

CIA fears impact of 16 words in Oregon magazine story

PORTLAND, Ore. (UPI) — The editor of an Oregon monthly magazine said Monday he would publish an article by a former U.S. spy despite warnings from the CIA that 16 words in the 7,000-word article would compromise relations with a "certain foreign country."

Tom Bates, editor of Oregon Magazine, said he gave the order to finish publishing the May edition containing the disputed words. He declined to identify the words other than to say they were in two consecutive sentences in the 7,000-word article.

Bates said the article would be on the "street" later this week unless the CIA got a court order to halt publication.

The two-part series entitled, "I was Jai Amin's Basketball Czar," was written by Jay Mullen, of Medford, Ore., a former undercover CIA agent who served as a professor at a university in Kampala and established a basketball team in Uganda.

John Greaney, associate general counsel for the CIA, had sought to have the 16 words deleted in the interest of national security. He was not available for comment on Bates' decision.

The U.S. attorney's office in Portland referred questions about the possibility of seeking a court restraining order on behalf of the CIA to the Justice Department in Washington. Mark Sheehan, an assistant director of public relations for the department, said simply, "No comment" when asked if any legal action was being considered in the case.

Bates said Greaney had told him the publication of the article with the 16 words could have a possible "chilling effect" with our relations with a foreign government.

Bates, who declined to identify the words, said he did not think the words would have such an effect.

The editor said the magazine had agreed in talks with Greaney since Thursday night to eliminate other sections of the article which possibly could have jeopardized the lives of people still living in Uganda.

Bates complained, however, that the CIA had only sought the deletions on the eve of publication rather than seeking them when first notified of the planned articles late last month.

"From the start we never intended to do anything unlawful," Bates said. "We don't intend to do anything unlawful in the future."

Wild area resources opened to use

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Carter Monday ordered more than 30 million acres of untrampeled U.S. countryside opened up for logging, oil, gas and mineral exploration.

At the same time the president asked Congress to add 15.4 million acres to the nation's wilderness system, almost doubling the acreage preserved from roads or settlement.

About 3.9 million acres of wilderness would be in the lower 48 states and about 5.5 million in Alaska.

Wilderness areas, which must be approved individually by Congress, are intended to offer solitude, with access only by foot, trail, horse or — in Alaska — by dog sled.

Carter also asked Agriculture Secretary Bob Bergland to study another 10.6 million acres of the land with a view to energy exploration and possibly logging.

These areas include parts of the Overthrust geological formation running through Montana, Idaho, Utah and Wyoming and believed rich in energy resources.

The 36 million acres opened to Forest Service development were carved out of 62 million acres of roadless land which had been under study for possible inclusion in the wilderness system.

Carter said in a White House statement release of the lands will help meet the nation's "urgent need for energy, wood products, livestock forage, minerals" and will provide for a "broad array of recreational opportunities."

"While we plan to proceed with their uses on these lands, this does not automatically mean that all of these areas will be intensively or immediately developed," said Assistant Agriculture Secretary M. Rupert Culler.

Another Agriculture Department official said the 20 to 30 years before the activities begin on some non-wilderness areas.

The lands involved are in 38 states from coast to coast and Puerto Rico.

The largest chunks of wilderness are proposed for Idaho with 1.5 million and Colorado with 2 million acres. Almost 1 million acres have been proposed in California and about 700,000 in Wyoming.

Other states with about 500,000 acres of proposed wilderness include Arizona, Montana, Nevada, New Mexico, Oregon, Utah and Washington.

Wilderness designations were also sought in East Coast states from Florida to New Hampshire and Vermont.

The Wilderness Society, Friends of the Earth and Sierra Club called the action "imbalanced and shortsighted" and said they will urge their members to ask Congress to overturn the action.

An official of the National Forest Products Association said the industry needs access quickly to the acreage declared non-wilderness because of a shortage of timber supplies.

Vehicle overturns, occupants injured

Two women suffered minor injuries when this late-model car flipped over on its top after colliding with a 1970 sedan in the 2400 block of Elizabeth Boulevard in Twin Falls Monday afternoon. A passenger in the overturned vehicle, Kim Byrne, 18, and driver Pamela Kirchenwitz, 17, of Twin Falls, were slightly injured. Joyce Carpenter, 36, of Jerome, was cited for improperly backing her car from a driveway onto Elizabeth Boulevard. She collided with the Kirchenwitz vehicle. Miss Kirchenwitz was cited for basic rule violation. City Police Officer Dan Crafton inspects overturned vehicle.

Social Security in fragile financial shape

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Social Security is in fragile financial shape and can't withstand a cut in payroll taxes without a reduction in benefits or a fresh source of funds, a government report said Monday.

The report by the Social Security system's cabinet-level Board of Trustees also warned that the Medicare trust fund might go broke by 1992 unless hospital costs are held down. The board — made up of the secretaries of HEW, Labor and the Treasury — said the current method of financing Social Security doesn't provide a wide enough "margin of safety" to deal with unexpectedly bad short-run economic downturns.

Social Security Commissioner Stanford Ross asserted the system is still sound, but said some thought should be given to using money from a healthier fund such as Disability to shore up a weaker one such as Old Age and Survivors.

Asked at a news conference if Social Security were strong enough to permit a tax cut, Ross replied, "No, it is not." He said the system is just beginning to feel the effect of emergency tax increases passed by Congress in 1977.

"I don't think there's any question that in the very long run some restructuring of this system is required," he said.

The board's report opposed payroll tax cuts without offsetting reductions in expenditures or alternative financing arrangements until the fund can "withstand a serious economic downturn."

Congress has legislated step-by-step increases in Social Security taxes until the end of 1990, but inflationary tax payers have been campaigning for a rollback of the latest rise.

President Carter has proposed reductions in death benefits for surviving dependents, disability benefits and minimum monthly retirement payments.

The report said hospital funds for the nation's 27 million Medicare beneficiaries will run out by 1992 unless Congress approves a hospital cost containment bill that cuts benefits or provides alternative financing.

It said the trust fund for the 29.7 million Old Age and Survivors insurance beneficiaries is expected to decline over the next two years "to a level that is only barely adequate to meet immediate program needs."

The report said a moderate economic improvement would lead to a post-1982 upturn in revenues that could see the trust fund "well into the next century."

Three Mile Island staff called too thin in crisis

By LONNIE ROSENWALD
Times-News writer

IDAHO FALLS — The staff of the Three Mile Island nuclear power plant was stretched too thin during the crisis there to be able to correct the reactor problem, according to an Idaho nuclear safety expert.

After returning from a week of assisting Metropolitan Edison workers in stabilizing and cooling down their disabled plant in Harrisburg, Pa., Nick Kaufman, director of the EG and G Co.'s Loss of Fluid Test (LOFT) program at the Idaho National Engineering Laboratory, said the Met Ed workers couldn't handle the pressure brought by public officials and the press.

"They were deluged with state and federal officials and media, all demanding instant answers and diagnoses. Trying to handle the total pressure was more than they could handle," Kaufman said. "The capability of the utility to handle a crisis situation like this is not sufficient."

Kaufman said the Met Ed staff was stretched thin just keeping the plant in operation, and did not have personnel to plan efforts to correct the plant's problem. The principle problem was to eliminate a hydrogen bubble in the reactor vessel without creating extreme temperatures around the reactor core.

The planning duties were assumed by a group of nuclear experts, including Kaufman and Dr. Larry Ybarondo, head of water reactor safety research for the EG and G Co. at INEL, who were flown in from all over the country to assist Met Ed.

Ybarondo said the nation's response system "is not nearly as good as it should be" because it took too long for the utility to announce the accident and for federal agency officials to arrive at the site and to designate who was in charge of the response.

He also criticized the press for disturbing the utility employees.

"Those are distractions which in my mind the Nuclear Regulatory Commission and people at the plant don't need," he said.

Ybarondo also had some harsh words for Pennsylvania Gov. Dick Thornorton, who advised Pennsylvania to stay indoors during the danger period.

Ybarondo said that advice "wasn't very sound," since radiation can easily penetrate residential structures.

The two INEL safety experts were part of a team of 30 nuclear engineers summoned to Harrisburg, Pa., four days after a malfunction caused the possibility of a serious nuclear disaster at the nuclear power plant. Harrisburg for a week advising Metropolitan Edison workers on stabilizing and cooling down the plant.

Kaufman, who has worked with safety systems similar but not identical to the Three Mile Island system for 15 years, said the accident proved the public is safe in the event of a nuclear accident, but he said the method of response to nuclear accidents such as the one at Three Mile Island must be improved.

He predicted a permanent nuclear safety team would be organized and recommended that the procedure for announcing an accident should be speeded up.

The Three Mile Island accident will cause a re-examination of plant safety, Ybarondo said.

He said Metropolitan Edison committed a "serious violation" of its agreement with federal nuclear regulators by leaving a valve open which caused the problem at the plant. He recommended the plant employees should be required to submit written statements explaining which steps were turned off and why.

He also said the people of Harrisburg were unnecessarily alarmed by officials about dangers during the accident.

"You would have had 30 hours notice if the reactor vessel was going to be breached," necessitating an evacuation, Ybarondo said.

Kaufman and Ybarondo were first contacted about the Three Mile Island accident by Nuclear Regulatory Commission safety director Saul Levine on a Friday at 3 p.m. Levine told them there was "a very serious accident," but he didn't have all the facts.

'Ma and Pa' California weekly probes Synanon, wins Pulitzer

NEW YORK (UPI) — The Point Reyes Light, a Northern California "ma and pa" weekly newspaper, Monday won the Pulitzer Prize for public service for uncovering evidence of violence, weapon stockpiling and profiteering by Synanon.

The Light, a 2,700-circulation community newspaper with only one full-time and four part-time reporters, is published by Catherine and David Mitchell, both 35, near the national headquarters of Synanon, a drug- and alcohol-rehabilitation organization.

James Risser of the Des Moines Register won his second Pulitzer for national reporting for a seven-part series on pollution by farmers.

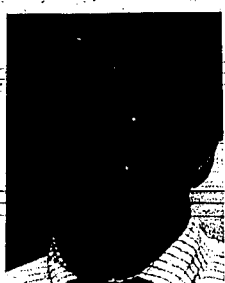

And 28-year-old Richard Ben Cramer of the Philadelphia Inquirer gave the inquirer its fifth successive Pulitzer with his 1979 award for international reporting on the human toll of turmoil in the Middle East.

