ownership, panelists made clear that farmers and politicians in major agricultural areas were concerned, and that the spectre of foreign control of part of America's agricultural resources might be politically unacceptable, regardless of the reality behind that spectre.

Georgia State Senator William B. English, for example, talked fervently of American dead in foreign graves, and asked, "At what point are we no longer Americans who own America... Food is our weapon, our strength, our America."

"I don't think that the Shah of Iran should be able to come over here with a C-5A loaded with petrodollars and start at one end of a fertile valley and buy it right up to the other end."

Vance finds understanding among Saudis

RIYADH, Saudi Arabia (UPI) — Secretary of State Cyrus Vance found understanding Thursday, if not outright support, for the Camp David peace accords in Saudi Arabia.

American officials said Thursday night after nearly three hours of talks between Vance and Saudi leaders "they are actively involved in a dialogue that can reach understanding."

Hodding Carter III, Vance's spokesman, said "we can continue to believe that Saudi Arabia is a force for moderation and stability in the Middle East."

The Camp David accords had angered some hardline Arab states so much that radical Palestinians threatened Thursday to blow up U.S. oil installations in the Middle East.

It appeared that the neutral Saudi stance, apparently giving Jordan a free hand to enter peace talks with Israel and Egypt, would be the maximum that Vance could expect.

Jordan, the first stop on the Vance mission, also gave the administration a noncommittal answer but expressed willingness to hold further talks.

"We came to find, first, understanding, and then out of that could come support," Hodding Carter said.

Vance's selling mission is complicated by an apparent disagreement between the United States and Israel about the exact wording of the agreement reached on a moratorium of new Israeli settlements in occupied territories.

The two differing views on the settlements, as well as Jerusalem, were to be handled in separate letters which were to have been issued Monday. Because of the continuing dispute over the exact agreement, Vance could not present the letters to the Saudis in his meetings Thursday.

Saudis don't plan another oil embargo

RIYADH, Saudi Arabia (UPI) — Saudi Arabia is unhappy with the Camp David agreements but won't call another oil embargo because it wants U.S. arms and fears the overthrow of Egypt's pro-Western regime, diplomatic sources said Thursday.

The sources said Saudi Arabia would also use its considerable influence to discourage other Arab oil states from cutting off supplies to the West.

Nevertheless, they said, there was little chance Secretary of State Cyrus Vance would be able to persuade King Khalid to give even lukewarm endorsement to the Camp David summit, publicly at least.

Four other Gulf states — Kuwait, Qatar, Bahrain and the United Arab Emirates — have expressed reservations about the conference. The United Arab Emirates issued a statement complaining that the U.S.-sponsored peace documents "did not offer just and final solutions" to the Arab-Israeli conflict.

Senate approves Middle East aid

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Senate, it hopes for peace in the Middle East raised by the Camp David summit talks, voted Thursday to provide more than $1.7 billion in economic aid to Israel, Egypt, Jordan and Syria.

While aid to the four nations was quickly approved, progress on a $2.2 billion House-passed foreign aid appropriations bill containing the funds was painfully slow and finally came to a halt for the day.

U.S. wants to save U.N.'s African plan

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The United States Thursday opened urgent consultations with Western allies and key African nations to try to salvage the United Nations plan for Namibian independence, rejected Wednesday by South Africa.

Retiring South African Prime Minister John Vorster announced plans Wednesday to go ahead with elections in Namibia for a constituent assembly without waiting for the U.N.-supervised elections to which it had previously agreed.

"The South African decision clearly places a major obstacle in the path of an internationally acceptable settlement," said State Department spokesman Tom Reston.

Virginia Farmer by the trees, grass and puddle she will miss if curbs and sidewalks appear on her street

Puddles are beautiful to Virginia Farmer

By LONNIE ROSENWALD
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — If a large brown puddle disappears from Filer Avenue West in Twin Falls, birds, trees and even homeowners might leave too.

Virginia Farmer, 753 Filer Ave. W., is thinking of selling her house after spending 10 years on the quiet, pasture-lined section of street. The city is proposing a local improvement district to finance curbs and gutters, sidewalks and sewer lines.

Mrs. Farmer says if the proposed sidewalks are installed "We'll have half a yard, no tree and the expense."

She spoke out against the proposed LID at a Monday night meeting with the city council. She has also written a letter to each council member and has circulated protest petitions in her neighborhood.

Her immediate fear Thursday was that touring city officials would look at a puddle in front of her home and decide a sidewalk would be a good way to get rid of it. After city councilmen promised to tour her neighborhood

Wednesday or Thursday, she erected a sign next to the puddle on her front lawn telling city leaders the puddle was their fault.

"These puddles were not here until the City put a water line through here," read the hastily drawn cardboard sign. It asked to have the puddle filled in, and also complained city officials "forgot us."

"I don't want them to use it as an excuse to put in curbs," she said, while her cat slowly edged over and began lapping up a drink from the muddy pool.

She says the puddle is the only source of water for the neighborhood's birds.

This puddle is not necessarily an asset to the street, though. The three-foot long pool has a history of waylaying milk trucks and garbage trucks.

Mrs. Farmer charged the city has never been concerned about the puddle, although a city crew once came and dumped gravel into it.

But she is also concerned sidewalks will ruin the rural character of the street, which runs among rows of corn and pastures. A towering ash tree standing alone in her front yard would probably be felled by street widening.

"I'd hate to lose that tree as much as anything. The kids play in it, sit under it, park under it, and rake its leaves."

"We don't need sidewalks," the worried homeowner insisted. "All it is pasture, pasture and us."

She pointed to an irrigation ditch running perilously close to the street and explained, "We use that water on our two and a half acre field."

She praised the city council for efforts to talk to residents whose homes fall in the improvement district. But at the same time she complained, "They don't realize our problem because they're not down to watching every penny like we are."

Mrs. Farmer noted Councilman Gordon Cox has offered to discuss her objections with her.

The concerned homeowner is a telephone operator and her husband teaches school. She doesn't think they can afford the $38 the city plans to charge residents each month for 20 years to make up the cost of new sidewalks, sewer and street curbs and gutters.

Good morning!

White House begins Milliken investigation

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The White House began an investigation Thursday of presidential friend Bill Milliken, who admitted he made "an innocent mistake" by seeking federal help for a private developer who had contributed $10,000 to Milliken's charitable programs.

"We asked the legal counsel to look into the situation," White House press secretary Jody Powell told reporters.

"We're moving as rapidly as we can," he said, adding that Carter was being kept informed and the president had agreed that a "full investigation" was needed.

Milliken, a private citizen who often stays at the White House and uses government office space when he is town, became friendly with the Carters in Atlanta where he operates programs for inner-city residents.

In an interview with UPI, Milliken acknowledged, "It looks bad," but insisted "it was all an innocent mistake and it won't happen again."

Milliken said he contacted Richard Flemming — a deputy assistant secretary of Housing and Urban Development and a personal friend — on behalf of George Zambas, a wealthy Johnstown, Pa., developer.

Zambas later met with HUD officials to discuss a $15.5 million federal grant for a 27-acre shopping mall complex in Johnstown as part of flood recovery efforts.

The application for an "action grant" had been passed over prior to the meeting set up through Milliken. Now the request is under consideration.

Explosion rips through crude oil cavern

HACKBERRY, La. (UPI) — An explosion ripped through a rig atop the government's strategic 7 million barrel crude oil reserve cavern Thursday, touching off a roaring fire and arching flames 300 feet into the air.

Firefighters furiously doused the blaze with water to contain it at the small, workover rig perched atop the underground supply of oil. Heavy bulldozers and draglines moved in to begin dirt moving operations to help contain the blaze.

Officials feared a larger, "cactus" rig located about 150 feet from the blaze might also catch fire. "It's burning all over the place," said William A.

Incomes soar

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The average income of each of the 216 million persons who lived in the United States last year was $7,019, an increase of 9.6 percent from 1976, a government report showed Thursday.

Alaska, with its petroleum-dominated economy, once again led the nation with income of $10,586 for each of its 407,000 citizens. However, Alaska was last in percentage gain from the previous year.

Smith planning trip

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Prime Minister Ian Smith and other leaders of Rhodesia's biracial transition government have applied for visas to visit the United States, the State Department said Thursday. Sen. S.I. Wichita pact OK'd

By United Press International
The Wichita, Kan., City Commission Thursday approved wage packages with striking firefighters and police, ending disputes that had severely cut public protection since last week, but several dozen firemen in Butte, Mont., continued their protest of low pay.

Wichita firefighters began returning to fire stations they had not staffed since Sept. 11.

Highway trim

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The House, responding to a veto threat by President Carter, agreed Thursday to trim approximately $5.6 billion from the $65 billion highway and mass transit authorization bill.

Carter had said he would veto the measure, unless reduced, because it would worsen the inflation problem.

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A Naval analyst confirmed Thursday a U.S. guided missile cruiser is operating off the coast of Nicaragua but said it is there simply to "show the flag."

Vesco case still cloudy

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Spokesmen indicated Thursday that President Carter, if asked, would submit to FBI questioning about fugitive financier Robert Vesco's attempt to buy influence in the White House.

Press secretary Jody Powell told reporters "our position has been since the beginning of the administration that every citizen, whatever his station, has a responsibility to make (information) available" to federal authorities.

"If there is a request, it will be handled routinely," he said.

An administration source told UPI Wednesday the FBI may well want to question Carter about a one-line note he sent to Attorney General Griffin Bell on Feb. 15, 1977, which said: "Please see Spencer Lee from Albany (Ga.) when he requests an appointment."

NEW YORK — For the average person, heredity is far less important than environment in determining his tendency to be overweight, according to the findings of a large study by Milwaukee scientists.

The researchers say their findings remove a common excuse among obese people for not losing weight and replace it with the realistic hope that weight loss is within their control. Their conclusions were based on a study of 254 families with adopted children and 10,337 families with natural children.

Quake deaths climb to 25,000

TABAS, Iran (UPI) — Rescue officials said Thursday after checking population records that the death toll in last Saturday's earthquake in this devastated desert town and nearby villages has risen to 25,000.

The death count mentioned by officials earlier was 10,000.

Officials of the Red Lion and Sun Society, Iran's equivalent of the Red Cross, told UPI only 1,800 residents of Tabas survived the earthquake. That would account for 17,200 deaths in the city according to a 1975 census count of 17,000 residents.

Farber to jail

TRENTON, N.J. (UPI) — The New Jersey Supreme Court Thursday ordered New York Times reporter Myron A. Farber back to jail for refusing to give up his notes in the "Dr. X" murder case. The newspaper said it would appeal the case to the U.S. Supreme Court.

The court's 5-2 majority said Dr. Mario Jascalcovich's right to a fair trial under the Sixth Amendment outweighed Farber's claims that the privacy of his notes and sources is protected by the First Amendment's free press guarantee.

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A former aide to Rep. John McFall, D-Calif., admitted Thursday he destroyed a note from Korean rear leader Tongsun Park to the congressman that read "good luck in the election" and accompanied a $3,000 campaign contribution.

Raymond Barnes, McFall's former administrative assistant, told the House ethics committee that instead of putting the money with campaign funds he deposited it into an office account in small increments.

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Former Cambodian President Lon Nol emerged from three years' isolation Thursday to make an emotional appeal for help in ousting Cambodia's extremist regime from the United Nations and ending the slaughter of his countrymen.

Ford stands by commission

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Former President Gerald Ford and the other two surviving members of the Warren Commission insisted Thursday they reached the correct conclusion 14 years ago: Lee Harvey Oswald assassinated John F. Kennedy and Oswald acted alone.

Admitting some recently developed information had not been available to the commission, Ford maintained before a House Assassinations Committee hearing, "I do not think our lack of information had any adverse impact on our conclusions."

"I categorically deny that the investigation into the assassination was deficient," he said. "I have seen no new evidence which would change my view."

He said the commission's unanimous findings were: "One, Lee Harvey Oswald was the assassin. "And two, the commission had found no evidence of a conspiracy, foreign or domestic."

The other two surviving members of the commission echoed Ford's defense of the panel's independence and conclusions.

Former Kentucky Sen. John Sherman Cooper testified "We were not pressured in any way by any person or any organization. We made our own decisions."

"We had no rush to judgment," said John McCloy, former U.S. high commissioner in Germany. "The commission report 'does contain all the essential facts' and 'has stood the test of time.'"

Ford suggested some commission critics and conspiracy theorists were publicity seekers.

"Critics who have attained the widest publicity have either deliberately or negligently misled the American people by misstating facts or eliminating facts in their discussions," Ford said.

"The point I wish to make," he added, "is that in too many cases critics of the Warren Commission have either misstated or omitted facts developed by the commission and in the process have led the public to have less than full support for the commission's conclusions."

The former president informed the committee in advance he would not answer questions relating to his tenure as president from August 1974 to January 1977.

Ford defended the commission's dependence for investigative work on the FBI, the CIA and the Secret Service.

The Senate Intelligence Committee last year found both the CIA and the FBI had withheld some information from the commission. "In my judgment," Ford said,

"the Warren Commission made a proper decision that. It was inadvisable to recruit a totally new investigative staff."

"And we felt it was far better to employ a limited group of very outstanding lawyers ... to head a staff organization which under close supervision would work with various investigative agencies of the U.S. government."

The commission headed by Chief Justice Earl Warren was established Nov. 29, 1963, by President Lyndon Johnson "to evaluate all the facts and circumstances surrounding the assassination" of Kennedy.

The other members were Sen. Richard Russell, D-Ga., Rep. Hale Boggs, D-La., and former CIA director Allen W. Dulles.

Ford also testified: "He was not a source of leaks from the commission to the FBI as a once-secret FBI memo suggested."

"There was nothing that came from President Johnson or any of his associates in the White House ... to hurry — in an incomplete way — a decision by the Warren Commission."

—He did not know of theories at the time about possible Cuban involvement in the assassination, the alleged destruction of a note from Oswald to a Dallas FBI agent, or the possible use of Oswald as a CIA informant. Ford said, however, that had the commission known, it would not have changed its conclusion.

Planes keep bombing guerrilla stronghold

ESTELI, Nicaragua (UPI) — National Guard warplanes poured rocket and machine gun fire on Esteli Thursday on the 13th day of the battle for the last Sandinista guerrilla stronghold. A malaria epidemic broke out and the Red Cross said "the whole town is a cemetery."

In Washington, the Organization of American States opened a conference to seek ways of mediating in the civil war that has killed an estimated 1,000 to 3,000 people across Nicaragua. The United States expressed "deepest concern" over human rights violations in the Central American nation and offered to join efforts to end the bloodshed.

A small air force propeller-driven plane started the fighting Thursday in Esteli, firing six rockets into the devastated town of 35,000 people some 80 miles north of Managua. Only five exploded.

The barrage was followed by a heavy ground battle, with National Guard troops firing machine guns at guerrilla positions and drawing only single pop shots in return.

Then, a DC-3 with a 50 caliber machine gun sticking out of the open cargo door swooped over the ruins of the town, resuming strafing attacks. Esteli, the last major city still held by the Sandinistas 13 days after they launched their offensive to overthrow President Anastasio Somoza Debayle, has been without water or electricity for 10 days.

Red Cross officials reported an outbreak of malaria in two shelters — a movie theater and a schoolhouse — holding about 6,000 refugees. They said most of the 400 people being treated at a makeshift first aid center were suffering from malaria or nervous disorders and only a few had been hit by gunshots.

Important decision in South Africa

By JOHN F. BURNS
N.Y. Times Service

PRETORIA, South Africa — When 174 senators and members of parliament gather next Thursday to select South Africa's new prime minister, they will be making a decision that could determine whether the country will find its way out of its racial crisis or move closer to the violent confrontation between blacks and whites that opponents of apartheid have long foreseen.

Black leaders responding to the resignation Wednesday of Prime Minister John Vorster, quitting after 12 years because of ill-health, almost to a man have warned that the new government leader will inherit the post just as the time for an accommodation between whites and blacks is running out. Equally, they have voiced fears that the new man, whoever he is, may find it politically impractical to make the fundamental reforms that blacks demand.

Ironically, men like Gatsha Buthezi, leader of 5-million Zulus, have expressed the view that prospects for racial reconciliation might have been better if Vorster, known among blacks for his iron-fisted enforcement of the racial laws, had remained at his post, instead of stepping down for a new leader who will automatically lack Vorster's stature among the 4.4-million whites.

The view is widely shared among white liberals, who have come to regard Vorster as possibly the only man with sufficient prestige among the ruling Afrikaners to introduce basic reforms without provoking a right-wing revolt that could bring a prime minister down. The fact that Vorster, 62, chose not to do so, is seen as less significant than that he would have had the political power for it. In the crisis that most liberals see coming.

The liberal view was succinctly expressed by The Star, a major newspaper in Johannesburg that has consistently opposed the government's racial policies. In an editorial last week, when pro-government newspapers were speculating that fatigue would force the prime minister from office, the paper reviewed his potential successors and concluded that it would be best for Vorster to remain at the helm.

"There is too much vital and unfinished business — issues which will shape southern Africa's future, which he has personally handled and which might well go the wrong way if someone else were to take them over in mid-stream," the paper said. "South-West Africa, Rhodesia, constitutional reform — all these require a cool caution which some of Vorster's crown princes appear to lack."

Tuition refunds planned

By JACK LESAR

United Press International
Chicago's strikebound city colleges — on the verge of canceling the fall semester — were making tuition refunds Thursday but court action by students sparked new efforts to end a faculty strike at Eastern Michigan.

About 40 striking Bridgeport, Conn., elementary and high school teachers were ordered jailed for ignoring a judge's order to return to work — joining 255 colleagues previously jailed for defying the injunction.

A UPI survey showed walkouts at colleges and universities curtailed education for 170,000 students and strikes at elementary and high schools in 13 states affected another 250,000.

Talks between striking teachers and administrators at Eastern Michigan University resumed under court order last Wednesday in a suit filed by an EMU student who charged striking faculty members were denying him an education. The judge said if no agreement was reached by Monday, he will order the faculty back to work under their old contract.

Strikes at community colleges in Lansing, Mich., and the Detroit area affected more than 25,000 students.

A four-week walkout against Chicago's city colleges was the longest and largest of the nation's school strikes. School officials said they will be forced to cancel the fall semester for 110,000 students if a settlement is not reached by Monday.

Little progress has been made in negotiations to end the labor dispute, centered on the Governing Board's unilateral decision to require instructors to teach an extra class per semester.

Idaho's tax spenders don't want relief

By RICHARD CHARNOCK
BOISE (UPI) — Three months ago, a person could get odds that the 1 percent property tax initiative not only would pass in Idaho but by an overwhelming possibly even a two-thirds — majority.

Today, as a news media campaign by public officials, citizens' groups and others mounts, there is speculation the voters may just squeak by or possibly even go down when the proposal is tried next month.

Those who so speculate do so for a number of reasons: Increased public awareness of service needs, concern about flaws in the initiative and, naturally, concern hammering from opponents.

In addition, a recent poll indicated the initiative — were it up for a vote then — would fall in the conservative Magic Valley. Some pro-initiative candidates lost election bids in the primary, too.

Up until now, a lot of folks have wondered what will happen should the initiative pass. What, they've asked, will be cut? What should be cut? Will the schools, police or fire services suffer? What is too much government and what is not enough? How can flaws in the initiative be corrected?

A special committee of the initiative-backing Idaho Property Owners Association looked into the question of flaws and made recommendations. The attorney general studied the initiative and suggested changes, pointing to a minimum of five possible constitutional conflicts.

Members of a legislative interim committee have taken the matter under study with an eye toward corrective legislation should the measure win voter approval.

But a question nobody so far seems anxious to ask is: What happens if the initiative fails — either by a small margin or by a big one?

Will legislators, state, city and county officials view this as a rejection of the idea of tax relief? Will they see it as a vote for the status quo or even as a license to spend? Will failure of the initiative lead to bigger instead of smaller government?

When reporters have posed these questions, albeit frequently, opponents of the initiative have brushed them aside. Of course not, they have said. The people's clamor for tax relief is so loud that no responsible legislator or other public official would allow such things to happen.

Some of those who support the initiative and, even, some in the neutral corner, however, are not so certain. They recall a public clamor for the past several years to ease the tax burden — especially on property — and have watched some of the best efforts by both political parties go down in partisan flames.

They have heard the special interest groups cry out for their causes, condemning others as tax wasters but defending their own projects as essential. They also have watched an apparently insatiable appetite of educators for more and more public funds.

With education and health and welfare eating 65 percent of the state's general fund budget and the schools grabbing a big share of property taxes these same observers ask where the cuts will be made.

A special task force told the Board of Education recently the most likely initial cuts in public school spending would be salaries for administrators and kindergarten.

But even that would cut only 5 percent from maintenance of current operation spending in proposed Fiscal 1980 state appropriations for schools. Special education and even classroom teachers for the mainstream students probably would have to be slashed to make any significant cuts.

If the educators had a close or negative vote on the initiative to which to point how strong would be the case for budget cutting in the schools? Remember, the Idaho Education Association and other educational lobbies are quick to point to Idaho's relative position with other states in spending for schools and teacher salaries.

And that, of course, is simply what could happen insofar as public schools are concerned. Imagine the cases the welfare administrators and the environmental spokesmen could make for continued, if not increased, public spending.

A citizens' committee told the governor this week that Idaho ranks 33rd nationally, per capita, in taxation and 34th per capita in property taxation. Add that to possible defeat of the 1 percent initiative and ask where the clamor is going to come for tax relief.

Not, certainly, from the ones who spend the taxes.

Being fired: It's like dying

We toyed with our meals. Neither one of us knew how to start the conversation. We had met five years ago; he was a successful business executive; well into middle-age and near the top of his profession.

Now he had been fired. "Well, it's not much fun," he said. "We both know that, the reason we were meeting was that I had told him I wanted to know what it was like — what it felt like for a man riding the crest of life and all tumble down around him in an afternoon. I thought people would want to read about it; it can happen to anybody."

He didn't say much throughout the meal. We had some drinks; we had some very dry drinks. Then he leaned back and started to talk.

"The day it happened started out fine," he said. "It had been a normal day. I had come in, kidded around with everybody, worked the phone all morning, gone out to a nice lunch. When I came back there was a message to call there he mentioned the name of his boss. I had no idea what it was about. We've worked together for 15 years. I returned the call, and I went in and he told me I was through. It was like I couldn't hear his words. Like he wasn't saying them. I didn't believe it. Then I felt physically sick."

"He was kind about it, I suppose. He didn't want to be there any more than I did. He told me to take my time getting out. He said I could use an office and keep my secretary for a reasonable amount of time while I looked for a new job."

"That first day I just refused to believe it. I went back to my office and I did my work, just like on any other day. I made my calls. Someone like me does not get fired. I was associated with my company's name. When my company's name was mentioned, people thought of me. When my name was mentioned, people thought of my company."

"We both know that night and I did not tell my wife. She sensed there was something wrong, but I told her I wasn't feeling well and didn't say anything. I don't know whether I was denying the reality of what had happened, or whether it was a case of my manhood being cut off and me not being able to tell her because of that. All I know is that I couldn't say the words. It took me three days before I did tell her."

"I went in to work the next day and I started wondering who knew and who didn't know. Everyone knew, of course, but I tried to fool myself. I tried to act as if nothing had happened. As if I acted like nothing was wrong, nothing would be wrong. It must have been very uncomfortable for the other people."

"As you know, I've always been a drinker. I suppose I drink most days of my life. I thought I'd try drowning my sorrows. And you know what? I couldn't do it. When I thought about it, it made sense. I had always drunk when I was feeling up, when I was feeling good about things. Drinking added to the buzz. I was feeling anyway. Now, with my life so down, I couldn't swallow the stuff. It tasted bad to me. I couldn't even finish the first drink. There wasn't even the solace of that."

"When I finally did tell my wife it helped. She was wonderful. She said that we had always got along some way, and she would get through this. The only thing she was upset about was that I hadn't told her right away, but I think she understood how much it had to do with my pride and the way I felt about myself. She didn't dwell on it."

"It was the worst time of my life. I would go to the office and people would work for me for years would avoid me. I would see them waiting for an elevator, and when they saw me coming they would walk away and go somewhere else. At first, I thought I was imagining it, but then I realized I wasn't. No one wanted to have to make conversation with me. I was fired, but I was still hanging around the company, and no one wanted to be touched with that smell of death."

"I suppose you know that I've always been considered kind of a cocky guy. And it's true. I've always thought a lot of myself, and I guess I never lacked for self-confidence. Well...

...it's amazing what being fired can do to you. Within two, three weeks I didn't recognize my own personality. I was filled with doubts. I looked in the mirror and I looked unattractive to myself. I started to think that I was lucky the company had kept me on for as long as they did. I started to think that they were right to fire me; I didn't deserve the job. This kind of attitude, after being a success for my entire adult life with that company. "I knew I had to look for work, but I kept putting it off. I can sell anything, but I was finding out that I didn't know how to sell myself any more. I hadn't had to apply for a job since I was a kid. I was scared to death. Me, applying for a job? I would make phone calls and my mouth would get dry. I would start to write a letter and the words would seem so stupid to me... I even typed them myself. I was ashamed to let my secretary do it."

