

Jordan's new book: How to re-elect Carter

By TERENCE SMITH
N.Y. Times Service

WASHINGTON — A 40-to-50-page memorandum laying out the broad strategy and campaign organization for a 1980 re-election drive has been submitted to President Carter by Hamilton Jordan, his top political aide, White House officials confirmed Thursday.

The memorandum, which so far has been seen by only a handful of top administration officials, reportedly describes the major obstacles that would confront a Carter candidacy in 1980 and concludes that he could win a second term despite probable opposition from within his own party.

The document is the clearest indication to date of Carter's still undeclared intention to stand for re-election. He said at a recent news conference that he had made up his mind about a second term, but declined to disclose his decision.

His closest aides, however, are convinced that he will run and, in fact, have begun the "first" organizational preparations for a full-scale campaign. A "talent bank" of potential campaign workers around the country has been compiled at the Democratic National Committee, and preliminary plans are being made to file the names of a re-election committee with the Federal Election Commission.

Democratic officials are even casting about for a suitable name — "The 1980 Committee" is the current favorite — and for a likely chairman for the president's campaign organization. Evan S. Dobelle, currently treasurer of the Democratic National Committee, has been most frequently mentioned as a possible chairman.

Dobelle said in a telephone interview that he had heard rumors to that effect, but had not been approached by the president or Jordan. "Obviously I'd be delighted to do it," he added.

A committee to qualify for federal matching funds is expected to be established with the president's consent by April, and an actual campaign organization probably will be in place by the fall.

Carter is not expected to declare his candidacy before October or November, however. He has said repeatedly that he wants to avoid official candidate status as long as possible to minimize the political overtones of the decisions he makes as president.

As the campaign organization develops, a number of White House staffers are expected to resign their jobs and join the committee full-time. These could include Tim Kraft, assistant to the president for political affairs and patronage; Joel McCleary, Kraft's deputy; Landon Butler, who is Jordan's deputy; and, at a later date, perhaps Gerald Ralston, the president's media adviser who handled political advertising in the 1976 campaign.

The overall direction of the campaign is expected to be provided by Jordan, however.

The memorandum he submitted this week to the president is similar in scope and concept to the blueprint for a presidential campaign that he prepared for then Governor Carter of Georgia in November 1972. That document sketched the probable opposition within the party — Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, former Gov. George C. Wallace — and recommended ways for handling everything from the early primaries to relations with the national news media.

Recall leader has a new view

By JEFF SHER
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Jim Williamson's young but eventful political career as leader of the movement to recall Twin Falls Mayor Leon Smith has made him more sympathetic toward politicians.

"I think you're in a glass house," he described his view from the center of the political arena. "You have to be careful of everything you say. I can appreciate a lot of the problems of politicians."

The experience of the last few months has taught Williamson that the lack of communication between politicians and their constituents is a two-way street, and he now lays a fair share of the blame for that lack on the public.

"If there were more people taking an active part, there would probably be fewer headaches for the elected officials," he said.

Williamson has not lost his enthusiasm for the recall, but he speaks now from the viewpoint of one working within the system to achieve his goals.

Not too long ago Williamson was one of the vast majority of citizens who complain about their government but take part in the political system only when election time rolls around, and he is still slightly amazed that he finally became politically involved.

"I don't consider myself qualified at all to run for politics. There's a hell of a lot I don't know. I'm learning how much I don't know as far as government is concerned. I have people call me and ask me about issues I don't even know what they're talking about," he said.

But when it appeared that the city council intended to force a local improvement district on him and other homeowners, Williamson was drawn, and then leaped, into the role of leading a group of homeowners with no more experience than his own in a serious political campaign.

In September the council informed homeowners they would probably be saddled with an LID whether they wanted it or not.

"I went to that meeting at Robert Stuart Junior High School, and I heard so many people say somebody's got to do something about it all of a sudden I just got the idea, maybe I was the somebody," he said.

Overcoming his initial fears about getting involved wasn't easy. "It was a hell of a decision to make. You're told all your life you can't fight city hall," he said.

Since becoming involved, he has learned you can fight city hall. The Citizens FIRST committee's activities eventually convinced the city council to cut the LID back to a fraction of its initial scope and cost.

Williamson has also learned that in return for whatever power is gained through action, a price is paid, in loss of anonymity and privacy.

Williamson has not enjoyed the scrutiny and accusations to which he has exposed himself.

"A lot of people have called me up and accused me of ruining a good man's life and career," he said.

The 40-year-old mechanic also has been accused of holding a grudge against the city, because the city last summer rezoned his property and forced him to close the auto repair shop he had set up in his garage.

"I imagine people do think I have an ax to grind. I don't. In fact I've got a lot better facility now," he said. "I didn't have any confrontation with the mayor over that. I don't blame him."

He also has been accused of having no real interest in the community because his house is currently up for sale.

He pointed out that he has lived in the Twin Falls area all his life, except for a stint as a pilot in the army. His father, Robert Leslie (Les) Williamson, was mayor of Filer in the early 1950s.

Williamson acknowledged he is trying to sell his house, and he said if he is offered the right amount of money he will sell.

"It would be nice to move. I've lived here all my life. I'd like to get back into flying before I'm too damn old for it," he said.

"If I was anxious to jump and run, I'd grab the first offer," he said and added that he will be content to remain in Twin Falls until his two teen-agers finish high school.

Williamson said he is glad the recall campaign will soon be over, along with his turn on the political hot seat.

"I certainly am not looking for the mayor's seat. I enjoy my freedom and my privacy. I imagine his private life is pretty zip, like being a doctor," he said. Despite the drawbacks, he feels people like him should become involved in politics.

"I feel a city council would be better off if they had some ordinary, everyday, working men on there," he said.

"I think a lot of money is spent needlessly," he added, and noted (perhaps to prove how a working man, like a mechanic, could save the city money). "Some of the vehicles that the city replaces could be rebuilt at a fraction of the cost."

Is Jim Williamson the man to bring common sense to the city council?

"At this point in time, no. I wouldn't be interested in politics. If I was asked by enough people, I'd have to seriously consider it. If people elected me and put me in, maybe it would serve me right."

All protests banned in Iran

TEHRAN, Iran (UPI) — Military authorities Thursday banned all demonstrations and stepped up enforcement of martial law, warning violators would be shot.

The surprise clampdown followed the closure of all airports in Iran and a march by an estimated 50,000 demonstrators in support of the government of Premier Shapour Bakhtiar.

One youth accused of being an agent of the Shah's SAVAK secret police was reported choked to death by a mob near Tehran's technical university. Other pro-government demonstrators rampaged through the campus, center of opposition activity, tearing up classrooms and smashing furniture, witnesses reported.

A military communique asked Tehran residents to "desist from all kinds of demonstrations and do not allow foreign inspired elements to disrupt order, forcing the military authorities to enforce its legal obligations."

This was an indirect warning that demonstrators would be shot if they did not heed the warning to stay indoors.

After the communique was broadcast by the state-run radio and television, more groups of demonstrators raced through Tehran's dark streets, defying the curfew and shouting "Death to the Shah" and

"Death to Bakhtiar." The demonstrators were joined by others on rooftops who raised shouts of "Allah is great" in a replay of opposition protests which preceded the Shah's departure from Iran 10 days ago.

More trouble was expected today when demonstrations to protest the airport closure were scheduled despite the military ban.

Iran's religious leaders said they were negotiating with army generals in an effort to ensure a peaceful return of Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini, the Shiite Moslem leader who guided the anti-shah movement from his exile in Paris.

Tanks ringed Tehran airport on the first day of a three-day closure to block Khomeini's return to Iran. Two civilian planes landed at the airport hours after its official closure was announced but authorities said this was a mistake and that all further flights were banned until Sunday night.

Political sources said the airport closures were designed to give Bakhtiar time to try to reach a political compromise with Khomeini.

Tire caper Cops and robbers on Ridgeway Drive

By BONNIE BAIRD JONES
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — It was an exciting night in the neighborhood of Ridgeway Drive and Wendell Street Wednesday when neighbors staged a cop and robbers drama shortly after midnight.

Two persons were arrested, a shot was fired into the front of a vehicle and four tires and wheels were almost stolen.

In jail in lieu of $1,500 bond each Thursday were Mark Allan Bergenske, 19, charged with two counts of assault with a deadly weapon and grand larceny, and Debbie Marie Vance, 18, charged with being involved in a grand larceny. Both are from Boise.

Police reports indicated the two allegedly attempted to steal four wheels and tires from the Kenneth D. Bingham residence at 661 Ridgeway Drive. A neighbor noticed a vehicle parked across the street and then saw a young man running toward it with two wheels and tires.

The neighbor called Bingham and the police and then joined Bingham in an attempt to recover the items.

Before police arrived, the neighbor, Dave Wuthrich drove his car into the path of the suspects' vehicle, but according to police reports, the suspect then fired out a .22 rifle and fired a shot into the front of the car before Wuthrich could back out of the way.

Bingham, at that time in his vehicle, also attempted to catch and stop the suspect. A6-Bingham overlook and pulled up beside the suspect's vehicle, he drew the gun again and Bingham dropped down on the seat of the car.

The vehicle then sped past Bingham and down the street.

Police, arriving at this time, gave chase, catching the vehicle when it crashed into a utility pole. The suspect took off on foot but was found hiding under a tarp near Hazel Del Manor.

Miss Vance was apprehended at the scene by neighbors and held for police officers.

Bingham said his wheels were worth about $800.

North Korea says it's ready to talk again

SEOUL, South Korea (UPI) — North Korea today officially announced it is ready to resume deadlocked negotiations with Seoul for peaceful reunification of the divided Korean peninsula, the North Korean Central News Agency said.

The peninsula has been divided since 1945. U.S. forces fought on the side of the South Koreans against the North Koreans and the Chinese in the Korean war of 1950-53.

North Korean Vice President Pak Sung Chul endorsed proposals made by a semi-government organization earlier this week on resumption of stalled negotiations to reunite the peninsula.

"There is no reason for the Seoul government to refuse to accept" the proposal, Pak said in remarks transmitted today by the official North Korean Central News Agency.

"I, on behalf of the workers party of Korea and the government which firmly adhere to the stand of assuming responsibility for the destiny of the country and the nation, hold that the four-point proposals should be carried into practice," Pak said.

The proposals were made Tuesday by the Central Committee of the Democratic Front for the Reunification of the Fatherland, a semi-government organization in South Korea.

The proposals are understood to be a response to South Korean President Park Chung Hee's call last week for a summit meeting with President Kim Il Sung.

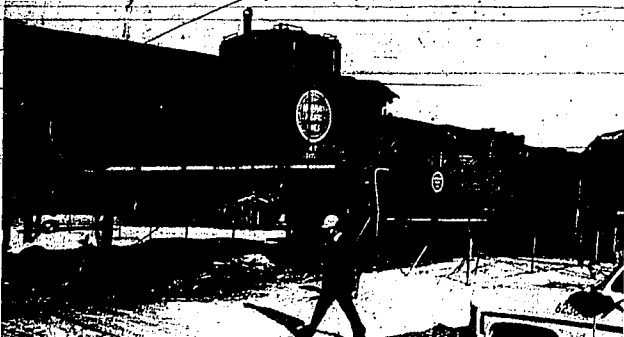

In Seoul, the government proposed a government-level meeting as soon as possible between the two countries.

The two Koreas have made no progress in reunification talks since 1972.

The North's latest proposals called for a halt to "calumnies and slanders against each other" and stopping all military exercises.

It asked that both nations adhere to a July 4, 1972, joint statement calling for peaceful reunification of the two Koreas.

Friday briefing

Train derailment

A Missouri Pacific train derailed Thursday in Bonne Terre, Mo., and ran across a city street, hitting a house and knocking it off its foundation. Four cars were derailed and the four people asleep in the house were not injured. By the looks of the train's caboose, the house was not the only thing knocked off its foundation.

Snow plow operator goes berserk in Chicago

CHICAGO (UPI) — A snowplow operator who allegedly smashed 34 cars with his machine, killing one driver and injuring five others, will be examined to determine how much stress long hours of snow removal put on workers, city officials said Thursday.

The driver, Thomas Blair, 47, Cedar Lake, Ind., was held in $75,000 bond on charges of reckless homicide, driving while intoxicated, negligent driving and leaving the scene of an accident.

Thirty-one people filed damage claims Thursday against Blair, who was operating a road grader under lease to the city Wednesday night when the damage occurred.

A witness who helped stop the grader said Blair told him, "I hate my job! I want to see my kids! I hate my job!"

New judges

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Carter Thursday made his first appointments under the new omnibus judgeship law, naming four people including a woman and a black to the federal bench in Massachusetts.

The law, passed by the last Congress, provides for 152 new judgeships — the most any president has ever been authorized to appoint.

Seignious talks

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Lt. Gen. George Seignious, President Carter's controversial choice to run U.S. arms control efforts, said Thursday he favors "substantial reductions in nuclear arms" as an eventual follow-up to any U.S.-Soviet SALT II agreement.

At a confirmation hearing before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, the retired Army officer appeared to be making a favorable impression on key panel members in his battle for Senate endorsement of his nomination to head the U.S. Arms Control and Disarmament Agency.

Skylab move

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The space agency Thursday took action to gain some control over where the faltering Skylab may fall.

The action was a maneuver that tilted the abandoned space station so that its solar panels will constantly face the sun and generate electricity as the hulk orbits Earth. This will keep Skylab's systems working in hope something can be done to influence its re-entry time so it will fall into the ocean.

Rich reëuse

JACKSONVILLE, Fla. (UPI) — Clarence Royston, an 83-year-old junkie who died in a fire last week in his dilapidated, junk-cluttered house, left as much as $200,000 in cash and securities, it was reported Thursday.

Homicide Detective W.E. Copeland said he sifted through the debris of the house after hearing reports that people were "going through it like gangbusters" looking for a rumored gold hoard.

Single 6-year term urged for president

LAWRENCE, Kan. (UPI) — Attorney General Griffin Bell, predicting President Carter might not agree with him, proposed Thursday amending the Constitution to limit a president to a single term of six years.

In a short news conference prior to his speech at the University of Kansas, Bell said it was up to the president to make policy and that Carter probably would not agree with what he would say.

"I'm not delivering a major policy address," he told reporters. "I don't make policy. I'm making a speech on political science."

In the speech, made available in Washington, Bell said the proposal advocated by Republican presidential candidate John Connally among others — is "an idea whose time has come."

"This change will enable a president to devote 100 percent of his or her attention to the office," Bell said.

"No time would be spent in seeking re-election. Under the present system, the president serves three years and then must spend a substantial part of the fourth year in running for re-election."

In addition, Bell said, "the current four-year terms are too short to achieve any of the major changes and improvements that a president should accomplish," partially because of long budget cycles set by preceding administrations and Congress.

Bell — a former federal judge and a long-time friend of President Carter — said the idea was first proposed in 1826, reintroduced in Congress 160 times in the 153 years since then, and supported by several presidents.

Carter warns Congress inflation must be curbed

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Carter, using some of the strongest language of his presidency, told Congress Thursday that soaring inflation must be tamed to guarantee continued economic strength for the United States.

"The corrosive effects of inflation (will) eat away at the ties that bind us together as a people," he warned. "Inflation injures every person in our country."

All sectors of society — government, business and the average worker — must cooperate in coming months if inflation is to be reduced to tolerable levels, Carter said in his annual economic message to Congress.

"Inflation does pose a serious threat to the nation's continued economic health," the president said. "We must act forcefully and effectively to combat inflation, and we must persist until the battle is won."

Carter's message, and the accompanying report of his Council of Economic Advisers, said economic growth will slow during 1979 — but not enough to cause a recession, as some private economists have predicted.

The administration also predicted consumer prices will continue rising rapidly during the first half of this year, then taper off. Inflation should rise at about a 7.5 percent annual rate in 1979, compared to 9 percent in 1978.

Unemployment, the administration said, will rise slightly to about 6.25 percent from the current 5.9 percent.

Another look at the budget

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The head of the Congressional Budget Office said Thursday that under realistic economic assumptions President Carter's proposed $531.6 billion 1980 federal budget actually would cost about $540 billion.

Carter's projected $29 billion deficit — a major political goal of his budget — would end up closer to $41 billion under her assumptions, budget office chief Alice Rivlin said.

Tomorrow

Among the stories in tomorrow's Times-News:

• Twin Falls mayor Leon Smith, who faces a recall election Tuesday, told his fellow city council members last year not to elect him mayor if they were afraid of rocking the boat. But Smith didn't foresee where some of his boatrocking plans would lead him. While being disappointed at becoming the "scapegoat" after spending time and effort on his goals for improving the city, Smith also believes anyone trying to effect change will draw enemies.

Kennedy invited

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Carter, over the objections of some White House aides, sent an invitation Thursday to Sen. Edward Kennedy to attend the Monday night state dinner honoring Chinese Vice Premier Teng Hsiao-Ping.

A White House aide said "a heated debate" among presidential aides over whether an invitation should be issued to the Massachusetts Democrat, a frequent critic of Carter's policies.

A spokesman for Kennedy said the senator was "delighted" to accept the invitation to the state dinner.

Roof collapse

ROUND LAKE BEACH, Ill. (UPI) — A portion of a snow-laden roof of a discount store collapsed in suburban Chicago Thursday night but authorities said about 60 people inside at the time managed to escape unhurt.

A 70-by-70-foot chunk of the roof at the Kmart store, located in the northern metropolitan area, collapsed around 6:35 p.m. Initially it was feared that several people may have been trapped inside.

But after about three hours of searching, authorities said the 20 to 30 employees and approximately 30 customers inside at the time had been accounted for.

Canadian report

OTTAWA (UPI) — A Canadian government commission Thursday warned that only recognition of Quebec's special status and a shift of power from federal to provincial governments could prevent the "rupture of Canada."

"The Task Force (on Unity) asserts that Canada is passing through a period which is not simply a crisis of development, but a crisis of existence," the federally appointed body said in its 152-page report, "A Future Together."

Twin Falls, Burley-Rupert and Northside Areas:

• Areas of night and morning fog with a few light snow flurries are forecast for today. Otherwise it will be partly cloudy and cold through Saturday. Lows zero to 10 above zero and highs near 20 today and in the mid 20s Saturday.

Camas Prairie, Halley and upper Wood River Valley:

• Areas of night and morning fog are expected today with a few light snow flurries, otherwise partly cloudy and cold through Saturday. Lows 5 below zero to 15 below zero and highs near 20.

Synopsis: An upper level disturbance passed through Idaho during the night and early Thursday morning with snow falling over most of the state. Amounts of precipitation were mostly light. In the wake of the storm a north to northwesterly air flow remained over the area.

The snow fall associated with this system was light over most of the state with an inch or less falling in valley reporting stations. Scattered snow showers are continuing over much of Idaho although clearing was expected late Thursday.

High temperatures Thursday were in the teens through the low 30s and lows were mostly in the teens and subteens in valleys with sub zero readings in the mountains.

The snow and cold temperatures made many roads in southern Idaho hazardous to driving Thursday and today. Travelers should contact highway and police offices for road conditions before leaving for their destinations.

The lowest report was 11 below zero at Bovill.

Walter J. Wood

Man sentenced to die in Utah

TOOELE, Utah (UPI) — A Utah judge Thursday sentenced convicted killer Walter J. Wood to be hanged for the murder of a young Lutheran minister.

Third District Court Judge Ernest Baldwin handed down the sentence after retiring for half an hour to consider his decision in the penalty phase of Wood's trial.

"The sentence is hanging, unless the defendant chooses shooting," Baldwin said.

"Hanging," said Wood. On the day he was convicted last week he had demanded that he be shot.

Baldwin said the brutality of the shooting of Rev. David Aasved, 24, Albert Lea, Minn., outweighed any mitigating factors against the death sentence.

Prosecutor Ed Waldson described Wood as a "danger to society. He has nothing to lose."

Wood told his attorney to "shut up" when the defense lawyer argued against his client's request to have the judge instead of the 12-member jury decide whether Wood should die for the murder or be sentenced to life in prison.

Under Utah law, there is a penalty phase at which the jury must reach a unanimous verdict in order to give a death sentence to the prisoner they have convicted.

But the law also gives the defendant the right to waive the jury and demand the judge pass sentence. All death sentences must automatically be appealed to the Utah Supreme Court under a law passed since the execution of Gary Gilmore two years ago.

Wood was convicted Jan. 15 of gunning down the Reverend Aasved after picking the minister up as he hitchhiked to get gas for the family car, which had run out of fuel in the western Utah desert last June.

It was Jan. 17, 1977, that Utah carried out its first execution in the United States in more than a decade, putting Gilmore before a firing squad after he refused to appeal his death sentence for killing a Provo, Utah, motel clerk.

Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini talks to reporters during an impromptu press conference Thursday

Conventional war could tax military

 @Washington Star
WASHINGTON — The nation's top defense strategists told Congress Thursday that the nation may be better prepared to fight an all-out nuclear war than a conventional one, given the number of recent foul-ups in a massive war game exercise called "Nifty Nugget."

In his annual report to Congress, Defense Secretary Harold Brown said "severe shortcomings" were discovered in the nation's readiness to respond to an attack on NATO forces

In Europe during a simulated "full mobilization" alert in October and November.

"Nifty Nugget," according to the Pentagon, assumed a sudden, conventional attack on NATO forces in Europe... the situation that the U.S. military has considered for years, as the most likely scenario for the next world war.

It was the largest test of U.S. wartime alert capabilities in recent years, testing the full system of logistics needed for rapid reinforcement of Western Europe — everything short of a call-up of troops — and it apparently resulted in a sizable strategic muddle.

As a result, according to Brown, separate "senior-level" task forces have been set up in every branch of the armed forces, including a special "Defense Mobilization Deployment Steering Group" directly under Brown, in an attempt to correct a wide range of problems.

According to Brown, "Many particular shortcomings in planning, execution and resources were observed. Ammunition serviceability, a mounds of prepositioned material... Materiel-handling equipment at airfields, crisis-management organization and procedures, and non-combatant reception and relocation are but a few of the many issues now being addressed."

Sources close to the Pentagon who have been gathering data on the huge but low-profile "Nifty Nugget" describe the exercise in much simpler terms.

Brown eyes draft status

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Defense Secretary Harold Brown said Thursday that if Congress agrees, a decision to upgrade the Selective Service System — and possibly re-registration of 18-year-olds — might be made later this year.

Brown said a restoration of the moth-balled "military" draft "is not needed right now, but warned that the Selective Service System could not meet manpower needs if a crisis arose because it is "in a deep freeze."

"I think we will want to examine it and may want to proceed with an updating of records or registration, I'm not prepared yet to say which," Brown testified.

He said a decision can be reached this year, whether Congress should be asked to approve either step.

Khomeini to return Sunday?

PARIS (UPI) — Exiled Iranian Moslem leader Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini Thursday branded the closure of Iran's airports as "treason" and vowed to return to Iran and "destroy" the government of Premier Shapour Bakhtiar.

The 78-year-old Shiite Moslem leader postponed his planned return to Iran from a 15-year exile from today to Sunday after Iranian military authorities closed all airports in Iran for three days starting Wednesday night.

But in an impromptu outdoor press conference in the front yard of his exile villa 25 miles west of Paris, Khomeini said he will call his followers in Iran to take up arms against the government unless it allows him to return.

"The government treasonously closed the airports. The army should know they are committing treason. This is their last effort. We shall return and destroy them," Khomeini said.

"Either I will die among my people or with their help, we shall eliminate the last vestiges of foreign influence," Khomeini said. "We must go back among our brethren."

Asked if he would consider ordering his followers in Iran to take up arms against the Bakhtiar government, Khomeini said, "For the time being I do not have that in mind. Whenever I consider it proper, I will do it."

But he said that for now, "I am asking the people to remain calm."

A Khomeini spokesman said that if the airports continue to be closed after Sunday, "We shall wait until the next opening — unless the government wants to keep them closed indefinitely."

CIA's blunder may prove costly

By JAY BUSHINSKY
 @Chicago Sun-Times
TEHRAN — A colossal U.S. failure, to gather accurate intelligence — coupled with gross misjudgments — has increased the danger that Iran may be lost to the West as a steady source of oil.

From the quiet element of Iranians who do not subscribe to the widely held view of the Central Intelligence Agency as the cause of all domestic evil, one hears grave criticism of the CIA's excessive reliance on its "brainchild" — the Savak security service.

"Instead of verifying Savak's assessment of the domestic political trends," a responsible Iranian charged, "the CIA tended to accept the Iranian secret service findings as accurate and well-based."

Otherwise, according to this line of reasoning, how could the CIA, and by extension the State Department and White House, have been caught so unaware of the burgeoning opposition to Mohammed Reza Shah Pahlavi's regime?

The emergence of Islamic activists campaigning for a new regime under exiled religious leader Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini seems to prove this critique: Their numbers alone are astounding and it is a puzzling fact that a large percentage of the student contingent consists of recent returnees from abroad.

Evidently, Iran's secret services and the CIA were unable to penetrate the widespread international anti-shah network built up in recent years.

Although an eventual reckoning surely will be made in responsible U.S. circles, this cannot take priority over the current effort to prevent a total collapse of the American position in Iran.

Future events depend on whether Prime Minister Shapour Bakhtiar will be able to rally enough civilian and military support to fend off the massive, Khomeini, fundamentalist Moslem movement.

Bakhtiar's immediate challenge is in the economic sphere. He is faced with crippling strikes in vital industries and services, including international telecommunications, rail, civil aviation, banks and malls.

The strikes are one of the most effective expressions of Khomeini's remote political control (from France). Their persistence is interpreted as proof of his authority over the nation's workers. "Only he can get the strikers back to work," a local observer said.

Bakhtiar has started to move cautiously on his crucial front, he has issued a warning that wages will no longer be paid to strikers as of Saturday, the start of the new Iranian calendar month.

If this threat is implemented, it could mean that much of the public's income might dry up.

Khomeini's position has been anything but conciliatory.

He is holding to his demand for the replacement of the regency council by a revolutionary Islamic council.

This body, according to the daily Tehran Journal, presumably would form a provisional government in place of the Bakhtiar cabinet, after which elections would be held for a new constituent assembly.

Khomeini's ultimate goal is to draft an Islamic constitution to replace the constitutional monarchy and to bring to an end the dynasty rule Iran has had for more than 2,500 years.

But Bakhtiar sees these steps as a scenario for a military coup. This is on the assumption that Iran's powerful military would not allow any change in the constitutional status quo.

Bakhtiar has declared publicly that he will not hand over power to Khomeini's followers though the Moslem leader, he said would be welcome back in Iran at any time (Khomeini says he will return Sunday).

Speaking on Tehran radio, Bakhtiar said: "The martyrs who recently fell in Iran did not die so that one rotten dictatorship would be replaced by another and that new repression would follow past repression."

The prime minister, who has suspended his recent series of impromptu chats with foreign newsmen — a secretary told The Chicago Sun-Times "he is busy now" — had repeated to a group of British correspondents that a blood-soaked military takeover would be inevitable if the Khomeini-led opposition makes it impossible for him to govern.

Factions opposed to the advent of the Islamic state proposed by Khomeini contend its advocates would not be able to run the country and put its stagnant economy in motion. They said the ability to mobilize nearly 2 million demonstrators for Islamic's "big march" in Tehran is one thing and efficient public administration is another.

Possibly because of this, they went on, the Iranian Communists, whose clandestine organization was described as being superior to that of any other political element, would be delighted at this prospect.

Even if an Islamic regime guided by Khomeini were to want Iran's oil output to return to pre-crisis levels, this would not automatically happen. Negotiations between the previous regime and the international oil consortium that markets Iranian crude were at an interim stage when political conditions here deteriorated.

Shah still in Morocco

MARRAKECH, Morocco (UPI) — The Shah of Iran, went into virtual seclusion Thursday, canceling a picnic with King Hassan and a visit to the University of Rabat, and postponing indefinitely any plans to fly to the United States or return to Egypt.

Iranian Embassy officials confirmed the shah has postponed any plans to visit the United States and said that as a result the shah's children "will be coming here."

"For the moment, he is not going to the United States, and he is not going to Egypt, either," the embassy officials said.

The Embassy officials said they did not know the exact arrival date nor how long the children would stay.

The shah, who briefly emerged from his guest-palace for news photographers Wednesday, was to have gone on a picnic Thursday with his host, King Hassan II, and visited the University of Rabat Friday.

Both events were cancelled without official explanation.

Support Your Local Mayor LEON SMITH

Vote NO on the Recall

The majority want him but the majority must register and then vote for him on January 30th

Dear Twin Falls City Citizens,

As you probably know, our Mayor, Leon Smith, is facing a recall election on January 30, 1979. Only about 3,600 people will be registered for this election. The only place you can register is at City Hall, and this must be done before 8:00 P.M. Saturday, January 27.

We feel it is important to support Leon as he has been an effective councilman over the years. We must support the people we elect to local office in order to entice qualified people to run for these jobs. If we elect people like Mayor Smith for local government office, then apathetically sit back while they get recalled, because he stuck to his guns and voted his conscience, we are defeating our own system of government.

We would urge you to first call 733-0860 to make sure you are registered, ask about your precinct number, and where you vote and, second, to vote on January 30 against the recall. Thank you.

Vote No on Recall Sincerely,
Clayton Johnson

Church and Kennedy: Big boys in D.C.

By STEVE GERSTEL
 WASHINGTON (UPI) — Two of the most intriguing figures in the 96th Congress are bound to be Edward Kennedy and Frank Church.
 They have much in common — relative youth, liberal philosophy, activism and unbounded ambition. Kennedy and Church share another distinction. They are the new chairmen of two premier Senate committees.
 Kennedy, a 36-year veteran of the Senate, although only 46, takes the helm of the Judiciary Committee.
 Church, at 54 a 22-year veteran of the Senate, moves in as chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee.
 There could be no greater contrast between Kennedy and Church and the men they have replaced.

Church replaces former Sen. John Sparkman of Alabama, an amiable and friendly soul who lost in his great age whatever zest he had and provided the Foreign Relations Committee with less than passive leadership.
 Kennedy takes over for former Sen. James Eastland of Mississippi, an aged tyrant who at one time imposed his inflexible conservatism will on the panel until an influx of liberal members finally cut down on his powers.
 Kennedy and Church are intriguing because — even in this day of greater independence among senators — they will have great influence in shaping the positions taken by the Senate in the areas of the judiciary and foreign affairs.

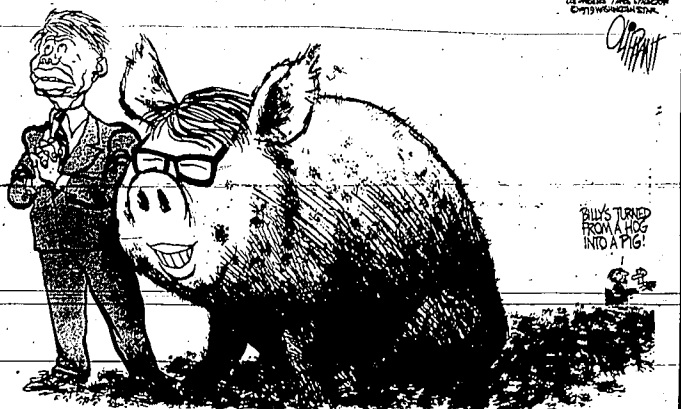

With Kennedy leading the way, much legislation that might have been blocked or delayed in the Eastland era is going to be voted out by the committee and taken up in the Senate.
 An excellent example is a proposed constitutional amendment providing for the election of presidents by popular, rather than electoral votes. In the past, that has been stymied by the Eastland-led conservatives on the committee.
 Similarly, antitrust legislation — a Kennedy pet project — now stands a better chance.
 Kennedy is not going to have an easy time of it. Democratic leaders, past and present, have helped by stacking the committee with more liberal allies.