Editorial cartoonist Herb Block, who signs his Washington Post and syndicated cartoons as "Herbblock," and poet and novelist Robert Penn Warren both won their third Pulitzers.

It was the 63rd annual awarding of the Pulitzer Prizes. A total of 985 entries were considered.

In citing the Light for the public service Gold Medal for 1979, the Pulitzer Prize Board noted the "pioneering expose of this quasi-religious, corporate cult."

"In recent years, and particularly in 1978, the Point Reyes Light has looked into practices at the clinic, found evidence of beatings, of hoarding of weapons... of revenge attacks and other legal and extra-legal goings-on," the Pulitzer board said. Block, 69, who won Pulitzers in 1942 and 1954 for specific cartoons, was honored in 1979 "for the body of his work" as a cartoonist spanning 50 years.

Warren, 73, who now lives in Fairfield, Conn., won his third Pulitzer Prize for his book of poems, "Now and Then: Poems 1976-1978." He won the Pulitzer first in 1947 for fiction for his book "All the King's Men" and his second in 1958 for poetry for "Promises: Poems 1954-56."

Novelist John Cheever won the 1979 prize for fiction for "The Stories of John Cheever," a collection of 61 stories written since 1945. He won the National Book Award in 1958 for his novel, "The Wapshot Chronicle."

The San Diego Evening Tribune won the prize for general local reporting for its coverage of the air disaster over San Diego last Sept. 25 in which 154 people were killed. The newspaper's last edition was on the streets less than six hours after the collision between a Pacific Southwest Airline 727 and a small Cessna with a package of 10 stories, including a color photo of the crash site.

Reporters Gilbert Goss and Elliot Jaspin of the Pottsville (Pa.) Republican won the Pulitzer for special local reporting for a year-long investigation into the demise of the Blue Coal Corp.

The other winners of Journalism prizes were:
•Editorial writing: Edwin Yoder Jr., editorial page editor of the Washington Star.
•Spot photography: Thomas J. Kelly III of the Pottstown, Pa., Mercury.

•Feature photography: The 16 staff photographers of the Boston Herald American for their photos on the snow storm that struck New England in February 1978.

•Criticism: Paul Gapp of the Chicago Tribune for his architecture criticism.

•Feature writing: John Franklin of the Baltimore Evening Sun for a two-part feature describing a delicate brain operation.

BACK TO HEALTH

By Michael Haneline D.C.

The use of manipulation for healing, as practiced in chiropractic, is not new. In fact, manipulative procedures may be one of the oldest of all the ways that man has used to cure illness and provide relief from pain.

Chinese documents dating back to 2700 B.C. mention manipulation for healing. Manipulation was used extensively by the early civilizations, including the Greeks, Egyptians, Syrians, Tibetans, Aztecs and Incas, to name a few.

Many people today have learned that chiropractic manipulation can cure health problems that defy other types of treatment. It will pay you to investigate.

Treaty strains Jordan, U.S. relations

By ANTHONY LEWIS
©N.Y. Times Service

AMMAN, Jordan — Jordan was for years the closest Arab friend of the United States, a reliably "moderate" state in an area of shifting extremes. Since Camp David and the Egyptian-Israeli treaty the relationship has come on hard times. Jordanians and American diplomats both speak of "strain."

The U.S. finds it hard to understand why King Hussein not only joined the outcry against Camp David but pushed for the Baghdad meeting where Arab leaders agreed to ostracize Egypt. But there are reasons for the policy from the Jordanian viewpoint. They were explained to me by Hussein's articulate brother, Crown Prince Hassan — the king is abroad — and by high officials.

First, Jordan was never in a position to make a deal on the future of the West Bank, as some Israeli politicians have urged. All the Arab states have long agreed that the PLO speaks for the Palestinians. Hussein could not ignore that political reality.

"There's a basic constraint on our role," Hassan said. "We cannot be competing with the PLO for support on the West Bank."

Moreover, the Camp David framework agreement envisaged Jordan in a role that was in fact politically impossible: as jointly responsible for West Bank security during the period of "autonomy." Whatever the degree of self-rule, Jordan would be acting under the umbrella of Israeli occupation. "The Jordanian government cannot enter an arrangement that may legitimize the occupation and make us co-guarantors of the status quo," an official said. "It would be different if autonomy were certain to be a transition, with self-determination for the Palestinians at the end. But there is no such assurance."

The Jordanians fear, too, that the United States has used so much of its diplomatic energy on the Egyptian front that it will have little left for the central issue of the Palestinians.

Hussein wrote letters to Presidents Carter and Sadat just before Camp David — warning them against dealing with the relatively easy Egyptian-Israeli issues first and leaving the Palestinian question for later negotiation. Jordanian officials say Sadat sent an assurance in reply that he would focus his efforts on the West Bank.

That history, as Jordanians relate it, indicates another reason for the bitter feelings here: personal outrage at Sadat. "He took us for granted," Hassan said. "He was arrogant, had delusions of grandeur."

There is also criticism of American attitudes after Camp David; the Jordanians say State Department officials told them bluntly that they had better get aboard the Camp David process if they wanted to stay on good terms with the United States. "It was a bit of a cold shower, frankly," Hassan said.

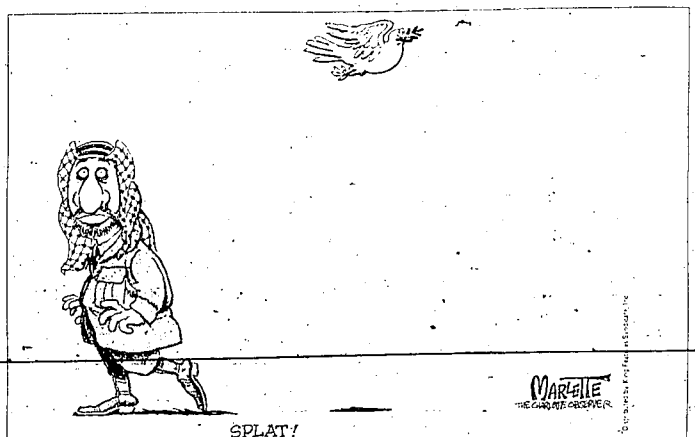

As for the Baghdad summit, Jordanians argue that it had some positive results for peace in the long run. For one thing, Iraq gave up its opposition to any settlement with Israel, generally accepting the idea of peace with Israeli withdrawal from occupied territory. And Iraq has since held to a more moderate stance.

The Jordanians also argue that the Baghdad agreement was necessary to avoid a polarization of the Arab world, between radical and pro-Western states, that would have left Saudi Arabia and the Gulf sheikhdoms dangerously exposed. They note that only worked after Baghdad to stop South Yemen's attack on the north.

Americans who deal with the Middle East will not find these arguments uniformly convincing. But I am persuaded of one thing: that it would be a great mistake to put Jordan down now as "reactionist" or uninterested in peace. For despite the constraints on what they feel they can do, the Jordanians still urgently want to find some way to a settlement with Israel: a solution for the Palestinians. When I suggested to Hassan that more people in Israel — the West Bank, and of a Palestinian homeland, he said he now seemed to accept the inevitability of withdrawal from the West Bank. He said the Peace Now movement, elements in the Labor Party, "kibbutzniks and the younger generation look to me to be very attractive indeed."

But the political reality, Hassan and other Jordanians say, is represented by continuing Israeli settlement of the West Bank. He showed a map of the West Bank with many shaded areas for present or planned settlements especially in the Jordan Valley. "Public opinion on the West Bank is in the 'fall,'" the prince said. "The Israelis are moving rapidly to the left," he said. "The Israelis claim to be anti-radical, but their policy creates radicalism."

WASHINGTON — Does the White House have any influence on public broadcasting? To find out, the Carnegie Commission on the Future of "Public Broadcasting" filed a Freedom of Information request for all records on the subject from 1967 to the present held at the Commerce Department's National Telecommunications and Information Administration.

Henry Geller, the Commerce broadcasting honcho, was delighted to comply: on Jan. 4, he met with Margaret McKenna, deputy White House counsel, to urge President Carter to waive the exemption to the act that allows presidents to keep their internal advice confidential.

According to an agonized memo Geller later wrote to White House Domestic Council chief Stuart Eizenstadt, Geller thought he received clearance to release the Nixon files, with a caveat to wait until the White House decided whether to release the Ford and Carter records on that subject.

On Feb. 1 a Commerce lawyer called the White House attorney to get an okay to meet with the Carnegie staff and with The New York Times to furnish them with an "inventory" of only the Nixon material. Two days later, the word came back: the Ford-Carter years were not yet cleared, but it looked good for the release of the Nixon material.

On that greenish light, Commerce handed over a 125-page summary of the Nixon dealings with public television.

Then Stuart Eizenstadt decided it might set a bad precedent to reveal what President Carter had been advised about public television. Since it would show a double standard to release the advice to one president and not others, he put the kibosh on the whole deal.

Geller was beside himself. Here was the president's top domestic adviser directing him not to release anything after he had already handed out 125 pages. He quoted a directive on May 27, 1977, from Attorney General Griffin Bell: "The government should not withhold documents unless it is important to the public interest to do so, even if there is some arguable legal basis for the withholding."

But that was written before there were Carter documents; Eizenstadt was unmoved. He approved only the release of 7,000 pages of Nixon-era broadcasting memos. Why one president and not the others? "Because the summary contained the most damaging excerpts," Eizenstadt, who returns his calls, informs me. "The summary put the excerpts in their worst light. To put it in context, and in fairness to the people who wrote those memos, I thought the entire record should be released."

I find that hard to swallow. Eizenstadt's sincerity is apparent when he says, "We should not release any documents from personal advisers to the president," but his actions show that he means the president he works for, and not presidents in general.

At the end of February, the Nixon-only record was released and made a one-day story. But the blatant double standard employed incensed Barry Goldwater, who was never a defender of Nixon wrongdoing. He demanded the same documentation of the Ford-Carter years be delivered to the Senate Commerce Committee. After some wriggling, Geller allowed as how he could come up with the files; he finds this unacceptable. Goldwater is a senator charged with oversight; but what about the people who got the Nixon-only documents under Freedom of Information? Not even a peek is allowed; when I asked Henry Geller how he would handle a request for access to the Carter files on the same basis as the Nixon files, the answer is: "You can request it, but you won't get it."