The reason he was talking to me was that he had found another job. He had been hired by another company in the same line of work as his old one, and he had been on the job for several weeks. Even though I had been embarrassed to ask him to talk about it until he had the new job.

"I still can't sleep all the way through at night," he said. "A man lives his life, he accomplishes certain things, and he starts to believe he's set forever. That he has a base there that will never erode. And then he finds out that it only takes an hour for his world to collapse."

"I'd like to tell you that it was a learning experience, and that I'll laugh about it some day, but I can't. I want you to know that it's the closest thing to dying I ever expect to feel. Even talking about it now I can describe to you. It feels like you're dying."

INS, come clean about brutality case

More than six months ago two farmers near Castleford say they witnessed a Border Patrol beating of farm worker Jose Leon.

The farmers reported a Border Patrol officer kicked and slapped Leon, grabbed him by the hair and generally roughed him for no apparent reason.

The Immigration and Naturalization Service sent two investigators to Idaho to look into the matter last spring.

The INS wouldn't say then what it had found and, instead, promised to release a report after six months.

The six months have come and gone, the INS hasn't said a thing.

Apparently, the INS has hoped the Jose Leon incident would blow away with the autumn leaves.

The case hasn't blown away and as the weeks roll by the INS becomes more easily accused of obstructing the civil rights of Jose Leon.

Leon's attorney thinks this obstruction already has occurred and has filed a complaint against the government agency. Why the INS continues to withhold its report on the Leon incident isn't clear.

One INS official in Washington, D.C., has claimed because Idaho is an out-of-the-way place, the INS has had trouble getting an investigator to Twin Falls to wrap up the case.

But the fact remains two INS officials already have looked into the case and found some misconduct on the part of a Magic Valley Border Patrol officer.

Yet that officer presumably is on the job today.

What worries farmers and all those concerned with civil rights is that Idaho Border Patrol harbors a man who has no business being trusted with police powers.

The longer the INS hides its report on Jose Leon, the more serious become the questions about the competence of its staff.

Six months is long enough to finish the investigation of the Jose Leon case. The INS should come clean with what it knows about the brutality at Castleford.

In conservative America, why is GOP still hurting?

WASHINGTON — By all the normal indicators, the Republicans should be going into this fall's state and Congressional elections with high hopes of strengthening their positions across the nation and fortifying themselves for a successful effort to regain the presidency in 1980.

There is a kind of conservative hum in the country, and President Carter has lost more ground in the standings lately than the Boston Red Sox, but somehow these ideological and mathematical trends don't convince the political gamblers or even the Republican leaders that the GOP is on the verge of any spectacular revival.

The first real test of voter opinion in the state primaries didn't show much change. In general, the incumbents — meaning mainly the Democrats — were endorsed again, and the Democratic party governors did very well in New York, California, Connecticut, Massachusetts, and Colorado. This the Wall Street Journal reported a "sag" in Republican hopes in the governors' races, and George Gallup has been finding ever since June that the Republicans cannot count on very big gains in this November's congressional elections.

Even at the beginning of the summer, when President Carter was falling rapidly in the popularity polls, Gallup found that the Democratic party candidates for the House of Representatives were at least holding steady, and that the political composition of the House was likely to remain next year very much as it is today — roughly 60-40 in the Democrats' favor. Since then President Carter has been getting some credit for passing the Panama Canal treaty, and his civil service reform bill, and for his persistence in trying to find some kind of compromise, however unsatisfactory, in the tangles over energy policy and the policies of the Middle East. Meanwhile, as Carter's standing in the polls has declined, the maneuvering for the presidential nominations in 1980 has already begun, and here the contrast between the two major parties is very interesting. Twice in the last generation, when they were out of the White House, the Democrats had risked their fortunes on comparatively young men — John Kennedy in 1960 and Jimmy Carter in 1976. And even now, when they occupy the White House and have large majorities in both the House and Senate, they still have some younger backup candidates on the bench if Carter falters — Gov. Brown of California, Gov. Carey of New York, and Sen. Kennedy of Massachusetts.

The Republicans also have some promising young candidates — particularly George Bush of Texas, former head of the CIA and head of the U.S. Diplomatic Missions to China and the United Nations; and Howard Baker of Tennessee, the Republican leader of the Senate. But the spotlight of the developing GOP presidential campaign is on the men and issues of the past — Reagan, Ford, and Connelly — all "former" somethings, and all in their 60s.

These three men got together in Texas the other day for the first time publicly since Carter took over the White House, but not to discuss the future of the Republican party or the strategy for defeating Jimmy Carter, but merely to raise money, which they did in impressive quantities. The Republican assumption, at least among these three men, seems to be that the mood of the American people has turned conservative, that President Carter is a pleasant and well-intentioned man who isn't quite up to the job, and that therefore the voters are ready to turn him out in favor of almost anybody, and particularly somebody more theatrical (Reagan), more dogmatic, and eloquent (Connelly), or more steady and experienced (Ford).

There is probably something to this argument but not much, or it overlooks several points. First, it probably underrates Carter. If he was clever enough to capture the White House out of Plains, Georgia, think what he can do with the power of the White House as his platform.

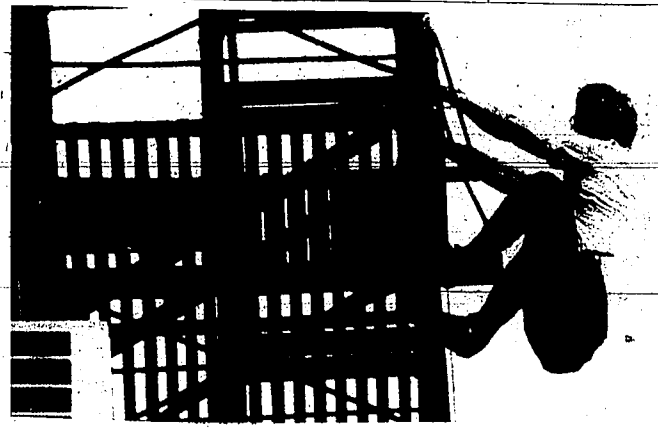

Second, while the Republicans are concentrating on Reagan, Ford, and Connelly, the Democrats are concentrating on holding their political base in the Congress and in the governor's mansions in the big electoral states of New York, California, Texas; and they are mounting new challenges to the popular Republican governors this fall in Ohio, and even in Illinois and Michigan.

And finally, if Carter is as weak as what the Republicans suggest, he will probably be challenged within his own party, first by Brown of California — and if Brown seems to be establishing himself as the leader of the Democratic Party in the next generation, then — and probably only then — will Sen. Kennedy enter the race.

Either way, the outlook for the Republicans in the Congressional and state house elections of 1978 and the presidential election of 1980 is not all that alluring. They are like a professional football team that insists on depending on the old quarterbacks and the other popular heavies who are going instead of on the younger men who are coming.

And while the presidential campaign of 1980 seems a long way off, it is getting late. Kennedy, Nixon and Carter all won by running hard and running early, but the Republicans are still divided and out of power, so far as anybody knows, they're not even talking seriously about where they are going, and who can lead them.

Soviets plan to proceed with fast-breeder reactors

By PAUL HOFMANN
N.Y. Times Service
VIENNA — The Soviet Union told a nuclear conference here this week that it intends to go ahead with the development of fast-breeder reactors, involving the recycling of plutonium. But the U.S. made plain its misgivings about civilian use of the manmade element — the core substance of the atom bomb — as a source of energy.

Officials of other Western industrial nations at the Vienna meeting did not appear to share the American apprehensions concerning peacetime plutonium technology.

Virtually all speakers at the week-long gathering — the 22d annual general conference of the Vienna-based International Atomic Energy Agency — stressed that both the industrial societies and the developing countries needed more nuclear energy.

The director-general of the Vienna agency, Sigvard Eklund, mounted a counterattack on the opponents of nuclear power who have been fighting and delaying reactor projects in various Western nations.

"I consider the anti-nuclear movement as one feature of a much more serious anti-intellectual trend in modern society in affluent countries," he said in a keynote address.

Dr. Eklund is a Swedish scientist who has been heading the atomic energy agency in Vienna, a specialized body of the United Nations, ever since its birth in 1957.

The director-general scoffed at what he termed wishful thinkers who would have a world "where the developing countries can make do with windmills while the developed would content itself with zero growth."

Referring to anti-nuclear groups advocating "soft" technologies, like solar or wind-power systems, as alternatives to atomic energy, Eklund contended that such nonconventional methods might work in small rural communities but "cannot turn the wheels of industrialization."

Issued by FDA
Low calorie foods under new rules

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Calling obesity a major public health problem in the United States, the Food and Drug Administration Thursday issued rules designed to eliminate consumer confusion about low and reduced calorie foods.

Under the rules effective next July 1, foods promoted as "low calorie" must contain no more than 40 calories per serving, and those labeled "reduced calorie" must have at least one-third fewer than the product to which they are being compared.

An exception to the reduced calorie rule was proposed for white bread, because bakers said a one-third reduction would result in a product that would neither look nor taste good. The designation could be used if calories were 25 percent lower than regular bread.

The FDA also acted to prevent foods which are naturally low in calories from being promoted in such a way that consumers might think they have been reduced even more.

For example, the designation "low calorie" could not be used immediately in front of the name of such foods as celery which have few calories to begin with. But the phrase could be used after the name, such as "celery, a low calorie food."

In a notice to be published in Friday's Federal Register, the agency said "obesity is a major public health problem in the United States" and "there can be significant health hazards of interference with body functions from relatively small amounts of excess weight."

But the notice said, "The great variety of labels, labeling, promotional material and advertising for foods offered for special dietary uses ... in the United States tends to confuse and mislead."

Metal linked to cancer

WASHINGTON (UPI) — HEW Secretary Joseph Califano said Thursday tests strongly indicate beryllium, a superlight metal used in missiles, causes cancer and that its manufacture should be carefully controlled for worker safety.

The beryllium controversy arose last week when Energy Secretary James Schlesinger warned the metal is essential to national security and that safety changes proposed by the Labor Department might be too expensive for plants located in Hazelton, Pa., and Cleveland.

Republicans defend their tax cut plans

MINNEAPOLIS (UPI) — Republican Party leaders Thursday denied that their proposed 33 percent tax cut plan would increase the federal deficit or force slashes in federal programs.

As the Republicans moved across the country on the second day of a 5,000 mile tax blitz, they met skepticism from the public that their massive tax reduction proposal would work.

The troop of 50 Republican lawmakers and party officials continue to Chicago Thursday and will wind up the campaign in Oklahoma City and Los Angeles on Friday.

"Everyone wants lower taxes, but how can you cut them 33 percent without creating huge budget deficits and cutting vital programs?" a woman asked at a Detroit tax forum.

"We think the Kemp-Roth tax cut will increase revenues for the government," replied Republican National Chairman Bill Brock.

Brock said when the Democrats passed a major cut in 1962 and 1963 deficits were predicted, but actually more money was raised.

"It will give the only immediate tax cut plan to increase the federal deficit or force slashes in federal programs."

"Even the most pessimistic forecast says it will create 4 million new jobs — permanent jobs," said Sen. Malcolm Wallop, R-Wyo.

He went on to explain that 4 million new taxpayers would help replenish the money lost by a tax cut.

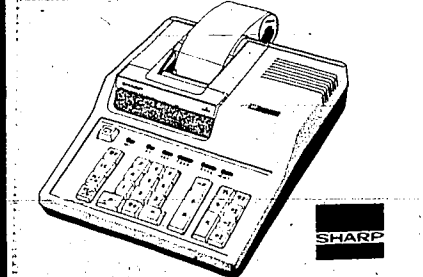

The measure the Republicans have adopted as party policy would cut tax rates 33 percent over a three year period starting in 1979.

Rhodes warned President Carter of the consequences of vetoing such a tax cut bill.

"The people of this country want Kemp-Roth," Rhodes said. "I can't believe any president would veto a tax cut like this, but if he does he'll pay a terrible price for it at the polls."

Ullman says GNP must remain stable

By JAMES E. ROPER
Newhouse News Service
WASHINGTON — Chairman Al Ullman, D-Ore., of the House Ways and Means Committee cautions against any sharp increase in the nation's rate of economic growth.

"The growth in the gross national product has been about 5 percent a year since President Carter took office.

"It's stable growth," Ullman says. "I don't want to see it much higher. I think it's just about where it ought to be. In the long run, it may have to be a little lower than that."

This seemingly supports a thesis advanced by some economists that curbing or even reducing the rate of economic growth is needed to control inflation. They argue that because unemployment is declining, more vigorous economic growth is unnecessary or even dangerous.

"The No. 1 problem in the nation is inflation," Ullman told a Thursday luncheon of the Women's National Democratic Club.

Still, said Ullman, inflation is not as bad as it has been in recent times and "There is a real possibility that we can peak out on inflation and move downward." he also said that even with the current international weakness of the dollar, "We are seeing a peaking of interest rates."

Ullman said a bill produced by his Ways and Means Committee and approved by the full House would reduce federal income taxes by $16 billion. He predicted that the Senate Finance Committee, now writing its own version of a tax bill, would favor cuts of about $18 billion, and a compromise in a Senate-House conference would settle on cuts of about $17 billion.

"Much beyond that," Ullman said, "would have an adverse impact on inflation."

Ullman said California's vote for tax-increasing Proposition 13 was a symbolic reaction of the feeling of people that they were overburdened and overregulated by government.

"It's a feeling that goes deep in the grass roots," he said. "It is not going to go away. It's not a reasoned solution—in fact, it is irrational, but I think the feeling of frustration out there is saying, 'This is the only way we can go (to get tax relief).'"

He declared that Republicans "whooping for a big tax cut" are playing on fears of taxpayers and homeowners and will stir up a backlash in the November elections.

"There is no question that there will be some changes as a result of the elections."

"We Democrats have put together a tax cut that is reasonable and sound," he said.

$20 billion trimmed House approves '79 federal budget

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The House Thursday approved 225-162 a 1979 federal budget which trims more than $20 billion from the deficit originally projected by President Carter.

It makes room for an income tax cut

Capital gains exemption expanded

WASHINGTON (UPI) — In what would be a major break for investors, the Senate Finance Committee voted Thursday to increase from 50 percent to 70 the amount of capital gains that can be excluded from the regular income tax.

But committee chairman Russell Long, D-La., served notice before the vote that the exemption would be tied in with a plan to subject excluded capital gains to a minimum tax, aimed at preventing the wealthy from escaping payment of any taxes whatsoever.

The increase in the capital gains exclusion, sponsored by Sen. Clifford Hansen, R-Wyo., was approved 15-1, with Sen. Gaylord Nelson, D-Wis., the dissenter.

Under current law, 50 percent of profits realized from the sale of assets such as stocks and bonds are excluded from taxation as income. Treasury officials said the increase to 70 percent would reduce revenues by $2 billion, but that an inflow of about $1.2 billion from the minimum tax provision would cut the net loss to about $3 billion.

Long said he insisted on the minimum tax "because these people (the wealthy) should pay us at least a little bit."

"I don't want the word going out around the country that we have made it possible for some people to pay no taxes at all," Long said. "I want to protect the committee. As chairman, I want to protect myself."

The administration has opposed increased capital gains tax cuts on grounds they help those with high incomes at the expense of the poor.

Somewhat more than half of the deficit reduction comes from re-estimating what programs will cost; the rest from actual program reductions.

The budget makes room for credits for middle-income parents of college students or for increased loans and grants for college students. There was agreement between the House-Senate negotiators that one but not both of those programs should be enacted.

The budget leaves unresolved one hard-fought issue between the House and Senate. The House wanted to make room for a possible $2 billion in local public works programs.

The Senate proposed zero. To avoid a deficit entirely in two years and put ambiguous $720 million in the budget. The House interpretation is that this can be used for public works. The Senate says it is for Small Business Administration disaster loans and other community development programs.

Just what it will be used for will be thrashed out in specific legislation later.

The budget calls for a deficit of $38.8 billion. Carter in January had estimated a $60.5 billion deficit for 1979 and later scaled this down to $48.5 billion. In its first, target version of the 1979 budget approved in May, Congress had projected a $50.9 billion deficit.

House Budget Committee Chairman Robert Gialmo, D-Conn., said, "If Congress continues to exercise restraint on spending and if the economy continues to be healthy, it may well be possible to erase the deficit entirely in two years and put the federal budget in the black for the first time since 1969."

Charlie's wisecracks near end

Ventriloquist Edgar Bergen, right, announced in Hollywood Thursday he will retire from show business at the close of a series of engagements with Andy Williams, left, in Las Vegas, Cleveland and Cincinnati. The Las Vegas date opens Sept. 27; the others are in December.

Bergen, 75, and his famed puppet, Charlie McCarthy, have been part of the American entertainment scene for over 40 years. McCarthy will go to the Smithsonian and Bergen's other dummies, Mortimer Snerd and Effie Klinker, will be unemployed.

Forgotten woman finds family

COMMERCIE CITY, Colo. (UPI) — For more than a half century, Pearl Barber was a forgotten person.

Her family, including six brothers and sisters, thought she died as a youngster in a Kansas school for the deaf. Actually Miss Barber, deaf and mute since childhood, spent 34 years in a home for the mentally retarded and then made a round of other institutions.

None of them recognized she had normal intelligence.

Now, at age 74, she has rediscovered her family in Colorado. On the day one of her brothers was buried, Pearl Barber finally located her sister, Lulamae Staké.

"It just seems like God above saw fit to let us know we had someone else," Mrs. Staké said.

Mrs. Staké, 65, said she knew immediately her sister was still alive when she picked up the phone and heard a faltering voice say "Hi."

"I turned numb," she admitted. "I couldn't say anything. When Pearl was on the phone, she tried to say Lula, but she couldn't get it out."

"Even if she can't talk, it doesn't matter. As long as she understands who we are and that we love her."

Authorities said that from 1919 to 1953 Miss Barber was in the Winfield (Kan.) State Training School for the mentally retarded. She then was shifted from institution to institution, ending up at the Oak Lawn Manor Nursing Home in Fort Scott, Kan.

Under the care of specialists at the nursing home, she eventually learned to speak a few words and after two years of relentless effort, she managed to contact a former husband of Mrs. Staké and then her family.

Jan Mayfield, activities director at the nursing home, said tests conducted at Oak Lawn revealed Miss Barber was of normal intelligence. She was at loss to explain how the woman was incorrectly diagnosed and then put on an institutional merry-go-round.

"Our records say she was a forgotten person. That means they just overlooked her," Miss Mayfield said.

Plane causes chess match postponement

PHILIPPINES (UPI) — Champion Anatoly Karpov, roused from his sleep by a small plane noisily practicing takeoffs and landings, Thursday requested a postponement of the 25th match of the $500,000 World Chess Championships.

Just eight minutes before the noon deadline, Karpov asked for a delay in Thursday's match with resurgent challenger Viktor Korchnoi.

The match organizer then put together a party to mark the Philippines' sixth anniversary of martial law and invited both contestants.

The third Karpov postponement of the 2-month-old match did not surprise chess experts, who had predicted such a game cancellation for two weeks.

Karpov's play has declined markedly since the beginning of the month, while Korchnoi's has improved.

Korchnoi will play white, move first and press for a win when the 25th game begins Saturday.

The catalyst for the postponement appeared to be a small plane whose pilot began practicing takeoffs and landings at the airport near Karpov's villa at 9 a.m. Thursday, three hours before the champion's normal rising time.

Celebrants wreck suite, skip

MOSCOW (UPI) — It was quite a party for officials of Russia's fish canning industry.

The vodka flowed like tap water and the black caviar was exquisite. Then someone set fire to a carpet. A toilet seat was smashed. The headboard was ripped off a bed.

When it was all over, the luxury suite of the Venetsa hotel in the birthplace of Vladimir Ilich Lenin was a shambles.

Total damage: $1,185. Furthermore, the hell-raisers bribed a maid to "keep quiet" and sneaked out of the hotel without paying their bill.

The wild hotel party was reported Thursday in the weekly Soviet satirical magazine, Krokodil. The magazine said regional, oficials of the national fish canning industry were attending a conference in Ulyanovsk when things got out of hand.

The instigators of the party, the magazine said, were A.V. Gurevich, head of a factory in Saratov; K.A. Popov, transport director of another factory in Astrakhan, and Mrs. T.E. Andreyeva, head of another concern in the Altai mountain region.

Alcoholism is acknowledged to be a serious problem in the Soviet Union and the press periodically publishes the names of offenders in the hope of shaming readers onto the straight and narrow path.

The Ulyanovsk party-givers were so astounded of their excesses, the report said, they skipped without paying their bill.

And on her way out, Mrs. Andreyeva reportedly eloped a maid $38 to keep her lip buttoned.

Krokodil printed a photograph of the wrecked hotel suite, showing a litter of smashed glass, empty vodka and champagne bottles and open food cans.

The article did not say what will happen to the miscreants, although it was clear they will have to pay for the damage, now that they have been found out.

"The following simple moral can be drawn from all this," Krokodil said.

"When planning your pleasures, try to make sure they don't turn out too costly."

'Roots' author cleared of infringement charge

NEW YORK (UPI) — A federal judge ruled Thursday that Alex Haley did not infringe on the rights of another author in the preparation of his best-selling work "Roots."

U.S. District Judge Marvin Frankel dismissed the copyright infringement suit of Margaret Walker Alexander of Jackson, Miss., author of "Jubilee," and said her complaint of numerous similarities between the two works failed to support the claim of infringement.

"The review of the alleged similarities points unmistakably to the conclusion that no actionable similarities exist between the works," Frankel ruled.

Miss Walker, director of the black studies department at Jackson State College, claimed that Haley copied much from her tale of Negro life in Georgia before, during and after the Civil War. "Jubilee," published in 1966, was based on the life of her great-grandmother, she said.

Miss Walker, Judge Frankel said, established that Haley had access to "Jubilee," but he found "that Haley did not in fact copy anything, or attempt to copy anything, or inadvertently reproduce anything, from her work."

Miss Walker's catalogue of alleged similarities is strained, insignificant, and devoid of factual or legal substance," Frankel said.

Signs of slower consumer spending multiply

By Newhouse News Service
WASHINGTON — Despite the upturn in retail sales reported by the Department of Commerce for August, signs of slowing in consumer spending are beginning to multiply.

Looked at over a perspective of several months, such outlays clearly show a flattening trend. What's worrying a number of government economists is the possibility that the current, already-moderate business expansion could lose some of its momentum and perhaps even give way to a recession next year.

That's still not the prevailing view among economic analysts. Most consume to project moderately good growth for the next 12 months or more. But they don't expect the consumer to power the rise. Here are some of the reasons why:

- The personal income of American consumers, the money they use for buying, rose only 0.5 percent last month, the smallest gain since January. That's barely enough to keep pace with recent rises in the cost of living, suggesting that there isn't much room for boosting spending further.
- The enormous amount of debt that consumers have been piling up is bound to be a big restraint on spending, as the need to repay takes up a larger share of income. Debt repayment for families took a record 20.3 percent of after-tax income in the second quarter.

- Consumers are now fairly well equipped with plenty of goods as a result of all their buying — garages with late model cars, homes full of furniture and appliances, and so on. They aren't as eager to buy as they were when the recent spending spree began three years ago.
- Consumer confidence seems to be declining, though irregularly, and has been waning go-for-some-time. One widely watched index fell sharply in July, then recovered only moderately in August.

In some analysts' view, these negative trends make the economy vulnerable to any spate of bad news. The rush to buy cars and other items before prices go higher could be ending soon. Families could start to cut current spending, to save up the cash to pay the higher prices that so many expect.

As sales drop, retailers would cut their inventories and plants would stop production. Employees would be laid off, and income would lag. With sales projections getting gloomier, businessmen would be reluctant to invest in new plant. A recession would follow.

This certainly is a possible scenario, but it is by no means the majority view. Even if incomes aren't booming these days, government economists and many in private industry see enough sources of strength to keep a moderate expansion going.

Few of the excesses that classically precede recessions are currently in sight. Inventories on shelves or in warehouses are not excessive relative to sales. Spending by federal, state and local governments is still rising, though not at last year's rate. Homebuilding is roaring along at a rapid clip, despite gloomy forecasts of a slide. And business investment in new capacity keeps edging up.

And the consumer does keep on spending, though with increasing caution and far below record levels. He's doing it all the while that he talks pessimistically to the pollsters. By most historical precedents, he should have pulled back long ago. But he hasn't, to any significant degree — and he may help keep the current expansion rolling for another year or even more.

How much information?

Do you want labels on the foods you buy to tell you the percentage of each ingredient in the product? To carry a symbol revealing whether the food contains an artificial color or substance that may cause allergic reactions in some of us?

How much information do you really want on food labels? Are you starting to find so many facts on today's labels that you're confused rather than helped?

These are merely samples of the questions that three key federal agencies want you to answer, beginning this month and continuing through Nov. 10. The U.S. Department of Agriculture, Federal Trade Commission, and Food and Drug Administration have launched a nationwide campaign to get consumers' advice on food labeling and will seek your views by mail or in person at public hearings to be held throughout the United States.

