Iranian troops again fire at crowds

TEHRAN (UPI) — Imperial troops opened fire with machine guns and rifles Sunday night to break up a crowd of anti-shah demonstrators who were gathered in the streets and demonstrated for the third consecutive night in the darkened streets of Tehran.

A government communique said the troops "warned" the demonstrators, fired tear gas and shot into the air but when stones started to be thrown, they fired.

Throughout Sunday, bands of defiant youths, incited by mullahs opposed to the shah, rampaged through the streets and bazaars screaming "Down with the shah!" and "We want a Islamic government!"

Witnesses in the northern, eastern and parts of northern Tehran said firing was less intense than on Friday and Saturday, but added that "many" people had been wounded in Sunday's confrontations.

The state radio said five people were killed and more than 20 wounded Saturday night and another seven died Friday night. A ban on outdoor movement made an accurate casualty count for Sunday's clashes all but impossible.

A power blackout, believed to be the result of a strike by electrical workers, plunged much of Tehran into darkness.

Meanwhile, sources close to the royal palace said the embattled Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi has intensified contacts with all key political elements in the country to find a solution to the civil strife.

But official spokesmen at the palace strongly denied suggestions

Sunday night that the shah had formed or was in the process of forming a regency council to succeed himself.

Ardesheh Zafarani, the shah's former brother-in-law and Iranian ambassador in Washington, was in Tehran holding talks with the shah. Officials said the discussions were routine consultations.

Speculation that a regency council was being formed became rife as the shah held talks — lasting up to three hours at a time — with key opposition leaders and neutral political elements in the aftermath of Sunday's heavy shooting.

The shah, 59, who has ruled Iran for 38 years, cannot hand over power to his 18-year-old son and crown prince until 1981. But he can entrust his throne to a regency council, even temporarily, until the crown prince comes of age.

But the palace spokesman, asked to comment on the speculation, said, "There's no truth whatsoever in those reports."

The shah's talks with the opposition were kept secret reportedly at the insistence of the opposition, which thought it might be accused of a "sellout," political sources said.

Atlanta (UPI) — Former White House health adviser Dr. Peter Bourne says America's appetite for marijuana has grown to 12 tons a day and has made pot smuggling the nation's third biggest industry — behind only Exxon and General Motors.

Bourne said Saturday that pot trafficking had become somewhat like prohibition-era rum running — flourishing and difficult to stop.

The Commerce Department estimates that the marijuana business is the third leading business in the country, totaling some $40 billion and exceeded only by Exxon and General Motors," he said.

"In Florida, it's the state's largest industry, exceeding even tourism," said Bourne, now a Washington consultant on health programs. He said foreign bank accounts in Miami totalled $25 million two years ago, but now are $250 million — "a substantial amount of it" (financing marijuana).

Bourne said marijuana can be a health hazard, and that its popularity among the young is particularly dangerous because they lack the judgment, older pot smokers have.

Washington (UPI) — Rising violence in the United States can be attributed to Americans with too much freedom, but not enough happiness, a sociologist said Sunday.

"I think we live in a society where people have far more freedom than they ever had. Freedom from conformity to class and group mores," said sociologist and psychoanalyst Ernest van den Haag.

"Moreover, people's lives are much less structured than before — particularly in San Francisco — so anything goes," van den Haag said in an interview with U.S. News and World Report.

But van den Haag added that despite more freedom, people "find that happiness has escaped them. The paradise they promised themselves has proved empty."

He said this is true for groups such as those who followed Charles Manson and other religious or psychological cults.

He said the Symbionese Liberation Army that kidnapped Patricia Hearst and the Peoples Temple of the Rev. Jim Jones attempted to give "some sort of meaning" to the lives of those who joined.

The recent murders of San Francisco Mayor George Moscone and the Harvey Milk, a homosexual member of the Board of Supervisors supported by Moscone could have been carried out by a person who thought he was "striking a blow for traditional morality," he said.

He said a prosperous society falls victim to more violence than does a poor society.

"In a very poor society, questions on the meaning of your existence do not arise for most people; they're much too busy struggling for their own existence," van den Haag said.

He said violence will get worse unless steps are taken to restore order, but added that "our law enforcement agencies... are hamstringed at present."

"If you have a group of people bent on social violence, it's impossible — no matter how many policemen you have — to stop them unless you have informers within the group, and the courts have made it very difficult to have such informers. These curbs should be eased," van den Haag said.

He also called for restoration of the death penalty, more emphasis on parental responsibility and established churches to become more meaningful.

"We must try to help people gain a personal outlook on life that makes it meaningful," he said.

Photographers scan farmlands from the air

By KEN HODGE
Times-News Writer

BUHL — Cal Butler and Robert Watt have a 15-inch hole in the bottom of their airplane.

It is not a bomb bay and it is not from flying too low over the jungles of Vietnam.

For the last two summers, Butler and Watt have been flying over Magic Valley potato fields taking pictures through the hole.

Their flights are not ordinary sight-seeing tours, but part of a new business the two men have named Sky-Eye Photos.

By snapping infrared photographs of a circular center pivot system watering a 160-acre spud field, Butler and Watt can help a farmer insure the success of his crop for that season.

From the air, the infrared camera they mount over the hole in their fuselage can spot areas which are too wet or too dry, areas infected with disease and areas where soil nutrients are deficient.

With such an eye-in-the-sky look at his field, a farmer can alter management techniques to save parts of his field which might otherwise have turned out to be a loss.

"We can tell normal and deviations from normal in a spud field," Watt explained. "It is a good overall management tool to make sure people are doing what they are supposed to be doing."

Photos from about a half mile in the air show the resultant shade he and Watt can see with the naked eye to eight or ten inches above the soil surface.

"We can see individual rows, but not individual plants," Watt said. "If a guy skips rows, fertilizer, or if a row of plants and gets two rows of plants, we can see that."

It is possible, Watt said, that an infrared film will actually record it as a different shade of red or pink.

Since infrared light picks up light long light waves at the red end of the spectrum which are not visible to the naked eye, Butler and Watt are photographing more than just the leaves of the spud plants far below.

Their infrared photos pick up radiation from inside the potato leaves where chlorophyll plays its mysterious role in the photosynthetic conversion of carbon dioxide and water into carbohydrates.

Chlorophyll registers red on infrared film. When plants are healthy and adequately watered, their foliage is rich in chlorophyll and shows up bright red on the film.

Depleted or water stressed plants lack chlorophyll and show up as light red or even brownish spots on infrared film.

If a center pivot system has a sprinkler head which is not spraying sufficient water on its area as the pivot turns, a dark brown circle will show up on the film.

On the other hand, if a sprinkler is applying too much water, a dark red circle appears on the film, indicating an adjustment is needed to bring that portion of the field back into balance.

Similar color variations show up on the film which show variations in the soil and stress caused by the soil.

Infrared film is more sensitive to color variation than common color film. Butler and Watt can detect about 40 different shades of green in their aerial photos.

They are the only ones in the valley who take

Cal Butler looks through a hole in his plane as Bob Watt watches commercial infrared photos of farm land, but many farmers and agricultural consultants use the results.

Gary Kleinschmidt, Twin Falls extension potato specialist, used aerial infrared photography in Maine to look for diseased fields of potatoes.

Last summer on the Ball Rapids Project near Hagerman, Kleinschmidt said he photographed trial applications of soil fumigants in spud fields used to control nematodes and verticillium-wilt, a soil-borne fungus disease.

He said by taking aerial photo of test plots and comparing them with fields on which no soil fumigant had been applied, he could tell the plants in the fumigated fields "were healthier and I could pick out the difference between the good plants and the ones under stress."

Ross Watson, a retired researcher from the University of Idaho reported he "did quite a bit of research" on all kinds of aerial photography of crop lands.

Because the herbicide 2,4-D causes stress in some crops when it drifts from one field to another, aerial photo information has been used as evidence in lawsuits in Magic Valley, Watson said.

If a man wants to prove herbicide from his neighbor's field drifted onto his property and damaged his crops, an aerial photo can often show the pattern of stress created by the drifting chemical.

A group of Hagerman orchardists used the aerial photo technique to sue neighboring farmers for herbicide which had allegedly drifted into their orchards from neighboring farm projects, damaging their fruit.

Washington (UPI) — Three major oil companies have indicated to the Department of Energy they may join Shell and Amoco in rationing supplies to their stations, it was reported Sunday.

Deputy Energy Secretary John O'Leary said that Texaco, Atlantic Richfield and Continental Oil Co. are likely to file requests for department approval of gasoline allocation plans, the Washington Post reported.

The companies must file exemptions applications with DOE's Economic Regulatory Administration for a review of their proposed rationing plans.

Shell, the country's largest gasoline supplier, has been allocating its sales outlets with 75 percent of their normal supply. The company has been hit with spot shortages of unleaded premium gasoline.

Amoco said last week it would begin rationing lead-free gasoline to some of its wholesalers and retailers.

Young people more free, but still unhappy

Washington (UPI) — Rising violence in the United States can be attributed to Americans with too much freedom, but not enough happiness, a sociologist said Sunday.

Soon, Americans may be nurturing test-tube babies

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Dr. Patrick Steptoe, the British physician who achieved the first pregnancy from a test-tube fertilized embryo, predicted Sunday his method will be available in the United States "in a fairly reasonable time."

He told interviewers on NBC's "Meet the Press" the method should be cheaper than tubal surgery now often used on women unable to conceive.

The British gynecologist said he has agreed to advise several American colleagues about the new technique.

Asked if he knows if any embryo transplant in this country, he said "I don't think so."

"You've got to have a special place, custom-built, that is not used for anything else, because every stage is so delicate."

Steptoe developed his method with Cambridge scientist Dr. Robert G. Edwards. Their "test-tube" babies are fertilized outside a woman's body but transported back into the womb after three to five days.

Reporters asked the physician about the possibility of implanting an embryo into a surrogate mother if the real mother's womb cannot accept it.

Steptoe said the U.S. government is right to view the method with caution.

He suggested physicians should be thoroughly trained, reviewed by an ethical committee and have the right "motivation" before they are allowed to use the technique.

Asked if there is a danger that women "desperate" to become pregnant might sell unqualified physicians for the operation, Steptoe said, "One must not let women do foolish things in order to have a baby."

Steptoe has been criticized by colleagues for not publishing the details of his success when Spound, 12-ounce Louise Brown was delivered in England in July.

He said it would have been a "diservice" to publish before another test-tube pregnancy could come to full term.

Teenage pregnancies going up

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Teen-age pregnancy is the No. 1 population problem in the United States, among controversy still exists on how to deal with it, says the president of the Planned Parenthood Federation.

Addressing a recent meeting of the National Council on Philanthropy, PFF's Watson said 7 million teen-age women and 7 million teen-age men are sexually active.

Luxury train derails, 6 dead, many injured

Rescue workers clamor over the wreckage of the Southern Crescent where six passengers died Sunday

ELMA, Va. (UPI) — Six persons were killed and more than 40 others injured early Sunday when eight passenger cars of a Southern Railway luxury train derailed on a steep downhill grade and tumbled down an embankment.

The accident piled the cars on top of each other like toys. Passengers and crew members were trapped in cars for hours and some were tossed out of windows and under the wreckage.

Rescue crews toiled throughout the day, at times in a driving rain, to remove the dead and dying, some of whom were pinned under twisted metal and rubble.

The luxury passenger train, carrying 65 passengers and a crew of 12, was en route from Atlanta to Washington when its eight cars and three of its four locomotives left the tracks near Elma, a rural Nelson County community located halfway between Charlottesville and Lynchburg.

Rescue efforts were hampered by the rugged terrain and the steep embankment, which dropped sharply from the tracks into a gully about 40 feet below. The wreck is about two miles from the nearest road.

Seven of the passenger cars overturned, some slamming into each other in "hatscopes" fashion. One car was flipped over onto another and one of the locomotives came to rest on its back when the train derailed on a steep downgrade on a right-hand bend in the tracks.

The names of the dead were temporarily withheld by Virginia State Police. At least 39 persons were taken to the University of Virginia Hospital where a spokesman said about 15 were admitted, with five in critical condition.

Two other victims were hospitalized in Lynchburg. Twenty-one passengers were taken by school buses to the Jefferson Hospital. Great tables for a Charlottesville motel before being taken by bus to Washington.

Most of the passengers apparently were asleep when the train derailed about 5:40 a.m. Witnesses said bloody pillows were strewn about the cars, some hanging out the windows on jagged glass.

T.R. Coleman of Atlanta, one of the waiters in the dining car, was setting tables preparing to serve the first breakfast when the derailment happened.

Suddenly it started lurching and jerking and bumping and I knew we were going to go over," said Coleman, who said he had been with the railroad for 38 years. "I just said to myself, I hope we aren't by a river."

Coleman said he and another waiter were trapped under tables and other chairs and were pulled out by rescue workers. Ben Cornelius, 22, of Winston-Salem, N.C., an Amtrak employee who was traveling from Greensboro, N.C., to Washington, said he was sleeping in his roomette when he was flung awake.

Cornelius dressed quickly and with a porter and a conductor, who was bleeding from several cuts to his forehead, began attending to the injured. The sleeping car had remained upright, leaning at about a 10-degree angle.

"There were a couple of people on the ground. They looked pretty badly injured. There were a couple of other people crawling out of the coaches."

Strikes seen as better than pay hikes

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Carter's chief economic adviser said Sunday that, "in general," he would rather see business accept strikes than grant labor unions inflationary wage hikes.

at its 7 percent ceiling on all wage and fringe benefits — but said the "basic thrust" of the standards "will not be changed."

Schultz made the comments on ABC's "Issues and Answers" program.

On the issue of inflationary wages, Schultz said there may be cases where business is willing to cooperate with Carter's wage-price guidelines and labor is not "and there may indeed be some strikes."

"I do not expect this to be a major problem, but it clearly could happen," he said.

Should companies be prepared to take strikes rather than buck the guidelines and grant higher pay?

"I think in general that's right," Schultz said. "You can't make an absolute statement on that, but I think in general that's correct."

As for letting fringe benefits rise above the 7 percent wage guideline that Carter set, Schultz said, "we obviously cannot get into a situation of exempting fringe benefits."

"On the other hand, the whole treatment of fringes and wages and how they go together in specific detail is something we are looking at."

the wage-price guidelines Carter proposed effective Nov. 1 will remain the same.

Schultz said his goal is to see inflation "significantly under 7 percent" one year from now. He said inflation has been building for 10 years and people cannot expect to see it wiped out overnight.

Despite predictions of recession and even depression by private economists, Schultz maintained that the administration's tighter money policies and inflation-dampening efforts will not hurt the economy.

"The prospects of stable economic growth over the next several years are good," he said.

He said housing construction will "edge off" as interest rates raise and money grows tighter "but it is not going to crash."

Spacecraft nearing orbit around Venus

MOUNTAIN VIEW, Calif. (UPI) — Pioneer Venus 1, the lead spacecraft in a multi-probe mission to study the weather of Venus, Sunday plunged toward a year-long orbit around the striped planet.

The 1,200-pound orbiter is expected to remain in operation for at least one Venusian year, 225 days, dipping as close as 30 miles to the surface in its elliptical circuit.

The Orbiter, scheduled to go into Venusian orbit Monday, will take ultraviolet and infrared pictures of the planet's scalding surface and make daily measurements of the mysterious atmosphere.

NASA engineers at the Pioneer control center at the Ames Research Center 40 miles south of San Francisco say the orbiter's radar pictures may provide new clues about Venus' surface, which includes huge mountains, an empty basin the size of Hudson Bay and a 60-mile-long canyon.

On Dec. 9, five weather probes in the second part of the $225 million mission will reach Venus, fan out and drop to the surface by parachute.

The orbiter will also reveal for the first time Venus' dark side and provide new information about the planet's ionosphere and its interaction with the solar wind.

Laden with instruments, these probes will take extensive measurements of the planet's murky atmosphere during their nearly hour-long descent. They are not expected to survive their landing on the surface, where the temperature is hot enough to melt zinc and the pressure is 100 times greater than on Earth.

Two Soviet spacecraft are also streaking toward Venus, scheduled to arrive Dec. 21 and on Christmas Day. Pioneer scientists say the Soviet and American mission are uncoordinated.

Rare winter tornadoes rip through the South

BOSSIER CITY, La. (UPI) — Rare winter tornadoes spawned by unusually warm weather dropped like bombs across northern Louisiana and southern Arkansas Sunday, killing four people, injuring hundreds more and causing more than $100 million in property damage.

The tornadoes struck in the pre-dawn darkness out of a thick line of thunderstorms, leaving a trail of destruction from the red-clay banks of the Red River to the industrial community of El Dorado, Ark., 100 miles northeast.

The worst hit of the half-dozen southern communities was Bossier City in northwest Louisiana, across the Red River from Shreveport. State police said two young girls were killed there and more than 100 people were injured, at least three dozen severely. More than 1,500 people were left homeless.

A third death was reported in the nearby farm community of Heflin, La., where six people were injured.

A fourth person was killed in El Dorado when her frame house was demolished by a dozen trees uprooted by the tornadoes. Another half-dozen were injured there.

Officials called the low death toll "a miracle."

"The amazing thing about this disaster is the amount of damage to buildings — the structural damage throughout the area — and the so few casualties," said Maj. Gen. O. J. Daigle Jr. of the Louisiana National Guard. "When you fly over and see some of these houses completely dismantled, you wonder how so few died."

Both Daigle and Bossier City Mayor Marvin E. Anding said the twister did not cost $100 million in damage, and Anding said only divine intervention could have kept the death toll so low.

"He (God) must have been with us," Anding said. "I can't believe we only had two deaths with the miserable, miserable mess we have out there."

The Bossier City tornado leveled a nearly vacant hotel on the city's east side near the horse racing track, injuring about 20 persons. A week earlier, before the end of the racing season, the hotel, the city's largest, would have been packed with racing enthusiasts.

Anding also said some looters had been arrested, adding, "We are going to deal with these people as severely as possible."

National Guardsmen, armed with rifles and billy clubs, patrolled the area at nightfall. The mayor said a 6 p.m. to 6 a.m. curfew would be imposed for the city "until further notice."

The Bossier City storm struck at 1:50 a.m. CST Sunday, leveling homes, schools, trees and businesses in its 8-block wide, 8-mile long path.

Although tornadoes are rare in December, weather forecasters said the Gulf State area was ripe for them because of the unusually warm weather in the area the past week, with temperatures in the '80s and humidity near 90 percent.

National Weather Service forecaster Herbert Roseman noted that with such weather, "the tornadoes were an obvious end result."

Officials in Bossier worked in heavy rain throughout the night to rush supplies to the stricken areas, the worst being in the north and northeastern sections of the city.

Some of the worst destruction occurred in the neighborhood of an apartment complex where two girls were crushed by an automobile that was blown through their bedroom window. They were identified as Lisa Carrington, 15, and her sister, Jana, 8. Their parents were among the 34 injured.

Venezuela votes heavily in presidential elections

CARACAS, Venezuela (UPI) — Venezuelans voted for president Sunday in balloting so heavy that polls were kept open three hours after the usual closing time in a race that was expected to be close.

Luis Pinerua, 57, of the governing Democratic Action Party, faced a serious challenge from Luis Herrera, 53, of the Social Christian opposition.

Schoolhouse polling places were kept open three hours after the normal closing time Sunday to accommodate an unusually large turnout.