Geller insists no wrongdoing is involved; Eizenstadt insists he is defending a principle of presidential confidentiality. Secretary of Commerce Juanita Kreps, that triumph of Cabinet tokenism, will not return a call, and the Carnegie Commission informs me it plans no legal challenge (knocking old Nixon sins is one thing, but offending the present administration is not in its line).

What would a look at the Carter records reveal? Not much, but here's an example: the station-selected chairman of National Public Radio is Edward Elson, an Atlanta crony of Bert Lance and a board member of the OAS Bank. Stephen Aug reported in the Washington Star that Chairman Elson — who should have nothing to do with programming — called his programming chief to urge coverage of a Senate hearing. When the hearing went uncovered, the chairman berated his executive, Joseph Gwathmey. He later told a White House aide he had chewed out the errant programmer, adding the aide felt "the writer to be helpful" to the White House.

That's a minor case of recent political interference with government-endowed news, even if naive and not part of a pattern; that kind of meddling and ingratitude ought to be exposed and stopped. But it will never be. If the double standard continues to wave on the opening of presidential files.

The end of Idi Amin

Idi Amin has been chased from his capital and the end of Uganda's eight-year nightmare seems at hand. The joy of a people liberated from murderous brutality is enough to overwhelm for now any misgivings about the role of Tanzanian soldiers in the final act and concern about the difficult task of reconstruction ahead.

Idi Amin built a reputation for baiting the West. His antics ranged from parodies of the "white man's burden" to trifling with the lives of innocent Westerners. In these ways, the self-proclaimed "conqueror of the British Empire" attracted a certain popularity in an Africa where national pride still smarts from the blows of colonialism.

Inside Uganda, he ruled by terror. The victims of the dictatorship ran into the hundreds of thousands; many bodies were savagely mutilated, other victims disappeared without a trace. Thousands more suffered imprisonment or were driven into exile. A well-endowed economy was looted for the benefit of the regime's few friends and protectors, especially the Ugandan army.

There is irony in the part played in Amin's downfall by Tanzania and its President, Julius Nyerere. Nyerere, one of Africa's most respected leaders, is also one of the least militaristic. Tanzania's army is less than formidable, and just a few months ago proved unable to stop a Ugandan invasion. The difference this time seems to have been the total collapse of the Ugandan dictator's support, even within the army whose loyalty he tried so elaborately to buy.

Yet Tanzania has set a disturbing precedent. What has been done this time in a good cause, and with considerable provocation, might as easily be done by others in different circumstances. The danger is the more real because of Africa's colonial legacy of arbitrary borders, dividing kindred peoples and throwing hostile ones together.

The new provisional government of Uganda has called for the execution of Amin, but for a show of understanding toward those who followed his orders out of fear. Nyerere wisely did not attempt to restore to power his friend former president Milton Obote, whose regime made many enemies. The new leadership includes figures known to be well disposed toward the West, and likely to want Western assistance in the reconstruction effort. Their requests should be given careful consideration in the months to come. For now, the good news is that the butcher is gone.

Attorneys write book telling 'How to Get on TV'

Politicians, more than anything else, want to get on television for free. If they can tell the truth, illuminate the issues or solve problems, that is all well and good. But what they really want in their heart of hearts is free time on TV news shows.

Two Washington attorneys named Rick Neustadt and Richard Paisner received a foundation grant to study how the politicians managed to do this. They followed statewide campaigns in three states and what they came away with — "How to Get on TV" — is becoming a small classic. It is being studied not only by politicians, but also by people interested in the sociology of how America works; the magazine Human Behavior, which is devoted to the social sciences, recently devoted a page to the Neustadt-Paisner study.

Neustadt, who now works as a White House aide, gave us permission to use a condensed version of "How to Get on TV." Assignments determine most of what we see on local TV news,

If you get to know them and can sell them on your story, a reporter will be assigned to it. Reporters always want to please the assignment desk; it isn't wise for them to flub an assigned story, so the reporter will do his or her best to bring back a usable report. Don't call a reporter about a story; call the assignment editor to make sure he or she remembers you — you are so the next story will be easier to sell. Don't be embarrassed. Remind this editor how important your story is and that everyone else will be covering it.

2. Schedule the event you want publicized at a convenient time for TV to cover it. The best time is any weekday between 10 a.m. and 2:30 p.m. Night and weekend show have "skewton crews" — although if it's a poor news day, and most weekends are, Saturday and Sunday may have some possibilities. Don't worry about the late evening news — the majority of what you see on the 10 o'clock news is a rerun from 5 and 6 o'clock. Make sure coverage of your story can be completed by midafternoon. Find a site as close to as many stations as possible — no assignment editor likes to waste valuable crew time driving long distances. In the age of live mini-cam events, it doesn't hurt to consider scheduling an easy-to-cover and important event during the news broadcast. You may convince some stations to cover the event live, and you have a good deal of control over live coverage since it cannot be edited.

3. Think up good visuals. But make sure your visuals contain the message you want to get across. A poorly thought-out picture that conveys the wrong impressions can hurt more than help. A political candidate surrounded by smiling children says one thing; a picket line of clannish pickets offers a different impression than a picket line with bearded protesters. Make sure the visuals you choose say what you want them to say.

4. If TV is definitely going to cover the event, wait until the crews arrive.

They are often late — TV crews cover several stories each day and cannot get everywhere on time. Never ask the cameramen to hurry; that will produce just the opposite effect. If print reporters resent the delay, remember, most people get their news from TV. Your event has been set up primarily for TV coverage. Flustered grumbling reporters with conversation, coffee or something stronger.

5. Keep your speech or statement short and simple. A prepared copy of it (press release) should be handed to reporters — more often than not, TV reporters will simply put that press release on the air as it they originated the material. You can always pass out more information, but do not read anything to the cameras that runs longer (90 seconds is ideal). You can control what TV will use by limiting what you say. Confine yourself to a single theme — more details confuse the audience, cause every 20 seconds or so after making an important point. That makes for easy editing — a pause is a perfect cutting point.

6. If you are asked tough questions while the cameras are running, you can tell them they're on by a red light on the camera (tape) or a loud, whirring noise (film) — make sure you do answer the question; but ramble on, making the tape or film unusable. A few years ago you could use profanity, and that would make the statement unusable, but in these more liberated times, that can be a dangerous ploy.

7. End the press conference quickly. The longer it goes on, the more likely the chance for error. Cameras can film or tape something unhelpful; reporters become more aggressive on camera. Say what you want to say; then leave.

8. Don't worry too much if you said something you didn't want to say. If it's buried inside an answer to a question, chances are it will stay there and no one will hear it. TV reporters, unlike newspaper reporters, know little about the stories they are covering; many stations hire glib, good-looking men and women who sound good but have little experience. They get little help from their assignment desks — often the TV reporter is given an address and a two-line description of the event. It may be only one of many stories a reporter covers during the day. There is little time to bone up on background; think up interesting questions or look for any angle other than the one you are prepared to give the reporter. Few in the newsmen will even see the story before it goes on the air — and if it's a live report, it will be even more so your liking, since the reporter's main job is getting on and off the air with a semblance of a story.

Follow-up questions are seldom asked or used. With only 90 seconds allotted to the story, the reporter simply wants to get the basic information in quickly. And if you've done your job, it will be in your prepared press release and two-minute sound statement.

Chemicals pose garden danger

WEST LAFAYETTE, Ind. (UPI) — An overdose of agricultural chemicals can be as dangerous to a garden as an excess of drugs to a man, says a Purdue University pharmacologist.

"We have the same problem we have with medications," said Roger Maickel, a poison expert who heads Purdue's pharmacology and toxicology department. "We tend to overmedicate our gardens."

"For example, if the recommended dose is a pound per acre, we'll put out five, figuring five will do five times as good a job. It won't, and we'll put five times as much in the environment, and it might damage the crop."

Herbicides, pesticides, insecticides and fertilizers can also be dangerous to the people using them — if they aren't careful — since all contain chemicals that can be or are hazards to humans.

When over-applied, they all can damage lawns, flowers, garden crops and indoor plants.

"It's almost like overeating, you don't grow stronger — you only grow obese," Maickel said. "When agricultural chemicals are overused, they have at least three effects."

Selective herbicides, such as dandelion killer, and fertilizers, even the slow-release variety, will burn lawns and crops if put on too heavily.

"It's not just home gardeners, either," Maickel said in an interview. "It's one of the problems my friends in the Ag School report. They try to tell farmers if one application kills 90 percent of the pests, doubling or tripling the dose won't get 100 percent, but it will damage the crops."

"But some big farms in the Midwest are using pesticides at 20 times the recommended levels, and they then get into the waste run-off."

Most people don't pay much attention to directions and aren't too concerned about damage to the biosphere, the pharmacologist said.

Insecticides cause the most poisoning problems among the agricultural chemicals because of "differential toxicity," he said.

"You can kill a bug at a level of exposure that theoretically won't hurt a human. But the level of human exposure can get too high, and in a number of ways."

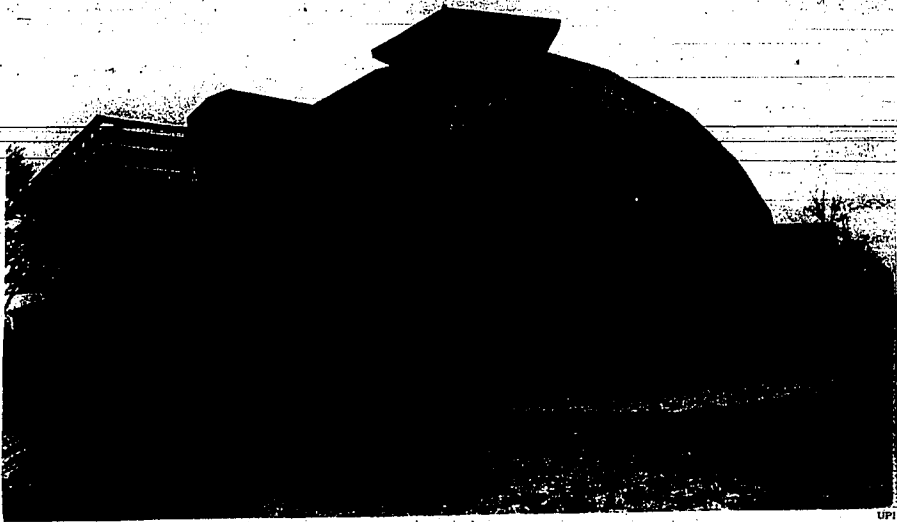

One is using it on the wrong crop — such as lettuce instead of cucumbers.