81009. For instance, the booklet tells you:

That, as of today, artificial colors may be used in butter, cheese and ice cream without listing on the label. Should this exemption be eliminated?

That only processed foods enriched with nutrients or whose producers make a claim about their nutritional value must now carry a nutrition label. Should all processed foods or only main meal items carry such full labels? Should fresh foods be required to carry nutritional labeling? Do you want to know whether the cucumbers you see on the produce counter have been coated with wax, the tomatoes ripened with gas, or how long ago the avocados or peaches were picked?

That the calendar dates you sometimes find on food packages generally tell you one of four facts: when the food was packaged or processed; when is the last day it should be sold by the store to give you enough time to store and use it at home; when it has passed its peak quality; or when it finally should be used by the buyer.

This so-called "open dating" is voluntary under federal law, although required by some local governments for some foods. Also, the date is now usually preceded by any phrase explaining its meaning — such as "use by," "sell by," or "do not use after." Should such explanations be mandatory? What type of dating do you think is most important? Should all or just certain foods be required to have open dating?

This just hints at the issues Washington is raising. You can obtain even more details than are in the booklet by writing or calling Taylor Quinn, Food and Drug Administration, Bureau of Foods, 200 C St. S.W., Washington, D.C. 20204. Phone: (202) 245-1243. Ask for FDA's "issues paper."

Tacitly admitted by this consumer-oriented labeling campaign is the U.S. government's belief that it must do a far better job of providing you with information you consider important, useful and easy to understand. While advertisers have for years surveyed and studied consumer habits and preferences and how best to respond to and shape them, the federal government has remained largely ignorant in these fields.

Head of the FDA, Donald Kennedy, recently confessed as much when he told a group of agency heads, "If you had to name an area of research and technology that is more monopolized by the private sector than any other, it is the knowledge of how to learn what people know and what people think they ought to know in order to pursue the kind of nutritional strategy that they like to know."

Individuals will be given priority at the food labeling hearing. Spokesmen for industry, consumer groups and other organizations are being encouraged to submit their views in writing to Hearing Clerk, HFC-18, FDA, Room 4-62, 5600 Fishers Lane, Rockville, Md. 20857.

The hearings to come will be: Sept. 18-19, Little Rock Convention Center, Little Rock, Ark.; Sept. 27-28, Health, Education & Welfare Auditorium, Washington, D.C.; Oct. 12-13, Fremont Building, San Francisco, Calif.; Oct. 25-26, Howard Johnson 57 Motel, Boston, Mass. The first meeting was held a few days ago in Wichita, Kan. © Field Enterprises, Inc.

Standard Oil denies intent to make offer for Kennecott

CHICAGO (UPI) — Standard Oil Co. (Indiana) denied Thursday that it had any immediate intention of making an offer to buy a 30 percent interest in Kennecott Copper Corp.

The company said it had had some talks with Kennecott management and has considered the possibility of buying an interest in the big-copper company but has reached no decision on the matter, it said yesterday.

The Indiana Standard spokesman said the company was particularly upset because Wall Street rumors said it might offer $40 a share for Kennecott. He said Indiana Standard had considered an offering price nearer to the market price for Kennecott shares, which were selling at 27 1/2 early Thursday when the New York-Stock Exchange halted trading in them because of the rumors.

The rumors began surfacing several days ago and the price of Kennecott has advanced steadily.

Earlier this year, Kennecott beat off a bitterly fought takeover bid by Curtiss-Wright Corp. The company has been considered vulnerable to takeover bids because of the global weakness of the copper market which has made its original business unprofitable at the moment.

Its divestiture of the huge Peabody Coal Co., ordered by the federal government, brought it a huge amount of cash, a substantial part of which it invested in Carborundum Corp. of Niagara Falls, N.Y., the world's leading maker of abrasives and an extremely profitable operation.

Pork leads meat futures' advance

CHICAGO — Meats were stronger but grains slumped in commodity futures trading Thursday.

Commodity News Service said early gains of 100 to 150 points in live cattle were lost in a heavy wave of later liquidation which left closing prices mixed but mostly lower, down 37 points in December '78 to up 20 in December '79. Turnover was heavy, 30,946 contracts being traded.

Feeder cattle rose 5 to 80 points in a moderately active trade of 1,800 contracts with most back months moving up the limit of 150 points early. They lost more than have that advance on late liquidation. Some early strength was prompted by a bullish construed pig crop report.

Live hogs ended locked limit bid it all but the nearby October contract which closed 122 points higher. Buying was stimulated by the hog and pig crop report showing total hog populations down 1 per cent from a year ago and farrowing intentions smaller than expected. Volume was 1,256 contracts.

Pork bellies closed limit up in all contracts with large pails in most months. Aggressive bidding was prompted by the Department of Agriculture's pig crop report. Volume was 272 contracts traded.

Wheat declined, primarily on commission house long liquidation, moderate hedge sales and local selling sympathetic with the soybean collapse. Contracts touched lows late but recovered slightly on day trade profit taking.

Long liquidation in corn, stimulated by improved weather forecasts, smaller pig crops and declining soybean futures, led that commodity lower. Contracts closed 3/4 cents down across the board except for December 1979, which opened for the first time.

Soybeans opened lower and remained under pressure all day, in part due to a carryover which was larger than expected at 159 million bushels. Beans finished down 27 1/2 to 23 1/2 cents, meals was 6 5/8 to 6 00 lower and oil was 100 to 75 points off.

Selling on the close brought Maine potatoes to the day's lows, with the settlement 4 to 7 cents down and May at 7.35 per hundredweight, off 4. Volume was 1,701 cars. Traders said recent pressure appears to be in response to good harvesting progress in all fall areas. About 30 per cent of the Maine crop is expected to be under cover by this weekend.

New York Sugar 11 closed with advances of 12 to 7 points on a trade of 5,450 lots, with reports of Iranian entry into the market for 150,000 tons a major factor.

New York Comex gold mounted a late rally of modest proportions to move within sight of contract highs in December. The close was 60 cents to 1.00 higher on a trade of 18,000 lots. December settled at 220.10, up 74 cents.

New York Comex silver opened higher, sagged, then closed strongly by following gold. The final range was 40 to 80 points lower on volume of 8,500 lots.

Kodak lawyer admits lying

NEW YORK (UPI) — A former lawyer for Eastman Kodak Co. in its unsuccessful defense against antitrust charges admitted Thursday he lied to a Federal judge about the destruction of certain documents during pre-trial proceedings.

The admission was made in U.S. District Court in Manhattan by Mahlon F. Perkins of Cos Cob, Conn., a former partner in the prestigious Manhattan law firm of Donovan, Lelsure, Newton & Irvine. The firm represented Kodak during the six-month trial of the complaint by Berkeley Photo Inc.

Perkins, 60, faces up to five years in prison or a fine of up to $10,000 at his sentencing by Judge Robert J. Ward on Oct. 17 on the charge of criminal contempt of court.

"I stated falsely," Perkins told the court, "that I had discarded certain documents when I knew they were in a suitcase in my office."

He said he made the same admission to Judge Marvin Frankel, who presided at the trial, last Jan. 14 during the final days of the trial in which Kodak was found to have monopolized most of the amateur photographic business.

The jury later awarded Berkeley $82 million in damages. The decision is being appealed by Kodak.

Butz keeps sniping

DENVER (UPI) — Earl Butz, fired as agriculture secretary for making a racial joke, criticized the Carter Administration's food policy, but wisecracked that the president's brother was an ass.

"It's a cheap food policy that may get him votes in the short run," said Butz Wednesday during a news conference. He singled out the extensive grain reserves and the farm bill as particularly harmful.

Butz said the Carter policies will reduce prices in the short run, but will make farmers and cattlemen think twice about plant crops or raising cattle and that hesitation will create higher prices in the long run.

Kellogg seeks to halt regulation of food ads

WASHINGTON — The Kellogg Co. has sued in U.S. District Court to try to block Federal Trade Commission attempts to regulate advertising aimed at children of foods containing sugar.

In a suit filed Tuesday, Kellogg, one of the nation's largest cereal manufacturers, argued that FTC proposals to regulate television advertising for children exceed the commission's authority and violate Kellogg's First Amendment rights.

The Kellogg suit is the first filed by a cereal company, although other groups, such as the Chocolate Manufacturers of America and the Association of National Advertisers, already have capsues under way.

Tuesday U.S. District Judge Gerhard A. Gesell indicated during a hearing about the status of several related cases that he soon may be willing to consider the question of whether FTC chairman Michael Pertschuk should be disqualified from commission consideration of proposed rules about children's advertising on television.

In a request for an injunction filed in late August, several trade groups asked that Pertschuk be barred from commission deliberations on children's television advertising because he allegedly has indicated a bias favoring a ban on such advertising. Those suits cited several letters Pertschuk had written about the proposed ban on children's advertising which were obtained under the Freedom of Information Act by Kellogg attorneys.

In April, the FTC proposed implementing rules prohibiting television advertising directed to children 8 years old or younger and limiting advertising directed at older children (10 to 12) of products which contain sugar and are considered dental health risks.

In court papers, attorneys for Kellogg said that an FTC proposal to hold two hearings — one called a "legislative" hearing and the other a "disputed issues" hearing — amounts to an illegal separation of the single hearing process usually used by the commission.

$80,000 parking space brought to light in GSA probe

Washington Star
WASHINGTON — Federal employees have schemed and fought and moomed each other over downtown parking spaces, but GSA probes Tuesday uncovered the ultimate — a parking space that cost $80,000.
 That's what the taxpayers have had to pay for Lora K. Yancey's space near the U.S. Office of Education.
 When FBI agents came to the Office of Education with detailed information on how a GSA secretary with a General Services Administration parking car unwittingly had enabled a parking lot attendant to "buy" $80,000 worth of brand new government goods, officials were staggered, according to one source in the agency. But a quick investigation revealed that almost anyone, at any grade, who had a reason to secure supplies could have obtained one of the credit cards.

 The cards enable a holder to obtain electric typewriters, color television sets and thousands of other items from GSA "self-service" stores, where additional identification is not rigorously required.
 "There were practically no controls," said U.S. education Commissioner Ernest L. Boyer, who ordered the investigation.
 Congressional testimony on the GSA probe Tuesday pinpointed the case of the 30-year-old Yancey, who lives in Laurel, Md. She pleaded guilty to charges that she gave her GSA credit card to Bruce L. Jefferson of the 2700 block of 42nd Street NE in return for a parking space at a lot at 4th and C Streets SW.

 It was the kind of trade-off that is perfectly "Washington."
 But this time it went berserk when — a federal indictment alleges — Jefferson, 26, went on a credit card spree that astonished even hardened members of the U.S. Attorney's criminal trial section.
 Yancey was given a suspended sentence Aug. 25, and remains a federal employee.
 The indictment in her case charges that she "willfully and knowingly did covert to the use of another" property of the U.S. government.

 A federal indictment containing 169 separate charges accuses Johnson of systematically looting various GSA stores and supply houses with the card.
 He never was asked for corroborating identification. Police allege that Jefferson, who is now on sick leave from his D.C. government job, "was buying the stuff and fencing it out on the street."
 His indictment Aug. 29 followed a four-month investigation, a D.C. police spokesman said. The full street value of the goods could range anywhere from 160,000 to $100,000, according to the police spokesman.
 Jefferson will go to trial next month, with Yancey as a principal witness.

 Though Yancey received a suspended sentence after a plea bargain June 29 in which felony charges against her were replaced with misdemeanor charges, she was not demoted or fired from her government job.
 She was shifted out of the office of Commissioner Boyer, where she was secretary to one of his assistants, to another office where she would not have purchasing duties, Boyer said.
 She now is a secretary-stenographer in the office of Herman Goldberg in the Bureau of Elementary and Secondary Education, Office of Equal Educational Opportunity.

One HEW official said her continued employment was considered "appropriate and necessary."
 But Boyer denied that she received promotions, as GSA probes said Tuesday during hearings on Capitol Hill.
 HEW personnel records show she has remained a Grade 7 for the past four years, a relatively high rank for a secretary of her age. Officials said she might have received an "automatic" in-grade increase in pay after investigation of her case was made known.
 Officially, Yancey was kept in her job because the Justice Department has not sent the Office of Education the final disposition in the case.

Rats were dinosaurs' undoing

Daily Telegraph, London
LONDON — It was not the cold that caused the dinosaurs to perish. Or the heat. Or the fact that their brains got too big.
 It was the rats, the shrews and a myriad of other tiny rodents which finally ate them out of house and home, according to Dr. Beverly Halstead, a reader in geology at Reading University.
 The dramatic demise of the 30-ton monsters occurred some 64 million years ago, after a reign of 149 million years on earth.
 Even while the dinosaurs dominated all, shrew-like mammals had already evolved, Halstead said. They lived comfortably alongside their gigantic neighbors, emerging at night to nibble away.
 After the earth went through major climatic changes about 64 million years ago, the cold-blooded dinosaurs retreated to the tropical areas, leaving the spreading temperate zones to be dominated by the mammals.
 But one 30-ton brontosaurus was the equivalent of a million shrew-like mammals. "The dinosaur could possibly hope to cope with myriads of small mammals devouring all before them," said Halstead.
 "The success of tiny rodent-like mammals in direct competition for available food resources must have been the final straw which tipped the dinosaurs into oblivion."
 "In this instance, the meek did indeed inherit the Earth."

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — A man found shot to death and apparently robbed Monday night was identified Thursday as Ralph Thompson, 31, assistant to the president of Motown Record Corp.
 His wife, Karen Thompson, said her husband had gone to a bar to watch the Monday night football game. His body was found in a nearby street.
 Police said Thompson had been shot once in the head and that his wallet was missing. The Thompsons had moved to Los Angeles from Chicago two years ago.

Pay freeze in force for 16 city employees

By JEFF SHER
Times-News writer
TWIN FALLS — The Twin Falls City Council has finalized the wage freeze it imposed on 16 city administrators and department heads.

When it passed the annual city employee pay resolution this week, the council learned that 16 city employees will not receive the automatic cost-of-living raises other city employees will receive in the coming year.

The 16 employees whose pay was frozen will receive one raise in base pay on Oct. 1. All other city employees receive automatic quarterly cost-of-living increases, the amount of which is determined by the rise in the consumer price index, but their base pay was not increased.

Employees whose pay was frozen have objected to the plan because their raises will probably be less than the rise in the consumer price index over the next year.

The pay plan will also result, in at least one instance, in a subordinate employee receiving a higher salary than his department head before the year is out.

The council has promised employees whose salaries were frozen that their salaries will be reviewed after six months, but the council failed to establish a separate fund for increasing city employees' salaries. It has been speculated that raises could be given out of money set aside for emergency, overtime and extra help salaries, if enough money remains in the fund when raises are given.

The council decided by a 4-3 vote in August to freeze the salaries in order to get a handle on the continually increasing cost of city government. Councilman Bud Cheney broke a 3-3 deadlock when he voted, from a hospital sickbed, to join council members Leon Smith, Mary McClusky and Jim Smallwood in favor of the freeze. Councilmen Gordon Cox, Hank Woodall and Chris Talkington opposed the freeze.

The resolution passed by the council this week also established incentive raises for certified employees who achieve higher levels of certification or for non-certified employees who complete a designated amount of work-related education credits.

Two $25 per month raises are available under the certification plan for progressive levels of achievement.

City Manager Jean Millar said it is known how much the certification program will cost the city over the coming year for certified employees, but not for non-certified employees.

He said the council has placed a maximum of $50,000 on the amount the city can spend for employee raises in the next year, but he added that he does not expect the certification program to cost nearly that much.

He pointed out that after one year's experience with the program, it will be possible to predict how much it will cost thereafter.

Benefits for city employees will remain the same for the next year, except that employees will be eligible for three days of bereavement leave per year, at the discretion of department heads.

The council also appears ready to reverse an earlier decision not to pay employees for sick leave who have accumulated in excess of 90 days.

In August, the council decided to set

90 days as the maximum amount of sick leave an employee could accumulate. Roughly 23 employees had already accumulated over 90 days sick leave, and the council voted not to pay them for accumulated time over 90 days.

The city attorney told the council that in his opinion revoking earned sick leave benefits was illegal, and now the council appears ready to heed that advice.

Millar said the council has instructed him to develop a system for reimbursing employees for sick leave accumulated in excess of 90 days and present it to the council for a vote.

Teachers to sign contracts

By CHRISTOPHER BOGAN
Times-News writer
HAILEY — After seven months of stormy negotiations, the Blaine County School Board and the district's teachers Wednesday reached a contract agreement.

Both groups agreed to accept a state fact-finding team's report which contained the guidelines for a settlement.

Teacher negotiators agreed Wednesday to accept the fact-finders' recommendations and give up their last $140,000 final contract offer to accept the board's $38,000 final offer.

The school board and teachers began contract negotiations in March and for seven months the two groups battled back and forth over terms.

The two groups deadlocked in late August over the $42,000 gap between their final contract proposals for new money to be budgeted to teacher salaries.

The decision to accept the board's offer was effectively made Monday when a majority of the district's teachers voted to accept the state fact-finding report.

The board, in turn, agreed to allow the teachers to create a "sick leave bank" which will allow teachers to donate sick leave time to colleagues suffering from chronic illness or serious injuries. The board previously opposed this concept.

Both Riggs and the teacher's chief negotiator, Irene Healy, expressed relief at finally settling the teacher contract negotiations.

But some differences still lie between the two groups.

Healy said Wednesday that the teachers plan to ask the board to discontinue the use of professional negotiators because they contributed to the poor communications between teachers and the board.

Riggs, however, said the professional negotiators were "essential" and he praised them for doing a better job than either he or the board members could have done.

Richard J. Cook of Twin Falls was named to replace Dudley Driscoll, also of Twin Falls. Richard Fuqua of Declo was reappointed.

Bill Whitton, mpyor of Rupert, was reappointed to membership on the Advisory Council for Vocational Education.

Three of Almo school's 11 students waiting to be picked up by their parents from Standrod, Utah.

Teacher begins career in one-room school

By RAY SULLIVAN
Times-News writer
ALMO — Add Lorna Gorringer's name to the list of people happy that the Cassia County School Board decided to keep one-room Almo School open one more year.

Miss Gorringer's name won't be found alongside parents or students names. Her's will stand by itself under the heading "new teacher."

And new means exactly that for the 23-year-old Burley native.

An elementary education graduate of Brigham Young University last spring, Miss Gorringer said she found out only five weeks ago her first teaching job was to be at the 62-year-old school. That was just prior to the start of the school year.

The offer came just in time because she was ready to pack her bags and head back to Utah to look for work.

The first day in front of her own class didn't scare her, Miss Gorringer recalls, because "I was so busy, I didn't have time to get scared."

Told by administration officials there would be seven or eight children, she found 11 seals filled that day. Four of those seats were filled, against school policy, by four youngsters from Standrod, Utah, 20 miles away.

Their parents didn't want their children having to ride the school bus to Malta, an hour and 45 minute ride, when Almo School was so close.

Miss Gorringer didn't talk about the confusion the Utah children's attendance caused. For a week after that, however, her class size shrunk to seven after the Utah children were not allowed to attend.

The school board later agreed to let them go to Almo as long as the parents drove them, and the class is back up to 11.

What kept the fear away that first day, and ever since, the new instructor said, is "learning how to get the kids to go on their own, how to work by themselves more independently."

Lorna Gorringer

That's not an easy task, she noted, especially since college instructors don't even discuss one-room schools anymore or how to teach several grades at once.

"When you're teaching all the different grades at once, you just get going in one thing," Miss Gorringer explained, when it's time to teach another grade. "I can't go as far as I'd like to. I can't do the extra things because I feel like I'm cheating the others if I do."

The young teacher instructs seven girls and four boys in every elementary grade but the fifth and she readily admits she didn't think in college that she would ever teach the lower three grades.

She said she was a teacher's assistant, for a kindergarten and second grade classes while at the Provo, Utah, school and student taught fifth graders.

"Ironically, the fifth-grade-is-the one I really taught and that's the only grade I don't have here," she joked.

The four Utah children added one extra grade, the fourth, which "makes more work" and means only spending 10 minutes an hour with each grade.

But like her predecessor at Almo School, Doris Jones, who retired, Miss Gorringer finds the parents helping out with the workload. She said some mothers have begun coming in to help teach reading and music and frees her to accomplish more duties.

The community is helping out in another way reminiscent of the days when the West was settled. The new teacher has just moved to Almo from Burley and is boarding with a family in the tiny farming town.

"It was too far to drive," she said of the move, "in the winter, especially. That drive takes two hours out of my day, so now I can get a lot more done there."

Magic Valley Arts Council hopes for community support

By BONNIE BAIRD JONES
Times-News Writer
TWIN FALLS — Several artists and art enthusiasts are determined to see the cultural growth of Magic Valley keep pace with the expansion in brick, mortar and lumber says the newly elected president of the Magic Valley Art Council.

To date few residents of the area have heard of the Magic Valley Art Council, but Charles Emmel and others on the board of directors plan to change that in the near future.

Through their organization, they hope to represent all phases of the arts, tying together the artists, musicians, potters, dancers and other talents from Sun Valley to Hagerman Valley.

There are also some long-range plans being made by the council. Directors hope to establish an art museum and fine-arts complex to serve the artists and the public.

Emmel says the council has in mind a facility with theater, gallery.

Emmel said those serving on the council board each represent a different art field. He says he does not plan to be personally involved with any one art or group of artists. He said he will keep an open mind and work to improve opportunities for all artists to make their contributions to the community.

In addition to Emmel, the officers include Shelly Kinzel, corresponding secretary; Ted Hayes, vice president; Fara Humphreys, treasurer, and Betty Birryal, recording secretary.

Membership in the art council is open to anyone interested in art or furthering the cultural interests of Magic Valley.

Funding of the council's goals represents a challenge, but Emmel says there are federal funds available through arts and humanities for buildings. He said the council members want to establish grants and endowments which will assist worthy talented artists of the local area as well as provide public access to the many talents of the area.

"We feel we can make Magic Valley an art center of the state. There is more talent in this region than most areas of the country," the council president says.

"President Carter has called for emphasis on the arts, and I think this will help us in obtaining federal assistance. We would also like to see some governmental support for the arts on the local level such as through the city Parks and Recreation department," Emmel said.

Board members are asking area wide support from valley residents, not just the artists, with the feeling it is the population as a whole that will benefit from the art council program.

Board members were impressed with the recent giant garage sale of the Salt Palace in Salt Lake City which helped fund the Utah Symphony, and they are staging their own garage sale at the First Presbyterian Church tomorrow. Funds raised will be a starter for a continuing fund raising drive aimed at helping accomplish the council's goals.

Members of the Magic Valley Art Council are meeting to draft by-laws, a constitution and set goals and guidelines which will be presented in a general membership meeting sometime in October.

Plans by Emmel and other directors for perpetuating the organization will rely partially on a sort of "repayment plan" Emmel says.

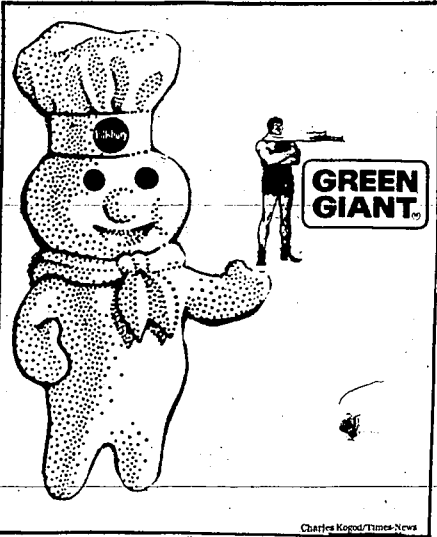

"For example," he said, "a small theater group might come to us if members were planning a production but lacked funds for costumes, props, or maybe they needed help renting a building in which to stage the event. We would assist them from our general funds.

"We would then hope that sometime during the year the group would stage some sort of benefit on our behalf," he explained. "We would like to have artists stage occasional exhibits and auctions, donating work to raise funds for the council. There are other things including garage and rummage sales which could be taken on by art clubs and drama groups to keep the program alive," Emmel said.

He added individuals wishing to make a donation to an artist of their choice would not receive a tax deduction, but by giving it to the council in the name of the artist the gift would be tax deductible.

Pillsbury plans to purchase Green Giant

By DAVID MORRISSEY
Times-News writer

BULH — The Jolly Green Giant meets the Pillsbury Dough Boy? Advertisements for giant green biscuits?

They sound like scenes from grade "B" Hollywood movies.

And while it is unlikely such scripts will ever appear on television, those, colorful thoughts come to mind with the Monday announcement that the Pillsbury Corp., a nationwide flour milling and restaurant operation, has agreed "in principle" to buy the Green Giant Co. of Chaska, Minn., a large vegetable packer.

"It's only an agreement in principle, although we feel fairly certain it will be completed sometime after the first of the year," Tony Fiskett, director of corporate communications with Green Giant in Chaska said Wednesday. "The basic outline has been agreed upon."