Six million citizens were eligible to vote. Abstention was expected to be no higher than 12 percent, and part of that due to mix-ups such as people reporting to incorrect polling places, misspelled names and so on.

The first official bulletin on the vote count had been promised for late Sunday night, but that was before the polling was delayed three hours. Trucks immediately began delivering sealed ballot boxes to The Supreme Electoral Council.

A very close race was anticipated between Pinerua, picked by incumbent Carlos Andres Perez, and Herrera.

Herrera's Social Christians are affiliated with the international Christian-Democrat movement, and Pinerua's Democratic Action Party belongs to the Social Democrat International. Both parties are moderately leftist.

South Africa reverses stand on Namibia

UNITED NATIONS (UPI) — South Africa has reversed its stand on Namibia and told the United Nations it will not hand over control of the mineral-rich territory to local leaders after this week's disputed elections, officials said Sunday.

The South African reversal was a major concession to the United States and its western allies, who have insisted on a U.N. peace-keeping force to supervise Namibia's independence process. It cleared the way for a truce team to move into the territory, known formally as South West Africa, at the beginning of the new year.

The Pretoria government apparently decided to yield to the key parts of the U.N. plan in response to warnings that the western allies might drop their opposition to mandatory economic sanctions, which could cripple South Africa's economy.

South African Foreign Minister Roelof "Rik" Botha, who relayed his government's decision to U.N. Secretary General Kurt Waldheim, said he still wanted to negotiate the size of the U.N. peace-keeping force, but he pledged these talks would be completed by the end of this month.

GM bullish on U.S.

DETROIT (UPI) — Brushing aside the popular notion of an imminent recession, General Motors Corp. Chairman Thomas A. Murphy Sunday predicted a strong U.S. economy and record car and truck sales in 1979.

In his annual forecast, Murphy praised the Carter administration's anti-inflation efforts and said the program should result in continued expansion next year.

The GM chairman, whose predictions have been within 100,000 units of actual figures since 1976, said car and truck sales next year should hit 15.5 million units. He issued the same figure for calendar 1978, and sales now are expected to reach a record 15.4 million.

New passenger-car sales, he said, should reach 11.5 million next year, with trucks topping a million. Murphy said GM planned to keep its lion share of industry sales, particularly with introduction next spring of a new line of front-wheel-drive compact cars.

Mercury photographed

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The space agency has just published the fruits of an unprecedented exploration — an atlas of Mercury containing 400 detailed photos of the little planet that is hidden from earthlings in the blinding glare of the sun.

Those photographs — showing that Mercury looks much like the moon — plus a text written by space project scientists represent the most comprehensive study ever made of Mercury.

As the closest planet to the sun, it is possible to scrutinize from Earth.

The Mercury photos were taken and transmitted to earth by Mariner 10, which also was the last U.S. spacecraft to visit Venus.

Mariner 10 first flew within 3,600 miles of Venus in February 1974, took the first closeup pictures of that cloudshrouded planet, and laid the groundwork for Monday's arrival of Pioneer-Venus 1 at Venus.

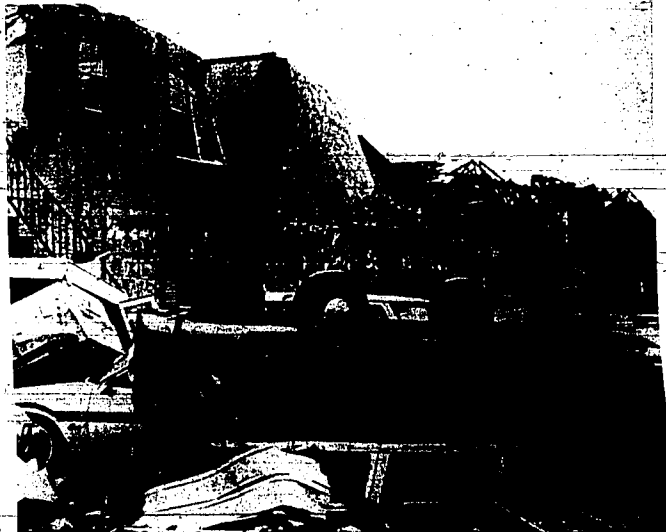

Mariner 10 then got a boost from the Venusian gravity and soared on to pass by Mercury on March 29, 1974. Scientists say the navigation required to accomplish was something like shooting a rifle bullet through a two-inch knothole more than 100 miles away.

Worries about draft

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A congressional study released Sunday concluded the United States would be perilously slow in mobilizing for a sudden nonnuclear European war if the military draft remained in its present standby status.

The study, done by the Congressional Budget Committee and released by the House Armed Services Committee, said it would take at least 65 days for the Selective Service to begin delivering draftees.

Even then, it said, the likely delays and confusions involved in mass registration probably would mean that "less than 60 percent of the induction requirements would be met by six months after mobilization."

Southern poor stay in region to work

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Southerners living in poverty are staying home rather than seeking better opportunities in other sections of the country, a Census Bureau study showed Sunday.

The main reason, the study said, is that more poor southerners are finding better-paying jobs than ever before and thus are not forced to move away for survival.

As a result, the number of poor persons living in the South has been reduced by nearly 2 million during the 1970s while the number of poor living outside the South is unchanged.

"Just about all of the reduction in poverty in the United States since 1970 has occurred in the South — historically the nation's poorest region," the study said.

Southern states experienced a net migration of 127,000 persons living below the federal poverty level between 1975 and 1977 in what the study described as "a significant shift" from historical trends.

By comparison, the region experienced a net loss of 220,000 poor between 1967 and 1971, the study said. The change also had an effect on other regions of the nation, mostly notably the large, industrialized cities of the Northeast, the study said.

During the 1975-77 period, 171,000 poor persons left the Northeast and the region is now sending more low-income persons to other regions than it is receiving in return — an important change.

The study also highlighted another shift of historical social behavior, a closing of the traditional income gap between the South and the rest of the nation.

The study predicted "the historic poverty gap between the South and the rest of the nation would be completely eliminated" if the current trend keeps up for another decade.

If this occurs, the South would catch up with the rest of the nation in per capita income by 1989, according to the report.

The study said the new desirability of the South despite low welfare payments calls "into question theories about the poor being attracted to areas where welfare benefits are high," such as the Northeast.

U.S. expects better relations with China

WASHINGTON (UPI) — U.S. officials believe China's leadership is carefully controlling the free-wheeling public political discussions now underway in Peking and predict this managed liberalization will help U.S.-China relations.

Lacking full-scale diplomatic ties and the information sources that go with them, the U.S. government is making its assessment mainly through careful readings of the signals coming from Chinese leaders — especially the statements of Deputy Premier Teng Hsiao-ping, who appears to be in effective control.

Analysts say that in his latest interview with visitors, Teng stressed an eagerness to establish full relations with the United States, saying, "It could come in two seconds" if Washington decided to do so.

In an earlier interview with columnist Robert Novak, Teng suggested the nationalist-controlled island of Taiwan, whose status is the principal issue blocking full-scale U.S.-Chinese diplomatic relations, could retain its own social and economic system after it is reunified with the mainland.

Interest in China's obscure political scene has sharpened dramatically with reports from western visitors that huge crowds have been gathering in Peking to discuss politics, freedom and democracy — and sometimes to voice unprecedented criticisms of the late Chairman Mao Tse-tung.

Some U.S. officials, however, say there are already signs this public ferment is being cut back, and they do not expect it to reach the dimensions of the 1966 "Hundred Flowers" — free expression campaign that ended in ruthless suppression.

These analysts say they believe the loosening up that has occurred so far, however, is a by-product of Teng's drive toward economic and technical modernization.

One China scholar, Kenneth Lieberthal, says in a piece for the Asahi Shimbun that Teng's drive will include: An increase in the number of Chinese students studying abroad; entrance to Chinese colleges based on merit instead of political reliability; the importing of foreign technology; a wage incentive program, and expanded foreign tourism.

Nonetheless, some experts say Teng's recent comment that "stability and unity" must be maintained means he is ready to put the brakes on the campaign.

They note China's political future is cloudy because of unresolved ideological disputes between Teng and Premier Hua Kuo-feng, Mao's political heir.

Hua believes technical progress should not be bought at the expense of ideas central to the Chinese revolution. Teng says technical progress is necessary for China and its revolution to survive.

U.S. officials believe Teng has successfully begun working for the changes he wants but is prepared to moderate his policy to accommodate Hua.

With a pinch of SALT

WASHINGTON — We are suddenly hearing a great deal about the upcoming SALT II agreement. The results of the Nov. 11 election are being reviewed in terms of senators respectively for and against it. Journals of opinion are filled with speculation on the president's campaign to win public support. And all this is only the beginning.

Permit me to voice a minority report: The pending arms limitation agreement, by its very nature, is bound to be illusory. The swelling debate is mostly hot air. In the final analysis, it makes little difference whether the Senate ratifies or rejects it.

Why are we engaging in this dumbshow? For months, we have been regaled with incomprehensible data on missiles and payloads and throw-weights on submarines and bombers, on nuclear warheads of high and low multiple degree. We have had charts and graphs and diagrams and balance sheets. Serious men take these matters seriously — as seriously as theologians counting angels on pinheads — and it is all, in the polite word, baloney.

It is immaterial, I mean to say, whether the agreement is finally negotiated. The Soviet Union has 820 land-based missiles or 1,820, or 10,820. The members might as well be drawn at random from a bingo drum. The figures are meaningless for the best of all reasons: The Soviets will not honor them anyhow.

Do we never learn? The Soviet Union may have lived up to international agreements having to do with the delivery of mail, but one would be hard-pressed to identify a single substantive, serious treaty that the Soviets have not violated in the most cynical fashion.

Have we forgotten Helsinki so soon? On the desk before me is the text of the agreement concluded on Aug. 1, 1975. The Soviet Union, as foremost of the initiating and participating states, solemnly promised "to respect human rights and fundamental freedoms." The Soviet Union would protect "freedom of thought, conscience, religion or belief." The Soviet Union pledged that it would facilitate the freer movement of individuals, including "travel by their citizens for personal or professional reasons."

Tell it to the Jews! The ink was not dry upon that gorgeous agreement before the Soviets were treating it with contempt. Tell it to journalists! The Helsinki package contained splendid pledges by the participating states to "progressively greater opportunities" for reporting the news. Have the Soviets lived up to these promises — to these relatively painless promises? To ask the question is to answer it.

In the name of common sense, why should any rational observer expect the Soviet Union to honor a vastly more serious agreement on arms limitation? The notion is ludicrous. The notion is worse than ludicrous; it is dangerous. The very existence of a formal agreement on strategic arms could well be perceived as an assurance of permanent peace.

There was a time in our history — a shameful time — when the United States systematically dishonored its own treaties. These were treaties with the Indian nations, and they were a long time ago.

Our world garage sale

NEW YORK — It started off as a joke. What would happen if Europeans, Japanese and OPEC-rich millionaires decided to buy up everything they could get their hands on in the United States? But no one is laughing anymore.

The United States is now holding a garage sale for the rest of the world. I hadn't realized how serious it was until I met a friend of mine from Paris named Alain at the Pierre Hotel. We embraced, kissed on both cheeks and headed for the bar. Alain owns a grocery store in Paris and I assumed he was in the United States to replenish his shelves with Kellogg's Corn Flakes.

But when I asked about it he was categorical: "Know whether to buy Kellogg's Corn Flakes or Post Toasties."

"They're both very good," I said. "Of course, I also like a bowl of shredded wheat once in a while."

"I don't want to buy a bowl. I want to buy the company."

"The company?"

"Of course," he chuckled. "Why do you think I am in the United States?"

He showed me the valise full of Eurodollars he was carrying.

"Don't they remind you of Kleenex?"

"What a thing to say about the American dollar, Alain!"

"That's what you Americans used to say about the French franc."

"It was a joke," I protested. "Can't you let bygones be bygones?"

"All right," Alain said agreeably. "You see those Japanese businessmen over there? I heard them talking in the elevator. The little fellow with the Nikon camera just bought some land in New York."

"How many feet?" I asked.

"I'm not sure. I think he said it was 60th Street to 63rd Street on Park Avenue. How many feet would that be?"

"Both sides of Park Avenue?" I asked.

"Of course. He had to protect himself from any Arabs moving across the street."

I ordered a rum and Coca-Cola.

"A Swiss friend of mine is thinking about buying the Coca-Cola Co. Do you think it's worth the trouble?"

"Mainly money," I said.

"It's not a bad company if you like Atlanta. Of course, if he bought Pepsi-Cola, he could live in Greenwich, Conn.," I said.

"He doesn't want to live over here," Alain said. "He just wants to own something so that when he comes on a pleasure trip he can say 'It was a business trip and deduct his expenses.'"

"I see," I said. "Were you thinking of buying anything besides an American cereal company?"

"Well, I'm not going out looking if that's what you mean. But if my wife takes a fancy to something, as she did the other day, I'm not going to tell her no."

"What did she want you to buy for her the other day?"

"Central Park," he said.

"I didn't know it was for sale."

"Neither did I. The negotiations were very tricky. First, I bought up the New York subway system, very quietly, through a Nassau Island bank. Then I went to Mayor Koch and offered to give him back the subway system in exchange for the World Trade Center. He made the deal. I then went to the World Trade Center people and threatened to tear down both buildings and make a park out of it unless they could find something decent for me. They finally came up with Central Park."

"But Central Park doesn't produce any income."

"Who needs income? The only reason we're buying over here is to get our money out of Europe."

"Now wait a minute, Alain. I don't understand this. You Europeans have been attacking the U.S. dollar for several years because you say you have no faith in it. Why put funds into America if you don't believe in our currency?"

"Because, dummy, the only safe country in the world for a foreigner to invest his money in is the United States," he replied.

Alain called for the check in the bar. As he signed it, he asked, "What's a decent tip for the waiter when you own the hotel?"

Blahs strike Times-News computer

At the Times-News, the pre-Christmas blahs have hit our computers.

Late Saturday night, the main bank of computer typesetters at the newspaper gave out.

No national, international or state news could be received on the computer lines into the news office.

Worse, the computers refused to allow reporters to type local news stories into the electronic memory system.

An uncharacteristic symphony of typewriters and manual typesetting machines filled the newspaper Sunday and again this morning.

The special computer doctors fly into Twin Falls today to attend the sick patient.

By tomorrow, The Times-News should be back on its standard electronic wavelength.

Until then, we've had to cut back on our local news and sports output.

When change occurs, call the wife

Husbands everywhere should learn something from the two California hunters supposedly lost in the South Hills over the weekend.

The hunters, Lloyd Sanner and Dennis Ponciano, violated a basic rule of marriage. They didn't call their wives.

The two men apparently decided to cut their deer hunting adventure short and spend a couple days doing what you know what.

But their abbreviated plan went contrary to what their wives thought to be the schedule.

Friday, when their spouses failed to call home, Mrs. Sanner and Mrs. Ponciano contacted the Cassia County Sheriff's office.

A search began.

Four-wheel-drive pick-ups, snowmobiles and teams of searchers combed the South Hills for the two men.

Late Saturday afternoon, hunters Sanner and Ponciano drove into Gridley, California and surprised their wives.

Details of the meeting between the returning hunters and the worried wives are scarce. But it would seem unlikely the husbands will again forget to call home when plans change.

Come to think of it, the Cassia County Search And Rescue squad would have appreciated it if the two hunters had called their wives too.

That way, the men who spent two days and a night searching the South Hills could have been home with their wives instead of out tramping through the first snowstorm of winter.

Remember, husbands, one of the first rules of keeping Earth on a steady axis: When a change of plans occurs, call the wife.

State legislature: forgotten child of government

BOISE — Idaho lawmakers will gather here in a few weeks with a unique opportunity to revitalize state government.

But if their past actions are any indication of what will be accomplished the opportunity will be acted through ineptitude and indifference.

The state legislature was intended, to be one of three separate but equal Idaho branches of government. Intended as a balancing counter to gubernatorial aspirations and occasionally cock-eyed judicial interpretations, the legislature was created as the unit of state government closest to the people.

Why? The major reason was the knowledge that it would be frequently difficult if not impossible for the average taxpayer to personally contact the governor or the members of the supreme court. State legislators, on the other hand, are immediately accessible, either through home town contacts or a quick telephone call to Boise.

It would seem logical that if ever there was an agency of government that should be alive, growing, jealous of its prerogatives and sure of its contact with the people, it is the state legislature.

So much for theory.

What has happened however is that the legislature has become the forgotten, often ignored and sometimes ridiculed, by ambitious governors or suspicious justices. No one with a serious problem with state government goes to his legislator these days, he heads to a state agency, usually with a director appointed by the governor.

It isn't so much the other branches of government have taken power from the legislature. Rather the legislature has allowed power to slip from its hands.

Part of the problem is that Idaho legislators meet for 60 days and then go home. The governor and the supreme court justices remain in Boise the rest of the year, working their will on the legislature's actions.

Short of a full-time legislature, which Idaho probably won't adopt for some time, this particular cause of the imbalance will continue.

But there are several steps the legislature could take this year to recapture its constitutionally mandated role as a separate and equal branch of government. These include:

- Creation of a process by which the legislature could override gubernatorial vetoes which are issued after the legislature has adjourned. A large number of bills pass the legislature in the final wrapping-up hours of the session, after which the legislators adjourn for the year. If the governor then vetoes a bill, a common tactic, no process exists for the lawmakers to override that action.
- Strengthening of staff support. While the legislature has a handful of excellent staff members in the legislative council, and can create special committees to serve between sessions, most of the legislature folds up on adjournment day. Key committees and legislative leaders of both parties should have full-time researchers and assistants, just as are found in the executive and judicial branches of government.
- Creation of legislative office space. Idaho lawmakers now must serve an entire session with a two-by-three-foot desk as their sole office space. That means it is impossible to save valuable information needed later in the session, and frequently difficult to conduct business. The result is slower and less efficient government.

Taxpayer dollars are wasted in this phony economy of denying Idaho legislators adequate office space. A modern business attempting to carry on under comparable circumstances would be considered hopelessly out of date. If not every legislator needs a separate room, an office should be provided for at least every three or four legislators.

Creation of a Washington legislative office. This would serve a two-fold purpose. It would serve as a conduit for information from the nation's capitol, to the state legislature. With the ever growing body of federal laws and regulations, a legislative watch on the capitol could keep state legislators informed of all actions affecting Idaho.

Support offices would also give the legislature the opportunity to express itself will before congressional committees. Assistants to the governor frequently appear before Congress with advice on Idaho problems. But the legislature doesn't always agree with how the executive branch interprets these problems. A legislative office in the capitol could help gubernatorial assistants monitor.

- Creation of a legislative power to call special sessions. The governor now has this power solely to himself.

There are other actions which the legislature could take to assert itself as a viable branch of government. These are just a few which have been discussed in recent years. These actions would give the legislature more authority and respect, but would also revitalize the branch of government closest to the voters.

Unfortunately, if recent sessions are any indication of what to expect, Idaho legislators will spend their session huffing and puffing about a governor who doesn't respect their prerogatives and will take little if any action to change the present imbalance between the branches of government.

Lieutenant Governor Phil Batt should be pleased the legislature arrives in Boise in January. One of the few formal duties of a lieutenant governor is to act as president of the senate during the session. During this year's legislature, Batt will have more than his share of work to perform.

Batt, a 12-year veteran of the legislature is held in high regard by nearly all of his former colleagues and will undoubtedly perform his job adequately.

But when the legislature goes home so will most of Batt's job.