"You eat the whole lettuce leaf, not just the skin," he said, "so you may be exposing yourself to a level that is going to poison you."

Another is eating the crop too soon after spraying.

"If you're going to use the spray for bean beetles," he said, "don't eat the beans for 48 hours or you can be poisoned. But agricultural chemicals bear warnings in this regard."

Persons using airborne herbicides should not stand downwind or let the spray come in contact with their feet, he said, since "the contents of these little spray cans of weed killer are not only toxic to humans but are easily absorbed through the skin or inhaled."

Cheaper than conventional homes

A kit to build this geodesic dome home which has 5,000 square feet of living space can be purchased for $19,000 which includes everything but materials which can be bought from conventional suppliers. A solar collector and specially designed triangular window facing south help to keep utility bills down. Builder Wayne Wilkins of St. Louis says he is having trouble persuading Midwesterners to buy the domes. He claims they are strong enough to withstand tornadoes and earthquakes and are cheaper to construct than conventional homes with the same area. (UPI)

Now's time to take energy savings precautions

Chicago Sun-Times Homeowners may be tempted to forget about energy saving now that one of the worst winters in history is behind and the fuel bills are getting smaller.

Actually, this is a good time for the handyman to check for the cause of chilly rooms, the source of drafts or leaks near windows or doors. Taking care of these problems will be easier if the work is spaced out during the warm spring and summer days rather than conducting a crash program in the fall.

Two recent publications that do much to take the mystery out of energy-saving techniques are Consumer Reports' "Money-Saving Guide to Energy in the Home" (Crown, $2.50, softbound) and "How to Beat the Energy Crisis and Still Live in Style" by Bill Baker (G.P. Putnam's sons, $12.95).

The Editors of Consumer Reports accurately point out that the most handy person can't handle many energy-saving home improvements — caulking, weather stripping and some types of insulation. But for the homeowner who might require professional help with more involved projects, such as installing a cooling or heating system, there's sound advice on how to choose a contractor, draw up a contract and avoid getting cheated.

Home repairs rank second to automobiles as a source of consumer complaints according to a federal government survey.

The "Money-Saving Guide" takes the reader through the entire house detailing how the heating, cooling and hot-water systems work and how to get the most out of them. It discusses the pros and cons and rates the effectiveness of various energy-saving devices, such as furnace-flue dampers and gas range igniters.

Much attention is given to windows, caulking, weather stripping and insulation. Many persons may be confused when confronted with the many types of caulking compounds, insulation and weather stripping on the market and how to apply them. This book explains it all in detail and comes up with a few surprises. For example, consumer Reports rates a caulking compound that sells for 77 cents at the top of its list. The second top-rated brand sells for $2.18.

Baker's book promises the reader a fuel savings of 50 per cent or more through minor remodeling. That's quite a claim, except perhaps for an old drafty house with an outmoded heating and/or cooling system.

He offers scores of tips for lightening up a home against unnecessary fuel consumption — including the garage and basement and foundation, appliances and wood-burning stoves. There are detailed sections on sealing doors and windows and on insulating walls, floors and ceilings.

The reader is introduced to extra-efficient gas furnaces, energy-saving fireplaces and a central air conditioner that uses one-third the normal amount of electricity.

Whether your home fuel system runs on gas, oil or electricity, you'll get dozens of ideas for reducing your utility bills, including how to make many improvements yourself. Maybe you won't cut your fuel bill in half, but there will be savings.

Believe it or not, fears of an energy crisis are bringing back the wood-burning furnace and cookstove.

And in at least one instance, a homeowner in Connecticut converted his oil furnace to a wood burner. This incident is related in Mary Twitchell's "Wood Energy" Garden Way Publishing, $7.95, softbound.

"Wood Energy" is one of the better books on heating with wood to reach the market since homeowners, particularly in the East, started getting hit with outrageous fuel bills for home heating.

Twitchell doesn't look at wood burning through smoke-colored glasses. She acknowledges its disadvantages — "It can be tiring, dull and demanding. Wood stoves must be tended constantly like babies, fed and cleaned regularly. Ashes must be removed." And there's wood to obtain, stack and split.

But there are advantages: If your fuel oil sells for 50 cents per gallon or more and good wood for burning cost $60 a cord, the wood is the less expensive fuel. And "many people simply want to be more self-sufficient, so heating and cooking with wood is a part of a life-style that includes raising their own food, making their own clothing," according to Twitchell.

Conversion hints for condominiums

By DON DEBAT
Chicago Sun-Times

Those wishing to convert a rental building to a condominium should follow these steps suggested by experts:

Organize — If your building does not have a tenants' association, start one. A small committee should be formed to make initial contacts with the building owner and discuss a possible sale. Collect $100 per apartment for association membership and to help finance preliminary expenses.

Get professional help. A conversion team should include a lawyer experienced in condominium law and a real estate consultant who knows the conversion process. The experts will help determine the cost and handle negotiations with the owner.

Experts will help determine the cost of conversion — which includes such items as renovation, survey, appraisal, escrow, and the costs — and handle negotiations to buy the building from the owner.

A professional appraisal firm must be hired to establish the relative values of the apartments. Comparable factors include square footage, location in the building, condition and functional utility of the floor plan.

Regardless of the appraisals, final prices cannot be set until all conversion costs are computed.

Try to hire the lawyer and consultant on a contingency basis and pay the balance of their fees at closing to keep initial costs low. Under contingency payment, if the conversion doesn't work out, tenants won't be stuck with big legal and consulting bills. The final bill could run to $150,000 for a 100-unit building, not including renovation costs.

Condominium experts also suggest the following committees to help speed conversion:

— Architectural and engineering, to study what repairs are needed and estimate costs. This also will involve hiring an engineering firm to complete a property report, as required by the Chicago condominium ordinance. Next in renovation, the engineering report will be one of the major costs. (It could run as little as $2,000 for a building with fewer than 50 units up to $6,000 or more for a high-rise with more than 400.)

— Budget to figure maintenance costs for the building based on the owner's previous operating expenses.

— Communication, to tell tenants how the conversion is progressing.

Engagements

Dear Abby

He's a good provider except for sex

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN
© by The Chicago Tribune

New York News Syndicate, Inc.
DEAR ABBY: I am 19 and have a year-old girl. Her father liked to sleep with me but didn't like the responsibility of being a father, so he left. I swore I'd never get involved with another man like him again.

Now I have a man who is just the opposite. He wants the responsibility of being a father but doesn't like to sleep with me.

He's a businessman who says he's got business on his mind constantly and never thinks about making love.

We've been living together for a year and he's slept with me only twice. He told me he doesn't think we will ever sleep together again. He's loyal, stays home most of the time, doesn't drink, and is a good man. We work together in his store.

Do you think we will make it together?

DEAR CONFUSED: All that's necessary for two people to "make it together" is for each to need the other. If you can live happily without sleeping with him, and he can live happily with things the way they are, there's no reason why you can't make it.

DEAR ABBY: I would like to know the correct way to wear my wedding ring get. Which ring goes on first—the engagement ring or the wedding band? And what is the reason for it?

MRS. W. W.

DEAR MRS. W.: The wedding band goes on first—I don't know the reason for it, but I like to think that the wedding ring is closer to the heart.

DEAR ABBY: When Randy first started to date, he'd say: "The girl has no curfew, and I have to be in before SHE does. It's embarrassing." Randy is our 15-year-old son, and I'd like to know what the parents of teen-age girls are thinking of.

We're not unreasonable, Abby. We ask Randy to leave the girl's house at 10 p.m. on school nights and 1 a.m. on weekends. If he's going to be held up for any reason, all we ask is a phone call.

This girl he has been seeing a lot of lately has just turned 16. She is under no restrictions on dating. Even when nothing special is planned, she asks Randy to come over and just sit around. Needless to say, we are in a constant state of worry. Our son has had a good upbringing, but even nice kids fall in love and get carried away. I'm afraid they're playing with fire. If Randy came to us and said he wanted to get married before he finished his education, we'd be heartsick.

Abby, please, please tell parents of girls to help parents of boys by curbing those dates and long hours! We love our children, and their well-being is the responsibility of both sets of parents. If this is too long to print, maybe you can shorten it and say it better.

RANDY'S WORRIED PARENTS
DEAR PARENTS: I couldn't have said it any better, and I'm printing every word.

A working day for Virgo

GENERAL TENDENCIES: Morning is excellent for getting your affairs in better shape and for coming to a better understanding with close companions. Start day right early, but the afternoon finds a difficult problem in effect that requires more than usual care in solving it properly. Take care of your health.

ARIES (Mar. 21 to Apr. 19) Pursue career matters wisely and then give a helping hand to a friend who is having problems. Make certain to handle a credit affair well before considering amusement.

TAURUS (Apr. 20 to May 20) If you change your attitude in the morning, you can get good results with others, and find interests. A new contact can turn into a fine ally; so cultivate. Take no risks with credit.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21) Seek more security where all of your affairs are concerned. Handle problems connected with new activities. Plan time to please the one you love more. Show thoughtful care, kindness.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21) You can put your ideas across to a partner with relative ease now and then get into annoying problems, work. Gain favor of bigwig in civic world. Take time for meditation.

LEO (July 22 to Aug. 21) Gain the respect of fellow workers by doing an excellent job and come to a fine understanding with partners later. Take health treatments that give you added vitality and more vigor.

VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 22) Plan time for amusements that relax you before you plunge into work ahead of you. Show more affection for a loved one and get fine response. Take no risks with your money.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 23) Handle home affairs wisely and then tackle all that creative work facing you. Get fundamental affairs on more even keel. Take no risks with family utilities.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21) You find a new way to convince others of your ideas. Make new agreements easily. Improve conditions at home by using positive methods.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21) Handle those duties that bring you the finest returns quickly. Don't waste an opportunity to add to present assets.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 20) Pursue a personal goal early and attain it. Later, you can get into financial affairs and get good results. Be more concerned with the "what-ifs" and "how-ifs" of your life.