Fiskett said Green Giant operates only one plant in Idaho — a processing operation in Bulh. "Bulh is one of our major corn facilities," Fiskett said, adding that exact production figures were classified company information.

Fiskett said the purchase of Green Giant by Pillsbury would mean no reduction in jobs at Bulh. "I see no reason for any layoffs," in either seasonal or regular employment, Fiskett said.

The Bulh Green Giant Co. employs 64 regular employees, and "up to 70 employees" during the harvest season, Fiskett said.

Fiskett added that the purchase would also mean Green Giant "can draw upon Pillsbury's considerable resources to grow faster."

Fiskett said it was still too early to determine if that anticipated growth could mean an expansion in the Bulh plant, but added such expansion is a possibility that may be discussed at a later date.

"Our understanding of the agreement is that Green Giant will operate as a wholly owned subsidiary with a fair degree of autonomy."

Under the terms of the agreement, Fiskett said, the merger will take place in two steps. In the first step Pillsbury will make a cash tender offer of $37.25 per share for between 1.8 and 2.2 million shares of Green Giant common stock. The second step will be the formal merger itself.

Holders of Green Giant common stock will be offered "a fractionated share of Pillsbury stock for each share of Green Giant stock," Fiskett said. For each Green Giant share, a stockholder will be offered .8324 shares of Pillsbury stock.

"For Pillsbury it will mean a better holding in their grocery products," Fiskett said.

A Green Giant shareholders meeting originally scheduled for Sept. 22 has been postponed until the company can prepare information dealing with the merger.

Mountain snowfall produces muddy roads

TWIN FALLS — From 4 to 18 inches of snow fell in Sawtooth National Forest back country during this week's storm.

Temperatures dipped to around 10 degrees Tuesday night in the Stanley vicinity, so warm clothes and winter boots are a must when traveling in any Sawtooth forest areas.

People interested in obtaining firewood are advised to check with local forest service offices, as most of these areas are either under several inches of snow or are very muddy. If you are the venturesome type, you stand a pretty good risk of getting stuck. Hopefully by this weekend, the forest areas will have dried out somewhat.

On the Burley Ranger District, Thompson Flat, Brackenburg, and Lake Cleveland campgrounds — are presently closed, but will be reopened if weather permits. Clear Creek, Bennett Springs and Sublett campgrounds are still open. Approximately a foot of snow has been reported in the Mount Harrison area.

Winter also came early to the Twin Falls Ranger District, with 16 inches of snow reported in the higher elevations. Firewood permits are still being issued, but please wait for a few drying days before attempting to get into the area.

The Fairfield District fairly well escaped the snow storm, receiving rain in most areas. The roads have been graded recently along the South Fork of the Boise River and all campgrounds are open. The Kókane salmon run is still in progress but slowing down considerably.

The SNRA reports that most campgrounds have been closed but North Fork and Eastley remain open in the Wood River Valley. Smokey Bear at Alturas and a couple of campgrounds are still open at Redfish Lake. Most campgrounds along the Salmon River below Stanley are also still open. Redfish Lake Visitor Center will be open to the public from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Friday, Saturday and Sunday through September.

Be sure and bring your own supply of water, as tap water is not available now in most campgrounds.

Jerome chamber rejects sidewalk plan

By LONNIE ROSENWALD
Times-News writer

JEROME — A plan to improve Jerome's downtown streets is in jeopardy.

The Jerome Chamber of Commerce has refused to support a city plan to repair downtown sidewalks and gutters.

In a letter to the city council, the chamber said it had already rejected such an improvement plan in 1975. Any further studies on the project would be "repulsive," the letter said.

Meeting this week, the council members seemed puzzled by the chamber's stand. They speculated perhaps the business group confused the current proposal with the 1975 plan, which was for street widening.

Councilman Glenn Capps said this proposal is not a major improvement like the 1975 plan. This plan calls for general repairs on the eroding sidewalks of Lincoln and Main Streets.

Councilman Ralph Peters warned the city cannot repair downtown sidewalks unless it also fixes sidewalks in residential areas. Capps said since the downtown is the most heavily used area in the city, it would be an appropriate place to start.

Councilman Fred Kiser objected the city doesn't have the crews or the money to repair all streets.

"It should be up to the individual to get it done," Kiser suggested.

Under the city code, property owners are responsible for keeping up sidewalks along their land. But if the owners don't make the repairs, the city has to do the work.

At the same time Kiser told the city not to "lean on poor people" who can't afford the repairs.

The cost of the repairs hasn't been figured out. Nor has it been determined how far down Lincoln and Main the repairs will go.

Public Works director Ed Evans said money could be saved by including the repair work in a contract for replacing fire hydrants. The fire hydrants on downtown streets will be replaced soon.

Evans suggested the sidewalks need a facelift because there is danger to pedestrians. People stumble in the cracks along sidewalks on Main and Lincoln.

The council told Evans to survey the downtown area and to report to them how much work is needed.

CSI holds geothermal raffle

TWIN FALLS — Sometime in November the College of Southern Idaho will be in hot water.

And a local resident with a knack for lucky guessing will be in San Francisco enjoying an expense paid weekend vacation.

Thursday CSI Resource Development Coordinator M.J. Smith announced the college would begin a raffle on the first of October. For a purchase price of $1, a guess can be made on the day, hour and minute well drillers at CSI will hit 100 degree hot water.

The well, designed to heat the new Horrell Museum, was started earlier this summer. According to Smith, 100 degree water — the minimum temperature needed for heating purposes — should be hit sometime in November.

The person who guesses the right date will win an all expense paid vacation weekend in San Francisco, Smith said.

All proceeds will go to the museum building fund. For more information call Smith at 733-5554.

City plans sale

JEROME — The City of Jerome will get rid of some old cars, trucks and junk items that have been cluttering up the maintenance yard for years.

On Oct. 7 a city auction will offer for bids two police cars, two pick-up trucks, a trailer, a dump truck and some bicycles.

Besides cleaning out the maintenance yard, city leaders hope to raise money for the general fund.

The auction will be held in the yard, which is at the end of 4th Street West, behind the fairgrounds. It will start at 1 p.m.

SIRRA plan supported

JEROME — The Jerome Chamber of Commerce joined the Twin Falls Chamber Wednesday to back a proposal to have Twin Falls and Blaine counties join the Southern Idaho Regional Airport Authority.

The chamber's board of directors said in a statement this week it favors accepting the two counties into SIRAA, a move which is necessary in order to go ahead with the airport plan. Five counties have already joined the airport authority, and an eight-county vote on the Twin Falls and Blaine question will probably take place in November.

The chamber's statement said the airport should be built at the proposed Jerome site, and no further site selection studies should be done. The statement also approved SIRAA operating Joslin Field until the new regional airport is completed.

But the chamber said SIRAA should have control of operations and must maintain Joslin Field "at its present level."

Sugar plant just testing

TWIN FALLS — Environmentally minded residents observing the black smoke pouring from the Amalgamated Sugar Co. factory south of Twin Falls this week can relax.

The air pollution, resulting from the use of oil instead of coal, was only temporary.

Ed Bulgin, factory superintendent said testing of plant machinery prior to the annual fall run ended Thursday. The seasonal run is expected to start in about three weeks.

He said the pollution equipment can't be used during the testing, because of such slow load.

"Once we start regular operation with a normal load we'll use coal and the steam will go through the bag house," the superintendent said. The bag house is the term for the equipment which removes the particulate matters from the steam.

He said coal is used during the regular seasonal run but until the furnace gets heated up for the full operation, oil has to be used.

Couple files suit in son's death

BOISE — A $306,000 wrongful death suit has been filed in U.S. District Court here by a Mexican couple against a 23-year-old Paul man who was driving a car which killed their son.

Leonardo and Camilia Chavez filed the civil lawsuit against Dallan R. Schenk, who also faces an involuntary manslaughter charge in Jerome County for the Aug. 26 death of their son, Glindardo Chavez.

According to the Idaho State Police, Schenk's westbound car was at least four feet across the center line as it rounded a curve in northeastern Jerome County, and hit a motorcycle driven by Chavez.

In the suit, the couple said Schenk's action was intentional, willful, wanton, malicious and that he acted negligently. They are asking $300,000 for the loss of their son, $100,000 in exemplary damages and $50,000 in medical and funeral costs.

Schenk pleaded innocent to a charge of involuntary manslaughter in Jerome magistrate court. His trial will be held in two or three weeks, according to Jerome County Prosecutor Eugene Fredericksen.

Bar association official cited

TWIN FALLS — The executive director of the Idaho State Bar Association was cited for leaving the scene of an accident here Saturday night.

Twin Falls police said Ronald Lee Kull of Boise was cited Saturday night after sideswiping a car driven by Janet Crowley of Paul on Blue Lakes Boulevard North, falling to stop, and continuing north over the Perrine Bridge.

Witnesses followed Kull and noted his license plate number and description of his vehicle, which is owned by the bar association.

Officers eventually apprehended Kull, and cited him for leaving the scene of the accident, a misdemeanor. Kull, contacted in Boise, declined comment on the incident.

Evans and CSI students in the Eagles Nest

Evans tells CSI students he opposes fee increases

By DAVID MORRISON
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — There should be no tuition or fee increases at Idaho colleges and universities, Gov. John Evans told College of Southern Idaho students Thursday.

Evans, in Twin Falls for a campaign swing, spent an hour answering questions from a crowd of nearly 200 CSI students. The governor told the students he wants "to keep tuition as low as possible." Evans said he had "always resisted tuition increases." In the past and that he was "not in favor of tuition raises or fee increases."

"The people of Idaho support giving to any child the opportunity to go to school," Evans added.

The early morning campus appearance found the governor competing with coffee, card games and donuts in "the Eagles Nest," a room in the CSI Administration Building. But during the hour long appearance politics finally won out, and most students listened as Evans answered questions.

The governor said the "single most important issue" in his election bid was "common sense tax reduction." Evans said local governments would be unable to absorb "the 50 percent revenue cuts" which would be brought on by the 1 percent initiative, and added there were better means of tax reduction.

Evans told the CSI students he had started his own program to limit government a year ago, when he froze the hiring of additional personnel for executive branch state agencies. In the previous 10 years, Evans said, approximately 400 new employees had been added to the executive branch each year. He insisted that staff increases be sharply reduced, Evans said.

On other subjects, Evans said:

- The Idaho Supreme Court may declare the 1 percent initiative unconstitutional.
- That voter turn-out is the key to his election in November. "If we can get the vote out, that's the key."
- That state legislators need to be convinced of the necessity to fund the arts and humanities in Idaho.
- That he opposes further legalization of gambling in Idaho.
- That he is trying to encourage new industry to invest in the Burley area.

Magic Valley Rehabilitation honors workers, employers

TWIN FALLS — Gary Beat of Twin Falls was honored as the outstanding trainee of the year Wednesday night at the fifth annual meeting of Magic Valley Rehabilitation Services, Inc.

William C. Routh, vice president of Idaho Frozen Foods, was named the Magic Valley employer "most responsible to hiring persons who have received training from MVRSS."

James T. Jones of Eden, retiring president of the MVRSS board of directors, addressed about 125 people attending the dinner meeting at the Holiday Inn. He said while the private, non-profit agency has come a long way since its formation in 1973, training the handicapped is an ongoing problem.

"Rehabilitation pays its own way plus some," he said. The biggest challenge facing MVRSS staff and directors is to convince community and governmental leaders that "we're one of those programs which gives taxpayers a return on their investment," Jones said.

Jeffrey C. Crumrine, executive director, expressed appreciation to commissioners of Twin Falls, Gooding and Jerome counties and area state legislators, many of whom were in attendance, for their support in providing matching or state funding.

During the past year MVRSS has provided services for 144 individuals, 51 percent of whom are mentally retarded. Goal of the organization is to provide employment development and personal adjustment services to the mentally and physically handicapped and disadvantaged to enable them to become self supporting and independent in the community.

Highlights of the past year's accomplishments include inauguration of a fast food cook training program at JB's Big Boy Restaurant and a cannery worker program at Idaho Frozen Foods.

Advocate of the year award, given annually to an individual from a referral agency, was presented Kathy A. Grupe, rehabilitation specialist I, Idaho Division of Vocational Rehabilitation.

Charles F. Tiller, work adjustment supervisor at MVRSS, was selected by the staff as the outstanding employee of the year. He also has been named Idaho's 1977 On-The-Job Training Project Counselor of the Year by the National Association for Retarded Citizens.

Many of the people attending were honored for their support during the past year. These included businesses employing MVRSS trainees or providing professional services at minimal cost.

Eleven new directors were elected during the business meeting. They include James H. Barker of Twin Falls, Scott E. Bloxham of Burley, Donald J. Chisholm and R.J. Gerleman, both of Rupert, Nell Cross of Eden, Dolores Hansen of Shoshone, Marilyn E. Knigge of Filer, Marilee A. Kohtz, Rev. Robert Van-Nest and Elmer R. Parrott all of Twin Falls, and Jerry E. Martin of Jerome.

Jerome man to join Up With People

JEROME — Jeff Hardin will take off on a volunteer year-long singing tour with Up With People if he can raise $4,500 by January.

The Jerome singer and pianist has been invited to join Up With People, a singing and dancing troupe that gives concerts all over the world.

Members of the group stay with host families in more than 30 concert locations. Last year an Up With People group visited Mainland China.

Hardin, 20, has sold his car and worked on a farm this summer to raise the money needed to pay his "tuition" which amounts to one-third of the cost of traveling with the group. Up With People pays the rest.

Jeff describes Up With People as "an educational experience," both for the singers and for the audience.

An active performer and student body president at Jerome High School, he left the University of Idaho last winter to "figure out what I wanted to do." A friend from Jerome who is a member of Up With People urged him to try out for the group.

He has never been out of the western United States, so he decided this would be a good opportunity to travel. When he was invited to join Up With People, his father agreed to help him out financially, but Jeff has to collect most of the money himself by working and finding sponsors.

Street sales to be regulated

By JEFF SHER
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — The Twin Falls City Council will soon establish regulations governing sales and product demonstrations which block city streets and sidewalks.

The council was set Monday to pass an ordinance regulating sales on the public right-of-way, but postponed a decision until it could gather more input from local businessmen.

The council took up the question of where and when to allow businesses to hold sales or demonstrations which block city sidewalks and streets because the frequency of such requests has increased since last spring.

The council hopes to establish some consistent and fair criteria for deciding which sales to allow, as local merchants have expressed some displeasure with the way the council has handled some of the requests.

In the past few months, the council denied Banner Furniture the right to hold a sale which would have blocked several parking spaces in front of the store, allowed the Paris to hold a street dance, and blocked the Coast-to-Coast Store from holding a chain saw demonstration which would have blocked several parking spaces in front of the store on Main Street.

Banner Furniture held its sale in front of the store anyway, and the Coast-to-Coast Store complained but held its demonstration behind the store.

The council has drafted an ordinance requiring that businesses planning to hold sales on the public right-of-way must apply to the council for permission to hold such sales before the second council meeting in January of each year.

According to the ordinance, the request must be made in the form of a calendar of events scheduled for the year, and permission will be granted only for events of a local nature.

The council delayed passing the ordinance Monday, however, because a request by Idaho Power Co. to hold an energy conservation demonstration on the downtown mall reminded the council that the ordinance made no provision for demonstrations.

Idaho Power wants to hold its demonstration in a van, which would be parked on the downtown mall, blocking seven parking spaces, for two days during the 8th Anniversary of the Mall Sale planned by downtown merchants.

Councilman Hank Woodall drew the assignment of meeting with local merchants to draw up criteria for regulating sales and demonstrations.

Woodall's findings may result in changes and additions to the ordinance now pending before the council.

California schools chief says surplus saved state

BOISE (UPI) — California schools survived Proposition 13 this year because they had a $7 billion state surplus on which to draw, the Golden State's top school official said Thursday.

Wilson Riles told a Boise news conference the "bad things" predicted for the California schools did not happen but without this surplus it would have been "disastrous" for them this year.

Riles, California state superintendent of public instruction, was in Boise to address a fund-raiser banquet for Roy Truby, Idaho school chief and candidate for 1st District Congress.

Looking to next year, Riles said the funding picture for schools is uncertain but that California is moving toward more and more state financing.

He said that before approval of Proposition 13 local school districts received only 40 percent state funding. After 13, it moved to 71 percent. Schools this year drew $2 billion from state surplus.

"We are only $2 billion away from total state assumption," he said. "This makes me personally uneasy. It's my experience that he who pays the piper also calls the tunes. This could lead to the loss of local control and it's the local school boards who should have the maximum decision-making authority."

Truby replied to a question at the news conference that this prospect of the loss of local autonomy in Idaho school districts if the 1 percent initiative passes also causes him some concern.

Riles said he is not familiar with the 1978 tax structure but that "your students are reading and functioning above the national average although you have the lowest per pupil expenditure in the nation, so I don't know why you need a Proposition 13."

On another topic, Riles said he is troubled by the Los Angeles busing issue and that it is a difficult problem to handle.

"So far the busing has been going smoothly and there has been no violence," Riles said. "However, only about half of the Anglo parents are sending their children to school. We'll just have to wait to see what happens."

"My approach to the busing problem is somewhat different. I think the answer is to have good schools everywhere with top quality programs and teachers."

"Artificially shifting kids around is not the answer to the problem. My experience tells me every parent wants the same thing — good schools in which their children can learn," Riles said.

North Idaho College wants help from attacks by LDS leaders

COEUR D'ALENE, Idaho (UPI) — North Idaho College President Barry Schuler has issued a written plea to Idaho legislators for support of academic freedom in the face of criticism from Mormon Church leaders and others of certain college programs.

The criticism was directed at a speaker on human sexuality two years ago, as well as a sex knowledge inventory used in some NIC classes.

Complaints about campus morality came first from leaders of the Mormon Church, which sponsored an unsuccessful slate of candidates in last week's NIC board of trustees election, and surfaced again only last week during a discussion involving some legislators.

In a letter sent to all north Idaho legislators, Schuler said, "Since the allegations being made by these individuals are inaccurate and misleading, I feel it is important to give you the facts concerning the matter."

Schuler said in his letter that the speaker who outraged certain members of the community with his talk on human sexuality Oct. 8, 1976, was Dr. Nathaniel Wagner, a University of Washington professor.

After his talk at the college, a petition was sent to the Federal Communications Commission in Washington, D.C., and to KSPS-TV in Spokane in an effort to stop an airing of a panel discussion including Wagner.

Noting that the petition was never presented to anyone at the college, Schuler complained that "the allegation is being made that NIC has failed to respond to citizen efforts to stop college sponsored presentations of topics related to human sexuality that have offended the public."

Criticism was also directed at a sex knowledge inventory, which Schuler was given to students in nursing and health related fields "as an example of what is being used, by marriage counselors to discover and correct misconceptions that often form the basis of marital problems and sexual maladjustment."

Schuler went on to state that since the inventory was no longer in use and Dr. Wagner had died, "it would seem that the issues being promoted have effectively ceased to exist."

The first complaint about Wagner and the sex knowledge inventory came from Claude Welch, former state president of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

The Mormon Church went so far as to urge church support of a slate of Mormon candidates in the recent NIC board election. One Mormon candidate, Steve Hupp, called the college "a cesspool of decadence."

But a record number of voters in the election overwhelmingly rejected the Mormon slate and returned two incumbents back to office.

Support recovery ranks 6th

BOISE (UPI) — The deputy director of the U.S. Department of Health, Education & Welfare Office of Child Support Enforcement said Wednesday Idaho was sixth in the nation last year in percentage of child support money recovered.

Lou Hays made that revelation during a news conference with Lavon Loynd, bureau chief of child support enforcement for the Idaho Department of Health & Welfare, and Jim Wilson, administrator of the department's Division of Welfare.

Hays said that during fiscal year 1978, which ended in June, 7.8 percent of the welfare money spent in the state on child support enforcement was recovered, ranking Idaho sixth in the U.S.

He said the seven child support enforcement officers in Idaho collected $1.6 million and spent about a third of that total to fund the program.

"I told Gov. (John) Evans Idaho has one of the more successful child support programs in the state," Hays said. "This goes right along with Secretary (of Health, Education & Welfare) Joseph Califano's goals."

"Idaho has been collecting $1.6 million a year from absent parents, and we expect that figure to reach $2 million to $4 million within another year. In two to three years, that figure may hit $5 million."

In Idaho, a child support debt of $3 million to $10 million is incurred annually, and of that total, $4 million to $5 million is collectable. Hays said the state has a $70 million child support debt in the state, some of which goes back 10 years.

Hays attributed Idaho's national standing to support in high levels of government, and praised the Legislature for its support.

Hansen says Americans can't buy peace

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Before the United States jumps on the bandwagon for a new Middle East peace treaty, Rep. George Hansen said today, "we'd better find out exactly how much the American taxpayer is going to have to pay for it."

"The United States cannot afford to buy peace throughout the world," the Idaho Republican said.

Hansen cited sections of the agreement that he said were played down by the administration, including those that called for this country to finance two new air bases for Israel and pledges by the president to increase arms and aid shipments to both countries.

"We should continue to strive for peace in the Middle East and I applaud the initiative taken at Camp David," he said. "But there is not enough money in the U.S. Treasury to buy peace from every nation in the world.

"The parties directly involved who stand to gain the most must carry the burden in any financial accommodations and not the taxpayers of the U.S. A Pentagon spokesman said this week that the air bases alone could cost us at least $1 billion.

"It is important that we know what sort of financial commitments we are being obligated to," he said.

County tax ruled unfair to some

CALDWELL, Idaho (UPI) — The Canyon County prosecutor's office told county officials Thursday the 1978 levy should be modified so that some residents are not paying for services they have not received.

An opinion by the prosecutor's office, in effect, told County Clerk Bill Staker II agreed with a recommendation of Harold Johnson, state deputy tax commissioner, that the levy established last week by the commission would be unfair to some county residents.

A special 2.88 mill levy was included in the 1978 levy to cover some $460,000 in outstanding tax anticipation notes, but county commission candidate Una Deil "Tex" Coles noted that part of this "levy" should not be forced countywide.

She noted $220,000 of the anticipation notes were debts created by the county Road and Bridge Department and another $50,000 were debts of the county Rodeo/Extermination District and both served only some of the county's residents.

Residents living in highways districts of the county should not have to pay for this indebtedness since they do not receive the services, she argued.

The commission candidate talked to Johnson and he and a deputy attorney general agreed that it was unfair.

The decision by the Canyon County prosecutor's office Thursday contends residents living in special highway and pest control districts will not be responsible for paying, on a countywide basis, for the debts of the roadent control and bridge and highway agencies.

Forests escape major fires in '78

BOISE (UPI) — The current forest fire season, which officially closes at the end of September, likely will go down in history as the one that never really was.

That is because the season, on southern Idaho's two largest national forests, came and is expected to leave without a major forest fire, man-caused or otherwise.

There were fewer than average total fires on the Boise and Payette

National Forests during the season, which began around the first of July, and the amount of land burned totaled a scant 67 acres.

"It was a very quiet fire season said Forest Service spokesman Wally Shiverdecker. "As far as total fires go, this was the quietest season for at least 10 years. Acreage burned was minimal."

Forest Service records on those two forests — which total some 5 million acres and stretch from the Salmon River south to Boise — indicate there have been 212 fires during the 1978 season. Thirty-nine were man-caused and 173 were lightning ignited. Of the 67 acres burned, 12 were scorched by man-caused fires and 55 by lightning.

Statistics show that the 1978 fire total was 50 percent of the 10-year average of around 360 per year. Acreage burned was 7 percent of that average.

Tighter rein on BPA sought

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Rep. Jim Weaver, D-Ore., Thursday announced four amendments he is proposing to "strengthen the public accountability" of Bonneville Power Administration under the Northwest Power Bill.

Weaver said he has offered the amendments to other members of the Northwest congressional delegation for consideration before committee action on the bill next week. He said the amendments also are designed to strengthen BPA's commitment to use of renewable energy resources and conservation. He said he drafted the accountability amendments after careful consideration of testimony by Idaho Gov. John Evans and Oregon Gov. Bob Straub and other elected officials at hearings on the measure.

with full public discussion, and by increasing the responsibility of the region's elected officials for energy policy-making. Other issues addressed by the amendments are stricter guidelines for resource acquisition and what Weaver termed "a more equitable" rate structure.

"Many people in the Northwest have expressed the concern that the BPA administrator would become a sort of regional energy czar under the Jackson bill," Weaver said. "My amendments are intended to temper his role by emphasizing the importance of a regional energy plan,

Included is a provision that would require that private utilities pass through directly to their residential and rural customers the cheaper federal hydro-power they would acquire for that use without cost averaging or "excessive rate increases."

Ex-dealers file suit, say Ford took agency

SALT LAKE CITY (UPI) — A southeastern Utah couple has filed a $30 million antitrust suit against Ford Motor Co. and Ford Motor Credit Co. after they lost their Ford dealership.