Lieutenant Governor Batt is a Republican serving under Democratic Gov. John Evans. Democrats, while publicly lauding the two can work as a harmonious team, are already seeing Batt as a gubernatorial challenger four years from now.

What does this mean?

A member of the governor's staff expressed it best recently when asked what duties Batt would be assigned by Evans. "I suspect he'll spend a lot of time waiting for the phone to ring," was the reply.

Jim Jones' childhood, education and early struggle to found a church

The inside story of the Peoples Temple sect and the massacre in Guyana, by Marshall Kilduff and Ron Javers, staff correspondents of the San Francisco Chronicle, © 1978 by the San Francisco Chronicle, published by arrangement with Bantam Books Inc. and distributed by Los Angeles Times Syndicate.

Part 2

By MARSHALL KILDUFF
James Warren Jones was born 47 years ago on May 12, 1931. He was the only child of a poor family scraping by in the small farming hamlet of Lynn, Ind.

Jim Jones' childhood was marked by loneliness. His father, James Jones, returned from World War I with a severe lung problem and "could no longer work. He received a monthly disability check from the government.

The Ku Klux Klan, to which James Jones belonged, had a large following in town. The elder Jones, along with the fathers of many other Lynn children, met in a field east of Lynn about once a week. They wore white sheets and white hoods and preached hatred of blacks.

One former neighbor of Jones, George Southworth, says that in the 20 years he lived in Lynn he saw only one black man. "There was an unwritten law that blacks should not let the sun set on their heads in Lynn."

Jones' mother, Lynetta, was much younger than her husband and was forced by his illness to work to support her family. She had a job in a factory and also did odd jobs for people in town.

To many of the townfolk, Lynetta Jones seemed peculiar. "She dressed odd," said Doris Spencer, who knew the family and whose daughter was a classmate of Jim's. "She wasn't as friendly as the rest of us. She wore dark things even in summer. She kept to herself."

Jones claimed later that his mother was an Indian — a Cherokee, he said. Though the birth records are lost, Mrs. Jones' sister-in-law, Barbara Shaffer, disputes this notion.

"She was different than anyone else," Shaffer maintains. "She was dark-complected, that was all."

Early on, Jim Jones showed an interest in the church, an interest that Lynn, which had six churches then, could nurture.

"I was used to pretend church, and he'd be the preacher, standing up and making sermons," recalls Vera Price, who still lives in Lynn. "He was allowed to go to any church and he went to all of them," a former neighbor said.

Jones' early religious education was influenced strongly by Mrs. Orville Kennedy, who lived down the street from the Joneses. Mrs. Kennedy took Jim under her wing, and introduced him to the Nazarene faith.

Some years later, Jim Jones paid a special tribute to Mrs. Kennedy by bringing three of his congregations to visit her. Twelve busloads of people, numbering 600 people, or almost half the population of Lynn, stopped in June 1976 on the main street of the town. Jones got out and visited for three hours with his second mother, as he called her, while the congregation remained in the buses.

Despite his religious inclination, Jones was also a loner. He was very changeable, always embracing a new church or going out for the cross-country team, then quickly dropping out. For a time he got involved in the Pentecostal Church run by the Holy Rollers, where the congregation spoke in tongues and whooped and holed their night.

He organized a girls' softball team, but never participated in sports himself. As classmate Bill Norris put it: "If Jim wasn't going to be the leader, then Jim wasn't going to do it."

The determination to be a leader must have been a trait Jones got from his mother. Lynetta Jones, always known for her proficient cussing, one day strolled down the main street smoking a cigar. The townfolk were agast.

The young Jones also had a temper. During class, if things didn't go his way, he got angry. One teacher put it this way: "When Jim was crossed he got emphatic."

Bill Townshend, two years ahead of Jones in school, remembers, "One time Jim, who was always a kind of promoter, was going to have a carnival and give prizes for various things. Well, one of the prizes was for lifting weights. I lifted the weights like I was supposed to, but Jim said I didn't do it right. I dropped the weights real hard and we argued and fought about it until Jim's dad came up and canceled the carnival."

But young Jones also had a bit of the philanthropist in him. One day a ragged stranger appeared in Lynn, offering his tale of woe to any who would listen.

"I don't have a friend in the world. I'm ready to give up," the stranger said as Jim happened by.

The boy replied: "God's your friend and I'm your friend. And my mom will help you get a job."

"Mom" did. Lynetta Jones got the stranger a job in the factory where she worked.

School records show Jones' I.Q. was 115-120. "He has an amazing ability to appear to be asleep in class," one schoolmate remembers, "and then go up to the blackboard and whack off a problem in geometry like there was nothing to it."

Because of the shortage of money in his family, Jones held down a night job at Reid Memorial Hospital in Richmond, Ind., 15 miles away. He often showed up in class straight from work wearing his hospital white duck pants.

His Latin teacher, Violet Myers, remembers Jim. "Almost every boy had a girlfriend, but Jim was only interested in religion. He used to hold church gatherings around the high school."

In high school Jim Jones began to feel Lynn was too small for his sizeable aspirations. The ministry beckoned, and Jones began to espouse racial equality — a view none too popular in Lynn. Jones told friends that he thought Lynn was "racist." He said his father was a Ku Klux Klan member, and that he had never seen "a Negro until he was 12." Jones thought he was a man of the people, especially the lower-class poor and the downtrodden.

As a result, Jones dropped out of the Lynn High School after his sophomore year, in 1947, and enrolled in school in Richmond, a bigger town south of Lynn, the following fall. There, he grew even more religious and began seriously talking about a career as a minister. He was graduated in 1949, and entered Indiana University in Bloomington.

Kenneth E. Lemons, Jones' college roommate at Indiana University in 1949, said Jones was "maladjusted" during their time together at Indiana University.

"Jones considered himself above everyone else, and pored over the Bible, often rambling about his religious philosophies. I completely mistrusted the guy," Lemons said. "He was kind of an embarrassment to everyone who knew him. But his classmates didn't make fun of him, they just ignored him."

After a short time at Indiana University, Jones grew unhappy and dropped out to return to Lynn where he got a job as an orderly at Reid Memorial Hospital. Within a year he met Marceline Baldwin, a graduate of the hospital's school of nursing. Before Marceline, Jones had few girlfriends. Thin and attractive, Marceline was trim and slender. They were married in 1949. At 22, Marceline was four years older than her new husband.

The Methodist Church had held much promise to Jones as a young man, but at the time of his marriage, Jones became disenchanted with the Methodists.

"He told me there was no love in the (Methodist) church, and said that's what made him decide to start his own church," a former ministerial colleague remembers.

Jones took Marceline to Indianapolis in 1950, and though still not an ordained minister, he became a pastor at the Sommeret, Southside Church. He also took over and operated an integrated community center, and in this way, Jones first united his interests in religion and racial brotherhood.

But in the tough blue-collar industrial city that once was the home of the national office of the Ku Klux Klan, Jones ran into more trouble than he expected. He was frequently jeered during church services which he espoused his liberal views on civil rights. Older members of the congregation objected to the outspoken newcomer — who began calling himself "bifacial" because of his supposedly Cherokee mother.

While working at the small church, Jones lived in a fairly well off section of Indianapolis near Butler University, where he became a part-time student taking classes in education. It was to take him nearly 10 years to get his bachelor of arts degree, and almost as long until he finally was ordained in 1964 as a minister in the Christian Church, a branch of the Disciples of Christ.

Bothered by the continuing angry reception from his Sommeret congregation, Jones quit in the early '50s and held services on his own in a church he rented in another Indianapolis neighborhood. He called it the Community Unity Church.

He tried energetically to hustle up the money and followers for his dream: a racially integrated congregation that he could run without fear of reproach by small-minded Indiana ministers and their conservative Sunday morning followers.

For Jones, these early days of independence were embarrassing, an awkward apprenticeship. In a bow tie and bird-striped tweed jacket, he traveled "from door-to-door selling monkeys, imported from South America and Asia, for $29 each. If the woman or man of the house wasn't looking to buy the pets, well, perhaps they'd like to visit a new progressive church unlike any other, Jones would suggest.

By 1956 he found enough new friends and money to open his church, the Peoples Temple, in a section of Indianapolis that was slowly changing from white to black. A year later, Jones bought a new home for his congregation in a former Jewish synagogue at 975 North Delaware St.

His family expanded to include seven adopted children, and according to one member at the time, Jones talked quite a few of the congregation members into adopting children, too. Jones' adopted children were black, white and Asian, and he presented them as an example of his pro-integration beliefs.

If his base was finally established, Jones was still searching for a style. He made weekend trips to watch famous preachers in action, and came away vastly impressed by Father Divine, the razzle-dazzle Philadelphia preacher who had total control over his adoring followers — many of them elderly black women.

Taking a cue from Divine, Jones announced that the Peoples Temple needed something called an "Interrogation Committee, a natural result of Jones' desire to solidify his leadership, and to surround himself with loyal followers who could police the congregation."

One Indianapolis member of Jones' temple, Thomas Dickson, said the interrogation committee was "for people who spoke against Jones in the church, Dickson said. Jones had begun to change, Dickson felt, and the committee of ever-vigilant members close to Jones was of disturbing sign."

"The people would have to go before this interrogation committee and be questioned for hours or longer. If they were against him, or if there was a plot in the church against him," Dickson said.

"He always said everybody ought to love him and if they didn't, he'd get awfully violent — not physically, but verbally, sometimes cursing. He'd quote the Bible — he called it the black book — and throw it on the floor and say 'Too many people are looking at this instead of looking at me.'"

Disappointed in the strange turnabout in a man who had begun to speak of his "highest ideas," Dickson left the church.

In 1959 Jones encountered personal tragedy when one of his adopted children was killed in a car accident with four other temple members on the road from Cincinnati. In Indianapolis Jones' cleric announced he didn't get into the car because of a promotion of death. He never explained why he did not use this claimed power to save his own child.

Despite the odd currents noted by former admirer Dickson and Jones' expanding claims of omniscience, Jones still remained an aggressive, courageous leader consumed by his beliefs in civil rights. Local newspaper accounts indicate that Jones and his family suffered ugly personal attacks during the first days of the civil rights era.

His wife Marceline was spat upon while waiting for a bus with her adopted black son. Jones also said he received a concussion when a red-neck "hit" him with a milk bottle at his front door. His children, white, black and Asian, were threatened at local playgrounds.

In 1960 Mayor Charles Boswell appointed Jones director of the Indianapolis Human Rights Commission, and Jones gladly took the $7,000-a-year job.

By 1963, Jones' church was called The Peoples Temple Full Gospel Church and was a Disciple of Christ congregation.

Then, suddenly, Jones told several members of his church he had experienced a "personal vision" of a coming nuclear holocaust that would poison the world. And at the same time this disturbing vision descended on Jones, the young minister picked up a copy of Esquire magazine. The editors had seized on the bomb shelter craze of those days to publish a half-satirical yarn about the "10 safest places to live in the event of a nuclear attack," shoring up the article with all sorts of official sounding evidence on climate conditions, wind currents and mountain ranges.

Two of the places were Belo Horizonte, Brazil, and Ukiah, Calif., 116 miles north of San Francisco. Jones decided to take his family to Brazil, some said for a rest and a young mission, as much as for self-proclaimed missionary experience.

In his South American travels, Jones made a brief stopover in the small, backward colony of British Guiana (now Guyana) and found the gingerbread Victorian architecture of its capital, Georgetown, one of his happiest tourist memories.

MARSHALL KILDUFF

RON JAVERS

About the authors

For two and a half years San Francisco Chronicle reporter Marshall Kilduff covered the Peoples Temple and the Rev. Jim Jones. While many were praising Jones, and Jones was hobnobbing with top public officials, Kilduff was sounding the alarm that not all was as it seemed in the Peoples Temple, that there was evidence of corruption and exploitation.

Kilduff finally published his findings in 1977 in a free-lance article co-authored with Phil Tracy in New West magazine. This earned him the hatred of Rev. Jim Jones and his followers.

Now Kilduff was not associated with the Peoples Temple investigation. He had only joined the Chronicle in 1978 as a special projects writer, following six years with the Philadelphia News as a writer, department head and associate editor of the newspaper.

Javers was assigned to cover Proposition 13, and traveled California and the country covering the brewing taxpayers revolt. When the Peoples Temple story began to heat up with the investigative trip of Rep. Leo Ryan, Chronicle editors decided to send Javers on the trip — instead of Kilduff, concluding that Javers would be a purely objective observer of the phenomenon in Jonestown, and that there would be less animosity from either side.

As it turned out, Javers became not only a witness to, but a victim in the ambush at the airstrip near Jonestown, where he was wounded by the same gunfire that killed Rep. Ryan.

Javers and Kilduff have now combined "to give a uniquely informed account of the Peoples Temple and Jim Jones, the disintegration of the movement and its leader, and an eyewitness account of the bizarre events leading to the massacre.

No other source can offer this singular blend of background and immediacy in its reportage of the Peoples Temple story. A former Nieman fellow of Harvard University, Ron Javers lives in San Francisco with his wife and two children. Kilduff, a San Francisco native and 1971 Stanford graduate, is single and lives in the city.

Financial saga of Jones adds up to a pretty penny

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) — The Rev. Jim Jones apparently accumulated at least $10 million in secret bank accounts scattered around the world before leading more than 900 Peoples Temple members in a bizarre murder-suicide pact.

The financial saga of Jones, who started from humble origins in Lynn, Ind., began to emerge Sunday in newspaper reports on both the West and East coasts.

The New York Times reported that Jones had established at least six and perhaps more than a dozen bank accounts in Switzerland, Panama, Guyana and other countries, using anonymous numbered accounts and dummy corporations.

A mysterious international battle has begun for the fortune which some former church members estimate to be as high as $15 million, the newspaper said.

In California, real estate was a million-dollar business for the Peoples Temple during its heyday, the San Francisco Examiner said in a copyright story. Even though most Peoples Temple holdings were sold by the time of the death tragedy at the church's Guyana mission, the cult still gets income from other properties acquired by purchase or gift, the newspaper said.

A detailed look at real estate records in Los Angeles, San Francisco and Mendocino counties disclosed that the total value of property held by the cult over a period of just a few years exceeded $1 billion, much of it donated by members who gave all their worldly possessions to Jones' church to show themselves as true Christians.

By contrast, the report said, Jones did not give up to the church property belonging to him personally.

Most of the Peoples Temple property was sold off by September 1977, apparently the culmination of a mass migration of the church to South America.

Former Jones aides have disclosed that he often spoke of channeling the church's millions to the Palestinian Liberation Organization and that he mentioned giving money to the Soviet Union — that he in fact toyed with the notion of moving his church membership en masse to Russia.

Now the vast fortune is apparently up for grabs. The FBI is trying to identify the accounts and remaining members at the Peoples Temple headquarters in San Francisco say they intend to keep operating and the funds are theirs.

Richard Nixon returns triumphantly to New York

NEW YORK (UPI) — Back from a week-long trip to France and Britain, former President Richard Nixon was in New York City Sunday for a family visit.

Nixon began the 10-day visit with his daughters, Tricia Cox and Julie Eisenhower, on Saturday after flying from London. His wife Pat also flew in from California, and joined Nixon at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel.

Unlike his headline-making European tour, Nixon is keeping a low profile in New York. When he arrived Saturday, he sped away from Kennedy Airport without a word for waiting reporters. There were no demonstrators on hand.

Later, as he was entering the hotel, Nixon said he had no plans to travel abroad in the future. He also said he would work on a book on American Politics on his return to his home in San Clemente, Calif.

Brando, Fonda will film new movie in Peru

LIMA, Peru (UPI) — Marlon Brando and Jane Fonda will play the lead roles in a movie based on the life of Tupac Amaru, the Inca whose uprising against Spain put Peru on the road to independence.

American film producer Arthur Gerson said Sunday the movie will cost some $7 million and will be filmed in Cuzco, the southern Peruvian city that once was the capital of the Inca empire that stretched from Ecuador to southern Bolivia.

"Tupac Amaru has enormous importance and the picture will be a hit because of the quality of the actors," Gerson said.

Begin will accept Nobel Peace prize

JERUSALEM (UPI) — The Israeli Cabinet heard a mild protest Sunday from Defense Minister Ezer Weizman before approving the trip of Prime Minister Menachem Begin to Oslo, Norway, to accept his share of the Nobel Peace Prize.

The Israeli national radio said Weizman was the only Cabinet member who asked whether Begin might reconsider the trip since Egyptian President Anwar Sadat will not attend because a peace treaty has not yet been signed.

But Begin and other ministers urged acceptance, and Weizman went along, the radio said.

There have been several pleas to Begin to stay away the ceremony Dec. 10. Peace treaty opponent Geula Cohen, from Begin's own Herut party, called the prize a "complete farce."

And an editorial in the Jerusalem Post said, "It would be advisable for Mr. Begin to propose to Sadat that they both urge the Nobel Peace Prize committee to postpone awarding of the prize until after Israeli and Egypt have actually concluded and signed a peace treaty."

Belafonte to D.C.

KINGSTON, Jamaica (UPI) — Jamaican-born Harry Belafonte left for Washington Sunday to present a special congressional award to fellow-artist Marian Anderson during a White House ceremony.

Belafonte and his wife, Julie, were in Jamaica during the weekend as guests of Prime Minister Michael Manley. They attended several cultural functions including a dance Saturday night in aid of charities sponsored by the ruling People's National Party.

Belafonte is due to return to Kingston Monday on private business.

Carter honors singers, dancers

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Carter and the Kennedy Center Sunday honored the deans of American musical entertainment at a White House reception and televised gala.

Singer Marian Anderson, dancer Fred Astaire, choreographer George Balanchine, composer Richard Rodgers and pianist Arthur Rubinstein were honored for their "significant contributions to American culture through the performing arts."

The president and Rosalynn Carter gave a White House reception for the honorees and the plant-performing center presented them with awards in a ceremony televised by CBS.

The artists then were invited to supper in the new annex to the National Gallery of Art.

Mrs. Anderson, 76, is a native of Philadelphia. She was once denied permission to perform in Constitution Hall because she is black.

Astaire, 79, from Omaha, Neb., began his career in Vaudeville in 1907 and has starred on Broadway and in Hollywood.

Sadler kills songwriter

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (UPI) — Singer-author Barry Sadler apparently acted in self defense when he shot a songwriter who died early Saturday, but the case will be turned over to a Davidson County Grand Jury for routine investigation, police said Sunday.

Sadler, whose 1966 "The Ballad of the Green Berets" sold more than a million records, fatally wounded Lee Emerson Emery Friday night after Darlene Sharp, Sadler's Emery had been "hounding" Ms. Sharp for more than a year. Emery died from a bullet wound to the head.

No charges were filed against Sadler, a former Green Beret turned songwriter and music industry critic in Nashville. Sadler, 31, said Emery had telephoned the woman at a lounge earlier in the evening and threatened her. Two bullet fragments removed from the 55-year-old Emery were sent to the state crime lab to determine whether they came from Sadler's 32-caliber pistol or from Emery's 38-caliber gun, or possibly whether one fragment came from each weapon. Sadler, who described himself as a "damn good shot," said the bullet from his pistol did not kill Emery. "I'm a weapons expert and there's no way my little .32 could have made the kind of wound they're talking about," he said.

Horoscope

Gemini should study before taking action and Sagittarians must protect reputations

GENERAL TENDENCIES: The day starts out with little progress being made, but many opportunities present themselves later in the day. Be sure not to make any promises that are likely to be broken.