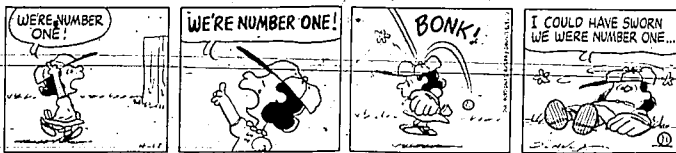

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19) Planning the future more carefully is wise at this time. Improve your appearance also. Put best foot forward in social life. Solve problems wisely. Get the information you need.

PISCES (Feb. 20 to Mar. 20) Gaining backing you need from affluent friends is important now, so don't hesitate to approach them. Be conscientious in all that you do. Later, go ahead and wish and get it.

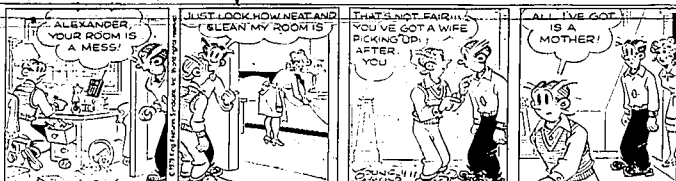

IF YOUR CHILD IS BORN TODAY... He or she will want to have an organized and secure way of living, so be sure to give a good education that will permit your child to do just that. Teach gently to give more attention to details since your child could be annoyed with such, due to lack of patience.

What's what

Forget gasoline, gasohol, electricity and all that; now we can fuel our cars with help from a chicken

A British inventor named Harold Late put together a device that converts chicken droppings to methane gas. Then he put together another device that feeds that gas to his car's engine. He gets up to 75 mph without any gasoline at all. The British Ministry of Transport says Late's gadgetry works perfectly. Interesting. I've known a few Army colonels who with that system could run their cars forever.

It's not that San Diego has more eligible bachelors than any other big town in the country. Rather, it's that San Diego has so many more unmarried men than unmarried women. The ratio was 120 bachelors age 14 and over to every 100 unmarried women.

Even as a grown man, that poet of renown Percy Bysshe Shelley, was addicted compulsively to the sailing of itty bitty paper boats.

In one three-square-mile section of Brooklyn are more than 100 synagogues.

LION TAMER

Q: "How does a lion tamer get a lion to jump up on a stool?"

A: Didn't I tell you about that? There's an exact distance from a lion called the critical line. If you're outside that line, the lion will move away from you. If you're inside that line, the lion will stalk you. The tamer circles the lion outside the line until the stool is between him and the cat. Then the tamer steps closer, crossing over the critical line. The lion turns, stalks the trainer, and jumps up on the stool. And the trainer steps quickly back across the critical line, leaving the lion sitting there, no doubt feeling like an idiot.

TOADS

Toads dine with relish on such devastators of vegetation as cutworms, slugs and mole crickets. Knowing this, the owners of a certain southern country club stage a children's Saturday movie matinee "EVERY" spring-children-from-land and we can get in for a more amusing film than one could get younger. And these toads are scattered all over the golf course.

The higher a woman's I. Q., the more likely she'll be masculine in outlook. The higher a man's I. Q., the more likely he'll be feminine in outlook. No, I didn't say that. A fellow named Corvax did.

To his lengthy list of redundancies, our Language man has added "unexpected surprise."

Woman's complaint on sales technique produces denial

I was home for lunch March 21 when a woman came to my door. "We've had several reports that the water in this neighborhood is contaminated," she said, "and I would like to come back tonight to test your water. That may not be an exact quote, but it is close enough. I told her I was all right for her to come back that evening, and then I started asking questions. It turned out she was from Culligan. She said she started trying to sell me a water softener. I told her to forget it, and not to bother to come back that night. The point is that she was ready to leave; she wouldn't have told me she was a sales lady if I hadn't asked questions. Isn't that sort of thing illegal? — Twin Falls reader.

It sure is. Idaho's Consumer Protection Regulations clearly state that a salesperson, before any other statement, shall give you her/his name and purpose and the company name which s/he represents. In the case of door-to-door solicitation, the salesperson must also show you additional identification, including the address of the firm/s/he represents.

The woman at your door was Barbara Prochnow, a sales lady for Culligan Water Conditioning in Twin Falls. She denies your charges, suggesting you might not have heard her. She says she always identifies herself first and had received a report of hard water in your neighborhood.

About three months ago in the Times-News was an article with picture about handicapped people who had received tons of bolts and screws for free from some big company. The handicapped were selling them for, I think, $2.50 a pack. I sent enough money for four packs but never heard a thing. All I remember is that the address was somewhere in the Twin Falls area. I sent a letter to the address, but it was returned as a ripoff deal. — Fred McNamee, Eden.

Court to say who owns Kissinger transcripts

HENRY KISSINGER guards his privacy

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Supreme Court Monday agreed to decide who owns transcripts of Henry Kissinger's telephone conversations as a White House adviser and as secretary of state.

Kissinger contends the records belong to him, and that any examination of them by outsiders would invade his privacy.

Pitted against him are journalists and historians who claim they are entitled under the Freedom of Information Act to examine the thousands of pages of notes. Arguments on both sides will be heard some time after the court starts its new term in October.

Resuming public sessions after a two-week recess, and with Justice Lewis Powell back on the bench following intestinal surgery, the high court also:

- Agreed to consider whether nursing home recipients must be given notice and a hearing before their facility is de-certified and they are denied Medicare and Medicaid.

- Agreed to decide whether the transcript of a witness' testimony against an Ohio man at a preliminary hearing may be introduced at his criminal trial.

- Rejected the appeal of a Tennessee woman seeking a shutdown of all the nation's nuclear facilities.

- Let stand a ruling that an Alabama woman was competent to stand trial for killing her husband although she had permanent amnesia and could remember nothing of the crime.

In the Kissinger case, the Reporters Committee for Freedom of the Press made a Freedom of Information Act request for transcripts prepared between 1968 and 1977 when Kissinger was Richard Nixon's national security adviser and then secretary of state.

The State Department denied the request, saying the transcripts were not agency records under its control.

When he left office, Kissinger gave his papers to the Library of Congress on condition they not be made public for 25 years or until after his death.

A federal court upheld the refusal to supply White House transcripts, but said the State Department material was subject to access under the information act.

A District of Columbia federal judge said the telephone transcripts were typed by government secretaries on government time, and were "wrongfully removed" by Kissinger.

He ordered the State Department to retrieve the records and screen out portions exempt from FOIA di-closure. However, he said the act does not cover presidential advisers, and declined to order disclosure of the transcripts made at the White House while Kissinger was security affairs adviser.

An appeals court upheld the judge, and both Kissinger and the reporters' group appealed.

The appeals court stayed actual review and release of the material pending Supreme Court consideration of the case.

The Reporters Committee argued Kissinger had "surrendered his claim of ownership" so the court order "merely required documents owned by the United States to be transferred from one government body" to another.

Western-Continental airline merger closer

WASHINGTON (UPI) — An administrative law judge Monday approved a proposal to merge Western and Continental Airlines into a $1.4 billion line which would carry one of every five passengers bearing an aircraft west of the Mississippi River.

Civil Aeronautics Board administrative judge Stephen Gross said the proposed merger might reduce competition but on balance would have positive results if the two airlines are required to reduce fares.

"The balance tilts toward approval and that is what this decision recommends," said Gross. In his report to the CAB which now must approve or reject the proposal. "Since international routes are involved, President Carter will make the final decision.

The Justice and Transportation Department oppose the merger on grounds it would be anti-competitive.

Gross proposed the CAB require the merged airlines to follow through with their promise to reduce fares by up to 15 percent over three years. The two airlines said they would offer an unrestricted economy fare.

He also said the merger also would offer some service benefits, including new competition between Denver and the East Coast.

The judge said the merger probably would reduce competition in three large markets: Denver to Portland, Ore. and Seattle; Portland-Seattle to Anchorage; and Denver-Minneapolis; and in the smaller markets Denver-Albuquerque; Denver-El Paso, Texas, and Denver-Sioux Falls, S. D.

Western and Continental are among the top 10 U.S. airlines, carrying a total of 20.5 million passengers next year. A merger would create the fifth-largest airline, behind United, Eastern, Delta and American, and dropping Trans World Airlines to sixth place.

Western, which flies into Canada, carried 11 million passengers last year. Continental, which flies to Japan and the South Pacific, carried 9 million passengers.

The CBA said the proposed combined airline would have $1.4 billion in assets.

Both Continental and Western are based in Los Angeles.

GM replacing faulty tires

DETROIT (UPI) — General Motors Corp. hitting another snag in the introduction of its 1980 compacts, said Monday it is hurrying to replace faulty tires found on some of the cars before they go on sale later this week.

A GM spokesman said balding discovered in the sidewalls of some B.F. Goodrich tires installed on the new "X-body" cars posed "an appearance problem" but did not affect their safety. He said GM will replace the tires before they are sold. GM also announced the cars, which officially go on sale Thursday, will carry a suggested retail price ranging from $3,983 on the Chevrolet Citation two-door coupe to $5,327 on the Buick Skylark four-door sedan.

Prices on the all-new, front-wheel-drive cars range from $25 to $520 higher than the 1979 GM compacts they replace. The Pontiac Phoenix and Oldsmobile Omega round out the four-division lineup.

The tire problem was the latest in a series of embarrassments handed GM just days before its widely publicized introduction of the nation's first 1980 model cars.

Primary won't select Democratic delegates

By DAVID MORRISSEY
Times-News writer

BOISE — The victor in Idaho's 1980 Democratic Presidential Primary may discover his spoils are few.

Because of Democratic National Committee rules, it is possible a Democratic presidential candidate could receive every vote of his party in Idaho's 1980 presidential primary but not receive enough votes to be a delegate to the Democratic National Convention.

The Democratic problem — which is not shared by Republicans — stems from DNC rules saying party registration or verbal party declaration is a prerequisite to voting in state presidential primaries.

But this DNC rule, designed to keep selection of Democratic candidates firmly in the hands of Democrats, clashes with the rules by which Idaho holds its primary. Under Idaho law, the presidential primary is "open." No party registration is required. Democrats vote for Republicans as frequently as Republicans slip into the Democratic column.