Thomas and Violet Redd of Blanding, Utah, are also asking the U.S. District Court for Utah for $10 million in damages, which would be tripled under antitrust laws, and they asked the court to assess punitive damages against the automaker, totaling 1 percent of Ford Motor's net worth.

The Reds operated Quality Ford, Inc., for 10 years. They said when they obtained the franchise in 1967, Ford officials encouraged them to sell cars and trucks to Indians in Utah, Arizona, Colorado and New Mexico, since Mrs. Redd is part Navajo and part Hopi.

The suit filed Wednesday also said Ford Motor Credit agreed to help finance the purchase of vehicles and the sales contracts at the time the Reds obtained the franchise. But the Reds said Ford and its subsidiary credit firm began conspiring in 1974 with two men — Russell Brambrough and Danny Van Keuren — to "intimidate and coerce" the Reds into giving up the franchise to Brambrough and Van Keuren.

The plaintiffs said Ford violated the Clayton, Sherman and Robinson-Patman antitrust acts in limiting the numbers of cars they could purchase, that the cars were late in being delivered, and that they could not obtain popular models.

They said Ford Motor Credit, after 1974, also refused to finance cars sold to Indians and demanded that the Reds pay immediately for all delivered vehicles.

Jury considering drug supply case

OGDEN, Utah (UPI) — Jury deliberations began Thursday in the case of Dr. Wilbur Thain, charged with giving illegal amounts of codeine to Howard Hughes from 1974 until the physician pronounced him dead on a flight from the Bahamas to Houston in 1976.

In closing arguments during the first half of the day, the prosecution said the Logan, Utah, physician had no right to prescribe such high dosages of the drug and did it simply for money.

Assistant U.S. Attorney Max Wheeler told the 12-member federal jury that steps should have been taken to cure Hughes' medical problems instead of keeping him on drugs for the rest of his life.

The defense has contended throughout the trial that Thain tried to wean the late billionaire by use of placebos and that the codeine was prescribed to Hughes for relief of pain, a legitimate medical purpose.

But Wheeler told the jury that Thain supplied the drug at Hughes' whim.

"No doctor has the right to prescribe an addictive drug at will simply because the patient wants it," Wheeler said.

"Here we have a man who was obsessed with drugs," the prosecutor said. "That's all he lived for — his next delivery of drugs."

During the trial Dr. Norman Crane, who supplied Hughes with the drug before Thain took over in August, 1974, said that the tycoon claimed it was his only pleasure.

Wheeler also charged that Thain kept inadequate records and used code words when talking over the telephone about Hughes' codeine supply.

"He was concerned about what an investigation would reveal," Wheeler told the jury. "Does that sound like a doctor acting within the scope of his authority?"

Before closing arguments started Thursday, Wheeler presented into evidence a 1975 letter from Thain to Hughes in which the physician told the tycoon he would have to find new sources of codeine because of tightening federal drug laws.

In the letter Thain said federal authorities were investigating people who had excessive amounts of certain drugs. He suggested to the tycoon that they get the codeine from somewhere like Canada where the laws weren't so strict.

Aluminum cutbacks loom if nuclear plant idle

PORTLAND, Ore. (UPI) — Continued closure of the Trojan nuclear power plant could force reductions in production and layoffs in the Northwest aluminum industry this winter, an aluminum industry publication says.

Western Aluminum News, a monthly publication of Western Aluminum Producers, an organization of seven firms in Oregon, Washington, and Montana, said the short range power outlook would be excellent if it were not for the delay in reopening Trojan. Reservoirs in the Columbia Basin hydroelectric system are filled.

It added, however, that loss of the Trojan power supply for an extended period "could mean a power cutback for the Northwest aluminum industry and sharply increased power costs for other consumers."

The publication said when it appeared that Bonneville Power Administration would not have its 30 percent share of the Trojan output because of the continued closure of the plant, BPA exercised its right to reserve power from the Hanford nuclear plant. That power, half the plant's normal output, is normally sold to the direct service industries such as the aluminum companies.

Without that power, the publication said, the aluminum companies "have had to seek an alternative power supply and could be forced to reduce production at some point."

The Trojan plant remains closed because of discovery that its control building does not meet federal earthquake resistance standards.

Judge rules policyowners must pay off

PHOENIX (UPI) — A Superior Court judge says the law may be unfair but former policyholders of a defunct Phoenix automobile insurance company must pay off nearly $1 million owed by the firm.

Judge Philip W. Marquardt issued the order after a series of hearings over the last two years for creditors of the defunct company, Essential Protection Inter-Insurance Co.

Many of the estimated 12,000 policyholders, both Arizona and out-of-state residents, received notice of the ruling Wednesday and immediately telephoned complaints to the court, the state Department of Insurance and other state officials.

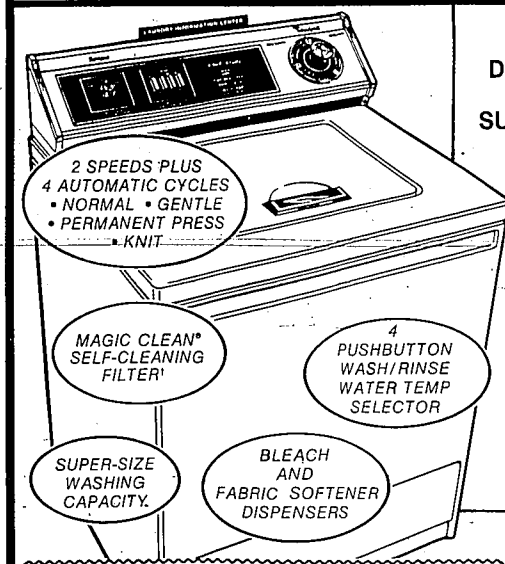

Marquardt said the insurance company, which went out of business in 1975, was a reciprocal company which made all policyholders partners and liable for the firm's debts.

"The law says the policyholders are responsible, but I don't think people should get burned like this," Marquardt said.

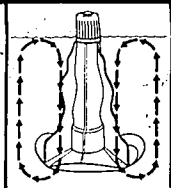

However, he added there was "nothing else" that could be done. Persons who held policies with the company are being billed for one annual premium. The payments range from $25 for persons who were insured for only a month to $3,000 for some small businesses. The average bill is about $180.

Hake to base ISU grid program on frosh

TWIN FALLS — Idaho State football Coach Bud Hake held out no panacea to immediately transform Bengal grid fortunes but promised hard toward constructing a solid foundation for a successful program.

Speaking at the Twin Falls Kiwanis Club noon meeting, Hake said he wouldn't discuss much about the recent past because "we aren't doing much right now" in the way of winning.

After watching his Bengals drop their first three outings, Hake said "we (the coaching staff) are not as disappointed as the fans might be." He noted ISU was playing just seven seniors in the top 22, a large number of freshmen on the offensive and defensive units and that just about all the reserve strength is coming from the freshman class.

He noted those acquainted with recent history of the school should be surprised by the developments.

"As you are aware, Idaho State has had a succession of coaching changes. The last coaching tenure that lasted any length of time was when Babe Caccia was there," back in the late 1950s and early 1960s. "Since then there have been five coaches and only one of them has been on for as long as four years. And there has been a fluctuation between basing recruiting on high school freshmen or relying on junior college," he noted.

For these reasons, Hake said, the base of the football program has been eroded to a point that there is little or no continuity from year to year, and particularly from coach to coach.

"I like to think that I'll be there long enough to establish that base," he smiled and again referred to the team's 0-3 start.

Hake said the Bengals had sought immediate help and sent a four-man recruiting delegation to the California junior colleges. "We found out something there," he said. He noted Boise State and Idaho have "mini-semester" in which a student may enroll in a class at nine week intervals. At Idaho State, there is only one semester. This means, Hake pointed out, that if ISU recruited a junior college player, he would have to fly to Pocatello to enroll in January, then return to his junior college to complete his academic requirements to be eligible for transfer and finally come back to ISU to start six weeks behind the non-athlete students in courses. "That means a junior college transfer at Idaho State has a third of a semester to make up before he's actually on campus," Hake said. "It wasn't hard for us to determine which way to go (in recruiting)," he continued. "We will go with a frosh base...taking our future players out of high schools."

Hake also noted "It often times is very difficult to develop the allegiance in a junior college transfer that can be developed in a freshman who will be with you for four years."

The coach reported Idaho State had "recruited exceptionally well" this past year. "We have a good number of the 'sturdy' types who still aren't shaving but there are tall kids who have good frames and can put some meat on them. When they get hair under their arms they'll be good players," he promised.

Looking at the rest of the year, Hake said "we knew at the start we'd be in thick going for the first three games. After that the schedule would become more to our liking. We play Portland State this Saturday night and them five or six others on our team don't have us so badly out-manned and outexperienced," he said. "We feel we can be competitive in just about all our games the rest of the way."

"But we need a win real bad right now. Nothing breeds success like success. You've all seen how a win can scab over all those wounds from previous losses and give a team a second life," he said.

In discussing the support the team has received, Hake noted "I told our booster club Monday morning that I didn't blame Southeast Idaho fans and ISU students for not supporting us. But I told them it wasn't going to be that way forever. We're going to be competitive."

"The thing that I've admired most about this team is that never in any contest have we put our tails between our legs and given up. Utah and Northern Arizona knocked us down time after time but we came back clawing and scratching every time," he said.

"As an idea of what to expect, Hake said "we're going to crank up our passing game. We haven't been able to move the ball very well on the ground and Spoon hit on 23 of 44 passes last week. We'll try to make it exciting for our fans — but I hope not too exciting by throwing interceptions on our end of the field."

For Allison, be it ever so humble...

TWIN FALLS — A trip to Japan was a novelty for former Twin Falls football player Mike Allison but it only more clearly impressed on him that there's no place like home.

Allison joined Idaho State's football team when they journeyed to Osaka, Japan, to play Utah State.

"It was interesting. I enjoyed it, really, particularly the first few days," Allison said. "But the humidity and the weather during practice really got to me. It was like working out in a steam room," he said.

The most interesting thing, of course, was the difference in food. "The Japanese people are phenomenal. I never saw an overweight person. But if you've eaten the food you can understand that," Allison joked.

"We finally found a McDonald's in a hotel but I don't know whether that was such a good deal," Allison continued. "A Big Mac costs four dollars."

"I was very impressed with the industrialization of Japan. But if you think we have pollution here, it's nothing. I don't think I saw a bird."

Allison said it was not his intention to put Japan down and that there were many things about the country he liked, enjoyed and found interesting.

"It just made me realize that Twin Falls is not that bad a place," he said.

Bruins host Borah in 'chamber night' battle

TWIN FALLS — The Borah Lions are back, they are "awesome" and they're coming to Twin Falls Friday night to meet the Bruins in Chamber of Commerce night.

The return of the Lions to the "awesomeness" category is a rating applied by Twin Falls Coach Ed Knecht. The Chamber of Commerce night has a two-fold plan, according to co-chairman Matt Smith. "First of all we want to support our football team and back our kids in any way we can. Secondly, we all plan to have a heck of a lot of fun."

Smith's working partner in the special night, Jack Muldoon, says "free prizes will be given away throughout the evening and the fans will be in store for some very unusual halftime entertainment."

But while fun is the plan for most, work is the chore of Coach Knecht and his Bruins. "Borah, I would guess, has a team this year comparable to many of their great ones of the past," Knecht said. "And they still are a young team. They have great overall team speed and quickness and probably the fastest backfield we'll see this year."

Borah will hold about a 25-pound per man average advantage in the line and there is nothing little about the Lion backs. One is Randy Holmes, now up to about 190 pounds. He was among the fastest in the state in the 100-yard dash last year as a sophomore.

"They had guts enough to go with a sophomore quarterback two years ago and this year he's a senior and playing like a veteran senior with two years of starting experience," Coach Knecht said of lanky Kyle Blickenstaff, who should be the best hurdler in the state next spring finishing second in both events in the state finals to a 100 yard dash.

For Twin Falls the backfield situation remains bleak — Pat Allison missed practice Wednesday due to flu, the bug having been among the Bruins for the past 10 days now. Andy Watkins can hardly walk due to a hip pointer and Harris' asthma precludes him being a full time performer. That leaves junior Mark Libert and senior Jim Knecht as running backs. Knecht has had a recurrence of a knee problem and his availability throughout an entire game is in no way assured.

"We also have a number of minor injuries among the rest of the team that will affect our planning in some ways," Knecht said. "We feel that Borah will let you do some things it will just be up to us to see if we can get them done. They are so amazingly fast, though..."

Ali apologizes for race cracks

CHICAGO (UPI) — Muhammad Ali apologized Thursday for racial remarks he made about two Italian-American fight promoters who filed a $10 million libel suit against him and to his fellow pugilists at a news conference.

Alli's apology followed a storm of criticism directed at him in the wake of statements he uttered three days after becoming the first three-time heavyweight champion in history with his victory over Leon Spinks.

"Last Monday at a press conference in New Orleans, I made certain unfortunate remarks," Ali said in reference to his diatribe unleashed at Jake DiMaggio and Phillip Ciacio.

"Certain people whom I regarded as my friends gave me a distorted version of events which so enraged me that I made unthinking, angry remarks."

DiMaggio and Ciacio, promoters of the "Battle of New Orleans" last Friday night, filed the libel suit Tuesday against Ali.

Alli's comments were made in reference to a $1 million suit filed last Saturday — and since dropped — charging the two black co-promoters with siphoning off gate receipts to the fight at the Louisiana Superdome.

Calling DiMaggio and Ciacio "white dogs," Ali had said in the Monday news conference the lawsuit "was racially motivated because white men cannot stand to see black men counting $6 million."

Ali said in his apology Thursday, "I never met Mr. Ciacio or Mr. DiMaggio... and hold no personal animosity against them. But even if I am wrong, I should not have called them a name, particularly a name which offends a whole nationality of people."

"It is my true feeling that all people are equal before God," he added. "My close Italian friends such as Angelo and Chris Dundee and my close Jewish friends such as Bob Arum and Harold Conrad will attest to my lack of prejudice."

Ali was criticized by the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith because of anti-Semitic comments Ali made in the same news conference.

Eight fight figures subpoenaed

NEW ORLEANS (UPI) — The U.S. Attorney's office Thursday issued eight subpoenas to persons involved in promoting the Muhammad Ali-Leon Spinks heavyweight championship rematch in the Louisiana Superdome.

Sources said two subpoenas were issued to Sherman Copelin and Don C. Hubbard, two of the local promoters originally named as defendants in a suit by co-promoters alleging they skimmed $1 million from live gate revenues. That suit was dropped.

The others subpoenaed as a result of an FBI investigation were not named. The FBI reportedly is investigating the dealings of Louisiana Sports Inc., the local group of promoters that put up a $3 million guarantee to national promoter Top Rank Inc. to stage the fight in New Orleans. The investigation stems from allegations of misappropriation of fight revenues and involves alleged fraud and banking violations, officials said.

Trouble began brewing immediately after the fight when two partners in LSI, City Councilman Phillip Cialo and businessman Jake DiMaggio, filed a $1 million suit claiming Hubbard, Copelin and former Top Rank vice president Butch Lewis siphoned off $1 million in fight revenues.

The suit was withdrawn the next day when Cialo and DiMaggio filed the three co-promoters agreed to return $225,000 to LSI. But on Monday, Ali tossed angry racial slurs at Ciacio and DiMaggio and said the suit was racially motivated. Ali's attacks led DiMaggio and Copelin to file a $10 million slander suit against Ali. Ciacio and DiMaggio also said they believed more persons were inside the Superdome than were reported.

The fight drew a $4,896,675 million live gate, the largest in entertainment history. But that figure was below the $6 million estimate announced on fight night.

The reason the gross sales were not higher was that 26,336 tickets were in the "terrace level," said ticket manager Henry Simoneaux. "This pulled down the per capita average." Simoneaux also said 63,532 paid their way into the dome making the crowd the largest in boxing history.

Kentucky pays tribute to Ali

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (UPI) — Heavyweight boxing champion Muhammad Ali was given Kentucky's highest award Thursday night when he returned to his hometown, which once rejected a move to rename a street for him because of his refusal to serve in the Army.

Gov. Julian J. Carroll presented Ali with the Governor's Distinguished Service Award "for carrying the name of Louisville and Kentucky to all the world and making everyone, everywhere, sit up and take notice that here indeed was a man to be reckoned with."

Carroll said it was the first time in his four years in office that he has so honored anyone. Fewer than a dozen people have ever received the award.

"No one has ever dominated the sports world so completely — all by himself — as this man has done for some 15 years now," Carroll said of Ali.

State Police estimated 2,500 people turned out at the 37,000-seat Fairgrounds Stadium for the outdoor ceremony honoring Ali. "The governor's staff had expected upwards of 20,000."

More than 1,000 people attended a private reception for Ali, hosted by Carroll, prior to the ceremony.

During the stadium event, several people who knew Ali as a young man named Cassius Clay described their acquaintances with Ali.

Among them was Joe Martin Sr., a former police officer who has known Ali since he was 12. Martin said he helped teach the champion how to box and encouraged him to overcome his fear of flying in order to travel to the 1960 Olympic Games in Rome, where he won the gold medal.

"It was positive then he'd be the Olympic champ and he was," Martin said. "Ali, as an amateur, also showed his later habit of predicting the round in which he would score a knockout. He usually did."

Four card 66s in Napa tourney

By JOE SARGIS UPI Sports Writer

NAPA, Calif. (UPI) — Jay Haas, needing a victory in order to play in the World Series of Golf next week, took a big step in that direction Thursday when he came back from a month layoff to shoot a 6-under-par 66 for a share of the first round lead in the $200,000 Napa Open.

Haas, who won the San Diego Open at the start of the year but nothing since, was among the late starters and his 66, which included an eagle on the ninth hole, tied him for the lead with Rex Caldwell, Ed Sneed and Dave Elcheberger on a day when nearly half the field shot par or less over Silverado's two courses.

The 24-year-old Haas, who won the NCAA Championship in 1977 while attending Wake Forest, had a chance to hold the lead all by himself but he bogeyed the par-3, 162-yard 16th on the South course when he three-putted from 40 feet.

Haas who has won $71,951 this year, had planned to rest the remainder of this year since he was assured of an exemption for 1979 by virtue of his victory at San Diego.

"But I got a little tired sitting at home," said Haas. "I also set a new goal for myself — of winning $100,000 this year. I have two more weeks to make it."

Elcheberger, Caldwell and Sneed are among the first 50 money winners. They played more like hungry tigers looking for a spot among the year's top 50.

Like Haas, all three played the South layout, which is 200 yards shorter than the North and about two shots easier.

Elcheberger and Caldwell also eagled the ninth while Sneed eagled the 13th, which is a par-5, 494-yard hole.

Elcheberger said he didn't think he played as well as his score indicated, while Caldwell admitted it was his best putting round of the year. Sneed said he played well on the back nine and that made his round.

Pat Filzmons, Bob Zender and Pat McGowan shot 67s on the South while Eddie Pearce had a 67 on the North to lay a shot back. The 4-under-par 68 group included more than a dozen players, among them 1978 leading money winner Tom Watson.

The Napa event is sponsored by Reischer-Busch.

Perry becomes first to win 20 NL games first pitcher to win the Cy Young Award in both leagues.

SAN DIEGO (UPI) — Forty-year-old Gaylord Perry, with the help of four singles by Gene Richards and two innings of relief by Rolfe Fingers, Thursday night became the first National League pitcher to win 20 games this season when the San Diego Padres blanked the San Francisco Giants 5-1.

It marked the fifth time the veteran right-hander, who has his sights on a second Cy Young Award, has reached the 20-victory plateau in his 17-year career and the first time since 1974. Should Perry, who has lost six, be voted the award he would become the

The triumph was the 266th in Perry's career — tops among active pitchers. He tied after seven innings and yielded to Fingers after allowing four hits and fanning five to raise his career total to 2,385, third on the all-time list. The victory also gave Perry a triumph over every NL club this year.

It was the fifth straight victory for Perry and his eighth in his last nine decisions. John Montefusco, 11-8, was the loser.

Yanks trim Jays, Boston keeps pace

TORONTO (UPI) — Reggie Jackson and Thurman Munson drove in two runs apiece to support the contending fifth-inning pitching of Jim "Catfish" Hunter and Rich George Thursday night and lead the New York Yankees to a 7-1 victory over the Toronto Blue Jays.

New York scored three runs in the fifth inning after Bucky Dent drew a walk off loser Baldo Moore, 6-8. Mickey Rivers doubled and Willie Randolph walked to load the bases before Munson scored Dent with a sacrifice fly. Jackson then doubled to left field to make it 3-1.

Randolph tripled in the seventh to score Rivers, who walked, and Munson followed with an RBI single to make it 5-1. After Jackson flied out, Lou Piniella and Chris Chambliss hit back-to-back doubles to complete the scoring. Toronto's run came on a solo homer by Rick Bossett leading off the bottom of the first inning. Hunter allowed four hits in six innings, striking out five and walking one, to improve his record to 11-5. He is now 9-2 since returning from the disabled list July 17.

Rod Carew in the fourth inning then tripled and scored on Carew's single in the sixth. Bobby Bonds scored the first three Texas runs. He walked in the first, advanced to second on a sacrifice, went to third on a wild pitch and came in on Oliver's sacrifice fly. In the third, loser Gary Serun, 9-9, walked Bonds again and the stole second and scored when Glenn Borgmann's throw went into center field and Dan Ford mislaided J.L. Both Borgmann and Ford were charged with errors on the play. Bonds singled in the fifth, moved to second on a sacrifice and scored on Oliver's single.

Houk stuns Tigers, baseball by announcing his retirement

DETROIT (UPI) — Ralph Houk, manager of the best and worst teams in baseball over a career that spanned two teams and 16 years, stunned the Detroit Tigers Thursday when he announced he was retiring and thus would not be returning as their manager next season.

New York Yankees. "It's time for me to spend some time with my wife. I've been in baseball for over 40 years. 'It's not easy to do this,' he said, 'yet I feel it's the thing to do.'"

"The Tigers have been nice enough to give me a job as a consultant — although I don't know what that would be." Houk said he, club president and general manager Jim Campbell and vice president Bill LeJole discussed a successor and "were 100 percent unanimous" in favor of Moss. "He's had 18 of our players that have come up here," Houk said. Campbell said Moss, given a one-year contract, had "been programmed into this thing for over a year."

league catcher who spent the bulk of his career as a substitute.

"I've been treated so great here," Houk said. "It's been an interesting job but the only way I could have stayed here five years was my associations with Mr. Campbell and Mr. (club owner John E.) Fetzer. 'Truthfully, I did not intend to stay here this long,'" Houk said. "It's been gratifying to me to see some of the young players we have stuck with developing."

Houk, 59, originally signed a three-year contract to manage the Tigers but it was replaced after 1976 with a unique self-renewing agreement that raised his pay above the average of his contemporaries and provided for additional attendance and club performance bonuses.

It also had a built-in year of severance pay should the contract be terminated by either side. Campbell had said repeatedly Houk could manage the Tigers for as long as he wanted.

Houk had been hinting at retirement the past season or two — citing his age, the aggravation of traveling and fan abuse — but said he wanted to stay until he felt the job of rebuilding Detroit into a respected team again was accomplished.

He became manager of a Tiger team that was already growing old before he took over and it crumbled in less than a season. His second year featured a near-record 19-game losing streak before a step-by-step return to respectability began with an infusion of youngsters in 1976.

Mark Fidrych and Jason Thompson joined Ron LeFlore as regulars that season. Steve Kemp and Dave Rozema followed last season while the sparkling double play combination of Lou Whitaker at second and Alan Trammell at short have provided the club with an excellent foundation for a return to power in the near future.

Houk was a non-playing member of New York championship teams of the early 1950s. The most times he ever batted in a season was 92 in his rookie year of 1947. He never had a home run in 158 at-bats and his major league playing career ended with an unsuccessful pinch-hit in 1954.

But like many players whose talent never matched their love for the game, Houk spent his time on the bench listening, learning and asking questions.

He became playing manager of Denver, New York's American Association farm club, in 1955 and moved up to the Yankees as coach in 1958.

New York asked him to succeed Casey Stengel in 1961 and the Yankees won pennants his first three seasons and were World Champions the first two.

He resigned as manager to become general manager in 1964 but returned to the field for the start of the 1966 season when he found front office life unsatisfying for him.

The Yankees rose from 16th in 1966 to second in 1970 before three successive fourth-place finishes and differences with owner George Steinbrenner led to his resignation at the conclusion of the 1973 season.

Two weeks to work

Ralph Houk, manager of the Detroit Tigers, surprised the baseball world and the Tigers Thursday when he announced he was retiring at the end of this season. Houk managed 16 years in the major league with the Tigers and New York Yankees.

Cruiser division suggested for boxing

MEXICO CITY (UPI) — World Boxing Council president Jose Sulaiman Thursday proposed the creation of a new category between light heavyweight and heavyweight which would be known as cruiserweight.

"The aim of this new category is to balance the top two divisions and help the many good fighters who fall into this class," Sulaiman said. "The name cruiser is not a newcomer to professional boxing. The label was first used at the turn of the century but was later changed to light heavyweight."