ARIES (Mar. 21 to Apr. 19): Avoid friends early in the day since they could prove detrimental to your business affairs, but later they are helpful.

TAURUS (Apr. 20 to May 20): If you don't irk a higher-up in the morning, you can make big strides in your career work. Obey all regulations that apply to you.

DEMIO (May 21 to June 21): If you study new projects, you can make this an interesting and profitable day. Obtain the data you need for progress.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21): You must use good judgment in handling money or you could end up in trouble. Be careful of strangers.

LEO (July 22 to Aug. 21): It is best to wait until later in the day before going ahead with a project you have in mind. Take no risks with your credit.

VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 22): You find it difficult to get much done early in the day, but by adding new methods you speed up later. Avoid the social tonight.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22): Risks should not be taken at this time. Some special thought for loved one will bring fine benefits to you at this time.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21): Await the afternoon for any improvements you want to make at home. The evening is fine for entertaining friends.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21): Show more cooperation with associates and get much accomplished. Take no chances with your reputation tonight.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 20): Find better ways to add to present abundance. Sidestep one who could be detrimental to your progress.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19): There may be annoying delays in the morning, but later you make up for lost time. Show others that you are clever.

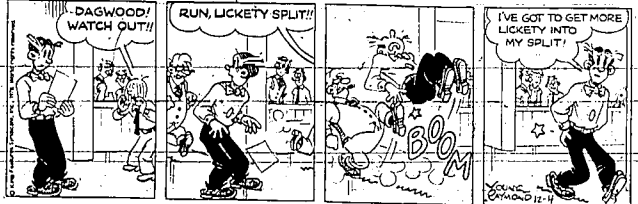

PISCES (Feb. 20 to Mar. 20): Good day to study others and learn much from them. The evening is ideal for making long-range plans for the future.

IF YOUR CHILD IS BORN TODAY... he or she will have many progressive ideas and should be sent to modern schools for best results. There could be fame in this chart. A highly inventive mind here. One who will excel in sports as well as spiritual matters.

What's what

New Hampshire industry takes away the image

New Hampshire is generally envisioned by out-of-staters as a beautiful, peaceful, rural place where the loving of cattle at eventide is only interrupted by the occasional crackle of skiers' bones. Consider this: Proportionately more of that state's payrolled population goes to work in factories than does New York's or Massachusetts'.

What Everett Horton wanted was a fishing pole he could hide somehow on his way to the river on the Sabbath. In 1886, that was. Fishing on Sunday was frowned upon in his home town of Bristol, Conn. So Everett invented the telescoping rod.

COSTLIEST CAR

Q. "What's the most valuable automobile in the world?"
A. Probably the original 1907 Silver Ghost Rolls Royce. Some authorities claim it's worth $500,000.

Q. "A native of London, New York, Rome or Naples is called a Londoner, New Yorker, Roman or Neapolitan. What's a native of Liverpool called?"
A. A Liverpoolian.

Q. "Did any heavyweight ever go the distance against World Boxing Champion Rocky Marciano?"
A. Only Elizabeth Charley. He lost a 15-round decision to Rocky on June 17, 1954.

Q. "In the penitentiary vernacular, what's a 'go-boy'?"
A. An escapee.

LOOK SMART

Would you rather look smarter than you are or be smarter than you look? Politicians put that query to numerous celebrities, and almost all preferred the notion of being smarter than they look. Sounds reasonable: How they go about looking smart isn't quite clear, but certain people do. Anyhow, those who look smarter than they are tend to disappoint their competitors, and thus make themselves unhappy. It's far more comfortable, far more relaxed, far easier to look sort of mediocre, even a little dense. I know.

Surprises probable at oil meeting

By FRANK VOGL
N.Y. Times Service

WASHINGTON — Meetings of the oil ministers of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries have much in common with the conclaves of cardinals in Rome to select a new pope: Both exude an aura of mystery, attract great speculation and frequently produce surprises. The upcoming gathering of the high priests of OPEC, on Dec. 16 in Abu Dhabi, shows no sign of being an exception.

An increase in the price the cartel charges for its product appears likely. While Saudi Arabia announced last week that it intended to ask its colleagues to freeze prices for another year, and Iran—plunged by domestic political troubles, indicated that it would not play a leading role in the price-setting decision, Treasury Secretary W. Michael Blumenthal returned from a Middle East visit and indicated that he expects an increase. The real billion-dollar question is not whether, but how big the increase will be. Any movement in OPEC prices can have a dramatic impact on inflation, economic growth, the financial markets — and on the health of the cartel itself.

The ultimate proof of that axiom of geopolitics, was the 1973 embargo and the accompanying four-fold price increase which stoked the world economy on its ear. The global adjustments to higher oil bills over the past five years — some of which have come as an unpleasant surprise to the OPEC nations themselves — will play an important part in the cartel's response to the billion-dollar question. Eight of the 11 rich countries, for example, are still running trade deficits; they yearn for a steep price increase. On the other side of the fence are those OPEC countries with massive dollar holdings that have been devalued by the descent of the dollar; a large oil price increase could send the dollar into a downward spiral.

Blumenthal reportedly believes that the increase will be limited to a moderate 5 to 7 percent. Some leading bankers, industry officials and economists suggest it might be 10 percent, although it might be imposed in several stages through 1979, rather than all at once. Other analysts fear that the increase might be even greater. Sheik Abdullah Turabi, a former Saudi Arabian oil minister, raised the specter of a 15 percent price hike in an interview with the Kuwaiti newspaper Al Watan. Kuwait and the poorer OPEC members have also called for a double-digit rise.

Many business leaders around the world are deeply worried. Giovanni Agnelli, chairman of Fiat of Italy, noted in New York recently that "Industrial nations simply cannot afford another change in OPEC's strategy, a return to steep oil rises triggered off by OPEC's fear of instability in the value of the world's money." He added that "the recent trouble in Iran has vividly brought home to all of us how precarious and fragile the present arrangements are for the supply of this vital and basic product to the West."

Harry Taylor, vice chairman of the Manufacturers Hanover Trust Company, believes that a 5 percent increase is "sustainable" but that a 10 percent rise will unleash damaging new inflationary forces and quite possibly "place some additional pressure on the dollar." In the money markets.

Five years ago the Arab members of OPEC suddenly used their oil power with blunt and ferocious force. The export embargo against the United States and the Netherlands and the 130 percent rise in the price of the black gold transformed the international political and economic environment.

"The balance in the world economy was destroyed and it will never be the same," says Harvard University economist Otto Eckstein. OPEC's actions, he says, "marked the end of a quarter century of unparalleled growth for Western Europe and the United States."

Contrary to the gloom and doom predictions made in the shadow of the embargo, a global depression did not result, although OPEC undoubtedly contributed to the sharp slowdown in the growth of most countries. While there was not a wholesale takeover of Western corporations by Arab sheiks, the Saudis have come to hold billions of dollar-denominated assets — chief among them, United States Treasury securities.

And certainly the 1973 actions dramatically upset the traditional balance in the money markets. As West Germany and Japan escalated their exports to pay their higher oil bills, the United States merely printed more dollars — a combination of by-the-printing presses-of-the United States Mint. From 1974 through 1977, the international bond market underwrote $30 billion of long-term debt, while the Eurocredit market produced $150 billion of intermediate-term credits, according to Clifford Gaines, chief economist of Manufacturers Hanover. He points out that "in a gross debt and credit sense, the market underwrote all of the current account (balance of payments) deficits generated by the offsetting OPEC surpluses on the other side."

The explosion in credit has been a prime source of international inflation and one of the major causes of the dollar's decline in the currency markets. OPEC prices its oil in dollars, so as the American currency has fallen in value, OPEC revenues have declined in real terms and its purchasing costs have risen, partly because it buys a good deal from Europe and European currencies have appreciated sharply against the dollar.

Saudi Arabia, by far the largest dollar holder in OPEC, is acutely aware that a sharp oil price rise now may add to inflation and to the international financing problems of many countries and so serve to depress the value of the dollar once again — again depressing the real value of OPEC foreign-exchange reserves and revenues. Secretary Blumenthal has assured the Saudis that the United States is determined to strengthen the dollar, but he has warned that a high oil price rise will make this a much harder task.

Some OPEC members are unlikely to be impressed by this argument. Kuwait, for example, has long been urging OPEC to move away from the dollar as the valuation unit for oil and unit composed of a range of "basket" of leading currencies.

Wall Street investment bankers note that for some time many OPEC countries have been reducing their holdings of dollars and buying West German marks. Such moves tend to be impressed by this argument. Kuwait, for example, has long been urging OPEC to move away from the dollar as the valuation unit for oil and unit composed of a range of "basket" of leading currencies.

Wall Street investment bankers note that for some time many OPEC countries have been reducing their holdings of dollars and buying West German marks. Such moves tend to be impressed by this argument.

more populous OPEC nations. It could be reduced — but production levels by 1980 may be over — it might find intolerably low."

The reduced world demand and increase in non-OPEC oil has brought lower sales volume and revenues than the cartel had anticipated. As a result, some OPEC nations that have spent heavily on arms, imports and foreign investments anticipating that their future incomes would boom, now find themselves facing foreign financing problems of their own.

To be sure, in the four years of 1974-77 OPEC managed to record a balance-of-payments surplus of roughly $170 billion. But, according to International Monetary Fund data, only 5 of the 13 OPEC members (Saudi Arabia, Kuwait, Libya, Qatar and the United Arab Emirates) still recording payments surpluses, each recording a deficit in their cash reserves or borrowing overseas to pay for their imports. Lise Witman, deputy assistant secretary of the treasury for international affairs, has told a congressional committee that OPEC's combined surplus in 1977 was only $10 billion this year and just $1.0 billion next year. Safer of Irving Trust, meanwhile, goes a step further and estimates that OPEC's aggregate surplus will decline to a mere $2 billion by 1982.

The countries in deficit are going to be the forefront in Abu Dhabi demanding large oil price rises, hopeful that such rises will provide them once again with payments surpluses.

To OPEC's surprise, its strength as a world power and its ability to dictate oil prices, has been sharply eroded. The decline of that power to some degree reflects efforts in oil-importing countries to conserve energy. More importantly it reflects the generally slow economic recovery from the 1974 global recession, which has retarded — oil — consumption growth and the unexpectedly sharp rise in non-OPEC-related energy output, from fields in the North Sea, Alaska's North Slope and Mexico.

Safer predicts that global demand for oil in the next four years may rise by only 5 million barrels daily, while OPEC's output could increase by 9 million barrels daily. If he is correct, then OPEC might have to cut its production by 4 million barrels daily — and its role will be weakened further.

Battery array bewildering

At least this time, my 1972 automobile's battery sputtered to a painfully slow death on a Friday evening in the country long before the coldest night of the year. So I have had the chance to have it replaced without being forced to go through torturous maneuvers to get to work Monday on time.

But shopping at ease for an auto battery has propelled me to the realization of the bewildering array of batteries, sizes, ratings, guarantees, prices, etc., now facing any buyer.

If four batteries fit my car, which one is best? One is priced at $24.95, $34.95, $44.95 or $54.95? Should I pay $25-$60 for a top-of-the-line battery or $25 for one that supposedly will get the job done? Should I buy a battery larger than the manual suggests, by the salesman for my car? And what about all those different types: maintenance-free, low-maintenance or conventional? What about sizes, ratings, guarantees, brands?

Driven into further research by my own confusion, I learned first that price should not be even the major consideration when selecting a battery. "If you want to learn how to buy batteries intelligently, watch people who buy thousands of them a year and whose careers depend on their proper functioning," said Anthony Sabatino, president and general manager of Gould Inc., Automotive Battery Division, Mendota Heights, Minn.

Large truck fleets save as much as $100 per truck per year by buying batteries that are much more expensive than others they have used in the past, selective maintenance-free battery systems with price tags of almost $250 rather than conventional battery systems costing only $140. You and I are not affected in exactly the same way, but this is a significant guide.

(1) Power is the No. 1 factor, since that's the most demanding job your auto battery performs. First, determine the size of your engine in cubic inches of displacement (CID). (Look in your owner's manual.) Ask for a battery that delivers the same number of amperes of Cold Cranking Performance. For instance, a car with a "390" engine (390 CID) needs a battery that delivers at least 390 amps of Cold Cranking Performance. This is the safe way to go but upgrade to the next higher level of battery availability:

- You have many high-drain accessories on your car (air conditioner, power seats, CB, stereo tape, etc.);
- You drive only short distances between long periods of parking (a commuter's station-car);
- Your car is parked outside, consistently in cold climates. All these factors place added strain on your battery.

(2) Reserve capacity is vital, because this refers to the margin of safety available in a battery for an emergency. For instance, if you need 24 amps for minimum requirements: Ignition, lights, etc. When your car's electrical system is functioning properly, the alternator supplies this power. But should the drive belt to the generator break, the electrical load will be thrown on the battery alone and reserve capacity is the number of minutes a new fully charged battery can deliver 25 amperes.

(3) Dependability and maintenance also rank high. Look for the maintenance-free technology introduced in recent years. In the new, more expensive maintenance-free models, potential battery failure due to water loss is reduced substantially. You can easily identify the best maintenance-free batteries because — since they need no water additions — there will be no familiar filler openings.

(4) The warranty. Review it carefully, but see you understand it, and that it protects you fully for 90 days after installation. If the battery proves defective not merely discharged, in that span, you have a choice of a 100 percent refund or a new battery.

After 90 days, a defective battery — not just a discharged one — will be replaced on a pro-rata basis. You will pay for the use you had; receive a new battery for the unused portion of the total guarantee, usually 24, 36, 48 or 60 months. Prices increase with power and length of guarantee.

Competition is spurring a breakthrough in guarantees. One famous retailer offers a battery guaranteed for as long as you own your car or truck. Free replacement for extended periods also is offered on less costly batteries guaranteed for 36 or 48 months.

With these four factors firmly in mind, even an amateur such as I am should be able to make a wise selection. And you, too.

Mexico oil finds spur U.S. to repair ties to neighbor

©Daily Telegraph, London

MEXICO CITY — Mexico's big oil discoveries have given new impetus to efforts by the United States to improve relations with its southern neighbor and, in particular, to heal a rift over a stalled joint gas project.

Diplomatic fence repairing has already begun in preparation for a visit by the U.S. Secretary of Energy. The row earlier this year — over a natural gas pipeline — has stiffened the resolve of the Mexican republic not to allow the Americans to become involved in exploiting their massive oilfields.

President Jose Portillo expressed his displeasure about the failure of the gas line project to a group of Americans recently. He compared the project to a joint decorating operation and claimed that the United States had pulled the ladder away from under him and "left me hanging with the paint brush."

The president was referring to the fact that the Carter administration refused to pay the asking price for gas which was to be piped more than 800 miles from southeast Mexico to Texas.

Mexico was left to continue the pipeline construction without its expected customer and decided to stop the project 100 miles from the U.S. border at Monterrey, the big Mexican industrial city.

The Mexicans did not like the way the U.S. energy secretary, James Schlesinger, handled negotiations, accusing him of being arrogant toward Pemex, the state oil company. That has left a residue of bitterness that is partly responsible for the Mexicans' decision to try to exploit their oilfields without technological assistance from the United States.

The Mexicans have been ingelistic about their fuel operations since they seized and nationalized U.S. and British companies 40 years ago.

Now that they are sitting on potential oil and gas reserves that could put them ahead of Saudi Arabia as the world's largest producer, they still want to handle operations themselves.

However, there is a feeling among oil men — and diplomats here — that Mexico and the United States may yet settle their differences over the gas pipeline and that that in turn could lead to U.S. involvement in oil exploitation.

The pipeline was a victim of domestic politics on both sides of the Rio Grande.

The stated reason for the Americans pulling out of the deal was that the price was too high, $2.60 per 1,000 cubic feet as against the U.S. interstate price of $1.70.

The Carter administration might have been willing to pay more than the interstate price but would probably have angered Congress at a time when the President's energy legislation was in difficulty on Capitol Hill.

Some observers here also believe that the Mexicans deliberately put the price too high to placate the more nationalist elements in the country who argue that the pipeline would be Mexico's Panama Canal, an instrument of alleged U.S. imperialism.

Six U.S. companies were to take some 2,000 million cubic feet of gas a day — which would have meant more than 10 percent of the U.S. daily needs. Now Mexico has more gas than it can handle.

World sugar products dip forecast for marketing year

WASHINGTON (UPI) — World sugar production this marketing year is expected to fall 2 percent from last year's record — the first decline since 1973-74, the Agriculture Department predicts.

That was the year high sugar prices pushed up production.

Early estimates show production in the marketing year ending next Sept. 30 will total 90 million metric tons.

Production is expected to increase in the Soviet Union and Africa but decline in South America, Europe, Oceania and Asia.

World sugar supplies which have been building up for the past several years are expected to be the largest in the decade, equal to a third of anticipated consumption, officials predicted.

World consumption is expected to be up 3 percent to 89 million tons. The addition of 1 million tons to world stocks "would be well below the 6-million-ton addition of 1977-78, and indicates that world production and consumption are beginning to converge," officials said.

World supplies of sugar began to build up to a price-depressing excess when raw sugar prices surpassed 70 cents a pound in the mid 1970s. Prices are now down to between 8 and 9 cents, well below the American cost of production average of 15.2 cents a pound.

When Congress failed to pass sugar legislation this year, the administration acted to support sugar prices at 15 cents a pound, through fees and price supports.

In a sugar and sweetener report, the department said world sugar prices will lag behind wholesale increases but "prices of sugar-containing products are also expected to average slightly higher."

American imports of sugar this year are expected to total about 4.2 million short tons, less than the 6.14 million tons level of 1977.

The 1978-79 U.S. sugarcane crop is expected to total 3.3 million tons and the sugarcane crop to fall short of last year's 3.8 million tons.

The report predicted that competing corn sweetener products will rise 5 percent for 1978.

Mace use brings reprimand

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (UPI) — Postal authorities in Albuquerque say they don't approve of their postmen spraying 3-year-olds with chemical mace.

A postal spokesman says the agency is taking administrative action and officials are proceeding with the appropriate administrative action, but declined to say what type of administrative action is contemplated.

after being sprayed Friday. He allegedly provoked the attack by shooting the mailman with a water gun.

The spokesman says the postman no longer is working a delivery route and is proceeding with the appropriate administrative action, but declined to say what type of administrative action is contemplated.

Vietnam refugees drown after boat capsizes

KUALA TRENGGANU, Malaysia (UPI)—Malaysia eased up a bit on its policy of repelling Vietnamese refugees Sunday after a third vessel capsized, bringing the toll in such incidents recently to 145 dead and 205 missing.

In Vatican City, Pope John Paul II urged prayers for the Vietnamese refugees who "suffer because there are few who want them, few who will take them in and deal with their problems and needs."

Police said the latest capsizing involved a boat carrying 54 refugees, rebuffed at other Malaysian ports, which had sailed 25 miles south of Kuala Trengganu. One person drowned, seven were missing and 49 were rescued.

After that incident officials rescinded orders that had compelled police to shove all refugee boats back to sea. They waved ashore a boat with 13 persons that had been precariously anchored in heavy surf off Kuala Trengganu.

Police said one elderly man died of exhaustion while trying to wade ashore.

The no-landing policy — enacted because Malaysia's Vietnamese population has swelled from 5,000 in August to 47,000 — appeared to bend only when it was obvious a boat was in danger.

Police and U.N. refugee officials in the area said at least two other boats off the coast had been shoed away.