Of the seven holdovers, five can be classified as liberals and two others as centrists. To fill the vacancies, the Democrats added two liberals and Sen. Howell Heflin of Alabama, an unknown quantity without a record as a legislator.
 But the Republicans, who have seven members, have stacked the committee with conservatives. The only one who is out of place is Maryland's liberal Charles Mathias.
 Over the 22 years, Church has firmly established himself as a liberal and an internationalist. Whatever direction he decides to move, everything in his past points to an active and outspoken chairman along the lines of former Sen. William Fulbright.

Recall means time for action

More Twin Falls voters are registered today than at municipal election time in 1977.
 The reason is the upcoming recall election against Twin Falls Mayor Leon Smith, probably the first recall attempt in the city.
 A recall election often has this effect. Those who seek to recall an elected official are fired up and in turn stir up others. The threatened official and his supporters fight back.
 Recall leaders have leveled numerous charges against Smith, the major one being his alleged failure to listen to his constituents. Smith says he has tried to accomplish positive changes in the city and believes some people will always oppose change.

 The residents of Twin Falls, no matter which side they have chosen, no matter if they are still undecided, should remember something.
 Having voted in last November's general election doesn't qualify you to vote in next Tuesday's election. Residents must have voted in the 1977 municipal election to still be on the registration rolls.
 For those who didn't or who have moved since then, City Hall clerks will stay on the job today during regular hours and until 8 p.m. Saturday, the last day to register before the election.

Spotlight on 96th Congress

By MARTHA ANGLE
 And ROBERT WALTERS
 WASHINGTON — The new senators taking office for the 96th Congress constitute the largest freshman class in more than 30 years — and the most Republican.
 The 20 newcomers, 9 Democrats and 11 Republicans, are probably a shade more conservative than the senators they replaced but only a few of them fall into any neat ideological category.
 As a group, this year's class is remarkably youthful; eight are under 40, and two others just a couple years over. They are also well-educated; all have at least some college training and three — Sens. David Boren, D-Okla., Bill Bradley, D-N.J., and Larry Pressler, R-S.D. — were Rhodes Scholars at Oxford University in England.
 The Senate used to be regarded as the top of the heap for elective politics — short, of course, of the presidency. And indeed, the newcomers include seven former House members and three former governors. But five of the 20 freshmen — Sens. Rudy Boschwitz and David Durenberger, both R-Minn.; Bill Bradley, D-N.J.; Gordon Humphrey, R-N.H., and John Warner, R-Va. — have never held elective office.

Few, if any, of the new members are likely to find a permanent home in the Senate; the casualty rate for incumbents is just too high these days. Although less than 5 percent of the House members seeking reelection in 1978 were defeated, 10 of the 23 senators running for another term were beaten.
 David Durenberger, the Republican elected to Hubert Humphrey's old seat, was the first of the new senators to be sworn in but it didn't do him much good financially.
 Durenberger took the oath of office Nov. 9, just two days after the election, but was told neither he nor his new staff could be paid until Minnesota's state canvassing board certified his election victory over Democrat Robert Short.
 The board met Nov. 21, issued the certificate Nov. 28 and mailed it to the Secretary of the Senate. But it seems Minn. Gov. Rudy Perpich had failed to sign the certificate, so back it went — while Durenberger and staff missed their first two-week paycheck.
 Perpich signed, the certificate was mailed again to the Secretary of the Senate, and then it was found that the state seal was missing. Off it went to Minnesota once more, to be duly sealed and returned on Dec. 18 as

In abortion, something living dies no matter the method

By GEORGE F. WILL
 The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Justice Harry Blackmun may be remembered in connection with abortion the way Chief Justice Roger Taney is remembered in connection with slavery.
 In the Dred Scott decision, Taney tried to use judicial power to "settle" the slavery issue by removing it from legislative arenas. Instead, he hastened civil war. Blackmun seems to want to "settle" the abortion issue similarly, but his injudicious opinions may provoke an anti-abortion amendment to the Constitution.
 Blackmun wrote the 1973 abortion decision, which was a sly move down state restrictions on abortion. Now Blackmun has written the opinion in a 6-3 ruling striking down a 1974 Pennsylvania law, requiring doctors to use whatever abortion method is most likely to spare the life of any fetus that "may be viable." Blackmun finds that phrase unenforceably "vague."
 Blackmun also faults Pennsylvania law because "it is uncertain whether the statute permits the physician to consider his duty to the patient to be paramount to his duty to the fetus." This suggests, obliquely, the real incompatibility of Pennsylvania's law and the 1973 ruling, an incompatibility that has nothing to do with the concept of "viability."
 The court's labored analysis of "viability" obscures, in 1979 as in 1973, what the court is doing. It is concealing an expansive right to abortion, a right not significantly limited by considerations of fetal viability.

 Justice Byron White, dissenting, says the latest ruling "withdraws from the states a substantial measure of the power to protect fetal life that was reserved to them" in the 1973 decision. But in fact the latest ruling only makes clear that the 1973 ruling virtually stripped the states of such power.
 The logic of the 1973 ruling is this: A woman who wants an abortion has a virtually unimpaired constitutional right to purchase a procedure that will result in a dead fetus.
 The 1973 decision held that at no point in pregnancy are fetuses "persons" in the whole sense. The court said that states may not forbid an abortion that a doctor determines is "necessary to preserve the life or health of the mother."
 The court established, in effect, a right to abortion on demand when it said that doctors may make that determination "in the light of all attendant circumstances — psychological and emotional" as well as physical — that might be relevant to the well-being of the patient. Doctors can be found who will construe "health" broadly enough to include, for example, the absence of "distress."
 Pennsylvania's law was odd. To require abortionists to use the method safest for fetuses is to require abortionists to risk failing at their vocation which is killing fetuses. But given today's moral and legal climate, it is unclear what must be done when fetuses do survive abortion procedures. There are bound to be many such cases in a nation with a million abortions a year.

 The same states require that babies born after abortion procedures must be given life-sustaining treatment appropriate for premature births. And many hospitals have neonatal intensive care units that can prolong, if not always preserve, the lives of infants that survive abortion procedures. But an abortionist might be sued for malpractice if he failed to kill his patient's fetus.
 For centuries many societies considered abortion permissible before "quickening" (when a woman feels fetal movement) because they did not think the fetus was alive until then. Strict abortion laws developed as the science of embryology developed in the 19th century.

Some final words offered on Woody Hayes

COLUMBUS, Ohio — I had come home to see Woody Hayes one more time. After midnight, I sat in my darkened room at the Holiday Inn and looked out at the "buildings" of downtown Columbus.
 In the morning, Woody would be talking to the Columbus Area Chamber of Commerce. I knew that the story would be covered by the wire services and the television networks; it would be no problem staying in the town I live in now and hearing what he said. And yet, with Woody making this first public appearance since his firing, as head football coach at Ohio State University, I had to make the trip. I had to be there.
 Back in September, I had written a column that began:
 "Woody Hayes is my great prejudice. I admit without shame that he is my favorite American."
 The column went on in that vein, and ended up:
 "So this year, he will pace the sidelines once again, wearing his shapely gray slacks, and his black baseball cap pulled down hard over his white hair, and before the season is out, he will undoubtedly do something to make the millions hate him again. But he is 55 years old, the victim of one heart attack already; he has been doing this same thing in this same stadium for 28 years. There's no telling how much longer Woody will be around, and if you've got something to say about someone, you might as well say it while he can still hear it."

 Before the year was out, of course, he was fired, and again and again he was asked how I could defend that column. The millions hated him anew, all right, and I tried to think about it all. Obviously, I could not defend Woody Hayes for physically attacking a college football player, and yet my feelings for him remained the same.
 And I knew that my feelings for Woody Hayes and my feelings for a boyhood spent in Columbus had run together. Everything else had changed in Columbus; each time I traveled home I had more and more trouble recognizing the town. The only things that remained the same were my cigarettes, and the presence of Woody Hayes.

 A room on the 11th floor of the Holiday Inn. That's some way to come home. On an impulse, I had called the Hayes home on Cardiff Road. Woody's wife, Anne, had answered. "You're living in Chicago now, aren't you?" Mrs. Hayes said. I said that was true.
 "Woody and I know your mom and dad," Mrs. Hayes said. "We first met them at a party in 1951. I believe you were there. Do you remember?"
 "But I would have only been 4 years old," I said.
 "That's all right, the other children were young, too," Mrs. Hayes said. I wanted to look for the post, I called my old friends Dan Dick and Jack Roth. Dan picked me up in his car, one hand on the steering wheel, a bottle of beer in the other. The three of us went to the Beck Tavern and tried to pretend we were in high school again, but it didn't work.

 "What'll you do in the morning?" I asked for the Neil House for the Chamber of Commerce meeting. I was one of almost 1,200; John McConnell, chairman of the Chamber, introduced the mayor by saying, "Columbus, Ohio, is one saleable product. Columbus is one of the finest governed cities in America."
 And Woody Hayes, seated at the dais, nodded his head.
 When he got up to speak, it was not about football. He spoke mainly of friendship and loyalty and commitment to excellence. The first time he alluded to his own troubles was when he spotted his son, Steve, in the audience.
 "... a pretty young fellow about that time (when Hayes began coaching), 5 or 6 years old," Hayes said. "He's grown up and he's a lawyer here in town now. He may be sort of ashamed of his dad now, but he'll have to live through that, and he will."

 He talked of some children who had sent him flowers and a note wishing him luck on his first public appearance, and he said:
 "If I've done anything to embarrass them, I'm sorry. I don't want to lose friends like that."
 He talked of family life, and raising children, and of course, Woody being Woody, he had to compare the way Americans raise children with the way the Russians raise children.
 He talked about his watchwords for living: things like, "Each man has much greater potential than he thinks he has." And he said, "Maybe they are true and hackneyed, but when you try them, you end up living by them."
 He praised and wished luck for his successor as football coach at Ohio State — an act that must have torn at his soul, for being football coach at Ohio State is all he ever wanted for himself, and still wants — and he said, "I've always believed in 'Woody's luck' — but that the luck must have deserted him."
 He said that he wanted to be "the greatest ex-coach who ever lived," but that he wasn't sure if he could bring himself to sit in the stands. "I don't know whether I could come to the football games; I could never sit still anywhere."
 And then, in the softest of voices, he concluded by saying:
 "And in the night of death, as an orator said, hope sees a star, and listening love hears the rustle of a wing."
 I walked back out into a Columbus that was not the same.

'Pilgrimage of faith' begins

Pope John Paul II kisses the ground upon arrival in Santo Domingo

SANTO DOMINGO, Dominican Republic (UPI) — Pope John Paul II arrived in "this beloved land of Columbus" Thursday and confirmed he plans to visit the United States at some future date.

Embarking on a "pilgrimage of faith" to Latin America, the Roman Catholic pontiff told newsmen aboard his flight from Rome that he would return to the New World to visit the United States, but "the time has not yet been set."

The Polish pope, on the first foreign trip of his papacy, chatted informally for nearly an hour and a half with reporters aboard his chartered Altalla jet. Asked about reports he planned to visit the U.S., the pope said, "I suppose it will be necessary, but I do not know when."

As the pope's plane flew over Puerto Rico, the pontiff radioed a formal message of greeting to President Carter.

The pope's 20-hour stopover in the Dominican Republic was to be highlighted by an outdoor mass in Independence Square attended by an estimated 400,000 persons. From Santo Domingo he flies to Mexico for the Latin-American-Bishops-Conference.

Upon his arrival in Santo Domingo, the pope, dressed in white vestments, knelt and kissed Dominican soil.

The pope was greeted by President Antonio Guzman and hundreds of dignitaries. The Pope kissed Guzman on both cheeks. A 21-gun salute boomed and the Polish pontiff and Guzman exchanged welcoming remarks.

"I thank God that he has permitted me to come to this beloved land of Columbus," the Pope said in halting but correct Spanish. The Italian explorer discovered the Dominican Republic and spread the Catholic faith from here throughout the New World.

Speaking in the third person about himself, the pontiff said, "The Pope greets the poor, the peasants, the sick and the handicapped. Let them feel close to the church, let them follow Christ, even in the midst of obstacles."

In his welcoming remarks, Guzman noted that the Dominican Republic was such a Catholic nation that it has a white cross in its flag.

British troops may be used to break labor blockades

LONDON (UPI) — The government Thursday threatened to use army troops to break a blockade holding up medical supplies such as penicillin and cancer drugs.

Prime Minister James Callaghan said labor union leaders have lost control over their rank and file. More than 50 cancer patients were sent home from Queen Elizabeth hospital in Birmingham because striking public health service workers prevented medical supplies from getting through.

Pharmaceutical manufacturers said picketing truck drivers were holding up chemicals needed to manufacture penicillin and vital drugs.

Dr. Richard Arnold, head of the British Pharmaceutical Industries Association, said the blockade of drugs by striking truckers will soon lead to vital stocks running low.

"If an epidemic should break out the situation would be serious," he said.

Mexico braces for the big event

MEXICO CITY (UPI) — Mexican officials Thursday put hospitals on alert, prepared to close schools and the airport and turned out an army of troops and police to handle the crush of hundreds of thousands of well-wishers when Pope John Paul II arrives.

The pontiff, flying in from Santo Domingo today, will begin a six-day visit to five Mexican cities and inaugurate the Third Latin American Bishops Conference. Some 250,000 police and troops have been assigned to protect the pope throughout his visit.

The pope is scheduled to arrive at 1 p.m. (12 noon MST). All air traffic — incoming and outgoing, international and domestic — will be suspended between noon and 3 p.m. for security reasons, said the director of the international airport, Luis Alberto de la Pena.

In an unprecedented action, the Mexico City government has ordered all hospitals and medical centers on red alert to care for expected casualties in the enormous crowds expected to fill the streets in hopes of seeing the pope.

In addition to the 13 million inhabitants of Greater Mexico City, authorities said 500,000 extra persons had already jammed into the city to see the pope, with another one million expected to arrive in the next 48 hours.

Over eight million Mexicans and foreigners, many of whom traveled to Mexico for the occasion, are expected to see the pope on his tour of the country, stopping at Puebla, Guadalajara, Oaxaca and Monterrey, where he will make his last stop, just 120 miles south of the Texas border.

Lee Marvin takes the stand

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — Lee Marvin said Thursday that he told Michele Triola constantly during their six-year romantic relationship that he would never marry again although the year after they broke up he wed his childhood sweetheart.

The 54-year-old Oscar-winning actor began testimony in the suit brought by the former singer-dancer, who changed her name legally to Marvin in 1970 and is seeking more than $1 million for breach of contract as a result of their non-marital relationship.

Marvin told the judge hearing the case that he found Michele "fun" and "enjoyable" when they first began their affair in 1964 and 1965.

They met during the making of the movie, "Ship of Fools," Marvin said, and began sexual relations within a few weeks. He said their first intimacies were in dressing rooms on the set.

Marvin's second wife, the former Pamela Feeney, sat in a front row seat in the spectator area as Marvin testified. The actor wore a conservative, charcoal gray business suit with a striped maroon tie, his white hair neatly combed. He spoke in a low, calm voice.

SITUATE, Mass. (UPI) — Dianne and Gerald Green, ordered to stop treating their son, Chad, with Laetrile for his leukemia, have taken the boy and vanished.

"They have gone where there is love," said Mrs. Vera Green, the child's grandmother.

The 3-year-old boy and his parents disappeared Wednesday night. They left a note on the Mrs. Green's kitchen table saying they could not comply with a court order banning the use of Laetrile on Chad.

The judge who issued the order angrily warned Thursday the Greens could face kidnapping charges.

The grandmother, tearfully described to UPI that she found the note Wednesday night. "I don't know where they have gone. That's the truth. If I did know I wouldn't say."

She said she thought they had left Massachusetts.

Chad has been the center of a court battle for more than a year, with his parents claiming—traditional chemotherapy treatments had harmful after-effects. Laetrile, made from apricot pits, has not been cleared by the federal government for cancer treatment.

Mailer testimony continues

BARNSTABLE, Mass. (UPI) — The royalties from his critically acclaimed prose continue to flow into Norman Mailer's bank accounts, but they disappear again "almost" before the ink on the deposit slip is dry.

The Pulitzer Prize winning author admits he is more adept with a typewriter than an adding machine and, as a result, is living on literary advances and borrowed funds.

Mailer Thursday returned to the stand in his Barnstable Probate Court divorce trial.

"My talent is making money, not managing it," he has said in two days of testimony. "It's as if you were asking a backward reader to expound on Shakespeare."

Mailer said he survives on advances from his publishers and is deeply in debt to his literary agent, Scott Meredith.

Old house for sale with a catch

NORFOLK, Va. (UPI) — Under the shade of old pecan trees and surrounded by empty whisky bottles, sits a once-fine house that was owned for generations by a first family of Virginia — the Liewellyns.

For the past five years, the current owner, the Norfolk Redevelopment and Housing Authority, has been trying to sell the red brick house for $1.

But so far there have been no takers for this strictly cash-and-carry deal.

The $1 price has some catches. The buyer must agree to move the two bedroom, dilapidated structure to a new site and upgrade it to city code standards.

Moving and remodeling costs, excluding the price of a new lot, were estimated to be from $45,000 to $60,000.

"The Daughters of the American Revolution and about 10 individuals have expressed some interest over the years, but so far no one wants to spend that much money on it," said Christine Freed, a redevelopment spokeswoman. "I don't know if anyone ever will."

David Rice, NRHA executive director, said if the house is not sold in the next year or so, it will probably be torn down to make way for redevelopment.

Although other buildings bought in the effort have long since been razed for new construction, this house was saved from the wrecking ball, at least temporarily, after the Virginia Historic Landmark Commission called the structure "a significant example of agrarian Greek Revival architecture."

A CB 'skip' can be helpful

HYDE PARK, Vt. (UPI) — The Lamolle County Sheriff's Department is always ready to help motorists in distress — even if the call comes from hundreds of miles away.

At 2:45 a.m. Wednesday, Deputy John Scott got a distress call on his CB radio from a motorist "stuck in a snowbank near David Lee's barn."

Scott asked the CB'er what town he was in.

"Norway, Michigan," came the reply.

"At first I thought it was a hoax call, but I kept talking to him and finally I realized it was just one of those skips that occur on the airwaves," Scott said.

Child support with pennies

TULSA, Okla. (UPI) — John Atkins said he sees nothing wrong in paying his $300 child-support payment with 375 cents of pennies.

A judge may disagree.

Atkins delivered the pennies in an oil drum to his former wife, Elizabeth, just before Christmas. He said his wife should be satisfied.

She said "and neither is her attorney. He has asked Judge Robert Caldwell on Friday on a previously filed motion to sentence Atkins for non-payment of child support.

"The bottom line on the thing is that money is money," Atkins said about the pennies. "It's spendable. It's the coin of the realm. It's legal tender."

James Klett, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service special agent, examines Tom Wilson's eagle

The eagle and the money go to Washington

DETROIT (UPI) — Police Lt. Tom Wilson won't get his eagle back and an unidentified but vigilant citizen won't pick up any reward money. Uncle Sam is getting both the bird and the bucks.

An acquaintance blew the whistle on Wilson several weeks ago after he saw a stuffed golden eagle perched in the police officer's living room. Federal law makes possession of a golden eagle a criminal offense.

Armed with a search warrant, federal agents found Wilson's prize and charged him with violating the Eagle Protection Act.

Wilson argued that the bird was dead when he found it in California in 1967, and a taxidermist at that time swore that stuffing the eagle was legal. Wilson cooperated with investigators until he learned his statements were for use in a criminal, not civil, case.

"As a police officer," he fumed, "I wouldn't do that to the worst junkie on the streets."

Nevertheless, the case landed in U.S. District Court where a deal was struck as his trial was to start Wednesday. Wilson agreed to pay a $500 civil fine and criminal charges, carrying a possible jail term and $5,000 fine were dropped.

"We looked it over and decided that since he didn't have a prior criminal record, we figured that was enough," said Assistant U.S. Attorney Ellen Dennis. "He would have never received jail time anyway."

While Wilson took his medicine, the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service took his bird. A spokesman said it will go to a school or museum for public display.

The informant, meanwhile, also was left empty-handed.

The law allows tipsters to claim half of any criminal fine collected in such cases. But Wilson paid a civil fine, all of which went to the government.

Environment still at issue

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Environmental cleanup, expected to cost $615 billion over the decade ending in 1986, is not inflationary and has solid public support, the Council on Environmental Quality reported Thursday.

Charles Warren, chairman of the White House agency, said environmental programs were blamed for the energy crisis in 1974, for unemployment later, and now for inflation.

"Yet support by the people of this country for environmental protection is strong and unwavering," he said, citing a recent survey indicating 60 percent of those responding favored environmental protection despite soaring inflation.

Warren predicted the administration will continue a strong commitment to environmental programs despite economic pressures, and that challenges to such action will be "successfully countered."

The EPA's smog decision is scheduled to be revealed today, and the agency has termed earlier reports on the subject "speculative."

But the Natural Resources Defense Council, the American Lung Association, the Environmental Defense Fund and other groups said the EPA would propose raising the national health standard from 18 to 12 parts per million of ozone, a major part of costs add no more than four-tenths of 1 percent a year to the inflation rate.

The estimated $615 billion in environmental spending from 1977 through 1986, up $90 billion from last year's 10-year estimate, includes costs ranging from air pollution control equipment to garbage collection.

Warren said it is difficult to calculate the benefits of clean air and water in terms of reduced health costs and property damage reduction. But he said there is strong political pressure for a better environment.

For example, he said, 10 million Los Angeles residents are "uncomfortable" due to smog, although it is difficult to set a "monetary value on the benefits of programs which relieve that condition."

The report said new studies indicate environmental programs will continue easing the unemployment problem, creating jobs, while health and other benefits of air pollution controls alone save as much as $22 billion annually.

Environmental groups attack EPA's clean-air standards

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Several environmental groups charged Thursday the administration plans to cut clean air standards so drastically under the guise of inflation control that public health could be endangered.

The groups said the Environmental Protection Agency has decided on a standard for urban smog 50 percent higher than the present regulation.

The EPA's smog decision is scheduled to be revealed today, and the agency has termed earlier reports on the subject "speculative."

But the Natural Resources Defense Council, the American Lung Association, the Environmental Defense Fund and other groups said the EPA would propose raising the national health standard from 18 to 12 parts per million of ozone, a major part of urban smog.

If that level is approved, more cities would be considered "clean" and programs to inspect car exhaust might be delayed or scrapped. There have been reports that many newer cars have impaired or ruined exhaust control systems, either because of accidents or because owners deliberately tampered with them so they could use leaded gasoline.

The groups said White House economic advisors tried to pressure EPA into setting the standard at .16 ppm, an even larger change than the .12 figure administrator Douglas Costle has supposedly picked.

Either way, the group said, "a president elected with the support of people concerned about environmental health caused disease, and his EPA administrator, will become the first to weaken a national health standard."

Daniel Flood won't seek chairmanship

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Rep. Daniel Flood, D-Pa., on trial in Washington on bribery, conspiracy and perjury charges, has decided not to seek reappointment as chairman of a key appropriations subcommittee, a spokesman said Thursday.

The spokesman said Flood wrote Rep. Jamie Whitten, D-Miss., new chairman of the House Appropriations Committee, Wednesday and asked his name be removed from the chairmanship of the subcommittee on labor and health, education and welfare.

The Appropriations Committee, whose members were confirmed by House Democrats Tuesday, has yet to organize itself and name its subcommittee chairmen. Until Wednesday, Flood, 75, a 16-term veteran, was still up for reappointment as chairman of the appropriations subcommittee.

In his federal trial, Flood is accused of taking money in exchange for using his powers to help people get federal financing for various projects.

In the letter Flood sent to Whitten, Flood said he expected to continue to serve on the subcommittee he formerly headed, and on a subcommittee on defense.

Speaker Thomas O'Neill, D-Mass., told reporters he felt Flood knew politics well enough to recognize the "grave difficulty" of trying to keep the chairmanship.

Rep. Charles Diggs, D-Mich., convicted of payroll padding, calmed another potential squabble among Democrats by withdrawing earlier from his chairmanship of an African subcommittee.

House Democrats voted Wednesday to have an automatic Democratic Caucus vote on whether a committee chairman, convicted of a felony, should keep his post.

The Democrats postponed two other ethics issues for a month: proposals by Rep. Peter Kostmayer, D-Pa., to automatically bring up the question of disciplinary action after a member's conviction and all appeals had failed; and to require a member to abstain from House business while a conviction is being appealed.

Two other House members touched by scandal, Reps. Charles Wilson, D-Calif., and Edward Roybal, D-Calif., have subcommittee chairmanships they intend to keep.

Wilson and Roybal were reprimanded last year by their House colleagues for having accepted money from millionaire Korean businessman Tongsun Park.

Roybal was chairman last session of a subcommittee of the Select Committee on Aging and Wilson headed a subcommittee of the Post Office and Civil Service Committee.

Carter gives Congress a list of priorities

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Carter told Congress Thursday his No. 1 national priority this year, will be to control inflation and maintain economic growth while his international goals include a new SALT accord "in the near future."

Giving Capitol Hill a 50-page list of priorities but few specifics on how he will implement his plans, the president called for looser federal regulations for the rail and trucking industry and stricter control of hospital costs.

"Our domestic program will concentrate on further developing a new foundation for progress," Carter said, using the theme he established in his State of the Union address Tuesday night.

"My administration's major domestic priority is to reduce the rate of inflation, while maintaining economic growth," he said.

He defended his $331.6 billion budget for fiscal 1980, saying it "does not neglect the basic needs of the disadvantaged."

On international affairs, Carter said the United States seeks good relations with both Russia and China.

On domestic issues Carter said:

- Hospital cost containment would be one of his "highest priorities," and Congress will soon get a proposal based on a plan offered last year.
- He favors an independent federal education department, but gave no new details on his plans to reorganize economic development and natural resources.
- The administration is studying a possible reorganization of the Selective Service system and the Alaska natural gas pipeline.
- He will offer "broad legislation" aimed at deregulating the railroad industry. He said changes also will be submitted on the trucking industry and inter-city bus service.
- He will propose a National Development Bank for financing local economic development projects and an urban fiscal assistance program.

Kennedy ends blackballing

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Sen. Edward Kennedy, new chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, served notice Thursday he is ending a time-honored system allowing a senator to blackball any prospective federal judgeship nominee from his state.

The absolute-veto over judgeship nominees is exercised with the "blue slip" — the list of prospective federal judges distributed to senators by the Judiciary panel's chairman.

Failure of any senator to return that blue slip of paper for whatever reason has effectively killed a nomination — frequently stopping the individual's name from even being mentioned in the committee, much less coming up for a confirmation hearing.

What's what

Alligators really roar with their mouths closed, but they go into hissing with their mouths open

An alligator sometimes will roar back at the thunder. Or at a plane that breaks the sound barrier. Or at the landscape in general during mating season. Most peculiar beast. It roars with its mouth closed. You know those pictures you've seen of an alligator with its jaws wide open? It's not roaring then. That's how it looks when it hisses.

If chicken with rice is your dish, Arkansas might be just the place for you. That state grows more broilers, and more rice, too, than any other.

Why a long lemon tends to be juicier than a round lemon I just don't know.

Tugboats don't always tug. Mostly, they push.

TRACE

Q. "The Natchez Trace is the trail that runs up the Mississippi from Natchez northward. Why is it and some other such trails called a 'trace'?"

A. Comes from an old French word meaning "line of footprints." The frontier folk used to float their goods down the river to market in Natchez. Then instead of poling back upstream, they'd sell the flatboats, and walk back. They left their footprints, as it were.

Q. "How frequently does the average American buy a new watch?"

A. Every four years.

Mister, say you're only able to grow about 500 pounds of beef to the acre on your spread? Why not give it up and go in for catfish? Those ponds are yielding as much as 5,000 pounds per acre. It's high protein, too.

PALINDROMES?

Consider words like bard, trap devil, mood and repaid. Spelled backwards, respectively, they're drab, part, lived, doom and diaper. I called them palindromes. But that's wrong. They're not palindromes. A palindrome is a word, sentence or number that spells the same forwards as backwards. Like "dad" or "1881."

If you want to keep the neighborhood dogs off your lawn, set out a few bottles thereabout with a small amount of household bleach in each. That's said to be a highly successful pattern for the anti-dog-litter folk in Hawaii and around San Francisco Bay.

Striking lettuce pickers defy court order to return to work

EL CENTRO, Calif. (UPI) — About 500 striking lettuce pickers say they will ignore a court order to return to the fields where more than $300,000 worth of lettuce was reported rotting.

Farmers predicted if the strike continues consumers will begin paying higher lettuce prices in about a week.

Sheriff's deputies Wednesday began delivering the back-to-work orders to some members of Cesar Chavez' United Farm Workers of America. About 1,700 pickers went on strike Monday against four Imperial Valley lettuce growers who produce about 95 percent of the nation's iceberg lettuce.

John Vessey, general manager of Vessey & Co., said Tuesday his farm alone had lost about $300,000 in lettuce not harvested in time and said consumers would see an increase in lettuce prices in about a week, should the strike continue.

A light rain Wednesday afternoon further threatened the lettuce harvest.

"Our soil out here is mostly clay and when it gets wet it's like tar," said Rich Wagner, a deputy with the Imperial County Agriculture Commissioner's office.

He explained that while a small amount of rain would probably not damage the lettuce, it would make it impossible for tractors to get into the area and would halt the harvest.

Superior Court Judge Donald Work Tuesday ordered 500 of those workers to return to work at two of the four farms hit by the walkout — Vessey & Co. and Mario Salkhon — after the growers' attorneys argued their particular contracts contained a "no strike" clause.

But UFW spokesman Marc Grossman said Wednesday the UFW told its members to disobey the back-to-work order and instead continue the strike against the two farms.

The Imperial County Sheriff's Department met with the district attorney's office Wednesday to determine what a "reasonable time" would be for the workers to heed the order and if arrests would be made after that time.

One farm worker on the picket line told a reporter he would go to jail

UPI
Grower John Vessey examines rotted head of lettuce rather than end the strike.

The UFW bargaining committee met with representatives of the 28 Imperial Valley and Salinas area farms again in San Diego Wednesday, but Grossman said nothing meaningful came of the meetings.

Grossman said the growers are not "dealing sensibly" with union demands and warned that thousands more farm workers stand ready to join those already on strike.

"Workers at the other companies are real angry even though their companies are not out," he said. "The growers' refusal to deal sensibly with the workers' problems have really made them mad."