Sulaiman explained that there are many light heavyweight boxers who have a tough time trying to make the weight limit and who lack the size to fight in the heavyweights.

He cited as examples Yugoslav Mate Parlov, Argentinians Victor Galindez and Miguel Angel Cuervo and Cuban heavyweight champion Leon Spinks.

Parlov, who won the WBC light heavyweight crown in January, is facing increasing problems to make the weight.

Galindez, the World Boxing Association (WBA) light heavyweight monarch until last Friday when he was upset by Mike Rossman of Philadelphia on the same card in which Spinks lost to Muhammad Ali. The Argentinian, who succumbed in the 13th round, had to do some last minute exercises and step on the scale three times before he made the 175 pound limit.

His countryman, Cuervo, also held the WBC crown but because of weight problems, among other things, held the championship for only seven months.

"These fighters and many others who are in the heavyweight division will fit perfectly in the cruiserweight," stressed Sulaiman.

Spinks, despite a crash weight gain program two weeks before the fight, could do no better than 201 pounds, 20 less than Ali's 221.

Sulaiman indicated that at times there existed large weight differences in the maximum category and the All-Spinks battle was a good example. "Because of this the strength of the fighters is not well balanced," he said.

Sulaiman added that during the WBC's annual convention, to be held in early November in Reno, Nev., council members will vote on this and other proposals and that it will be up to them to set the weight limits.

He hinted that the cruiserweight limits could probably be set at 175-185 pounds, meaning that the heavyweight division would start at 185.1 pounds.

Sulaiman also said that among other proposals to be presented at the meeting, are the pension fund, the use of plastics on the eyebrows, doping tests and others, all aimed at making boxing a "more human" sport.

"Like many of the new categories, the cruiser will also come under fire. But time will tell. The same thing happened when the light featherweight and flyweight classes were first introduced, and judging from results, we did the right thing," added the man who stripped Spinks of the heavyweight title, after the former champ refused to meet Ken Norton in his first defense.

Brock to play next season

ST. LOUIS (UPI) — Lou Brock, baseball's all-time base-stealing champion, will play the 1979 season with the St. Louis Cardinals, it was announced Thursday.

The 32-year-old outfielder has spent part of this season on the bench. In some games he has been replaced in left field by Ted Simmons, moving out of his catching position to make room for rookie Terry Kennedy.

The Cardinals said in spring training Brock had been given a two-year contract to ease the pressure of reaching 3,000 hits. Brock needed 168 hits over two seasons to reach 3,000 but has 64 this season.

The Cardinals said Brock came to an agreement with the team on salary during spring training but the signing of the contract was delayed pending agreement on what the Cards called "special covenants."

Although General Manager Bing Devlin usually reveals contract details, Brock's signing was announced by Cardinal President August A. Busch Jr., who also announced the agreement in spring training.

Busch said in a statement: "We anticipate Lou will be an integral part of our ball club in 1979. The drive and competitive spirit that are reflected in Lou's accomplishments will provide us with a leader to help bring the Cardinals back to a contending position."

Brock has been with the Cardinals since 1964. He broke Maury Wills' record of 104 stolen bases in a season with 118 in 1974 and last season broke Ty Cobb's record of 932 stolen bases in a career.

Steelers go without Ham

PITTSBURGH (UPI) — Pittsburgh Steelers linebacker Jack Ham probably will not play Sunday when the Steelers meet the Cleveland Browns in a battle between the only two unbeaten teams in the American Football Conference.

The Steelers Thursday downgraded Ham's status from questionable to doubtful. The linebacker has been slow to recover from a pulled groin muscle suffered last Sunday in the game against the Cincinnati Bengals.

Ham has not practiced all week and it's unlikely he will be able to do so Friday, the final day of heavy drills. Robin Cole worked at Ham's left linebacker position and will start against the Browns.

NFL free agents increase incomes

NEW YORK (UPI) — The National Football League's 84 free agents who signed contracts this year received an average salary increase of 27.8 percent, the NFL Management Council said Thursday.

Based on figures provided by the league office, the average salary of free agents rose from $57,629 in 1977 to $73,644 this season, a Management Council spokesman said.

Ninety-three players qualified as free agents at the end of last season, but nine either retired or are playing in Canada. None of the 84 remaining free agents, however, wound up with new teams via the free agent route. A few are playing with new teams after being traded.

Pruitt's ails more serious

CLEVELAND (UPI) — The medical report on Greg Pruitt of the Cleveland Browns grew worse Thursday, as Coach Sam Rutigliano disclosed the star running back may be out another 2-3 weeks.

Pruitt, who suffered contusions of the left calf in a game against the Cincinnati Bengals two weeks ago, was admitted to the Cleveland Clinic Wednesday for more intensive treatment.

"The doctors decided it was best that the leg be immobilized and elevated after four or five cc's of blood were drained," Rutigliano said.

'Skins cut Forte

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Ike Forte, a third-year running back cut by the New England Patriots before the season, signed Thursday with the Washington Redskins, a club spokesman announced.

To make room on the 45-man roster, the Redskins waived rookie wide receiver J.T. Smith from North Texas State. Smith returned four punts for 33 yards and one kickoff for 18 yards in the Redskins' first three games.

Colts sign Rowe

BALTIMORE (UPI) — The Baltimore Colts Thursday signed 12-year veteran defensive tackle Dave Rowe, who was recently released by the Oakland Raiders.

A Colts spokesman said Rowe, a 6-foot-7, 270 pound tackle from Penn State, was signed for an undetermined amount of money.

White to miss four cage games

GREENVILLE, S.C. (UPI) — Furman, which has lost two basketball players to academic difficulties, will not be able to use high scoring 6-3 Ronald White for at least four games this year.

Coach Eddie Halbrook said the NCAA informed him Wednesday that White, a guard-forward who averaged 29.5 points a game at Anderson Junior College last season, will be eligible to play by the time the Paladins open their Southern Conference schedule Dec. 13 if he has sufficient classroom credits.

White is taking three courses at Greenville Technical College to get the hours he needs to be eligible for competition at Furman.

Patriots face season's pivot at Oakland

By GREG AIELLO UPI Sports Writer
The New England Patriots return Sunday night to the place where their streak of misfortune began almost two years ago if they leave Oakland with a victory it could go a long way toward fixing a season quickly threatening to break down beyond repair.
After the Patriots came alive in the 1976 season, winning 11 games after a 3-11 season the year before, they were eliminated in the first round of the playoffs by Oakland in a disputed 21-17 decision. The dispute concerned some questionable calls against New England during Oakland's last-minute winning drive. The Raiders went on to win the Super Bowl.

Last year the Patriots, based on a wealth of talent, were picked by many to reach the Super Bowl. But early season salary holdouts by all-pro offensive linemen John Hannah and Leon Gray disrupted the team and contributed to a pair of early losses that wound up costing the Patriots the NFC East title.

This season again began with optimism and serious championship hopes for New England. Then in an exhibition victory at Oakland wide receiver Darryl Stingley suffered a paralyzing spine injury when he was hit by Raiders' safety Jack Tatum. The Patriots haven't seemed the same since. Though unbeaten in this season, they travel to Oakland Sunday with a 1-2 record and the look of a team in disarray.

"We simply must have better execution on the field," New England Coach Chuck Fairbanks said. "When things are going wrong, usually there are sweeping changes. I've changed things before, but I believe too strongly in what we're trying to do out there."

Fairbanks said he would start quarterback Steve Grogan against the Raiders despite Grogan's 11-for-33 passing performance and three interceptions in an embarrassing 34-27 loss to Baltimore Monday night. The Patriots were 18-point favorites against the Colts.

"We are having breakdowns, missing assignments, dropping passes," Fairbanks said. "They are indications of why we are not scoring the points. We're doing all right between the 20 and 20 but we are not breaking the scoring zone."

The Patriots are hoping tight end Russ Francis, who missed the Baltimore game with a pulled hamstring, will return against Oakland. He is listed as a probable starter. Doug Beaudoin again replaces starting safety Prentice McCarry, out with a knee injury.

Oakland, 2-1, is coming off a 28-3 win at Green Bay in which the Raiders rushed for a club-record 348 yards. Mark van Eeghen keyed the Raiders' ground attack with a career high 151 yards on 26 carries.

The Patriots will be playing Oakland for the first time since Stingley's injury. Tatum will be a focus of interest because of Stingley but also because Green Bay Coach Bart Starr blasted the Raiders' veteran safety for what he termed a cheap shot against running back Terrell Middleton last week.
Oakland Coach John Madden disputed Starr's charge and called it a cheap shot against Tatum.

"We've looked at the film and there's nothing there," Madden said. "I just think it's pretty cheap to take that shot at Tatum, especially at this time."

"Jack is one of the hardest hitters in football ... but he is not a dirty player. He doesn't need that to be intimidating. His hitting ability alone is intimidating."

In other games Sunday, Cleveland (3-0) visits Pittsburgh (3-0), Los Angeles (3-0) is at Houston (2-1), the New York Jets (2-1) at Dallas (2-1), Atlanta (1-2) at Tampa Bay (1-2), Miami (1-2) at Philadelphia (1-2), Denver (2-1) at Kansas City (1-2), Green Bay (2-1) at San Diego (0-3), Baltimore (1-2) at Buffalo (0-3), Detroit (1-2) at Seattle (1-2), New Orleans (1-2) at Cincinnati (0-3) and San Francisco (0-3) at the New York Giants (2-1).
Chicago (3-0) hosts Minnesota (1-2) Monday night.

Baseball awaits reshuffling of Cincinnati's 'untradeables'

CINCINNATI (UPI) — Speculation is flowing about the Cincinnati Reds' plans for 1979 as the former two-time world champions linger near elimination from the National League pennant chase for the second consecutive year.
Far back of Los Angeles in the NL Western Division beginning a three game series in Atlanta Friday, it appears the Reds will be easily outdistanced by the Dodgers for the second straight time. When the "Big Red Machine" conked out last season, then President and General Manager Bob Howsam emphatically said none of the Reds' "starting eight" — believed by many to be the best starting lineup in baseball — would be traded.

But a second disappointing season later, President and General Manager Dick Wagner promises a hard look at the club. And local sports writers are predicting a shake-up in the Reds' starting lineup next season.
"It's too early to talk about possible trades and changes in the makeup of the team for next year," said Howsam. "We'll take a hard look at the club, player by player and point by point, in an attempt to determine what went wrong."

Said Wagner: "My biggest personal disappointment was that we've lacked aggressiveness this season. We seemed to be on our heels too much offensively and defensively. You have to take the game to the other club. That's what we've done in past seasons, but not this season."

Wagner also blamed complacency, not injuries, as the main reason for the Reds' woes this season.

"I'm not putting all the blame on the players when I speak of complacency. All of us must share it — the front office, Sparky (Anderson) and his coaches," explained Wagner.
Looking for signs of impending moves, Cincinnati sportswriters were quick to notice the Reds giving Ken Griffey a workout in centerfield against the Dodgers this week, in place of Cesar Geronimo. With a lifetime major league batting average of .266 before the season, including a .307 performance in 1976, Geronimo's average slid into the .220s this season while he was fighting injuries.

"You can bet the Reds will attempt to trade Cesar Geronimo during the winter," one writer flatly declared.
Other names mentioned in trade speculation include Pete Rose, whose contract with the Reds expires this year, and Joe Morgan, who has said he will veto any attempted trade. Rose, who made national headlines this year for collecting his 3,000th hit and compiling a 44-game hitting streak, has indicated he would like to top the all-time National League record for most hits, 3,630, held by Stan Musial.

"But that doesn't mean he wouldn't be willing to switch leagues if the right club — say the New York Yankees — makes him an offer he can't refuse," wrote Earl Lawson of the Cincinnati Post. "And free-spending George Steinbrenner, the Yankee owner, just did that."

For now, the Reds are concentrating on what little chance they have to overtake the Dodgers as the season wanes. But trade talk is sure to grow stronger when the season ends.

Astros rehire Virdon

HOUSTON (UPI) — The Houston Astros Thursday announced they had rehired Manager Bill Virdon for a third season despite the team taking a disappointing downturn on the field.

His team was expected to battle Los Angeles for the National League West title, but poor pitching and injuries to key hitters hindered any further progress.

"I believe this club can be a contender, or I wouldn't be coming back," he said.
The Astros had a 68-83 record, were 23 games out of first place and a half game out of the division cellar before Thursday night's game.

Virdon also sounded more cautious about this team's potential than he has since he took over the Astros.
"We have some big question marks for next year. I can't go out on a limb quite so far as I did before this year. I don't know that we'll be able to fill the voids," he said.

Virdon's managing rarely has been criticized by local fans and the media. He is known to have good business and personal relationships with Astros' President and General Manager Tal Smith.

The Astros job has already become Virdon's longest as a manager. He was fired by the Pittsburgh Pirates (in 1973) and by the New York Yankees (in 1975) late in his second season with each ballclub.

The Astros also announced Thursday that Virdon will retain his four coaches. That move took on added significance because pitching coach Mel Wright has been under fire all season due to the poor performances of a number of pitchers.

By JIMMY (The Greek) SNYDER
CHICAGO — Two perfect records collide when Cleveland (3-0) plays Pittsburgh (3-0) Sunday. The Browns have never won at Three Rivers Stadium, and with the Steelers and QB Bradshaw off to their best start ever, Cleveland will need a healthy Greg Pruitt to keep this one close. Bradshaw and Lynn Swann have taken advantage of new rules, while tight end Benny Cunningham are impressed as well. Cleveland secondary will be tested deep, early and often. Pittsburgh by 7 (down from 8).
Miami (2-1) at Philadelphia (1-2) — Dolphins run the ball better than any team in football and Del Williams makes them even tougher. Eagle defense vulnerable to the deep pass and should have trouble covering likes of Nat Moore and Daryl Harris. Dolphins hurting on defense with M.L.B. Steve Towle. Miami by 3.
Baltimore (1-2) at Buffalo (0-3) — Colts riding high after line effort against Patriots and will be tough opponents for Bills. Roger Carr has always done well against the Buffalo secondary. Baltimore by 2.
New Orleans (1-2) at Cincinnati (0-3) — Bengals teams hurting. Ken Anderson still out for Bengals and coach unhappy with performance of John Reeves. Giants lose Chuck Muncie, Emmanuel Sanders, and kicker Rich Gzaro. Bengals will concentrate on running ball inside and will make sizable gains against mistake-prone Giants secondary.

Cincinnati by 7.
N.Y. Jets (2-1) at Washington (3-0) — Veteran Redskins secondary offers stern test to Richard Todd who has been inconsistent in two games. Coy Bacon, who walked out of camp over money problems, will be tough for Chris Ward to block. Lamar Parrish-Wes Walker duel worth watching. John Riggins gets first chance against former mates. Washington by 7.
Los Angeles (3-0) at Houston (2-1) — Rams coming off near-perfect win over Dallas. Doug France handled Harvey Martin well and will play same kind of game against Oilers' Elvin Bethea. Haden will go deep against Oiler cornerbacks. Los Angeles by 3.
Denver (2-1) at Kansas City (1-2) — Chiefs always play tough against Broncos, but Denver defense led by Jackson and Gradinaru will handle winged K.C. specialty teams have not played, which could be worse against Rick Upchurch. Only matter of time before Norris Weese takes over from Craig Morton. Denver by 8 (down from 10).
San Francisco (0-3) at N.Y. Giants (2-1) — Simpson's knee hurting more than most people think. Joe Pisarcik and Grady Hatfield will have more than moderate success against Niners' secondary. New York by 4.
St. Louis (0-3) at Dallas (2-1) — Not only are the Cowboys smarting from last week's defeat, they are also intent on avenging last year's loss to St. Louis. Cowboy pass rush will have field day against patched-up Big Red line without Keith Wrotman and Dan Dierdorf. Dallas by 17.

Atlanta (1-2) at Tampa Bay (1-2) — Excellent possibility of scoreless tie since neither team has offense. Bartkowski back at QB but will be subjected to intense pressure from Bucs' defense. Doug Williams ran well against Vikings, could surprise. Atlanta by 1 (down from 3).
Detroit (1-2) at Seattle (1-2) — Lions have horrible road record, terrible offense, and pass protection for Greg Landry is non-existent. If the Bears could throw against the Lions, what do you think Jim Zoran will do for the Seahawks? Seattle by 4.
Green Bay (2-1) at San Diego (1-2) — Packers learning how tough life in AFC can be playing Chargers week after Raiders. Green Bay is especially vulnerable to Oakland kind of problems defending Lydell Mitchell, Don Woods and Bo Matthews. Fouts and Jefferson give Chargers potent passing combination. San Diego by 11 (up from 10).
New England (1-2) at Oakland (2-1) — Chuck Fairbanks' confidence in Grogan undiminished, but you have to wonder when he'll give Tom Owen a chance to show his stuff. Besides injuries, Pats are having trouble up front. Leon Gray was embarrassed by Coy Bacon and John Dutton. But Oakland QB Stabler has had 9 interceptions in three games. Game will be an "intensely physical" affair. Oakland by 6 (up from 5).

Minnesota (1-2) at Chicago (3-0) (Monday) — Vikes off to worst start under Bud Grant's leadership. If Tarkenton can't move offense against aggressive Bear defense, look for switch to Tommy Kramer. Addition of Golden Richards hypes Bears; passing attack but main offensive threat continues to be Walter Payton who set NFL rushing record last time he faced Minnesota. Chicago by 3.

Vet beats horse swap charge

MINEOLA, N.Y. (UPI) — Veterinarian Dr. Mark Gerard was convicted Thursday of two minor charges in the Belmont Park "sling" race that netted him $78,000, but was acquitted of stealing the champion stakes racer Cinczano and switching the horse with a plug named Lebon.
 The six-man, six-woman jury also found Gerard innocent of swindling Lloyd's of London of $137,000, which New Jersey millionaire Joseph Taub, the horse's owner, collected after Gerard had reported Cinczano had died in an accident.
 Two other charges of falsifying a business record and filing a false insurance claim were dropped.
 Gerard was convicted of two counts of false entries and practices in a contest of speed. The charges — both misdemeanors — are each punishable by up to one year in jail.

The 44-year-old veterinarian listened to the verdict calmly and, after the jurors left the courtroom, appeared happy he had been found innocent of the two major charges of grand larceny.
 Gerard praised the defense mounted by defense attorney F. Lee Bailey and said both the jury and Nassau County Court Judge Raymond Harrington had given him "most fair" treatment.
 "I would feel better if I had not been convicted of the two other charges," Gerard said. But Bailey said the two convictions will be appealed.
 If Gerard had been found guilty of the felony charges he would have automatically lost his license to practice veterinary medicine in New York State. It was not immediately clear what affect his conviction on the lesser charges would have on his license.
 Prosecutor Thomas Davenport told newsmen the jury's decision was "a compromise," adding that he interpreted the decision to mean the jury believed Gerard knew about the switch before the Sept. 23 race, but not earlier than that.

The jury apparently believed at least a portion of the testimony given by the only defense witness — Gerard's estranged wife, Alice, who testified with immunity from prosecution.
 She told the jurors that she, not her husband, switched the horses and said he was unaware of the swap at the time of the race.
 If Gerard had been convicted of all six counts in the indictment, he could have received a maximum jail term of 21 years.
 Mrs. Gerard was in the courtroom at the time of the verdict and showed no emotion as it was announced.
 She testified that on June 11, 1977, while Cinczano and an inferior horse, Lebon, were stabled at the Gerard horse farm in Muttontown, N.Y., she switched the horses' halters, which contained their names.
 On the following night, while Gerard was having dinner at a nearby restaurant, she said, the real Lebon fractured his skull when he accidentally reared up and struck his head on an overhead beam.
 She summoned Gerard, who put the horse to death because of the head injury. She said Gerard believed it was Cinczano he had destroyed.

 The jury deliberated for 10 hours over a two-day period at the end of the 12-day trial.
 Gerard remains free in $50,000 bail pending his sentencing on Nov. 2.

Nuggets waive two

DENVER (UPI) — Denver Coach Larry Brown said two National Basketball Association veterans have been placed on waivers by the Nuggets and Mel Bennett has been returned to the Indiana Pacers.
 Brown said both Roger Brown and Norm Cook were placed on waivers following an intra-squad scrimmage at the Air Force Academy Wednesday. He said the roster has dropped 15 prior to the pre-season opener at Seattle Friday.
 Brown was a veteran of four professional seasons with several teams and was invited by Brown to attend the Nuggets' training camp. Cook signed with the Nuggets last April as a free agent.

Girls team strengthened

NORFOLK, Va. (UPI) — Old Dominion University's search for a national women's basketball championship has reached into Canada, with two of that country's top players agreeing to move south.
 Chris Critelli, a member of Canada's 1976 Olympic team, and Jan Trombly, an All-Canadian the past two seasons, have transferred to ODU from Laurentian University in Sudbury, Ontario.

Arizona innocence

TUCSON, Ariz. (UPI) — University of Arizona Athletic Director Strack Thursday said the campus newspaper, the Arizona Daily Wildcat, erred in reporting the football team may have been in violation of NCAA rules by allowing two transfers to practice with the team.
 Strack said he talked with Thomas E. Yeager, an NCAA enforcement representative, and was told the school was not in violation of any rules.

Neutron bomb bid by Haig

©Daily Telegraph, London
Gen. Alexander M. Haig, NATO's supreme commander in Europe, says he has seen none of the "compulsory restraint" by the Soviet Union that President Carter called for when he deferred production of the neutron bomb — "none at all."

In an interview at his headquarters at Mons, Belgium, Haig admitted that NATO "has larger yield and dirtier weapons in its arsenal." But he said that top officers in the Atlantic alliance want the neutron warhead, too, because it would add "greater flexibility and credibility in the nuclear response" to any potential aggressor.

Haig stressed that NATO commanders are aware that production of the neutron bomb is a political decision, but he added that ultimately the political authorities will be held responsible for the consequences of their decision. The neutron bomb issue, Haig said, is the cause of dissension between Carter and West Germany as well as other NATO allies in Europe, where the warheads would need to be stored.

In deferring his decision to go ahead with the production of the neutron warhead last April, Carter had said he would "be influenced by the degree to which the Soviet Union exhibits restraint in its conventional and nuclear arms programs as well as in their force deployments which affect the security of the United States and Western Europe."

Haig said the United States now is assessing "compensatory restraint on the part of the Soviet Union in both the conventional and nuclear areas." A decision on whether or not to go ahead with the production of the neutron warhead would be based on this, he added.

Rhodesian war topic of meeting

LONDON (UPI) — Prime Minister James Callaghan and Zambian President Kenneth Kaunda will meet in Nigeria this weekend to discuss the spreading guerrilla war in Rhodesia and British "cheating" on a United Nations oil embargo against Rhodesia.

Their hastily arranged meeting will be Saturday in the northern Nigerian city of Kano, chosen as a convenient halfway point between London and Lusaka, Callaghan's office said.

Accompanied by Foreign Secretary David Owen and a small group of officials, Callaghan will fly to Kano this morning in a Royal Air Force VC-10 transport.

British officials said the meeting was arranged because of concern by both Callaghan and Kaunda about the situation in southern Africa — particularly in Rhodesia and Namibia.

They said there will be no fixed agenda. But Kaunda was expected to seek increased British aid to overcome the economic crisis in Zambia, which has been hovering on the brink of bankruptcy.

In addition, officials said, they will review again what can be done to get the long stalled all-party Rhodesian peace conference convened.

British officials said Callaghan also will seek to patch up his own relations with Kaunda, who has accused Britain of "cheating" over oil sanctions.

Smith seeks U.S. visit permission

WASHINGTON — Prime Minister Ian D. Smith of Rhodesia has applied for a visa to visit the United States early next month at the invitation of 27 U.S. senators, State Department officials said Thursday, but it was uncertain whether the Carter administration would grant the necessary approval.

Officials said that Smith and the Rev. Ndabaningi Sithole, one of the three black members of Smith's biracial transitional government, submitted their requests for visas through the United States Embassy in South Africa.

The invitation was sent to Smith and his colleagues earlier in the month by Sen. S.I. Hayakawa, R-Calif., and 26 other Republicans and Democrats, most of them conservatives.

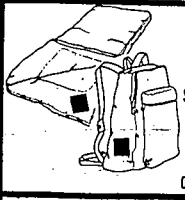

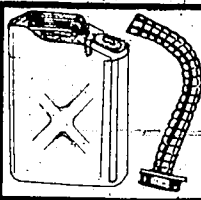

The purpose of the invitation, the senators said in their letter dated Sept. 14, was to give the Smith regime a better chance to win U.S. public opinion to its side of the growing conflict with black guerrillas led by Joshua Nkomo and Robert Mugabe.

The invitation from the senators asked Smith and other officials to come to meet with members of the Senate, to appear at public gatherings, and to hold press conferences and give television interviews.

Home insulation is just one way you can save energy and cut heating costs during the coming winter

A time to cut home heating and lighting costs

By JAY MCMULLEN
© 1978 Chicago Sun-Times

While it's still simmering, late summer is the ideal time to tackle the problem of the ever-rising utility bills by devising ways to lower the cost of heating, cooling and lighting your home.