Police said they found four more survivors from another boat that capsized Saturday after being chased from a remote beach 30 miles north of Kuala Trengganu. That brought the number of survivors to 151, with 44 persons known dead and 95 missing.

The first sinking of a Vietnamese refugee boat Sept. 22 left 100 dead, 103 missing and 51 survivors.

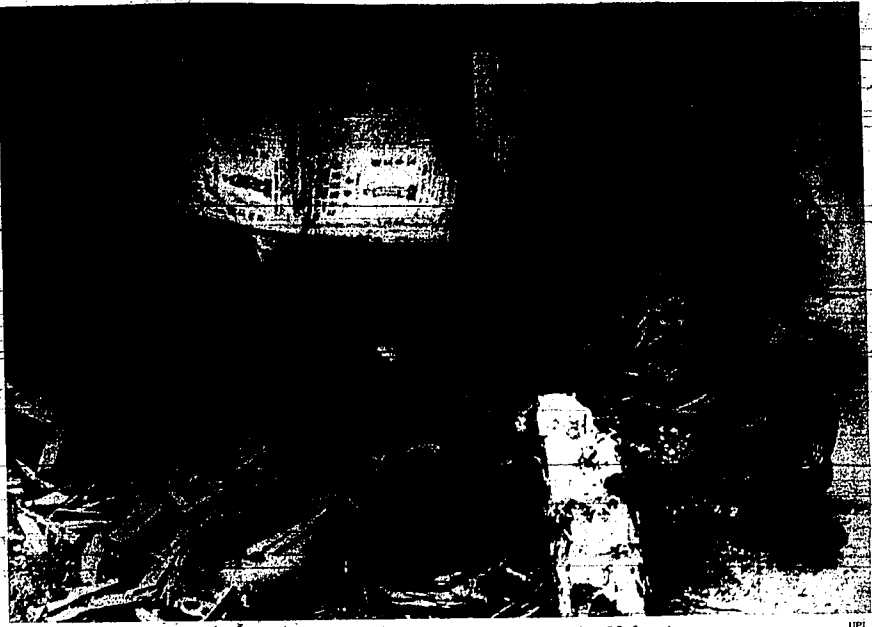

The Foreign Ministry issued a statement early Sunday saying Malaysia, after consulting with the ambassadors of Canada, France and the United States, had decided to allow the remaining refugees aboard the freighter Hai-Hong, less than 2,000 people, to come ashore until they are resettled elsewhere.

France, Canada and West Germany, have agreed to take several hundred Hai-Hong passengers and the United States has agreed to take all the rest, the ministry said.

The ship and its passengers — which Malaysia claims are illegal immigrants rather than refugees — had been kept in quarantine since early September just outside Port Klang, about 20 miles west of Kuala Lumpur.

The first 183 of the 1,000 Hai-Hong refugees granted asylum in West Germany arrived Sunday in Hannover on a West German Air Force Boeing 737 after a 15-hour flight from Kuala Lumpur.

The refugees were given blankets to protect them from the 35-degree winter weather and a meal of chicken soup with rice. Five army buses hauled them to a refugee camp near Goettingen for processing.

Kidnappers free pregnant woman

ROME (UPI)—Kidnappers apparently heeded an appeal by Pope John Paul II and freed a pregnant woman Sunday who had been held for 55 days.

Mrs. Maria Boroli Balestrini, 33, was released in Milan. It was not known whether her kidnappers were political terrorists or criminals. She was four months' pregnant at the time of her abduction Oct. 9.

Mrs. Balestrini was released a few hours before the pope's traditional noon blessing in St. Peter's Square. He did not mention the event, but appealed for more humane treatment for the thousands of Vietnamese refugees pouring into Malaysia.

In his message to the kidnappers on Nov. 15, the pontiff had said: "The pope prays with sadness to the Lord that He may instill into the hearts of her abductors feelings of sensitivity, so that they may put an end to so many atrocious sufferings."

It was his first appeal for an Italian kidnap victim. Pope Paul VI had pleaded for the release of two Sardinian boys, who were later freed.

The late pope also had begged Red Brigades terrorists to spare the life of former Premier Aldo Moro, who was slain May 9 after 54 days in captivity.

John Paul concentrated on the plight of Vietnamese refugees in Sunday's blessing.

"Let us pray for those Vietnamese, who, having left their native land, suffer because they cannot find a consensus of humanity," the 58-year-old pontiff told the crowd of 30,000.

"They suffer because there are few who want them, few who will take them in and deal with their problems and needs," he said. "Let us hope ... that the appeal the Holy See has issued to the United Nations will achieve its aims."

Vatican press spokesman Rev. Romeo Lanzetta said the pope had sent a personal telegram to U.N. Secretary General Kurt Waldheim on the plight of the refugees. He declined to reveal the contents of the message.

An estimated 50,000 Vietnamese have fled their native land in rickety boats, most of the bound — for Malaysia, where refugee camps are already overcrowded.

New money policy planned in Europe

BRUSSELS, Belgium (UPI) — European Community leaders this week will be taking one of the most important decisions in the group's 26-year history — setting up a monetary system to counterbalance the erratic U.S. dollar.

Market sources said the heads of government were certain to approve the plan at their two-day meeting starting Monday, continuing a policy mapped out during their Copenhagen and Bremen summits earlier this year.

Then the issue will be handed over to finance ministers, central bank governors and other experts who will draft the details of the plan to link the currencies of eight nations by the Jan. 1 deadline.

The intention is to establish a "zone of monetary stability" that would withstand the ups and downs of the dollar and at the same time encourage investments and trade in the recession-bound EEC.

EEC sources said Britain probably will not link the pound with the other currencies on Jan. 1, but will try to keep open the option of joining at a later date, once it has had a chance to see how the system operates.

The EEC members expected to join the system were West Germany, France, Italy, Belgium, Luxembourg, Holland, Ireland and Denmark.

Norway, Austria and Switzerland are not members but have expressed interest in joining the system.

Details of the scheme were not expected to be unveiled until the end of December to prevent currency speculators from taking advantage of the move.

The European Monetary System will tie the currencies of France, Italy and possibly Ireland to the stronger currencies, particularly the German mark.

Pilot orders cult survivors off plane before departing

NEW YORK (UPI) — The captain of a Pan American jetliner, who delayed taking off from Georgetown, Guyana for 90 minutes because a federal agent was not on board, ordered 20 of 30 survivors of the mass suicide-murder at the Peoples Temple off the plane before flying to the United States.

The remaining survivors were all women and children, a Pan Am spokeswoman said.

The spokeswoman said the jet, which was to leave Georgetown for New York at 11 a.m. EST, took off at 12:30 p.m. EST without a federal agent on board. The flight was scheduled to stop in Port Au Spain, Trinidad before continuing.

She said the captain refused to take off because "it would not be in the best interest of the other passengers for a federal agent not to be on board to accompany the 30 survivors."

The spokeswoman said there had been "an understanding" that because of the number of the survivors to take the flight — the largest contingent of survivors to return to the United States so far — a federal agent would accompany the regular commercial flight.

About 54 cult members remained in Guyana, including two who have been arrested by authorities there.

Dear Abby

Some don'ts for holidays

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN
 © Chicago Tribune-N.Y. News Synd. Inc.
DEAR READERS: Can you believe it's time to prepare for the holidays again? Well, it is, so do yourself a favor and do your Christmas or Hanukkah shopping early.
 If you're wondering what to give Aunt Bessie or Grandpa, who don't get out much, let me tell you what NOT to give them:
 • No dusting powder, after-shave or cologne. (They probably have several unopened boxes gathering dust on their closet shelves.)
 • Grandpa doesn't need another necktie, and Grandma doesn't really want any more brooches, necklaces or bracelets.
 • With the price of groceries so high, folks who live alone on a fixed income probably would be delighted to receive a basket of goodies. Include small cans of salmon, chicken, ham, tuna, vegetables, fruit, instant coffee, tea bags, crackers, cookies and instant soup mix.
 • Another thoughtful gift is timed stationery with envelopes and generous supply of postage stamps. (Enclose some self-clip pens, too.)
 • Shut-ins would appreciate a box of greeting cards for all occasions, so they, too, can send birthday, anniversary, graduation, get-well and condolence cards to others. (Be a sport! Stamp some envelopes.)
 • Don't give anyone a gift of clothing unless you're absolutely sure the size is right. That goes for the color and style, too.
 • If you're tempted to pass along a scarf, purse, wallet or some useless little doodad you received for Christmas three years ago, please, don't. It's a pretty fair bet the recipient will find it just as useless as you did. (Besides, YOU might get it back the year after next.)
 • If someone on your gift list is living on a pension, a check for any amount would be much more appreciated than a frivolous little trinket. Or give someone who's counting his pennies a year's subscription to a newspaper or magazine you know he'll enjoy.

 Don't give a pet to anyone unless you're absolutely sure it's wanted and will be properly cared for. If you want to delight a friend whose dog or cat is considered a member of the family, include a tin of cat or dog food for the pet.
 Don't give gifts of wine or liquor unless you're sure the recipients imbibe. Candy, nuts and fruitcakes make wonderful gifts for those who aren't counting their calories, but please have compassion for those who are, and lead them not into temptation.
 Resist giving toddlers stuffed animals and dolls that are bigger than they are. Parents will thank you for not sending their children horns, drums, sirens or whistles. If you give a child a game or book, be sure it's in the appropriate age range.
 Instead of giving someone a gift with permission to "take it back" and return it for just what you want, why not save yourself (and them) much time and effort by giving them a gift certificate in the first place.
 ABBY
 P.S. To be alone at Christmas is sad beyond measure. If you know someone who faces that bleak prospect, give him or her the greatest gift of all: an invitation to spend the holiday with you and your family.
 Getting married? Whether you want a formal church wedding or a simple do-your-own-thing ceremony, get Abby's new booklet, "How to Have a Lovely Wedding." Send $1 and a long, stamped (28 cents) self-addressed envelope to Abby: 132 Lasky Drive, Beverly Hills, Calif. 90212.

News show producer 'hates' label

By JOAN HANAUER
UPI Television Writer
NEW YORK (UPI) - When "Happy Days" makes the top of the weekly Nielsen ratings, that's entertainment. But when "60 Minutes" is the most watched network broadcast of the week, that's news.

In the week ending Nov. 26, "60 Minutes" hit the top of the Nielsen, becoming - the first scheduled news show to take the history to be the nation's No. 1 broadcast.

That made Don Hewitt, creator and executive producer of the CBS news magazine series, one of the happiest men in network television.

"While Hewitt gives full credit to the "60 Minutes" staff - from correspondents Mike Wallace, Dan Rather and Morley Safer right down the list of producers, editors and writers - he also happily takes his own share of the credit, saying in an interview, "It's my baby, I invented it."

That was back in 1968 when, Hewitt said, Richard Salant, president of CBS News, thought it was "a lousy idea."

"I had done the CBS Evening News for 17 years," Hewitt said, "and I did documentaries. One day I looked at the ratings of our documentaries. They had the same ratings as NBC and ABC and PBS. I bet if we went multi-subject, made it personal journalism and packaged reality as well as Hollywood packages fiction, we'd double our ratings. Well, we did better than that."

For the record, the Nov. 26 issue of "60 Minutes" had a rating of 18.5 and a 45 percent share of the watching television at that time. Each rating point represents 1 million viewers, the show is watched by an audience of 41.4 million people. The material was not earthshaking - a piece on living together, a segment on conductor Arthur Fiedler, and a final segment on California.

FRIDAY

Swinging Sixties will have a potluck at 6 p.m. and dance at 8:30 p.m. at the Twin Falls IOOF Hall. Music will be by Floyd White and his Orchestra. Members and guests welcome.

Three: Reading, writing, spelling. The school scene calls for loyal acceptance of the big three. But the list aren't one, two, three on a new list of vital subjects in National Association of Secondary School Principals. Reading comes out top; rhythmic hygiene, but — hold on — personal hygiene, comes out third. Writing comes out fourth and biology ties with spelling for fifth place.

Richardson and Carruthy speculated about "personal hygiene" breaking up the three. "We thought when we heard educators refer to their students as 'dirty little kids' they were using the expression as a term of endearment or were making attempts at humor," the two said.

Richardson and Carruthy based on a survey of 200 randomly selected principals and superintendents in the Lone Star State. "If your budget were drastically reduced and you were told to teach only the basics, what courses would you teach?"

In the survey, the principals and superintendents were asked: "If your budget were drastically reduced and you were told to teach only the basics, what courses would you teach?"

Continuing the bottom 10: analysis was 46; golf and rhythm games, 45; printing, 44; spelling, 43; plumbing, 42; sex education, 41.

Music teachers meet

TWIN FALLS — A program on the violin teaching method Suzuki will be given at a meeting of the Magic Valley Music Teachers Association Dec. 8 at 9:45 a.m. at the First Methodist Church Fireside Lounge on Shoshone St. E. in Twin Falls.

A great violinist and teacher, Suzuki carried his interest and sympathy for children into the post-war Japanese environment, and because of the ability displayed by young children to assimilate the mother-tongue he believed he could enrich their lives through music.

Also stressed in the program will be the recognition of family responsibility towards the success of the student. Thousands of children from the world over have gained confidence in themselves through their music ability using the Suzuki method, and have experienced a variety of emotions which increase their potential for feelings and actions.

Mrs. Phillip Gerrish, chairman of the February clinic-master class, is asking all members to confirm the number of their students participating.

YFCA begins Christmas basket drive

TWIN FALLS — The Magic Valley YFCA Annual Christmas Basket program is under way.

Anyone interested in taking care of needy families should contact Chuck Upton at the YFCA. One hundred and fifty names are being sought by the end of Monday, Dec. 11, and volunteer workers are needed.

Upton stated in the past half year names have been taken by groups and the "Y" furnished baskets for the remaining half. More individual donors are desired for this year.

Those that have names of needy families would call the YFCA and give the family's name, address, phone and the names and ages of the children. If any names were returned in by Monday, Dec. 11, no presents can select from the Salvation Army's Toy and Food Drive. The baskets can be picked up and delivered by Dec. 21 and 22. Please call for further information, please call the YFCA at 733-4381.

Production up for Jerome County farmers

By KEN HODGE
Times-News Writer

JEROME — Jerome County farmers were more productive in 1978 than in 1977 and prices for farm commodities were generally higher than for the previous year. According to a report released by Jerome County Agent Jesse Wilson, Jerome farmers planted more acres of winter and spring wheat and got better yields this year than they did last year.

Growers in the county planted 6,940 acres of winter wheat last spring compared to only 5,240 acres in 1977, according to Wilson's report. Winter wheat yields, at 85 bushels per acre, were up from 80 bushels per acre a year ago.

Jerome farmers planted 18,100 acres of spring wheat this year and harvested an average of 90 bushels per acre compared to only 15,050 acres in 1977 for an average yield of only 80 bushels per acre.

At a national average per capita consumption of wheat in the United States of 107 pounds of flour per year, farmers in Jerome County produced enough wheat, at 2.28 bushels per 100 pounds of flour, to feed 837,861 people for one year, according to Wilson's estimates.

The 7,000 acres of barley planted in Jerome County this year yielded an average of 80 bushels per acre, up over an average yield of 65 bushels per acre on plantings of 6,800 acres in 1977.

Local growers planted more malting barley this year than last, according to Wilson's figures. Total malting barley acreage was 1,375 acres this year compared to only 1,000 acres last year. And yields were up considerably at 100 bushels per acre compared to only 80 bushels per acre last year.

Mixed grain plantings in the county remained fairly constant this year at 14,800 acres compared to 14,800 acres in 1977. Mixed grain yields, however, were up to an average 90 bushels per acre compared to only 75 bushels per acre average last year.

Jerome farmers planted more sugar beets in 1978 and realized higher yields than they did in 1977. They sowed 5,181 acres of beets last spring compared to only 2,400 acres a year ago. Each acre of beets yielded an average of 21 tons at harvest compared to only 17 tons per acre a year ago.

Bean growers in the county planted considerably more contract and commercial beans in 1978 than they did in 1977, and got as good or better yields. For 28,500 acres of commercial beans farmers harvested an average of 17 hundred-pound sacks per acre. Those figures compare with only 28,600 acres of commercial beans in 1977 which yielded only 16 sacks per acre. Growers planted 17,075 acres of contract beans this year compared to only 6,600 acres in 1977. Their yields, however, remained constant at 16 sacks per acre.

Jerome County spud growers planted fewer acres of potatoes in 1978 than in 1977, but got significantly better average yields, according to Wilson. They seeded only 11,520 acres of tubers this year opposed to 15,000 acres a year ago. Their fields, however, yielded an average of 330 hundred-pound sacks of spuds per acre this year compared to only 265 sacks last year.

Pea production was up markedly in the county. Farmers seeded 3,000 more acres this year than they did last year and reaped about 30 hundredweight per acre compared to only 12 hundredweight per acre a year ago.

Jerome growers planted more acres of corn silage this year than last, but harvested slightly reduced yields, according to Wilson. They planted 5,300 acres of corn for silage this year compared to only 3,500 acres last year. Their yields, however, averaged 18 tons per acre, down slightly from 19 tons last year.

And in grain corn, Jerome growers planted more this year than last but reaped fewer bushels per acre. They planted 11,800 acres of grain corn this year compared to only 6,800 acres last year. Their average yields were 85 bushels per acre this year compared to 85 bushels per acre last year.

Growers in the county harvested about the same hay crop this year as last with similar yields per acre. They planted 38,250 acres of alfalfa hay this year, up slightly from 37,864 acres last year. Their yields averaged 5.5 tons per acre both years.

Alfalfa seed acreage, too, was up in Jerome County this year compared to last year, according to Wilson. Farmers in the county planted 2,400 acres of it this year compared to only 1,300 acres last year. Average yields both years were 650 pounds of seed per acre.

Farmers in the county planted fewer acres of clover seed this year compared to last year, Wilson's report showed. They seeded only 200,000 lbs of clover seed this year, down from about 400 acres last year. Yields remained constant at 400 pounds of clover seed per acre.

Due to better farm commodity prices, according to Wilson's estimates, the cash value of Jerome County's harvest this year was up about $10 million over last year.

At average 1978 prices, Jerome farmers could have earned about $57 million this year for their commodities, compared to only about $47 million last year.

Make-up artist, Donald Mulderick, demonstrates his technique at the Blue Lakes Inn

Chambre Cosmetics Glamorizing the Hollywood stars

By BONNIE BAIRD JONES
Times-News Writer

TWIN FALLS — Donald Mulderick, a free lance Hollywood make-up artist began his career working with "characters" in horror films, but he much prefers working with glamorous Hollywood stars such as Zsa Zsa Gabor.

Many other young men would envy his daily routine that involves the close contact he has with leading ladies. Mulderick has worked with Miss Gabor many times and she is one of his favorites.

"It is much more interesting to make someone beautiful than to work on character make-up. Miss Gabor has a lot of natural beauty. She is basically a beautiful woman and does a lot of her own make-up and is easy to please," he says.

Mulderick is currently taking several months away from his profession to serve as director for Chambre Cosmetics and is in Twin Falls to work with local Chamber representatives.

A clinic and demonstrations for these representatives was held Friday at the Blue Lakes Inn.

Mulderick says there is very little difference between use of make-up to glamorize the Hollywood stars and make-up to help a housewife or career girl look her best for a holiday party or a business meeting.