Grand scale garbage center

SPOKANE (UPI) — City Engineer Glen Yake envisions Spokane as a garbage collection center, gathering refuse from communities as far as 100 miles away.

Yake said the city is seeking a $300,000 federal grant to conduct a feasibility study for a central waste burning plant.

He said the proposed plant would utilize a "direct burn process" of converting wood waste and household garbage steam, which could then be used to power generators to produce electricity.

Yake said it would be more economical for smaller communities in eastern Washington and northern Idaho to pay a contractor to haul waste material to a central location, rather than for each one to operate sanitary landfills.

He said locations for landfills are getting harder to find, while the need for electrical power is rising steadily.

Yake also said more materials could be recycled when all wastes are taken to a central site.

Young survivor joins relatives

PORTLAND, Ore. (UPI) — Three-year-old Elizabeth Andor, the only member of her family to survive the crash of a United Airlines DC-8 in a Portland suburb Dec. 28, was released from a Portland hospital Wednesday in the care of an aunt and uncle from Chicago.

The child had been hospitalized since the crash for treatment of head and leg injuries. Her father, Gabor, 39; mother, Rosina, 36; and sisters Gabriella, 2 and Rosina, 1, died in the crash which took 10 lives and left 179 survivors.

Pair facing charges over horse sales

PORTLAND, Ore. (UPI) — Two men were indicted by a federal grand jury Wednesday on charges of unlawfully selling for slaughter more than 100 wild horses obtained through the federal Bureau of Land Management's "adopt a horse" program.

Indicted on four counts each were Donald Wayne Hughes, 37, of New Pine Creek, Ore., and Robert William Harris, 25, of Solo, Ore.

The case was listed as the first in the nation under the Wild Horse Act of 1972. The adopt-a-horse program was developed because BLM faced a problem of too many mustangs for the available public range and needed a means to dispose of the excess horses after the act banned private capture or killing of the horses.

Threats produce official caution

SALT LAKE CITY (UPI) — Utah Attorney General Robert Hansen showed up for work Thursday wearing a bullet-proof vest and a revolver strapped to his hip.

Hansen said the armament was lent to him by the Utah Highway Patrol after he received numerous death threats in connection with the slaying of polygamist John Singer.

Singer was shot to death a week ago when he drew a pistol on officers who were trying to arrest him because he refused to allow his children to attend public schools.

The attorney general said a stream of threatening calls has come into his office and other state offices since Singer's death.

Gov. Scott Matheson is also taking precautions. He has armed body guards.

Also, the governor's press secretary has quit giving out his daily schedule over the a telephone via a recorded message device.

Wyoming grand jury prosecutor questioned

ROCK SPRINGS, Wyo. (UPI) — The defense attorney for Ed Cantrell, top Rock Springs police official accused of murder, Thursday persisted in questioning Wyoming's ex-special prosecutor about missing notes.

The action took place during a hearing to determine whether enough evidence exists to order a trial for Cantrell, 51, accused of first-degree murder in the July 15 shooting death of undercover agent Michael Rosa. Trial observers have dubbed the proceeding a "mini-trial."

Cantrell, who took a leave of absence as Rock Springs' public safety director, has admitted the shooting but said he acted in self-defense. The office Cantrell held has since been abolished.

Rosa was shot fatally two days before he was to testify before a now defunct state grand jury directed by Special Prosecutor Lawrence A. Yonke.

In the courtroom Thursday, defense attorney Gerald Spence repeatedly asked Yonke about notes he took while talking on the telephone with staff members investigating the Rosa shooting. Yonke has said the notes were "gone" within two days after he took them, but the ex-special prosecutor said no evidence was destroyed.

Spence would ask the question, chief prosecutor Robert Pickett would object, and Justice of the Peace Nena Stafford James would sustain the objection. Spence would then ask the question again.

Some Vietnamese are lucky: This group of 100 was accepted for relocation near Nazareth in Israel

'Boat people' simply want out

By PAUL VOGLE
HONG KONG (UPI) — With precious gold, they ransom their freedom from Vietnam.
 The world knows them as the "boat people," penniless fugitives who arrive packed on rickety boats, clad only in ragged trousers and undershirts.
 The thousands of refugees from Vietnam, flooding countries throughout Southeast Asia, pose a moral dilemma and political problem for the world.

Let them land in seemingly unending numbers? Or turn them away to languish on the seas, where less than half survive until someone, somewhere reluctantly takes them in?

Desperate to get out, these often educated and trained refugees find they are unwanted and countries won't let them in. Yet they refuse to return.

"If you gave me my choice right now of being shot or going back to Vietnam," said Ha Hanh Lam, 43, "I'd stand up straight and let you pull the trigger."

Lam fled the coastal city of Qui Nhon with 170 other people last August. He was one of the lucky ones — one of the few who got to land in Hong Kong.

Tens of thousands more are bobbing around on tiny coastal fishing boats off the shores of Malaysia and Indonesia.

Nearly half a million people have fled Vietnam and Cambodia since the communist victories over U.S.-backed governments in 1975.

The United States has absorbed the largest number of these fleeing Cambodia, Laos and Vietnam — 170,000 since April 1975.

Sources close to an international network of racketeers dealing in "Vietnamese refugees for gold" expect another half million people to flee during 1979.

"There is simply no end in sight," an American diplomat in Malaysia said recently.

The Vietnamese government is "selling" freedom to the refugees at an average of $3,000 per head in solid gold, a tidy profit for impoverished Hanoi.

The gold is paid by the tael (1.0233 ounces) in the shape of a Dutch wooden shoe or a disc. At approximately $280 per tael, adults of Chinese origin pay 12 taels — 10 of which go to the Vietnamese government and one each to the ticket salesman and ship's captain. The captain, in turn, gives a kickback to his shipping line.

Most of the people have cleaned out their bank accounts and sold their last possessions to buy their "golden" tickets.

The host countries shoulder the brunt of the crunch until they can get the refugees sorted out and hand them over to the U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees.

It costs between $1 and $6 a day to support each refugee, U.N. and Hong Kong government sources say. That gives them a few handfuls of rice, some vegetables and fish or meat plus a roof over their heads.

The "temporary" asylum can last from two months to two years.

Nevertheless, the refugees consider themselves lucky. "Everybody here tries to make camp life better; the spirit is good," said Ly Vo Xang camp supervisor at the Sham Shui Po center, which houses 1,900 refugees.

Refugees told a grim tale of their voyage from Vietnam to Malaysia. Mrs. Luong Bot Chau told how her vessel was attacked by pirates off the Thai coast.

She said the refugees thought the boat approaching was a fishing vessel, but the approximately 30 men aboard pulled up with weapons, including knives, iron bars and hammers.

They beat her husband until he fainted, Mrs. Luong said, but they could not remove his ring. "She said the pirates dragged him to the boat's side," held his hand down on the wooden rail and chopper his ring finger off. "They then clubbed him to death and threw him overboard."

"The pirates dragged some of the girls up to the deck and raped them," Mrs. Luong said, "We heard them scream. We could not get out because they had nailed down the hatch."

The refugees arrive in numbers so staggering that Hong Kong's top administrator, Chief Secretary Jack Cater, insists they are a "world problem."

Those that were finally allowed to land in Hong Kong this month after four weeks aboard the battered freighter Huey Fong are typical of the tidal wave of refugees from Vietnam in recent months.

Hong Kong was adamant at first in barring the refugees. The government fears the number of Vietnamese will increase with the coming monsoon season in April and May, and officials wanted to do everything to discourage them from landing in Hong Kong.

But in the end, they had to give in on "humanitarian considerations." Malaysia and the Philippines have closed their doors.

Larry Ward, the American president of "Food for the Hungry," has a ship named the "Akuna" cruising the Gulf of Thailand carrying food to give the refugees relief at sea. But he's not in the rescue business.

The privately funded project from the United States and Canada only hands out provisions.

Along with reports from survivors and refugee experts, Ward said he believes "about 50 to 60 percent of these boat people have died while roaming with no destination."

That means more than 250,000 men, women and children have died in less than four years.

Hong Kong has arrested two members of the Huey Fong cargo ship's crew and branded all the 3,318 passengers "detainees" because the majority are ethnic Chinese. Most of the 2,161 aboard the 1,600-ton Tung An now anchored six miles off Manila Harbor in the Philippines, and the 2,700 crammed into the Hai Hong, which landed in Malaysia last November, are also ethnic Chinese.

Vietnamese, who usually make up no more than 20 percent of the passengers aboard the ships, are charged five additional taels of gold.

Minors between the ages of 7 and 17 go for half price, and the "generous" modern day merchants of human flesh give youngsters a free ride.

For a few lucky few, the cost is small.

For example, Phan Ban Can forged documents and faked telephone orders to convince officials he and his group of 71 refugees needed a boat for a special "fishing expedition" for a unique species of fish.

Can, 39, a former school teacher and liaison officer between South Vietnamese troops and South Korean infantry forces backing them, got the boat and made it to Hong Kong.

Once the host country has determined the boat people are legitimate refugees, they become the responsibility of the U.N. high commissioner for refugees, Poul Hartling, who is based in Geneva. None of the refugees has ever been forced to return to Vietnam, though Malaysia, Indonesia, Singapore and Thailand have barred many from anchoring.

Rep. Lester Wolff, D-N.Y., chairman of the House Subcommittee on Refugees, complained "the United States, France, Australia and Canada have almost entirely served as havens for resettlement, as have Thailand, Malaysia and the Philippines almost entirely borne the burden of initial refugees."

Wolff said the refugees in general have fit well into their new societies and "a key" to solving the problem "is to stop thinking of these people as burdens for the potential host nations."

U.N. officials estimate that if the current backlog is sliced away at recent rates, it will take four years to get the refugees on southeast Asian shores to permanent homes.

Only 22 of the refugees from the Huey Fong were sick enough to be hospitalized, but most suffered from diarrhea, respiratory infections and showed signs of being undernourished.

The Vietnamese were well organized. Their nominal leader was 1st Lt. Cao Tan Phuong, a physician formerly of the Vietnamese Surgeon Generals' Corps.

The 38-year-old ethnic Chinese officer became known to the Huey Fong refugees as "the General," and the name stuck with Hong Kong officials, now processing the Vietnamese as they settle into their temporary accommodations in an abandoned air Force barracks.

A baby was born at sea Nov. 28, 1978, and given the name Tran Nu Huey Fong.

Eventually the refugees will move to the back of the line of about 5,000 other refugees who have been waiting to be resettled for nine to 12 months.

Most of them want to go to the United States and France, but that could be a long way off.

Clergy issue call for aid for refugees

HONG KONG (UPI) — Leading Hong Kong clergymen Thursday sent a cable to five nations asking for increased refugee quotas and permanent homes for dislocated Vietnamese.

The Right Rev. Gilbert Baker, Anglican bishop of Hong Kong, said cables were sent to the World Council of Churches and national councils of churches in the United States, Canada, Britain, New Zealand and Australia asking for permanent settlement for more refugees.

Baker called on all Christians to put their concern for Vietnamese refugees "into action."

Lutheran Rev. Karl Stumpf said, "Governments will only help if we put them under sufficient pressure."

Stumpf, director of the Hong Kong Christian Service, said his organization plans to provide training in languages and vocational skills to 5,000 Vietnamese refugees in Hong Kong camps.

Rev. Kwok Nai Wang, meanwhile, announced a Lunar New Year surprise for 3,298 refugees taken from the freighter Huey Fong after a month of walling outside territorial waters.

His group, the Hong Kong Christian Council, obtained special permission to send packages of fruit and candy to the refugees who are currently housed in a former Royal Air Force barracks.

Lunar New Year's Day, the most important holiday for Chinese, falls next Sunday. Since fruits are symbolic of good luck and are also healthy, Kwok said the council purchased apples and oranges in addition to the candy.

Amin's grip appears shaky after eight years

crisis building?

By CHARLES P. WALLACE
NAIROBI, Kenya (UPI) — Ugandan President Idi Amin marked the eighth anniversary of his rule Thursday with many observers saying his grip on the east African country is at its shakiest.

Unlike previous years, the Ugandans announced no special plans to mark the anniversary of the 1971 coup that brought Amin to power.

The government also refused journalists' applications for permission to visit the country for the celebrations.

There was speculation the government was deeply concerned about letting outside observers see first hand the effects of the social disintegration that reportedly has taken place the last few months.

Police and army roadblocks are said to be common on all main roads in the country, shooting is frequently reported in the streets of the capital of Kampala, and the economy is generously reported to be in ruins.

A sizable number of Amin's troops — the last bastion of the president's support — are tied down along the nation's southern border with Tanzania where fighting has flared for the second time in three months.

Former President Milton Obote, whom Amin overthrew when he seized power eight years ago, has launched an emotional campaign from his exile home in Tanzania calling on Uganda's armed forces to rebel against the Ugandan leader.

The atmosphere of decrepitude has become so pervasive that a number of prominent Ugandan exiles, who previously despaired of seeing their country again, are speaking optimistically of returning in a matter of months.

Reports of events inside Uganda are fragmented and many are self-serving rumors circulated by the exiles in hopes of hastening Amin's downfall.

But few question that Amin, a former corporal in the British colonial army and a former heavyweight boxer, has presided over a reign of terror. The number of people who have been murdered in a nation of only 11 million persons has been reported as high as 300,000.

Seasoned Uganda watchers differ on the seriousness of the crisis in the country, with some agreeing with the exiles' assessment and others seeing the unpredictable Amin has in the past deftly maneuvered through a succession of crises, including a large number of assassination attempts.

The economy may now be Amin's greatest worry.

Tanzanian forces seize Uganda town

NAIROBI, Kenya (UPI) — Ugandan President Idi Amin charged Thursday that Tanzanian forces have crossed three miles into Uganda and captured a major town in the second outbreak of fighting between the East African neighbors in three months.

In a speech to the armed forces at a soccer stadium in Kampala marking the eighth anniversary of the coup which brought him to power, Amin said the Tanzanians have captured the town of Mutukula on the border between the two countries west of Lake Victoria.

Amin denied a Tanzanian report that three Ugandan warplanes were shot down during the fighting, which reportedly erupted on Saturday.

It was the second outbreak of fighting in three months. Uganda invaded and occupied 710 square miles of Tanzanian territory for about two weeks last October but withdrew after coming under international pressure.

The Ugandans burned and pillaged much of the captured area and Tanzanian President Julius Nyerere at the time vowed to overthrow the burly Ugandan dictator.

In Dar es Salaam Thursday, Nyerere issued a statement saying that if Amin decided to attack Tanzania again "the fighting will take place inside Uganda and not inside Tanzania."

Tanzanian newspapers printed photographs of dead Ugandan soldiers and of tanks and armored personnel carriers which were said to have been captured during the recent fighting.

Amin said the town of Mutukula, which straddles the 100-mile border, was captured by the Tanzanians Wednesday.

"At this moment, as I am speaking to you, they are three miles inside the border," Amin said in a speech which was broadcast nationally by Uganda Radio.

"We only had one mechanized company who were repairing equipment there including dead tanks and maybe four armored personnel carriers."

"They (Tanzania) have now photographed these tanks and APCs and the body of maybe one dead soldier they have killed to fake their victory claim," Amin said. "This doesn't worry me."

Amin did not say whether Uganda was contemplating an attack on Tanzania, but said "these people who have encroached on Ugandan soil are on a volcano. They have been sent to meet their deaths."

Amin appealed for peace with Tanzania and blamed the "current round of fighting on former Ugandan President Milton Obote."

Sugar complaint studied

GENEVA (UPI) — Australian complaints about subsidized sugar exports by the European Community are now being studied by a panel set up by the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade.

A GATT spokesman said the panel met for the first time Wednesday. Australia complained at GATT last Oct. 18 that "gigantic" subsidization of sugar exports had given the European Community an unfair share of the world market.

The GATT council decided Dec. 6 to create the panel after Australia and the Community failed to settle their dispute in bilateral talks.

The spokesman said both sides explained their respective positions Thursday, and the panel will now study the arguments.

According to GATT officials, Australia said the last straw came when the Community apparently flooded Papua New Guinea with cheap sugar. Papua New Guinea previously had been getting most of its sugar from Australia.

American envoy gives Israeli opinions on accord to Egypt

CAIRO, Egypt (UPI) — U.S. Middle East envoy Alfred Atherton reported to Egypt Thursday on his eight-day talks with Israeli leaders in Washington's renewed effort to resolve differences blocking the conclusion of a peace treaty.

Emerging from his first meeting with Acting Foreign Minister Boutros Ghali, Atherton told reporters he expected his Cairo visit to be relatively brief.

Egyptian officials said that could indicate more American agreement with Egypt than with Israel on the disputed issues — a situation that has prevailed since Secretary of State Cyrus Vance's unsuccessful Middle East mediation mission last month.

In Tel Aviv, Israel's Prime Minister Menachem Begin said that, "Despite the ups and downs in these negotiations, we will never despair, and continue to yearn with all our hearts to achieve the goal" of a peace treaty.

Atherton said he and Ghali discussed three issues "which have been the focus of my mission."

The three problem areas are Article 4 and two paragraphs of Article 6 of the American-authored draft treaty worked out at ministerial negotiations in Washington last November.

Article 4 deals with security arrangements in Sinai after Israel returns it to Egypt in a two-stage withdrawal.

Paragraph 2 of Article 6 obligates the two parties to fulfill "the treaty 'independently of any instrument external' to it."

Paragraph 5 of the same article, by far the biggest bone of contention, gives priority to the treaty over Egypt's Arab defense commitments under a 1951 collective pact.

Atherton and the Israelis indicated progress had been made except on that thorniest issue.

"We did resolve most of the issues, but not all of them," Atherton said on arrival in Cairo early Thursday. Egypt is seeking an exchange of letters with Israel that would clearly stipulate the precedence of Cairo's Arab defense commitments.

Ghali ducked a question on his reaction to what Atherton brought from Israel, saying simply, "What I hear from Mr. Atherton is always encouraging."

Addressing a Tel Aviv farmers' conference, Begin reiterated that the linking of the Egyptian-Israeli peace treaty to an "overall settlement dependent on the will of Damascus, Amman or of Syrian-occupied Lebanon" is not acceptable to Israel.

China restores capitalist rights

PEKING (UPI) — China has announced sweeping reforms restoring rights, jobs and private property to former capitalists, the New China News Agency announced Thursday.

A Communist Party Central Committee official told a meeting of some 200 former businessmen and industrialists that seizure of their rights, property and jobs was "unconstitutional," the agency reported.

The seizures were made by the "Gang of Four" during the so-called Cultural Revolution beginning in 1966 and lasting until shortly before late Chairman Mao Tse-tung's death a decade later.

In another development a high ranking Chinese official said Thursday that Tibet, whose last Dalai Lama fled to India in 1959 in protest against Chinese rule, will be opened to foreign tourists, possibly early in the 1980s.

He also confirmed reports that air fares charged foreigners traveling between Chinese cities are double those set for Chinese.

The official who announced the reforms, whose single name is Uianhu, told the audience at a meeting last Monday that "China's national bourgeoisie will recover huge sums in bank deposits and property confiscated" during the Cultural Revolution and "their original wages will be restored retroactively."

The official said their talents will be used in China's steamroller drive toward modernization by the end of the century.

The report put no value on the assets involved, but observers believe it runs into millions of dollars.

Uianhu said the Gang of Four had disrupted plans of the late party Chairman Mao Tse-tung. Mao, he said, had "adopted a policy of buying out" the former capitalists, reimbursing them at realistic rates for their property and giving them relatively well-paying jobs.

Output up for Japan car plants

TOKYO (UPI) — Japan's automobile production in 1978 hit a new high of 9,269,183 units, up 4.9 percent and surpassing the 8,514,522 units reached in 1977, the Japan Automobile Manufacturers Association reported.

JAMA said that of the total passenger cars accounted for 5,976,000 units, a gain of 10 percent from 1977; trucks 3,237,000 units, up 6.7 percent and buses 56,000 units, up 15.7 percent.

Toyota Motor was the leading producer with 2,929,000 units for a gain of 7.7 percent and Nissan Motor, with 2,393,000 units — a 5 percent gain — was second. The two giant automakers shares accounted for 57.4 percent of production.

However, in terms of the growth rate, Mitsubishi Auto Industries outdid other makers with a 25.3 percent gain and production of 973,000 units. Toyo Kogyo — maker of Mazda cars — was the best performer in 1977.

Toyo Kogyo's production totaled 650,000 units, up 6.3 percent; Honda Motor 743,000 units, up 11.7 percent; Isuzu Motor 498,000 units, up 19.3 percent; and Fuji Heavy Industries of Subaru 305,000 units, up 6.6 percent, according to the report.

JAMA also said December's nationwide output increased a mere 2 percent from the same month a year ago to 753,377 units. Motorcycle production in 1978 dropped 9.1 percent from the previous year to 483,977 units.

Turning to this year's production, the nation's 12 automakers estimate an increase of 3.1 percent from 1978 to 9,237,900 units, according to industry reports.

The reports forecast domestic shipments at 5,109,100 units, up 9.1 percent from 1978. The sharp upward prediction is based partially on the assumption that the new car trade-in cycle falls this year.

Exports including knock-down production is expected to total 4,506,000 units, down 2.5 percent from 1978. The year's appreciation against the dollar that makes export prices higher was given as the reason for the projected decline.

Oil deal drawn up by Greece, Libya

ATHENS (UPI) — Libya has agreed to supply Greece with 20 percent of its needs in crude oil for the next five years, economic coordination minister Costas Mitsotakis announced Thursday.

Mitsotakis, who returned from a four-day trip to Tripoli earlier this week, said that Greece will buy 15 million tons of crude oil from Libya, paying for it with Greek agricultural and industrial products.

An agreement to be signed in Athens next March will provide for the supply of half a million tons of crude oil in the second half of 1979 and three million tons of crude oil for each of the next five years.

The Greek minister said the two governments also agreed to cooperate in joint industrial and tourist ventures and to use the services of the recently-established Arab-Hellenic Bank for the development of their economic cooperation.

Such cooperation will include the establishment of a joint investment company and a Libyan Greek company which will produce and process vegetables and fruits and market them in Libya.

Greece's crude oil requirements are estimated at nine million tons annually.

In addition, Libya will supply Greece with 50,000 tons of ammonia, 50,000 to 100,000 tons of methanol and of urea as well as raw and semi-processed hides annually.

Sears charges federal policy promotes bias in employment

Chicago Sun-Times
CHICAGO — Sears, Roebuck & Co. has filed an apparently unprecedented suit in federal court accusing the government of formulating policies that promote employment discrimination.

Sears chairman Edward R. Telling blamed long-standing policies of federal agencies for creating an imbalance in the work force and denying equal employment opportunities to all Americans. The nation's largest retailer said the agencies have failed to coordinate efforts to correct the imbalances and have themselves violated anti-discrimination provisions.

The class-action suit was filed Wednesday in Washington, D.C., on behalf of all general merchandise retailers with more than 15 employees.

It was filed by Washington civil rights attorney Charles Morgan Jr., who could not estimate how long the litigation would take or how much it would cost. "No case like this has ever been filed," Morgan said.

The Sears chairman told a press conference here, "It is time to end government policies and practices which are working at cross-purposes, hampering real progress and discouraging voluntary efforts."

He said the nation's work force still is white-male-dominated — mainly because of such government programs as the GI Bill and veteran-preference laws. But, he said, recent government regulations require considerably higher representation of women and minorities than are in the work force.

Compounding that problem, he said, the government in 1978 raised the mandatory retirement age to 70, thereby reducing the number of entrance-level jobs available to women and minorities.

In filing the suit, Sears is taking the offensive after several years of defending its hiring programs against charges of discrimination against women and minorities.

In Washington, the EEOC called the Sears action "part of a series of court cases initiated by Sears in an effort to defend its current practices for hiring and promoting minorities and women. The reason for the government's concern about Sears will become clear in the appropriate papers before the courts."

Sears chairman Telling said that, although Sears has an outstanding record of hiring women and minorities, conflicting government employment goals make compliance extremely difficult.

Sears has about 430,000 workers. Telling said minorities accounted for 8.7 per cent of Sears' work force in 1965 and 19.9 per cent in 1977. In 1965, 1.4 per cent of the company's officials and managers were minorities; in 1977, that proportion was 10.5 per cent, he said. Women officials and managers during that period rose from 26 per cent to 36 per cent, said the Sears chairman.

Recycling record

BOISE — The aluminum recycling program conducted by Reynolds Aluminum Recycling Co. and Albertson's in Twin Falls, Boise and Pocatello brought in 725,500 pounds of aluminum during 1978.

That figure is listed as an annual record for the four-year-old program. Payments to contributors totaled $123,340.

Licenses approved

BOISE — Gary A. Glingrich, M.D., Twin Falls, and Lauren C. Shaffer, M.D., Halley, have been approved for permanent licenses by the Idaho State Board of Medicine.

Boisean elected

BOISE — Herman J. Voss of Boise has been elected president of the Idaho Council of Home Owners Warranty, a buyer protection plan.

Other new officers for 1979 are Holden Mitchell of Coeur d'Alene, vice president; DeWayne Bailey of Nampa, treasurer.

Dividend increases

GLENN'S FERRY — An increase from 5 1/2 percent to 8 percent in the preferred stock dividend of Idaho State Bank has been announced by Mary S. Knox, board chairman.

TWIN FALLS — Steven K. Berg, president of Berg Insurance, is the first Idahoan to qualify as a certified insurance counselor.

Berg attained that designation through completion of a series of seminars, passing rigorous written examinations, and meeting ethical and experience standards of the Society of Certified Insurance Counselors.

JB's lists gains

SALT LAKE CITY — Increases in revenues, net income and earnings per share have been announced for 1978 by JB's Big Boy Family Restaurants, Inc.

For 1978, revenues of $35 million were up 13.7 per cent from $30.7 million in 1977; net income of $1.26 million was up 7.5 percent from $1.17 million in 1977; and earnings per share were 70 cents, 4.5 percent higher than the 67 cents a share in 1977.

Jack M. Broberg, president and board chairman, said all three figures were records. During the fiscal year the chain opened four new stores and closed and disposed of four other units. In October, the restaurant at Burley was opened.

Net income climbs

HONOLULU, Hawaii — Amfac, Inc. reported net income of $42.3 million for 1978, or $3.27 per share, a gain of 27 percent over restated income in 1977.

Revenues for 1978 reached a record $1.5 billion.

The company also announced a 20 percent increase in the dividend paid — on common stock, with a quarterly rate of 30 cents or $1.20 a share. The new rate is effective with the March 15 payment to shareholders of record Feb. 16.

Clampdown on car theft

ITEM: "There is as much profit in dismantling cars as in auto thefts," said a police officer in one city's auto crime unit recently. Nearly one million cars in the U.S. are stolen annually, most by professional criminals — or one every 32 seconds.

ITEM: One "chop shop" in an abandoned Bronx movie theater can obtain $300,000 of stolen vehicles when police struck in a predawn raid. Presumably most of the cars, far outnumbering joy-riding teenagers who now account for less than one-third of all thefts — ship stolen cars across borders, even overseas to Midwest nations, or strip them to the frame in "chop shops" and sell the parts.

ITEM: More than half the auto replacement parts sold have been removed from stolen cars. The parts, sold separately to repair shops, add up to more than the sticker price of the whole car in a showroom. Engines, transmissions, and other components of vehicles stolen at night are shipped before dawn to repair shops in other states.

ITEM: It is against this gruesome background of theft that pioneering legislation is being proposed in New York state mandating stiff penalties for auto theft crimes.

Not only is the legislation designed to slash the state's $300 million-a-year stolen-car racket but it also could serve as a model for a federal law aimed at reducing the $3 billion-a-year loss from vehicle thefts.

Since auto theft is so big a money-maker for the pros — and also tax-free — the proposed legislation is aimed at eliminating profits for the "crooks."

The primary target is the business side of the theft operations, for it would require penalties of up to four years in jail for such crimes as illegal auto dismantling, distribution of stolen parts, tampering with vehicle identification numbers, and possession of auto parts having tampered identification numbers.

"In denying criminals the easy, nearly risk-free profits they now enjoy and thereby reducing auto thefts, the legislation, if enacted, will protect motorists against the soaring cost of auto theft insurance," says John C. Harper, chairman of the New York-New Jersey Anti Car Theft (ACT) Committee.

The New York-New Jersey ACT Committee is a volunteer organization of men and women in law.

enforcement, government, and industry who are determined to cut auto thefts by 25 percent in 1979 in the New York metropolitan area. They are convinced the new "penalty" approach will be a big factor in reaching that goal in New York — and if this turns out to be the case, a model will indeed be set for the entire U.S.

Meanwhile, you can, on your own, slash the odds on your car being stolen merely by faithfully using the basic theft-prevention devices. As Harper puts it:

"Thieves know their chances of being caught increase in proportion to the amount of time it takes to get away with the goods."

• Park in a well-lighted area.

• Park with front wheels turned sharply to right or left, making it difficult for the professional to tow your car away.

• Close all windows, lock all doors.

• Always activate any theft deterrent device you may have installed on your car.

• Put packages or valuables out of sight. CB radios, tape decks, and other expensive items in full view invite theft.

• If you park in a commercial lot or garage, leave only the ignition key with the attendant. Retain all others. Make sure that your key number does not appear on the key you leave.

• Keep license and registration in your wallet or purse. If you leave these documents in the car, thieves can use them to sell the car if stolen, or to impersonate you when they are challenged by police. Owners who indiscriminately leave keys, titles and other identifiable material in their vehicles often return to their residence only to find that they are the victims of a burglary.

• If you have a private garage, use it. Lock both the vehicle and the garage.

It is still hard to believe how many of you invite thieves by failing to take the simplest precautions of locking your cars and pocketing the keys. Harper's latest figures show a full 17 percent — almost two out of 10 — recovered stolen cars had been left with their keys in the ignition.

Movie men check out Sun Valley-Ketchum scenes

By CHRISTOPHER BOGAN
Times-News writer

SUN VALLEY — Twentieth Century-Fox Television producers will arrive in Ketchum today to begin preliminary location work on a $1.5 million television movie.

Shooting of the two-hour made-for-television movie isn't scheduled to begin until March, but the film's star, executive producer, director and a Twentieth Century-Fox vice president will scout out the Ketchum and Sun Valley area this weekend for potential film locations, according to Fox Locations Manager Paul Rainlow.

The movie, called "Swan's Song," will feature actor David Soul, star of the television series "Starsky and Hutch."

Soul will also co-produce the film with Hollywood Producer Rene Valenti. Valenti, who has worked primarily on big screen movie productions, is best known for his films "Contract On Cherry Street," starring Frank Sinatra, and "The Last Hurrah," starring Carroll O'Connor.

Soul and Valenti will be accompanied on the location's work by Director Jerry London and Fox Vice President of Productions Mark Evans.

"Swan's Song" tells the story of a former Olympic downhill ski racer who tries to stage a comeback. The completed film will be bought by ABC Television and aired as a special movie of the week.

The film's budget has been set at about $1.5 million. Rainlow said.

This hefty budget for a television movie will be needed to cover the production costs of the movie, which will be filmed entirely on location in Blaine County, according to Valenti.