National Wildlife Magazine, published by the National Wildlife Federation, the country's largest conservation education group, in its latest issue cited the case of a Florida homeowner who cut his power consumption by more than 50 per cent while continuing to use all major appliances.

"With a systematic approach," the magazine said, "homeowners can save considerable money before they invest in solar panels or other devices."

It cited a Princeton University study showing that "there can be a 50-per cent difference in utility bills between families living in identical townhouses."

The conservation magazine offered the following suggestions for saving energy and cutting utility bills:

• Turn down the water heater thermostat. The U.S. Department of Energy estimated that you can save at least $20 a year by lowering the setting on your electric water heater from 150 to 130 degrees. (Savings will be less for natural gas heaters). The higher the temperature inside a water heater, the more heat that's lost through the walls of the tank.

• Insulate the hot water heater. By wrapping a piece of thick, aluminum-backed fibrous glass insulation around your tank, you can reduce the amount of heat lost through its sides and save an additional $20 a year. The insulation materials should not cost more than $10 if you do the work yourself.

• Drain the heater tank. Studies have shown that sediment collecting at the bottom of a water heater reduces the system's efficiency. Every few months open the plug at the bottom of the tank and let the water flow out until it runs clear.

• Insulate the pipes. In many homes there can be 60 feet or more of 3/4-inch piping between the hot water tank and the faucet. That length of pipe contains up to two gallons of water. You must run off that two gallons, plus an additional gallon, to warm up the pipes before any really hot water comes out. If a hot water faucet is used 10 times a day, this means you may be wasting 900 gallons of hot water a month. The cost of insulating 60 feet of pipe would pay for itself in six months.

• Make your showers quick. Contrary to popular belief, showers save more energy than baths only if they are relatively short. During a long, steamy shower with the faucet giving off eight gallons a minute, it doesn't take long before you have drained off more hot water than you would have used in a 20-gallon bathtub.

• Use less water. If your family doesn't want to take shorter showers, you can conserve hot water by attaching a flow restrictor. These devices reduce the amount of water that comes out of the head without sacrificing a hard spray. A restrictor can save a family as much as $24 a year.

• Tune your furnace annually. Tests have shown that a 1-1/2-inch layer of soot in a furnace can reduce efficiency by up to 50 per cent.

• Insulate your basement. If you have no basement, insulate the crawl space below your floors. Princeton University researchers found that 25 per cent of the furnace heat in the houses they monitored stayed in the basement. If that area isn't insulated, heat loss there could cost several hundred dollars annually.

• Close up those air leaks. One Colorado researcher found sources of air infiltration are the kitchen fan exhaust, the bathroom fan exhaust, the hole around the clothes dryer vent and the furnace flue.

• Try to recycle some heat. For instance, if you have an electric clothes dryer, you can pull the vent back into the house, put a stocking over the end to catch the lint, plug up the outside hole and let the dryer warm up the room while it is drying the clothes.

• Consider a dishwasher. If you have a large family, a dishwasher is not the wasteful appliance many people believe it to be. To complete its cycle, it requires about 16 gallons of hot water. Washing your own dishes in a normal-sized sink three times a day may use 42 gallons a day. A dishwasher would save $70 a year.

• Eliminate the dry cycle. If you wash your dishes in the evening, electric drying is unnecessary.

• Wash clothes at a cooler setting. The Department of Energy says eliminating the "warm rinse" cycle on washing machines saves 20 per cent of the energy required to run the machine.

• Have your thermostat checked. Researcher found that half of the thermostats in the community they studied were inaccurate by one or more degrees. A one-degree error can add 4 per cent to a fuel bill.

• Keep your refrigerator clean. The coils in the back should be cleaned every other month. Dirty coils greatly reduce the machine's cooling ability. Check how airtight the appliance is by putting a dollar bill between the gasket and the door. If the bill can be pulled out easily when the door is closed, replace the gasket.

• Unplug that old refrigerator. If it used only occasionally or to store marginal items, it may be costing you up to $100 a year if its gasket is worn or the compressor is bad.

• Get rid of that large freezer. A middle-sized freezer may cost up to $8 a month to operate, and the older it gets, the less efficient it becomes.

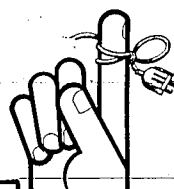

• Douse those pilot lights. Pilot lights on gas stoves may consume up to 30 per cent of the fuel used by the stoves.

• Don't preheat the oven. It is more costly than cooking from a cold start.

• Eliminate the television "instant-on." The device remains on 24 hours a day, adding $25 a year to electricity costs.

• Convert to fluorescent. A double-bulb incandescent fixture that uses two 100-wattlers for 10 hours a day costs about $36 yearly in electric bills. A fluorescent unit can provide a similar amount of light for $7.20.

• Cut your light wattage. Every time you cut the wattage of your bulbs in half, you cut 50 per cent of your utility bill for that particular fixture.

SAVE ENERGY

Couple built house to conserve energy

By PATRICIA MOORE
© 1978 Chicago Sun-Times

CHICAGO — In Richard Krause's opinion, a drafty house is like a cracked diamond: hopelessly flawed. His own custom-designed house in a south Chicago suburb, was conceived to take advantage of nature and technology for efficient use of energy. The rambling, L-shaped house has 4,600 square feet of living space (plus a basement), but it met the challenge of last winter.

Krause lived in a 1,800-square-foot town house before he and his wife, Bernadette, moved into his present home in the spring of 1977. His gas bills for an entire year totaled only $50 more than they had the previous year in the townhouse. The bimonthly bills for the worst months, November through February, were $210 and $187, low for the size of the house. And Krause has more gas appliances in the new house: a gas stove and double ovens instead of an electric stove, and a gas grill on the patio that he used regularly, even in bitter weather.

Krause, a successful 34-year-old professional man, wouldn't have to break the piggy bank if his fuel costs were higher. But, as his wife said,

"He's a fanatic, a perfectionist on the subject of saving energy." He nods in agreement. "Who wants to be wasteful?" he said.

The energy saving began with the design of the house. Architect Martin Francis of Duane Linden & Associates took advantage of the terrain to shelter the house on the north and use the sun to the south and west. The one-acre lot slopes down from a road on the north side, so Martin placed the attached garage, a small study and the dining room to the north with a minimum of windows. The house is low to the ground at that end, but opens up in the middle where the living room has a 20-foot cathedral ceiling and sliding doors leading onto the protected terrace facing west. Finally, the south bedroom wing of the house is two levels and tall windows facing east, south and west capture the sun's rays. But a three-foot overhang protects the house from the sun.

Krause is convinced that proper insulation is the key to keeping fuel costs down. "An architect can give you beauty and good design, but a builder makes the house," he said. The three-car garage is fully in-ulated and Krause brags that the temperature there was usually in the 50s last winter. He never had to turn off the water outlet in the garage, even when the outdoor temperature hovered around zero.

The roof is of shake shingles, which Krause says provides better insulation than common asphalt and also reflects heat, keeping the house cooler in the summer. The attic has one foot of blown fibrous glass insulation. Continuous vents under the overhang keep air circulating in the attic, a crucial factor in keeping a house cool in the summer. Krause said they turned on the central air conditioning only four or five times this summer.

The only part of the house proper not covered by the attic is the living room with its high cathedral ceiling. Two inches of fibrous glass insulation were installed under the roof in this area. (Two inches is a modest amount of insulation directly under a roof, but Krause considers it sufficient when combined with shake roofing.)

All the walls are insulated with 6-inch, foil-backed batts. But the best insulation in the world is wasted if it isn't tucked into every nook and cranny, according to Krause.

Dear Abby

Dieter says turning down dessert embarrasses her

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

© Chicago Tribune-New York News Synd. Inc.
DEAR ABBY: I have just lost 20 pounds, which is something I've been trying to do for years. However, a problem has developed. When I'm a dinner guest at someone's home and a gooey dessert is offered and I turn it down, the hostess will loudly announce, "Oh, you and your diet! You're so skinny, it wouldn't hurt you to put on a few pounds!"

Of course, all eyes are on me and I never know what to do or say. I don't like to make a big deal out of explaining that I really don't want it (nobody would believe me, anyway), so I take it and eat it, and afterwards I could kick myself. Is there a better way to handle this situation? I hate scenes.

EMBARRASSED

DEAR EMBARRASSED: Instead of being embarrassed, be proud! Simply say, "I'm watching my calories."

And if you get any feedback about how skinny you are, let it be known that you worked hard to get that way and want to stay that way.

But if you lack the courage to stand your ground in a public confrontation, quietly accept the dessert, push it around on your plate, and leave it.

DEAR ABBY: My son (a sophomore in high school) is getting to be a very clever thief. We give him a generous allowance, and if he's asked for anything extra, we would be glad to give it to him, but he doesn't ask, he just helps himself. He doesn't need anything. He just steals for the thrill of stealing.

I know he has been in my purse and stolen money. And I have seen him take money from his father's wallet. He has stolen little things from his friends, and now I find that he's taken things from their grocery store, drugstore and other places of business.

I keep finding things in his room that I know he didn't buy. I have even threatened to take him to the police to frighten him, but nothing helps. Am I raising a criminal? Please help me.

ILLINOIS MOM

DEAR MOM: A child who steals for the thrill of stealing needs professional help. He can be straightened out if he's taken in hand early. Threatening him with the police is unwise. A policeman should be identified as a friend who protects us and our property, not an enemy who would take pleasure in punishing our wrong doing. Ask your family doctor whom to see about this boy.

DEAR ABBY: I have a friend whose company I enjoy immensely and we see each other at least once a week — but it is always at MY house.

She has a lovely home and a housekeeper, so there is no reason in the world why she can't invite me to her house once in a while.

When I see her or talk to her on the phone, she always says, "Do come over to see me sometime." I don't consider this a proper invitation. When I invite her to my home, I telephone and ask her to come on a specific afternoon.

I don't want to offend her, but I would like her to know that her "come over sometime" invitation doesn't sound very sincere to me.

How should this be handled? Or am I too touchy?

MRS. ANONYMOUS

DEAR MRS. ANONYMOUS: Are you too touchy? No. And how should it be handled? The next time your vague friend asks you to come over "sometime" — ask "When?"

David spends birthday in plastic bubble isolator

HOUSTON (UPI) — In many ways, David is like most 7-year-olds on his block.

He's learning to read, likes art class, he acquiesces to baths and resists haircuts. Birthdays rank right up there with Christmas as his favorite occasions.

But for David there is a loneliness to these festive times. He spends them isolated from his family and friends in a plastic bubble habitat that has been the only physical world he's ever known. The child celebrates his seventh birthday today with a spaghetti dinner and chocolate cake. His birthday gifts will be specially sterilized and put into the sterile isolator that is his home at home.

David is one of perhaps five living children out of 100 born with what doctors call severe combined immune deficiency disease (SCID). He lacks the ability to ward off disease-causing germs that constantly surround his body.

Leaving the sterile habitat probably would be fatal to the boy, whose complete identity has been withheld to protect him and his parents.

Dr. William Shearer, professor of pediatrics, microbiology and immunology at the Baylor College of Medicine, and the child's attending physician, said a major concern is helping David grow normally in an abnormal environment.

Shearer told reporters Wednesday that "medical researchers are trying not to treat the child as a laboratory specimen while they search for a cure to the rare disease that controls his destiny.

Doctors and the child's personal nurse, Bryn Holcombe, however, are pleased at his personality development, high intellect, and his ability to understand the circumstances ruling his young life.

"He's growing up. He's not the little boy he used to be," Mrs. Holcombe said. "He's opened up and is willing to be taught."

Mrs. Holcombe said — the child, whose habitat has been expanded from the bubble at birth to a three-room complex, to a mobile travel isolator and — for a short time — a "space suit" designed by NASA engineers, accepts the confines of his life style.

"He knows why he's in there. He seems content. He loves the attention of others. He's looking forward to his new (space) suit. He understands his body can't fight germs. And he knows germs make him sick."

A thorough search for a bone marrow donor — the doctors' best hope for a cure — so far has turned up no suitable match.

David's case is unique in the whole world. There are no medical precedents," Shearer said. "Unlike other children with SCID, he has never been sick and is the longest surviving patient."

"Let me stress that David is not an experiment. In his protected environment, in the substitute immune system provided for him, David is healthy and thriving."

"I will not attempt to manipulate his immune system at the cost of David's health or life. If we try something, there will have to be a very reasonable chance of success," Shearer said.

Gold mine offers variety

KETCHUM — "The Fonz" brown leather jacket will be only one of the many second-hand items of apparel on the racks when the GoldMine, a Ketchum thriftstore, re-opens September 28 at 11 a.m.

The leather jacket, supposedly worn by Fonzle of "Happy Days" fame, was donated by a well-known Hollywood personality, according to Marjorie Sturmy, GoldMine manager. Fonzie's jacket has a label stating "made for the Fonz" and his name printed on the lining. In addition to a label for Paramount Pictures' label.

Donated designer clothing, sweaters, coats, jeans, children's clothes, maternally wear and evening wear have replaced summer merchandise on the shelves of this rather unusual second-hand store.

All merchandise on sale at the GoldMine is donated, and it receives items from all over the country. Proceeds from the thriftstore help support Ketchum's Community Library.

"It is just incredible," stated Mrs. Sturmy, "the amount of donations, clothing, furniture, etc., that pours into the GoldMine, requiring a very active and busy volunteer force."

Only last week the GoldMine sold an electric golfcart that had been donated to the store by a gentleman from Sun Valley.

This was odd summer for rockers

©The Washington Star

WASHINGTON — The summer of 1978 was a most peculiar one for the rock business. Many of the biggest names stayed off the road entirely and did abbreviated tours. Those who did go out found audiences less willing to part with $15 to sit in the upper reaches of some football stadium. Such outdoor shows by acts with the clout of Fleetwood Mac had to be cancelled for lack of interest.

Most of the attention went to two acts — the Rolling Stones and Bruce Springsteen. Between them, the Stones and Springsteen dominated the headlines. The Stones were fine at the Warner Theater but were erratic for much of their tour. Springsteen won the critical battle hands down.

The biggest album was the soundtrack of an awful cinematic rehash of a decent small musical called "Grease," featuring the offkey mouthings of John Travolta and the bland vocalizing of Olivia Newton-John. What was to have been the biggest album — the soundtrack of "Sgt. Pepper" — hasn't made anywhere near the commercial splash expected of it.

Locally, the concert business was off, with the possible exception of Merriweather Post Pavilion. The Capital Centre was empty for long stretches. Carter Barron again was underused. (As luck would have it, half the concerts were staged at the amphitheater were rained out.) Wolf Trap continued to plod along with its uninspired pop programming. Shady Grove never opened. The Cellar Door and even the Warner Theater had trouble finding acts.

However, the fall season looks at least marginally more interesting. Some major tours, including junkets by Bob Dylan, Neil Young and the Eagles, have already been set. Van Morrison will make his first tour in three years. Joni Mitchell is threatening to go out again; Stevie Wonder, is keeping his own counsel. Boston will try to prove it can play its music on stage. It looks, however, that what was to be one of the year's biggest tours — by the Bee Gees — won't happen now until 1979.

The wave of big albums will soon reach tidal proportions. Morrison, Young, and the Eagles will have new releases next month, as will Linda Ronstadt, Rod Stewart and Earth, Wind and Fire. Mitchell and Wonder should have products out by year's end. Albums by Wings and Fleetwood Mac are a possibility. The newcomer to watch is Nicolette Larsen who will have her first effort out at Warner Brothers soon.

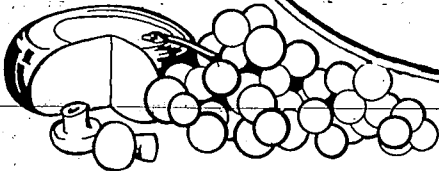

Here are the trends and events to keep an eye on in the coming weeks:

•Bob Dylan's tour: Dylan never fails to go to the change of pace just when you least expect it. No one has any idea what to expect of this tour, but it will get all the publicity anyway.

On the Cover

Larry Milligan, Western artist, studies history books to help make his Western paintings as authentic as possible. The artist will be in Jerome to teach a three-day oil painting class September 25 to 27 at the American Legion Hall.

Larry Milligan left art to work as an electronics engineer but came back to the Idaho Sawtooths and resumed painting.

With Mountains as backdrop

Milligan paints scenes of cowboys, Indians

By LONNIE ROSENWALD
Times-News Writer

STANLEY — Painting cowboys and Indians is art for Larry Milligan, but it's also a historical statement.

The western artist struggles to achieve a sense of fairness in his scenes of western plains battles and frontier confrontations.

"I'm not biased toward Indians or toward the cavalry," Milligan said flatly. "I show the whole story."

Milligan chose to paint the West not so much out of historical interest but because he grew up here and has spent most of his life in Idaho.

"If I had been born in Maine, I'd probably have painted seascapes," he joked.

"My function isn't to be a recorder of history," the artist explained.

Nevertheless, as a Western artist, he's aware Native Americans today complain whites have misunderstood what happened in the West. He has thought out the political and cultural problems of interpreting the Western — and especially Indian — past.

"The problem our history has is that we had the ability to be much better than we were," Milligan said. "We did one thing in Philadelphia and another thing in the western plains."

The Indians on the other hand, "were as good as they could have been."

Indians were "human beings caught in a culture gap," in Milligan's mind.

"Most European Americans looked at them as culturally and socially inferior."

"They did everything they could to negate whatever concepts Indians had of their own," he said.

Realism is the key to Milligan's work. By painting each bow, arrow and saddle as it was, he hopes to avoid the romantic pitfall many artists don't get beyond.

"I don't portray a Hollywood image or even an Indian image," he explained. "The image is as I would have seen them in the 18th or 19th Century."

Since the artist was born a century after the period he works with, he depends on written accounts for his information. Like any subject, there is as much trivia and inaccuracy in Western history books as there is solid fact.

Milligan pours over the history books in his studio every morning before he begins to paint. Late at night in the Stanley log cabin he built for his wife and two daughters, he returns to the books to do his "investigative work."

The most dependable materials are the now-written accounts which were passed down orally between Shoshone, Arapahoe, Nez Pierce, Blackfoot and Sioux Indians. Milligan also draws upon the records of Lewis and Clark and other explorers.

Firsthand records are reliable and "some handed-down accounts are reliable," according to Milligan.

Although government records give the artist some information, these reports were kept sporadically. Even the staunchest Indians, fur trappers and cowboys who lived in the 19th Century are now dead.

The artist seems secure in the feeling his work is historically sound. He claims his paintings are "pretty widely accepted as accurate" by Native Americans.

Milligan has been painting Indians, as well as cowboys, cavalry and fur trappers since he bought his first five tubes of oil paint at age 13. He sold his first painting, a huge golden Buddha, when he was 18.

He had an unusual father — one who wanted him to be a professional artist. However, he declined his father's advice and instead went to work as an electronics engineer in southern California.

Fifteen years later, he returned to the rustic Sawtooth backdrop, where he now lives, and resumed painting.

The log cabin where Milligan lives and works is more than scenic inspiration. He uses the snowy mountains and valleys as the background in his painting. Windows in his second-floor studio overlook a mountainous stretch right out of many of his canvases.

The studio's walls are covered with animal skins, guns, moccasins and other items that have appeared in his art.

The artist also spends time in the mountains backpacking, fishing and taking an afternoon off to cut a cord of firewood.

Vietnam war film describes it best

By RICHARD FREEDMAN

© Newhouse News Service
 Not that it has much competition, but "Go Tell the Spartans" is the best movie so far to come out of the Vietnam war. It is only 14 years too late.

For the action of this low-budget but high-intensity film takes place in 1964, at the beginning of American involvement — still in an "advisory" capacity. It concerns a patrol of GI's sent to occupy and if necessary, defend a non-strategic, meaningless spot on the map called Muc Wa lest the Viet Cong take over.

Muc Wa is the sort of place where if you leave your forearm exposed without mosquito repellent you get 23 bites in 30 seconds. Another attraction is the cemetery, long gone to seed, where some 200 French soldiers were buried during their debacle in Vietnam a decade before.

Brilliantly employing all the traditions of war movies since World War II, "Go Tell the Spartans" turns most of them upside down as it digs relentlessly into the tragic absurdities that make Vietnam so uniquely disastrous a chapter in our military and moral history.

Led by the crusty but rational and humane World War II veteran Major Barker (Burt Lancaster in one of the most stirring roles of his career), the doomed patrol can't tell its enemies from its friends. All Vietnamese look alike to them, and one, their interpreter "Cowboy," takes a savage delight in torturing and killing Viet Cong prisoners that is definitely outside U.S. military tradition.

The enemy comes in the form of lissome 14-year-old girls and ancient one-eyed snipers. Our allies in Saigon are too corrupt to supply Howitzer support, even when assured that the United States never expects unused equipment to be returned.

As in most war pictures, the patrol is a cross-section of American youth. But this time there is no easy ethnic fun about essentially brave lads. Corporal Abraham Lincoln, for instance, long-harassed about his name, is an opium-smoking neurotic who spouts fragments of the Gettysburg Address from an observation platform until he is blown up by the enemy.

The patrol is under the immediate command of an untested gung-ho lieutenant who simplistically just wants to zap Commie gooks but throws up at the first brutality he sees and spends the rest of the mission knocked out by dysentery.

This leaves the patrol under the command of a tough veteran of Korea, "burnt out" by his years of combat, who commits suicide.

Back in Lancaster's headquarters a humorless technician installs a computer which supposedly can predict enemy troop build-ups (to Lancaster's amused contempt until he finds out the thing actually works).

But to Lancaster, the total soldier of earlier, more comprehensible wars, this one is "a sucker's tour going nowhere." He does his duty as best he can, which doesn't prevent disaster for himself and his variegated crew of soldiers.

It took seven years to get enough people interested in making "Go Tell the Spartans" to get it to the screens. The result is perhaps the most thoughtful "war" film since Stanley Kubrick's "Paths of Glory" two decades ago. If we let our revision about the war itself keep us from seeing it, we will be justifying the usual diet of pap that Hollywood keeps spoon-feeding us.

McDowell sings in Elvis' shadow

CountryStyle News Service

Ronnie McDowell — whose tribute to Elvis, "The King Is Gone," sold more than 3 million records — can't seem to kick the Presley image.

"That was a special thing," the shy, soft-spoken young singer-songwriter told CountryStyle. "I'm having a bad . . . you know, hard time getting away from this Elvis image.

"I want to make a Ronnie McDowell career. I've put everything I've got into 'moving' the image," he added.

"I would like to be known as my own man."

When "The King Is Gone" hit the national charts shortly after Elvis' tragic death last August 16, 28-year-old McDowell was swept out of obscurity into the limelight.

To his consternation, he was an Elvis sound-alike.

"I'd like to think that the record made it because of what it had to say, not because I sounded like Elvis," McDowell says.

Those Elvis comparisons are a big drawback that I'm finding hard to shake.

"After the first record came out, people would come up to me in McDonald's and say, 'Oh, you're the guy who does Elvis.'

"I've been influenced by him musically more than anyone else, but I found out a long time ago that you have to be original and different to make it in the music business."

So now at least 40 percent of his songs are original material. The audience reaction has been good, he says.

"We were doing about 90 percent of Elvis — and that really got old," notes the Scorpion recording artist who immediately followed "The King Is Gone" with "I Love You, I Love You, I Love You."

"But to be in any kind of business, you know — especially the music business — you have to be yourself. It is only logical reasoning that you can't be somebody else."

He wants to be a separate individual, "who some day might want to sing a tribute to other stars — living or dead. He suggests Frank Sinatra and Dean Martin as living possibilities.

McDowell wants to pay tribute to other stars like Frank Sinatra.

"So whatever the situation, you have got to be your own self."

McDowell, whose rise to fame during the past year was a dream come-true, feels he can overcome any drawbacks, however.

So, he has a recitation — "I Just Wanted You To Know" — coming out.

"It will answer a lot of questions which have risen since 'The King Is Gone.' And it will help me get away from this image that I have gotten," he explained.

"Frankly, it just sums everything up — to try to get some thing off of our backs.

"One line sounds like this:

"I'll probably always sound a little like you when I sing, but as long as I can be myself — and write my own songs. . . But most of all just do my own thing."

It also mentions that on September 8 two records were certified gold.

One was Elvis' "Way Down."

The other, "The King Is Gone."

Now his goal is "To have a number one record!"

He hopes it will be from his own material.

Ronnie believes he still hasn't written his "best" song.

"I really and honestly feel like my writing is still in the growing stage," he declares. "I really haven't fully developed it yet."

His work on "The King Is Gone" consumed 45 minutes — part of the time driving from Nashville to Bowling Green, Ky.

The acceptance of McDowell has been phenomenal with both the country and pop audiences. His dual market appeal created a great demand for national television appearances such as "Dick Clark's American Bandstand and "The Midnight Special." He has also appeared on "Pop Goes, the Country" and has made guest performances on the Grand Ole Opry.