But according to the DNC, open primary states are suspect and can't use their presidential primaries to elect convention delegates. Open primary states must select national delegates through a caucus system.

In Idaho, this means Democrats will first gather in local meetings in 1980 to elect delegates to their state convention. Democrats there will elect 17 delegates to the national convention.

Idaho voters in the Democratic primary could back one candidate while caucus Democrats endorse another. If that occurs, the caucus vote prevails.

"At the present time we have a dilemma if the results of the primary were different from the results of the caucuses," said Idaho Democratic Party Chairman Wayne Fuller.

"There are two possible courses of action open to the Democratic Party," Fuller said. "We can ask the Legislature to amend the law in 1980 or we can work to have the national committee change its rules."

Fuller pointed out Idaho Democrats had a similar conflict of rules in 1976, "but we didn't have to face it because the outcome in the caucuses and the primary were so close there was no problem. The voters gave 79 percent of their votes to Sen. (Frank) Church and the caucuses gave 80 percent to him."

Fuller acknowledged changes may be slow in coming from Idaho's Legislature. That body is controlled by Republicans, who face no conflict of rules problem. Staunch GOP senators and representatives may be hesitant to change state law just to help a rival party.

"Changes in Gem State law may also be hindered by memorials of past experiments with closed primaries. In recent years Idaho has tried most forms of party registration. In almost every case voters vocally objected to requirements they publicly identify their party affiliation.

"I can see where this might hurt voter turnout," said Betty Hansen, executive secretary for Idaho's Democratic Party. "I can see where people in Idaho will say what's the point in voting in the presidential primary if it's not going to matter, anyway."

Voters in the primary could overwhelmingly endorse Jimmy Carter, Hansen said, while caucus delegates "could overwhelmingly support Jerry Brown." Under such a situation, Brown would receive the national convention votes of Idaho.

But Hansen said the primary would still have value, even if it doesn't have power. "There are a lot of beautiful contest primaries in the country. They're not all bad and this will just be another one."

Hansen noted several prominent Idaho Democrats will travel to Washington next month. Changing party rules to accommodate Idaho's primary is on the agenda of subjects to be discussed, Hansen said.

City to fill 9 vacancies

By JEFF SHER
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — The Twin Falls City Council Monday lifted a hiring freeze in effect since November and filled nine of ten vacant city positions.

The council also voted to defer a decision on whether to give raises to seven high-ranking city administrators whose salaries have been frozen since October.

And in another budget-related decision, the council authorized the Parks and Recreation Department to hire temporary help needed to run the city's summer recreation program.

The council instituted a hiring freeze in November to try to begin cutting back city government in anticipation of the even greater cutbacks that will be required by the 1 percent initiative.

Since the freeze went into effect, 10 positions in the city have been vacated and have not been refilled.

After 45 minutes of debate and conflicting proposals, the council finally filled nine of the vacancies: three in the police department, one at the airport, two in the engineering department, two in the waste water department and one in the water distribution department.

The one vacancy left unfilled was in the street department.

After several attempts to deal with all the vacancies in one motion failed, the council settled down to department by department review of the vacancies.

Council members Jim Smallwood, Chris Talkington, and Bud Cheney made the most consistent efforts to keep the number of positions refilled to a minimum, but each had his own preference for where to cut. They were able to coordinate the required three votes needed to stop the hiring only on the last position considered, that of the street department replacement.

Only three votes were needed to defeat a motion Monday because councilman Hank Woodall was not present. Council members Leon Smith, Gordon Cox and Mary McCusky voted to fill all the vacancies.

The council then decided 5-1, Talkington dissenting, to put off deciding whether to give raises to seven city administrators. The council froze the salaries of 16 administrators last October, but two weeks ago granted raises to four of them.

City Manager Jean Millar suggested that seven of the remaining 12 be given raises to keep them even with the cost-of-living increase since the freeze went into effect, but the council delayed the decision until Millar can present evaluations of the seven employees.

Millar said the other five employees were not recommended for raises because they were given raises at the beginning of the freeze which have kept them even with cost-of-living increases since.

The seven raises, if approved, will cost the city $1,820 during the six months until the next budget goes into effect.

In its final budget-related action of the night, the council voted 5-1, Talkington dissenting, to authorize the Parks and Recreation Department to hire temporary employees needed for the summer recreation program.

Frank Vigil's job Monday on the reconstruction of Addison Avenue in Twin Falls was to run a power tamper over a trench being filled in. The big, weighted foot of the tamper compacts the loose dirt around new pipe, but Vigil's foot helped him keep the machine on course.

Developers offer to move tennis courts

TWIN FALLS — The owner and developers of a tennis court complex to be located northeast of Twin Falls said Monday they are willing to move their planned, three covered tennis courts.

Kristy Pigeon of Ketchum and designer Dava Armstrong of Twin Falls met with Twin Falls County Commissioners and the Dale Aslett family for an appeal hearing regarding the tennis complex.

Members of the Twin Falls County Planning and Zoning Commission voted unanimously in support of the tennis club, including a plastic dome-type covering that will be used to enclose three of the 16 courts. This will be a collapsible and removable covering that will be used during winter months to give area residents year-around tennis.

Dale Aslett, who lives across the road from the proposed complex, objected to the dome covering and appealed the zoning group's decision to the county commissioners.

Merl E. Leonard, county commission chairman, said a decision in the matter was delayed to give the property owner and developers an opportunity to discuss a change in plans with the Asletts.

In the hearing Monday morning, Aslett said his living room window looks directly onto the area where the dome is proposed. He said it would block his entire view and he and his family do not relish the prospect of living that close to a facility of this type. He said the traffic would also be across from his home.

Miss Pigeon offered to reverse the plans for the development, moving the three courts that will be covered during winter months from the southeast corner of her property to the far west. This would place the dome covering as far away as possible from the Asletthome.

Commissioners made an on-site inspection of the property Monday morning prior to the hearing. Leonard said the commissioners will give the parties an opportunity to discuss the proposed change and will announce a decision on the appeal at 11 a.m. Friday.

Miss Pigeon proposes a modern club house and eventually 16 tennis courts on property on Kenneth Road near Eastlund Drive. She proposes covering only three of the courts for winter play. The facility would be financed on a membership basis with special family and youth programs offered.

Assault attempted with truck

TWIN FALLS — One juvenile boy was taken into custody at American Falls and investigation was continuing Monday by the Twin Falls Sheriff's office in a series of events here Sunday night.

Sheriff James Munn said Ed Wheeler, who lives southwest of Castleford, notified sheriff's officers he had observed someone at his ranch attempting to steal gasoline. Wheeler told officers the suspect tried to run him down with the vehicle when Wheeler discovered the vehicle at the gas pump and tried to stop him at the ranch.

Wheeler said he chased the suspect in his pickup truck but lost the trail. Officers said the suspect was apparently connected with an accident reported about 11:45 p.m. Sunday in the Balanced Rock area and had left the area.

Munn said the juvenile arrested in American Falls later that night was allegedly driving a stolen vehicle. Munn said he did not know if others were involved with the juvenile but the matter is still under investigation.

Access sought

TWIN FALLS — A Twin Falls couple has brought suit against the Salvation Army in an attempt to retain ingress and egress to their property which joins the Salvation Army lot in Twin Falls.

James and Barbara Rodgers of Declo own Lot 14 of Block 91 of the Twin Falls townsite. The Salvation Army owns Lot 15.

The Rodgerses charge a strip of land, 30 feet long along the outer edge of Lot 15 has been used for more than 5 years as a driveway to their property and their deed shows it is part of Lot 14.

The complaint asks the court to uphold terms of their deed and asks a preliminary injunction against the Salvation Army to prevent the construction of a fence the Salvation Army has started which will close off the area.

Rollover injures one

BHHL — A 20-year-old Twin Falls man suffered a fractured back in a single vehicle accident at 3:30 a.m. Monday about five miles northwest of Buhl.

The injured man, Tracy West, 20, was a passenger in a pickup truck driven by David Johnson, 27, of Twin Falls.

Sheriff James Munn said the driver apparently fell asleep, allowing the vehicle to go out of control. It left the highway and rolled over three times. Munn said, throwing all of the occupants out.

CSI dorm rates remain the same

TWIN FALLS — Dormitory room charges will stay the same next year at the College of Southern Idaho.

Meeting Monday night, the CSI Board of Trustees voted "to keep dormitory rents at $200 per semester per person for a double room during the 1979-80 school year. Single rooms will cost $250 per semester.

The board did raise the price of CSI cafeteria food, however. A seven-day meal ticket will go up $100 next year.

Seven try for magistrate post

TWIN FALLS — Plenty of interest is being shown in the magistrate position which will be filled Thursday by the 5th Judicial District Magistrate Commission.

Phillip Becker, chairman of the magistrate commission, and a magistrate in Gooding County, has called a meeting for 10 a.m. in the Twin Falls judicial building to review seven applications for the post.

Magistrate Paul Smith will be leaving at the end of May to return to private law practice. The appointment of a successor is being this week to give the new magistrate time to prepare to take over the office.

Smith submitted his resignation several weeks ago, saying if a practicing attorney is named to the post he or she would need time to close out the practice before becoming a full-time magistrate.

Merl Leonard, chairman of the county commissioners here and a member of the magistrate commission, said there are six men and one woman seeking the job.

With the exception of the woman, all are attorneys. Becker advertised for an attorney magistrate since the vacancy to be filled was held by an attorney.

Applicants include Carol Allreit of Twin Falls, who has applied as a lay magistrate; Henry Butter and Maurice Ellsworth, both Hailey attorneys; Richard Redman and Tom Gray both of Twin Falls; and Michael Kinsele and Ronald Hoven, both of Boise. Leonard said Gray is now an assistant in the county prosecutor's office. Kinsele has been associated with the attorney general's office in Boise.

Northwest states send power bill amendment

BOISE (UPI) — After swearing in Public Utilities Commissioner Perry Swisher Monday, Gov. John Evans announced the joining of governors from four states in proposing amendments to the northwest regional power bill now before Congress.

Washington Gov. Dixy Lee Ray, Oregon Gov. Victor Atiyeh, Montana Gov. Thomas Judge and Idaho Gov. Evans agreed on amendments to the bill designed to pool electrical energy from the four states under the Bonneville Power Administration resulting in lower energy rates for the consumer.