"Usually the make-up for the camera will be a little more severe, but the same contouring, lining and eye shadowing that glamorize a star will make the off-camera lady more beautiful if properly applied," he said.

The make-up artist says the most important factor in any woman's appearance and make-up is good skin care.

"You have to have a clean skin but I don't recommend soap and water. Soap dries out the skin. You have to use a cleanser which will clean but retain moisture," he said.

Mulderick said there are lots of tricks to help an aging star look younger, and these tricks can be used by the average woman. He said use of makeup to contour the cheeks and other areas of the face, eye shadows that soften the area around the eyes and lifts around the eyes to make them look the way they did a few years ago can help hide the signs of aging.

The make-up artist says his profession is competitive, especially for the free lance who must rely on producers or stars who like his work and request his services.

"Only recently has the union of make-up artists permitted women in the profession. Personally, I like it. I think they have a natural talent for the work and can lend a lot to the business."

"For a long time the men in the profession did not want women. They contended women are blase and would try to make everyone up to look like themselves," he explains.

"Mulderick said most stars are not shy about saying they do not like the make-up if they feel it is not flattering.

"It is a difficult job because you have to be pleased with your own work, and also try to please the director, cameraman and of course the star," he said.

Mulderick says the make-up artist has an opportunity to become well acquainted with the stars and other actors when working on a motion picture.

Council to vote on LID

TWIN FALLS — The controversial Local Improvement District 90 which would give new streets, sidewalks, curbs, gutters and sewers to many residential areas of Twin Falls is scheduled for a vote at tonight's city council session.

The proposed improvement has stimulated a recall move against Mayor Leon Smith and strong opposition from many taxpayers who will have to pay for a share of the costs. Property owners say the costs are excessive and say they cannot afford them.

Two weeks ago the council delayed the crucial vote because one council member, Henry Woodall, wasn't present.

Cost of the present district proposal is $1.8 million which will be assessed against the property and paid for over a period of 20 years.

Other items on the 7:30 p.m. meeting in the city hall include an annexation ordinance, appointment of planning and zoning board members, and a decision on a proposed adjustment in the city budget.

Citizen delegations are expected to attend the meeting to hear discussions on the LID and the proposed budget cutbacks.

City officials have voted a cut of 8.6 per cent in the budget in preparation for the 1 percent tax bill. Council members are expected to meet with two council members absent voted three to two to make the cuts.

Jerome County

Glenda Mogensen plans changes in clerk's office

JEROME — The end of a one-person, one-job practice takes place in the Jerome County clerk's office Jan. 8.

Glenda Mogensen, a 28-year-old, first-time political candidate, takes over from veteran Republican Virginia Ricketts that day. Mrs. Ricketts was defeated by Mrs. Mogensen in the Nov. 7 election.

Mrs. Mogensen plans to herald her first days in office by keeping a campaign promise of seeing that the public gets walked on immediately at the clerk's office.

All office employees will be expected to assist anyone coming into the office, she said. Currently, one person is assigned that duty and if he or she is gone, the other employees are prevented from helping people, the clerk-elect said.

Other changes on the horizon will be to begin cross-training the 10 clerk, auditor and recorder office workers so they can help in other areas, Mrs. Mogensen said.

During the campaign, she was critical of Mrs. Ricketts' practice of having her staff members assigned to do a single task.

Mrs. Mogensen said in assigning people to learn other tasks she will first talk with the employees to ascertain what other work they are interested in doing.

Glenda Mogensen

Also, she said, if, after evaluating the workload she feels there are too many people for the tasks, she may cut back on the part-time help.

"There's a lot of things to check into before I make a decision," she said.

After attending a two-day conference in Boise for newly-elected officials Dec. 7 and 8, Mrs. Mogensen said she and her husband, Robert, will take a brief vacation before she begins a two-week scrutiny of other county clerks' offices in the Magic Valley.

Besides reviewing office operations, Mrs. Mogensen said she would evaluate office equipment to determine whether new equipment would save the county "a little money in the long run."

The office operations to be reviewed include the filing system and methods of recording documents. Mrs. Mogensen said she wants to see how Jerome County's system can be speeded up.

She said Gooding County's recording setup is faster than Jerome's. She noted she will compare Jerome's document recording methods to the Twin Falls County system as well.

Criticizing Jerome County's filing systems, which she also plans to overhaul, Mrs. Mogensen commented, "You can't find anything over there."

Is it goodbye time for TV's advertising heroes?

By LONNIE ROSENWALD
Times-News Writer

TWIN FALLS — It may be time to say goodbye to the Trix rabbit, Ronald McDonald and other advertising heroes.

These and other stars won't remain on the set long, if a group of Boston parents has its way.

The group, Action for Children's Television (ACT), has been fighting a war against children's TV programs for nearly a decade and is now asking the federal government to ban all advertising during children's TV shows.

On Monday ACT asked the Federal Trade Commission to ban all commercials on programs watched by kids.

ACT made the request to the Federal Trade Commission, which finished taking comments on its study of children's TV advertising Monday.

The agency is considering bans and limits on ads shown during children's TV programs, especially advertising for foods with high sugar contents.

ACT, founded in 1969, was the primary force in getting both the FTC and the Federal Communications Commission to study the content and influence of ads directed to young TV audiences.

The group's successes to date include elimination of kids' vitamin ads and ending product selling by kids' show hosts.

The request for a complete ban is the most extreme position ACT has taken and is bound to outrage broadcasters and advertisers who say they can't afford not to sell on TV.

In a report mailed to the FTC Monday night, ACT asked that no ads be shown during shows for which 40 percent or more of the audience is between the ages of 2 and 11.

The group also presented studies measuring the effect of ads on children's food preferences and the "nutritional" message of ads. One ACT study concluded ads for "junk food" are not counter-balanced strongly enough by nutritional or "negative" parental messages.

A second study reports the foods being advertised contradict the U.S. Senate's dietary goals for the country.

Peggy Charren, founder of ACT and mother of two, called a complete ban "the ideal." But "until that goal is realized, she hopes the FTC will take some half-way measures to modify child-directed ads.

Some of the measures she has recommended to the FTC are to cut the number of commercial minutes in children's shows from nine-and-a-half to six and to do away with ads "most likely to cause a health hazard."

Charren targets candy but ads as the most health offenders.

She also wants the FTC to ban "misleading" toy ads which promise more than they deliver. For example, she says she doesn't like an ad for the "Charlie's Angels" doll which shows fully clothed, along with two other "Angels." Charren says the actual doll isn't sold with any of these extras.

A final recommendation is to stop advertising directed at pre-school age children. ACT has already had impressive success in modifying the world of children-directed ads.

Highway

Police arrest Buhl resident

BUHL — A Buhl-area resident was arrested Saturday night west of here following a brief chase involving speeds up to 135 mph, the Idaho State Police said Sunday.

The ISP identified the driver of the car as Norman Merrill Eckert, 29, who was arrested by Patrolman Martin Cox about 11 p.m. on charges of reckless driving and avoiding a police officer.

Cox said the chase began when he clocked a vehicle on radar going the opposite direction down Banbury Grade on U.S. 30, 12 miles west of Buhl.

speeding vehicle, which hit speeds in excess of 100 mph, and pushed his ISP car to 135 mph in trying to catch it. He said at the bottom of the grade the vehicle turned west onto a paved road, Single Waters Highway, for three miles before taking the right fork of a dirt road with its lights off.

The patrolman said he didn't have the fleeing car in sight when the lights were turned off, but he luckily followed the correct fork in the road and soon caught up with the darkened vehicle.

Eckert was released from Twin Falls County jail on his own recognizance early Sunday morning.

Frank Hammersley holds up lava rock in Black Butte pit north of Shoshone

Prison stabbing still a mystery in Boise

BOISE (UPI) — Dewey Napier, stabbed with a steak knife in the chest, shoulder and groin Friday night in his Idaho State Prison cell shared by convicted murderer Thomas Creech, has declined to explain why he was injured.

"Creech was really, really spaced out," said Dermitt, referring to the immediate aftermath of the incident. "It took us a long time to calm him down. He was still very, very emotional. He's a violent person when he gets upset. He's proved that."

Napier, 22, was in good condition at the prison hospital Sunday. After the stabbing, he received emergency treatment at St. Alphonsus Hospital in Boise. He is serving a 15-year sentence for crimes against nature.

Dermitt said prison authorities do not know how the steak knife got into the cell. He said the knife was not a type used in the prison mess hall and must have been smuggled in from outside prison walls.

Napier, 22, was sentenced to death in March 1976 after he was convicted by a Shoshone County Jury of shooting to death two itinerants near Donnelly in 1974.

Creech claimed at his trial he had killed 42 persons during a spree ranging from his hometown in Ohio to the West Coast, but he denied he killed the two drifters.

He was on death row until last year when the Idaho Supreme Court ruled the state's 1973 statute making the death penalty mandatory upon conviction for first-degree murder unconstitutional. Now Creech is serving a life sentence.

Oregon dealer files mining claims

SHOSHONE — A Bend, Ore., commercial stone dealer has filed mining claims with the Bureau of Land Management on the Black Butte community lava rock pit north of here.

James Robinson and Roger Probst, owners of Distinctive Lava Stone, Inc., of Bend, Ore., filed the claims earlier this fall in an effort to gain exclusive rights to the pit.

Extensively covered with platey lava flows, the butte is popular among small jobbers, homebuilders and do-it-yourselfers. The rock is easily broken into thin squares one foot or more and are ideal for use as facing stone on fireplaces and outside walls.

Lava rock from the community pit has been used throughout southern Idaho.

The BLM now issues permits for gathering the rock to both individuals and commercial stone dealers for $3 a ton.

If the mining claims are found to be valid, only Distinctive Lava Stone would have rights to take lava rock from the 840-acre area.

BLM District Manager Chuck Hazier said the community pit was opened in 1973 in an effort to keep people from taking the decorative rock from other areas administered by the BLM.

Only about 30 tons of the rock were taken from the pit in 1973 but last year, the total was over 2,000 tons, Hazier said.

Hazier noted that there are several places in the lava flows north of Shoshone where the decorative lava rock can be obtained but most of those areas are inaccessible.

"The nice thing about this pit is its closeness to the road, but it's on the west side of the Butte and not visible from the highway."

Before the mining claims can be granted to the two Oregon men, Hazier said the BLM must check the validity of the mining claims.

The validity of a claim is determined by the demand for the mineral within that claim and the value of whatever may be mined.

As far as determining what the market is for the rock, Hazier said Distinctive Lava Stone has sold rock from the pit in Washington, Oregon, and in the Magic Valley.

"We would prefer it to remain a community pit but we'd like to see both (commercial enterprises and individuals) in there," he said.

Any citizen may file a mining claim on federal land, according to the 1892 Federal Mining Act. If there is a conflict among claims, the BLM or other agency responsible for the land to determine their validity. Usually, claims are not examined unless conflicts or other issues arise.

Exempted from this process are public lands specifically excluded from mining claims.

Hazier said it will take several months to process the claims and determine the validity. He said public comments about the proposed claims may also have an effect on any BLM decision.

The lava rock area is located 12 miles north of Shoshone and two miles west of State Highway 75.

The pit is usually open during the spring, summer and fall months and is closed when the roads become wet and muddy. Permits to obtain the lava rock are available through the BLM office in Shoshone.

Runaways up prostitution

DENVER (UPI) — A steady flow of runaway girls has more than doubled arrests for juvenile prostitution in the past two years, a police spokesman said, and authorities are almost powerless to combat the crime.

Detective John Seckman said 76 girls were arrested in the city this year between January and October, compared to 33 during all of 1976. He said 51 percent of the girls arrested this year were 17 years old, 24 percent were 16 and 17 percent were 15.

"We've pretty much eliminated the old established, hardcore prostitute," he said. "What we're dealing with now are younger, more transient girls, many of whom work a circuit of Western cities."

Favorite television heroes may disappear from ads

After a five-year battle, the group succeeded in obtaining an FCC ban on kids' vitamin ads in 1976. In response to ACT pressure, the National Association of Broadcasters voluntarily cut ad time from 16 to 9½ minutes in 1974.

Charren said one of the group's latest ads is advertising "personality pills," like Ronald McDonald.

"Many of the children remember the character more than any part of the product itself," Charren said.

She said ads "created figures inside the commercials themselves who are heroes to the children."

Television isn't living up to its promise, she said in an interview Tuesday.

"It could be a window on the world, and sometimes it is," she added. But more often Charren says it's used as a baby-sitter by busy parents who see it as "a better solution than the streets."

She argues the first step to reshaping TV into a "creative" medium is to turn it away from its role as a sales medium.

She says broadcasters have to stop seeing the youth audience "as something to be sold" and start seeing it as "something to be served."

Recorded voices may help in women police dismissals

BOISE (UPI) — Chief U.S. District Judge Ray McNichols will listen to recorded voices of seven fired female Boise police employees to aid his decision in litigation brought by six of them against the Police Department.

The recordings, made while the women spoke a police dispatch phone set aside for non-official use, were used in an investigation into complaints of lesbian activity in the department.

The investigation led to the firing in early 1977 of the seven women.

McNichols will hear the tapes during two days early next year, the Idaho statesman reported in a copyright story.

The firings triggered a controversy over public employees' rights to keep their jobs regardless of alleged unorthodox sexual preferences and of the right of police to say who may hold law enforcement jobs.

In lawsuits totaling $16.5 million filed 19 months ago against the city and Mountain Bell Telephone Co., the six women charged their due process rights were violated in the firings. They also charged invasion of privacy and wiretap law violations regarding the recordings.

McNichols last week awarded a partial summary judgement to the six plaintiffs, calling their dismissals "an abysmal operation. I'm strongly of the view that they were denied due process in their being discharged."

But the judge did not order the women reinstated. Instead he told attorneys for both sides to submit briefs by Dec. 11 detailing what damages he should award and which defendants should pay.

Plaintiffs in the case are Judith Baker, a former dispatch supervisor; Lavonne Woody and Vardell Larsen, dispatchers; officers Mary Morris and Janine Townsend, and animal warden Theresa Silva.

The women brought civil suits against Mayor Dick Eardley, Police Chief John Church, Sgt. Frank Richardson, City Council members, and Mountain Bell.

Church objected to the judge's finding, saying the ruling impinges on his right to run his department as he sees fit.

PTA leader seeks to stop shutters

DES MOINES, Iowa (UPI) — The president of an elementary school PTA wants to close an "adult photo shop" which has opened near the school.

Victoria Edwards, owner of the shop, said his business develops and prints color film and makes up portfolios for dancers. He said 99 percent of the dancers are clothed.

Victoria Campbell, PTA president of the Oak Park School, said such a business should not be allowed to operate in a residential area "especially where young people live."

Edwards said he had planned to move to Arizona, but he will fight the effort to close his business. One of his tactics was to paint his windows black.

Hansen citizens to talk about progress of town

HANSEN — The problems and progress of Hansen will be discussed during a community potluck dinner Tuesday night at Hansen High School.

The Hansen Progress Committee, an ad hoc group of citizens working with the Hansen City Council, will give a short program on the community's problems and progress.

The dinner begins in the high school cafeteria at 7 p.m. and the public is invited to attend. They are asked to bring table service and a covered dish. Punch and coffee will be provided.

More information on the dinner can be obtained by contacting Hansen City Hall.

Two Utah killers may be shot this week

SALT LAKE CITY (UPI) — Torture rappers Dale S. Pierce and William A. Andrews face a firing squad at Point-of-the-Mountain, this week unless their attorneys can win a stay of execution Monday from the Utah Supreme Court.

Pierce, 25, and Andrews, 24, will be tied to chairs inside the state prison Thursday morning and shot through their hearts in simultaneous executions if the delaying tactics fail.

Attorneys for the pair, convicted of a triple murder at an Ogden Hi-Fi shop in April, 1974, were scheduled to go before the high court at 2 p.m. If they fail to stop the executions, they may go to the U.S. District Court, seeking stays to delay rifle shots long enough for the convicted killers to seek writs of habeas corpus.

Overturning the death sentences, Attorney General Robert Hansen has filed a brief with the state Supreme Court arguing that all issues in the cases have either been settled or should have been raised earlier by defense lawyers.

One argument attorneys for the pair plan to make is that the former U.S. Air Force enlisted men, who were stationed at Ogden's Hill Air Force Base at the time of the murders, were sentenced to die because they are black and their victims were prominent whites.

Pierce and Andrews could ask Gov. Scott Matheson to stay their executions to give them time to ask the Utah Board of Pardons to cancel their death sentences. The governor has said on several occasions he favors capital punishment only in certain cases, but that he favors it for Pierce and Andrews.

Pierce, a native of Trinidad, W.I., and a former resident of Brooklyn, N.Y.; and Andrews, former Dallas, Texas, resident who was born in Jonesboro, La., were convicted of killing Michelle Ansley, Stanley Walker, 20; and Carol Naisbett, 52, while robbing the shop.

Two other people survived attempts on their lives during a robbery by Pierce and Andrews.

All five victims were forced to drink caustic drain cleaner, subjected to tortures and shot in the head. Ansley was raped.

"I'm not really all that happy with the way it's been carried out but I am happy with the sentence," said Courtney Naisbett, who survived the attack which took the life of his mother.

"It's just that our justice system allows so many appeals and so much time can go by that everybody forgets about it," he said.

"I'm still recovering. I hope I will fully recover someday. I don't know. I don't remember it. I've wiped it from my mind," said the 21-year-old college student.

Brent Richardson, owner of the Hi-Fi shop, said he hopes the executions crank calls their lives.

"Whenever there's a story in the paper about Pierce and Andrews, I get phone calls from people threatening my life," he said.

"There are weirdos out there and they're all ready to jump all over somebody for things like this. I don't understand. Who are they? I have no idea.

"The day Pierce and Andrews were sentenced, I got a call from somebody with a gruff voice who said, 'I'm going to come p and kill you bastards'."

"I've had about 15 calls like that lately. If they die, I think the harassment will end. I hope. I think I will feel that the justice system has been carried out. I guess I hope they die," Richardson said.

Ogden Mayor Stephen A. Dirks said the Hi-Fi killings continue to spark hot tempers and emotional outbursts, despite efforts by city officials to blunt its impact on race relations and the community's relationship with Hill Air Force Base.

"If the executions take place there will be an essence of relief in the community," Dirks said. "You see, from the first there was a universal hope that the death-penalty would be imposed and carried out."

Utah's Third District Court, last week refused to stay the executions, and dismissed Pierce and Andrews' requests for writs of habeas corpus.

Judge James Sawaya said he agreed with Hansen's contention that the arguments for the pair presented no arguments that had not been decided or could have been raised earlier.

Defense lawyers for the pair then got a stay from Utah Supreme Court Justice Richard Mangan. But that stay was quickly vacated, and Chief Justice A.H. Elliott, who expressed anger over the fact that it was issued, scheduled Monday's hearing.

Pierce and Andrews have already filed in one series of appeals that ended earlier this year with the U.S. Supreme Court's refusal to review their convictions and sentences. That ruling, in effect, upheld the constitutionality of Utah's death penalty.

Gary Gilmore, who was shot to death by a firing squad at the Utah State Prison two years ago, was the first person executed in the United States since 1967.

But Gilmore, who wanted to die, did not appeal his death sentence, and was put to death without a ruling from the U.S. Supreme Court on the constitutionality of the state's capital punishment statute.

Synanon leader arraigned in secret Arizona court

KINGMAN, Ariz. (UPI) — Synanon founder, Charles Dederich was arraigned behind locked doors in a hospital room Sunday in connection with a rattlesnake attack on an attorney and his lawyers refused to waive his extradition to California to face trial on attempted-murder charges.