Rainlow said production crews will begin work at the end of February and the initial shooting will start about March 1. The locations manager said the Hollywood movie-makers hope to complete the film in about 30 days.

Reservations have been made at the Sun Valley Lodge and Ketchum's Holiday Inn to house about 130 actors, cameramen and other production crew members who will be in the area for the duration of the film's shooting.

Soul, who portrays Hutch in the popular television police series, will star in the movie as Jesse Swan.

The movie will be filmed on Bald Mountain and in local restaurants and Inns throughout Ketchum and Sun Valley. Local residents will also be used as extras and bit players in the movie, Rainlow noted.

In the movie, Soul portrays downhill ski racer Jesse Swan. The story is set two years after the last winter Olympics, when Swan was to race but mysteriously walked off the mountain without skiing.

The movie focuses on why he never skied that race and why he decides to try a comeback two years later. Twentieth Century-Fox Television is going all out to get good racing footage for the film. Rainlow noted part of the movie will be filmed during a pro downhill race to be scheduled for about mid-March on Bald Mountain's Harriman downhill course.

Anti-Church group avoids disclosure

By DAVID MORRISSEY
Times-News writer

BOISE — Five Idaho Republicans have formed a corporation to collect and spend Idaho and out-of-state monies in a two-year campaign aimed at unseating Sen. Frank Church, D-Idaho, the Times-News has learned.

Two of the Republicans, Don Todd and Jake Hansen, are also founding members of a political action committee known as "Anyone But Church." The other three members of the new corporation — known as the "Diogenes Institute Inc." — are Mark Dunn, the lobbyist for the Idaho Association of Realtors, Vye Peterson, the secretary to the legislative House Revenue and Taxation Committee, and Todd Williamson, a staff assistant to Attorney General David Leroy. Peterson is from Eagle. The four other members are from Boise.

Three of the members — Todd, Hansen, and Williamson — also worked for former Attorney General Wayne Kidwell, a Republican who has said he may challenge Church in 1980. But according to Hansen, the organization is not supporting Kidwell or any other candidate.

The stated purpose of the organization, in its Articles of Incorporation papers, is "to advance the study of federal issues and problems, and the stands taken on these issues and problems by federal office holders," and "to evoke attention to these issues and problems on the part of others by means of research and dissemination of information."

The name for the organization was chosen, Hansen said, "because Diogenes was a person searching for truth, and that's what this organization is doing."

According to Hansen, their organization was formed as a corporation rather than a political action committee at least in part to skirt the disclosure requirements of Idaho's Sunshine law.

Under the Sunshine law, a political action committee supporting a specific candidate would have to list every contribution of more than $50, the name and address of the contributor, and any expenditures of more than $50. A corporation, which merely seeks to conduct education campaigns, without supporting any one candidate, is exempt from those Idaho law requirements.

The intent behind forming the corporation is, through public education on foreign and domestic issues, to replace Senator Church with someone more conservative, Hansen said. As long as no specific candidate is endorsed, disclosure requirements of federal election laws also won't apply to the corporation.

According to Sharon Snyder, a staff assistant with the federal election commission, political action committees involved with federal elections are required to report all receipts and expenditures and itemize all receipts and expenditures in excess of $100.

Snyder said the FEC is now trying to determine if an organization not specifically called a PAC, but which has "an influence on federal elections," will also be required to make these disclosures.

The FEC will issue an advisory opinion on this question in the near future, Snyder said. It is possible, though not yet certain, she added, that organizations like the Diogenes Institute might be required to meet federal disclosure requirements.

According to Hansen, the five members will meet later this month to plan future strategy.

Hospital delays expansion to decide on private firms

By LORAYNE O. SMITH
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — The Magic Valley Memorial Hospital board will delay architectural planning on its proposed $9 million remodeling project until it decides whether to turn operation over to a private company.

Board members are in the process of hearing formal management contract proposals from three outside firms. The board decision to delay the remodeling plans was made Monday night upon the suggestion of Ivan Skinner, board member.

He said plans would probably have to be altered if a private management offer is accepted.

The second of three management proposals was presented to board members Wednesday night by representatives of the Northwest Medical Foundation of Portland, sponsored by the Seventh-day Adventist Church.

Mardian J. Blair, foundation president, in giving the results of his firm's survey of MVMH, agreed with several conclusions given by American Medical International aides Monday night.

Officials from both firms say they have learned that employee morale is poor, resulting in low productivity, and there is general lack of communication between medical staff and the administration.

But the Northwest foundation of officials emphasized the "unique opportunity" MVMH presents for major growth and development with the proper management and attention.

"Once the board and medical staff would unite we feel it would go in a beautiful way," Blair said.

Blair said MVMH has a large potential for growth and development as a regional medical center because of its geographical location but that it greatly needs more adequate patient rooms and bathroom facilities.

He said he sees no need for replacing the facility, but does see extensive remodeling needs including the emergency room and larger patient rooms.

The hospital had over the equivalent of five fulltime staff for every patient-day in 1976 — which is considered well beyond the norm for well-managed hospitals, Blair said.

"Therefore, it can be assumed that the hospital is approximately 25 percent overstaffed," the report said, although it noted that because MVMH already serves "in an abbreviated way" as a regional center and the high out-patient volume additional staffing is required.

Blair predicted a payroll savings of approximately $750,000 over a period of time by reducing staff through normal attrition, while still being able to maintain quality care.

He said the hospital's medical staff feels the board's proposed remodeling program does not address needs and that — the facility — is "ineffectively managed. Also, he said, doctors are generally dissatisfied with the nursing staff.

Additional beds are needed at MVMH and efforts to obtain approval for them through the Health Systems Agency should be "aggressively pursued," Blair said.

Jack Wagner, Northwest foundation vice president for financial affairs, said MVMH is financially sound and has made a reasonable profit, but there was too much reliance on the tax revenue.

"We feel a hospital of this size could generate more revenue and not depend upon tax subsidies," he said.

He agreed with AMI officials that the hospital's accounts receivable are too high, with 31 percent of the discharged accounts receivable over 120 days old as of Jan. 20 this year.

Wagner said his foundation could produce "substantial improvement in the case flow and other business office procedures, an $8,000 to $10,000 reduction in property insurance and an estimated $35,000 savings in liability insurance.

The final management contract proposal will be presented Monday at 8 p.m. by representatives of Hospital Affiliates International, headquartered in Nashville, Tenn.

Health district wants to fight toxic waste

By LORAYNE O. SMITH
Times-News writer

MAGIC VALLEY — Magic Valley health officials are seeking to further control the hazards of pesticides and pesticide residues.

The South-Central Health District has applied for $1,000 through the Environmental Protection Agency to assist in safeguarding humans and animals in from the deadly residue of pesticide containers.

Dr. Wayne Carle, district health director, said the potential danger varies among the eight area counties in the district. Even though the problem seems more apparent in the summer when crop dusting is under way, there always is danger of residue from old pesticide containers contaminating someone's source of drinking water, the director said.

Gerald Hurst, supervisor of environmental health, told the district board Wednesday afternoon that the $1,000 grant could be used to help clean up accidents when pesticides are spilled and also to prevent such incidents.

Public health officials in this district have inaugurated voluntary safety guidelines — with which an increasing number of area industrial firms are complying, Hurst said.

He has developed agreements with firms handling the chemicals to notify both the fire department and health department of the storage location of the material. There was about 60 percent compliance last year, Hurst said, and cooperation appears even better this year.

The problem first arose about five years ago. Hurst said when a 55-gallon drum broke out near the Alley bar and restaurant in Twin Falls. Unknown to fire department officials, pesticides were stored just across the street.

Fortunately the fire was soon contained, but if the wind had carried the blaze to the storage site, the result could have been deadly fumes for Twin Falls residents, Hurst said.

The health department took that event as a challenge, the official said, to develop voluntary safety guidelines both for storage of pesticides and the more prevalent problem of safe disposal of containers.

Airports and sanitary landfills are the two main places where empty pesticide containers are left, Hurst said. The problem at airports is under the jurisdiction of the Department of Agriculture, but each county is responsible for the operation of its own sanitary landfill.

The only safe disposal place is the missile site at Grand View, Hurst said. Health department personnel are obligated to visit county landfills only twice a year.

Counties are legally responsible only for household waste so there are many unsolved problems where licensed pesticide operators should leave empty containers.

Last summer 17 steers died in Jerome after the wind blew an empty sack over a fence and into water the cattle drank. All the tissue examined on the dead steers contained the chemicals from the pesticide, according to Dr. Robert Thackeray, a Jerome veterinarian and health board member.

Another near disaster occurred last year in a fire involving pesticides in Albion, where a fireman became ill from the fumes, Hurst said.

The environmentalist said that several other health districts throughout Idaho have copied the local district's agreement form for voluntary cooperation with industrial firms.

"Only three states have adopted EPA regulations concerning handling of pesticides, Hurst said. He believes the voluntary program the local health district has worked out will prove helpful when and if EPA regulations become mandatory for the states.

Murder charge hearing scheduled for Tuesday

HEYBURN — A preliminary hearing for Alfred Ortega, 25, of Heyburn on second degree murder charges may be held Tuesday in Minidoka County Magistrate court.

The hearing was originally set for Friday—but county prosecuting attorney Robert Workman asked for a change as the pathologist, one of his witnesses, would be unable to participate on Friday.

Court officials said if the prosecution and defense can get witnesses to court on Tuesday the hearing is expected to be held at that time.

Ortega was arrested Saturday and charged with the shooting death of Anna Maria Parias, 27, of Heyburn.

Police Chief Robert Vasquez said the young woman was shot in the lower back with a small caliber revolver. She died en route to the Minidoka Memorial Hospital. Ortega was arrested by Heyburn and Minidoka County officers later in the day and charged with murder.

Chief Vasquez said domestic problems apparently led to the shooting at the Parias home in Heyburn.

Rupert gets crank fire calls

RUPERT — Some half dozen crank calls were received Thursday by the Burley and Rupert fire departments.

Rupert Fire Marshall Thayne Taylor said the potential seriousness of sending heavy fire trucks out on slick roads to unneeded destinations is causing officials to ask the phone company to trace any subsequent calls.

The Burley department received three or four calls reporting false fires Thursday morning, Taylor said, so they notified the Rupert fire department.

Just after this time the Rupert office received two such calls. Because they suspected these were false alarms a deputy was sent to the address, Taylor said.

Raleigh E. Smedley

BURLEY — Dr. Raleigh E. Smedley, 87, longtime Burley resident, died Thursday morning in Cassia Memorial Hospital at Burley.

He was born Nov. 22, 1891, at Bountiful, Utah. He attended Bountiful schools and graduated from the University of Utah. He later graduated from Western Dental College at Kansas City, Mo., with a DDS degree.

He married Laura Hedrick on Jan. 14, 1913, at Kansas City. She died Feb. 29, 1968. He married Rebecca Wilson on March 22, 1969, at Burley. Following his first marriage, Smedley returned to Bountiful where he practiced dentistry — his father's profession for one year. In 1914 he moved to Downey where he opened a dental office and operated a movie theater.

He moved to Burley in 1920 where he has since resided. He practiced dentistry until 1973, after 60 years of active practice. He was a member of the Idaho Dental Association and had served as the Idaho delegate to the National Dental meeting in Cleveland several years ago.

He was active in scouting and had served as president of the Snake River Area Council of the Boy Scouts of America in the 1920s. He was a life member of the Burley Elks, having been one of the first members to be initiated by the Burley Lodge. He served in various offices of the lodge during the 1930s.

Dr. Smedley was a lifetime member of the Burley Odd Fellows Lodge. He was a member of the Burley Chamber of Commerce and with his wife Rebecca was honored as outstanding business and professional man and woman of the year for 1972. They were later awarded life memberships in the Chamber of Commerce. He was a member of the Rotary Club for over 50 years.

He is survived by his widow of Burley; two sons, Jack E. Smedley of Salt Lake City and Russell E. Smedley of Twin Falls; a daughter, Mrs. Lloyed (Lorraine) DeWitt of Nampa; a stepson, Ronald Wilson, of Kennewick, Wash.; four sisters, Mrs. Virginia Winn and Mrs. Gloria Ray, both of Centerville, Utah, and Mrs. Peru Evans and Mrs. Fortia Hatcher, both of Walnut Creek, Calif.; a brother, Orval Smedley of Bountiful; 12 grandchildren; nine great-grandchildren; and a great-great-grandchild. He was preceded in death by his first wife, a son and a granddaughter.

Funeral services will be conducted at noon Saturday in the Burley LDS 3rd, 5th and 7th ward chapel with Bishop Kenneth Fronk officiating. Burial will be in the Pleasant View Cemetery.

Friends may call at the Payne Chapel this afternoon and evening and at the place of service one hour prior to the funeral on Saturday. The family suggests that those who desire may make memorials to the Idaho Youth Ranch or the Cassia Health Care Foundation.

Students get acquainted with new O'Leary school

By KEN HODGE Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Thursday was ninth graders' day to get acquainted with shiny new hallways and classrooms in Vera C. O'Leary Junior High School.

About 300 O'Leary freshmen listened Thursday morning as Principal Carl Snow and his staff explained the new school then received a tour of the three buildings.

Friday will be the eighth graders' turn, Monday seventh graders will go through orientation procedures and Tuesday, all 800 students will complete their first full day of classes in this brand new school.

"We just go through the whole thing from stem to stern," Snow explained Thursday night. "We talk about pride and maintenance of the facility. We talk about what it actually cost the taxpayers and how long it will be here."

Students will learn their new school has perhaps the best fine arts department in the state. It includes a theater with seating for about 400, a drama room, a choir room and a band and orchestra room.

The stage in the new theater is equipped with modern lighting and backstage area adequate for producing live plays, concerts and dance performances.

The ninth graders' first day went "pretty good," according to Snow. He said after about an hour and a half of explanation, teachers took eight students at a time on a complete tour of the new three-building complex.

"We wanted small groups so they could all ask any questions they wanted to," Snow explained. "The kids were really good and seemed to enjoy it."

The $3.25 million school includes 55 teaching stations for current enrollment of 900 students. It was about a year and a half in construction and more than seven years in the planning.

After touring the building, Snow said, students convened in the new "common" area, which serves as cafeteria and assembly hall, for lunch. After lunch, the students attended an abbreviated fall schedule of their seven-period school day to become accustomed to the new building.

Snow said he and his staff will repeat the procedure for eighth and seventh graders in preparation for resumption of classes Tuesday.

He said students will not need to make up the unexpected vacation days they had this week while moving into the new school. The days off fall under the category of "emergency" days.

600 pay tribute to Corder

TWIN FALLS — Law enforcement officers from throughout Idaho were among the estimated 600 persons attending funeral services Thursday afternoon for Sheriff Paul N. Corder of Twin Falls County.

Members of Corder's staff and several who have retired met at the courthouse to attend services in a group and in uniform.

Sheriffs and officers from Blaine, Gooding, Jerome, Lincoln, Cassia and Minidoka counties and Kelly Pearce, director of the Idaho Department of Law Enforcement, was among those attending.

Other Twin Falls county elected officials, district and magistrate court judges, Twin Falls police officers from other cities and Idaho State Police officers attended. Other agency representatives who paid tribute included the Border Patrol, Federal Bureau of Investigation, and other law enforcement officers from the state level.

A procession of police cars traveled from the Reynolds Funeral Chapel to Sunset Memorial Park cemetery with blue lights flashing in tribute to the late sheriff.

Rev. Ernest Wilson of the United Methodist Church in Twin Falls conducted services at the funeral chapel. Final rights at the cemetery were under the direction of the Kaylor Masonic Lodge in Twin Falls; with Richard Pence in charge.

Sheriff Corder died Saturday of cancer at the age of 59. He had spent 28 years as a law enforcement officer in Twin Falls County the last 11 years as sheriff. He was also a former Kimberly police chief and had been range deputy in the county before becoming sheriff in 1967.

Brain research scientists gather

SUN VALLEY — About 500 noted scientists are attending the 12th annual winter conference on brain research at the Elkhorn Village Inn through Saturday.

Chairman Bill McClure, of the Department of Biological Science at the University of Southern California, says the purpose of the conference is to study several different aspects of brain function.

"We look particularly at the physiology and the psychology of brain activity, involving studies in chemistry and a number of medically related aspects such as schizophrenia and manic depression," McClure said.

Tuesday night's keynote speaker was Marshall Nirenburg, who won the Nobel prize in 1968 for his work on the synthesis of proteins. Nirenburg, noted for his research on the chemical properties of brain cells, is the chief of the laboratory of biochemical genetics at the national Institutes of Health in Bethesda, Md. The conference, involving 75 panels and workshops, is held annually at various western ski resorts.

Three highway projects underway

TWIN FALLS — Three federal and three state highway projects are currently under way in Magic Valley as part of 21 projects involving 82 miles and $43.8 million.

In Twin Falls, U.S. 33 is scheduled for improvement at West Five Points over a distance of 102 miles. Work will involve widening the roadway, paving and sealing and reconstruction of irrigation structures. The work also includes planting of trees, shrubs and plants, underground sprinkler systems, lighting and traffic signals. State Department of Transportation officials said there will be minor traffic interference during construction. Work is scheduled to be completed during the coming summer.

Another current Twin Falls project includes 1.225 miles of U.S. Highway 30, on Second Avenue North and East and 47 miles of State Highway 74 on Shoshone Street. Work will include construction of the roadway, drainage structures, planing, paving, signing and lighting. A traffic signal will be included with some traffic interference. This is also scheduled for completion in 1979.

Another state project is on State Highway 24 from Shoshone to Dietrich and involves 6.19 miles of roadway construction and surfacing. Traffic interference can be expected. No completion date has been set.

Federal projects include continuation of the remainder of I 80 from Hammett to Glens Ferry, scheduled for completion this summer and repair of the Heyburn bridge over Snake River and the approach to the bridge. This is also to be finished this coming summer. Another Interstate project involves work in Cassia and Power counties over 3.78 miles. This is scheduled for completion by the spring of 1980.

Gooding bridges due for inspections

GOODING — The five bridges over the Little Wood River in Gooding will get a physical examination this year at no cost to the city.

City Engineer Bill Block told the Gooding city council Monday night a combined federal and state program now in effect will help cities check bridges to see which ones need replacing or repairing.

Block said his firm, JUB Engineering of Twin Falls, has plans to examine several bridges in Magic Valley and could easily include the five in Gooding.

Block said the program pays 30 cents a square foot for engineers to examine the bridges. Cities are then asked to pay 11 percent of the total cost.

Block said his firm will examine the bridges for the amount the program will pay and not charge the city the extra 11 percent.

The council signed the contract and Block said the bridges would be examined when warmer weather comes and the ice in the river bed has melted.

Minority quota memorial critical of IRS passes

By DAVID MORRISSEY
Times-News writer

BOISE — The Idaho House passed and sent to the Senate Thursday a memorial criticizing the Internal Revenue Service for attempting to "establish minority quotas for tax-exempt schools."

But according to the Boise district director of the IRS, the House action is protesting something that doesn't exist.

The measure in question, House Joint Memorial 2, was sponsored by Rep. Wendy Ungriht, R-Boise. According to Mrs. Ungriht, the proposed rules by the IRS are "designed to deny tax-exempt status to private schools that practice racial discrimination."

Many of these private schools are sponsored by religious organizations.

The rules will "greatly change the religious climate of the schools," she said, forcing "money to be set aside to recruit" minority students, that "would result in the lowering of academic standards, and would mean 'enormous' added costs to taxpayers."

The representative addressed the House for three minutes, which then approved her memorial without debate on a unanimous voice vote.

Following that vote, Philip Sansotta, the Boise district director of the IRS, said the proposed rules will do none of the things Mrs. Ungriht described.

"The IRS is under legal obligation not to grant tax-exempt status to private schools which practice racial discrimination," Sansotta said.

The IRS was ordered to follow this policy in a 1970 Supreme Court decision which was reaffirmed in a second court decision in 1971, he added.

In determining which schools racially discriminate, Sansotta said, many factors are considered, including the racial composition of schools. But quotas are not established.

"Racial quotas themselves would be a discriminatory thing," Sansotta said. "It would violate the law to establish quotas." The IRS is merely following the requirements of the Supreme Court decision, he added.

As to the lowering of standards in minority recruitment? "That's not the way I understand the proposed ruling," Sansotta said.

The IRS "does not attempt to establish public policy. We attempt to reflect established policy," Sansotta said.

The proposed regulations are merely an attempt to further clarify the process by which a tax-exempt status is granted to a private school, Sansotta said.

Federal law prevents that status from being given to schools which practice racial discrimination, and the IRS is charged with determining which schools those are, he added.

Should the proposed regulations be adopted, they would have "almost no effect whatsoever" on Idaho because of its small minority population, Sansotta said.

He said no date has been set for a final determination on whether the proposed rules will be adopted.

The Idaho Senate will probably vote on HJM 2 next week.

Unsuccessful words

Senate President Pro Tempore Reed Budge, R-Soda Springs, listens to Sen. Ken Bradshaw, R-Wendell, debating Wednesday in favor of a bill introduced by Sen. Dean VanEngelen, R-Burley, limiting state spending. The bill failed to receive the required two-thirds majority.

1% plans stagnated, Budge says

BOISE (UPI) — Sen. President Pro-Tem Reed Budge, R-Soda Springs, said Thursday implementation of the 1 percent initiative is presently "stagnated" in the Idaho Legislature.

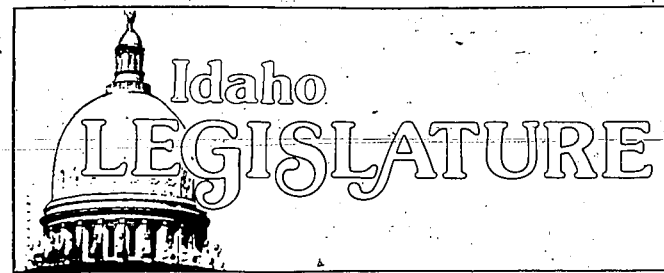

He said the Republican leadership is concerned that a subcommittee composed of members of both parties in the Senate and House has not made any progress in implementing the initiative.

"We have to have some bills drafted and be working on something," Budge said.

He said that the majority leadership planned to meet with the chairman of the House Revenue and Taxation and Senate Local Government and Taxation committees to get something going.

The leadership has addressed the key issues: the date, bonding, override and cleaning up the language," Budge said. "We have ask the committees to address these issues. These are the most pressing areas."

The House Revenue and Taxation Committee, headed by Rep. Steve Antone, R-Rupert, is dealing with much of the 1 percent initiative and has been debating its implementation date. Several dates have been proposed, including a two year phase-in, with the first to start in July of this year.

House committee okays pay limit measure

By RICHARD CHARNOCK
BOISE (UPI) — Saying there is too little time to consider anything else, Republicans pushed a Senate resolution out of the House State Affairs Committee today to reject all proposed increases in legislative compensation.

There was a redrafted resolution on the agenda of the committee which would have allowed the lawmakers to accept an increase in their daily expense money but the Senate proposal went to the floor with approval, 17-7. Later, the redrafted proposal was introduced.

Chairman John Reardon, R-Boise, moved the Senate resolution from the bottom to the top of the agenda minutes before the committee meeting after nudging with Majority Leader Walter Little, R-New Plymouth.

Little made the motion to move the Senate resolution to the floor, saying the Legislature must act by next Thursday or the recommendations of a citizens' committee to increase both pay and expenses would become law.

That made it imperative, he said, to act on this resolution now. He said there is too little time remaining to run the redrafted resolution through both houses without suspension of the rules. He said suspension in the Senate would be impossible.

Minority Leader Patricia McDermott, D-Pocatello, reminded the committee that each house is independent of the other and urged the House to make its decisions independent of the Senate. She disagreed with contentions that the Senate would not suspend rules.

Miss McDermott said the Senate resolution was similar to one before this committee earlier which Attorney General David Leroy advised was drafted improperly. She urged the committee to consider the redraft of that one before acting on the Senate proposal.

Little acknowledged the Senate resolution had some unnecessary language. But he said there is "no way in the world" to run the redrafted resolution through both houses without suspension of the rules of the way this Legislature feels about the 1 percent initiative and a cutback in government.

"The people have spoken concerning government," Assistant Majority Leader Jack Kennevik, R-Boise, said. "If we're going to be leaders, as they've asked us to be, we better start leading and not following and get this out to the floor."

Reardon agreed with the leadership that there would be no way to get suspension of rules in the Senate on a redrafted House resolution.

BOISE (UPI) — There would be no financial savings in having a single university system in Idaho, members of the state Board of Education told the joint Health, Education and Welfare committees today.

Board member A.L. Alford of Lewiston said there would be no benefit and "you would be adding a bureaucratic system."

Both Alford and Janet Hay, a board member from Nampa, said it would not save money.

Idaho is "too small to have any advantage from the one university system," Alford said.

Rep. Christopher Hooper, R-Boise, had asked whether combining the state's three universities into one chancellor system would not improve the financial picture.

Mrs. Hay said creation of a chancellor system would merely result in a "beefed up version" of the present Office of the State Board of Education and "it would be more expensive."

She said there could be an advantage by having Idaho State and Boise State universities under the University of Idaho because then they would come under the North Idaho school's land grant charter. This, she added, would make it easier to shift programs around the state.

But this advantage, Mrs. Hay said, "would not save any money."

Alford said he favored a chancellor system, but agreed there would be "no cost savings." He said the present state setup was a better bargain economically.

Earlter, Dr. Lee A. Vickers, president of Lewis-Clark State College, told

Educators say single university setup not cheaper because Idaho is too small committee members that changing the status of the Lewiston school would probably would cost more money.

He said there would be the costs of "phase-out and phase-in" by making it a junior college.

Sen. Leon Swenson, R-Nampa, asked the board whether there would be any cost savings from eliminating programs at the Lewiston school and shifting them to other institutions.

Dr. Len Seppi, Lava Hot Springs, board president, replied: "There would be no savings at all."

Sen. John Barker, R-Buhl, had raised the question about changing the status of Lewis-Clark.

That state building has 900 faulty panels

Building authority sits on complaint

By STEVEN K. WAGNER
BOISE (UPI) — The State Building Authority won't take action Thursday on a complaint by the architect of the State Office Building in Idaho Falls that some 900 concrete panels don't meet specifications.

The Building Authority's non-action paves the way for arbitration or litigation involving Monrock Co. of Idaho Falls, the maker of the panels.

Warrington Construction of Idaho Falls, the general contractor.

The architect, John Dixon of Idaho Falls, claims the precast panels are distorted and irregular, discolored, warped, bowed, out of square, and cracked.

Warrington Construction agreed specifications in the "base of the $2.5 million contract were not met, but Monrock contends they could be met with modifications."

Monrock has threatened to sue Warrington, which has refused to pay for the panels. The firms now face either arbitration or a court battle.

Until the problem is rectified, the building cannot be completed and override costs to the panel portion of the project may hit $150,000. That almost totals the amount budgeted for the original panel work.

"These things are well in excess of the tolerances allowed in the specifications," said John Dixon, "and I do not accept them. They destroy the aesthetic and monolithic concept of the building."

Woodrow Arrington, whose firm owes $110,000 to $140,000 to Monrock, agreed.

"I'm not satisfied, so we intend to correct it. I don't want to look at it (the building) for the next 50 years and decide I'm ashamed of it," he said.

Monrock called in specialists to examine the work and they found it adequate, but other specialists determined the work fails to meet specifications.

A slide presentation prepared by Dixon shows the panels to be discolored and out of alignment.

The problem was recognized by Dixon in August and he has repeatedly tried to have it rectified. Some 49 panels were replaced with ones Dixon also found to be inadequate.

The authority, after hearing the arguments during a hastily-called special meeting, said it could do nothing unless a change order to alter the specifications was requested by Dixon. Dixon declined to make such a request.

Idaho legislative roundup

BOISE (UPI) — Here is a roundup of the Idaho legislative scene Thursday:

• Republicans forced to the House floor a Senate resolution rejecting a legislative pay increase, then allowed introduction of another one to pacify angry Democrats.

• By voice vote, the Senate unanimously adopted a memorial asking Congress to cut out the "red tape" in granting licensing for construction of nuclear power plants.

• A resolution to renew Idaho's participation in the Western States Forestry Task Force was approved 27-7 by the Senate and sent to the House.

• Sen. Ken Robison, D-Boise, and Art Manley, D-Coeur d'Alene, opposed the measure, saying tax dollars were being used to provide a lobby for the forest industry.

• State Board of Education members told the joint Health, Education and Welfare committees that the present higher education system is adequate. They said a single university system would save no money.

• Senate Republicans announced for the first time in hours that they would support a measure to raise the sales tax to 10 percent.

• The House Business Committee recalled from the floor its bill to lift the interest ceiling on home mortgages and then agreed to introduce a new one that eliminates the interest on second mortgages.

called for introduction of a "clean-up" bill that eliminates all mandatory minimum sentences now in the criminal statutes so the Legislature can set specifically which ones should be mandatory.

• The House Business Committee voted to introduce a bill to require creditors to deduct payments made on revolving loans prior to calculating the interest on the account.

• House members asked Congress to prevent the Internal Revenue Service from setting minority quotas for private schools.

Ricks topples Southern Idaho in overtime

REXBURG — Ricks College blew all of a 16-point lead to an inspired comeback by College of Southern Idaho Thursday night but picked it back up in overtime to register a 56-54 decision.

CSI, which nearly lost it despite the comeback on a tip that came just after the buzzer in regulation play, actually played well enough with their feet to win it but lost it with their hands. With nine seconds left in regulation — and the score tied at 50 — the Eagles were guilty of stepping across the line on a throw-in situation. Then with 10 seconds left in the game, a personal foul was called and then a technical foul. Although Ricks, holding a two-point edge, missed the ensuing free throws, retention of possession proved the difference. CSI had to foul with three seconds left and although again Ricks missed the charity, CSI didn't have time to get off the final shot. Actually, it was a missed free throw that killed the Eagles. It came with 22 seconds left in overtime when Todd Anderson hit the first of two for a 54-52 Ricks lead. He missed the second but brother, Shawn Anderson, followed it back in and gave Ricks a six-point lead.

That had come just after CSI had missed three straight inside shots and followed shots. After that CSI could get only a long bomb from Richard Prospero and CSI didn't get the ball again until the three-second mark.

About the only bright spot for CSI all night was for the first time since Christmas the Eagles got their offense moving. But all of that came in the final 10 minutes after Ricks seemingly had things tucked away at 44-28.

CSI had worked its way into the unplayable position with a very slow offense and little or no scoring due to a poor shooting night. Meanwhile, Ricks hung back in its 1-2-2 zone. It looked like a Viking laugher as Ricks, up just 21-20 at intermission, caught fire and bounced into a 30-22 lead in the first five minutes.

David Thirkill started bouncing around first and three in five points but for a long while it didn't seem that CSI had awakened soon enough.

Then with 5:28 left, Jerry Williams hit a jumper and came right back with a steal and three-point play. Thirkill followed that with a pair of three throws and Williams was there again with a field goal. Suddenly CSI was knocking 47-41 with 4:58 to play.