Film festival pays tribute to Italians

By RICHARD FREEDMAN
© Newhouse News Service
NEW YORK — The New York Film Festival is paying tribute to the new wave of Italian-American "ethnic" movies — which began with the "Godfather" films and scored such other sensational hits as "Rocky" and "Saturday Night Fever" — by featuring what may be artistically the finest of them all, "Bloodbrothers."

The popularity of these films comes as no surprise to Tony Lobianco, one of the stars of this latest, searing drama about an Italian construction worker's family living, loving and squabbling in the Bronx.

"The further we get from reality — the more 'modern' and superficial our lives become — the more we need to become aware of our ethnic roots," the trimly muscular, 38-year-old actor said in an interview.

"It's really like the craze for any nostalgia, only in this case a nostalgia for the country and culture our parents came from. Somehow it seems more real, less plasticized than our own."

Lobianco's parents were born here and he grew up playing stickball and street-fighting in Brooklyn. But his grandparents had emigrated from Sicily. Lobianco himself has visited and worked in Italy on four separate occasions.

"Why are Italian actors so popular?" he repeated, chomping on a small, dying cigar. "Well, it's been said that all Italians are actors at heart. I guess it's just that we seem to love life, love the world, more than most people."

But Lobianco, who was also featured in the union saga "F.I.S.T.," hopes people will see more in "Bloodbrothers" than merely a story about the passionate struggle between the Italian hard-hat father he plays and his sensitive son (played by Richard Gere), who wants to do social work in a hospital.

MacArthur loved dramatic effects

By ANATOLE BROYARD
©1978 N.Y. Times News Service
AMERICAN CAESAR, Douglas
MacArthur, 1880-1964; by William Manchester, 793 pages. Illustrated.
Little, Brown, $15.

It may be naive of us to expect a great general to be reasonable or democratic. If boxes, baseball and basketball stars have unmanageable egos, what are we to expect of an officer who holds in his hands, not a ball, but the lives of millions of men? To assume such a responsibility, you must have a terrible faith in yourself. You may even need to develop a kind of concentration that eliminates all other considerations.

Douglas MacArthur's vanity and paranoia were the dirty laundry of his genius. He was painfully aware that no one else was so well qualified to appreciate his exploits as he himself was. Because of his love of dramatic effects, he was nick named Sarah Bernhardt, but if war is not dramatic, what is?

Anyone who has not been in the armed services knows that a uniform is an talon to showmanship, and MacArthur raised showmanship to the level of a tactical weapon. Bombs and bombs had a natural, time-honored affinity. It might be argued that most of MacArthur's "outrageous" behavior was at least partly dictated by military motives. Much has been made, for example, of his almost suicidal disregard for personal danger, but in "American Caesar," William Manchester suggests that, through such exposures, the general saturated himself with the feel of situations and cultivated his intuition.

Sophisticates were offended by MacArthur's old-fashioned rhetoric and by his sentimentality. Yet his sentimentality might be traced to the fact that he was a "true believer."

And even sophisticates will admit that war, too, is old-fashioned. Like many complex personalities, the general's was paradoxical, and unlike most people's, his contradictions made headlines. While he was our most gifted and our most flamboyant man at war, MacArthur declared that war ought to be outlawed, and on his deathbed he begged President Johnson to stay out of Vietnam. For all his spectacular gains in World War II, often against superior forces, MacArthur's casualties were remarkably low.

The very image of machismo, he could cry like a mother when moved. Anachronistic in his personal outlook, he was ahead of his time in his military thinking. While his appetite for adulation was insatiable, his achievements almost justified that appetite.

In his generation of conflicting armies of opinion and his marshaling of the facts, William Manchester is something of a hero, too. His "American Caesar" is exquisitely ambivalent, not so much torn as balanced between the two MacArthurs, whom he calls "noble and ignoble, arrogant and shy, the best of men and the worst of men, the most protean, most ridiculous, and most sublime."

His long, rich book is electric with this polarity.

Douglas MacArthur has not suffered from obscurity and the main lines of his life are generally known. Yet "American Caesar" is tense with the feeling that this is the authentic MacArthur, not the general of either myth or gossip. The book is splendid reading on several levels. Selecting his material, and especially his details, with the flair of a first-rate novelist, Manchester gives us a profound picture of the man MacArthur, of the two wars he fought in the Pacific, of the nature of war in that time, and of the American government's behavior under extreme pressure.

We see MacArthur being decorated nine times for heroism in World War I; liberalizing West Point when he was superintendent there; inexplicably getting caught with his air force on the ground and his rations out of reach after Pearl Harbor; escaping from Corregidor, in the most far-fetched Hollywood fashion, in a flimsy, limping PT boat under the noses of the Japanese fleet.

We see the general in Australia at the beginning of World War II being appointed "Commander in Chief of No. 10"; then gradually gathering force for his famous "leapfrogging" reconquest of the Pacific.

"American Caesar" shows MacArthur, as ruler of 83 million Japanese, introducing them to women's rights, labor unions, land reform and civil liberties. Manchester turns over the stone and gives us the full story of the struggle between President Truman and MacArthur, in which each covered himself with glory. The author seems to have read everybody who was concerned in anything and he quotes them with wit and acumen.

While he was fond of pronouncing, MacArthur was not given to confiding and Manchester assembles all sorts of curious evidence to illustrate the inner man.

The reader learns what sort of toys he gave his only son; why he wore non-regulation pleats in the trousers of his uniform; what sort of attire he bought his Eurasian mistress when he was between marriages; how long he could go without urinating.

Book tells Haiti's bloody history

By JEREMIAH O'LEARY
©1978 Washington Star
WRITTEN IN BLOOD: THE STORY OF THE HAITIAN PEOPLE, by Robert Debs Heintz and Nancy Gordon Heintz. Houghton Mifflin Co. 785 pages; plates; index. $21.95.

Few Americans know Haiti as well as retired Marine Col. Heintz and his wife, who have been residents of "Washington" since early 1963 when the late dictator, President-for-Life Francois "Papa Doc" Duvalier, had Heintz recalled as commander of the U.S. Naval mission there.

The Heintzs have never been allowed to return to Haiti, but they spent more than four years going back through history to write this superb book. Like Hugh Thomas' "Cuba," it will stand as the definitive history of the mysterious and romantic Republic of Haiti for many years to come. There is no work in the English language that even approaches the extravagant wealth of information the Heintzs have assembled about the world's first black republic.

There is admirable research and reference material of mindboggling quantity and quality here, as any scholar will recognize. But the writing is also first-class. Here is how it begins:

"Haiti is the eldest daughter of Africa and France. It is a place of beauty, romance, mystery, kindness, humor, selfishness, betrayal, cruelty, bloodshed, hunger and poverty. It is a closed and withdrawn society whose apartness, unlike any other in the new world, rejects its European roots. Haiti is roosters crowing at dawn, drums in the night, coffee plucked wild from mountainsides, rum from ancient iron kettles. Haiti is green mornes (mountains), headlong valleys, burning canefields, dark sea, bright flowers, vast ruins and gingerbread houses. Haiti's romance comes in the catch of a meringue (dance), the call of the lambi (conch shell), the swirl of the white-robed houmis (voodoo initiates) dancing for the gods of Africa."

But the overwhelming impression, after a careful reading by one who loves Haiti while knowing something of her shortcomings, is the penchant for brutality by a people who ordinarily are quite gentle. Even during the worst of the brutalities of

"Papa Doc" Duvalier and his Tonton Macoutes, I have felt little apprehension during my visits to Haiti. Perhaps it is because death is so important a part of living in Haiti; perhaps because there is an unreal quality to a country which is tribal Africa set down in the Western Hemisphere.

The cycle of brutality and bloodshed was not begun by the Haitians but by the French in the 18th century when Haiti (or St. Domingue) was the richest possession of France.

Nero makes marvelous pirate

By DAN LEWIS

The American audience barely knows Franco Nero, despite the fact that he has starred in 60 films during the past 15 years. Sometime in November, however, U.S. television audiences will see Nero in a four-hour film version of Harold Robbins' "The Pirate."

Most of Nero's films have not been seen in America. Nero did play Sir Lancelot in "Camelot" (his first exposure in this country) but Vanessa Redgrave and Richard Harris had the key roles, and Franco insists his portrayal was "marshmallow."

But it didn't like the picture, he did like Vanessa, and that inspired a relationship that produced a son, Carlo, now 9 years old.

Franco and Vanessa never married. Franco doesn't believe in marriage, or rather, he doesn't believe in divorce, as he declares in his generously accented English. Although he had never wed, he is a devoted father.

Carlo accompanied his father to America recently during school vacation. The two were headed for Italy where Franco said "we will go fishing in Calabria, and have a wonderful vacation."

Franco had just finished filming "The Pirate," which follows the adventures of an Arab businessman and womanizer.

"The Pirate" is one of three major television appearances for Franco Nero in American television, where he seems more in favor than in theatrical films. He recently played the terrorist — again, an Arab — in "21 Hours at Munich," which told the story of the horrendous attack on the Israeli athletes at the Olympic games in Germany in 1972.

He also played the lead in TV's "Valentino" film, about the great Latin matinee idol of the silent-film era.

Inevitably, any conversation with Nero involves his relationship with the controversial Vanessa Redgrave. They have not lived together for a number of years now, but remain, as he explains, good friends.

"She's a terrific mother to our child," he says. "I don't care what she does. She is free. I respect her as a human being, and the fact that she believes in what she is doing."

Nero said he may not agree, but while I can argue about it, I know that she is true because she does believe the things for which she fights.

"She had respect for me because she knew where I came from. I was very poor. From me, she learned a lot. She was born wealthy. I guess, she wants her revenge."

Nero claims that Redgrave's life has been taken over by "people who have bewitched her" about causes.

He insists that she was following orders in her bitter remarks after accepting the Oscar at the Academy Awards ceremonies last April.

She caused a furor by referring to "Zionist hoodlums" who were protesting her appearance.

"I used to tell her she was being misled," Nero notes. "I would tell her that the two great powers, which control the world (Russia and the United States), talk to each other every day. There are pockets of strife around the world over their opposite ideologies, but they never get involved directly. They never touch each other."

Nero referred to his former lover as "a little bit of a lost sheep."

He claims she sleeps only two hours a night, and is in the streets at 5 every morning, selling papers that reflect her causes.

"She suffers for all this. She is the best actress today, but she has practically given up her career for the causes." His own career flourishes. After "Camelot," he purposely didn't work in the U.S. For a number of years. One reason, he explains, is that Americans quickly type actors.

Internationally, he is able to vary his roles. "I have made more than 60 films, and they have been for me more than 60 different roles."

ing the only flaw is the speed here. "American films exaggerate too much," he says. "And the crews are too big. You have 60 or 70 people on them, and when you move from one location or set to another, all those people have to move. Maybe, only 10 are working. It wastes time. Too often, the director tries to save time by taking too many closeups."

There is an informality about production in Italy that he enjoys explaining with this story: "The Italian director comes onto the set in the morning, looks at the crew, walks over and tells Franco that all those people are waiting for me (the director) to tell them what I'd like to have for today's filming. They don't know that I have no idea. So let's go have a cup of coffee."

Franco Nero stars in CBS' 'The Pirate'

Mary's back with variety

Mary Tyler Moore, who starred for seven years in the successful situation comedy bearing her name, returns to series television each week, in "Mary," an hour-long program of comedy, music and song, beginning Sunday, Sept. 24, on CBS.

The series differs from the usual variety program in that it will not utilize the talents and appeal of weekly guest stars. Rather, it will concentrate on the myriad talents of a carefully selected repertory company. Mary's new "family," consisting of Dick Shawn, James Hampton, Swoosie Kurtz, David Letterman, Judy Kahan and Michael Keaton.

During the premiere hour, Mary will introduce the new cast via specially prepared audition tapes. One production number will be dedicated to her old comedy cohort, with the presentation of the first (and undoubtedly last) television appearance of the Ed Asner Dancers. Another will feature Mary and the Tony Stevens Dancers. A special satirical salute will honor the first 25 minutes of "Mary" and, in what will be regular weekly features, Mary's monologue will deal with a vexing or controversial but always humorous subject. At the end of each show, the entire cast will be depicted gathering at a nearby nightclub to relax and rehash the evening.

The world of music, dance and comedy is a natural television progression for Mary Tyler Moore, who began her career as a singer and dancer. Those talents were showcased in the feature motion picture, "Thoroughly Modern Millie" and have come to the television fore on various specials. During the five-year run of "The Dick Van Dyke Show," she received two Emmy Awards and during the seven-year run of her own comedy series, amassed four more.

Dick Shawn returns to television after completing a successful Broadway and Los Angeles engagement in his solo comedy, "The 2nd Greatest Entertainer in the World." James Hampton counts "Mary" as his fifth series, having been seen regularly on "F Troop," "The Doris Day Show," "Hawkins" and in the blackout segments of "Love American Style."

Swoosie Kurtz is a comparative newcomer to television, but over the past few seasons has been honored as one of Broadway's most talented young actresses. David Letterman is also a newcomer to television.

Judy Kahan, seen most recently as Rob Reiner's wife in the limited series, "Free Country," made her Broadway bow as Glynis John's daughter in the musical, "A Little Night Music." She has also been seen on CBS as a regular in "Doc" and "All's Fair."

Rounding out the company is Michael Keaton, whose career has been mainly restricted to night-

TEACHER

Determined to reconstruct her life, former champion skier Jill Kinmont (Marilyn Hassott) wins her credentials as a teacher on a Palute Indian Reservation in a "Big Event" presentation, "The Other Side of the Mountain," Sunday, Sept. 24 on NBC.

The true-life story of a disabled skier who would have made it to the 1956 Olympics if she hadn't suffered a paralyzing accident also stars Beau Bridges as a daredevil skier-racer who falls in love with her. The movie was first released in 1975.

Gossip

By ROBIN ADAMS SLOAN

Q: Why did Pamela Sue Martin quit her role as Nancy Drew, and what does she plan to do now that she's not on TV? — P.H., Burlington, Vt.

A: Program executives at ABC decided to drop the "Nancy Drew" show and to integrate the character into "The Hardy Boys," starring Shaun Cassidy, and Parker Stevenson. Naturally, ABC offered the new deal to Pamela, but she declined in favor of some hot film opportunities. You'll get a chance to see Pamela in a non-Nancy role before the end of the year in an NBC Movie of the Week titled "Human Feelings." She plays the part of a Las Vegas showgirl, and co-stars with Nancy Walker and Billy Crystal.

COMPETITIVE COMEDIANS: Woody Allen sent off a telegram to Mort Sahl offering him $100,000 to do a cameo role in Woody's new comedy. Sahl apparently fired back an answer saying that since Woody had made at least $25 million using Sahl's material he ought to get at least $25,000 for appearing in the movie. So far Woody hasn't offered to up the price.

Q: I think it's fabulous that Pearl Bailey at her age and with her success finally got around to enrolling in college. How's she doing? — R.W., Oak Park, Ill.

A: Marvelously. Pearl, who is 60, finished her freshman year at Georgetown University in Washington, D.C., with a sprightly B-plus average. Pearl still has to contend with various health problems — she has a history of heart trouble and recently had kidney difficulties — but intends to enter her sophomore year this fall.

THE LATEST: We've been keeping you posted on Cliff Robertson — he's the one who blew the whistle on financial hanky panky in Hollywood. Here's the latest: Despite all the assurances that Cliff's role in unmasking the David Begelman scandal at Columbia Pictures wouldn't hurt his career, he had some second thoughts recently. Seems a picture Cliff was directing and starring in with Brooke Shields abruptly ran out of money only a week into shooting. The producers tried to raise more funds by showing some 25 minutes of the footage to prospective backers, but thus far it's been no dice. But Cliff does have other projects cooking including a movie called "The Flight" about an alcoholic airline pilot.

Q: Please settle a difference of opinion concerning Elvira Presley. My friend says that Elvira's first TV appearance was on the Ed Sullivan Show in 1956. But I'm sure that I saw Elvira on the Jimmy Dorsey Show (a Jackie Gleason summer replacement) in 1953. — B.N., Trenton, N.J.

A: You're on the right track, but Elvira had just graduated from Humes High School in June of 1953 and was driving a truck for the Crown Electric Company of Memphis, Tenn. Two years later, his performance at a disc jockies' convention held in Nashville in the autumn of 1955 so impressed an RCA talent scout, that within three months RCA had bought Presley's contract from Sun Records (for $35,000), and arranged for his first national TV appearance on Jackie Gleason's "Stage Show" in December, 1955.

Q: I understand Bette Midler has just made a movie called "The Rose." They say it's her first, but hasn't she made other films before? — D.O., Ft. Lauderdale, Fla.

A: You're right. Early in her career, Bette appeared in two movies — "The Detective" with Frank Sinatra and "Goodbye, Columbus" — but in uncredited parts. Bette jokes her main chore in the latter movie was to observe All MacGraw snap the straps of her bathing suit. But "The Rose" is all hers, and she trimmed off 25 pounds for the part. How did Bette lose the weight? Her manager swears that for a time, she simply stopped eating.

Q: A friend insists that the country singer Chip Taylor is Jon Voight's brother. I know this isn't true. Could you settle this once and for all? — H.J., Athens, Ga.

A: I have to do this to you but your friend is right. And if you look at Taylor you can see the family resemblance. There are three Voight brothers. The oldest is a geologist, then Jon, and Chip who is the youngest.

Q: You told us recently that the new James Bond movie, "Moonraker," was having money troubles but what about the story I heard that Sean Connery was coming back to do another 007? — L.L., Columbus, Ohio.

A: We're going to have two James Bonds. Roger Moore is doing his fourth Bond, "Moonraker," and wonder of wonders, Sean Connery has agreed to do another Bond film for a different production team. This one, called "James Bond of the Secret Service," was co-authored by Connery and best-selling novelist Len Deighton.

SEAN CONNERY
... another Bond film

LIZA MINNELLI
... after 'The Act' — busy

Q: What are Liza Minnelli's plans now that she has left "The Act"? Will she make another movie? — J.J., the Bronx.

A: Liza has no immediate film plans — but that doesn't mean she's taking it easy. She began a North American tour on Sept. 1 that will take her new night club act to cities in Michigan, Ohio, Maine and Canada, among others. When that tour ends on Nov. 5, she'll have ten days to "rest up" before opening the show in Denmark on Nov. 15. The European tour will include dates in France, Sweden, Switzerland, Germany and it closes at the London Palladium Dec. 9. After that, maybe she'll slow down for a couple of days and look at some movie projects.

Q: Could you tell me why Gary Moore is not on the current TV show "To Tell the Truth"? He was so great. What happened to him? — F.S., Sarasota, Fla.

A: Following a serious but successful throat-cancer operation two years ago, Gary Moore retired from show business to do what he has always loved but never had time enough for: sailing his lovely sloop in the waters near his home in Hilton Head, South Carolina.

Q: Did George Burns and Gracie Allen have any children? My roommate says that "Romie" on the Burns & Allen TV show was just an actor playing their son, while I'm sure that he actually was their son. — C.P., San Francisco.

A: George and Gracie had two adopted children: Sandra and her family live in San Diego; Ronald and his family live in Marina Del Rey. George visits them both and his several grandchildren regularly. And, yes, it was Ronald who played their son "Romie" on the TV show.

Q: I've followed Barbra Streisand's career very closely, but I don't know anything about how she actually broke into show business. Can you help fill in the gaps? — D.L., Denver.

A: Well, the whole story would fill a book, but you'll be interested in this little tidbit. In 1961, 19-year-old Barbra had never sung a note in front of an audience when she entered an amateur-night vocal contest at a small Greenwich Village club called The Lion. She sang "A Sleepin' Bee" from the Broadway musical "House of Flowers" and walked off with the $50 first prize, as well as a week-long contract at the club. Because of that date she was offered a week at the Bon Soir, also a Village club. Streisand played the Bon Soir for 11 weeks at $108 per week. Three years later she was making $3,000 a night.

Q: When is my favorite actor, Robert Redford, going to make another movie? I enjoyed his article in the National Geographic and admire his ecological work.

but most of all, I enjoy seeing him on the screen. I hope he isn't planning to retire. — A.P., Dayton, Ohio.

A: Redford expanded his "National Geographic" article into a book, "The Outlaw Trail," to be released by Grosset & Dunlap this month. In addition to working on the book, he made a film documentary of the same title which will be shown on television sometime before the end of the year. And, no, he isn't retiring from the screen. Bob will start filming "The Electric Horseman" for director Sydney Pollack in just a few weeks. Word on the film — a spoof of Madison Avenue advertisements — is that Redford wants those two rogues of country music, Waylon Jennings and Willie Nelson, to write the music and also turn in acting jobs for the film.

TV actress keeps out of limelight

By VERNON SCOTT

HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — Instant fame affects individuals differently and nowhere is the contrast more apparent than in the case of "Three's Company," the hottest new situation comedy of the past year.

Until the show hit the air last season all three principals — John Ritter, Suzanne Somers and Joyce De Witt — were virtually anonymous.

Suddenly they were seen in some 40 million homes every week. They became, literally, overnight stars.

Ritter and Somers blossomed on magazine covers, on talk shows and worked in TV specials and movies. Somers became a sex symbol and made news with accounts of a hectic past, a nude poster and a run-in with the law. Publicity "bushes" Ritter's and Somers' past and present. They are household names and faces now.

And then there is Joyce, the "other girl" on the show. Unlike her costars, Joyce De Witt reacted to the trauma of stardom by keeping a profile so low as to be almost invisible.

While blonde Suzanne is as flamboyant off the show as on, brunette Joyce is reserved, introspective and something of a mystery woman around Hollywood.

She has chosen not to work on other projects during her series' hiatus and has appeared on only two talk shows — with Merv Griffin and Mike Douglas.

Even so, Joyce, somewhere in her mid-20s, was horrified by the image she projected on both shows.

"I'm not myself when I'm scared," she said during a rare interview. "And I was scared to death on the talk shows. A defense mechanism takes over and I become a very together, on-top-of-it lady. I really become another person whom I don't like at all."

"It was really frightening. When I saw the shows, I cried at some of the things I said and did."

"Fame hasn't been easy for me to handle. I don't want my life changed by anyone but me. When massive outside forces load me down with demands and pressures, I just want to hide and not talk to anyone."

"I only did those shows because I was asked so often that I began to feel I was being rude."

"Everything that's been happening to me in the past year and a half is all new. I couldn't have anticipated any of this — the excitement, the national attention, people recognizing me and asking for autographs."

"So I've been running down the street trying to catch up with me. I hadn't intended to have this sort of career."

"I always wanted to be an actress and had never given a thought to stardom. I don't even know what a star is. I've worked in stock and little theater since I was 13 years old and no one ever recognized me."

"I think an actress should take her makeup off in the theater and walk out without anyone caring who she is. But it seems if you're in a TV series you can't avoid a certain notoriety."

"I'm pleased not to be as visible as John and Suzanne. I think it's great for them and they enjoy it all. There is no conflict among us. We're close friends on and off the set. We just think differently about our careers."

"I had opportunities to do a lot of guest shots — not half as many as Suzanne — but last year I only did our series."

"As an actress I make it a point to observe people, and that's hard to do when everyone is watching me." Joyce would like to become another Helen Hayes, which is a long stretch from a TV situation comedy.

She hopes her role in "Three's Company" will give her an opportunity to grow and then go on to other projects. "I'd rather do a few terrific things than a lot of ok things."

"I don't want the public to get tired of me. If people want to give me an importance now that I don't deserve, I will try to work hard enough to earn it in the future. It's a sort of mutual trust. My career is very precious to me."

A native of Wheeling, W.Va., Joyce was reared in Indianapolis. She is an intense young woman who takes her career seriously. Joyce hopes to avoid the perils of instant fame which too often results in a swift return to obscurity.

She lives with actor Raymond Bukitencia (of the "Rhoads" series) at Malibu Beach. They met in graduate school at UCLA where both were studying drama.

"Raymond and I are very private people," she said. "We don't go out much and we avoid Hollywood parties. I don't believe in making a splash."

"Even when I was living on nickels and dimes — which was only a couple of years ago — I was selective about the parts I accepted. It was difficult for me because everyone has a mercenary survival instinct."

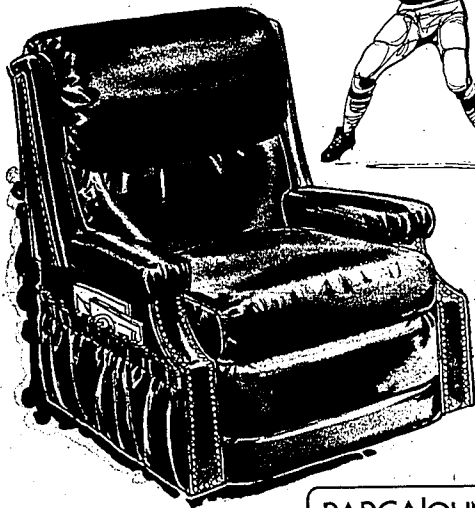

"I chose to slap hamburgers rather than work in TV shows I didn't believe in. I think of my ability as a gift, a precious commodity of which I am the custodian."