Dederich, 66, lay with eyes closed and did not speak during the 25-minute hearing in Mohave General Hospital. The judge said he did not know whether the suspect was conscious or not.

Bail of $500,000 was set by Justice of the Peace Everett G. Millam who ordered an extradition hearing for Jan. 2 either in Kingman or Lake Havasu City, Ariz., depending on Dederich's health.

No newsmen or members of the public were allowed into the floor room. A uniformed officer and several plainclothes sheriff's deputies patrolled the corridor.

Dederich did not enter a plea but his attorneys opposed extradition. They argued that the founder of the drug and rehabilitation center in California should have bail set at a lower figure or be released on his own recognizance.

Dederich is charged with conspiracy to commit murder and solicitation to commit murder in connection with the near-fatal attack on Los Angeles attorney Paul Morantz who had won a $500,000 court judgment against Synanon.

Morantz was bitten on the left hand Oct. 10 by a 4-1/2 foot rattlesnake which had been placed in the mailbox of his Pacific Palisades home. The snake's warning rattle had been removed.

Two Synanon members — Lance Kenton, 20, son of band leader Stan Kenton, and Joseph Musico, 28 — have been arrested in connection with that attack.

Dederich was arrested at an apartment in Lake Havasu City Sunday and taken 62 miles in an ambulance to the Kingman hospital. A spokesman for the Los Angeles district attorney's office said Dederich was "stone drunk" when arrested.

Prior to Sunday morning's hearing, Dederich was examined by his physician, Dr. David Swartz, and also by Dr. M. B. Rouland, staff psychiatrist at Mohave General Hospital.

Rouland told reporters before the hearing that he believed Dederich was mentally ill.

"His head isn't exactly screwed on correctly," Rouland said. "It comes and goes. I've seen him three times and it's been the same."

Rouland recommended that no journalists be admitted to the hearing and Dr. Milam concurred.

The decision to charge Dederich with involvement in the snake incident resulted, in part at least, from evidence heard on tape recordings seized 12 days ago at Synanon's Badger, Calif., retreat, 25 miles northeast of Visalia.

Al Albargate of the district attorney's office said that the tapes contained threats by Dederich against Morantz. One of Synanon's former members also quoted Dederich as having said:

"Why doesn't someone get Paul Morantz? We've trained the Imperial Marines. Why don't they do something such as get Morantz?"

The "Imperial Marines" was the name given to a group of Synanon members whose ranks allegedly included Kenton and Musico.

The organization reportedly has millions of dollars in real estate and assets. It was not known whether members might post the $500,000 bail.

Dederich was expected to remain in the hospital until doctors say he is able to leave and then he will be taken to the Mohave County Jail in Kingman. Later he may be taken to Lake Havasu City which is the nearest jurisdiction to the original arrest.

Resting in dark tank may relieve stress

DENVER (UPI) — A silent, pitch-dark tank of warm salt water is a refuge from tension for exasperated executives, harried housewives and overworked students.

Stress-ridden persons of all ages float on temperate water inside a playhouse-sized box that shuts out light, sound and most other physical stimuli. The normal float time is an hour.

"Some people fall asleep, others report work on problem solving," said tank entrepreneur Gay Higgins.

"Some say they don't remember ever thinking so clearly. Fantastic and wonderful are the words we hear most."

The tanks are an offshoot of Dr. John Lilly's work for the Pentagon during World War II on sensory deprivation and the early 1960s. Lilly expanded his findings on the effects of isolation at the National Institute for Mental Health.

Lilly currently is involved in dolphin-human communication and the tanks have become a business for others.

Independently owned and operated tank operations have opened throughout Colorado.

Arizona, Texas, Chicago, New Mexico and Indiana have one each.

Higgins has equipped a motor home with a tank and to visit 24 cities nationwide to start still more.

A tank is a four-foot-high, eight-foot long plastic-lined wooden box. The bottom 12 inches holds 220 gallons of water heated to the average body surface temperature of 93.5 degrees.

After each session, a special "seesaw" egg-om salts are dissolved in the water. The super-saturated solution is designed to make bodies buoyant. The water is constantly filtered to remove hair, body oil and skin. Floaters, undress and shower before entering the tank.

Lilly found humans are bombarded by more than 400 million sensory inputs each second. He created tanks on the theory that the brain functions more effectively when sensory stimuli are absent.

Wealthy admirers of Lilly built tanks in their homes, but exploration of the commercial possibilities is new.

Higgins said several firms offer individual units with philosophies ranging from religious to psychological.

"I'm not interested in selling an ideology," said Higgins. "I am interested in selling a service where the bottom line is relaxation."

He and three partners opened the Denver Tank Works in January as a storefront operation with six units and before-and-after float rooms to ease the transition back to the stimulus-filled world.

Clients pay $6 per hour. Higgins said he and his partners gross about $5,000 a month from about 20-25 floaters a day. Overhead ranges from $1,800 to $3,000, depending on advertising costs.

Higgins' firm and the Colorado Tank Works manufacture the units for $1,600 each, plus franchises.

He predicts floating will become widespread an antidote to stress as alcohol and drugs.

"Stress is the single biggest problem in the U.S. It's the human version of a circuit overload. It's a mind state that originates from the original cause of the other health problems like heart attacks, drug dependence and alcoholism."

"People need other ways of dealing with stress, like getting away from the environment that produces it. That's what the tanks provide."

nearly stimulus-free environment," said Higgins.

The thought of spending an hour or more in a pitch black, soundless container of warm salt water is unappealing to some.

"They think they will freak out, but no one has yet. And almost everyone stays in for the full hour. They can get out at any time by lifting the door, so it is quite different from sensory deprivation, which is involuntary," he said.

Neurologically, a float slows brain activity by removing most of the physical stimuli and diminishing the processing load, he said. As a result, the brain concentrates on thoughts or relaxes as it will in sleep patterns.

"The more capable of relaxing you are, the deeper level of relaxation you reach. A one-hour experience seems to last only 10 or 15 minutes. Some people say the feeling of relaxation lasts several days," he said.

Higgins said doctors have told heart attack prone businessmen to float; drug counselors have encouraged addicts to use tanks during withdrawal; students troop in after a night of studying and psychiatrists use tanks to treat anxiety.

The most difficult hurdle for new tank businesses, Higgins added, is explaining tanks to agencies that issue permits.

"They tend to classify by what they know — saunas, therapeutic baths, massages. We are none of those. We originally were turned down for a plumbing permit because we didn't fit an existing classification," he said.

"It's a 66 vacation, available to everyone who wants to escape the stresses of their environment without driving to the mountains. Tanks are a nice whose time is now."

Boise escapees caught in cabin

BOISE (UPI) — Two of three men who escaped from the Ada County Jail Nov. 25 were found sleeping in a summer cabin near Idaho City early Saturday and returned to the facility's maximum security section.

Authorities said Matthew Matzka, 23, and Monte Brandt, 24, were apprehended without incident.

Boise County Sheriff Brian Jensen said the capture came after a telephone tip concerning what the caller identified as strange activity in the cabin, located a mile from Robey Creek, 10 miles south of Idaho City.

A third escapee, Lewis Segelson, 38, remained at large Sunday. He had eluded authorities when they sawed through a steel bar at the Ada County Jail and made their way into fields north and east of the building.

Brandt and Matzka were arraigned on an escape warrant Saturday morning in Idaho City before being returned to Boise. Magistrate Robert M. McConnell set bail at $100,000 for Brandt and $50,000 for Matzka.

Ada and Boise County deputies, who combined on the arrest, said they found a .38-caliber pistol and two rifles in the cabin. "They didn't want to talk about anything," said Jensen, referring to questions asked Matzka and Brandt about the whereabouts of Segelson.

All-star names banded in baseball rumors

ORLANDO, Fla. (UPI) — A number of All-Star names, such as Frank Tanana, John Stearns, Buddy Bell and Ken Griffey, were being tossed around in trade talks Sunday when the winter major league baseball meetings opened.

Before the meetings began it appeared the Cincinnati Reds and California Angels were close to completing a deal that would have sent Tanana, an 18game winner, to the Reds for Griffey, a lifetime .300 hitter. However, that trade may have been scrapped with the firing of Sparky Anderson as Reds' manager and the hiring of John McNamara to replace him.

McNamara was the Angels' third base coach last year and is well acquainted with Tanana's arm problems. The Angels' left-hander missed much of the last part of the past season with a sore arm and McNamara is not convinced Tanana's arm is sound.

The Angels have been dangling Tanana in hopes of landing a left-handed hitter, but California's needs could be solved by Sunday night if the team is successful in signing free agent Darrell Evans. It was reported that Evans, who hit 20 home runs for the San Francisco Giants this year, is close to agreeing to terms with the Angels.

Cleveland and Minnesota also are reportedly locked in discussions involving Bell, a third baseman, and Twins' outfielder Dan Ford. Bell has already resigned himself to the fact he will be traded at these meetings and Ford has expressed a desire to leave the Twins' organization.

The New York Mets, who have very few players of trade value, have received feelers from the San Diego Padres and Chicago Cubs about Stearns, one of the best catchers in the National League.

Stearns batted .264, drove in 73 runs and set a record for catchers with 23 stolen bases this season. The Mets have their eyes on Cubs' reliever Bruce Sutter and might be willing to swap Stearns for the sinkerball pitcher.

New York is also interested in Cubs' shortstop Ivan DeJesus and would be willing to give up its shortstop, Tim Lincecum, if a package deal could be put together.

Aside from the anticipated trades, one major item of business on the week's agenda will be a report by a 10-man committee on the feasibility of dividing both leagues into three divisions.

The committee, formed by an agreement of the National and American Leagues at the Aug. 16 major league summer meeting, is expected to make a proposal that a three-division setup be formulated.

Under the proposal the two leagues would be subdivided into three divisions according to geographical areas. The American League East would consist of Boston, New York, Baltimore, Detroit and Cleveland; the AL Central of Kansas City, Milwaukee, Minnesota, Chicago and Toronto and the AL West of Texas, California, Seattle and Oakland.

The NL East would include

Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Montreal and New York; the NL Central of Cincinnati, Chicago, St. Louis and Atlanta; and the NL West of Los Angeles, San Francisco, San Diego and Houston.

Economics — the saving of costs on travel — is the underlying reason for the proposal. However, if the proposal is adopted, it would mean a "wild card" team would qualify for the playoffs each year. To date baseball has been unique from all other professional sports because the playoffs consist only of teams that are division winners.

Denver smothers Oakland, assumes divisional lead

OAKLAND, Calif. (UPI) — Denver, aided by critical Oakland penalties, got two first-half touchdowns and then turned it over to an opportunistic defense in the second half Sunday night on route to a 21-6 triumph over the Raiders that gives the Broncos a one-game lead in the AFC West.

Linebacker Randy Gradisher broke the game open with 6:37 left when he scooped up a missed handoff between rookie quarterback David Humm and Mark van Eeghen and returned it 29 yards for the score that put the game out of reach.

Denver's first two scores came on a 2-yard plunge by Rob Lytle and a 14-yard pass from Craig Morton to Haven Moses.

The victory improved the Broncos' record to 9-5, one game better than Oakland and the surprising Seattle Seahawks.

Oakland's only points came in the second quarter on field goals of 27 and 37 yards by Errol Mann.

With Denver nursing a 14-6 lead, Gradisher picked up the Oakland fumble and broke away from Humm — who was on his third offensive play after replacing the injured Ken Stabler — and dashed into the end zone untouched.

The Broncos' defense, porous in the opening half, totally shut down the Oakland offense in the final 30 minutes, sacking Stabler four times for 50 yards in losses. On the final sack, Stabler was injured and replaced by Humm.

Denver's first TD capped a 69-yard drive, but 35 of those yards came on penalties assessed to the Raiders' defense. On the second drive, an illegal chuck penalty on a punt gave the Broncos a first down and kept alive a 72-yard drive, which finished with the Mortonio-Moses pass.

Denver had difficulty moving early in the game — running off only six plays in the first period — but managed to take a 7-6 halftime lead on the misdirection run by Lytle.

Oakland's first-quarter field goals were set up primarily through passes by Stabler, who completed 12-of-17 for 93 yards in the first half. However, he had two passes intercepted, including one at the Broncos' 12.

Umps threaten suit

PHILADELPHIA (UPI) — The lawyer for the Association of Major League Umpires said Sunday that the group may file suit against New York Yankees owner George Steinbrenner for remarks he made about umpires working the World Series.

Richard Phillips said he had notified Steinbrenner and both the National and American Leagues that the suit would be filed "absence the change of circumstance."

Phillips would not comment when asked if "change of circumstance" meant that the umpires wanted Steinbrenner to retract his statements.

He said Steinbrenner had "accused the American League umpires of cowardice in that they allowed the National League umpires to make all the important calls and close calls in inter-league competition."

Phillips said that Steinbrenner also accused National League umpires of always calling close plays for National League teams, "which was a direct attack on the integrity of National League umpires who have worked inter-league games."

He said he was trying to find out where Steinbrenner is a legal resident so that the suit could be filed in federal court in that city.

He said a decision will be announced early this week on whether to file the suit.

US ends 3-year golf drought

PRINCEVILLE, Hawaii (UPI) — PGA champion John Mahaffey and Open King Andy North drew away from the field without much of a struggle Sunday to return the World Cup team title back to the United States for the first time in three years.

After Canadians Dave Barr and Dan Hallidson faded, North and Mahaffey battled to the final hole before the PGA champion won the individual title as well to make it a clean sweep for the United States.

Mahaffey held a one-stroke lead over his partner going to the final hole and after North put his second shot into a lake fronting the final green, Mahaffey wound up the winner.

The 30-year-old Texan, who battled from injuries this year to win $157,000 and place 12th on the U.S. money list, started the final round the leader by a stroke over Barr and Spain's Antonio Garrido. The U.S. held a three-stroke lead over Canada before the final round and wound up with a 10-stroke victory over Australia. Canada finished in a third-place tie with England, another three shots back.

Mahaffey finished with a 72-hole score of 7-under-par 281 and North finished at 283. That gave the United States a team score of 12-under-par 564 with Australia at 574 and England and Canada 577.

Mahaffey, who didn't feel well in the final round, played steadily for a 71 which included two birdies and one bogey. North, bothered by a cold and allergy problem most of the week, felt better Sunday and shot a 70, which included five birdies and two bogeys.

Barr, whose play in the first two rounds helped Canada to a seven-stroke lead, skied to an 88 Sunday — the round including a double bogey-6 on the second hole, a triple bogey-7 on the seventh, and a double bogey-7 on the 18th. Hallidson had one double bogey, three bogeys and four birdies for a 73.

After England and Canada in the team race, came Scotland at 579, Spain, which won the last two World Cups, at 580, and the Philippines at 581.

Sukree Onsham of Thailand wound up in a tie for third in the individual race at 2-under 286 with Australia's Greg Norman, who had a final-round 72. His partner, Wayne Grady, had a final-round 71 for 288.

The victory was worth only $1,000 to Mahaffey, but it won him places in three rich events next year — the World Series, the Dunlop Masters and the Match Play championship.

"After the second round, we looked pretty dead," said Mahaffey. "But we got our act together in the final two rounds, and of course, we're happy we won the title."

North was as enthusiastic as his partner was as enthusiastic as his partner.

"There was a lot of pride at stake," said North, who was 14th on the 1978 money-winnings list. "If we had not won, people would have said we blew it. So we came here and did what we had to do."

In mixed tourney Hinkle-Bradley team wins

LARGO, Fla. (UPI) — Lon Hinkle and Pat Bradley squandered away a two-stroke lead in the final round before Hinkle sank an eight-foot birdie putt on the first hole of sudden death to win the $300,000 PGA-LPGA Mixed Team Championship Sunday.

Mike Hill and Vivian Brownlie birdied the final three holes of regulation play to force the playoff, with both teams completing the 72-holes at 21-under-par 367.

Strange and Lopez took home $16,000, while Barber and Palmer left with $14,000.

"I played a little conservative after we got back our two-stroke lead, but then there they came — birdie, birdie, birdie," Hinkle said.

Hinkle and Bradley had two bogeys and no birdies through the first 12 holes, finally getting birdies on 13, 14 and 16.

"The turning point of the whole day was on the 13th when Lon was 210 yards from the pole and hit a four-foot eight inches from the hole," Bradley said. "It could have gone in for a hole in one, it was on line."

Hinkle said Bradley hit a "super-drive" on the sudden death hole and followed with an equally good second shot to the green, leaving him the short putt.

"I just lagged a little soft one up, and it dropped in — thank you so much," he said.

Both said they know while they were standing on the 18th tee that Hill and Brownlie had tied the score.

"We knew it, we heard the roar," Bradley said.

Hill, who had to rush to catch a plane, missed the postmatch interview, but was 29-of-36 putt for a birdie on 16 and a 4-footer of 17, while Brownlee dropped in the tying birdie putt on 18 from 6 feet.

Bradley and Hinkle said they missed numerous opportunities early in the round for birdies, but had lost their putting touch. Both said they missed short putts early, then missed putts later by hitting too hard.

"I had putts of 10, 15 and 8 feet and didn't make a one," Bradley said. "I was pressing. I had been putting so good the rest of the week. It was such a scary thing. I must have been tense."

The playoff was the first for either Hill or Brownlee.

Bradley said she now is two and five in playoffs, while H. was the first in regulation play for Hinkle against one loss!

U.S. keeps tennis cup

MELBOURNE, Australia (UPI) — Billie Jean King and Chris Evert enabled the United States to retain the world women's team tennis championship Sunday when they defeated Australia's Wendy Turnbull and Kerry Reid, 4-6, 6-1, 6-4 in the decisive doubles match.

King, due to enter the hospital soon for another operation on her leg, now is slated in 26 consecutive five doubles matches in Federation Cup play.

Earlier in the day, Reid and Turnbull defeated Olga Morozova and Natalja Chmyreva of the Soviet Union to clinch Australia's berth in the final of the $130,000 Federation Cup, and the match against the U.S. began only two hours later.

It was the first time in the 16-year history of the event that a country has won the title three years in a row, and the victory was worth $40,000 to the U.S. Australia earned $30,000.

King jumped ahead in the final as Reid deflected California schoolgirl Tracy Austin, 6-3, 6-3, beating the 15-year-old for the third time without a loss. Turnbull then moved Australia to within one set of clinching the Cup before Evert rallied for a 3-6, 6-1, 6-1 victory to even the series.

In the doubles, King was the best player on the court. She served well, punched away her volleys and seemed to enjoy the many volley duels with all four players at the net.

It was fitting that King smashed home the winning point when she slammed down a tremendous service which held barely together racket to Austin as Reid dumped the shot.

King and Evert threw their arms around each other and the crowd, led by Prime Minister Malcolm Fraser, gave the Americans a standing ovation.

Australian Captain Neale Fraser, who had no excuses for his team.

"I'm very proud of them... We had our chances but the Americans made the most of theirs," Fraser said.

"Billie Jean was the key to the United States doubles team. She was so strong she still had plenty of tennis left in her."

Fraser said he did not know whether the fact his team had to play the Soviet Union earlier in the day had taken the edge off the Australian challenge.

"In some ways that hour we had this morning on the center court was a good warm-up for us," he said. "We gave it all we got, but that's the third time in a row we've lost to the United States in the final... It's a bad habit."