Over the rest of the game Ricks managed to hit just three of seven free throws and that allowed CSI to come back. Thirkill hit another charity and Williams scored again before Dave Siever got a free throw for Ricks. Mark Stroud pulled CSI to within four and Williams collected two more charities with just over two minutes left. Ricks turned the ball over and Williams made them pay with another jumper that tied things.

CSI got the ball back and wasted 1:17 off the clock before calling timeout. What might have happened never was known due to the in-bounds violation.

Ricks then had the final chance. Missing a long shot, then a follow shot. The desperation tip went in but was ruled after time had run out.

Ricks controlled the overtime tip but turned it over. CSI worked for nearly 50 seconds and turned it back. With three minutes left Chris Owen hit a Ricks free throw but Thirkill then showed the Eagles ahead for the first time since the mid first-half with two charities. Todd Anderson slipped inside to put Ricks back on top with 1:58 to play and then came the situation where CSI missed three straight shots.

Ricks then got its inverted three-point play from the Anderson brothers and the shooting was over — or just getting started depending on which side you were sitting.

In the first half CSI just couldn't get the ball down. They managed ties at 4 and 6 before Ricks took off on buckets by Sievers and Owen. It took 12 minutes of playing time before the Eagles managed their first lead. Stroud and Williams getting back-to-back buckets for a 12-11 advantage.

But that lasted quick as Shawn Anderson replied with two free throw. CSI then got points from Prospero, Thirkill and Williams while Ricks was getting a charity from Orsino. It was CSI's high water mark — 1815. A turnover by CSI set up a bucket by Orsino and two Shawn Anderson free throws assured Ricks of the halftime lead despite a closing bucket by Fred Hall.

By halftime CSI has a poor nine for 26 field goal shooting. Ricks wasn't much warmer but held the lead with seven free throws to CSI's two. The difference there was CSI fouled during shots.

Orsino's bomb off the tip got Ricks going in the second half and Larry Tobler came back with a shot-out-of-the-corner. That started the blitz that had the Eagles on the verge of being blown out.

The defeat dampens CSI hopes of hosting the regional tournament since it still has 174 North Idaho left on the road schedule plus TVCC. Ricks travels to North Idaho this weekend while CSI returns to Twin Falls to host Central Oregon. That CSI-Oregon game will be preceded by a Flier-Kimberly high school match beginning at 5:45 p.m.

Ashe continues comeback, upsets Vilas in tourney

PHILADELPHIA (UPI) — Tenth-seeded Arthur Ashe, continuing the momentum from his 1978 comeback, upset second-seeded Guillermo Vilas Thursday night to join Jimmy Connors, John McEnroe and Vitas Gerulaitis in the quarterfinals of the $250,000 U.S. Pro Indoor Tennis Championships.

Ashe knocked off Vilas 6-3, 7-5; Connors, the top seed, survived a 20-point tie-breaker to oust 15th-seeded Wojtek Fibak, 6-4, 7-6; 3 seed McEnroe defeated Hank Pfister 6-2, 7-6; and No. 4 Gerulaitis outlasted John Kriek, 4-6, 6-2, 7-5.

Ninth-seeded Roscoe Tanner, last year's runner-up to Connors, knocked off No. 5 seed Eddie Dibbs, 6-7, 6-2, 6-2; sixth-seeded Brian Gottfried beat Pat DuPre, 6-3, 6-2; No. 7 Harold Solomon defeated Gene Mayer 6-4, 2-6, 6-1; and Geoff Masters beat George Haskis 6-4, 6-4.

Ashe, kept up his strong serve-and-volley game to win the first set, breaking Vilas' service in the eighth game. Both players exchanged service breaks in the second set to go into the 11th game tied at 5-5, but Ashe got a vital break in that game when Vilas netted a backhand and won the match when his opponent was long on a return of service.

Connors was unusually erratic with his ground strokes but won the first set mainly on Fibak's numerous errors. Fibak came close in the second set but Connors fought off three set points in the 12th game to force the tiebreaker, which he won, 11-9, when Fibak hit a backhand into the net.

Gerulaitis and Kriek matched volleys eyeball to eyeball for two hours and 13 minutes in the tournament's liveliest duel thus far. Kriek won the first set on a long return of serve, but Gerulaitis came back with passing shots to square the match. Service was held through the first 11 games of the final set but Gerulaitis, leading 6-5, took the match when Kriek netted an overhead.

Solomon won his first set when Mayer netted a backhand, but his 22-year-old opponent broke service in the 4th and 8th games of the second set to knot the match. Solomon, however, came back and passed the eager Mayer frequently in the final set to finish on top.

Tanner, gaining more consistency with his serve while hitting his ground strokes with good velocity, lost the first set after Dibbs took the last three points of a 7-3 tie-breaker.

But Tanner swept the last three games to win the second set and broke Dibbs' serve in the third game of the final set to gain control of the match.

McEnroe dominated his match with Pfister for 12 games before his lanky opponent found his stroke.

Pfister took three games in a row to earn a 4-3 lead in the second set but the match went to a tie-breaker, which McEnroe won 8-6 when Pfister hit a return of serve out.

Gottfried, a semifinalist here last year before losing to eventual champion Connors, gained control of his match midway through the first set, going from a 3-2 lead to win the last three games. He swept through the second set and took the match when a lob by his opponent went out.

Geoff Masters of Australia gained another quarterfinal berth with a 6-4, 6-4, win over George Hardie, who upset 12th-seeded Ili Nastase on Wednesday.

Sussman advances

BOISE (UPI) — Former Wimbledon champion Karen Sussman rolled over No. 3 seed Brigitte Cuypers of Holland in straight sets Thursday to advance to the semifinals of the $25,000 Avon Futures — Boise Women's Tennis Tournament.

Sussman, LaJolla, Calif., swept past Cuypers, 6-0, 6-4, and said she was playing her best tennis in years. The 36-year-old triumphed at Wimbledon in 1962.

No. 6 seed Sherry Acker, Kalamazoo Mich., shook off Leslie Allen, New York, N.Y., in the first set with a 7-4 tiebreaker score and collected a 7-6, 6-4 win.

And Briton Anthea Cooper came from behind to eliminate the No. 7 seed, Laura Dupont, Matthews, N.C., 4-6, 6-2, 7-6. Ms. Cooper took the third set tiebreaker, 7-5.

Pairings for the semifinal round to get underway Friday are: Sylvia Hanika, West Germany, v. Ariz; Stephanie Tolson, Phoenix, Ariz. v. Sussman; Sandy Stap, Deerfield, Ill. v. Acker; Cooper v. No. 2 seed Jeanne Duval, Dallas, Texas.

Aaron nabs San Diego open lead

SAN DIEGO (UPI) — Veteran Tommy Aaron, desperately needing a victory to regain exempt status, battled near-gale wind and rain Thursday for a 3-and-par 69 and the first round lead in the $250,000 San Diego Open.

The 41-year-old Aaron, who exhausted all his exemptions last year after finishing 102nd on the money list, went out in 5-under 31 and was still 5-under with three holes left when a pair of bogeys spoiled what seemed like a spectacular round, considering the weather.

As it was, Aaron still was able to stay in front and held a 2-stroke lead over four other veterans — Billy Casper, Greer Jones, Jerry McGee and Vic Regalado.

All four and Aaron played their opening round on the eastern North course at Torrey Pines.

The best score among those who played the tournament's South layout was an even-par 72 by Jim Simons.

Also in at 72 were former PGA champion Jerry Pate, Dana Quigley, Jack Stradlin and Joe Porter. That foursome played the North course.

Meanwhile, 1978 Player of the Year Tom Watson, making his debut, this week, scored 74. Lee Trevino took a 75, U.S. Open champion Andy North a 76 and defending San Diego champ Jay Haas an 81.

Aaron made the tournament field by qualifying on Tuesday. A week ago, at the Phoenix Open, he failed to qualify, and after having lost his exempt status, he needs a victory to regain it.

Aaron played the backside first in the opening round and immediately jumped into the lead while most in the field of 156 struggled against the strong wind sweeping the seaside courses.

Aaron sank a 20-foot putt on the 10th hole for a birdie and made another one of 20 feet on the 12th. He two-putted on the 14th for his third birdie, then eagled the 18th when he got on in two strokes and sank a 12-footer.

Coming back, Aaron bogeyed the 7th when he missed a six-foot putt and also bogeyed the 8th when he flew the green.

"All things considered," said Aaron, "I'm very happy with the round. I played excellent until those last three holes when the wind finally caught up to me and I lost my concentration."

An uplifting victory

Sophomore Dwayne Frazier of Buhl wrapped up his match early against Mino's Kurt Hollbough Thursday night. Hollbough was off the mat frequently as Frazier jumped to a 6-0 lead and has never in trouble. Final score: Frazier 13, Hollbough 6. Complete story page B5.

Michigan 49, Michigan St. 48

ANN ARBOR, Mich. (UPI) — Freshman guard Keith Smith hit a four shot with no time left Thursday night to give Michigan a 49-48 victory over fourth-ranked Michigan State, crippling the Spartans' chances for a Big-Ten title.

Earvin Johnson, who fouled Smith, tied it 48-48 with 51 seconds to play but Michigan ran the clock to 15 seconds and called timeout to set up a last shot. The Wolverines were unable to get off a shot and Smith was fouled by Johnson as he attempted a pass to Phil Hubbard.

Hubbard scored 9 of his 13 points in the second half to bring the Wolverines back from a 39-33 halftime deficit. There was some confusion as to whether Smith should be given two shots or have a 1-and-1. The Spartans were denied a timeout because there was no time showing on the clock.

Ohio State 73, Northwestern 61

COLUMBUS, Ohio, (UPI) — Kelvin Ransey scored 17 points and Herb Williams added 15 Thursday night to carry ninth-ranked Ohio State to a 73-61 victory over Northwestern in a Big Ten game.

Ohio State, which raised its overall record to 12-4, leads the conference with a 7-0 record.

The Buckeyes, who never trailed, led by as many as 13 points in the first half. Northwestern, paced by Jerry Marfise, cut the margin to 32-26 with two minutes left in the half. Ohio State led 36-27 at intermission.

Ohio State, which from 10 to 15 points in the second half, was unable to completely shake the Wildcats. For Ohio State, Carter Scott and Jim Ellinghausen had 11 points each and Jim Smith added 8. Brian Gilson had 16 points for Northwestern, 4-12 overall and 0-7 in the Big Ten. Marfise scored 13 points and Bob Kians 11.

Iowa 58, Illinois 52

IOWA CITY, Iowa (UPI) — Ronnie Lester scored 18 points Thursday night when Iowa stunned eighth-ranked Illinois 58-52 to move into sole possession of second place in the Big Ten.

The Hawkeyes, 5-2 in the conference and 12-4 overall, took a 29-29 lead at halftime and then slowed down the game for nearly three minutes in the second half. The move virtually shut off all scoring for Illinois, 4-3 in the league and 19-3 overall.

Florida St. 71, G. Washington 68

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Murray Brown scored 27 points Thursday night when Florida State came from behind after the second half to register a 71-68 victory over George Washington.

The Seminoles went ahead for the first time, 56-54, midway in the second

Indiana 82, Wisconsin 61

BLOOMINGTON, Ind. (UPI) — Ray Tolbert scored 20 points Thursday night when Indiana cracked Wisconsin's 2-3 zone defense en route to an 82-61 Big Ten victory.

Tolbert led five Hoosiers scoring in double figures in a game that was not close after the first five minutes. Indiana shot 99 percent from the field during the first half and held a 37-24 lead.

The Hoosiers, 3-4 in the conference and 11-8 overall, shot nearly 90 percent from the floor in the second half as Wisconsin came no closer than 16 points over the final 15 minutes. The biggest lead for the Hoosiers was 72-48 with four minutes to go.

BYU 98, Colorado St. 83

FORT COLLINS, Colo. (UPI) — Sophomore Danny Ainge scored 26 points and Brigham Young shot 64 percent from the floor Thursday night when the Cougars defeated Colorado State 98-83 in a Western Athletic Conference game.

Freshman Devin Durrant scored 22 points for BYU, which boosted its record to 14-5 overall and 4-0 in the WAC. Barry Young hit 26 points for the Rams, who dropped to 9-9 on the season and 1-3 in league play.

The game was close the first 20 minutes, with six ties and 15 lead changes.

Bradley 74, N.M. State 62

PORTLAND, Ore. (UPI) — Robert Gunn and Slab Jones scored 15 points each to spark New Mexico State to a 74-62 triumph over Bradley Thursday night in a Missouri Valley Conference game.

Utah 64, Wyoming 60

LARAMIE, Wyo. (UPI) — Danny Vranes scored 20 points and Utah reversed a five-point-half-time deficit Thursday night to defeat Wyoming 64-60 in a Western Athletic Conference game.

The loss dropped the Cowboys to 1-3 in the conference and 10-7 overall, while the Utes rose to 3-1 in the WAC and 14-6 on the season.

Besides Vranes, the only other Utah player in double figures was Tom Chambers, whose layup with 1:14 to go put the Utes in front for good.

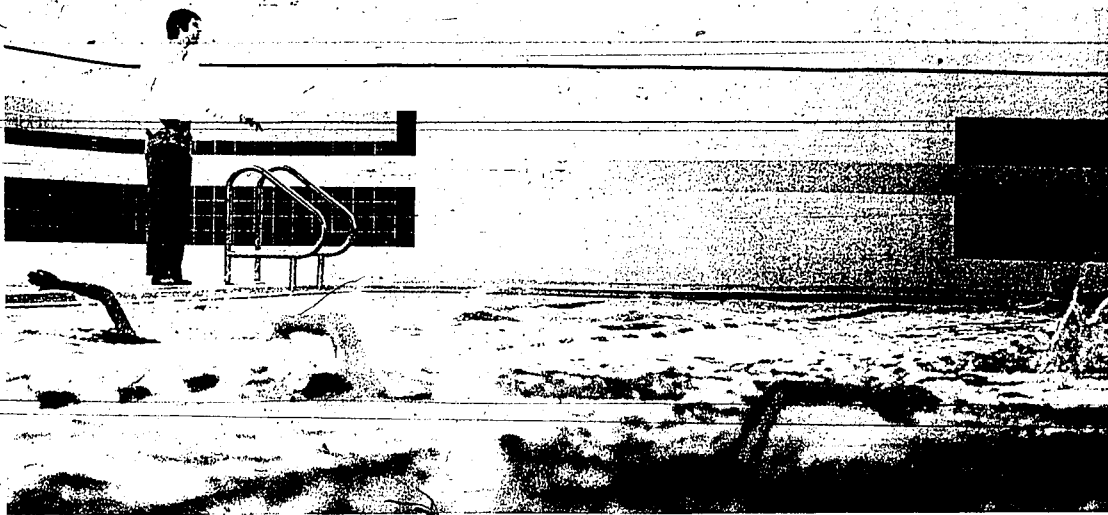

Leading scorer for Wyoming was Doug Bessert with 21, followed by Kenneth Ollie with 18 and Charles Bradley with 13.

The Cowboys took the lead with 10:19 in the first half but gave it up with Chambers' score late in the game. Utah's win continues its dominance of the series, now at 50-42 in favor of the Utes.

Swim club splashing to recognition

By GARY ELIASSEN
Times-News writer
TWIN FALLS — The Magic Valley Swim Club has come a long way since 1975 when its full-fledged indoor swimming program was started.

"It used to be that we would finish seventh or eighth at state meets," said Coach Pete Blumenthal. "But now we're pretty well recognized as the number two team in the state."
The local club qualified 18 persons for this weekend's junior olympic competition at the Twin Falls YFCA. Boise, the largest club in the state and ranked number one, will be bringing about 27 swimmers.

Bob DeLaat/Times-News

Coach Pete Blumenthal shouts instructions to his swimmers as they concentrate on this weekend's junior olympics

Other teams which will be represented include Idaho Falls, Payette, Rexburg, Pocatello, and Blackfoot.
For the Magic Valley club, it's one of the high points of the season — a chance to compete against the best in the state.
"The kids are really looking forward to this," said Blumenthal, a former aquatics instructor at the Y. "It's hard for them not to get 'up' when there's so much riding on it."
Though the swimmers got today off, practice sessions have been during the rest of the season.

"We haven't changed our schedule much this week," he said. "It's more of a thing of working with their concentration and improving technique."
Those practice sessions sometimes can be brutal. For the better swimmers, it involves getting up at 7 a.m. six days a week, and then an afternoon practice session on Tuesdays and Thursdays.
"It's a grind everyday for some of these swimmers to keep going. Each swimmer has to pick himself up and just get going," said Blumenthal.

"Presently, there are about 50 members on the team. Most of the members are in the 8 to 13-year old age bracket."
"We've got a young team, we realize that," said Blumenthal, "but it's a team that's been slowly making progress."

Along with Blumenthal's influence on the team, having the YFCA facility has helped to allow for year-around training.
In 1975, when the four-lane 25-yard pool was opened, the swim club's competition was limited to summer. But during the last four years, the club has paid a $3,500 rental fee for the pool's use in winter, and the results are beginning to show.
As an example, one of the club members, Shari Stalley, was rated one of the top 15 swimmers in the nation in her age division last year. Tim Shaub, too, made his mark on the 10-year old division with a second in the 50-yard freestyle Intermountain regional championships last year.
The fact that the YFCA built a 25-yard pool is a plus, said Blumenthal, because it is regulation size.

Money to support the club comes primarily from funds earned from a yearly aquathon, a summer meet, and donations from parents.
"The parents are a big part of this organization," Blumenthal said. "If it wasn't for their dedication and hard work, this club wouldn't be keeping."
Many of the parents will be there tonight, Saturday and Sunday when about 90 swimmers will converge on the YFCA.

It will be the first meet ever sponsored by the newly-formed Snake River AAU Association in southern Idaho.
Events get underway tonight at 6 with the longer distance events and the older swimmers. Saturday and Sunday's action starts at 9 a.m. and winds up about 1 p.m.

Valley drops Buhl in overtime

EDEN-HAZELTON — Wendy Schwarz saved the Valley girls with a field goal in the closing seconds and then helped the 114 Vikings topple the Buhl-Indians 31-25 in overtime Thursday night.
"It was a tight game through the first half although neither team shot well. In the third quarter Valley hauled into a 2-14 lead but then went completely scoreless for a long while.
Meanwhile, Buhl closed up and actually took the lead at 23-21 with a minute left in the game. Valley pulled even with 30 seconds remaining on Schwarz's shot and both teams missed closing chances to win it.
Valley controlled the overtime tip and Wendy Schwarz made it pay off with a field goal. Valley then scored on its next two possessions, Chris Black and Tracy Schwarz connecting, to nail down the decision.
It was the season finale for Valley, which takes its 171 record into the district tournament at Wendell Monday.
Valley also took the preliminary 37-18.

Filer 48, Declo 33

FILER — The Filer Wildcats, holding the lead much of the time, shook away in the third quarter and went on to defeat the Declo girls 48-33 Thursday night.
The Wildcats had trouble controlling the inside where Declo's Hatt took advantage of lob feeds to score 17 points. Filer blitzed into a 15-8 first quarter lead with Declo rallying back to within five at intermission.
Filer got scoring from almost everyone in the third period and pushed out of reach 37-24.
Filer is scheduled to make up a game at Buhl at 1 p.m. Friday to complete its season and then advance along with Declo to the district playoffs in Wendell Monday.

Detroit hammers Lakers 135-100

PONTIAC, Mich. (UPI) — Bob Lanier scored a game-high 28 points and Kevin Porter had 18 assists Thursday night to power the Detroit Pistons to a 135-100 victory over the Los Angeles Lakers.
Detroit scored 38 points in the third quarter and 36 in the final quarter to rack up its biggest point total of the season and extend its winning streak to three games, the longest of the year.
M.L. Carr had 22 points and John

Long and Proter added 21 each for Detroit. For the Lakers, Adrian Dantley scored 23 points and Jamaal Wilkes 16. The Pistons held Los Angeles center Kareem Abdul-Jabbar to 13 points.
Detroit led by as many as 23 points in the third quarter and took a 99-71 advantage into the final 12 minutes of play. The Pistons took the lead for the first time in the second quarter, then outscored the Lakers 12-6 in the final four minutes of the first half to take a 61-51 halftime lead.

Supersonics edge Hawks 100-98

ATLANTA (UPI) — Gus Williams scored 23 points to lead the Seattle Supersonics to a 100-98 victory over the Atlanta Hawks Thursday night.
Seattle, trailing most of the game, ran off 10 straight points and tied it 88-88 with 6:4 remaining.
John Drew, who topped Atlanta with 39 points, put Atlanta ahead 98-97 on two free throws with 40 seconds left.

Williams put Seattle ahead 98-96 on a jumper from the free throw line with 26 seconds remaining. He sank one of two free throws with seven seconds left to give Seattle a two-point margin.
Atlanta led at the half 57-41 and 82-74 going into the fourth quarter.

UCLA beats Washington St.

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — Brad Holland scored 20 of his 22 points in the second half and forward Kiki Vandeweghe added a career-high 21 points Thursday night, sending the seventh-ranked UCLA Bruins into first place in the Pacific 10 Conference with an 89-71 victory over Washington State.
Holland, who hit only 1-of-4 shots from the floor in the first half, connected on 10-of-12 in the second half, most of them coming from 20 feet. Bryan Rison had 20 for the Cougars and David Greenwood added 18 for the Bruins.

The victory improved UCLA's conference record to 2-2 and overall mark to 13-4. Washington State is now 5-3 and 13-13.

Kentucky outlasts Auburn

AUBURN, Ala. (UPI) — Jay Shilder converted an Auburn turnover into a layup Thursday night to lead Kentucky to an 86-83 overtime victory over Auburn in a Southeastern Conference game.
The game was sent into overtime at 72-72 after Kentucky's Kyle Macy connected on an outside shot. With Auburn leading and 13 seconds remaining in overtime, Auburn's Rich Valacich misplayed a pass, Shilder picked it up for a layup and Kentucky went ahead 84-83.

N.C. slips past Wake Forest

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (UPI) — Mike O'Koren, still bothered by a sprained ankle, scored 19 points, including four fouls shots down the stretch, to send second-ranked North Carolina to a 76-69 victory over Wake Forest in an Atlantic Coast Conference game

Thursday night.
The Tar Heels held off the Deacons — the only team to defeat them in ACC season play — by hitting 16-of-18 free throws in the last six minutes. North Carolina, 15-2, held on to its ACC lead with a 6-1 mark.

Kimberly matmen defeat Valley

KIMBERLY — It was basically the same story Thursday night when the Kimberly Bulldogs won the last four weights and defeated the Valley Vikings 37-21 in a dual wrestling match.
The victory ran Kimberly's record to 7-1 in duals and the Bulldogs wind up their season by hosting Filer next Thursday.
Valley stayed in the battle or ahead throughout the lighter weights until Kimberly came up with three pins and a forfeit to clinch things.
Results of the matches, Kimberly men listed first, 101 pounds, Davis pinned by Earl; 108, Bennett won by forfeit; 115, Prescott decisively pinned; 122, Hansen decisively by Stewart; 139, Phillips decision by Hensley; 155, Prescott decisively by Baker; 141, Wasko decisively Steinmetz; 148, Palmer pinned by Stennett; 158, Climer pinned Sorenson; 170, Jackson pinned Dixon; 189, Foster pinned by a heavyweight, Zapala won by forfeit.

Zimmer claims Boston staff best in years

BOSTON (UPI) — Boston Red Sox manager Don Zimmer says he thinks the team will have the finest pitching staff in the last six years when it opens the season, despite the losses of Luis Tiant and Bill Lee.

"I feel when we're ready to leave Winter Haven, we'll have the best pitching staff in my six years in Boston," Zimmer told reporters Thursday at the Boston baseball writers dinner. "I'm not too concerned about our pitching."

Zimmer said Dennis Eckersley, Mike Torrez and Bob Stanley are envisioned as starters. He said a fourth starter would be either free agent Steve Renko, southpaw Bob Sprowl or Andy Hassler, or one of several minor league prospects.

The Red Sox have lost two starters in Tiant, who signed with the New York Yankees and Lee, who was traded to Montreal.

"Renko can give us six or seven strong innings and that's what we're looking for. We think he can help us. And (minor league manager) Joe Morgan told me that four of his pitchers are ready," Zimmer said.

Zimmer said he has received rave reviews about pitcher Win Remerswaal, who has been hurling off-season ball in the Caribbean.

"Jack McKeon has told me that he is the best pitcher this winter in Puerto Rican ball," he said.

Zimmer said he was trying not to be concerned about the status of Bill Campbell, who was troubled last season by recurrent arm and shoulder problems.

"No one knows about Campbell. It's just a guess right now. I'm going into spring training hoping for him but not depending on him. If he comes around, it will be a big plus," Zimmer said.

Zimmer also predicted the Red Sox would be in the race down to the wire "Just like the past two seasons. And nobody in the AL East will win 100 games this year. The division is just too tough."

Zimmer revealed he had been depressed "for about two days" after the Yankees had beaten the Red Sox to win the AL East.

"I was driving down to St. Petersburg and every 100 miles or so I would look up and yell 'Bucky Dent, Why Bucky Dent?'"

Dent, not known as a power hitter, hit a three-run homer which turned around the playoff game and gave the Yankees the spark to win.

Koufax joins Dodgers' staff

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — In a public relations coup that may have been designed to bolster their image following the loss of free agents Tommy John, Lee Lacy and Bill North, the Los Angeles Dodgers, Thursday signed Hall of Famer and former Dodger great Sandy Koufax as a pitching instructor.

The quiet-spoken, introspective Koufax, 43, has acquired a reputation as something of a recluse since retiring from baseball in 1966 because of an arthritis left elbow.

The three-time Cy Young Award winner — in 1963, 1965 and 1966 — appeared at a news conference with all the Dodgers brass, including Dodger President Peter O'Malley and Dodger Vice President in charge of player personnel Al Campanis.

"I finally decided I wanted to do something again and it's hard to stay away from the one thing that you've done well," Koufax told a jam-packed room of reporters at a restaurant near Dodger Stadium.

"I've talked to Peter and Al about coming back with the Dodgers. They'd ask me if I had any interest in coming back and I said I'd let them know if I ever was."

"This summer I started to think about it and now seemed like the right time. For whatever reason, I don't know."

Koufax, who pitched a National League-record four no-hitters in his 12-year Dodger career, will be on the Dodger team plane to go to spring training at Vero Beach, Fla., Feb. 23.

He will be in Florida four or five weeks working with Dodger-pitchers along with Dodger pitching coach Red Adams and Dodger minor league pitching instructor Ron Perranoski.

Looking lean and tan, Koufax was asked to capsize in 30 seconds what he has done in the last 12 years he has been out of baseball.

"I really can't tell you very much," he said. "Do I have to use the full 30 seconds?"

Koufax did color commentary work for NBC-TV for the first six years of his retirement before quitting, he said; he never felt comfortable on television. He moved to East Haldon, Maine, with his wife, the daughter of actor Richard Widmark, and then to Paso Robles, Calif., where his main preoccupation has been playing golf.

Koufax built a reputation as the best pitcher in baseball after conquering his control problems. In his last six seasons, he compiled a 120-47 record.

At the height of his career at 30 years old and coming off a 27-9 season, Koufax stunned the baseball world by retiring shortly after the Dodgers lost the 1966 World Series to Baltimore.

His doctors told him if he continued to pitch he could become a cripple.

In 377 games and 2,325 innings as a Dodger, he struck out 2,396 batters and walked 817. He won 165 games and lost 87.

Before the 1966 season, he held out with Dodger right-hander Don Drysdale as a team. Koufax emerged with a $125,000 contract and Drysdale with a pact for $110,000.

Koufax became uncomfortable Thursday when a reporter asked him what he would be worth if he were playing in today's inflated, multi-million dollar free agent market.

"I have no idea," he replied. "I really don't know."

O'Malley, who was seated beside Koufax, remarked, "It would be just as high as it would take to get him."

The reporter quipped to O'Malley that Koufax would want to negotiate with Drysdale, and Koufax finally smiled.

"...Today we wouldn't have to," he said.

Little League elbow overrated?

PROVO, Utah (UPI) — Two university researchers and a radiologist say parents and coaches shouldn't worry about children injuring their elbows in little league baseball, but the game needs to be changed to reduce the mental strain on pre-teens.

The researchers said a joint disorder — called "little league elbow" — is not as serious as previously believed. They said past studies failed to use control groups, which reduces the validity of those early reports.

The study was conducted on 328 persons by Dr. Rulon Francis, director of physical therapy at Brigham Young University; Dr. Thomas Bunch, chairman of the physical education department at Atlantic Union College; and Dr. Brent Chandler, chief radiologist at Utah Valley Hospital in Provo.

"X-ray examinations of the elbows of our test and control groups showed former little leaguers have less evidence of residual elbow damage than persons who never participated in organized baseball," said Francis.

The tests were conducted on the two groups at least 10 years after the little league group ended its participation in baseball.

"The long-held assumption that excessive throwing during the preadolescent years is detrimental has imposed many regulations that have dominated the youth league programs — baseball in particular — for more than two decades," the researchers said.

"Perhaps a change in our thinking is now in order. Our study found 1.5 percent of the former little leaguers with evidence of residual elbow damage. Ironically, 2.8 percent of the control group — those persons who had no little league experience — showed evidence of residual damage to the throwing elbow."

Francis said, "We also found that the incidence of residual elbow damage was essentially the same, no matter what position the young persons had player or the number of years played."

"Little league elbow previously was thought to be primarily an affliction of pitchers," he said. "Former pitchers, however, were more likely to report they currently experience pain, tenderness, or limitation of movement in their throwing arm."

Francis said previous studies of little league elbow were "hindered by their failure to use a control group to examine the incidence of elbow damage in persons who never played organized baseball."

"Little league elbow was first described medically in 1960, involving pain, inflammation, and degeneration of the structures of the immature elbow."

But the three researchers said they would rather see changes to reduce the "psychic impact imposed by the intense competitive atmosphere prevalent in little league programs, with less worry about the effect throwing a curve ball will have on the elbow."

Snake strikes back Stabler disclaims allegiance to Raider organization, Davis

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (UPI) — Kenny Stabler, the bearded, free-spirited quarterback who led Oakland to the NFL championship just two years ago, now says he has no loyalty to either the Raider organization nor to owner Al Davis.

Stabler, who has resisted most interviews since October while his team stumbled to a mediocre 9-7 season record and missed the playoffs for the first time in seven years, told The Birmingham News, in an interview published Thursday, he had some things he wanted to say, and then wanted to be left alone for three or four months.

"I have no loyalties to the Silver and Black anymore," he said. "They don't owe me anything and I don't owe them anything. I'll play as hard as I can, because I have loyalties to my teammates and to myself."

The former University of Alabama star, Wednesday denied he had any connection with the planting of a white powdery substance, which police tentatively identified as cocaine, in the rented car of a critical California reporter who went to Stabler's home town of Gulf Shores, Ala., Tuesday to interview the veteran quarterback.

Gulf Shores' police released no new information Thursday on an investigation into the incident.

Stabler, in an interview conducted in Gulf Shores, said he and former coach John Madden, who retired at the end of the season, were made scapegoats by Davis and reporters in the Oakland area.