Evans said the regional power consolidation would call together the Northwest to benefit its consumers and estimated that customers of Idaho Power would receive a 12 percent savings in 1980 and an additional 10 percent in 1981.

"If we came separately to the Congress, other parts of the country would want to divide up our energy," Evans said.

"I am glad that the amendments and the bill conform to the four criteria I set down in late 1977 for any restructuring of the Bonneville Power Administration," he said.

Those criteria outlined a northwest power system that must have public accountability, provide priority to farms and homes in electrical services, assure equitable rates, and encourage regional electrical energy conservation efforts.

A rate directive also is included in the amendments which would allow a private utility to withdraw from the energy pool if rates rose above those set by the utility.

But Evans said he did not think the rate directive would be detrimental to the consolidation.

Bob Lenaghan, former member of the PUC, said the directive should be viewed "as a safety valve."

"Should our projections be awry, the provision would provide the people with an escape," Lenaghan said.

"This is a situation where all interested parties must negotiate for a position to protect their interests."

Another provision of the amendments would provide for the creation of a five-person regional planning council for BPA to be composed of an appointee of each governor and the federal BPA administrator.

"That council will be responsible for the critical electrical power decisions in the northwest and will assure all citizens of the public accountability of the system," Evans said.

Evans said he had not decided on his appointee should the bill pass, but added that "Bob Lenaghan is high on the list."

Correction

BURLEY — Due to an editor's error, the abbreviation "DHW" was used for the federal Department of Health, Education, and Welfare in both the headline and body of Monday's story on Cassia Memorial and Mindoka Memorial hospitals.

DHW is the common abbreviation for Idaho's Department of Health and Welfare.

Mindoka Memorial was found to be in violation of the Hill-Burton Act by HEW officials in December. Cassia Memorial will be investigated by these same officials later this month.

Although Ray Reynolds, of the Idaho Department of Health and Welfare, will accompany the HEW inspector, the DHW has not played an active role in the enforcement of the Hill-Burton Act. The Times-News regrets the error.

Idaho audit procedures criticized

BOISE (UPI) — House Minority Leader Patricia L. McDermott has criticized the state's audit function Saturday and said the law apparently was broken when a preliminary, confidential report on the State Department of Administration was leaked to the news media.

Ms. McDermott, D-Pocatello, said Saturday whoever leaked the audit should be "fired on the spot."

"The audit charged department director Bartlett Brown and his agency with excessive travel, mismanagement, and political whimsy," Ms. McDermott, who said legal aspects of the leak were discussed by the legislative council last week, said the person who leaked the audit should not necessarily be prosecuted. But she added Idaho's audit function is not done professionally at all.

"Perhaps we should reassess whether we should have all those people on the payroll doing dubious work at best. I think the whole thing is irresponsible."

Ms. McDermott called the leak a "bad reflection on the entire Legislature."

"The value of the audit has been diminished," she said.

She added "it was not a legislative audit, it was simply preliminary notes. It's not a legislative product until the Joint Finance Appropriations Committee approves it."

Carefree Fuzzy Zoeller takes it easy after Masters' victory

AUGUSTA, Ga. (UPI) — This is the kind of contrary guy Fuzzy Zoeller is.

When he started down the first fairway at the start of the opening round of the Masters Thursday, he felt an unusual lightness grip his body.

"I can't say I wasn't a little tight," he admitted. "Looking down that first fairway you get a little chill, and I was remembering how everyone said I didn't have a chance."

Yet, when he found himself four days later beginning a sudden death playoff with Tom Watson and Ed Sneed, and nothing more than the Masters Championship at stake, Zoeller was his usual, carefree self.

"I wasn't tight at all in the playoff," he said. "Maybe it was because I had been paired with Tom Watson for 18 holes and I figured this would be just another couple of holes with him."

Maybe it was because of this attitude, along with the feeling that he doesn't have to win to be happy, that helped Zoeller to survive the playoff. His six-foot birdie putt on the 11th hole of Augusta National, the second playoff hole, enabled him to beat out Watson and Sneed for the $50,000 first prize Sunday and the green jacket that is as deeply treasured as the money.

It was the first time that the Masters had been settled by a sudden death playoff, and also marked the first occasion since Gene Sarazen in 1935 that anyone has won the championship on his first attempt.

"To me, all the pressure was put on by other people," said Zoeller, who registered the first four victory of his career at San Diego earlier this year. "They're the ones who said I couldn't win. It's a special feeling to do it this way."

At least to those who know him, Zoeller is considered a free spirit, contrary in nature to Sneed, a serious, steady type who nevertheless suffered the indignity of following a three-stroke lead with only three holes to play. Zoeller liked to party a lot until he got married in 1976 before 950 guests ("a little overdone, but my father-in-law likes to do things first class"), and he still has an easy way about him. Even before the final round of the Masters, with everything that was at stake, he enjoyed chatting in the clubhouse with newsmen for the better part of an hour, and when he's on the course he tries to acknowledge anyone who talks with him.

One of the things that used to bother him, though, was the constant questioning from what seemed to be most of the 40,000 residents of New Albany, Ind., as to when he'd win a tournament.

"Most people strive on winning," he said, "but if I finish second or third, that's my win for me. I strive to do the best I can. I'm not a great player. I do the best with what I have."

Sneed, composed and gracious after his final round, conceded he was extremely disappointed, but at the same time said that Zoeller deserved the victory.

"Even after the bogey on 16 and 17, I felt good," said Sneed, who had carried a five-stroke lead into the final round. "I never thought I lost control. It just happened. I'll have to put it out of my mind. It's over."

NBA Playoffs to resume

By UNITED PRESS INTERNATIONAL

Phoenix will face Kansas City and Los Angeles will meet Seattle in the Western Conference semifinals tonight, completing Round 1 of the NBA playoffs.

The Suns, 101-91 victors over Portland, and the Lakers, 112-111 winners over Denver, each captured their preliminary series two games to one Sunday.

In second-round playoff action, the defending champion Washington Bullets beat the Atlanta Hawks 103-89 and the San Antonio Spurs took the Philadelphia 76ers 119-106.

The second game of both Eastern Conference semifinals will be played tonight with Atlanta at Washington and Philadelphia at San Antonio.

Jabbar key in series

SEATTLE (UPI) — The Seattle SuperSonics, a team that depends on all five starters and a productive bench, begins its quest for the NBA title tonight against the Los Angeles Lakers, who seem to live or die with center Kareem Abdul-Jabbar.

Last year, the Sonics opened the playoffs with a mini-series victory over the Lakers en route to losing to the Washington Bullets in seven games in the championship series.

The Lakers barely survived a best-of-three series this year with a 112-111 win over Denver in the deciding game Sunday, but the Lakers were encouraged by the performance of the 7-foot-2 Jabbar, who had the game-winning shot along with 29 points and 16 rebounds.

"We have to be ready for him because he's coming ready, obviously," said Sonics reserve forward Paul Silas, who will be playing in his 13th NBA playoff in 15 pro seasons.

Faced with countering Jabbar in the middle, the second-year Sonics guard Sikma, who was moved from forward to center this year after the loss of Marvin Webster and Tom LaGarde.

In four regular season games between the Sonics and the Lakers, with each team winning two games, Jabbar outscored Sikma 26.0 points per game to 13.5, outrebounded Sikma 12.0 to 9.5, and outshot the Seattle center from the field 59.6 to 41.6.

Seattle coach Lenny Wilkens said he expected to use a big front line during the playoffs, with Silas coming off the bench for starter John Johnson.

'Shots just didn't fall'

LANDOVER, Md. (UPI) — Most of the Atlanta Hawks would change little except the final score in Sunday's 103-89 loss to the Washington Bullets in the opening game of their NBA Eastern Conference semi-final playoff.

"We got good shots, they just didn't fall," said Dan Roundfield, whose 24 points and 10 rebounds helped the Hawks stay even with the defending champions until the final five minutes. "Those are the shots we're supposed to get from our offense. They're the same shots the Bullets got, but theirs went in and ours didn't."

"We were able to get the ball where we wanted it," said Hawks guard Eddie Johnson. "We got the same shots then that we got earlier, but we couldn't get anything to go in. I know one thing: those shots will start falling for us and we'll be in good shape."

The teams meet again tonight at the Capital Centre before the series moves to Atlanta Friday night and Sunday afternoon.

Roundfield also has the unpleasant task of guarding Bullets veteran Elvin Hayes, who is playing some of the best basketball of his 11-year NBA career. After averaging 21.8 points and 12.1 rebounds in 66 regular season games, Hayes opened the playoffs Sunday with 31 points and 15 rebounds. Bobby Dandridge added 30 points and 10 rebounds.

"Elvin Hayes has scored a lot of points against a lot of very good players, so I don't feel bad," said Roundfield. "I know I just have to make him work as hard as possible, but to get the ball and to score. No one, but no one, is going to shut him off."

San Antonio fired up

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (UPI) — The San Antonio Spurs, hoping to end their reputation making playoffs and then collapsing, play host to Philadelphia tonight in the second game of their Eastern Conference semifinal series and coach Doug Moe does not expect any loss of intensity.

"These guys want to win so bad," said Moe. "They are up and ready. The main thing now is to keep our enthusiasm even if this series goes to seven games."

Bill Rodgers glides across finish line to set new marathon record

Rodgers strides to win

BOSTON (UPI) — Bill Rodgers, scarcely winded by his record-setting Boston Marathon run Monday, grinned broadly as his long strides carried him smoothly across the finish line.

It was his third and fastest Boston Marathon win. He covered the 26-mile, 38.5-third mile in 2:29:27, a full 45 seconds ahead of his nearest competitor, Toshiko Seko of Japan, and 28 seconds in front of his previous record.

"This is the happiest experience of all," Rodgers said. "Well, almost, except for my first win. I could almost retire. There is just one little thing more — a medal at the (1980) Olympics."

Rodgers, a slim 31-year-old former school teacher from Melrose, Mass., was exuberant in victory and full of praise for his fellow competitors, the hundreds of thousands of spectators who lined the streets of the course, and for the way the event was managed.

He had just set an American and Boston Marathon record, defeating what was his nearest rival in the most accomplished field of marathoners in history.

The competitive spirit that has given Rodgers a string of distance victories in the past two years shone through at a news conference after he had been awarded the laurel wreath of victory.