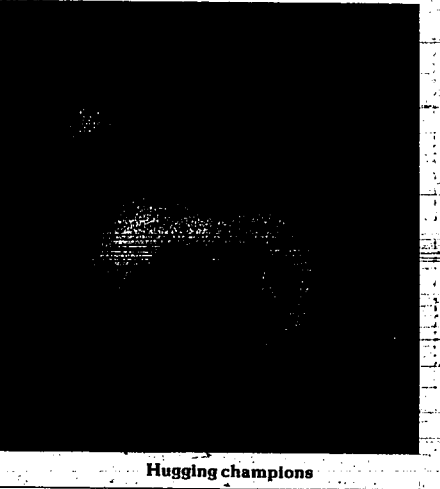

King led the U.S. team into the news conference carrying a can of beer in her hand. She said she was not upset at the partisan Australian gallery that cheered for the Aussies throughout the final.

Austin admitted she was upset by the crowd.

"I didn't like it at all but it did make me more determined to try and win," she said.

It was a tough Australian baptism for Austin, who returns to her school desk at Rolling Hill High in Rolling Hill, Calif., next week.

"You know it is sometimes much harder when you play for your country than it is when you are playing for yourself," Austin said.

Hugging champions

Miami blanks 'Skins

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Business-like Bob Griese turned in a typical day at the office Sunday, but it kept the Miami Dolphins from falling in what they felt was one of several sudden-death situations.

The Dolphins' quiet nononsense quarterback came back from a rare sub-par day he suffered a week ago to engineer a 16-0 triumph over the Washington Redskins.

"It certainly was sudden death for us, and it'll be sudden death again next week against Oakland," said

Miami Coach Don Shula. "We just can't afford to lose."

The Redskins could ill afford to lose either, but they did for the sixth time in their last eight games. The Redskins, 8-5, are battling four other teams for an NFC wild card playoff spot, while the Dolphins, 9-5, are fighting for a similar berth in the AFC.

Griese passed just enough to be effective and the Dolphins controlled the football and the game, handing the Redskins their first shutout in seven years.

"Bob means so much to our team," said Shula. "He knows exactly what we need to accomplish on the field and he works very hard to get those things done."

The Dolphin defense came up with four interceptions in posting its third shutout of the year. Washington, intent on establishing a ground attack it hasn't had in a month, ran the ball 10 times before passing and rushed 27 times in all to gain 123 yards.

Redskin John Riggins fumbles against Miami

Green wins Bay battle

TAMPA, Fla. (UPI) — The Green Bay Packers' defense stopped a crippled Tampa Bay offense when it counted Sunday, securing a 17-7 victory over the Buccaneers to remain in a tie with Minnesota in the NFC's Central Division.

"Our team's best, facing a lot of must-win situations," Packer Coach Bart Starr said. "They really have been tempered though the fire and they've held up well."

Tampa Bay wide receiver Morris Owens didn't argue.

"You can tell they're hungry — that they've got their foot in the door," Owens said. "They hit as hard as Los Angeles or anyone."

Tampa Bay was able to move the ball consistently, but every time the Bucs got close, the Packer defense stiffened and held. Tampa Bay rolled up 321 yards in total offense to only 173 for Green Bay and held a whopping 20-11 advantage in first downs.

"We got some extremely good play out of our team. I would especially salute the defensive unit, especially during the last quarter," Starr said.

The victory, coupled with Minnesota's 28-27 defeat of Philadelphia, Sunday, gives both teams 8-5 records. The Vikings still have an edge in the battle for the division title, however, because they have won and tied Green Bay in their two outings against the Packers.

"We're good enough to win the division — today was just a stepping stone," echoed Packer cornerback Willie Buchanan. "We knew we had to beat Tampa Bay, Chicago and Los Angeles. Now we've got two to go."

Ram planned intercept

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. (UPI) — Pat Thomas had an idea that Randy Dean, the New York Giants' seldom-used quarterback, was going to throw into the right flat again, just as he did twice before on his team's last possession.

This time, however, the Los Angeles cornerback stepped in front of rookie fullback Dan Doornink for an interception, then raced 33 yards for a touchdown that broke a 10-10 fourth quarter tie and sparked the Rams to a 20-17 victory.

The triumph clinched a record-tying sixth straight NFC Western Division title for the Rams and made them the first NFC team to qualify for the playoffs. The loss was the Giants' sixth straight and dropped them to 5-9.

"I had a feeling he was going to dump it off to the running back," Thomas said. "Defensive back field coach) Bud Carson called an excellent defensive play. The quarterback was pressured and didn't see me. There was no one close to me. I was rejecting all the way."

Thomas, a third-year veteran, said his first NFL touchdown was "one of the most crucial plays I've ever made. But if it wasn't me, it would have been someone else on the defense."

Thomas's TD with 5:21 left was the Rams' fourth interception of the game and first against Dean, who started the second half after Joe Pisarcik severely strained his left knee in the first.

The Ram defense came up with another big play on the next series. Dean hit Doornink with a short pass but the rookie fumbled and strong safety ddave Elmendorf returned it 39 yards to set up Frank Corral's clinching 35-yard field goal with 3:07 left.

Giant fans protest

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. (UPI) — Claiming they were acting "in memory of Giants teams of the past," a small group of irate New York Giants football fans Sunday burned some 100 tickets outside Giants Stadium prior to the start of the game with the Los Angeles Rams.

The protest, organized by Ron Freiman, a printer from Livingston, N.J., started last week with an ad in a New Jersey newspaper calling for Giants fans to send in their tickets as a message to owner Wellington Mara, that they were upset with his method of running the team.

"We've got a message to get across to Mr. Mara," said Freiman, a Giant fan for 22 years. "This stadium is beautiful. Everything here is professional, but the team." The protest, triggered by five consecutive New York losses following a promising start, operated under the slogan, "Had enough—then deposit your tickets and go home and watch a professional football game on television."

Other contributors to the burning called for Mara to "sell the team to George Steinbrenner (the New York Yankee owner). He'll make this team a winner."

The ticket burning, which took place at 12:45 p.m. est, drew much attention from local media, and Freiman said the ashes from the burnt tickets would be sent to Mara in a becan which he can "hang on his wall."

Viks rally past Eagles 28-27

BLOOMINGTON, Minn. (UPI) — The Minnesota Vikings, featuring the leg-mimic Ahmad Rashad-Fran Tarkenton act, staged a 28-27 comeback victory Sunday against the playoff hopeful Philadelphia Eagles.

Rashad, whose touchdown catch enabled a tie last week against Green Bay, grabbed Tarkenton's fourth TD pass of the long cold day to help the Vikings keep a grip on their share of first place in a tight Central Division race.

"On the touchdown," Rashad said, "I know that if I got the ball and fell backward, I could get into the end zone. It was really a body control situation. I had to catch the ball and try to jump through the defenders. It's a high percentage play because there is a chance I can get an interference call if I don't make the catch."

Tarkenton, who set an NFL single season completion record, proudly noted there were no "cheap shots" in the Vikings' four touchdowns.

"They were all long drives," he said. "There were no cheap shots involved. When you can get 28 points against a team with a defensive record like Philadelphia, you have to be pleased."

Viking Coach Bud Grant said the victory might be a "shot in the arm" for Minnesota, whose ailing offense had produced only two touchdowns in as many games.

"It was obvious that we were badly outplayed in the second quarter," Grant said. "Everybody had to make their own resolution to do better. They came harder and came tougher in the second half."

Bengals dent Falcons' hopes

CINCINNATI (UPI) — It was role reversal time for the Cincinnati Bengals and the Atlanta Falcons Sunday.

The Bengals did not play like a team that had lost 12 of its previous 13 games and the Falcons didn't look anything like a club trying to get into the playoffs.

"I don't understand how you lost the games you lost," Atlanta Coach Leeman Bennett told Bengals Coach Homer Rice on the field after the game. "The Bengals dominated the game so much that Rice found it difficult to name his stars."

"So much happened that I don't know to where to begin or who to single out," beamed Rice. "I had a feeling we were going to explode. Today is a good indication of what kind of team we have."

In a word, the kind of team the Bengals had Sunday was opportunistic.

Scott Perry and Dick Jauron intercepted passes and returned them

39 and 25 yards respectively, for touchdowns, while Pete Johnson turned a simple sweep off left end into a 50-yard TD gallop to trigger the Cincinnati outburst.

Jauron said he and Perry had the Cincinnati defensive line and linebackers to thank for their interceptions.

Seattle stays alive Seahawks outscore Cleveland

SEATTLE (UPI) — David Sims scored three touchdowns Sunday, helping Seattle to a 47-24 victory over Cleveland that kept the Seahawks' playoff hopes alive while ending the Browns' chances for postseason play.

Seattle jumped out to a 23-0 lead and was seemingly on their way to shut another touchdown when a fumble by Sims in the second period gave Cleveland a needed lift.

Sims, who took over the NFL touchdown lead with 14, apparently had made a first down on the Cleveland 5 when he fumbled and the Browns' Tom Darden recovered on the 9. A long pass from Brian Sipe to Reggie Rucker gained 50 yards, but Rucker's fumble gave the Seahawks the ball on their 19.

Seattle was unable to advance and a punt gave the Browns the ball on their 38. They scored three plays later on a 77-yard pass from Sipe to Dave Logan. Don Cockroft's 43-yard field goal made it 13-10 at the half.

Seattle scored on its first possession, capping a 67-yard drive when Sherman Smith scored from the 1-yard line. The Seahawks made it 14-0 when Sims ended a 77-yard drive with a 14-yard plunge over left tackle.

A 27-yard pass from Zor to Steve Largent made it 21-0 early in the second period and Seattle's other first-half points came on a safety — when the ball was snapped over Cleveland punter Johnny Evans' head. Evans picked it up and carried it out of the end zone.

Cleveland scored three touchdowns on runs of 19 and 9 yards. Efen Herrera booted a 38-yard field goal and Seattle rookie defensive back Keith Simpson intercepted Mark Miller's pass late in the fourth period and ran it back 40 yards for the final Seattle score.

Cleveland's second-half scores came on a 26-yard pass from Sipe to Greg Pruitt and a 57-yard pass from Sipe to Logan.

Pitt beats Oilers

HOUSTON (UPI) — Terry Bradshaw's 57-yard touchdown pass to John Stallworth and Rex Gervel's two field goals backed a Pittsburgh defensive effort that held Houston to 164 yards total offense Sunday in the Steelers' 13-3 AFC Central title clinching victory over Houston.

The victory left the Steelers' record at 12-2 with two games to go.

Eleven players on both teams, including the Oilers' record-setting running back, Earl Campbell, left the game with injuries. Campbell suffered bruised ribs late in the first quarter and did not return.

Houston only had one serious scoring opportunity and the arose when Oilers' middle guard Garley Culp recovered a Bradshaw fumble at the Steelers' 20 late in the second quarter. But Pittsburgh threw Houston back five yards and forced the Oilers to settle for a 37-yard field goal.

Frilisco's kick tied the score at 3-3 after Gervel had kicked a 23-yard field goal late in the first quarter.

Saints top 49ers

NEW ORLEANS (UPI) — Rookie receiver Wes Chandler, a disappointment much of the season, caught touchdown passes of 58 and 12 yards Sunday to lift the New Orleans Saints to a 24-13 victory over the San Francisco 49ers.

Chandler, the third selection in this year's NFL draft, caught six passes for 103 yards. The rookie from Tampa took a similar swing pass from Archie Manning in the second period and used his dazzling speed to practice 58 yards down the left sideline for a touchdown, giving the Saints a 17-3 lead.

The victory gave New Orleans a 6-8 record, the best in the club's 12-year history.

Chiefs nip Buffalo

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (UPI) — Mike Livingston left Walter White with a 3-yard touchdown pass on the final play of the third quarter Sunday to give Kansas City a 14-10 victory over the Buffalo Bills, the Chiefs' second straight triumph.

Eddie Payton set up the score with a 42-yard kickoff return following a 22-yard field goal by Tom Dempsey that put the Bills ahead 10-7.

The Chiefs made a 15-yard penalty against Buffalo for a late hit and a 14-yard pass from Livingston to Henry Marshall to set up the score, White's first touchdown of the season.

Dallas nabs crown

IRVING, Texas (UPI) — Two second-half touchdowns strikes by Roger Staubach — one on a trick play and a one-handed interception by defensive end Harvey Martin helped rally Dallas to a 17-10 triumph over New England Sunday, clinching the NFC Eastern title for the Cowboys.

It marks the 12th time in the past 13 years Dallas has qualified for the playoffs, but the Cowboys had to overcome a bland first half in which the Patriots had a chance to break open the game.

New England would have clinched a playoff spot of its own with a victory, but now the Patriots have only a one-game lead in the AFC East over the Miami Dolphins, a 16-0 winner Sunday over Washington.

Staubach completed 15-of-27 for 243 yards, setting a team record for most completions and most total passing yardage in a single season.

It was Staubach's 40-yard TD pass to Tony Hill with 1:56 left in the third period that drew Dallas even with New England.

Jets edge Colts

NEW YORK (UPI) — Wesley Walker caught touchdown passes of 48 and 39 yards to go over the 1,000-yard mark in receiving and the New York Jets kept their playoff hopes alive Sunday with a 24-16 victory over the Baltimore Colts.

Walker gave the Jets the lead for good in the second period with a spectacular 48-yard cross-field sprint one play after Baltimore had gone ahead — 10-7 — following two controversial calls. The second-year speedster from California then took a 38-yard TD pass from Matt Robinson in the third period to push New York to a 21-13 lead.

The victory was the eighth against six losses for the Jets and kept them in the race for an AFC wild card playoff berth. Baltimore fell to 5-9. The eight victories are the most for the Jets in one season since 1969.

Cards stop Detroit

ST. LOUIS (UPI) — Jim Hart threw a 53-yard touchdown pass to save St. Louis midway through the final quarter Sunday and to St. Louis defense recorded five interceptions — three by Terry Smith — and four quarterback sacks to lift the Cardinals to a 21-14 victory over the Detroit Lions.

After Detroit's Gary Danielson had fired two second-half TD passes in the game with 8:47 remaining, Hart scrambled to his left and lofted the scoring strike to St. Louis less than a minute later.

Danielson moved the Lions to the St. Louis 10 in the final minutes but Smith grabbed a Danielson toss in the end zone for his second interception of the game. Smith intercepted his third pass of the day with 1:22 remaining to blunt the Lions' final scoring threat.

The loss dropped Detroit to 3-9 and lifted St. Louis to the same record.

Rams surround pass attempt

USC defeats Hawaii

HONOLULU (UPI) — Junior tailback Charles White of Southern California rushed for one touchdown and broke the 4,000 yard career rushing mark for a USC running back as he led a sluggish Trojan team to a 21-5 win over the University of Hawaii Rainbows Saturday night in a season-ending game for both teams.

White rushed for 152 yards on 31 carries and scored on an 18-yard run in the first quarter. White's performance gave him a career record of 4,696 yards with one more game to go and another season ahead of him. White has 1,760 yards for the season.

The third ranked Trojans, coming off a big 27-20 win over Notre Dame the week before and bound for the rose bowl against Michigan, could not get on track for the first three quarters of the game.

Hawaii capitalized on a use fumble to take a 3-0 lead on a 37-yard field goal by Peter Kim.

Bears try San Diego for warm weather luck

SAN DIEGO (UPI) — The Chicago Bears are lining up their third win in a row, track the field midway for the warm climate of Southern California Monday night when they meet the San Diego Chargers, whose playoff hopes were dashed the previous week.

The Bears (5-8) and Chargers (6-7) clash in the nationally televised game on ABC-TV at 6 p.m. (9 p.m. east) before a sellout crowd of 62,596 at San Diego Stadium.

"The weather will be a factor in the game," said Bears Coach Neill Armstrong. "Maybe not so much in the game itself, but it has played a part in our preparation."

The Bears had been scheduled to arrive on the West Coast on Sunday, but they flew out a day earlier because of the snowstorm in the Midwest. The team's practice quarters Friday had been an airplane hangar in Chicago.

"We had a good two hour workout Saturday at a high school in San Diego," a team spokesman said.

"Bob Avellini will start at quarterback," he said. "We're coming in as injury free as we've been all season."

The Chargers announced, meantime, that veteran second string quarterback James Harris will probably start because of an ankle injury to Dan Fouts.

The disgruntled Bears are led by Walter Payton, with 1,158 yards, and fullback Roland Harper, with 222, who form the nucleus of the NFC's second ranked rushing offense. If Harper reaches 1,000 yards, the Bears will be the first team in the history of the NFL to have two running backs to break the barrier in a season.

The Chargers' rumbling attack is spearheaded by Lydell Mitchell and Don Woods, who have both rushed for 1,000 yards in previous seasons.

The Bears have appeared in Monday night games twice this season, losing to Minnesota 24-20 and to Denver 16-7.

It will be the first Monday night encounter of the season for the Chargers, whose playoff hopes were shattered when their four game winning streak was snapped by the Kansas City Chiefs 23-0 in their last contest.

Champ becomes edgy as title fight nears

PHILADELPHIA (UPI) — As he nears the end of preparation for the first defense of his WBA light-heavyweight crown against European champion Aldo Traversaro, Mike Rossman is getting more and more edgy.

But according to his trainer, Jim Robinson, that's not all of it. "The Robinson camp wants entering Tuesday night's title fight at the Spectrum."

"Mike has the best physical and mental attitude he's had since I've been with him," Robinson said. "Maybe it's the title, I think he wants to hold onto it for a while. If he wasn't getting edgy, I'd be worried."

The 22-year-old Rossman, who has 35 wins, 22 of them by knockouts, took the crown from Victor Galindez via a 13th round TKO Sept. 15 in New Orleans. But in the work he did in getting ready for the fight, Robinson said he's now working harder.

"He's training harder, pushing himself harder than he did before the Galindez fight," he said. "The challenge isn't over; it's just beginning. Every 175-pounder in the world is coming after him just as hard as he went after Galindez. Let down for a second and somebody will lift that crown off your head."

dummy's king became useless. South ruffed the third trump, laid down his ace of hearts and noted that West was unkind enough to fall to follow suit.

Oswald: "At this point South stopped to study. Things looked bad indeed but there was some hope. A drawing man grasps at straws and South found his straw. He led his three of hearts and finessed dummy's ten spot to produce an extra trick to distribute business."

Alan: "He led the ten of spades, left it in dummy's hand, returned to his jack, returned to dummy with the queen of hearts, led a diamond and finessed his king. West took his ace and led a heart. South won in dummy, repeated the diamond finesse. East's last trump, and claimed the balance."

Ask the Experts

Oswald Jacoby keeps getting asked: "How good a bridge player was President Eisenhower?"

He was a very good player. In fact, an exceptionally good player.

OUR BOARDING HOUSE with Major Hoopie

EAR CLAUDE FRANKNESS MAY BE OUR BEST OPTION! SIMPLY TELL ATTORNEY CRUMWELL THAT—ER, ANZONING REGULATIONS INHIBITED MY EFFORTS TO BOARD JOHN ALDEN! BUT AT GREAT PERSONAL EXPENSE I LOCATED A RELAX, MAJOR CRUMWELL IS HAPPIER THAN A HOCKEY PLAYER COMIN' IN ON A GOALIE WHO LOST A CONTACT LENS! HE SAID TURKEY WAS THE FATTEST TENDEREST ONE EVER EXCEPT FOR THE DRUMSTICKS!

WHAT DID HE DRINK WITH IT?