"As the year went along our owner, the genius, started taking shots at me," Stabler said. "He released statements and knocks that really hurt me."

"The club, and the owner, should have backed the team. They ask for loyalty from the players. I think that should work both ways."

But Stabler never said he wanted to be traded, and said he would fulfill his contractual obligations.

"I have two years and an option year left on my current contract," he said. "I'll honor that and go from there. Maybe I'll retire and maybe not."

"I can't say right now, it took me one year to learn an awful lot about the Oakland organization and the sportswriters of the area. I learned fast to take the bitter with the sweet."

While the bad 1978 season caused a split between Davis and Stabler, the quarterback said he grew closer to Madden.

"John and I took all the heat, and as a result we became closer and closer," he said. "We almost felt deserted. I remember John telling me one day, 'Basically, all we have is each other.' It was very true."

In Oakland, meanwhile, Madden and Stabler's teammates defended their quarterback.

"I've known Kenny a long time and I'm sure he'd never do anything like that," Madden said.

Pete Banaszak, who said he knew Stabler as well as anyone on the team, said Stabler was under a lot of pressure, but it didn't change his actions.

"He was his same old self, getting around the way he's always done since he's been with the Raiders," Banaszak said. "Other than not talking to the press, I didn't see anything different at all."

Stabler denied hints that his lifestyle in the Gulf Coast area, which has been dubbed the "Redneck Riviera," had anything to do with the Raiders' slump.

"I reported to camp at 210 pounds this year, lighter than I've ever been," he said. "I was in the best shape of my life. All the players commented on how much thinner I looked."

He said he wanted to be left alone for three or four months, but gave the interview because "I couldn't let some things that have been said go unanswered."

KEN STABLER ... owes loyalty to teammates only

Buckeyes pick defensive coach

COLUMBUS, Ohio (UPI) — Dennis Fryzel, a native of Garfield Heights, Ohio, has been named defensive coordinator for the Ohio State University football team, coach Earle Bruce announced Thursday.

Fryzel, a 1964 graduate of Denison University, has 14 years of football coaching experience.

Fryzel served as defensive coordinator at Tampa University under Bruce in 1972 and served as head coach at Tampa in 1973 before the school dropped football.

In 1976 he served as defensive coach with Tampa Bay of the National Football League and he returned to college football in 1977 as defensive coordinator at Syracuse University and spent the past season as defensive coach at the Air Force Academy.

Bill Mallory, former head coach at Colorado, who had first shot at the job as OSU's defensive coordinator, turned down the offer.

Hard-hitting Chris Harbaugh of Gooding hopes to be on target this Saturday like he was in Reno.

16 bouts planned for Gooding fights

GOODING — A tentative 16-match fight card has been announced by Bud Godby, promoter of Gooding Boxing Club's Golden Crown Championships which take place this Saturday. The fights will begin at 8 p.m. at Gooding High School's gymnasium.

Headlining the matches will be Godby's own son, Dyrk, who is pitted against Sonny J. Miles of Portland in the 165-pound middleweight division.

Godby stressed that these are only tentative matches and that the list could change by fight time. He explained that some clubs may decide to send different fighters and that last-minute injuries may keep some fighters from showing.

The following are the fights which are scheduled as of Thursday:

- 119 pounds — Andy Mensker of Portland vs. Ron Martin of Spokane;
- 130 — John Jackson of Tacoma vs. Alfred Chavez of Blackfoot;
- 134 — Don DeVoe of Spokane vs. Speedy Bucksin of Ft. Hall;
- 147 — Pat Bailey of Burns, Ore., vs. Henry Sylvester of Tacoma;

- 140 — Art Liggins of Pocatello vs. Charles Allen of Tacoma;
- 156 — Phil Grace of Orem, Utah, vs. DeWayne Jamison of Tacoma;

- 175 — Rich Zamorra of Pocatello vs. Bret Lytle of Portland;
- 147 — J.C. Wade of Portland vs. Randy Tophel of Spokane;
- 147 — Charles "Machinegun" Carter vs. Henry Chavez of Blackfoot;

- 139 — Chris Harbaugh of Gooding vs. Dave Carrillo of Burns, Ore.;

- 125 — Bobby Newcomb of Portland vs. William Clay of Spokane;

- Hywt. — Alex DeLuca of Portland vs. Jeff Allen of Kanab, Utah

- 165 — Delbert Williams of Portland vs. James Ioni of Orem, Utah

- 165 — Dave Dickinson of Burns, Ore. vs. Frank Armstrong of Tacoma;
- 160 — Mark Knaup of Twin Falls vs. Mark Whitla of Portland;
- 165 — Dyrk Godby of Gooding vs. Sonny J. Miles of Portland.

Knaup, Godby aim for Olympics

By GARY ELIASSEN

Times-News writer
MAGIC VALLEY — Dreams of boxing at the 1980 Olympics are shared by Dyrk Godby of Gooding and Mark Knaup of Twin Falls.

Both are realistic about their chances.

Godby: "I would like to think I could make it all the way, but it's a tough road and a lot of luck is involved."

Knaup: "I think I can get to regionals, but from there on I don't know that much about the other fighters."

To make the Olympics requires that each of them win at state and regional levels plus establish a good record during the year. The Olympic trials will come in the fall.

Godby and Knaup are using different training methods to fulfill their goal. Godby has left the state of Idaho and gone to Portland, Ore. where he feels he can get more exposure and better competition. Knaup is doing most of his training in a backyard gymnasium of his coach W.J. Moran in Twin Falls.

"I'm just now starting to feel good again," said Godby, 20, who has chalked up an 82-12 record since he began fighting at age 12.

The Gooding fighter is training under the close eye of former U.S. International coach Ed Miberger in Portland. It's a rigorous schedule involving total dedication.

"I'll be fighting almost every weekend until June now, and so I've got to watch my diet and keep on working out," he said. "Boxing is an individual sport — unlike football where you have others to rely on and you can sit back and loaf sometimes."

Godby, a former starter for Gooding's high school basketball team, works out three to four hours a day six times a week. He runs four to five miles each day.

He's looking forward to Saturday's fight in Gooding against Portland boxer Sonny J. Miles.

"It's real important to me," he said. "Every fight is important from here on out."

He started his comeback from his saddle bronc injury three months ago when he won a fight in Portland. Since then he has recorded two more victories.

Knaup, 19, a 1977 graduate of Twin Falls High School, also is recovering from an injury which has hampered his training schedule.

He suffered some torn ligaments on the right side of his ankle just after the fights in Twin Falls in November. Saturday's fight in Gooding will be his first bout since that injury.

"The boxer trains at Moran's gymnasium four or five nights a week. "I want to go as far as I can on the amateur level," he said. "If I do my best I think I can make the Olympics."

At 168 and 6-1, Knaup has won about 23 fights and lost seven in his career. "I lost my first four when I was 16 and that was discouraging, but I've kept at it," he said.

He has seen his confidence grow over the years since he first started boxing.

Foster sets talks with Cincinnati

CINCINNATI (UPI) — A Pittsburgh attorney representing Cincinnati Reds slugger George Foster says he'll meet with Reds President Dick Wagner next week to discuss his client's contract.

Foster, who led the National League in home runs and runs batted in last season, has a contract that expires at the end of the 1979 season.

Attorney Tom Reich said he expects to meet with Wagner on Thursday and Friday for talks on Foster's contract which expires at the end of the 1979 season.

"The last few weeks we've just had conversations over the telephone," said Reich. "This time we'll talk business. Whether there'll be movement I can't say."

Foster hit 40 homers and knocked in 120 runs to lead the National League in both categories last season. He was named the league's most valuable player in 1977, batting .330 with 52 homers and 149 runs batted in.

Jimmy the Greek

Colts, Raiders, Twins eye L.A.

NEW YORK — Some leftovers from the Super Bowl scene.

With the greatest contest in Super Bowl history now part of the official record, the NFL heads into the off-season with a number of unsettled problems. Despite the protestations of commissioner Pete Rozelle, it is a known fact that Baltimore and Minnesota are conducting negotiations with the L.A. Coliseum search committee, which is attempting to find a replacement for the Los Angeles Rams who will be moving to Anaheim in 1980.

In addition the same committee remains convinced that the best chance of finding a replacement is with the Oakland Raiders. For one thing, the Raiders are in the process of negotiating a new lease with the Alameda Coliseum, the old one due to expire in 1979. And if the negotiations do not go well, the Raiders could well be persuaded to move south.

Another thing, Oakland has the following concession from the owners in the NFL. If the Raiders do decide to move, they can do so unilaterally. In the past approval for such a move had to be unanimous. However, the NFL has had its share of legal problems over the unanimous rule, and in court action the league has indicated that now there need only be 21 clubs required to grant approval for moving an existing franchise.

In return for abstaining from the unanimous vote needed to carry this restructuring of governing policy, Oakland was granted the right to move without requiring approval of the other owners. This has been attested to by both Herman Sarkowsky of the Seattle Seahawks and Billy Bidwell of the St. Louis Cardinals.

In other developments, the NFL owners will hold a preliminary meeting at the Pro Bowl, where the major topic of discussion will be dual ownership of other sports franchises. Joe Robbie and Lamar Hunt are in disagreement with affidavits offered by the commissioner regarding their intention to sell interests in NASL (soccer) franchises in which they have made substantial investments.

Then the hue and cry over the officiating continues. Dallas is convinced that Fred Swearingen did them wrong, and even the normally taciturn Tom Landry wrotered aloud following the wrap-up news conference as to how Dallas always gets the wrong call against them in Super Bowl play, especially in Miami. Besides the recent argument call against Benny Barnes, Dallas partisans remembered the mayhem perpetrated by the Steeler secondary against Cowboy receivers in Super Bowl X.

In Super Bowl V there was the fumble by Duane Thomas at the goal line in which Dave Manders came up with the ball only to have the zebras signal Baltimore possession. And in the same game there was a debatable call on the Upped pass which John Mackey hauled in for a 75-yard touchdown.

Rams hire line coach

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — The Los Angeles Rams Thursday announced the hiring of Dan Radakovich, a veteran of the professional and college coaching ranks, as offensive line coach.

Radakovich, 43, was an assistant with the San Francisco 49ers last season, serving as defensive coordinator and after mid-season as offensive coordinator.

Fall salmon 'endangered' possibility

PORTLAND, Ore. (UPI) — A spokesman for the National Marine Fisheries Service says a decision will be made by summertime on whether fall chinook salmon that migrate to the Snake river should be the first Northwest salmon run listed as an endangered or threatened species.

Dale Evans, environmental services chief in the Portland office of the fisheries service, told a meeting of the Columbia River fisheries Council Wednesday the initial decision will apply only to the Snake River segment of chinook. He said the service expects to study other salmon and steelhead runs that spawn in the upper Columbia Basin later.

Evans said the service, which noted that fewer than 1,000 fall chinook were counted at Ice Harbor Dam last year, also will review the economic impact of any decision to list the fish as threatened or endangered.

Twins snub Cal's offer for Carew

BLOOMINGTON, Minn. (UPI) — The Minnesota Twins Thursday denied a published report that Twins President Calvin Griffith was attempting to kill California's chances in trade for superstar Rod Carew.

The St. Paul Pioneer Press said that last Friday Minnesota asked California for third baseman Carney Lansford and pitcher Chris Knapp in return for Carew. The paper said that Wednesday Griffith sent a telegram to the Angels asking for Lansford, Knapp, two highly-regarded minor-league players and $400,000.

The report said "Griffith seems intent on making it impossible for California to agree to a trade."

Manager Jim Fregosi of the Angels, said as recently as Wednesday night that Lansford was "unouchable."

Howard Fox, vice president of the Twins, said, "We are trying every way possible to make a deal that is workable."

But Fox said he would make "no comment whatsoever" on the report that Griffith had upped his demands to the Angels.

"The commissioner (Bowie Kuhn) doesn't like naming names of players on other teams," he said, "and we're just sticking to what the commissioner wants."

Ken Houston presented Starr award

MILWAUKEE (UPI) — Ken Houston of the Washington Redskins Thursday was named winner of the 1978 Bart Starr Meritorious Service Award.

Houston will be honored Feb. 18 at the 11th annual Wisconsin Pro Football Awards dinner, co-sponsored by the Milwaukee Press Club and Lombardi College Cancer Clinic.

Arthur Modell, owner of the Cleveland Browns, also will be honored for distinguished service to football.

Other awards to be presented to National Football League players as yet unannounced are the Vince Lombardi Dedication award and Forrest Gregg Outstanding Lineman award.

Houston, 33, has been named to 11 successive Pro Bowl teams as a strong safety.

The Starr award, named for the former player and now coach of the Green Bay Packers, combines service to football with service to the community.

Houston was cited for participation in numerous charitable causes, including March of Dimes campaign in his native Houston, Harris County (Texas) Community Action Association and work with retarded children.

Cubs show loss despite best gross

CHICAGO (UPI) — The Chicago Cubs Thursday showed a record of 1-10 in their first 11 games of the season, but they showed signs of life in a 4-3 victory over the St. Louis Cardinals.

The Cubs' record is the worst in the National League. The Cardinals are 3-8.

The Cubs' best gross was $1,000,000 for the season, but they lost $1,000,000 in the first 11 games.

The Cubs' manager, Tom Lawless, said, "We're going to win this season. We're going to win the pennant. We're going to win the World Series."

Refinishing furniture is rewarding winter project

 © Chicago Sun-Times
 If you're looking for a rewarding indoor project for winter, consider furniture refinishing or refinishing. One of the best books we've read on the subject is "Furniture Refinishing" by W. F. Fischman (Robbs-Merrill, $15). Nearly every home has a table, chest or chair with an unsightly liquid stain, dent, burn scar or crack. And most of these defects can be corrected swiftly by following Fischman's directions. For example: A simple solution of clear ash and lemon juice will remove alcohol rings; iodine can repair a scratch in mahogany; freshly shelled walnut meat may remove a scratch in walnut wood, and a hot iron and a moist cloth may be all that's needed to repair a dent.

 Fischman also describes in detail the art of finishing a new piece of furniture or refinishing an old article. He leaves nothing to chance, describing every tool — some which you can make yourself — needed, the various finishes and how to apply them.
 The chapter on sanding is outstanding. Any novice can learn quickly how to select the proper grade of sandpaper, which power sanders are acceptable (forget the one you attach to an electric drill) and how to sand difficult areas such as chair legs.

 There's no better time than winter to prepare for major do-it-yourself projects such as building a room addition, drawing up plans, checking on local building codes, locating materials at the best price and arranging any necessary financing all take time and you probably wouldn't begin building until spring anyway.
 Among recent books which will help you get started are "Multiply Your Living Space" by Dan Browne (McGraw-Hill, $12.95), a guide to building a room addition, and "Designing and Building Your Own House Your Own Way" by Sam Clark (Houghton Mifflin, $16.95), aimed at the more ambitious craftsman, who hopes to build an entire house with as little professional help as possible.

 Browne's book, to be released later this month, details his experiences in constructing a 20-foot-by-20-foot room addition that includes a bathroom.
 Being a professional builder himself, Browne knows the cost-cutting ropes and he shares them with the do-it-yourselfer. For example, wrecking yards, flea markets and sawmills (the latter in place of lumberyards) can yield building material at a fraction of the retail costs of supply houses.

 Assuming the reader is inexperienced in all phases of construction work, he even includes a brief course in basic carpentry. Then he presents step-by-step instructions from laying a foundation to finishing the electrical work and plumbing. A valuable appendix lists every piece of material and tool used in building his addition.
 Sam Clark also is a professional builder who seems to delight in helping the home craftsman plan, design and build his own home, using as little outside help as necessary. The savings, even with some professional help, he estimates, would be as much as 50 to 60 per cent over a professionally constructed home.

 Another way to cut costs is to eliminate finance charges by building a small house with savings and gradually adding to it.
 It's all here: Choosing a site, drawing your own design and plan, obtaining building materials and well-detailed and illustrated construction methods.

Shop around for best home insurance

By LES HAUSNER
 © Chicago Sun-Times
 It happened every year to the owner of a 2-story brick Georgian-style home in a suburb.
 The company carrying his homeowner's insurance policy would forward him a bill for the next year's insurance. The amount of coverage always increased, as it should in these inflationary times, but the homeowner was puzzled. Not once had his agent contacted him to discuss whether the increased coverage was adequate, and when the owner tried telephoning the agent, he was referred to the insurance company's regional office.

"Thinking I wasn't getting the best of service, I decided to shop around this year. When I bought the house 13 years ago, I assumed the insurance policy of the seller, who told me the policy was a good one," the owner said.

"Was I surprised. The renewal this year would have cost me $199 for $46,500 coverage. Not only did I learn that the premium was rather high for that amount of coverage, I also discovered I was drastically underinsured."

"A State Farm agent, who has an office in the neighborhood, quoted me — and I accepted — a policy for $75,000 coverage for only six dollars more — $205. The agent also visited the house, took pictures and measured the perimeter."

"That $75,000 is 30 per cent of the value of my home. I dread to think of what would have happened had I had a serious fire and only $46,500 coverage," he said.

"The new policy also increased my personal liability protection to $100,000, compared with $25,000 under the old policy."

"A similar incident occurred with my next door neighbor, who also switched insurance companies."

This incident points up the two most common mistakes homeowners make when insuring their residences and household belongings. Too many homes today are under insured, and too often buyers fail to shop around for the best insurance deals, in both dollars and service.

Any homeowner or renter who is confused about insurance would be wise to invest $2.95 for a paperback copy of Stanley Leinwohl's consumer's guide to home insurance, "So You Think You're Covered?" (Charles Scribner's Sons).

Leinwohl covers every phase of insurance for the homeowner — how to deal with an insurance agent, understanding the complicated language of a policy, how to make certain you're adequately covered and what to do in the event of a loss.
 Being complacent about homeowners' insurance literally is playing with fire and its devastating losses.

Statistics show that about 54 per cent of all building fires in the United States occur in 1- and 2-family dwellings. These fires account for a quarter of the $3.6 billion in building fire losses annually, and losses from home burglaries run into hundreds of millions of dollars a year.

If any of the "three I's" — inflation, improvements or purchase of expensive items — affected your home within the past 12 months, it's time to investigate a "fourth I," an increase in policy coverage.

But an increase in policy coverage does not necessarily mean a sizable rise in premium payments. There are several ways to keep the costs down.
 Take a higher deductible. The larger the deductible, the more you save on premiums. Also, install risk-reducing devices. Some insurance companies will give the homeowner a premium break if smoke detectors or burglar alarm systems are installed in the home.

And shop around. Use your consumer savvy to find the best coverage in return for the most reasonable price.

An important point to remember is that a home buyer can't obtain a mortgage without sufficient coverage to cover the amount of the loan if the house is destroyed. But don't stop there. Make certain the policy is for a large enough amount to repay you for replacing, rebuilding or repairing at current costs.

Experts agree that the best insurance buy for the homeowner is the "comprehensive form" policy, which makes good on losses for almost any cause except flood, surface water, sewer backups, seepage, earthquake, landslide, war and nuclear radiation.

How much home insurance is enough?

In order for the owner to be reimbursed for the full cost of property damages or losses, the property must be insured for at least

80 per cent of the replacement cost of the dwelling. (Some companies are now increasing their minimum requirement to 90 or even 100 per cent.)

If a house were insured for only 50 per cent of its value, the homeowner might be reimbursed for no more than 50 per cent of a loss. If the insurance is for 80 per cent of the value, he would be reimbursed for the total amount up to the dollar value of the policy.

Household belongings are insured for 50 per cent of the face value of the policy. If a home is insured for $75,000, personal property on the premises is automatically insured for $37,500. There's also a $15,000 limit for additional living expenses incurred by the homeowner if, for example, he and his family must live away while his house is being renovated after a fire.

Extra insurance may be obtained — it may be required for valuables such as paintings, furs and antiques.
 And there's also protection against liability claims. The recommended amount is $100,000.

Cleanup and repair tips offered for victims of recent Idaho floods

MOSCOW — With floodwaters from ice-choked waterways receding across southern Idaho, householders now are faced with clean-up and repair jobs.

"Your priorities will vary with the kind and seriousness of damage," says Shirley Nilsson, University of Idaho extension housing and home-furnishings specialist. "Where flooding was minimal, you may not have a lot to do. In other places, some buildings may not be habitable during repair."

Your first concern is the structural soundness of each building, she said. Check foundations for settling, cracking or undermining. Examine the walls, floors, doors and windows to determine what repairs are necessary.

"You may want to repair only temporarily, until better weather allows more extensive repairs," she suggested.

"If your basement is flooded, start pumping the water in stages.

Pump about one third of the water each day.

The UI specialist cautioned more damage may be done by pumping water from the basement too soon or too quickly than from letting the floodwater remain.

"Water in the basement helps brace the walls against the extra pressure of waterlogged soil outside," she explained. "If water is pumped out too soon, walls may be pushed in or floors pushed up."

Getting your electrical system in operation is the next step. If your switch box is in a flooded basement, do not turn the electricity back on until the water has been pumped out.

If any electrical appliances have been flooded, have a serviceman check and recondition them if necessary. Trying to run equipment before it is properly cleaned could seriously damage it.

Your water system is another concern. After it's back in operation, remember to disinfect your well and water system before you use them as a source of drinking water.

"Shovel out mud and silt quickly — before it dries," Mrs. Nilsson advised. "Starting at the upper limit of flooding and working downward, hose down flooded walls and floors. Then scrub and disinfect them."

To speed up drying, start your heating system. Before operating it, though, be sure it has been cleaned, dried and reconditioned. Chimneys and vent pipes should be clean before starting the system. Dry out walls and floors. If necessary for proper drying, remove wall coverings up to the water level. Drill holes in exterior siding.

Complete drying of walls may take weeks or months, Mrs. Nilsson said, indicating the length of time depends on how much dry air can circulate through the studding.

Flooded wooden floors will dry out very slowly. If your central heating system is operating, keep the temperature of the house at 60 to 70 degrees F. to speed drying without causing additional problems such as cracking, splitting and warping.

To get your home back into shape, you'll also need to:

- Clean and dry household items, furniture, carpets, clothing, dishes and bedding. Disinfect when necessary.

- Treat items for mildew as needed.

- Care for damaged trees, shrubs and lawns.

- Clean, repair and refinish as necessary.

For more specific recommendations about flood clean-up and repairs, Mrs. Nilsson suggested contacting county agents of the UI Cooperative Extension Service. Their telephone numbers can be found in most directories with the county government listing.

'Homes need warranties' says government official

By DON DEBAT
 © Chicago Sun-Times
LAS VEGAS — Beware if you are shopping the suburbs for a new home because your American dream could turn into a nightmare, a top government official warned.

"New home defects now rank among the top consumer problems in this country," consumer advocate Ellsworth Hanford Dole, commissioner of the Federal Trade Commission, said last week.

Almost 5,000 complaints about new home defects were reported to the Council of Better Business Bureaus in 1977 — up a whopping 40 per cent from a year earlier, Dole told members of the National Association of Home Builders (NAHB) at the organization's 35th annual convention here.

"Although she commended the 11,000 home-building firms nationwide that have joined the NAHB's Home Owners Warranty (HOW) program, which is designed to protect consumers from defective and shoddy construction, Dole urged builders to continue to press for industry-wide self-regulation to improve the quality of their product."

Dole cited the following complaints, which have been reported by new home buyers across the nation:

- 120 homeowners in Northbrook, Ill., had to go to their village board to force a builder to fix defects, including inadequate insulation, backed-up toilets and exposed wiring in electrical control boxes.

- A home buyer in Carrollton, Tex., spent $1,800 to prop up a settling foundation that had sent cracks up the corners of the house and had pulled the brick chimney loose.

- A Los Angeles woman is suing the builder of her $55,000 home for defects allegedly including water pouring down the walls and through electrical outlets and cracking and buckling walls.

With serious problems like these being reported, Dole said it's no wonder a frustrated attorney in the Massachusetts Attorney General's office recently said: "You get more protection buying a toaster than in buying a home."

Dole warned builders that a consumer revolt is brewing, and unless all builders zero in on the problems and pull out all the stops to cure them, consumers are going to rise up and deliver a mighty blow to the industry.

Besides more self-regulation by the home builders themselves, Dole suggested two ways to tackle the problem of new home defects:

- State should impose a warranty of habitability upon sellers and set construction standards and guidelines for resolution of consumer complaints, including some form of insurance, escrow account or performance bond to assure the availability of money to pay claims.

- If state regulation fails, the federal government may have to "step forcefully into the picture."

What can consumers do to make sure they are buying a defect-free home? Dole gave the following advice:

- Make sure all warranty information, equipment and features of the house are listed in writing.

- After construction is completed, have a licensed engineer or home inspector check for defects. It may cost up to $200 for the inspection, but Dole says it's well worth it.

Color your world for right mood year around

NEW YORK, N.Y. — Feeling blue? Maybe it's the color of your walls. January's Seventeen Magazine reports that your room's color can have a great deal to do with how you feel.

Deep sky blue paint on your bedroom walls could look great all summer, yet make you uncomfortable in the fall. Why? Color can create a psychological room "temperature," with green, blue and purple considered cool colors, and red, yellow and orange considered warm. So the room that seems cool and refreshing in hot weather may "feel" chilly during cold months.

Here's another example: While a bright orange room may seem like a cheerier place, after a while it could make you feel edgy. According to interior designer Nancy Jo Fox, too much of a high-intensity color can be irritating, especially in a bedroom.

Combining many different strong colors can also cause confusion. In fast-talking situations, for instance, students tend to make more errors when surrounded by large areas of strong, bright hues.

Lobster with piquant sauce adds elegance to home dining

Restaurant-style meal features rock lobster

It's always fun to have an evening out in a favorite restaurant, where a preferred entree can be ordered in a pleasing environment.

Still, there are times when it's even more satisfying to make an occasion of eating at home. This might be a gathering involving parents and grandparents, and better handled in a more intimate environment than at a public eating establishment. The family circle might not want to be broken by outside distractions.

No reason why a favorite eating-out meal can't be served at such a home get-together. For example, South African rock lobster is one of the most popular items in the better establishments. This succulent seafood can easily be presented to family guests in the warmth of the home. Broiled tails served with a small steak can duplicate the Surinam "Purr" that is the top menu item in better restaurants. Or the tails can be presented in "piggy-back" style with a sauce that even a good restaurant might not offer.

Piggy-back is a most practical and simple way to present the South African rock lobster tails at home. The hard shell is simply split down the back with a sharp knife, the meat lifted out to rest on the shell, and the tails put under the broiler. They don't need to be turned or given any more special treatment than a brush of butter or margarine.

Plan to serve a salad as the first course, as is done now in so many good eating establishments. This light and healthful way to start the meal gives the rock lobster tails a chance to broil to perfection. Put on a little low music and put out a lot of love and this will be a most memorable evening for everybody.

PIGGY-BACK ROCK LOBSTER with ORANGE PIQUANT SAUCE
 8 (4 to 5-ounce) frozen South African rock lobster tails
 1 cup butter, melted
 1 clove garlic, chopped
 1 medium onion, chopped
 1/4 cup flour
 1 can (10 1/2-ounce) condensed chicken broth
 2 tablespoons soy sauce
 1 navel orange, peeled and diced Partially defrost tails by running them under cold water. Cut through hard shell using kitchen shears. Carefully pull meat out through cut in shell, leaving it attached at its narrow end, and place meat on top of cut shell. Put tails on broiler pan, brush with 3/4-cup of the butter, and broil until meat is opaque, about 10 to 12 minutes. Sauté garlic and onion in remaining butter until tender and golden. Stir in flour. Gradually stir in chicken broth and soy sauce. Cook over low heat, stirring constantly until sauce bubbles and thickens. Fold in diced orange. Serve hot sauce with broiled rock lobster tails. Yield: 8 servings.

Book gives poison details on toxic commercial products

By D'VERA COHN
 HANOVER, N.H. (UPI) — In rushing to a hospital, frantic parents cannot always recall the brand name of the furniture polish swallowed by their child.

That's where Dr. Robert Gosselin's fat green book comes to the rescue. Gosselin, a Dartmouth Medical School professor, is originator and co-author of a best-selling guide to poisonous ingredients in everyday products, "Clinical Toxicology of Commercial Products."

A copy of the 1,800-page $60 book can be found in most of the nation's poison control centers and in many doctors' offices, hospitals and medical libraries.

To keep up with new product introductions, the authors publish a monthly bulletin and are planning a fifth edition.

"Companies are putting out new brand names all the time," Gosselin said. "They're also putting out old brand names with changes in composition — new and improved. We want to know what the new and improved formula is."

The book is so respected that some manufacturers who don't want their competitors to know their product ingredients have supplied the information secretly to the guide's authors. Poison control centers may get such information in an emergency.

The guide has triggered at least one research breakthrough. A decade ago, Dr. Roger Smith, a Dartmouth professor of pharmacology and toxicology, became intrigued by information on sewer-gas-poisoning. He began research that led to an antidote.

The guide lists 20,000 commercial products, their ingredients and treatment for anyone who swallows them.

Some plants and berries are also listed because Gosselin, who heads his local poison center and studies poisonous mushrooms for a hobby, became aware people were asking about them.

The book's contents also include general formulas for some common products that are pretty much alike.

"Sometimes you know if a child has ingested furniture polish, but under the circumstances no one knows what the brand is," Gosselin said.

'Anne Frank' revived on Minidoka stage

RUPERT — "The Diary of Anne Frank," a real life drama of a young Jewish girl who spent her teen-age years hiding from the Nazis, will be presented by the Minidoka County High School Friday and Saturday at 8:15 p.m. in the auditorium.

The play is based on a diary written by Anne Frank to chronicle the days of seclusion in an Amsterdam attic that began in July 1942, when she was just 13, to avoid Nazi arrest and the horrors of a concentration camp. Over the course of two years she made entries vividly chronicling the problems, the courage, the quarrels, and the discomforts of the "eight people cooped up in the cramped loft, existing on inadequate quantities of food smuggled to them by friendly Gentiles out of their spare rations."

Although Anne died in a concentration camp three weeks before it was liberated by British armies, her diary survived. The play based on her journal has won the Pulitzer Prize and the New York Drama Critics' Award.

Starring in the production are Lisa Tremayne as Anne, and Earl Stephenson as her father, Otto. Others in the cast are Susan Emerson, Mrs. Frank; Brenda McKee, Anne's sister Margot; Bob Ellis and Robin Roy, Mr. and Mrs. Van Daan; Ted Randall, the Van-Daans' son-Peter, with whom Anne falls in love; Brent Shields, the dentist; and Kris Gonzales and Roxie Andersen as Mr. Kraler and Miep, Hollanders who help the refugees.

The play will be directed by Ronda Miracle, with student director Tina Sweat. The set was designed by Doug Garland, a University of Utah student.

Tickets can be purchased at the door for $2 general admission, and $1 for children under 12. For further information call Ms. Miracle at 436-4721.

Dear Abby

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN
© 1979 Chicago Tribune-N.Y. News Synd. Inc.