"When I think I have a shot I can be tough. I've had a streak going the last couple of years, and it ain't going to last forever," said Rodgers, who took the lead for good at about the 19-mile mark.

He said his next goal is the Montreal World Cup Marathon in August. "That course will be flatter than Boston's."

Hayes now in prison

DALLAS (UPI) — Former Dallas Cowboy wide receiver Bob Hayes Monday began serving a five-year prison term for selling narcotics.

Hayes was convicted last month on charges of distributing cocaine and methamphetamine to an undercover police officer. Despite pleas from prominent sports figures, he was assessed two concurrent five-year terms and a probated seven-year term.

He was allowed to remain free until Monday's formal sentencing.

The former Olympic Gold Medalist and All-Pro football player appeared before state District Judge Richard Mays for the brief Dallas County jail to begin processing into the Texas prison system.

With time off for good behavior, Hayes can be released on parole within 10 months.

Mets, Yanks tie

NEW YORK (UPI) — Bruce Boiesclair honored for the Mets and Reggie Jackson had an RBI single for the Yankees Monday when the two New York teams played a five inning, rain-shortened 1-1 tie in their annual Mayor's Trophy exhibition game at Shea Stadium.

Boiesclair's homer in the second inning came off Yankees starter Luis Tiant. Catfish Hunter pitched the final two innings for the Yankees and combined with Tiant to hold the Mets to four hits. Jackson's two-out single in the third drove home Mickey Rivers, who doubled, for the tying run.

Met starter Mike Scott left the game in the first inning after being hit on the right hand with a line drive. Preliminary examination showed a broken blood vessel on the middle finger of the hand.

The tie was the first in the series, which began in 1963 for the benefit of sandlot baseball in New York.

Lemon top player

NEW YORK (UPI) — Chet Lemon of the Chicago White Sox was named Player of the Week in the American League. It was announced Monday.

The White Sox' center fielder batted .583 with four doubles, a homer and 21 total bases during the week of April 9-15. Lemon scored eight runs and drove in five.

Relief pitcher Mike Marshall of the Minnesota Twins finished second.

Blazers after losing

PORTLAND, Ore. (UPI) — It's post-mortem time for the Portland Trail Blazers, now that they're dead and out of the NBA playoffs.

"I think there is a lot of satisfaction to be gained by what we accomplished this season," said Coach Jack Ramsay. "I don't know that a lot of teams could have done as much under the circumstances (injuries to key players all season). We were seldom able to practice the way you like to. I don't know that we ever had a

Soccer strike still on

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. (UPI) — North American Soccer League Players Association Executive Director Ed Garvey declined Monday to say how many of its members are on strike, but insisted the walkout "has good support" and he expects the number of striking players to increase.

However, four of the six foreign players among the 16 players who walked out in Fort Lauderdale strikers before their game Saturday night against the Washington Diplomats announced Monday they have decided to end their strike and return to the team.

The four included midfielder Fabor Gemen of Yugoslavia and Terry Park of Liverpool, England as well as defenders Ken Fogarty of Manchester, England, and Roy Wiggemansen of South Africa.

Umpires accuse league presidents of lying about contract talks

NEW YORK (UPI) — American League President Lee MacPhail and National League President Chub Feeney Monday expressed surprise and regret at the criticism leveled at them earlier Monday by members of the striking major-league umpires.

At a news conference called by the umpires announcing the resignation of the last bona-fide major-league umpire, Ted Hendry, umpire Bill Haller said MacPhail and Feeney tried to the public and the umpires regarding the current strike and the umpires' alleged failure to negotiate.

In a joint statement, MacPhail and Feeney denied lying to the umpires and said the umpires themselves abdicated their five-year Basic Agreement — which runs through 1981 — by agreeing not to sign their contracts for the 1979 season, MacPhail and Feeney also pointed to the "no-strike or other work stoppage" clause in the agreement.

In addition, baseball commissioner Bowie Kuhn also defended MacPhail and Feeney, saying, "Red Smith once wrote something to the effect that you could get a bear-trap in a cathedral and not catch two finer men than Lee MacPhail and Chub Feeney. I think that applies to the criticism being leveled at them by the umpires. They are honest with the public, the clubs and me in dealing with the unfortunate problem."

Haller and the umpires, on the other hand, claim the American and National Leagues told the public and the owners that the umpires had been invited to spring training and could negotiate there, when "in fact we were told not to report to spring training until we had signed our 1979 contracts."

"We attempted to engage in good faith bargaining and have been met with adamant refusal by both league presidents," said Haller. "We deeply resent that the presidents of both leagues have seen fit to lie, both to us and the public about us."

MacPhail and Feeney, in a joint statement, said, "We never lied to the umpires. We never told the club owners or the public that the umpires were invited to spring training and could work and negotiate. We have not told the owners or the public that the umpires refused to negotiate. If individual umpires do not wish to work, they, of course, can not be compelled to do so."

"We regret very much that we are having this confrontation, but feel that the umpires should honor the letter and spirit of the Agreement which has been made," Kuhn added. "Obviously, the clubs are supporting them overwhelmingly. If the umpires would face up to these facts, a solution might be easier to find. Certainly, if they would sign their contracts and return to work, I think the problems are such that they wouldn't defy solution."

Bruin bats explode in sweep of Burley

BURLEY — Twin Falls High Coach Ron Watson got "just what the doctor ordered" Monday.

Watson, who was home sick with the flu, was presented with a doubleheader sweep by the Bruins who dumped Burley 12-8 and 7-1. The game was coached by his assistants Bill Millward and Dan Creek.

"For some reason, I feel a lot better right now," said Watson Monday night after learning Twin Falls had come back with two wins. "It sounds like we hit the ball a lot better."

Last Friday, things didn't go too well for Twin Falls as it fell twice to Meridian, essentially eliminating itself from a chance at the western S-C title.

"Maybe we are back on the right track, and we can peak around district tournament time," he said.

The Bruins' first game didn't come easy, as the lead saw-sawed back and forth throughout. The game clinching runs didn't come until the top of the last inning when Twin Falls erupted for three runs to put the game out of reach.

Kerry Brown got the pitching win for Twin Falls, while Alan Merrill took the loss.

Craig Beutler hit the ball with a vengeance. Logan Enaley had two, Craig Beutler two, Eddy Lang three, and Bill Burton three.

In the second game, Mike Ferrell twirled a nifty one run game, getting relief help from Motts Turner.

Enaley and Beutler again led the hitting parade with two each.

Judge denies Kapp appeal

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Supreme Court Monday rejected an appeal by former quarterback Joe Kapp for eight years battled the National Football League and the New England Patriots in an antitrust lawsuit.

In a brief order, the Supreme Court denied Kapp's appeal and let stand lower federal court rulings which denied him any financial award. Kapp had contended the NFL and the Patriots had forced him out of pro football.

In January, 1971, Kapp refused to sign a "standard player contract" which prevented a new club from signing a free agent until it compensated his former club, and the draft rule, which prevented a college player from negotiating with other clubs even if the pro club that drafted him made an unacceptable offer.

ST. LOUIS (UPI) — Dick McDonald, athletic director at St. Louis University, resigned Monday effective with the close of the school year May 15.

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Washington Redskins announced Monday that veteran safety Ken Houston has signed a series of one-year contracts.

AUBURN, Ala. (UPI) — Auburn University will take its plea for a reduced penalty for alleged recruiting violations to the NCAA because the highest authority in the athletic organization, President Harry Phillipott said Monday.

NEW YORK (UPI) — Ted Hendry, the only non-league umpire working major-league baseball this season, said Monday he was submitting the required 10 days notice of resignation to American League President Lee McPhail because he could not work with inferior talent on the ball field.

CINCINNATI (UPI) — The Cincinnati Reds have agreed unanimously to urge Baseball Commissioner Bowie Kuhn to intercede in the umpires' strike and try to get regular umpires back on the job as soon as possible.

Lee hurls two-hitter for Expos

By United Press International

Only one day after returning to the big leagues, Lee pitched one of the best games of his career.

Lee was fined $250 by commissioner Bowie Kuhn Sunday for admitting during spring training that he had smoked marijuana, and the official scoupler of the Montreal Expos said he was thinking about quitting baseball in protest to Kuhn's fine.

That was Sunday, though. On Monday the outlived eccentric, Lee was given the assignment of stopping the Chicago Cubs, and he did it in splendid fashion by tossing a two-hitter. Lee came very close to turning in a no-hitter since the first hit off him came in the second inning when a fly ball ruled a single by one of the substitute umpires.

Lee, the always-controversial left-hander who came to the Expos from Boston in an off-season deal, gave up the homer, but he picked up his first victory over the Montreal Expos since he was thinking about quitting baseball in protest to Kuhn's fine.

The Expos argued the call but the umpire, John Baird, refused to change his mind.

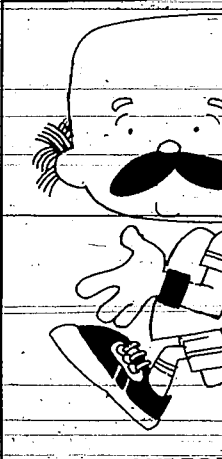

In American League games, Detroit whipped Kansas City 10-4 and Chicago downed Toronto 8-4.

Steve Kemp, Aurelio Rodriguez and Alan Trammell drove in two runs each to lead the Tigers. Jack Billingham singled through the first five innings but picked up his first victory after Steve Baker nailed him out over the last four innings to get his first major-league save.

Lamar Johnson and Bill Norwood struck two-run doubles to highlight a seven-run seventh inning that carried the White Sox past the Blue Jays. The White Sox belted three Toronto pitchers for four doubles and a single in the inning as they planned the loss on reliever Tom Murphy.

In a night game, Oakland beat Seattle 4-2.

In NL night action, Pittsburgh at Philadelphia will be rained out and Houston shut out Los Angeles 4-0.

fense will add four club tricks to that one diamond trick. He will be down one for the other score since other declarers will fall into that same trap.

The rubber bridge player decides he wants to win the rubber. He lets East's jack of clubs hold the first trick and his nine of clubs hold the next one. At trick three he plays a club honor. West can do nothing better than to take his ace for the third defense trick. Later on South loses the diamond finesse, but that is the fourth and last trick for the defense.