DEAR ABBY: I am 82 and in good health. My wife died three years ago and I live alone in an apartment.
Two years ago a nice-looking 65-year-old widow moved into the apartment across the hall and we became friendly. We started eating together — usually at my place. She would prepare everything at her place and bring it over.
After supper we watched TV, held hands, and exchanged a few kisses. Well, before I knew it, things got out of hand and she was spending the night with me. In my bed!
I finally put a stop to it when she began to tell me she was "in love" with me. At no time did I tell her I was in love with her because I'm not.
Now she comes over every night without being invited, and she's pressuring me to marry her.
I have no intentions of marrying this lady or any other.

WANTS OUT

DEAR WANTS: Be honest. Tell the lady you have no plans to marry her and she will probably disassociate herself from YOU. If she doesn't, you could cool the relationship by seeing another lady or two... or three.

DEAR ABBY: Sex is an animal instinct which is normal in animals. Man is an animal, right? So when man feels the natural urge to have sex, what is wrong with following his natural instincts?

MAX

DEAR MAX: Animals have a natural urge to procreate. The lowest animals mate by instinct. Man, the highest of all animals, mates not only to procreate, but to express the ultimate in love.

Animals have no capacity for love. One mate is as good as the next. Casual and promiscuous mating among civilized people (or simply using another to satisfy one's own selfish sex urge) is not only immoral, it's meaningless. It is for lower animals. It's also for the birds.

DEAR ABBY: We have two small boys. One is 4 and the other is 2 1/2. I feel that my husband expects too much too soon of them.

The little tykes come to the table happy and hungry, but by the time my husband gets through correcting their every move ("Sit up straight, take your elbows off the table, stop talking with your mouth full, you're eating too fast, you're eating too slow etc.") these poor kids leave the table in tears with their plates practically untouched.

How can I make my husband understand that, besides making the boys dread mealtime, it could be bad for their health?

IN THE MIDDLE

DEAR IN: You have THREE "little boys." Tell the one you're married to that there is a more effective way to teach children. It's true that serious digestive problems often develop when children (and adults as well) attempt to eat when they are upset.

Empower your husband to resist the urge to shout criticisms and orders at the table. Gentleness is the key word here. Should he forget, gently kick him in the ankle.

Getting married? Whether you want a formal church wedding or a simple do-your-own thing ceremony, get Abby's new booklet, "How to Have a Lovely Wedding." Send $1 and a long, stamped (28 cents) self-addressed envelope to Abby: 132 Lasky Drive, Beverly Hills, Calif. 90212.

Basic muscles provide the clues for money-wise beef selections

TWIN FALLS — Doing your homework can save you money when buying beef, according to the Idaho Beef Council.

Round steak is a money saver, but be wary at the meat counter. The clues are to study basic muscles in round steak and learn which portions are best suited for the method of preparation you choose.

Be especially aware of the Eye of Round and the Sirloin Tip. The Eye of Round is often the most expensive portion of the round steak, yet it is not necessarily the most tender or flavorful. These little steaks are a nice size and most likely can demand a high price just on their appearance.

Sirloin Tip steak comes from the primal round, but is seldom seen in the full cut round. Unaware consumers may buy a Sirloin Tip Steak, thinking they are buying a Top Sirloin.

When looking for ways to get the most out of the meat dollar, the smart shopper will buy by the cost per serving rather than cost per pound. To determine the approximate cost per serving, simply divide the price per pound by the number of servings per pound the cut will provide.

In general you can figure 4 servings per pound for boneless cuts of beef, such as stew, ground beef and cubed steak; 3 servings per pound for tip and boneless rump roasts, and round, top loin and rib eye steaks; 2 servings per pound for arm and blade pot-roasts, and most steaks with bone; and 1 to 2 servings per pound for short ribs and shank cross-cuts.

Magic Valley Hospital offers infant care class

TWIN FALLS — Magic Valley Memorial Hospital is beginning its first series of parent and infant care classes for 1979 on Jan. 31 in the hospital auditorium.

The classes are for couples who expect babies in February or March. They are held from 7 to 9 p.m. on six Wednesdays. The last class is on the topic of infant care and is open to any interested person.

The classes are taught by members of the hospital nursing staff. The course covers growth and development of the unborn child, hospitalization, labor and delivery and various aspects of infant care during the first year.

Anyone wanting further information may call the hospital at 733-1511 and ask for Roberta Reynolds or Pat Hollibaugh, extension 220 in the obstetrics department.

Patterson elected chief for YMCA convention

TWIN FALLS — Bart T. Patterson of Minico High School was elected associate chief for 1979 and chief of justice of the supreme court for the 1980 conference at the Idaho YMCA's Annual Youth and Government convention held Jan. 20 at the College of Southern Idaho.

Other officers chosen were Randy Neal, Sigma Hi-Y, of Twin Falls, Assistant attorney general; Andrea Cannedy and Anna Orchard, Jerome High School, appellate co-councils; Susan Beckstead and Nancy Atkinson, Natural Hi-Y, of Twin Falls, respondent co-councils; Robert Myrland, Super Hi-Y, of Twin Falls, assistant house floor leader; and Kim Wilcox, Minico High School, editorial press staff.

There were 86 delegates present from 12 different schools and Hi-Y clubs. The next session for delegates will be a delegate training program to be held on March 21 at the YMCA for all senators, representatives, lobbyists, reporters, legislative aides, and delegates in training. The elected state officers will also have a special training session that day.

The annual conference involving over 400 students will be held April 19-21 at the Statehouse.

Searching for 'Bigfoot'

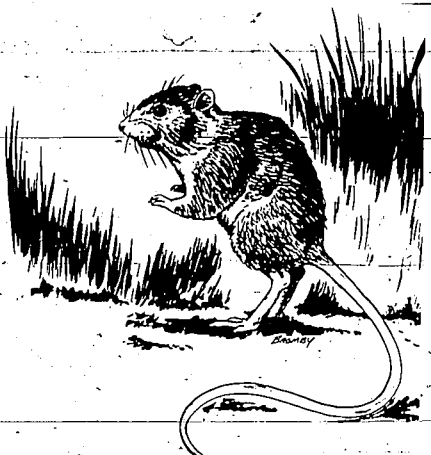

DENVER (UPI) — The Division of Wildlife is asking residents to contribute part of their state income return to locating the remnants of Colorado's "Bigfoot" community.

Known locally as the meadow jumping mouse, the Zapus hudsonius is also called "Bigfoot" because its hind feet are four to five times larger than its front feet, spokesman Steve Bissell said Monday. In Latin, Zapus means bigfoot.

Bissell said the mouse is as elusive as the Pacific Northwest monster that shares the name, although it was once common along the front range and could be seen making seven-foot high leaps through the area meadows.

The Division of Wildlife has added the large-footed mouse to the ranks of 783 nongame animals that benefit from a state income tax check-off on the state form, he said. Programs for game animals are funded by hunting fees.

Because the mice have vanished from the moist lowland meadows of Eastern Colorado, he said the division will check the habitat for significant changes before the alterations effect other wildlife species.

The monkeys of southern Texas headed for zoos and laboratories

By K. MACK SISK
SAN ANTONIO, Texas (UPI) — The only free-ranging troop of monkeys in the United States — studied by anthropologists for better understanding of animal behavior and human evolution — is being disbanded and offered for sale to zoos and research centers throughout the country.

Though researchers are dismayed, they cannot afford to buy the unique 228-member troop as a whole, at $1,000 per monkey. The owner no longer can afford to keep the troop intact, and the troop is in disarray because of two changes in leadership and the sale of some monkeys.

Existence of the troop of 228 Japanese macaques in south Texas was not widely publicized, to avoid human visitors who could infect the animals with disease.

But dozens of university students and experts have traveled from as far away as Canada to observe the monkeys in a natural state on a 108-acre ranch near the Texas-Mexico border, about 30 miles from Laredo.

The monkeys were brought to Texas in February, 1972, from Arashiyama, on the western edge of the Japanese city of Kyoto, where researchers from the University of Kyoto began studying the original troop of 47 in 1954 at the Iwatayama Monkey Sanctuary. Since that time, detailed records of monkey families of the troop have been kept by students who earned their graduate degrees by studying the troop.

By 1966 the Japanese troop had grown to 125 monkeys and split along family lines into two distinct groups of about equal size with their own leaders. And by 1968 the two troops had outgrown the forests of the sanctuary and were encroaching on neighboring areas. The Japanese began looking for a home for the one troop.

Laredo businessman and philanthropist Edward Dryden, in conjunction with the Universities of Texas and Maryland, fenced his former La Moca Ranch 30 miles northwest of Laredo, built climbing towers for the monkeys, and provided a dietary supplement of monkey chow to ensure against malnutrition, hoping to sell the monkeys' offspring for research. He named the complex Arashiyama Primate Research Center.

Since their arrival, the monkeys have been studied by graduate students from the Universities of Texas, Wisconsin, Chicago, New Mexico, Oregon and Georgia, and by other scientists.

The monkeys adjusted quickly from the temperate-to-cold environment of Mount Arashiyama in Japan to the warm Texas border environment. They learned to eat mesquite, acacia, prickly pear cactus, fruits, flowers, grasses and bark, grasshoppers, snails and bird eggs.

A relaxed Carter runs past the midway point

The President doesn't jog; he runs

By PHILIP W. SMITH
Newhouse News Service

WASHINGTON — His closest aides and advisers draw a picture of a relaxed and confident President Carter, at ease with his job at ease with his job he passes the midpoint of his first term.

It was two years ago that James Earl Carter Jr. of Plains, Ga., stood in the frigid January wind at the east front of the Capitol building here and placed his hand on a Bible given him by his mother to take the oath of office as the 39th president of the United States.

In the 24 months that he has held "one of the most awesome and powerful jobs in the world, his hair has become noticeably grayer, the lines around his blue eyes have grown deeper, and the famous smile has flashed less often.

There have been many days of frustration, and a few of triumph.

Despite the world-shaking events and controversies that constantly swirl around the White House no matter who is living there, his aides say Carter is actually working fewer hours during most weeks than he was early in his term, when he was going through "on-the-job training."

About half the time now, he rises at 5 a.m.; otherwise he usually gets up at 7 o'clock.

He likes the quiet time in the West Wing office complex of the executive mansion — where the oval office and his private study are located — before most of his staff arrives for the day.

"We dare not interrupt him then, unless it is something really important," said one aide.

In recent weeks, Carter has been using the oval office much more than the smaller West Wing office he used to prefer as a place to work.

"I think it is almost a capricious thing," one assistant said. "But maybe there is symbolism of some sort there."

Throughout most of the work day, the president still toils with classical music playing on a stereo in the background. The music is selected by his personal secretary, Susan Clough.

He is working much less at night now than during his earlier days in office, White House staffers say.

One- or two nights a week, the president — often along with members of his family — watches a movie in the White House theater. First-run movies are always available from the Motion Picture Association of America. The Carters rarely watch entertainment shows on television.

Physically, his staff says, the president is in better shape

Indoors, he gets exercise in the White House's basement bowling alley, often competing with his 11-year-old daughter Amy.

Sometimes business is mixed with pleasure in the bowling alley.

Every two or three weeks, usually on Monday morning, Carter's long-time friend and adviser, Charles Kirbo, drives to Hartsfield International Airport in Atlanta, and boards an early bird flight to Washington.

Kirbo likes to bow, so he and the president usually go down there when he spends the night," according to one White House aide.

Kirbo isn't officially part of the Carter administration, but even the senior White House staff regards him as the president's most trusted adviser, a status that has not changed since the 1976 campaign. He is also the trustee of the president's share of the Carter family peanut business in Plains.

Carter's major exercise is running. Most afternoons, just before dark, the president puts on a sweat suit and begins his lane around the White House south lawn.

"He doesn't jog, he runs," an aide said.

How far?

"Usually four to five miles."

Recently, Carter challenged one of his military aides — described by a civilian White House staffer as "a big, strapping major who is in great shape and 20 years younger than the president." — to run with him.

"The major made it about two miles before he had to drop out and sit down," the aide said. "He couldn't keep up the pace."

On weekends at Camp David, the Carters have taken up cross-country skiing, although their practice has been limited so far this winter by both time and the relatively small amount of snow on the ground in the western Maryland mountains.

Politically, Carter accomplished some of the things he set out to do and failed at others.

Like every American president before him, Carter has found that he cannot control many events that have much to do with the eventual success or failure of his presidency. The sweep of history goes on — influenced by him perhaps more than by any other individual in the world, but still at its own pace.

Only a month ago, apparently because of miscalculations by U.S. intelligence services, Carter was giving unequivocal support to Shah Mohammad-Reza Pahlavi of Iran.

Now the shah, with whom Carter spent New Year's Eve a year ago while on a world tour, is in virtual exile, forced to leave his country not by a military coup but by a massing uprising of the Iranian people.

The major theme of Carter's nearly two-year quest for the presidency was a promise to bring Americans a government that would be both "competent and compassionate."

On competency, he has made a slow but deliberate beginning. Congress enacted an administration proposal to reform the federal Civil Service system for the first time in decades. An Energy Department has been formed to deal with one of the nation's most pressing problems. Other reorganization plans have gone into effect and four major ones are on Carter's desk now.

An attempt to separate a Department of Education from the Department of Health, Education and Welfare failed to get out of committee in Congress last year.

While there were some major administration successes with Congress during the past two years — items like cancellation of the B-1 bomber, the sale of jets to Egypt and Saudi Arabia, the Panama Canal treaties — the administration is not satisfied with its record.

As a result, White House task forces have been formed to deal with specific pieces of legislation the administration wants this year. They are headed by senior White House staff members and include officials from the agencies and departments involved with the legislation. Some already are meeting daily. The model is the ad hoc group of senior administration officials who won the Panama fight in the Senate last year — by one vote.

"We started out assuming that something would get through Congress just because we thought it was right," one aide said. "It doesn't work that way."

On the "compassion" Carter promised in almost every campaign speech, he is being severely challenged by the liberal wing of the Democratic Party. A coalition of about 100 liberal organizations has been organized to fight the budget cuts for domestic social programs Carter will propose to Congress Monday as part of his tight anti-inflation budget for fiscal 1980.

"The problem with the Carter administration has been the fact that on key issues like taxes and energy they don't seem to know the difference between compromise and capitulation," said United Auto Workers President Douglas Fraser, head of the liberal coalition which calls itself the Progressive Alliance.

Biochemist thinks more life exists on another world

By AL ROSSITER JR.
UPI Science Editor
WASHINGTON (UPI) — Biochemist Cyril Ponnamperuma has given up hope that life exists elsewhere in the solar system.

But the noted University of Maryland specialist on chemical evolution is convinced that we are not alone in the universe. It is just a matter of time, he says, before we will hear a "hello" from somewhere else in the Milky Way.

"According to the most conservative estimate, 5 percent of all stars in the universe must have planets suitable for life," Ponnamperuma said in a special lecture at the recent annual meeting of the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

He believes that all living things on Earth evolved over a period of a half billion years or less from the right primordial mixture of the basic elements of the solar system — hydrogen, oxygen, nitrogen and carbon.

Laboratory experiments have already demonstrated that the molecules necessary for the nucleic acids and proteins that are the building blocks of life can be made in the laboratory in the absence of life.

"Although we have not yet made a replicating molecule in the laboratory, all the evidence leads us to the conclusion that the inevitable consequence of the evolutionary process in the universe would be the appearance of life," Ponnamperuma said.

He said the alphabet of life is a simple one. The nucleic acids and proteins have 23 components — only two more than the English alphabet.

"Whether we contemplate an intelligent being, an elephant, or the smallest microbe, we are struck by the similarity of the biochemicals and the universality of the genetic code. The conclusion seems inescapable that all life must have had a common chemical origin."

Ponnamperuma said Mars appeared to be the only other planet with a reasonable chance of harboring life of some kind. But he said the two Viking spacecraft that landed life detection instruments on the red planet in 1976 dispelled that idea.

Less organic material was found there than on the lifeless moon. And even though the biology instruments produced results which could have come from living organisms, Ponnamperuma said it now appears that peroxides on the Martian surface mimicked microbes.

"We must, therefore, very reluctantly conclude that there is no evidence for life on Mars. We should perhaps revise our question and ask ourselves, 'Was there life on Mars?'"

The atmosphere of Jupiter, he said, appears to have the organic molecules needed for the evolution of life. But he said the great planet's atmosphere is so turbulent that it appears likely that the stuff of life would be destroyed over and over again before organisms had time to evolve.

Therefore, Ponnamperuma concludes: "In our solar system, the only place where life exists is the Earth."

But he said astronomers estimate there may be a million civilizations elsewhere in our galaxy alone.

There are six radio searches underway in the United States, Canada and the Soviet Union.

"Before long, a distant 'hello' from a galactic neighbor may tell us whether we are alone in the universe, and whether life itself is a result of the evolutionary process of the universe."

The hunt for life continues

©Newhouse News Service
WASHINGTON — Some time in the next few decades, earthlings may obtain good evidence there is intelligent life elsewhere in the universe.

At that point, science writer Edward Edelson believes, the Search for Extraterrestrial Intelligence (SETI) will begin in earnest. And that will be an enormous scientific paradox.

For, Edelson says, the fact that we on earth have started such a search will be a good sign that the hunt will be successful.

And, he writes in "Who Goes There? The Search for Intelligent Life in the Universe" (Doubleday, $8.95), we will then know that one technical society — ours — has begun an effort to contact others.

That knowledge will offer good grounds for belief that the same decision has been made elsewhere in the universe by an intelligence equal to ours.

"Science," Edelson asserts, "has changed mankind's place in the universe drastically. We have become just one product of evolutionary forces, on a minor planet, of a mediocre star."

"Now science offers us the hope of moving back toward galactic importance, if not on our own, at least in co-operation with other species who share an intelligent mastery of technology."

"To the pioneers in SETI, this prospect is the most exciting one that the human race can have."

Edelson, science editor of the New York Daily News, has received many awards for his reports, including the American Institute of Physics, the American Heart Association and the American Medical Association.

His work has appeared in Smithsonian, Popular Science and Harper's Bazaar, and his books include The Hereditary Factor, Chemical Factors, and Poisons in the Air.

Male stripper delights the ladies

Jean Martin, 68, rubs the chest of Patrick Bagwell

DALLAS (UPI) — Sweet-faced grandmothers have been mobbing a local dinner theater to watch Patrick Bagwell work his way down to a rhinestone G-string.

Bagwell, who bills himself as "The All-American Male Stripper," said his mother was the only older woman who didn't approve of his new occupation. And even she has changed her mind — since she's seen his act.

"My show is not in poor taste. It's very tongue-in-cheek," Bagwell said. "But I do take it off."

"It's the kind of thing grandmothers are supposed to blush about," he said. "But not these ladies."

Jean Martin, 68, helped Bagwell undo a few buttons during one performance, then rubbed his chest to the delight of the crowd. When he swirled a cape to cover himself as he appeared to be removing the G-string, 73-year-old Rose Campbell shouted, "Stop teasing. Take it off."

While the grandmothers in the crowd are egging Bagwell on, the grandfathers are somewhat taken aback. "I'm shocked and amazed," said one 69-year-old man. "There are women out here dressed like they'd go to a church banquet, and look at them yelling and screaming at that naked man. I wouldn't even walk around like that around my wife."

Clean Air Act attack seen by EPA official

By THOMAS LOVE
Washington Star
WASHINGTON — "Gross distortion and exaggeration" are being used by some business and industry groups to battle the Clean Air Act, a senior official of the Environmental Protection Agency charges.

David G. Hawkins, assistant administrator for air, noise and radiation, said some industry representatives "appear most interested in rallying a mob to lynch the Clean Air Act, a piece of legislation designed to protect public health and improve the quality of life for us all."

"What we are seeing," he said, "is a pattern of gross exaggeration and distortion of the act's provisions as part of a scare campaign to change the law, legalistic obstruction of the regulatory process, and uncritical use of scientific studies which suit industry's needs — no matter how implausible the results."

He made the comments recently in a San Francisco speech at a national conference on the effects of the act. The conference was sponsored by the American Petroleum Institute.

"The new doomsday prophets are certain members of business and industry who are raising the specter of an economic peril allegedly caused by health and social legislation," he said.

Some commuters go to extremes ...and back again

By JOHN HERBERS
N.Y. Times Service

Every weekday at 4:45 a.m., in the green rolling hill country of southern Louisiana, James M. Pierce gets out of bed, dresses and climbs into his Chevy pickup for an 80-mile ride to New Orleans, where he is a civil engineer for Exxon Co.

At Covington, after about a 55-mile drive, Pierce parks his truck and boards a commuter bus that takes him across Lake Pontchartrain as the sun is rising and into the world of tall office buildings. He is at his desk by 7:30 a.m., having eaten a doughnut that he picked up along the way. He finishes work at 4:15 p.m. and, by the same route, is home at 6:45 p.m. in time for dinner. His working time is eight hours and commuting time is five hours.

James Pierce is one of about 1,300,000 Americans who travel 50 miles or more, one way, to work, all or mostly by automobile. Mass transit commuters to cities such as New York, Boston and Chicago frequently travel long distances, too. But long-distance commuting by automobile is a newer phenomenon, and from coast to coast those who travel by auto far outnumber those who travel to work by train or bus.

The interstate system and the movement of jobs out of the central cities and into the suburbs have made it easier to commute by auto. Love of rural or small-town life is the chief motivation for long-distance commuting. The phenomenon has given rise to titles of the distances-people-drive-so they can live where they please.

In St. Louis, a story is told about two people who drive more than 200 miles a day to a suburban factory so they will not have to abandon their homes in the Ozarks. They could not be found, but Robert Welz, a Dade County, Fla., fireman, could. Welz, who works 24-hour shifts, lives on a farm in north central Florida, about 360 miles from his job in the Miami area.

"You live once, and this is the way I want to live," he said. "I'm 48 and I'm not getting any younger. I regret not having done it earlier. I just love the country and the small town community life."

Welz is able to do it because of his unusual work shift. He commutes twice a week and three times the rest. Thus, in two weeks he drives 3,600 miles. Driving time: 60 hours.

Nether the gasoline shortage of 1974 nor the threat of higher fuel costs seems to have discouraged long-distance commuters. According to census data compiled by the Motor Vehicle Manufacturers Assn., about 20 percent of heads of households employed in 1975 drove to their jobs. About 17 percent went by car pool, while only 5.5 percent rode mass transit. More than 41 percent of those traveling by auto commuted more than 30 miles one way.

The cost, of course, is tremendous, both in money and in time behind the wheel. But, according to scores of long-distance commuters around the nation, travel costs are offset by lower living costs in the country or in small towns, and the hours in an auto can have psychic and educational rewards.

Emily Walz, the wife of the Florida fireman and the mother of three children, grew up in New York City, in Queens, but is as delighted as her husband with their move in August 1977 to a 15-acre farm. She said it was originally bought as an investment, but the family decided to leave the Miami suburbs for a new way of life.

"I'm a farmette now," Mrs. Walz said. "I'm broken in totally. I'm doing some canning, harvesting crops and everything. We buy meat and dairy products and that's all. Everything else we grow." So the family figures that what they save by living on the farm more than makes up for the cost of driving more than 30,000 miles every six months.

"I drive along thinking I must be crazy, 'What am I doing?'" Walz said. "But then I stop and think, and it's all worthwhile."

Few of the long-distance commuters found the long drives boring or tiresome. They say they enjoy the scenery. They listen to the radio or operate their citizens' band radios. They compose their thoughts and plan their workdays. When husband and wife both work, they throw out family problems. They are uncomplaining about traffic.

"I love to drive," said Joan DeLuca, who lives on the south shore of New Jersey, 56 miles from her job in a pharmaceutical firm in Barnegat, N.J. The drive one way is 1 hour 20 minutes. "I drive through the pines, and it's like Currier & Ives in the winter. I see deer feeding. And the drive gives you plenty of time to think. Most people think it's horrible to drive that much, but I love it. On my vacations, I like to drive to California or Florida."

Michael Fowler is a clinical psychologist who works at the Wyandot Mental Health and Guidance Center in Kansas City, Kan. He and his family moved from Kansas City to Ottawa, Kan., a small town 55 miles away. He was one of the few who said the distance cost him money. He has put 93,000 miles on his 1974 Toyota, which is now on its second set of radial tires and its first rebuilt engine.

"It costs to drive 500 miles a week," he said, but he finds the change more than worth the cost. And he, too, likes the drive.

"I'm most positive about the first half of the drive, where it's still country," he said. "I never get tired of the scenery. I enjoy the change of seasons and like to watch the crops come up. The last 20 minutes is bumper to bumper, and I turn on the radio to get the traffic reports. I enjoy commuting in winter more than summer. I like the adventure of driving on ice-covered roads." He keeps a sleeping bag in the car for emergencies.

But the major reason for living so far from his job, Fowler said, is that "I love my job, and my wife and I are separated. I'm not a married driver, so the physical distance creates the psychological distance I need."

If the days are numbered for the long-distance auto commute, as government projections about high energy costs suggest, those who drive great distances do not seem concerned.

James Pierce, the New Orleans Exxon engineer, used ingenuity to survive the gas shortage in 1974. With so much time taken up in driving, he had no time left to find a service station. So his wife would buy gasoline in her car, and Pierce would siphon it into his own after arriving home. Now he has a 500-gallon bulk tank in his yard and has it filled by an Exxon distributor, who gives him a discount.

Odds-makers score on Super Bowl

By IRV KUPCINET
—Chicago Sun-Times

Next to the all-around super performances in the Super Bowl, the most remarkable achievement was by the odds-makers. They established the Pittsburgh as four-point favorites over Dallas. You can't do much better than that for a 35-31 game. That meant that all four-point spread bets were nullified. Sportswriters who reported that Terry Bradshaw established a Super Bowl record by throwing four touchdown passes were only partly right. The record for touchdown passes in a championship game is owned by the Bears' Sid Luckman, who pitched five against the Washington Redskins in 1943.

Cukor and Hepburn together for No. 10

By JOAN GEOGHEGAN

Movie buffs worship him. The greatest actors and actresses of Hollywood's heyday schemed for roles in his films. Television is just catching on to him.

Venerable Hollywood director George Cukor has wrapped his latest film, "The Corn Is Green," for broadcast on CBS on Sunday, Jan. 28.

It features Katharine Hepburn, Cukor's 10-time leading lady, as Miss Moffat, a school teacher in a Welsh mining town at the turn of the century.

At 80, Cukor epitomizes the glamour of Hollywood. He moved to Hollywood from Broadway with the advent of "talkies."

Among his many films are "Dinner at Eight," "David Copperfield," "Camille," "Little Women," "The Philadelphia Story," "A Star Is Born" and "My Fair Lady," for which he won an Academy Award.

Cukor made his only other television film "Love Among the Ruins," with Katharine Hepburn and Lawrence Olivier, in 1976. Warner Brothers approached him and asked him if he was interested in directing "The Corn Is Green" for television — with Miss Hepburn in the lead.

He'd seen the 1930 play with Ethel Barrymore and liked it.

"I spoke to Kate," he says, "we read the play that night, and we both said 'yes' the next morning."

"The Corn Is Green" appealed to him as something fresh, a story the audience would enjoy.

Cukor maintains that the difference between feature films and films for TV "depends very much on the subject. Certain things are intimate, rather than epic. This is a very intimate and human story."

"The Corn Is Green" was shot on location in Wales and in a London studio. It was hardly Cukor's first job in London. He'd directed Spencer Tracy there, and "Love Among the Ruins" also was made in England.

"The Corn Is Green" was a unique experience for Cukor because it was the 10th time he had directed Katharine Hepburn in a film. Their liaison began back in 1932 when she starred in and he directed "A Bill of Divorcement."

"She used to be my tenant," he confides in a mischievous tone, as if to elucidate their professional and personal association, which spans 47 years.

He then explains that he had built houses at the back of his Hollywood property, and she had rented one.

When asked if working with such an old friend made "The Corn Is Green" a particularly pleasant experience for him, the mischief greps back into his voice, and he says, "Sometimes yes, sometimes no. We're very polite with each other. Sometimes she's mistaken because she thinks she's right."

Although, he concedes it's not his best movie, he dubs "Little Women" as his favorite collaboration with Katharine Hepburn: "I have a weakness for it," Garbo, Hepburn, Crawford, Bronson. Cukor directed them all. Subsequently, he's been dubbed "a woman's director."

The title elicits an immediate defense: "I've worked with men, too. . . . Jack Barrymore, Olivier, Tracy. . . ."

He's "rather pleased" with the title though. In fact, he comments that his starlets, "were spectacular. . . . It was the day of the movie queen."

Although Gavin Lambert's biography of Cukor attempts to capture his colorful life, Cukor is contemplating writing his own memoirs.

"I've enough material. I've seen a lot, been places. I have saved the stills from most of the pictures I made. It would be an interesting book. It's a question of being lazy. It's tough to write about yourself."

Besides the book, he'd like to do a comedy, in this country.

"I do about a picture a year now," he says. "I've never been a regular about it." At 80, Cukor is keeping pace with his past output.

In making "The Corn Is Green" or any other film, Cukor recalls, "Every day we laugh and scream and carry on." But if he tries to remember individual anecdotes, his mind goes blank.

Of "The Corn Is Green," Cukor highly recommends Ian Saynor, Miss Hepburn's co-star. "He's a very talented young man."

Attend Northwest Opera's production with care

'Thief' may steal your heart away

By KEN HODGE

TWIN FALLS—Opera.

The word usually conjures up images of haughty moonbeams in fur stoles peering sublimely through tiny binoculars at the stage as lavishly costumed singers shatter the air to the sound of orchestra music.

Unless the audience is well-versed in Italian or has a musical background, such a performance can be a real sleeper.

But not so in Twin Falls.

An average Twin Falls man can see an operatic performance at the College of Southern Idaho and come away with a perfect understanding of what happened.

There is no Italian, no fancy costumes and no reason to feel out of place among high society aristocrats when viewing a Northwest Opera Association production in Twin Falls.

The association was formed several years ago to bring entertaining opera to Magic Valley residents, according to association president Martha Mead of Twin Falls.

The association performs an opera every other year and imports one in alternate years to prove to Magic Valley audiences that opera can be enjoyable and understandable.

This year's performance of "The Old Maid and the Thief" by Gian-Carlo Menotti, slated for Saturday and Sunday at the CSI Fine Arts Auditorium, is no exception.

Written in English for radio in 1939, the performance is clearly understandable and includes no glitter or fancy costumes. Performed by a cast of Magic Valley residents—from several walks of life, the opera plays with polish and verve.

Roger Vincent, a Filer farmer with a mellifluous baritone, who has been heard by audiences around the nation, plays Bob, a beggar who comes knocking at a door in a small contemporary American town.

The door belongs to Miss Todd, played by Helen Allen of Twin Falls, an old maid whose life was "wrecked by a man."

Miss Todd's house maid Letitia, played by Carole Barsness of Twin Falls, convinces the fading dowager to "be a Christian and ask him in."

Interested in Bob, "a young and handsome beggar," for herself, Letitia elicits Miss Todd's hospitality by hiding the old maid might somehow ignite a spark of love within Bob's young breast.

When the two hear of an escaped murderer and robber who fits Bob's description, Letitia further convinces Miss Todd to tame the man's spirit by showing him love and allowing him to stay another week.

In the meantime, Miss Todd and Letitia steal from stores and friends and even their church to get money to leave around the house for Bob to find and keep for himself.

Finally, when her fancied lover tells her he must go, Miss Todd, at the urging of Letitia, decides to steal liquor from the local distillery to keep her man, because "this town will be a tomb when he goes away."

But Miss Pinkerton, played by Joan Carr of Twin Falls, another old maid friend of Miss Todd's, announces the police plan to check every house in town to find the mysterious thief who has been stealing money and, most recently, liquor from the citizenry.

Miss Todd hastily attempts to hide the drunken Bob before police can find him. He tells her he does not love her at all and she threatens to tell the police he is the mysterious thief.

As she runs out to find the authorities, Menotti's musical takes a surprising twist and comes to a comical conclusion.

Vincent, who founded the Magic Valley Choral, a singing group which presents concerts at Christmas and Easter, has added his talents to many musical productions in Magic Valley.

He has sung in a number of musical productions by the Dilettante Group of Magic Valley and has traveled the United States singing with the "Serenaders" of the Community Concert Association. He has guest soloed with the Boise Philharmonic Symphony and the Rockford Choral Society in Chicago.

Vincent's credits include a number of operatic performances, including "Amahl and the Night Visitors," "The Telephone," "Carmen" and "Slow Dusk."

Allen received her M.A. in English from Portland State University. She has soloed with the Seattle Choral and the Leonard Moore Choral and sung a leading supporting role in the Twin Falls Music Club's presentation of "Carmen."

Barsness studied music for two years at Idaho State University and later graduated from the San Francisco Conservatory of Music. She is now studying voice with Martha Mead of Twin Falls.

Carr, a past soloist with the Magic Valley Choral and the Magic Valley Symphony, received her B.A. in music from Doane College in Nebraska. She sang the role of Mother Superior in the Dilettante production of "The Sound of Music" and a leading supporting role in the Music Club's production of Bizet's "Carmen."

Roy Nicholson of Twin Falls, speech and debate teacher at Twin Falls High School and a veteran of theater productions in Magic Valley, is directing "The Old Maid and the Thief."

Ted Hadley, band instructor for both junior high schools in Twin Falls, is musical director for the show and leads an orchestra of 21 local musicians who have volunteered their time for the production.

Showtime Saturday night is 8:35. Sunday's matinee begins at 2:30 p.m.

Tickets to the performance are $3.50 for adults and $2.50 for senior citizens.

Carnegie Commission suggests public broadcasting revision

TV Star Scene

By RUTH THOMPSON

By LES BROWN
©1979 N.Y. Times Service
NEW YORK — A report by Carnegie Commission on the Future of Public Broadcasting, stressing the need for improved programming, will recommend that $1 billion a year be made available for noncommercial television and radio after 1981, according to sources close to the commission.

Much of the new money, almost three times the present level of financing, would come from a fee to be charged commercial broadcasters for their use of the airwaves. But the federal government would still be a principal contributor.

The commission's report, "The Public Trust," due to be released next Tuesday, and addressed to the general public, is expected to call also for the creation of an organization to take the place of the Corporation for Public Broadcasting. The new entity would be responsible for overseeing the operations of the system and providing planning and research services.

The organization, to be known as the Public Telecommunications Trust, would have no direct involvement with programming, but would administer a special endowment to distribute funds to local stations and to a new national programming service that would have its own program chief and its own board of directors.

The central theme of the report, according to persons familiar with its contents, is that the pre-eminent concern of public broadcasting should be programming rather than administration and that the structure of the system should be designed to increase and improve the development of programming.

The commission also reports, after 18 months of field work and testimony from more than 2,000 witnesses, that substantially more money is necessary annually than has been given public broadcasting so far if noncommercial broadcasting is to become an effective alternative service to commercial broadcasting.

The work of an earlier Carnegie Commission a decade ago essentially served as the blueprint for the Public Broadcasting Act of 1967, which set up the present system as a replacement for the educational broadcasting system. The new commission, headed by Dr. William J. McGill, president of Columbia University, was established by the Carnegie Corporation, the New York foundation, in June 1977 to study the flaws in the existing system and to examine the future prospects of the system.

Shelia Mahony, executive director of the new commission, said she could neither confirm nor deny the disclosures, as a matter of policy. The details of the findings are to be announced at a news conference at the Waldorf-Astoria next Tuesday morning, coinciding with the publication of a paperback book by Bantam Books containing the full 408-page report. Until the details are given, it cannot be known what portion of the proposed total financing would come from the fee on commercial broadcasting and whether the government is expected to increase or reduce its financial contribution to the system.

You're right if you've spotted "collegiate" as a trend for the incoming winter-spring series. Every network has one.

But you are wrong, wrong, wrong says production executive Martin Ranshoff if you tag his "Co-Ed Fever" (premiering Feb. 19 on CBS) as another ripoff of "Animal House," which is piling up box-office gold at theaters around the country.

Explains Ranshoff, "I ripped it off — and just the bare theme — from my son Steven. Its situation comedy, not farce, and though it's funny, there's also truth to it.

"Animal House," only came out last April. I've been developing my concept since the fall of 1976 and delivered it to CBS in 1977."

And the theme? "Steven was one of the first males admitted to Vassar. My mother had gone there. My ex-wife (Steven's mother) and my daughter went to Mt. Holyoke. So I began to wonder what happens when these old, god-damn women's colleges go co-ed.

"And another thing, I insisted on unknown young actors. I don't want any 35-year-old freshmen. The female lead, Alexa Kamin, is just turning 17. The three young men are 21. One of them, by the way, is Ed Nelson's son, Chris.

An American Opera

Handsome Anatol (Henry Price) seduces the shy Erika (Katherine Ciesinski) in the American opera "Vanessa," airing on great performances, Wednesday, January 31, on PBS.

(Check local stations for time and channel.)

The very first collaboration of Samuel Barber and Gian Carlo Menotti is the Pulitzer Prize-winning opera, "Vanessa." It airs Wednesday, Jan. 31 (check local listings) over PBS' "Great Performances" series.

"Vanessa," taped before a capacity audience at the 1978 Spoleto Festival, U.S.A., is a penetrating tale of a morbid love triangle, marked with unrequited love and loneliness. For 20 years, Vanessa (Johanna Meier) has waited for her lover to return. She maintains her silent vigil in a castle nestled in the somber Scandinavian countryside; the time is 1905.

Her mother, an old and embittered woman, and shy, oppressed niece Erika (Katherine Ciesinski) share Vanessa's life and reflect her despair.

At last, a handsome young man, Anatol (Henry Price) appears. Vanessa is shocked when she realized that this isn't the man for whom she has waited so long. She orders him from her sight; his shock is compounded with the realization that Anatol is the son of her now-dead lover.

Young Erika falls prey to Anatol, although he quickly dismisses her in favor of her much older Aunt Vanessa, whom he promptly marries. Vanessa, now buoyant, leaves her estate to Erika, whose time of silent waiting has arrived.

Menotti: American Composer

TWIN FALLS — The Northwest Opera Association's production of "The Old Maid and the Thief" at the College of Southern Idaho this weekend is a good opportunity to introduce yourself to Gian-Carlo Menotti, though not a native son, is very much a contemporary American opera composer.

Born in Italy in 1911, he studied at the Milan Conservatory from 1923 to 1928. He composed his first opera, "The Death of Pierrot," in 1924.

In 1928 he came to the U.S. to study at the prestigious Curtis Institute. To further his studies there he composed a one-act opera, "Amelia Goes to the Ball," which was performed in Philadelphia and New York City in 1937. The opera enjoyed such great success that NBC commissioned him to write in 1939 the first opera broadcast by radio, "The Old Maid and the Thief," which was later made into a stage production.

Menotti wrote "The Medium" in 1946 and "The Telephone" in 1947, but he is best known for "Amahl and the Night Visitors," probably the most frequently produced opera in the country. It premiered on Christmas Eve 1951 and was the first opera expressly written for TV transmission.

He has won two Pulitzer Prizes for his operas, "The Saint of Bleeker Street" and "Vanessa." His musical style is eclectic, encompassing many modes of expression, but meets the demands of good theater.

Gian-Carlo Menotti has been a musical pioneer of this century's media frontiers and is one of America's great living composers.

JOHN LENNON
... in his own writed again!

By ROBIN ADAMS SLOAN

Q: Hasn't Farrar Fawcett-Majors' career taken a nose dive ever since she decided to leave TV and make movies? — I.M., Dearborn, Mich.
A: Nose dive may be too strong a description of Farrar's current fortunes although her first movie — "Somebody Killed Her Husband" — set no fires among the critics or at the box office. She's made her second film so we'd wait at least until that one comes out before counting Farrar out as a box-office draw. No matter what happens, though, Farrar will remain as some kind of pop-showbiz institution on the basis of her original haul, "Charlie's Angels" superstardom, and poster notoriety. In fact, two movies are in the works, both supposedly inspired by Farrar's rise, and neither will employ her in the cast. One is based on Leslie Deane's best seller, "The Girl with the Golden Hair"; the other has a less flattering title — "The Plastic Starlet."

Q: What's Sarah Miles doing these days? I haven't heard much about her. — D.D., St. Paul, Minn.
A: Sarah, 37, whose last film was 1976's "The Sailor Who Fell From Grace With the Sea," with Kris Kristoferson, has been keeping a low profile. Currently, she's on the college lecture circuit talking about theater arts. She's planning to marry film director Harris Yulin. All this is a far cry from those sexy pictures some time back in Playboy with Kristoferson.

Q: I'm tickled that Sissy Spacek will play the part of country music queen Loretta Lynn in the film "Coal Miner's Daughter." Is Sissy the real name of this interesting and far-out actress? — H.C., Houston.

A: Back in the small Texas town where she grew up, Sissy, 28, was christened Mary Elizabeth. The star of the freaky film "Carrie" and other hits was given her girlhood tag by her elder brothers. The name stuck so well, Sissy began using it professionally, because it seemed to fit like a glove. Imagine Mary Elizabeth Spacek on a marquee!

NOTHING TO IT: Betty Ford, who's been pretty candid about her facelift, has had the last word on the subject. She told reporters the other day: "It's the thing to do in California — sort of like getting your pants done."

BUDDING AUTHORS? Are John Lennon and Yoko Ono planning to tell all in a book? Can't say for sure, but check this out: Both were in a Manhattan typewriter shop recently, pricing electric models. Choosing one for $29, John gazed into Yoko's eyes and said, "We'll take two!" After giving brisk delivery instructions to the salesman, the pair bounded out of the store.

Q: I just loved Bo Svenson in the movies. Is he coming up in anything soon? — A.O., Richmond, Va.

A: Watch for Bo on your TV screen this week. The sheriff of "Walking Tall" (Part Two) will be flying high as a courageous aviator in the Sing-a-long special, "Night Flight" on CBS. The drama is based on the Antline de Saint-Exupery classic and also stars Trevor Howard.

Q: Is Gregory Peck's daughter Cecilia going to follow in her father's footsteps and get into show business? — T.D., Wilmington, Del.

A: It's hard to say right now. Cecilia is an English literature major at Princeton, and she's taking a year off to make a decision on her future. Options right now include photography, journalism or some area of film production. Meanwhile, her brother, Carey, has no doubts about his future. He's chosen a career in law and politics. He was an unsuccessful Democratic candidate for Congress from Los Angeles' 27th district last November.

Gossip

Q: Who was the actor who played Superman in all those TV episodes? — W.K., Newark, N.J.

A: It was George Reeves (no relation to Christopher Reeve who is the new film Superman) who did more than 100 TV programs. Prior to his Superman success George portrayed one of the Tarleton twins, authors of Scarlett O'Hara in "Gone With the Wind." He later appeared in such films as "So Proudly We Hail" and "From Here to Eternity." When Reeves' Superman series was dropped and he had trouble finding work, he blamed his fizzy career on Hollywood's typecasting. He took his own life in 1959.

NOT CONCERNED: Oona Chaplain explained the other day how she felt when Charlie Chaplain's body was stolen from the Swiss cemetery for ransom. She said she never would have paid because Charlie was in heaven and in her heart and that his earthly remains were not important. Two of the men who stole the body were convicted of the crime a few weeks ago.

Q: We hear Henry Fonda was so exhausted at the end of his recent Broadway show that he's taking time off to rest. Is he ill or is it his advanced age? — Z.O., North Bergen, N.J.

A: Neither, although it's true that Fonda is 73. But he tells associates that instead of emerging fatigued from the run of "First Monday in October" on Broadway, he felt refreshed and ready for more work. So, he'll soon go into rehearsals prior to a spring-national tour of the show. That'll be followed by a starring-role in "The Journey of Simon McKeeover," a movie about — appropriately enough — a 73-year-old man. Fonda especially looks forward to the production since daughter Jane will make a special appearance.

Q: Since her last movie, "International Velvet," did so badly at the box office, is Tatum O'Neal being very careful about her next screen role? — E.H., Cincinnati.

A: Yes, and with plenty of help from daddy Ryan — as usual. Tatum is expected to begin a big role next year in Stephen Friedman's movie, "Little Darlings," perhaps with Kristy McNichol as her co-star. All of this, presumably, with Ryan's okay.

Q: Everyone knows Warren Beatty's reputation as a romancer both on screen and off. But what is it that turns the women on? — Y.N., Washington, D.C.

A: His eyes do it followed closely by the lusted haiford. When Warren showed up not long ago for the Paris opening of "Heaven Can Wait," even hard-nosed female journalists demanded he remove his glasses and expose his orbs. One young beauty at a private dinner asked if Warren would will his eyes to a Swiss eye bank. Ever eager to oblige, Warren said indeed he would.

GUESS WHO CARED: Of all the female performers in "Death on the Nile," that includes Mia Farrow, Bette Davis, Angela Lansbury, Maggie Smith, Lois Chiles and Olivia Hussey — guess which two actresses exhibited the greatest star temperament on location — each insisting that her hair be done only in the privacy of a dressing room secluded from the other ladies? Lois Chiles and Olivia Hussey, that's who! Bette, Maggie, Mia and Angela, trouper all, were the real pros who couldn't have cared less about their accommodations.

'Up in Smoke' has limited appeal

By SHELLY KINZEL
Times-News Writer

If you have any inclination toward the lifestyle of a particularly bizarre segment of our population, you may enjoy watching Cheech and Chong's "Up in

PBS aired opera at its finest

NEW YORK (UPI) — The two greatest singers of the day in the most exciting concert of the decade, maybe of the century.

That's the only possibility way to describe the Jan. 22 joint concert by Joan Sutherland and Luciano Pavarotti at Avery Fisher Hall.

If you missed the live PBS telecast, cancel everything else to catch a rerun. This was Italian and French opera sung as it was intended to be sung.

Backed by a trim-line symphony orchestra under Richard Bonynge, the Australian soprano and the Italian tenor twice sang the drinking song "Libiamo" from "La Traviata" — once to open the concert and again as a final encore.

In Miss Sutherland's creamy-rich tones twined round Pavarotti's ringing voice in a wonderful sugar-and-spice combination.

In between the "Libamos" they presented songs, arias and duets from Verdi to Balfe, mostly works familiar from their recordings. And they were in such command that they even sounded better than the recordings.

Every number had the 300-head audience cheering. But some stand out in memory:

Pavarotti filling the hall with sound in "Ah, la paterna mano," from "Macbeth," and seducing the ear with "Pourquoi me reveilles-tu" from "Werther," "Cielo e mar" from "La Gioconda," "O paradiso" from "L'Africana," and "Nessun dorma" from "Turandot" — sung as an encore with white and red roses round his feet.

Smoke." If not, you would be far better off on these cold, blustery evenings curled comfortably by your fireside.

I, unfortunately, had to venture out last night to see a film hardly worth the effort. Starring and written by Cheech Marin and Tommy Chong, "Up in Smoke" is a sometimes humorous, more often crude account of life among the spaced out participants of the drug and punk rock culture. The offbeat characters and situations are so outrageous that it is difficult to tell whether the film is a spoof or for real.

Cheech and Chong play two carefree dropouts by the names of Pedro and "Man." Their main goal is getting high and not getting busted. And that, folks, is the plot. Cheech and Chong smoke pot, pop pills and shoot coke to their hearts' content while being pursued by a bunch of bumbling policemen. (Did you ever notice that cops are either portrayed as dimwitted imbeciles or flawless superheroes?)

The one really bright idea is a van composed of hardened liquefied marijuana, which Cheech and Chong unknowingly smuggle across the Mexican border. One whiff of its exhaust fumes is enough to pacify the entire human race, and there are some funny scenes as innocent bystanders come under its influence. Cheech Marin also has some amusing moments — he is a natural clown with a flair for broad comedy.

The film will make you laugh in spite of yourself, but unless you appreciate "outrageous" humor, you may find much of the dialogue tasteless and coarse. "Up in Smoke," appearing at the Twin and Jerome cinemas, is a film of limited appeal for an even more limited audience.

This last comment is an accolade compared to my appraisal of the second feature I painfully endured at the Jerome Cinema. One of the year's worst films, "Somebody Killed Her Husband" should have been irreparably damaged in the editing room!

This is the kind of movie that makes me angry, because it is an insult to the intelligence of even the most unsophisticated filmgoer. There is not one ounce of truth, humor or excitement in this insipid feature. The film strains to be funny, romantic and scary, but its only achievement is sheer boredom.

Farrah Fawcett-Majors makes her debut in a starring role. It is sad to note that the only thing she has learned to use effectively is her teeth, which continually light up the screen if left your lips. Her performance is a strange vacillation between looking beautiful and bland and occasional fits of hysteria, which seem to come from nowhere and vanish just as rapidly. The lack of motivation may not be entirely her fault. Even Jeff Bridges, a talented actor and two-time Academy Award nominee, struggles pathetically with a banal and unbelievable script.

Bridges plays a would-be writer of children's books working as an impoverished toy salesman at Macy's, New York City's largest department store. Enter Ms. Fawcett-Majors wheeling a two-year-old baby boy. Bridges falls head over heels in love and a few minutes later so does fabulous Farrah. Quite conveniently, she has a rotten marriage, so one day later the two lovers decide to tell her husband that they want to get married. Sounds reasonable, so far, doesn't it?

As they walk tremulously hand in hand to face their destiny, what should they discover but the old-lying face down with a knife in his back. Quick thinking immediately tells them that they are prime suspects, so why not solve the crime themselves? After what seems like hours of incessant babbling, Bridges finally traps the killer in Macy's toy department for a ludicrously terrifying climax.

By all means, avoid this lame feature. "Somebody Killed Her Husband" is a filmmaking fiasco which could send Farrah back to adding after-shave lotion.

Sense of life heightened by death

By CAROL FEISENTHAL
American Library Assn.

Prolific poet and novelist May Sarton has written a novel on dying that's infused with life, that's strangely invigorating.

When we meet Laura Spielman, heroine of Sarton's 16th novel "A Reckoning," she is 60, a widow of three years, with memories of an unusually happy and fulfilling marriage. Now engaged in her job as an editor at Houghton Mifflin, she continues to live a good life.

Feeling fatigued and short of breath, she consults her family doctor. He tells her she has terminal cancer, inoperable because the disease has engulfed both lungs. All he can promise is that she'll live to see the spring.

Upon hearing this hopeless prognosis, Laura feels incredibly elated. Instead of dreading death, she welcomes it. She sees dying as her last and best chance to eliminate all the "nonessentials" and concentrate on resolving the conflicts in her life — to come to what she calls "a reckoning."

The daughter of a diplomat and a brilliant, beautiful, mother, who counted Edith Wharton among her friends, Laura is the product of a privileged but troubled childhood. Conflicts with her mother Sybille — who dominated and in some ways stunted her children — remain unresolved. Many of the conflicts have passed to the next generation — to her daughter who has nothing but contempt for Laura's suburban life; to her homosexual son, a talented but tormented artist.

As the trees outside her bedroom bloom and her lungs wither, Laura's head fills with images of childhood. She relives her year at the Sorbonne and her friendship with Ella. "... Whenever we met it was as though we became one person in two bodies ... there was a kind of understanding, of shared response to everything ... being with her I became fully myself." Sybille, suspecting unnatural fervor in this friendship, crushes it.

She recalls her sister Jo's infatuation with a woman — an infatuation that would have blossomed into a love affair, had Sybille not ruthlessly ripped the two girls apart and shipped Jo off to Radcliffe. There Jo exchanged her passion for life for a passion for work, becoming a successful but emotionless college president. Sister Daphne longed to become a veterinarian. Sybille had grander plans for the most beautiful of her daughters. Many years and unsuitable lovers later, Daphne works as an attendant in an animal hospital.

Sarton focuses on the internal, rather than the external details of dying. But she says more about dying — the awful humiliation of a vigorous, creative mind trapped inside a decaying body — than a shelf full of books stuffed with facts, figures, evidence of incompetent doctors and dangerous hospitals. When Sarton injects one of her few clinical details — the description of Laura's doctor plunging a hypodermic needle into Laura's back and draining dark orange fluid from her lungs — the effect is wrenching, because the reader cares so deeply about Laura.

Her struggle to die in her own way, without cobalt or chemotherapy, her determination to use every drop of her dwindling strength to grasp her life is truly courageous. Laura's story, sans sex, violence or suspense, is riveting.

Death is also the prime mover in Gillian Martin's new novel. Like her first highly and justifiably praised novel "The Goat, the Wolf, and the Crab," "Passage of Time" is graced by its author's sharp eye for social subtleties and stupidities.

Fifteen years of marriage have left Barry and Ruth with two daughters, some nice memories and loads of resentment.

The Problem of Pornography: What's Happening Today in Cities Large and Small

No city, no matter how large or small, is immune to a problem currently sweeping the country — pornography. But whether in the North, South, East or West, many Americans agree that some action must be taken to control this spreading blight. What legal methods can be effectively used? What are the effects of pornography on a community? These are some of the questions FAMILY WEEKLY sets out to answer in this comprehensive survey of 14 middle-sized cities — not unlike your own.

'Osmond Family Show' premieres

Each week on the new "Osmond Family Show," premiering January 28, 7 p.m., ABC-TV, Donny and Marie will be joined by the members of the Osmond family to bring their concept of family entertainment to the airwaves. Whether they are singing, dancing, skating or just plain having fun, (l to r back row: Vurl, Jay, Alan, Tom; 2nd row: Donny, George, Olive, Jimmy and front row: Merrill, Marie, Wayne) each provide a special talent and touch to the new variety series.

The 14 Most Common Medical Myths

Despite the tremendous scientific advances of recent years, mistaken notions about what can harm or help your health still abound. Do you know whether eating chocolate causes or aggravates acne? Whether massive doses of Vitamin C can prevent colds? How about whether exercise takes off pounds? If you're uncertain, you won't be after reading this eye-opening FAMILY WEEKLY article.

Secretary of Energy James Schlesinger (left) and Senate Energy Committee Chairman Henry Jackson are two of the key players in "The Energy War," a five-hour PBS documentary series, which chronicles the legislative battle over the Carter Administration's bid to place unprecedented controls on the natural as industry. It airs Sunday-Tuesday, Jan. 28-30, on PBS.

The spectacle of Park City, Utah's famed Winter Carnival serves as the setting for the Jan. 28, 7 p.m., premiere airing of "The Osmond Family Show," ABC-TV's sparkling new variety series, and "our dream come true," says Marie Osmond, who joins Donny and all the Osmond clan in what they plan as a true family entertainment.

"We have always wanted to do a family show," adds Donny. "Our family is the most important thing in the world to us. We've always performed together, worked together and shared our problems. Now we have a chance to share our particular kind of crazy fun with the viewing audience. Our new format allows us to go to some of the world's most exciting locations—A rodeo at the Houston Astro-dome, a command performance for Queen Elizabeth in England and a very special Valentine's Day show are already in the making. Plans are in the works for our show to be done from mainland China. And, of course, there couldn't have been a better place than the Winter Carnival at Park City, Utah to have the first edition of "The Osmond Family Show." Besides being a dynamite ski resort, it is an authentically restored 19th century mining town—fantastic!

"All of us will be there," Donny continued. "Merrill, Jay, Alan, Marie, Jimmy, Mother, Father and some of the grandchildren, to try our hands at the wild games and contests Winter Carnival is famous for.

Can you believe that we are going to build the world's largest snowman for the Guinness Book of World Records? That is going to be terrific!

"Of course, we'll be singing and dancing — and the Ice Angels will be back! Roy Clark, the U.S. SKI Team, and magician David Copperfield are joining us for the fun."

Highlights of the show include the "First Annual Osmond Invitational Relay Race," a somewhat whacky exercise involving not only skiing, but snowshoeing and a slalom in rubber trails. Appropriately, Roy Clark performs "Top of the World" from a hot air balloon waiting over the snowy landscape.

The Osmond Brothers sing "Steppin' Out," a disco number from their new album, which was produced by the Bee Gees' Maurice Gibb.

"The Osmond Family Show" is produced by Alan Osmond and Phil Hahn. Walter Miller directs; and the executive producers are the Osmond Brothers. Carl Jablonski is the choreographer. "The Osmond Family Show" is an Osmond Television production.

PBS scrutinizes Hong Kong

In 1997, less than 20 years from now, about nine-tenths of Hong Kong's territory is to be returned to China, which leased it to the British in 1998.

For a colony that can barely find room for its more than four million inhabitants, that ought to be a sobering, even frightening prospect. Yet the people of the "Fragrant Harbor," as the name of Hong Kong is translated, spend little time worrying about what may happen in 1997. Most of them work too hard wrestling a living from the present.

"Hong Kong: A Family Portrait," the National Geographic Special that airs Sunday, Jan. 28 (check local listings) on PBS, portrays the colony through the eyes of the Leong Family.

The Leongs are a family of 13 whose daily lives center around their boat-store in the Yáumati Typhoon Shelter in Hong Kong Harbor.

They leave their boat each night for a crowded apartment on land, since staying on their slowly-sinking vessel might invite tragedy. Leong family members have lived on water for more than 100 years, and Mr. Leong — a merchant — carries on the family trade.

He and his sons sell their wares to sailors aboard foreign ships in the teeming port. The Leongs' business is a floating general store, bringing the sailors overboard from postcards to cassettes of American hit songs to the storied Hong Kong suits.

The hard-working Leongs, like most Hong Kong families, are suspended between the modern world and ancient Chinese customs.

For instance, Hong Kong families are very close, and parents are treated with great respect and obedience. But Ah Lin, the Leongs' eldest daughter, has defied that tradition when she rejected a well-to-do suitor chosen by her parents, and started spending time with a co-worker, Ah Cheung, son of a coolie — a porter.

As modern as the industrial colony may be, its people still put great faith in the predictions of seers, fortune-tellers and other communicators with the spirit world. In the film, Mrs. Leong consults one such fortune-teller who bases his prophecies on the facial features and hands of his clients.

The climax of the film is the marriage of the rebellious Ah Lin to Ah Cheung, a marriage that the Leongs had discouraged. As the traditional bride, Ah Lin's wedding dress is red, the color of luck, and she serves Ah Cheung's parents the ceremonial tea that symbolizes her obedience to them and their acceptance of her.

TV confronts its audio lag dilemma

NEW YORK — One fruitful method of spotting the turning points of cultural history is to trace the origin of words denoting new thoughts or things. Etymologists scrutinizing the 1970s will note the emergence of the word "simulcast," meaning the simultaneous broadcasting of a program over television and FM radio, with the picture going the normal route while the sound is sent out in wide-range stereo by a collaborating radio station. The virtue of lifelike sound is thus added to television, benefitting in particular programs in which music plays an important part.

The enthusiasm for such simulcasts as "Live From Lincoln Center" or "Evening at Symphony" on the part of music-minded viewers points up the dismal fact of television's sonic impotence. If it were capable of adequate sound, there would be no need for simulcasts.

Having opened the ears of a discriminating segment of the television audience, simulcasts now raise the question of how much longer the public will put up with regular television sound, which typically ranges from miserable to poor. The question is by no means rhetorical. In fact, television networks are scrambling to upgrade their audio now that its sorry condition has been exposed by contrast with the excellent simulcasts.

But simulcasts — done mostly under noncommercial auspices — are not the only prod stirring the major networks from their lethargy. Films have also contributed toward making audiences more sound-conscious. Undoubtedly, the popular appeal of "Star Wars" and other technically advanced film productions was at least partly due to their wide-range, Dolby-encoded, multi-channel sound tracks. Such examples of superb image-plus-sound presentations made broad segments of the public painfully aware of television's sonic anemia, and apparently convinced network managements that — something drastic had to be done.

Part of the trouble lay with the lines linking the network stations. Their norms were set circa 1950, long before hi-fi and stereo raised the general level of aural expectation. These lines generally cut off all sound above 5,000 Hertz, limiting available fidelity to that of an ordinary AM radio.

It was the Public Broadcasting Service — often more venturesome than the commercial networks — that took the first bold step to break this bottleneck. PBS did away with most of its lines. For more than a year, the system has been distributing its programs via satellite, thereby gaining access to wide-range audio channels accommodating the entire frequency band from 30 to 15,000 Hz. Since the television transmitters themselves fully encompass this band, the audio quality on PBS thus reached par with that of FM broadcasts, though, of course, the sound is mono only.

Goaded by this technical coup, the commercial networks last year in courted the PBS move. By mid-1978, all three networks had abandoned the old muffled-sounding telephone lines that used to carry television audio signals across the country. Instead, they now use a system called diplexing, which permits the audio part of a broadcast to be piped along the same wide-range-microwave links or coaxial cables that carry the video signal. As a result, all networks now have the capability of broadcasting high-fidelity sound.

This capability is not yet uniformly utilized. Studio equipment and production techniques often lag behind the new transmitting potential. Television tape recorders, in particular, are designed mainly for video and give short shrift to the audio portion of recorded programs. A few quality-conscious television stations — notably WGBH in Boston — now use separate high-quality audio recorders synchronized with the video recorders to overcome these problems. Cognizant of the trend toward better sound, the makers of video recorders and other studio equipment are now putting improved sound facilities into their latest models. Thus, within a couple of years, one might expect all television programs originating at major stations to have satisfactory sound.

Yet one obstinate obstacle remains: the home receiver. The typical table-model television set has a sound section akin to that of a cheap portable radio, and even the fancy cabinets of massive television consoles merely hide the paucity of the audio components they contain. "Why put good sound gear into television sets when the transmitted signal is no good?"

argued the set manufacturers, mindful that putting minimal audio into television sets meant higher profits at a given price.

This self-serving chicken-and-egg logic no longer applies, and that broadcasting has been upgraded. What is needed is home equipment capable of taking advantage of the recently improved telecasts. So far, most set manufacturers ignore this challenge and go on making receivers sounding no better than before. But at least one audio manufacturer now offers a high-quality television audio tuner as a separate component.

Connectable to any stereo system, Pioneer's Model TVX-3500 picks up the sound portion of all United States television channels — both VHF and UHF — to reproduce television sound in high fidelity through the owner's stereo system. Of course the sound is mono since (at least at this point) television transmissions are monophonic. But in other respects, the sound quality is comparable to what is normally heard only in simulcasts. The tuner requires its own antenna or may be connected to the regular television antenna through a simple, inexpensive coupling device.
